On the APOSTOLICAL EPISTLES in general, and those of St. Paul in particular, and the various points connected therewith (a subject too extensive to be fully treated here), the reader is referred to the Preface of Dr. Whitby, the General Introduction to the Epistles by Dr. Macknight and Mr. Townsend, vol. ii. p. 207—220, and Mr. Horne Vol. iv. A few general remarks must here suffice. First, it may be observed, that though the essential doctrines and precepts of Christianity are to be found in the Gospels, yet a fuller and clearer statement of them was necessary, considering the altered state of things to that which existed during our Saviour's life time; and especially after the uprise of serious corruptions and dangerous errors, originating partly in misconception, but which required to be checked by a more explicit, and yet equally authoritative revelation. Now this was done by St. Paul and the other writers of the Epistles. Consequently, though they were written for the immediate purpose of refuting heresies, arising from a mixture of Christianity with Judaism or Gentilism, of repressing corruptions, reforming abuses, and composing schisms and differences, yet, in point of fact, they became, and were avowedly, commentaries on the doctrines of Christ, as delivered in the Gospels; and though originally intended for particular Christian societies, yet are adapted to the instruction of Christians in all ages. Thus, for example, even the decisions of cases concerning meats and drinks, and the other observances of the ceremonial law, and various points at issue with Judaizing Christians, —even these are our surest guides in all points relating to Church liberty, and the use of things indifferent, especially as to the abstaining from things innocent in themselves, but likely to give offence to our more scrupulous brethren, or lead them into sin.

On the cause of the above less clear promulgation of the doctrines of Christianity in the Gospels, see Townsend; and on the nature and extent of those clearer revelations contained in the Epistles, see Horne's Introd. Suffice it to say, that there the moral duties are more exactly specified, and more expressly taught. The general plan of the Epistles is,—first, to consider and decide the controversies, or refute the errors which had occasioned the writing of the Epistles; and, 2dly, to enjoin the observance of those moral duties which are binding on Christians in every age; with reference, however, chiefly to those virtues, which the disputes or errors above mentioned might lead them to neglect. To advert to the subject-matter itself, clear as the Epistles are in all material points, yet, from various causes, they are far more difficult to be understood than the Gospels. For which satisfactory reasons may be assigned. See Dr. Graves's remarks on the obscurity of St. Paul's Epistles, and Abp. Whately's Essays on the Difficulties in St. Paul's writings. The principal reason is that which applies to all Epistolary writings,—namely, the being addressed to those who are supposed to be, more or less, acquainted with the matters on which they treat; and, therefore, the being not intended to be plain to others; in which respect they differ materially from a history or narration. “Qui enim (says Wets.) historiam scribit quibus ignota est, adeoque omnia clarè et simpliciter narrare debet: epistola verò est quasi colloquium cum amico absenti, qui etiam partes suas agit, et ad cujus quæstia vel cogitata nobis præcognita respondemus.” Thus in an Epistle some things are omitted, or cursorily touched on, as being well known to the person or persons addressed; though to others unacquainted with the circumstances, they cannot but be obscure. And if such should have been the case with those who lived in that age, how must it be with us who live at the distance of nearly 2000 years, and to whom the language is a foreign one; and who can obtain no knowledge of the circumstances, except what can be gathered from the Epistles themselves. Moreover, the Epistles of the N. T. are often answers to other Epistles which had proposed questions, and without which the answers must be in a considerable degree obscure. But besides these general causes of obscurity, which are common to all the Epistolary writers of the

N. T., there are some which are peculiar to St. Paul, as resulting from the character of his style, and cast of mind. With an ardent temperament, and great acuteness and readiness of thought, he was, from his "care of all the Churches,"—being associated with the "care to provide for the day passing over his head," compelled to write with great rapidity, and occasionally without bestowing much time in methodizing or digesting what he had written. Not to say that method and arrangement are scarcely ever found in Jewish writers: and the mind of the Apostle seems to have been, from its very constitution, peculiarly averse from the trammels of regular composition. Hence the long and involved sentences, the abrupt transitions, the perpetual parentheses (sometimes within parentheses), the frequent digressions, and returns to the original subject, with little intimation of such change of topic; the frequent changes of person, the speaking in the person of another, or as another would speak, by the μετασχηματισμός, or the κοινωνία; and, lastly, the propounding objections and subjoining answers to them without any formal intimation thereof. These, however, have by some been exaggerated, and by others too much ascribed to the haste with which it is presumed the Epistles were written. And, indeed, a great part of what are called the peculiarities of St. Paul's style, are only such as are common, though in a less degree, to the other writers of the N. T., and in some measure to all the writers of antiquity, at least before the Christian æra. Thus, of ancient writers, Thucydides, it may be observed, possesses most of the characteristics of St. Paul's writings, and that in nearly as great a degree: in fact, no two writers more resemble each other. And yet who ever ascribed the harshness and irregularities of that writer to haste, when it is known that he bestowed on the formation of a not very long history almost the whole of a life-time of no ordinary duration. We are warranted, therefore, in ascribing the irregularities of the one to the very same cause as those of the other—namely, to a sort of peculiar mental conformation; the minds of the two writers, it should seem, being cast in the same mould; though, in temper and character, they materially differed. In each the ideas poured in upon him faster than the expressions wherewith to clothe them; especially in the case of the Apostle, who was writing in a foreign language. Each, therefore, makes use of as few words as possible (one expression, in some instances, standing for a whole clause or even sentence); and sometimes the meaning is rather intimated than expressed. Hence in each we observe a frequent use of the asyndeton, and a very sparing use of particles; than which nothing tends more to obscurity: as, on the other hand, the liberal use of them throws much light upon the meaning of a writer, and the purpose at which he aims. Each, especially St. Paul, was naturally of an ardent temperament, and therefore deals largely in the use of all those figures which constitute what Longinus calls δεινότης (though in neither is it the δεινότης of Demosthenes; nor, in fact, the δεινότης of any other writer, but one peculiar to themselves); such, for instance, as the use of the apostrophe, interrogation, and answer by the ques- tioner himself. Each (especially St. Paul) employs frequently all the Rhetorical figures; each abounds in metaphor and imagery: and no other writers present so many examples of that συνάθροισις, or assemblage of figures, which Longinus esteems so great a component of the sublime. It is true that the matters treated of by both Thucydides and St. Paul are so profound, that the greatest care could not have made them otherwise than obscure to minds of an ordinary calibre. But as the historian himself was not (as many imagine) designedly obscure; so the Apostle, we may be assured, intended to make himself sufficiently intelligible to those who would bestow competent attention. It ought also to be remembered, that although the using too few words in the expression of any sense, is, generally speaking, a fault in style,—yet neither of the two writers in question thought of the style and manner, but the matter. And though in the case of the former, a style less brief, and sentences less long and intricate, would have rendered him far more intelligible to ordinary understandings; yet as the great historian wrote only for minds like his own, and is accordingly οὐ πάντεσσι βατός; so the Apostle, in his higher flights of sublimity, and depths of spirituality, wrote only for those in some degree like-minded. And indeed, as to the excessive length of sentences found in both these writers, it may be doubted whether that does not, to minds somewhat above the ordinary level, tend rather to abridge the labour of thought; for when many reasonings are thus linked together in a small compass, the respective bearings of each on the rest are the more clearly perceptible. Moreover, this sort of pregnant brevity may be considered characteristic of deep-thinking minds. Thus Rochefoucault Max. 142. well remarks, "comme c'est le caractère de grands esprits de faire entendre en peu de paroles beaucoup de choses, les petits esprits, au contraire, ont le don de beaucoup parler et de ne rien dire."

To advert to the style and phraseology of St. Paul's writings, with reference not only to the following Epistle, but to his Epistles generally,—if we consider merely the words and phrases, the structure of periods, and such matters, we find not the smooth polished sentences and nice proprieties of pure Greek composition,—but that sort of style which we might naturally expect from one, like the Apostle, born and educated in a city where the Greek spoken was confessedly provincial, and far from pure; and who had been accustomed to the close study of the Hebrew of the O. T., and the conversational use of the Syro-Chaldee. However, considering the persons addressed, the style was the best that could have been adopted: inasmuch that had the Apostle possessed the purest Attic style, he would doubtless have preferred that which might render his writings more acceptable and intelligible to the Jews and Jewish converts, whom he chiefly addressed. But if from manner we proceed to matter—from the shell to the kernel—and consider the general contour, the sublimity of the thoughts, the boldness and richness of the conceptions, the aptness and beauty of the imagery, we shall not fail to perceive all the marks of a true eloquence—not that which (to use the words of the illustrious Hemsterhusius in his Oratio de Paulo Apostolo) consists “in flosculis verborum, et orationis calamistratæ pigmentis —, sed indolis excelsæ notis, in pondere rerum: quum enim magna esset in eo animi vis, et divina quædam meditatio cogitandi facultas, mentis imaginem scribendo expressit. Nihil ejus cogitatis et argumentorum nervis sublimius esse et incitatus fatendum est. Hinc in ejus Epistolis nullæ non extant oratorum figuræ, non illæ quidem e rhetorum loculis ac myrothecio depromptæ, aut ad orationem expoliendam arte compositæ, verum affectus animi celestis ardore inflammatus hæc scriptio luminis sponte sub manum venientia progignebat; itaque se Paulus confirmabat, ut ad omnes dicendi vias, rationesque omnes mirificā quādam ingenii temperatione foret paratissimus.”

But to proceed to a brief consideration of the Epistle before us,—of its general authenticity there has never been any doubt entertained; since it is attested by the strongest evidence both external and internal. As to the genuineness of certain portions, impugned by some German Theologians of the Rationalist School, see the Note at xv. 1. That the Epistle was written from Corinth, is evident from the contents of the composition itself (ch. xv.) as compared with 1 Cor. i. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 20. The time when it was written is, with great reason, supposed to have been towards the close of his residence there, and when he was making preparations for a journey from thence to Jerusalem, ch. xv. 24—27. Acts xx. 2, 3. This fixes the date to the end of A. D. 57, or the beginning of A. D. 58. As to the question by whom the Gospel was first preached in Rome, we are destitute of any certain information from Scripture; but it is with great probability supposed that it was first preached by some of the “strangers of Rome,” who, as we learn from Acts xi. 10., were at the feast of Pentecost, and were converted by the illustrious miracle of the gift of tongues. Be that as it may, at the time when this Epistle was written, the Christians at Rome were numerous, and composed, as in other places, partly of converted Jews, or Jewish proselytes, and partly of converted Gentiles. The object of the Epistle is evident: and though we are but imperfectly acquainted with the circumstances of the Roman converts at that time, yet it is plain that the Apostle’s aim was to guard them against the attacks on their faith, by the unbelieving Jews, on the one hand, and the Judaizing Christians, on the other; also that he wrote to remove the prejudices both of Jews and Gentiles. For this purpose the Apostle enters into a full explanation and defence of the Gospel doctrine of Justification, on the different views of which entertained by the Jews, and here stated by the Apostle, see Horne’s Introd. iv. 356., and Towns. ubi supra. For a general view of the contents of the Epistle, the reader is referred to the neat Synopses of Mr. Young and Mr. Holden, and especially to the full Analysis of the learned and excellent Prof. Stuart, whose recent Translation and Commentary on this Epistle, entitles him to the warm thanks of all who take an interest in the interpretation of the N. T.; and indeed is indispensable to all who would thoroughly understand this most difficult of all the Epistles. Suffice it to say, that the design of St. Paul was to confute the unbelieving, and instruct the believing Jews; to confirm the believing, and convert the unbelieving Gentile: also to place the Gentile convert on an equality with the Jewish, as to his religious condition and share in the Divine favour.

To briefly advert to the contents of the Epistle, the first five Chapters exhibit Christ as the author of our Justification. The next three Chapters exhibit Christ as our Sanctification, and the author of our everlasting Consolation, in this world and in the next. And here terminates the doctrinal part of the Epistle. At ch. ix. the Apostle encounters the objections which might be made to the foregoing representations of doctrine. At ch. x. xi. he confirms the position, that the unbelieving Jews must perish; deducing, however, the cheering assurance, that it will be the occasion of salvation to the Gentiles. The rest of the Epistle is hortatory, and meant to warn the Roman converts, both Jewish and Gentile, against various errors and evil dispositions, to which they were, in their peculiar circumstances, respectively exposed.

C. I. vv. 1—16. form the introduction to the Epistle, containing, 1. a salutation, 1—7; 2dly, a brief expression of some personal wishes and concerns, in order to pave the way for the subsequent address at v. 18, which forms the grand theme of the Epistle, and especially the subject of all that follows up to the end of chap. v. First, St. Paul exhibits the nature of his office of Apostle, set apart to it by Christ himself, and constituted especially to be an Apostle to the Gentiles, to promote the knowledge of the Saviour among them as well as the Jews; and, accordingly, he wishes them every needful blessing, temporal and spiritual. He thanks God that their faith in Christ is such as to be a matter of universal notice, and assures them how ardently he has wished to visit them; mentioning what had prevented him from carrying his wish into execution. He expresses his desire to preach among them as well as other Gentiles, and mentions the reason why,—namely, because he conceives himself under obligation to preach the Gospel to all the Gentiles, and because he knows that that Gospel is able, by God’s mighty help, to save all who embrace it, both Jews and Gentiles. See Young and Stuart.

1. δοῦλος [I. X.] The word δοῦλος (contracted from δέσλος) was properly an adjective signifying bound, but, used substantively, denoted a bond-servant, usually for life. Now, from the devotedness of such service, it was applied to the service of God: and the term δοῦλος Θεοῦ was applied first to Moses and Joshua, afterwards to the Prophets, and lastly to the Apostles, and the Ministers of the Gospel in general, as 2 Tim. ii. 24. In both of which last uses, it denotes one devoted to the spiritual service of Christ in his Gospel; and, therefore, indicates both the station and devotedness of the person to whom it is applied. The term κλητός here denotes expressly constituted (as opposed to being self-appointed),—namely, by Christ himself. Acts ix. 15. Ἀπόστολος denotes properly any one sent with a message or commission to act for another. With the Article it denotes those teachers commissioned by Christ, either in person, as the twelve Apostles, or by some supernatural revelation, as in the case of Paul and Barnabas. The words following, ἀφωρισμένους εἰς εὐαγγέλιον Θεοῦ, are explanatory of the preceding, and refer to Paul's being set apart for the work of the Gospel, not only by the Holy Spirit (Acts xiii. 2.), but also by Christ himself. Gal. i. 15. Εἰς εὐαγγέλιον Θεοῦ is for εἰς τὸ εὐαγγελίσασθαι, "to preach the Gospel;" a use of εἰς with a noun of action similar to that of the Heb. 7. The Genitive here denotes origin. So Theophyl. explains ὡς δωρηθέν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ. All these Nominatives depend upon γράφει, which verb is supplied in the most ancient Epistles on record, both in Scripture and in the earliest Historians.

2. ὁ προεπηγγεिलाτο, &c.] "which he aforetime had promised," &c. This is meant as an answer to the objection of the Jews and Heathens, that Christianity was a novelty; and intended to refute the calumny, that Paul understood Moses and the Prophets. It was the constant declaration of the Apostles, that they proclaimed nothing but what Moses and the Prophets declared should take place; and that the Old Testament is full of prophecies respecting Christ, is plain. Now the same was maintained by the heathens, as we learn from various passages of ancient Latin writers, as Tacit. Hist. v. 13. Suet. Vesp. iv. Virgil Ecl. iv. so finely imitated by Pope in his Messiah. On the promises of the O. T. respecting the Messiah see Prof. Stuart.

3. περὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ] "respecting, or with reference to, his Son," viz.: as the subject of those prophecies. Γενομένου, "descended," as Gal. iv. 4. and John i. 14.—Κατὰ σάρκα. Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators urge, this must certainly have the sense assigned by the most ancient Fathers and Interpreters, and most modern Commentators, "according to his human nature," incarnate state, as Acts ii. 30, infra ix. 5. ἐξ ᾧν ὁ Χριστὸς τὸ κατὰ σάρκα (where see Note), and 2 Cor. v. 16. There is evidently an allusion to his other and heavenly nature and origin. Thus the sense is; "Christ, even as to his incarnate nature and condition on earth, was of kingly descent." In the next verse, the Apostle adverts to the exalted and glorified state of Christ.

4. The sense of this passage is not very clearly expressed; and, accordingly, some difference of opinion exists as to its precise sense. The difficulty rests in the expressions ὀριζέμεν ἐν δυνάμει and κατὰ πνεῦμα ἀγιωσύνης. As to the former, the ancient Interpreters almost universally, and the great majority of modern ones, take ὀριζέμεν to mean declared, pointed out to be;—a sense, it may be observed, supported by the primary signification of the word; for as ὅρος denotes limit, so ὀρίζω signifies to mark out, point out, declare. Ἐν δυνάμει I would (with the generality of Interpreters, ancient and modern), construe with ὀριζέμεν. The expression has been usually taken to mean efficaciter, powerfully. But the most simple, and what appears to be the true mode, is to take it as put for ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ; the Θεοῦ, which could not well be expressed, being left to be supplied from the preceding Θεοῦ. That Christ was raised from the dead by the power of God, we learn from numerous passages of the N. T. See infra iv. 24; vi. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 15. 1 Pet. i. 21. Acts ii. 24 & 32. From which, and the whole tenor of the Acts and Epistles, it is plain that God's having raised up Jesus from the dead, is considered by the sacred writers as an attestation of his Messiahship. And, therefore, the query, "how it could declare Christ to be the Son of God," is deserving of no attention. See the excellent remarks of Calvin.

As to the sense of κατὰ πνεῦμα ἀγιωσύνης, it is not a little disputed. And here of the interpretations proposed by different Expositors, two alone seem worthy of notice. The ancients in general, and many eminent modern Expositors, take it to mean, the Holy Spirit. But that sense, besides being opposed to the doctrine of the Greek Article, is at variance with the above cited passages of Scripture, which represent God the Father as raising up Christ. It is also forbidden by the antithesis which evidently subsists between κατὰ σάρκα and κατὰ πνεῦμα. The true sense is doubtless that assigned by the Latin Fathers in general, and, of the modern Expositors, by Camer., Paræus, Beza, Pisc., Wallet, Starck, Heum., Wolf, Schleus., Stuart, and others; namely, "the holy and blessed Spiritual and Divine nature of Christ." So in 1 Pet. iii. 18, Christ is said to be θανατωθεὶς μὲν σαρκί, ζωοποιηθεὶς δὲ τῷ πνεύματι. See also Rom. ix. 5. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Heb. ix. 12. This view is also supported by Prof. Dobree in Adv., who regards the whole as if written: νιόυ κατὰ μὲν σάρκα τοῦ Δαυὶδ, κατὰ δὲ πνεῦμα ἀγιωσύνης τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὃς ἐν δυνάμει ἐσφράγισεν αὐτὸν διὰ τῆς ἀναστάσεως.

5. χάριν καὶ ἀποστολὴν.] The best Commentators regard this as a Hendiadys for "the grace of Apostleship;" i. e. the office of Apostle and the grace appertaining to it. Though indeed Augustin, Tholuck, and Stuart keep the terms separate; and Stuart renders, "grace, and the office of Apostle." But the former interpretation is greatly preferable, as being more in the manner of St. Paul; and expressing that humility which was so eminent a characteristic of the great Apostle. So at 1 Cor. xv. 9 & 10, he says that he is the lowest of the Apostles, &c.; yet, by the grace of God, he is what he is,—an Apostle.

— εἰς ὑπακ. πίστεως, &c.] The sense is, "in order that all nations may be brought to obediently embrace the Christian faith." See vv. 6 & 17; xvi. 26.

— ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὄν. αὐτοῦ.] The sense of these words will depend upon whether they be construed with those which immediately go before, or with the clause preceding. If the latter, they will signify, "on behalf of Christ," to spread the knowledge of his religion. But such a transposition is harsh, and unnecessary; for it may very well be taken with the words of the same clause; and thus the sense may be that assigned by the best Expositors from Calvin to Tholuck and Stuart, "for the promotion of his honour and glory."

7. πᾶσι—Θεοῦ] "to all in Rome, who are beloved of God." A designation of faithful Christians, which is explained by the words following, κλητοῖς ἀγίοις, where κλ. adds something more to the usual designation, and shows that they are what they are by the effectual calling of God, and by his grace.

—εἰρήνη.] Considering that this is connected with χάρις—ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, it should not be taken, with some, of temporal prosperity; or at least it must primarily denote peace with God, (see Rom. v. 1. Phil. iv. 7.) and then peace one with another.

8. εὐχαριστῶ] put for the more Classical χάρις εἶδέναι. See Note on 2 Thess. i. 3. Τῷ Θεῷ μου is generally interpreted "the God whom I serve;" and it is supposed that thanks, like petitions, are to be offered to God, διὰ Χριστοῦ, through Christ. Compare v. 20. Heb. xiii. 15. But it is, I think, better, with Stuart, to render διὰ Ἰ. Χρ. per Christum, auxilio Christi, interventione Christi. Thus he well renders, "Deo gratias ago respectu vestrum omnium, ut Christo adjuvante, fides vestra," &c. There is a reference, not to the sacrifice and atonement of Christ, but to the assistance of his Holy Spirit imparted to the faithful. See Calvin. The μου is best explained, with Chrys., Theophyl., and Calvin, "the God whom I serve," said more Prophetarum.

9. μάρτυς γὰρ μ. ἐ. ὁ Θεός.] A form used with earnest asseveration, corresponding to the Heb. יְהוָה יָדוּ. The γὰρ is explicative and confirmatory. The sense of λατρεύω is, "whom I devotedly worship and serve." And ἐν τῷ πνεύματι μου may either mean, as most explain, "with my whole mind and soul;" or as Chrys. and Theophyl. "with my spirit," i. e. spiritually. So Phil. iii. 3. οἱ πνεύματι τῷ Θεῷ λατρεύοντες.

10. εἰπὼς ἤδη—ὑμᾶς.] The full sense seems to be this: "If by any means I might yet ever be so favoured, as to be permitted to visit you." So Œcum., Kypke, and Koppe, who take ἤδη ποτὲ for ὀφεί ποτε, ever at length; and remark, that it is a form denoting great desire of averting evil or obtaining good. Εὐδοθῆσαι properly signifies, "to be on the right road," but often, as here, both in the Classical and Scriptural writers, to be fortunate in any respect. Thus the full sense of the passage will be, "that at some time or other if possible, before long, I may (God willing) be so happy as to pay you a visit."

11. χάρισμα πνευμ.] Some of the earlier modern Commentators take this to denote the extraordinary and miraculous gifts of the Spirit. A view, however, forbidden by what follows, since the spiritual grace, it is said, will be mutual. See Stuart. It is therefore better, with Chrys., Theophyl., Theodoret, and Œcum., of the ancients, and several modern Expositors, including Stuart, to suppose χάρισμα πνευμ. to denote the graces of the Holy Spirit, which are imparted by the faithful preaching of the Gospel.

—ἵνα τὶ μεταδῶ χάρισμα.] This passage presents the complete construction of the verb as found in the N. T., namely, an Accus. of the thing, and a Dative of the person. In the Classical writers it generally has a Genitive of the thing. Yet three examples of the Accusative (from Herodot., Aristophanes, and Xenoph.) are adduced by Matthiæ Gr. Gr. p. 506. And indeed when the Genitive is used, there is, I think, an Accusative to be understood, namely, μέρος.

12. The scope of this verse is to explain what has been said, and to soften what might seem to savour of harshness and arrogance. Accordingly it is introduced with a formula (τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ) "quæ ἐπανορθώσει inservit," that it may not be supposed he undervalued their spiritual stature. He therefore intimates, that he does not mean to insinuate that the advantage will be all on their side; but that he himself hopes to derive spiritual benefit; inasmuch that, while he is communicating and they receiving these blessings, the corresponding graces of the Spirit will be working on each side, and mutual edification and confirmation be attained: for that seems to be the meaning of συμπαρακληθῆναι, the sense of which expression has been not a little disputed.

13. οὐ θέλω—ἀγνοεῖν.] The Apostle says this as a reason why he had shown his anxiety for them, by wishing to come to them. "Ἀχρι τοῦ δεῦρο. Sub. χρόνου. The phrase occurs in Thucyd. iii. 69. and in other writers. Τινὰ καρπὸν for καρπὸν τινα is found in very many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Edd., and is adopted by almost every Editor from Wets. to Vat. By καρπὸν is meant benefit, i. e. in the increase of the Gospel, and the edification of its professors. Thus in Col. i. vi. the Gospel is said καρποφορεῖσθαι. Τοῖς λοιποῖς. Not others, but the rest, viz. of those among whom the Apostle had preached.

14. ὀφείλετης εἰμί] scil. εὐαγγελίσασθαι, which must be supplied from what follows. Ὀφ. εἰμι signifies, "I am bound by my office [as Apostle of the Gentiles]." Compare viii. 12. xv. 27. Gal. v. 3. As to "Ἑλλῆσι καὶ Βαρβάρους, on the origin of the latter appellation, see Note on Acts xxviii. 2. 4. On the distinction between the two terms I have fully treated in Recens. Synop.; where I have proved, that the question here so warmly agitated by the Commentators, whether Paul by Βαρβ. meant the Romans to be included, or not, is a frivolous question; for that the Apostle meant no more than all nations, both civilized and uncivilized; the words following, σοφοῖς τε καὶ ἀνοήτοις, (which mean "the savage and the sage"), being added by way of explanation. There was no reason for Tholuck to object to οὕτω, as involving an anomaly of construction. The expression is quite correct, and may be rendered Accordingly.

15. τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ, προθ., &c.] There is here some difficulty, occasioned by the very elliptical character of the phraseology; where the τὸ must be taken twice; first, with πρόθυμον, to form an equivalent to the substantive προθυμία (as in Thucyd. iv. 85.) and secondly, with κατ' ἐμὲ, which, according to the usage in the best writers, requires it. There is also the frequent ellipsis of ἐστὶ, and also of μοι, to be supplied from the preceding ἐμὲ. Thus the sense is, "Accordingly, as far as concerns myself (meaning to refer the accomplishment of his wish to Almighty Providence) it is my earnest desire to preach to you Romans also."

16. οὐ γὰρ ἐπαισχύνομαι τὸ εὐαγγ.] This is not, as many eminent Commentators fancy, a negotiosus, for "I glory in the Gospel;" but (as is remarked by Chrysost., Theophyl., and Koppe)

the sentiment was suggested by the association of ideas in writing the words τοῖς ἐν Ῥώμῃ. q. d. I shall not be ashamed of the Gospel of Christ even at Rome; where riches, pomp, and glory are alone held in admiration, where the height of genius and learning are united with the greatest profligacy of manners; and where, consequently, the humbling doctrines of a religion which demands severe self-denial, would be likely to attract derision, and might make the preacher and professor of it as it were ashamed. Of course, by telling them he shall not be ashamed, the Apostle delicately hints to them that they ought not to be so. By this sentiment he glides into the subject on which he meant to treat, salvation alone to be obtained by faith in Jesus Christ, which is introduced in the next verse.

Τοῦ Χριστοῦ is not found in 8 ancient MSS. and several Versions and Fathers, is rejected by Mill and Beng., and is cancelled by Griesb. and Knapp; but without reason. The remark of Wets. "Nobis autoritas Græcorum Codicum major est, quam Versionum, et paucorum Codicum Græcorum ad Versiones refectorum," is very judicious, and capable of application in many other passages.

—δύναμις γὰρ—πιστεύοντι.] Abstract for concrete. The sense is, "For it is the powerful means appointed by God for the salvation of all who believe and embrace it." Thus the sentence comprehends two assertions; 1. of the complete efficacy of the Gospel to salvation; 2. that the extent of this efficacy shall reach unto all who believe and obey it, without distinction of Jew or Gentile; i. e., as far as concerns the gracious design of God, it shall be universal.

—πρῶτον only respects the order in which the Gospel was then directed by Christ to be preached,—namely, to the Jews first, and then to the Gentiles. That there is here intended no preference of the former over the latter, is clear from the whole Epistle.

17. δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ—πίστιν.] On the exact sense of this verse considerable difference of opinion exists. The difficulty found to fix it has been occasioned by the brevity of expression, and the extreme flexibility of the language, which seems susceptible of several senses, though only one can be the true one. One thing is certain, that δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ must here mean (as in the rest of the Epistle, and others of St. Paul) Gospel justification, or the mode of obtaining pardon

παᾶσαν ἀσέβειαν καὶ ἀδικίαν ἀνθρώπων τῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν

bestowed by God on man. To suppose, with some eminent Expositors, any special or unusual sense of δικαιοσύνη, is absurd; for we cannot imagine that here at least, in a passage which contains as it were the theme of the whole Epistle, the word would be used in any other sense than it is employed throughout the Epistle. In further proceeding to determine the sense, the only real difficulty falls on the words ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν where we have to decide whether the phrases are to be conjoined in construction, or kept separate, ἐκ πίστεως being construed with δικαιοσύνη. The former mode is adopted by some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators; who suppose the sense to be, that 'this δικαιοσύνη having its beginning in faith is perfected in faith.' But though the sentiment thus arising be true, it cannot, I think, be supposed to have any place here; because, as Stuart shows, "1st, it does not answer the exigency of the passage, which rather requires the grand theme of gratuitous justification, nor the progressive nature of faith connected with it. 2d, It is contrary to the analogy of homogeneous passages in St. Paul." Many Expositors, indeed, (including Whitby), take ἐκ πίστεως to mean "produced by faith," and εἰς πίστιν, "to produce faith [in those to whom it is promulgated]." But this interpretation is liable to the very same objections besides another,—which is that it requires δικαιοσύνη to be taken in a sense differing from that which is required by the context. There can, I think, be no doubt but that the phrases ἐκ πίστεως and εἰς πίστιν are to be kept distinct; and that ἐκ πίστεως is put for διὰ πίστεως, as at iii. 21., where the same sentiment recurs. But with what ἐκ πίστεως is to be construed, is not equally clear. Stuart maintains that it must be taken with δικαιοσύνη, and ingeniously accounts for the separation. Yet he so far distrusts his own arguments, that he concludes with thinking the easiest solution of the difficulty is, to suppose δικ. to be repeated here, immediately before ἐκ πίστεως. Thus ἐκ πίστεως will be said κατ' ἐπανόρθωσιν, and be exegetical of what precedes. This, however, would seem a too arbitrary cutting up of the construction. The foregoing method is more natural: and if it be thought to involve a too harsh transposition, we may suppose an ellipsis of εἶναι after ἀποκ. Thus the sense will be, "For the justification which is of God, is therein revealed to be by faith." To advert to a further difficulty, connected with the expression πίστιν—many Commentators suppose it to mean "in order to produce faith." But the interpretation appears too arbitrary to be admitted. Others take it for εἰς τοὺς πιστεύοντας; which is thought to be proved by the parallel passage of iii. 22. δικαιοσύνη εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας. Yet thus the Article would be indispensable. Accordingly, in the similar uses of ἀποβυστία and περιτομή, to which those Expositors appeal, the Article is always found. Not to mention that the sentiment may be very similar, and yet not quite identical. There can, I think, be no doubt but that the true sense of εἰς πίστιν is (as Prof. Stuart explains) 'for belief,' equivalent to εἰς τὸ πιστεῦσθαι. And the true reason why the Apostle added this expression εἰς πίστιν, was doubtless (as the learned Commentator supposes), because he had just before said εἰς σωτηρίαν παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι. This sentiment the Apostle (according to the manner of Jewish writers) confirms from a passage of Hab. ii. 4., which, however, we need not suppose to have been intended by the Prophet to describe justification by faith; but was adduced (as Stuart shows) because it involves the same principle as that which the Apostle is inculcating; the sense there being, that 'the pious man shall be saved by his faith [in God alone]'; and, by implication, not relying on his own merits or deserts, but confiding in the divine declarations. With respect to the subject itself, δικαιοσύνη ἐκ Θεοῦ, (the grand theme of the Epistle), it is well observed by Stuart; that faith here designates the modus in quo or the instrument by which; not the causa causans seu efficiens, i. e. not either the meritorious or efficient cause or ground of forgiveness. Every where (continues he) the Apostle represents Christ as this cause. But faith (so to speak) is a conditio sine qua non; it is a taking hold of the blessings proffered by the Gospel, although it is by no means the cause or ground of their being offered." Thus the complete efficacy of the Gospel to salvation is strongly asserted: which position necessarily implies the inefficacy of the Law. In the doctrine of justification or salvation by faith alone, is implied the ground of its efficacy, namely, its perfect practicability; just as, on the other hand, the impossibility, under the Law, of fulfilling the condition of justification, unsinning obedience (Rom. x. 5. Gal. iii. 10.), shows its inefficacy to salvation. Accordingly, the Apostle's reasoning concerning justification, comprehends 1. the efficacy of the Gospel to salvation; and 2. the inefficacy of the Law; and his proof commences with the latter.

18. ἀποκαλύπτεται γὰρ ὀργή, &c.] On the connection of this passage with the preceding, some difference of opinion exists. See Rec. Syn. Stuart maintains that the γὰρ here has reference to ver. 16. Yet the reasons he assigns seem rather specious than solid. If there be any connection, it is with ver. 17; as Mr. Young supposes, who regards ver. 18 as a prefatory observation (introductory to the proof which follows of the inefficacy of the Law to salvation, in the case of the Gentiles) intended to show the reasonableness of the extension of the Gospel grace to them, namely, because they must, in common with the Jews, stand before the judgment-seat of Christ." It is, however, by no means clear to me, that any connection was intended; for the γὰρ may here have, as often, the inchoative sense: and it is admitted by almost all Commentators, that with this verse commences what Schoettg. calls the tractatio cum Gentilibus. Yet it is probable that it was meant to serve as a connecting link between the general position, on the efficacy and universality of the Gospel, and the proof at large, of the necessity of this justification by faith only—from the inefficacy of the Law, whether of Moses or of Nature, to save men; commencing with the latter. This connecting portion seems also meant to strike his readers with alarm and awe; by showing that in this revelation of salvation is included, by implication, one of damnation to those who would not believe and obey the Gospel; and to point out what would have been the fate of all, had not the Gospel been promulgated: also to suggest, that as all men are destined to appear before the judgment-seat of God (on which account it was reasonable that this salvation should be offered unto all, both Jews and Gentiles), so must those who have had the method of salvation offered, and have refused it, be in a much worse condition than those to whom it never was revealed. To show the necessity for the revelation of the Gospel, the Apostle proves the inefficacy of the Law, whether of nature, or that of Moses, by pointing out the moral depravity into which both Gentiles and Jews were sunk.

— ἀνθρώπων τῶν τὴν ἀλήθ. ἐν ἀδ. κατ.] Respecting the sense of these words there are two different opinions. Some take κατεχ. for ἐχόντων, and suppose the sense to be, "having some knowledge of the truth, but not living agreeably thereto." But though such would be applicable both to Gentiles and Jews, the sense in question cannot, without violence, be elicited from the words. It is, therefore, better (with the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors), to understand κατεχ. to mean, "hindering the efficacy, or obstructing the power of religious truth, both in themselves and others." See Carpz. and Taylor, and also Cudworth Intell. System, p. 471. sq. Ἀδικία here means iniquity and immorality. Ἀποκαλύπτεται is to be understood not only of direct revelation, by the Holy Scriptures, of the Old and New Testament, proclaiming the Law of Moses and of the Gospel, but that indirect revelation of the Law of nature, or the Moral Law, in the works of creation and providence, and in the conscience or moral sense, called at ii. 15. ἔργον νόμου γραπτὸν ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν, συμμαρτυρούσης αὐτῶν τῆς συνειδήσεως. The exact force of ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ has been much disputed; but without reason: since whatever the Almighty, who is in Heaven, doth on earth, he may popularly and graphically be said to do from Heaven; and that whether for mercy or judgment: accordingly judgments against sin, which come from God, who is in heaven, may be said to come and to be revealed from heaven. So Origen, Cyril, Beza, Calvin, Bengel, and Kypke. Ὁργή must be understood ἀνθρωποπαθῶς. See Stuart. By ἀσεβ. is meant sin against God; by ἀδικ., crime against men. But the two words are here put (abstract for concrete) instead of ἀσεβεῖς καὶ ἀδίκους. And πάναν is here emphatic, meaning all, whether Jews or Gentiles; thus pointing at the subject of the following tractatio, and naturally leading to it.

19. διότι τὸ γνωστὸν—αὐτοῖς.] The proof, the inefficacy of the Law to Justification being founded upon the general state of sinfulness of both Jews and Gentiles; and sin and guilt supposing the existence and knowledge of a Law

(iv. 15. iii. 20.) it was necessary that the Apostle should be able to affirm generally, of both Jews and Gentiles, that a sufficient discovery had been made to them of the nature and demerit of sin, by the Law, either of Moses, or of Nature. Accordingly, with respect to the Gentiles, he shows that they had a sufficient evidence of God, and of his adorable perfections, afforded to them in the works of Creation. (Young.) Διότι, siquidem, inasmuch as. On this force of verbals in τος, see Stuart or Buttm. Gr. Gr. Τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, what is to be, or may be, known respecting God. Ἐφάνερωσε, "hath manifested it to them," viz. by his works of creation and providence.

20. τὰ γὰρ ἀόρατα αὐτοῦ i. e. his nature and attributes, not discernible to mortal eyes. "The expression (observes Stuart) refers to such attributes or qualities as belong to the nature of God, considered as a Spirit." It is a fine remark of Aristotle de Mundo C. vi. (cited by Wets.) Πᾶση ζητητῇ φύσει γενόμενος ἀτεώρητος, ἀπ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἔργων θεωρεῖται ὁ Θεός. The expression ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου is put for ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου, Matt. xxiv. 21., or ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, Matt. xii. 35. "since the creation of the world." Τοῖς ποιήμασι νοούμενα, "being comprehended by the things which he hath created and ordered;" for we may extend ποιήμ., with Kypke, to the operations of God's providence as well as of creation.

— ἢ τε αἰδιος—θειότης.] This may be considered exegetical of the τὰ ἀόρατα; and the sense seems to be, "His omnipotence, and the other attributes of his Godhead." See Cudworth ubi supra, and Stuart.

— εἰς τὸ ἀναπολογήτους εἶναι] "in order that they should be without excuse." How they were such, and how all natural Religion, without revelation, can only render a sinner inexcusable, is irrefragably proved in a powerful Sermon of Dr. South on this text, which should be attentively read, as throwing great light on the whole of the context, and even on the scope of the Epistle itself.

21. Διότι here is, as Stuart remarks, co-ordinate with that at v. 19; and as vv. 19, 20 assign the first proof of the heathens hindering the truth concerning God by vice; so v. 21 gives the second proof thereof, namely, that with all their opportunities for obtaining a competent knowledge of the true God, they made no use of it, but became devoted to the basest idolatry. On this the Apostle dwells at v. 25. Γνόντες must be taken with limitation, viz. "knowing him sufficiently to see his claim to be worshipped as God." On the nature and extent of this knowledge, see Recens. Synop. Ἡ εὐχαρ., "nor made a grateful return for his benefits;" referring most of the blessings they enjoyed to fortune, or to their own prudence. See Grot.

has been disputed; but with little reason: since it is clear that the latter clause is meant to represent the effect of the notion denoted by the former; the meaning being, that as "they entertained vain and degrading views of the nature and attributes of God and his worship; so, in consequence of this, their understanding, thus abused, became darkened." Theoph. well explains: τοῖς λογισμοῖς τὸ πᾶν ἐπέτρεψαν, καὶ—μάταιοι ἠλέγχθησαν, οὐ δυνήζοντων τῶν λογισμῶν πρὸς τὸ πέραν ἐξικέσθαι, i. e. in the words of Milton, "and found no end, in wandering mazes lost." Ἐματαιώθησαν. Literally, "they were befooled or infatuated;" "the nature of sin," as Scott observes, "being not only to defile, but to infatuate." Here there may be an allusion, but no more, to what was κατ' ἐξοχὴν termed ματαιότης, namely, idolatry. See Acts xiv. 15. The Apostle similarly says at Eph. iv. 17. τὰ ἔθνη περιπατεῖν ἐν τῇ ματαιότητι νοῦς αὐτῶν. 22. This verse is meant to illustrate the foregoing sentiment, and show the extent of that fatuity (even the most debasing and disgusting idolatry), and the cause of it, in their giddy vanity. So Theophyl.: ἐκ τοῦ οἰεσθαι σοφοί, διὸ καὶ ἐμωράνθησαν.

—φάσκοντες—ἐμωράνθ.] "assuming to themselves the reputation of being wise," σοφοί and σοφισταί. See Wets. and Kypke. Thus Hegesander ap. Athen. 162. speaks of the δοξοματαιοσοφοί and the ζηταρετησιδάαι.

23. καὶ ἤλλαξαν, &c.] The full sense is, they dishonoured the glorious nature of the incorruptible God, by representing him under the likeness of, &c. Ἐρπετῶν, i. e. reptiles of every kind; not only serpents, but crocodiles and fishes, as in Egypt. The meaning here is beautifully expressed by Milton, Paradise Lost, B. i. 367—
 373. See also Philo Jud. vol. ii. p. 561. and Ps. cvi. 20. Idolatry of every kind sprang from the proneness of men to ascribe the benefits they enjoyed rather to the agency of such secondary causes as fell within the range of their senses, than to that of a Supreme Providence. Thus great or good kings, and eminent warriors or legislators, were deified; and at length even animals; whether from their great usefulness, or as being typical of the operations of nature; the origin and progress of which is traced with a masterly hand by Grot. and Perizon., and especially Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. vol. iii. p. 272. sqq.

24. παρέδωκεν—εἰς ἀκ.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that this must signify "permitted them to fall into." (See a similar passage in Acts vii. 42.) The sense being, that God gave them up to the gratifying of their lusts (they being so eager in the pursuit as to listen to none of the warnings of reason and conscience) and to the dreadful consequences (pointed out in what follows) of such a course. Ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ., for κατὰ, propter, τὰς ἐπιθυμίας. "The expression παρέδωκεν (as Prof. Stuart truly observes) neither denotes an active plunging them into sin, nor an inactive letting alone; but a leaving them to pursue their desires, without checking them by such restraints as He usually employs on those who are not yet hardened offenders." "The imputation (as Prof. Stuart observes) is, that in apostatizing from the true God, and running into idolatry, they had become the devoted slaves of lust, which seems, also, by implication, to be considered as the reason of their apostasy." And no wonder; since among all the various forms of heathenism, impurity has been either a direct or indirect service in their religious rites; Polytheism and idolatry having ever been a religion of obscenity as well as cruelty. Severe as was the wrath of God revealed in Scripture against every species of idolatry, it was insufficient to preserve the Israelites from falling into a sin, which, from peculiar circumstances, carried with it almost every vice. Besides idolatry, however, the Apostle has taken into the account other causes to which the vices here enumerated must be referred.

25. οἵτινες μετέλλαξαν.] This verse connects with ver. 23 (ver. 24 being in some measure parenthetical), and is a repetition, with some addition, of the idea there contained. Render, Who [I say] have changed. Τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the true God," abstract for concrete. Ἐν τῷ ψεύδει is for εἰς τὸ ψεῦδος, into a lie, i. e. a pretended God, an idol: for ψεῦδος, like the Heb. רָגַו, denoted not only a lie, but any action which involved a lie. Thus it was very applicable to those lying vanities, IDOLS. See Is. xlv. 20. Jerem. xxiii. 14. Elsn. aptly compares Philo p. 678, where Moses, on seeing the golden calf, is astonished to behold ὅσον ψεῦδος ἂν εἴη ὅσης ἀληθείας ὑπελάλαξαντο. In ἐσεβάσθησαν and ἐλάτρευσαν is designated every sort of religious worship and homage. Παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα, more than the Creator; or rather, to the neglect of, literally, to the passing by of the Creator, preterito Creatore, as Hilary renders. Lesner compares Philo p. 2. B. τινὲς τὸν κόσμον μάλλον ἢ τὸν κοσμοποιὸν θαυμάσαντες. Τὸν κτί-σαντα is for τὸν κτίστην; the antithesis here requiring the participle rather than the noun verbal.

To this the Apostle subjoins a doxology, as was usual with the Jews on occasions where the honour of God was concerned (see Gen. ix. 26. xiv. 20.) : such being often introduced even in the middle of a discourse, or chain of reasoning. See Gal. i. 5. 2 Cor. xi. 31.

26. As ver. 25 is a repetition and amplification of the sentiment in ver. 23, so this and the next verse are a repetition and amplification of the sentiment at ver. 24. Πάθη ἀτιμίας is for πάθη ἄτιμα, viz. those whereby they ἡτιμάζοντο τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς.

— αἷ τε γὰρ θήλειαι, &c.] Besides the evidence here adduced by Commentators (who refer to Seneca Epist. 95. Martial Epig. i. 90. Athen. Deipn. xiii. p. 605), Stuart refers to Tholuck on the moral state of the heathen world. I add, that the disclosures which have been made by the disinterment of Herculaneum and Pompeii are such as to confirm and illustrate fully all that the Apostle says or hints on the tremendous abominations of even the most civilized nations of the ancient world. Indeed the most civilized were plunged the deepest into the mire of pollution; the barbarians being comparatively virtuous. See the Germania of Tacitus.

27. ἀντιμοσίαν] "punishment." So Herodot. iii. 15. ἔλαβε τὸν μισθόν. The word is rare, but found in Clem. Alex. p. 190 & 273. And we may compare ἀντίφερνον in Æschyl. Ag. 39. By this ἀντιμοσίαν, considered as the penalty due to their πλάνη (or abandonment of the worship and service of the true God, and that knowledge of His attributes and their own duties, implanted by God in their minds and consciences), there is a reference to all the dreadful consequences, both physical and moral, which followed the practice of idolatry, and the abominations above described. This dissolute state of morals, and the incapacity it involved of enjoying the natural means of sexual gratification ordained by God, is considered by the Apostle as the penalty due to their πλάνη, or abandonment of the worship and service of the true God, and their being given up to idolatry; which, in all its various forms, especially in the East, has in all ages been the fruitful mother of lusts of every kind.

28. καὶ καθὼς—ἐπιγνώσει.] These words are, I conceive, exegetical of the πλάνης. Οὐκ ἔδοκίμασαν, "did not choose, or care," a signification established by Chrys., and of which many examples are adduced by Krebs and Wets. The Apostle's aim is, to show their errors and sins to be voluntary, and consequently inexcusable. The Apostle (as Stuart observes) means to say, that the heathen voluntarily rejected the knowledge of the true God, which they might, in a great degree, have gathered from the book of nature. Wherefore (continues the Apostle) God gave them up εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν. Now ἀδόκιμος properly signifies reprobos, rejectaneus, as used of bad money, which, as it will not pass, is good for nothing. Thus (by the same metaphor as in our word naughty) it comes to mean what is in every sense bad. In τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα there may be a bitotes, to signify turpia : or it may mean unsuitable to them as men, being contrary to nature, reason, &c.

29. πεπληρωμένους πάσῃ ἀδικίᾳ, &c.] Here follows an enumeration of the vices which were the natural fruits of the νοῦς ἀδόκιμος. In this list many Commentators trace, or at least endeavour to introduce, either by change of order, or by forced interpretations and long parentheses, that regular order, in which they would have the whole expressed. But the Apostle was little studious of regularity of composition. And it should seem that he was here content to enumerate the vices of the Gentiles populariter; thus exemplifying and justifying the charges just made. The difficulty which we occasionally find in ascertaining the exact sense meant to be expressed by the Apostle, arises from some of the terms employed being of considerable latitude; and from there being occasionally nothing sufficiently marked in the context to enable us to absolutely determine the sense. Ἀδικία, with which the list commences, seems meant to denote vice and iniquity in general; which is followed up by terms more special. Πορνεία Grot. and Koppe think probably not genuine, and arisen from a var. lect. of the following word. But there is the authority of only nine MSS. and some inferior Versions and Fathers for its omission. And the evidence of Versions and Fathers is, in such a case as the present, of little weight. The similarity too of the two words πορνεία and πονηρία would easily cause one of the two to be omitted; and the word which presented the least difficulty would be most likely to be retained. Besides, the words are found together in Æschines cont. Ctes. p. 84, where he speaks of τὴν τοῦ Κτησίφωτος πονηρίαν καὶ πορνείαν. On the latter of which terms see Note on Matt. v. 32. As to the change of order in some MSS., that probably proceeded from the endeavours of the Critics to introduce that regularity of plan which the Commentators so desiderate. With respect to πορνεία, it may be understood of illicit sexual intercourse in general, and include adultery. The latter, since it is used in Matt. xxii. 18. to denote malignity, craft, and in Luke ii. 39. is united with ἀρπαγή, in Mark vii. 22. with δόλος, and in 1 Cor. v. 8. with κακία (which here follows and signifies mischievousness), so it must, in the present passage, denote more than iniquity in general, and probably means malignity; or it may simply mean, in our old phrase, naughtiness. See Cruden's Conc. Πλεονεξία seems to mean rascality, extortion. So Thucyd. i. 40. οἶδε βιαίοι καὶ πλεονέκται εἰσι. The word is also united with βία by Pollux viii. 7. and Xen. Mem. i. 2. 12. πλεονέκ. καὶ βιαιότατος ἐγένετο. Κακία seems to denote the mens prava, agendi, intentional and habitual mischievousness; as in Eurip. Hippol. 1334. τὴν δὲ σὴν ἀμαρτίαν τὸ μὴ εἰδέναι—ἐκλύει κάκης. So Thucyd. i. 32. ξυγγνωμῇ, εἰ μὴ μετὰ κακίας, δόξης δὲ μᾶλλον ἀμαρτία τολμῶμεν.

—φθόνου, φόνου, ἐριδος.] These three terms seem meant to form a group; and the sense may be, “full of envy and strife, even to murder.” By κακοηθεία, Kypke observes, is here meant not vicious action in general, but that vice of the mind which, according to Aristotle's definition, consists in viewing every action in the worst light, as opposed to εὐηθεία, unsuspecting candour and bonhomie.

30. ψιθυριστὰς, καταλ.] These are meant to be coupled; the former, as Theophyl. observes, denoting secret, and the latter open calumniators.

—θεοστυγεῖς.] The word, according to its different accentuation, may signify either haters of God, or hated by God. The latter sense is the one usually found in the Classical writers, and it is here adopted by some eminent modern Commentators. But the former, which is assigned by the ancients and most moderns, seems preferable.

—ὕβριστὰς, ὑπερηφ., ἀλαζ.] These terms seem to form another group. They so far differ that the first denotes insolence, as shown in gross abuse; the 2d and 3d, as evinced in contemptuous behaviour and contumelious words.

—ἐφευρετὰς κακῶν.] This is well explained by Chrys., Theophyl., Theodoret, and Æcum., to denote persons who not only perpetrate all the known vices, but seek out and invent more. So in 2 Macc. vii. 31. Antiochus is called πάσης κακίας εὐρετής. And Wets. compares Philo p. 520. στασιάρхай, φιλοπράγμονες, κακῶν εὐρεταί. So Tacitus calls Sejanus “facinorum omnium repertor.” And no wonder that there should have been these ἐφευρεταί κακῶν, since, from the competition in luxury existing in this rich but corrupt metropolis of the world, there were (as appears from Tacitus, Suetonius, and Plutarch) ἐφευρεταί ἡδονῶν, persons who lived by inventing new pleasures. After all, however, the expression may (with Koppe and others) be understood of those who plan and contrive crimes for others to execute. And this interpretation is confirmed by a passage of Thucyd. iii. 83. (in which he similarly describes the manners of the Grecians of his age): ‘Ἀπλῶς δὲ, ὁ φθᾶσας τὸν μέλλοντα κακὸν τι δρᾶν ἐπηρεῖτο’ καὶ ὁ ἐπικελεύσας τὸν μὴ διανοοῦμενον, where see my Note.

31. ἀσυνέτους.] This must not, as Grot. thought, be omitted, as a var. lect. of ἀσυνθέτους, since for that there is no authority), but retained and explained as we may. Some ancient, and several eminent modern Commentators take it for ἀσυνειδήτους, without conscience, or sense of religion. Since, however, that interpretation is destitute of authority, it is better, with Theophyl. and Wets., to take it (by an idiom found in our own language) for “obstinate.” And this sense is established by a passage of an Inscription in Chishull's Antiq. Asiat. p. 2. p. 12, cited by Bowyer: ‘Ἀξυνέτων δὲ βουλαῖς ἀνθρώπων τοῦδ' ἔτυχον θανάτου, where see Chishull. In this very sense, too, the kindred word ἄφρων is used in Prov. xii. 1, as ὁ δὲ μισὼν ἐλέγχους ἄφρων.

In the terms which follow, ἀσυνδέτους—ἀνελεήμονας, there is some variety of reading, and much of interpretation. Many ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers have not ἀσπόνδους; which Griesb. and Koppe think is very probably an interpolation. If that were the case, I should suspect that ἀστόργους and ἀσυνδ. ought to be interchanged in position, which would keep the subject of disobedience and perversity to parents distinct from that of breach of contracts. And the omission in question may readily be ascribed partly to the scribes (ob homoteleton), and partly to the Critics, who thought the ἀσπόνδους useless after ἀσυνδέτους. But the words are not quite synonymous. Ἀσπ. may have reference to public, ἀσυνδ. to private life. Or rather, ἀσυνδ. may mean breakers of covenants, and ἀσπ. those who enter into no treaties; i. e. implacable, irreconcilable. And thus it will consort well with ἀνελεήμονας. However, I cannot but suspect that ἀσυνδέτους and ἀστόργους ought to change places. And although there be no direct authority in MSS. for this, yet there is indirect; for there is little doubt but that in the archetypes of those very ancient MSS. which have not ἀσπόνδους, the word was written after ἀσυνθέτους. This also is countenanced by the very ancient MS. 17, and Theophyl. Besides, as ἀστόργους is so closely connected with γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀσυνέτους, it seems impossible to suppose that the Apostle would have taken the word from its proper connection, and inserted it between two other words, which are likewise closely connected, and by which there would thus arise an unnatural disruption.

Ἀνελεήμονας, pitiless, seems a step in the climax beyond ἀσπόνδους in the sense above inculcated. By ἀστόργους is denoted a want of the natural affection between children and parents respectively. So, in the description which Thucydides gives of the manners of Greece in the Peloponnesian war, he says, that the father used to give up the son to death, and the son the father; and in general that the ties of kindred

γ' ὅτι οἱ τὰ 32
 τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες ἄξιοι θανάτου εἰσὶν, οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι.

were broken. As to ἀνελεήμονας, historians, and other writers of ancient times attest this to have been the prevailing characteristic of the period in question, all over the Roman Empire. See Grot. and Wets.

With this description of the state of the Gentiles may be compared the fine moral picture in Thucydides iii. 82—84, of the state of society in Greece at the time of the Peloponnesian war; also one scarcely inferior in Philo Judæus, p. 123, of the state of manners in the world, during his times, both among Jews and Gentiles: where, among other particulars, he notices ἀσκήσεις ἀκρασίας, ἀφροσύνης μελέται, ἐπιτηδεύσεις αἰσχυρίων, φθορά παντελῆς τοῦ καλοῦ. And he thus concludes: Τότε ἀρετὴ μὲν ὡς βλαβερόν γελᾶται, κακία δὲ ὡς ὠφέλιμον ἀρπάζεται· τότε τὰ μὲν πρακτέα ἄτιμα, τὰ δὲ μὴ πρακτέα ἐπίτιμα. See also Max. Tyr. Diss. xxxvi. 2, and Diss. iii. 3. Pausan. viii. 2, 2.

32. τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες] “knowing the decree and ordinance of God;” i. e. by having it written by God on their consciences. “Ἄξιοι θανάτου; i. e. deserving of the severest punishment both in this world and in the next. Or the singular may here be used in a generic sense for the plural; “there being (as Prof. Stuart rightly notices) in δικ. a reference to the leading traits of moral duty (as 1 Macc. i. 13. ποιεῖν τὰ δικαιώματα τῶν ἐθνῶν, and Test. xii. Petr. ποιεῖν τὰ δικαιώματα Κυρίου).” And he justly observes, “that by ἐπιγνόντες the Apostle means that the disclosures made respecting God in the works of nature, and respecting the duties which he demanded of them in their own consciences or moral sense, were of such a kind as fairly to give them an opportunity of knowing something respecting the great outlines of duty, and of rendering them inexcusable for neglecting it.” This indeed even the Philosophers, at least in their exoteric doctrines, professed. See Virg. Æn. vi. 608.

—οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ—πράσσουσι.] It is strange that some eminent Commentators should have so little understood the sense, as either to propose an unauthorized alteration of the text, or else to propound interpretations, which are at variance with all the principles of correct exegesis. The sense (as it has been admirably explained by Chrys., Theophyl., Theodoret, and Œcum., and, after them, by Grot. and others), is, that they not only, seduced by passion, commit such sins; but are so devoid of all sense of rectitude and virtue, that they even approve of the things when done by others, and like them the better for practising the same. So Thucydides (before adverted to) iii. 82, 11. ὥστε εὐσεβεία μὲν οὐδὲτεροι ἐνόμιζον, εὐπρεπεία δὲ λόγον οἷς ζυμβαίη ἐπιφθόνως τὴ διαπράξασθαι, ἀμεινον ἤκουν. Now Dr. South (in his two Sermons on this text) has shown that we have here an aggravation, or advance a minor ad majus. And this because, as in many cases crimes are the result of sudden and violent temptation, so it argues a higher degree of depravity to deliberately justify and applaud wickedness committed, than to commit it amidst the influence of violent passion. Thus the guilt arising from a man's delighting in other men's sins, or (what is all one) in other men for their sins, is greater than he can possibly contract by a commission of the same sins in his own person.”

II. The Apostle, having now convinced the Gentiles of sin, proceeds to show that the Jews are under the same condemnation, and stand as much in need of the mercy proffered in the Gospel as the Gentiles. He proves that they, having despised the goodness, and broken the law of God, were as obnoxious to His wrath as the Gentiles; and therefore could not pretend to arrogate the Divine mercy to themselves; for, in thus condemning the Gentiles, they, in fact, condemned themselves. Since, however, this was a subject unpalatable to Jews, the Apostle argues in a covert way, apostrophizing some one (a Jew, as it should seem) whom he supposes to be present, and, on hearing him enumerate the multiplied abominations of the Gentiles, to break out into bitter condemnation of them. Moreover, he does not at first apply what he says to the Jews; and throughout he proceeds discreetly, insinuating himself gradually into the Jew's conscience. To do this, there was no need (as in the case of the Gentile) to prove to the Jew that he was under a law, that being his great boast; but there was great need to eradicate those prejudices, which led him to make so wide a distinction between Jews and Gentiles, as to suppose that a Jew might safely continue in sins, which would be fatal to a Gentile. Therefore the Apostle 1. denies such a distinction; and 2dly, destroys the prejudices upon which such a notion is founded, and affirms that there will be but one rule for both Jew and Gentile. Or, in the words of Prof. Stuart, the Apostle in vv. 1—10. prepares the way for the general proof, by showing that all who have a knowledge of what is right, and approve of it, but yet sin against it, are guilty; and also those who are so blind as not to see the excellence of virtue, and at the same time transgress its precepts. The learned writer also truly remarks, “that though the Apostle had the Jews constantly in mind, he advances only general propositions, applicable in common to them and to others; thus paving the way for a more efficient charge to be made specifically against the Jews, in the sequel of his discourse. Thus we have in vv. 1—8. the general considerations already named. In vv. 9—16. the Apostle shows that the Jews must be accountable to God, as really and truly, for the manner in which they treat the precepts contained in the Scriptures, as the heathen are for the manner in which they demean themselves with respect to the law of nature; and that each must be judged, at last, according to the means of grace and improvement which he has enjoyed. In vv. 17—29. there is a more direct reference to the Jews, in which it is shown that those who sin against higher degrees of knowledge imparted by revelation, must be more guilty than those who have offended merely against the laws of nature; i. e. he plainly teaches the doctrine that guilt is proportioned to the light and love that have been manifested, and yet been abused."

1. διὸ ἀναπολόγητος.] Some difference of opinion exists as to the connection of this verse with what precedes. Now διὸ must, from its very form, be illative; yet the nature of the inference is not very clear, and has been variously traced. The simplest method seems to be that adopted by Abp. Newcome: "Wherefore, since the wickedness of mankind is general, none can judge another, as the Jews do the Gentiles, without condemning himself." More, however, seems to be here meant by the Apostle: and Prof. Stuart is probably right in tracing the connection thus: "Since it will be conceded that those who know the ordinances of God against such vices as have been named, and still practise them, and applaud others for doing so, are worthy of punishment; it follows, (διὸ, therefore,) that all who are so enlightened as to disapprove of such crimes, and who still commit them, are even yet more worthy of punishment."

— ὁ κρίνων.] Many examples are adduced by Taylor of this use of the Participle present with an Article. And he shows that it often served to denote a character, profession, or employment. It is, in fact, put for the verb and pronoun relative; on which see Win. Gr. Gr. § 39. The idiom is here used, as being in its indefinite force, most suitable to the covert mode adopted by the Apostle, who chose to make the proposition general, though intended to be of particular application.

— τὸν ἕτερον] i. e. the other party,—namely, the Gentile. Κρίνεις, sittest in judgment, pronouncing sentence. Simil. Philo. p. 453. ἐν οἷς ἕτερον αἰτιάται, διαβάλλων ἐαντὸν λέληξεν. Πράσσεις, i. e. habitually committest; for the present time often (as Taylor observes) imports habit. That the Jews were defiled with the same vices as the heathen, we have the testimony of Josephus, as also the above (hitherto unalleged) evidence of Philo, p. 453. B.

2. οἶδαμεν δὲ ὅτι—πράσσοντας.] The δὲ should not be rendered for, or besides, (as it is done by some) but may be understood in the ordinary adversative sense, and be supposed to have reference to a clause omitted, of the following purport: "[He may, indeed, flatter himself with being acquitted, by being tried under a different rule of judgment] but we know and are sure, &c." By we is meant we all, whether Jews or Gentiles.

3. λογίζῃ δὲ—τοῦ Θεοῦ.] A spirited and not unusual manner of speaking, by which an argument, like the foregoing, is pressed home,—and which involves grave and also severe expostulation. This is continued throughout the following verse, in which the καταφρόνησις imputed to the Jews seems to be, a slighting of the mercy of God held out, under the notion, that it could not be needed,—inasmuch as no sin committed by any of the posterity of Abraham could finally deprive him of the divine favour. See Justin Martyr ap. Rec. Syn. The δὲ should not be rendered "and," but (since it is argumentative) "and now," or "then."

4. ἢ τοῦ πλούτου—καταφρονεῖς.] ^H is for num or an, as in 1 Cor. xi. 14; xiv. 36. With τοῦ πλούτου τῆς χρηστ., supposed to be a Hebraism for "rich mercy," Grot. compares Philo ὑπερβολὴ τοῦ πλούτου τῆς ἀγαθότητος Θεοῦ, and Palaiet cites Aristen. p. 10. ὠραῖζομένην ὑπὸ πλούτου τῆς εὐτρεπείας. Of the terms χρηστ., ἀνοχῆς, and μακρ., the two last are nearly synonymous. The first denotes a disposition to be good, and to benefit others. Καταφρονεῖν here signifies to care not for, to slight, &c. "Ἀγνοῶν, "not considering;" literally, not knowing from want of reflection. Τὸ χρηστὸν, for χρηστότης. Μετάνοια denotes such a change of mind as shall operate on the conduct, and produce reformation of what is evil. "Ἀγει is by many Commentators explained, "is intended to lead thee," by a Canon of Glass, that verbs denoting action or effect are sometimes used of endeavour only. But it is better, with Chrys., Carpzov., and Schleus., to interpret it impels, namely, by the use of all moral means and fit motives. See John x. 16 & 44, and Cebes cited in Recens. Synop.

5. κατὰ δὲ τὴν σκληρ.] Κατὰ signifies præ, because of. So in Eph. iv. 19, we have κατὰ σκληρότητα for σκληρότητι. And both Herodotus and Thucydides often use this signification; chiefly, however, in the phrase κατ' ἐχθρος. Ἀμετανόητον, impenitent. Grot. compares a similar active sense in ἀμετακίνητος, ἀλάλητος, and ἀμετάστροφος.

— θησανρίζεις.] The word is properly used of what is good, but sometimes, as here, and often in the O. T., sarcastically, of what is bad. So Prov. i. 18. θησανρίζουσιν αὐτοῖς κακά. See my Note on Thucyd. viii. 28, 2. The word suggests the idea of increase by accumulation.

— ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὀργῆς] “unto the time of wrathful punishment.” Of this sense of ὀργή examples are cited by Kypke. Ἀποκαλ. δικαιοκρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is for ἐν ᾗ ἀποκαλυφθήσεται ἡ δικ., a periphrasis to denote the day of judgment. Δικαιοκρισία is a rare word, found in no writer earlier than St. Paul, except an anonymous Greek Translator at Hos. vi. 6. Δικαιοκρίτης occurs in Esth. viii. 13, and 4 Macc. xii. 18.

6—11. After having overturned the above-mentioned Jewish prejudices, the Apostle proceeds to assert, that there is no such προσωποληψία, or acceptance of persons, by God at the day of judgment, merely because they are of this or that nation; have or have not a revealed law; are circumcised or uncircumcised; but that all shall be judged with strict impartiality, according to the degree of light and knowledge afforded in each particular. (Young.)

This portion is intended partly to describe the nature of the judgment just mentioned, and evince its justice; but is, I conceive, chiefly introduced in order to enable the Apostle to engraft on the description of God's impartial justice to individuals, his impartial justice to nations, which is skilfully introduced at vv. 9 & 10.

7. κατ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ.] On the construction of this v. Commentators differ. It should seem that κατ' ὑπομ. must be joined with ζητοῦσι. Κατ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγ. is rendered by Koppe “constanti virtutis studio.” But it is rather put for ἐφ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργων ἀγαθῶν; the singular, as denoting the genus, being put for the plural, as often. See v. 15. 1 Cor. iii. 14; xv. 58. 1 Thess. i. 3. 2 Thess. ii. 17. Δόξαν and τιμὴν are considered as synonymous, but are conjoined to strengthen the sense; of which Wets. cites many examples from Thucyd. and other writers, in which, however, τιμὴ precedes δόξα; and no wonder; for the former signifies the honour and dignity assigned to any one, the latter, the glory thence resulting. The words καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν are added to explain δόξαν, and to raise the description far beyond whatever this world can furnish. So Posidippus cited by Grot.: Ὦν τοῖς θεοῖς ἀνθρώπος εὐχεται τυχεῖν, τῆς ἀθανάσιος κρείττον οὐδὲν εὐχεται.

8. τοῖς ἐξ ἐριθείας.] Sub. οὗτοι, for τοῖς ἐρίζουσι, or ἐριστικοῖς, as Theophyl. explains. So the expressions οἱ ἐκ πίστεως and οἱ ἐκ νόμου. “It is (as Rosenm. observes) a Hebraism, by which when any moral quality is spoken of, those are said to be of that quality, who have it.” The Commentators are not agreed whether the Apostle has reference to the Gentiles, or to the Jews. See Phil. i. 15, and Note. It was meant, I think, for all, according as it might apply; in the words of St. Isidore, ταῦτα δὲ κατὰ τῶν ἐνόχων εἰρηταί.

In ἀπειθοῦσι—ἀδικία there is a cutting censure. Some Commentators understand the ἀπειθ. and πειθ. of opinions; others of dispositions and actions, which is confirmed by John iii. 21, and viii. 44. Thus ἀπειθεῖν τῇ ἀλ. will signify to be indisposed to do what is right or virtuous. The passage may, however, with Beza, be understood both of contentiousness in opinion, and, what is often united therewith, disobedience in practice. At ὀργή καὶ θυμὸς sub. ἔσται, put for ἀποδοθήσεται, taken from the context; though, grammatically, there is an anacoluthon. There is great force in the expressions θυμὸς—στενοχωρία, which Doddr., with reason, supposes to be borrowed from Ps. lxxviii. 49. He, however, and Elsner refine too much in the distinctions they make between θυμὸς and ὀργή, as also κότος and χόλος. The terms are, in use, synonymous. Artemid. ii. 51, and iii. 57. has Σλίψεις καὶ στενοχωρίας in the sense “afflictions and troubles.” Of course, ἔσται must here again be supplied.

9. πάσαν ψυχὴν ἁ.] A Hebraism taken from דָּן כָּל נֶפֶשׁ כִּי, as in xiii. 1. Acts ii. 43. James i. 21. Τὸ κακόν, for κακίαν. The κατὰ in κατεργ. is intensive. It is never used with τὸ ἀγαθόν. The use of the Present, and the nature of the term κατεργ. alike denote habitual action. The reason of this denunciation is well stated by Hooker Eccl. Pol. i. 9. On Ἰουδαίου—Ἕλληνος see Note supra i. 16.

10. εἰρήνη] i. e. that peace with God, by which the possession of all other benefits is crowned, as implying the uninterrupted possession of them.

11. προσωποληψία] “preference,” “acceptance” through favour. On this and the two next verses, see Bp. Bull's Diss. ii. 4, 8.

12. ἀνόμως.] This verse is confirmative, and explanatory of the preceding. The word is here taken in the very rare sense ἀνεν νόμου or τοῦ νόμου, of which Alberti adduces one example from Isocr. τοὺς Ἕλληνας ἀνόμως ζῶντας καὶ σποράδην οἰκοῦντας. The Commentators, however, are not agreed whether ἀνόμως is meant with reference to the Law of Moses, or Law (i. e. Revelation) in general. The most eminent modern ones adopt the latter view; the ancient and some modern ones the former. The question is indeed of difficult determination; but I am inclined to agree with Bp. Middl. in the following remarks. "It must be admitted, speaking of νόμος with the Article prefixed, though subject to some well-known exceptions, that there is scarcely in the whole N. T. any greater difficulty, than the ascertaining the various meanings of νόμος in the Epistles of St. Paul. In order to show that by the Gospel alone men can be justified, and that the Mosaic revelation is in this respect of no more avail than is the light of nature, a proposition, the proof of which is the main object of the whole Epistle, he has occasion to refer to the different rules of life with which the Gentiles and Jews had respectively been furnished; to the latter more than one revelation had been granted; for from the earliest ages to the time of Malachi, the Almighty favoured them (the Patriarchs and Prophets) with repeated indications of his will. Hence νόμος is used by St. Paul of every rule of life, of every revelation, especially of the Mosaic law, and even of the moral and ceremonial observances, one or both of which it is the object of every νόμος to inculcate. Our English version, by having almost constantly said the law, whatever be the meaning of νόμος in the original, has made this most difficult Epistle still more obscure; for the English reader is used to understand the term of the law of Moses, as in the Evangelists. With respect to the present passage, I am of opinion that by τοῦ νόμου the Law κατ' ἐξοχὴν is meant, and that the Apostle means to reprove the presumption of the Jews, who thought themselves sure of eternal life, because God had favoured them with a revelation of his will; in which case the reasoning will be, As many as have sinned without a revelation shall be punished without incurring the additional penalties which such a revelation would have enacted; and as many as have sinned under a revelation shall suffer the severer punishment which that revelation, whatever it be, has denounced against their crimes. If it be thought strange, saith St. Paul, that such indulgence should be shown to the former class of persons, I will add, that not the hearers even of the law itself, but, &c. Then the Apostle subjoins, For when Gentiles, who have not any revelation, practise, by natural impulse, morality as pure as that which even the Mosaic law enjoins, though they have not actually a revelation, they become a revelation to themselves, and may therefore hope for all the rewards of virtue, which an actual revelation would have taught them to expect. And the same argument, with the same attention to the use of the Article, is prosecuted to the end of the Chapter." On the parenthesis of this and the next two verses, see Winer's Gr. Gr. § 51, 2. a.: and on δικαιῶσθαι.

see Mackn., and especially Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. p. 41.

The foregoing seems to be the true view of the sense, which has been illustrated by Grot., Wets., and others, from passages of similar sentiment occurring in the Classical writers; the most apposite of which, together with others of my own may be found in Recens. Synop.

14. "In this verse (as observes Prof. Stuart) an objection is anticipated and solved. It might be replied, that the Gentiles have no revelation, and therefore this cannot apply to them. To this the answer is, that the Gentiles have a law as really and truly as the Jews, written, though not on parchment, yet on the tablets of their hearts."

— φύσει by the instinctive sense of right and wrong, supplied by the light of conscience. Τὰ τοῦ νόμου, i. e. the moral injunctions contained in the Law. Ἐαυτοῖς εἰσι νόμος, i. e. they, by the dictates of reason and conscience, have a law supplied to themselves. "Meaning (as Hooker Eccl. Pol. 18. explains) that by force of the light of reason, wherewith God illumineth every one who cometh into the world, men being enabled to know truth from falsehood, and good from evil, do thereby learn in many things what the will of God is; which will Himself not revealing by any extraordinary means unto them, but they by natural discourse attaining the knowledge thereof, seem the makers of those laws which indeed are His, and they but only the finders of them out."

15. οἵτινες ἐνδείκνυνται—ἀπολογουμένων.] These words are meant to establish and illustrate the foregoing assertion. Οἵτινες may be rendered, quippe qui, inasmuch as they. Τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου is by many modern Commentators thought to be put for τὸν νόμον. But Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, together with Erasm., Menoch., Taylor, and Mackn., seem right in retaining the force of ἔργον, and in supposing the sense to be, "the effect, or proof of the existence, of that law," namely, in discovering the obligation to the moral duties, which revelation, by its precepts, lays open and enjoins. So Diog. Laert. cited by me in Recens. Synop., says the barbarians have the τὸ ἔργον τῆς φιλοσοφίας, though destitute of the express form of it. Prof. Stuart, however, takes it to mean the work or duty of the law, i. e. which the law demands; comparing 1 Thess. i. 3. ἔργον τῆς πίστεως, 2 Thess. i. 3. ἔργον πίστεως, John vi. 28. and 2 Tim. iv. 5. By γραπτὸν is meant, "deeply imprinted," as were the characters traced with the iron style on the waxed tablets of the ancients. The metaphor occurs in the O. T. and the ancient writers in general. So Æsch. Prom. 81. ἦν ἐγγράφου σὺ μνήμοισιν δέλτοις φρενῶν. Julian Orat. vii. p. 209. ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Θεῶν ἡμῖν ὥσπερ ἐγγραφέντας (scil. νόμους) ταῖς ψυχαῖς.

&c.] This is explanatory of what precedes, sub-joining two confirmations of what was before said, that the demands of the moral law are inscribed on the hearts of man in a state of nature. The meaning (as Prof. Stuart shows) being, that “the voice of conscience, which proceeds from a moral feeling of dislike or approbation, and the judgment of the mind, when it examines the nature of actions, unite in testifying that what the moral law of God requires, is impressed, in some good measure, even on the hearts of the heathens.”

16. ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, &c.] It has been not a little disputed with what these words are to be connected. The ancient and early modern Expositors (followed by Tholuck), join them with what goes immediately before, namely, the participles κατηγορούντων and ἀπολογουμένων. But (as Stuart has shown) that yields a sense little apposite. I cannot, however, agree with him regarding vv. 12—15, as parenthetical, and connecting ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, &c. at v. 16. with v. 11. I rather acquiesce in the opinion of most eminent Expositors from Grotius downwards, that ἐν ἡμέρᾳ is to be joined with κριθήσονται at v. 12., and that vv. 13—15. are a parenthetical explanation or confirmation of v. 12.

— τὰ κρυπτὰ τῶν ἀνθρ.] “the secrets of men’s hearts,” as 1 Cor. xiv. 25. τὰ κρυπτὰ καρδίας, meaning their secret counsels. The ancient and some modern Commentators take it to denote the secret sins of men; (See Ps. xix. 12. xc. 8.) which may be included. Τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου signifies, “the Gospel as preached by me.”

17—24. Here it is shown, that the Jew would not be at all benefitted by the mere possession and knowledge of the Law; but, on the contrary, inasmuch as he offended against clearer light and fuller conviction, would receive to himself the greater condemnation. (Young). He admits, for the sake of argument, all their claims to pre-eminence; and then shows that these only increase their guilt, in case of disobedience. (Stuart). The Apostle, however, does not say this in express words, but rather, after enumerating the various privileges with which the Jews had, beyond other nations, been favoured, leads them (though in a way which involves inquiry rather than affirmation) to the remembrance of the sins with which they were accustomed to pollute themselves. (Koppe).

— ἴδε, σὺ, &c.] Some MSS., Versions, Fathers, and the Ed. Princ., read εἰ δέ, which is edited by Beng., Griesb., Knapp, Koppe, Tittm., and Vat. But, I conceive, without sufficient warrant. The external evidence for it is very slender; and the internal not strong. As to εἰ δὲ being, as Knapp says, the more difficult reading, that may be doubted. The testimony of Versions in a case like this is not very strong, and the authority of Fathers is here precarious. For in most of them the MSS. have ἴδε, from which it appears that the text was corrupted from the Ed. Princ. Theophyl. certainly reads ἴδε, as appears from his commentary; and so did Chrys. Finally, ἴδε is more agreeable to the Hellenistic style (for which reason it was altered by some over nice ancient Critics) and to the Apostle’s manner; and surely is as suitable as εἰ δέ. The common reading is therefore with reason retained by Wets. and Matth. We may render, “Mind now—thou bearest the name of Jew,” which implied honour, as being thought (by a fanciful etymology), to denote a worshipper of one God. Ἐπαναπαύῃ τῷ νόμῳ, “thou restest on and confidest in the law [as fully able to save thee].” So Micah iii. 11. ἐπὶ τὸν Κύριον ἐπανεπαύοντο, which passage seems to have been in the mind of the Apostle. Καυχᾶσαι ἐν Θεῷ, i. e. thou boastest of thy knowledge of God, and that thou standest in a covenant relation to Him.”

18. καὶ γινώσκεις τὸ θέλ.] scil. αὐτοῦ, to be supplied from τοῦ Θεοῦ, which shows so close a connexion to subsist between the clauses καυχ. τῷ Θεῷ and καὶ γινώσκ. τὸ θέλημα, that they ought not to have been disjoined by the division of the verses. In fact, vv. 18, 19, seem meant to exemplify the knowledge of God, whereof the Jew boasted. Inasmuch that the Pesch. Syr. Translator does not ill consult the general sense by rendering “Gloriaris de Deo, quod scias voluntatem ejus,” &c. Δοκιμάζεις τὰ διαφέροντα is for ἐπίστασαι δοκιμάζεις. As to the sense of the expression δοκ. τὰ διαφ., it is expressed by the older Commentators and the English Translators, “approve those things which are excellent.” But the best modern Commentators (in common with the Greek Expositors) are, with reason, of opinion that the meaning, as required by the context, can only be, “canst distinguish between things that differ,” implying trial in order to preference. The things that differ are good and evil, τὸ καλὸν and τὸ κακόν, lawful and unlawful, respecting which the Jews, as well as the Heathen Philosophers, boasted of being great causts.

19—20. The expressions ὁδηγὸς τυφλῶν, φῶς τῶν ἐν σκότει, and παιδευτὴς ἀφρόνων, as also διδάσκαλος νηπίων, were all, as the Commentators have proved, terms applied by the Jews to themselves, and intended to set in a strong point of view their claims of superiority over the Gentiles. On the force of the word nómos I have fully treated in Recens. Synop. The words following ἔχοντα τὴν μόρφωσιν, &c. signify, "having, in the Law, the [very] form and figure of true knowledge." Μόρφωσις properly signifies a sketch of the outline of any figure with chalk or otherwise, as τύπος is the delineation of any thing by stamp. Now as both are supposed to represent the true form of any thing, so they are both metaphorically applied (τύπος in Rom. vi. 17., and μόρφωσις in the present passage) to denote an accurate knowledge of any thing. In τῆς γνώσεως καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας there is a Hendiadys, equivalent to "true knowledge."

21. ὁ οὖν διδάσκων—διδάσκεις.] This appears from the illustrations adduced from ancient writers, Classical and Rabbinical, to have been a common argumentum ad hominem. With respect to the heads of accusation which follow (and intended as specimens of the immorality by which the Jews made the name of God to be evil spoken of among the Heathens) on these there has been much learning and diligence needlessly expended. There can be little doubt that these and many other crimes were committed by the different orders of people, either in the full, or in a qualified sense. From the state of society in Judæa, as described by Josephus, theft and rapine must, and we find did extensively prevail among the lower orders. See Joseph. Bell. v. 26. And there is no reason to doubt the rapacity of the Priests, and the higher ranks in general. Adultery seems to have defiled all classes, as indeed it had always done. See Jerem. v. 8. As to sacrilege, we have no historical evidence on which to sustain the charge in the literal sense: and therefore the expression here used is perhaps meant chiefly to apply to other crimes, which partook of the nature of sacrilege; such as that of defrauding the Temple and priesthood of the tithes appropriated to their support; and, in the lowest ranks (especially of Jews resident in foreign countries), the eating of meats offered to idols. Pr. Stuart, however, takes the word in its utmost latitude, to designate every kind of act which denies to God his sovereign honours and claims.

23. ὃς ἐν νόμῳ—ἀτιμάζεις;] This is, I apprehend, not so much another head of accusation, as it is meant to be an inference from what preceded; and though expressed interrogatively, it must be taken declaratively, q. d. So then, thou who boastest thyself of the Law, dishonourest God and His religion by the neglect of it. For, as God was the author of the Law, so the transgression of it was a dishonouring of Him, by contemning His authority. Διὰ τῆς παραβ. τοῦ νόμου should be rendered, "by the (i. e. thy) transgression of the law."

24. τὸ γὰρ ὄνομα.] Here the Apostle brings directly home the charge at which he had before only hinted. The words are not, properly speaking, a quotation of any one passage, but, while formed chiefly from Is. lii. 5., they have a reference also to Ezek. xxxvi. 20., and probably 2 Sam. xii. 14. Neh. v. 9. In the first passage, ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι, though found in the Sept., has nothing corresponding in the Hebrew; and the words were, no doubt, supplied, to complete the sense. Render, "[The foregoing charges are not without foundation]; for to you may be applied the reproach occasionally cast on your forefathers by the Prophets: The name of," &c., the heathens reasoning, What sort of a religion must that be, which produces such a life? Iaspis aptly compares Euseb. Hist. Eccl. v. 1. διὰ ἀναστροφῆς αὐτῶν βλασφημούντας (i. e. βλασφημεῖσθαι ποιοῦντας) τινὰ ὁδόν.

25. The words of this verse are meant as an answer to a tacit objection, which the Jews might make to the whole of what the Apostle had said; namely, "Aye, but circumcision is surely, you will grant, a great thing, as being a seal of the covenant. Ans. Yes, I grant it is; circumcision is effectual, if," &c.: "did you live answerably to the obligations implied in this covenant-sign, it were well; otherwise the privilege to which you are entitled as a Jew, will avail you nothing for salvation." How deeply rooted was their notion of the complete efficacy of circumcision to salvation, has been shown by Grot., Schoettg., and Mackn. The Apostle takes for granted the superiority of the Jews over the Gentiles, and the efficacy of the Law to salvation, if its moral precepts (called δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου in the next verse) be but observed; otherwise the advantage is lost. By νόμος here Bp. Middl. thinks is meant not the Law itself, but moral obedience, or virtue, such as it was the object of the Law to inculcate. And he directs νόμου to be so taken at v. 27. But there, as the νόμου corresponds by apodosis, to τὸν νόμον, it is clear that νόμου is equivalent to τοῦ νόμου. And this must decide the sense of νόμου in the kindred passage of the present verse. Besides, this precarious interpretation of the learned Prelate will be quite unnecessary, if the method of interpretation always pursued by the ancient Commentators be adopted. And surely there is nothing that can be thought a breach of any of his Canons,—since he allows the utmost latitude in cases, where the Article may be supposed to have been omitted from its being judged unnecessary to use it. And surely, in a sentence of which circumcision and uncircumcision are the subjects, there could be no danger of νόμος being taken for any other than ὁ νόμος, the Law of Moses. By the law is meant the whole law, including the moral as well as ceremonial, q. d. If ye indeed perform the whole law, [and not the Ceremonial only, to the omission of the moral] then, &c. Περιτομή seems to stand for the whole of the Ceremonial law, of which circumcision was the principal, as it implied an obligation to perform all the rest. See Schoettg.

Ἡ περιτομή—γέγονεν is a popular way of saying, “Thou art in no better state than if thou wert an uncircumcised Gentile! And so in the 26. τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου.] This must signify the moral precepts of the Mosaic Law, which the Jews so neglected.

27. καὶ κρινεῖ, &c.] Repeat οὐχὶ from the preceding verse. The Apostle now openly mentions, what he had at first only hinted at,—that their neglect of the means of grace would bring condemnation and punishment. Κρινεῖ, for κατακρινεῖ, will “occasion condemnation to,” i. e.
by comparison, as Matt. xii. 41. Ἡ ἐκ φύσεως ἀκροβυστία is for οἱ φυσικῶς ἀκρόβυστοι, Gentiles by birth. Τελοῦσα is for ἐπιτελοῦσα, completely performing. By τὸν νόμον is meant the δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου of the verse preceding.

— τὸν διὰ γραμματος—παραβάτην νόμον.]
The διὰ is best rendered under, i. e. with, although with, the advantage of. See Rom. iv. 11.
viii. 25. xiv. 20. The γράμμ. is by some explained of the letter as opposed to the spirit.
But the most eminent Interpreters understand it of the Divine revelation given to the Jews, by a tacit opposition to the unwritten law of nature. Thus the sense (as Prof. Stuart observes) is this: “If a Gentile should do what the law requires, would not this show, that you are worthy of condemnation, who transgress the law, although you enjoy the light of revelation, and the privileges which a state of circumcision confers?” Or it may be expressed, with Mr. Holden, thus: “Will not the Gentile by birth, who practises the virtues enjoined by the revealed law, judge thee, who, though thou hast the literal circumcision, art a transgressor of the law? Yes; for according to the true intent of the Mosaic dispensation, he is not really a Jew, who is such only by a compliance with the external ceremonies,” &c.

28. οὐ γὰρ ὁ ἐν τῷ φαν., &c.] These words suppose the answer of the foregoing words to be made in the affirmative; and the γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, q. d. [Yes truly] for he, &c. Ἐν τῷ φανερῷ, for φανερώς, externally, Sub. Ἰουδαῖος, from what follows. By Ἰουδαῖός ἐστιν is meant ὁ ὄντως Ἰουδαῖος.

29. Here περιτομή must be taken twice, as was Ἰουδαῖος before; and by περιτομή is to be understood ἡ ὄντως περιτομή, i. e. as is then explained, the spiritual circumcision,—namely, that of the heart, by cutting off evil affections.
See Deut. x. 16. and Spencer de Leg. Jud. Rit.
p. 50. Οὐ, i. e. of the real Jew just mentioned.
The passage may be thus paraphrased: “Such a one aims not at, and may not gain, the praise of men; but he will receive both praise and acceptance from God, “who seeth not as man seeth, and who trieth the heart.” We are not, however, to infer from this, that the praise of men is to be despised. It will, indeed, to all, except the sour ascetic, ever have its value; and so that that be not suffered to overbalance a far higher consideration, the praise of God, it is an object of honourable ambition. To this purpose is the following fine remark of an ancient writer; τοῦ πάντων ἡδίστου ἀκούσματος, ἐπαινον σεαυτῆς, ἀνή-κοος εἶ, καὶ τοῦ πάντων ἡδίστου θεάματος ἀθέατος. οὐδὲν γὰρ πρόποτε σεαυτῆς ἔργον καλὸν τεθέασαι, Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 31.

III. In this Chapter the Apostle is chiefly occupied in refuting such objections to the preceding statements, as might be supposed to occur to Jews. After which he draws the conclusion, that the Law is insufficient to justify a man before God; and that for that justification, he will need the righteousness of God, through faith; which will, however, by no means tend to dispense with, but rather confirm the obligations of, the moral law. At vv. 1.—20. there are four objections made, or difficulties started; which are removed by the Apostle. 1. If the circumcised and the uncircumcised be treated alike at the last judgment, and the Jews are equally guilty with the Gentiles, and if the external observance of the Mosaic Law will not avail to justification, of what advantage can Judaism be? To this, the answer at v. 2. is, that the benefit of greater spiritual knowledge was conferred on the Jews, by being entrusted with the oracles of God.

2. ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τ. Θ.] “they were entrusted with the oracles of God.” On this syntax see Matthiæ and Win. Gr. Gr. Λόγιον denoted properly an oracular response of any God. And the diminutive form is probably used, because such responses (as we find by many specimens in the ancient historians and Pausan.), were almost always very short. At ἐπιστ. supply οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι from the preceding τοῦ Ἰουδαίου, which is taken in a general sense, for τῶν Ἰουδαίων.

3. Here we have the second objection, namely, how the Apostle's views can be reconciled with God's faithfulness to his promises, made to the Jews? q. d. supposing that many Jews have been unbelieving and disobedient, shall this make the pledged promise of God (to bless the seed of Abraham) of none effect? τί γὰρ; “What then?” So Demosth. cited by Wets.: τί γὰρ, εἰ ἀδικεῖ Φίλιππος;

— μὴ ἡ ἀπιστία—καταργήσει;] The interrogation (which is more pointed by the use of the μὴ, an? num?) involves a strong negation, which is expressed in μὴ γένοιτο following.

4. γινέσθω—ψεύστης.] The difficulty here, which has embarrassed so many of the Commentators, might have been avoided by bearing in mind, that the strong negation in μὴ γένοιτο contains, by implication, an assertion of the contrary, q. d. God is not proved unfaithful. This, indeed, seems to be hinted at in the next words, γινέσθω, &c., of which the full sense seems to be, “Let but God be found true and faithful, [as He assuredly will] though every man were proved to be a violator of the covenant.” This assertion by implication is more plainly developed in the words ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς, &c., which are strangely misunderstood by most Expositors; and of which the sense seems to be: So that the result may be (to use the words of Scripture) that thou shouldest be justified, or brought in clear, when thou art called to account for thy dealings. Here there is a forensic allusion: though the Deity is not, as many Commentators suppose, considered as the judge, but as a party impleaded, which indeed the terms κρίνεσθαι and νικᾶν suggest; and any defendant who is brought in clear of blame, may be said νικᾶν, because he carries his cause. The above view of the sense is confirmed by Chrys., Theophyl., and Phot. apud Œcum. Thus the sentiment obtained by this accommodation of the words of David, is as follows (in the words of Prof. Stuart): “When ever God speaks by way of reproving or condemning men, let Him be accounted altogether just, and let him be fully vindicated.” The LXX.

by νικήσας, follow the sense, rather than the letter of the Hebrew.

5. Here is another objection on the part of the Jew, q. d. “If our unrighteousness display the righteousness of God (the mode appointed by God of becoming righteous by faith. i. 17.), would he not be unrighteous, if he punished us for this unrighteousness? In other words, how can God justly punish us for that unrighteousness which establishes the necessity of that mode of justification ordained in the Gospel?” (Holden.)

— συνίστησι.] This is not well rendered commends. It is plain, from the context and the course of reasoning, that it must signify establishes, proves. The word properly signifies to place together; and as justa-position is necessary to proof, hence easily arises the sense in question. On this the Apostle now, in the person of the Jewish objector, propounds this difficulty, introduced by the formula τί ἐροῦμεν, q. d. What answer can be made to this? In μὴ ἄδικος—ὀργὴν there is great delicacy in the wording; for the Jew does not mean to positively deny the justice of God in punishing; but only to hint that it may be questioned. The full sense is, “Is, or is not, God unjust?” A milder way of saying, “Is not God unjust?” The phrase ἐπιφ. τὴν ὀργὴν may be rendered, “who visits with his anger;” i. e., by implication, punishes. The phrase has been found nowhere else, except in Polyb. xxii. 14, 8, and is synonymous with ἐπιφέρειν τὴν πώνην found in Josephus.

The Apostle, though here speaking in the person of the Jew, yet, to prevent any mistake of the words μὴ ἄδικος, &c., apprises his readers that he speaks in that quality. For the phrase κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω is best explained (with Chrys., Theophyl., Flacius, and Wets.) to mean, “I speak as men are accustomed to speak, in self-justification, when thus circumstanced; and who, by a sort of innate vice, seek to remove all the blame from themselves, and throw it upon others.”

6—8. In these verses the objection is removed, and that on grounds conceded by the Jews; (as Chrys. says) ἄτοπον ἀτόπῳ λύει.

— ἐπεὶ—κόσμον] “Since, if this be the case, how shall God judge the world?” viz. in righteousness, which is involved in the very idea of God's judging. By κόσμον is implied Gentiles as well as Jews. And as no Jew denied that the Gentiles were to be judged, this is slaying the opponent with his own weapon. The force of the answer in v. 6. is well expressed by Prof. Stuart thus: “Not at all; for, on the same ground, you might object to the truth, that God will judge the world, and consequently punish the wicked; for his justice will be so displayed as to redound to his glory."

Θεοῦ ἐν τῷ ἑμῷ ψεύσματι ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, τί ἔτι καὶ γὰρ ὡς ἀμαρτωλὸς κρίνομαι; καὶ μὴ (καθὼς 8 βλασφημούμεθα, καὶ καθὼς φασί τινες ἡμᾶς λέγειν) ὅτι ποιήσωμεν τὰ κακὰ ἵνα ἔλθῃ τὰ ἀγαθὰ; ὧν τὸ κρίμα ἐνδικόν ἐστι.

Ἔτι οὖν; προεχόμεθα; Οὐ, πάντως· προητιασάμεθα γὰρ 9

7. In this verse (as Chrys., Theophyl., and Œcum. remark) the sentiment of v. 5. is resumed and completed, and the words are from the objector. Why the two parts were separated by the Apostle, is well pointed out by Locke. The sense of the passage may be expressed, with Grot. and Wolf, as follows: "If the fact of the Jews having broken the covenant [by not believing in Christ] has been the cause that the promise of God has been extended (ἐπερίσσευσεν) to a still greater number of people, why are the Jews punished as sinners? It would be enough for them to lose the privileges of the covenant; or rather, they should continue to live wickedly, because good comes from it to the world at large.

Πεύσματι may be rendered "false dealing, unfaithfulness;" by an idiom frequent in the O. T., on which see Wells. But it has been justly remarked by Locke, that St. Paul here used this term in preference to ἀδικία or παρανομία for the sake of the antithesis in "the truth or veracity of God." See Bp. Sanderson's 2d Sermon ad Clerum.

8. καὶ μὴ καθὼς—τὰ ἀγαθὰ;] I have in Recens. Synop. proved at large, that of the many methods which have been proposed of adjusting the construction and determining the sense, the only satisfactory one is that of Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, as also Zeger, Pisc., Crellius, and Stuart. The Apostle is here speaking in his own person, not in that of the objector; and the words are an answer to the preceding objection; not indeed a regular one, but meant to show its futility, by pushing it as far as it will go.

With the μὴ we must repeat τί from the preceding. Thus the sense may be, "And why [at this rate] may not we (as we are slanderously reported to do, and some say, that we maintain) do evil that good may come?" I prefer, however, (with Grot., Hamm., Wolf, Limborch, and Stuart), at καὶ τί μὴ to supply, from the λέγειν of the parenthesis, λέξωμεν, and at βλασφημούμεθα sub. ὡς λέγουτες. The words following καὶ καθὼς φασί τινες ἡμᾶς λέγειν are exegetical of the preceding, "Why may we not maintain (as we are slanderously reported to do) let us do evil," &c. This supplying of a word from a parenthetical clause is indeed an irregularity in composition; but occurs in the best writers, especially Thucydides. By the we is meant we Christians; and, consequently, the τινες may mean non-Christian calumniators, whether Gentiles or Jews. Thus ὅτι is redundant, as coming after a verb of speaking, and introducing words reported to be said. And the whole passage may be freely translated: "Why then may we not say (as some do actually, though slanderously [whose condemnation is just] accuse us of saying, let us," &c. By ὧν τὸ κρίμα ἐνδικόν ἐστι is simply meant, "whose offence is such as to justly merit punishment [from God]." On the full instruction to be deduced from this passage, see Bp. Sanderson ap. D'Oyly and Mant.

9—20. The Jew again asks: "What then have we Jews any pre-eminence over the Gentiles?" To which the Apostle replies: "You have none, in respect to the matter that I am discussing. All are sinners. Your own Scriptures do abundantly bear testimony that your nation are transgressors, as well as the heathen. Prophets of different ages have borne testimony to this point; and testimony which conveys charges of the most aggravated nature, vv. 10—18. Now as what is thus said in the Scriptures was plainly said concerning the Jews, it follows, that your own sacred books bear testimony to the same doctrine which I affirm to be true. Consequently, the whole world, Jews and Gentiles, are guilty before God, v. 19. It follows from this, that salvation in any other way than by gratuitous pardon through Christ, is altogether impossible," v. 20. (Stuart.) The words τί οὖν; προεχόμεθα; evidently contain another objection, which is immediately answered in the words following. It has, however, always been a disputed point among Interpreters whether we should point τί οὖν; προεχόμεθα; or τί οὖν προεχόμεθα; In the former case, the sense will be, "What then? have we any superiority [or not]?" In the latter, "What then is our superiority?" as Theodoret explains, τί οὖν κατέχουμεν περισσόν, there being an ellip. of κατά. Now this yields a very good sense; but is liable to this strong objection,—that the answer οὐ πάντως will not then be suitable; since that can only mean No certainly; i. e. certainly not. So Theophyl. explains οὐδαμῶς. Whereas, with the other punctuation (which is supported by almost all the MSS., several Versions and Fathers, and almost all the Editions from the Ed. Princ. to Vater's) the answer is very apt. And there is nothing objectionable in the phraseology of the question. There may too be an ellipsis of τι supposed. Render: "What then am I to infer from your words? Have we any superiority over the Gentiles, or have we not?" The reason for the placing of a comma after οὐ will appear from Recens. Synop. in loc. and my Note on Thucyd. iii. 66.

9. προητιασάμεθα.] Of the various interpretations of this difficult term, the only two deserving of attention are,—1. that of Grot., Tol., Par., Schmidt, and Locke, "we have convicted." 2. That of almost all the ancient and most modern Commentators, "we have proved," or showed; which latter sense seems preferable, and as αἰτία signifies cause, so αἰτιασάμεθα may signify to show cause, and simply to show. Perhaps, however, the true sense is that expressed by Prof. Stuart, "we have already made the charges against."

Rather, "charged on." See Johnson's Dictionary. Or there may here be a sensus prægnans conjoining the significations prove and convict, the latter being adapted to the πάντας ὑφ' ἁμαρτίαν εἶναι, where ὑφ' ἁμαρτ. εἶναι is rightly explained by Erasmus, Beza, Pisc., Par., and Koppe, "are brought under and liable to be [truly] charged with sin, (so ὑπόδικος at v. 19.) implying liability to punishment from God. This truth is then confirmed by several testimonies from various parts of the O. T.; though all of them are found together in some good MSS. at Ps. xiv. The form καθὼς γέγρ. may be rendered, "So that we may here apply the words of Scripture." There can be no doubt that the charge was very applicable to both Gentiles and Jews at that time; especially if (with several Commentators, ancient and modern,) we view the strong expressions of David as Orientalisms, and to be interpreted with limitation; q. d. "It is hard to find one who has any sense of goodness, any attachment to God, or regard for virtue." See John iii. 32.

The Commentators remark on the "looseness with which the following texts are cited." But the words οὐκ ἔστι δίκαιος—τὸν Θεόν were not intended by the Apostle as a citation. It should seem that he meant at first to express only the substance of what the Psalmist asserts in Ps. xiv. 1 & 2; and that then, warm with his subject, he proceeded to advert to what follows, and also to five other passages; in doing which he then resorted to citation. And indeed he has cited very exactly, except in vv. 15 & 17, where, however, the sense is the very same, though the wording is a little different, (but with some countenance from the MSS.) together with a slight abridgement. The alteration of αὐτοῦ into αὐτῶν at v. 14. is only adopted for accommodation's sake. Ὁ συνιών and ὁ ἐκζητῶν τὸν Θεόν are not synonymous; but the latter is a stronger term than the former. On the whole of the passage see Stuart.

12. ἠχρειώθησαν.] There may here be a very common idiom of the Greek language; (on which I have fully treated on Thucyd. i. 91, 1. ἀξέμφορον ὀρώντες) and thus the sense will be, "they are become vile and noxious." As, however, the Hebrew has וָהָא from הָא, to turn; i. e. become sour or corrupt, the sense seems rather to be, "are become depraved." Ποιεῖν χρηστότητα is a Hellenistic phrase for ποιεῖν ἀγαθόν.

13. τάφος ἀνεωγμένος.] On the ratio metaphoræ

the Commentators are not agreed; most referring it to offensive and poisonous discourse, sent forth from the throat of the wicked, as noisome stench from an opened sepulchre. This, however, is so far fetched, that we may prefer the interpretation adopted by Grot., Crell., Paræ., Tayl., Kop., and most recent Commentators, who take this as a description of the calumny by which the wicked destroy their fellow-creatures: and regard ἀνεωγμένος (gaping), as denoting the readiness to destroy them, as a grave seems ready for and expects the dead. Perhaps, however, all this is a description not of calumny, but of blood-thirstiness. So Prov. i. 12. "Let us swallow them up alive as the grave;" which passage seems to have been here in the mind of the Apostle. See also Ps. xxi. 9; xxxv. 25; lvi. 1 & 2; lvii. 3; cxiv. 3. Is. xlii. 14. Thus, a little further on, we have, "their feet are swift to shed blood;" a most graphic description of the Zelotæ and Sicarii, as represented in the pages of Josephus. It is well observed by Stuart, that "the object of these quotations is to show that charges of guilt were made in ancient times not less severe than those now made by the Apostle; q. d. You cannot accuse me of making strange and heavy charges against you. Your own Scriptures are filled with such." The learned Commentator shows at large, that the passages have no direct bearing on the universal depravity of the human race, since the context and the scope of the speaker will not permit that.

— ἐδολιούσαν] for ἐδολιούν. A Macedonian and Hellenistic form, but said to be derived from the Boeotian dialect. See Win. Gr. § 9. 3. a. This use of δολιούν in the sense to use craft or guile, is frequent in the Sept., but very rare in the Classical writers.

— ἰὸς ἀσπίδων—αὐτῶν.] This and the next clause, which is exegetical of it, are meant to designate that foul calumny, which cankers the brightest reputation, and those bitter biting speeches, which sting even to death!

15. ὅξεῖς—αἷμα.] The sense is: "they are eagerly bent on shedding blood." So Appian p. 873. speaking of the murderers of Cæsar, says: πρὸς ἄνδρας ταχυεργεῖς καὶ φόνου πλῆρεις.

16, 17. σύντριμμα—ἔγνωσαν.] The general sense seems to be: "All their plans and aims are evil; good, or happiness, never enters into their thoughts or cares."

18. οὐκ ἔστι—ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν.] The Philological illustrators might have aptly compared

19. οἶδαμεν δὲ—λαλεῖ.] This is meant (as the Greek Commentators suggest) to anticipate the objection of his Jewish opponents: "these heavy charges were not directed against us." Yes, says the Apostle, but they have reference to you; for what the Scriptures there say, is said with a reference to persons under the law, i. e. Jews, the very people of God. Οἶδαμεν is a popular expression, equivalent to "it is well known." Τοῖς ἐν τῷ νόμῳ is for τοῖς ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον. And in τοῖς, &c., is implied καὶ περὶ τῶν, &c., q. d. "it is addressed to Jews, and consequently meant of Jews." The argument is, that as the Jews believed the Heathens deserved the condemnation of God, and as their Scriptures represented the Jews as being all deeply guilty in the sight of God, so the conclusion contained in the next verse, that the whole world must be regarded as liable to condemnation, is correctly drawn.

Φράττειν and its compounds are often used by the later writers in the sense "to put to silence," by leaving any one without an apology. Ὑπόδικος is for ὁ ὑπὸ δίκην ὢν. And δίκη here implies τιμωρία.

20. διότι.] This should, I think, be rendered, not propterea quod, wherefore, with most Commentators, but quia, (with the Syr. and Vulg.) for, or because. Νόμον is by many Commentators taken for τοῦ νόμου, "the Mosaic, or Ceremonial Law." But besides the grammatical objections to this mode, which I have urged in Recens. Synop., it may be remarked, with Bp. Middl., that "any such an explanation falls short of the Apostle's argument. It is his purpose to show, that no man whatever can be justified, by the works either of the Jewish Law or of any other; πᾶσα σὰρξ, like ὁ κόσμος in the preceding verse, cannot but be understood universally; and what follows διὰ γὰρ νόμου ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας, is plainly an universal proposition." The same view is taken by Beza, Crell., Grot., Locke, Whitby and Taylor. See also Prof. Stuart, who shows at large that the above is contrary to the scope of the Apostle here and elsewhere in his Epistles. From all which (he adds) it results, that νόμον must here mean the moral law, whether written or unwritten, i. e. law in general, any law, whether applicable to Gentile or Jew, any rule which prescribes a duty, by obedience to which men might claim a promise of reward." In διὰ γὰρ νόμον there is an ellip. of μόνον, q. d. by the law is only afforded a knowledge of sin (i. e. it makes men sensible that they are sinners, and liable to God's condemnation), not a mode of atoning for it, or a method of restoring the sinner again to favour and acceptance, and consequently affords no hopes of pardon or justification. Having come to this conclusion in argument, the Apostle proceeds, v. 21—30., to point out the method whereby alone men, whether Jews or Gentiles, can be justified; namely, the righteousness of God, or the justification by faith revealed in the Gospel, and through the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ, by which all boasting is excluded, since this justification, from its very nature, must be gratuitous. Thus all, both Jews and Gentiles, are placed on the same footing; and this doctrine is no other than the Old Testament also.

On the sense of δικαιοῦσθαι here intended by the Apostle, see Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. Diss. i. ch. 1.

21. The Apostle now reverts to the subject he had slightly treated on at i. 17., namely, that by the Gospel alone, is shown the way to salvation; and he here sums it up and asserts it more fully. The sense contained in the present verse may be thus expressed: "But now (i. e. under the present dispensation, the Gospel) a method of justification appointed by God, without reference to obedience to law of any kind, is revealed and promulgated; a method [which is no novelty, but] whose existence is attested by the Law and the Prophets." This sense of νυνὶ δὲ occurs in Heb. ix. 26., where νῦν δὲ is put in opposition to the time of the Law. Nor is it confined to the N. T. It occurs also in the Classical writers, e. g. Thucyd. iii. 43., νῦν δὲ, "but as the case now stands."

22. δικαιοσύνη δὲ Θεοῦ.] There is here an epianalepsis, the force of which resides in the δὲ. Διὰ denotes the efficient or instrumental cause, as at v. 24. 30. Gal. ii. 16., where the death of Christ is said to be the efficient, and faith in Christ the cause of our salvation. On this διὰ Θεοῦ see Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 13.

With εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας Commentators are not a little perplexed. Some would cancel the καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας. But the authority for this is very slender, and quite insufficient, and internal evidence is wholly in favour of the words. Nor can the assertion of many recent Commentators, that the καὶ signifies even, or may be pleonastic, be admitted. The only way of removing the difficulty is that which is suggested by the epianalepsis in δικ. δὲ Θεοῦ, namely, to supply πεφανερωμένη from the preceding πεφανέρωται, "promulgated unto all." The Apostle, I conceive, adds καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας, not to express the same sense, but another, namely, this: "And which is meant for all;" implying, that though meant for all, it will not be bestowed on all. This is, I find, confirmed by the opinion of Pr. Stuart, who thinks that "the ἐπὶ πάντας is thrown in to guard against the idea, that the actual bestowment of justification is as universal as the offers of it." Ἐπὶ, denoting the final end, or intent, is frequent both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. Διαστολή, "distinction," (from διαστέλλειν, to set, or put apart), i. e. (as Prof. Stuart explains) in regard to the matter of justification by faith, or gratuitous justification, all men, whether Jews or Gentiles, stand in the same need of it, and must perish without it: justification by "deeds of law," i. e. perfect obedience to any law, being impossible.

23. This verse adduces the reason of this impossibility; — ὑστεροῦνται τῆς δόξ. τ. Θε.] Ὑστερεῖσθαι properly signifies to be left behind in a race; but is here used in a figurative sense, which will depend on the sense ascribed to τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ; which some interpret "the image of God, in which man was created," others more probably, understand the glory and happiness of heaven, as ii. 10. v. 2. viii. 18. But it should rather seem to mean, "what will produce that," namely, "the favour and approbation of God." And this carries with it the other sense. Thus the term ὑστ. will be very suitable, since ὑστερεῖν often signifies to come too late for any thing or person (so Thucyd. iii. 31. ὑστερήκει τῆς Μυτιλήνης. vii. 39.), and consequently to miss of any thing.

24. δικαιοῦμενοι.] I have proved at large in Recens. Synop. that the true sense is, "having, or being to be justified;" particip. for verb, and Indic. for Subjunct. This view I find supported by Prof. Stuart, who explains, "that all who obtain justification, must obtain it gratuitously, and only by virtue of the redemption that Christ hath accomplished." Δωρεάν, "of mere favour," without reference to merit.

— ἀπολυτρώσεως.] The word properly denotes a delivering any one from death or captivity by paying the λύτρον, or price of deliverance. Most recent Commentators assign the sense deliverance, without any reference to ransom paid. There is, however, an allusion thereto, and no more. It here denotes "the method of redemption provided by Jesus Christ." See Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 6., and Exam. p. 71.

25. προέθετο.] I have, in Recens. Synop. shown, that of the several senses assigned to the word, that of "set forth," or "publicly appointed," is the best. It is not so easy to fix the sense of ἱλαστήριον, which is derived from the adjective ἱλαστήριος, and often denotes "the covering of the Ark." Thus many eminent Commentators take ἱλ. here as a highly figurative expression, and suppose the sense to be,—that as the pardon of God was formerly dispensed from the mercy-seat, being procured by the victim offered before it, so it is now dispensed from Christ, being procured by his sacrifice of himself, through faith in his blood. This, however, is open to serious objections, which are strongly urged by Stuart; who, with reason, agrees with Grot., Le Clerc, Kypke, Turretin, Elns., and Tholuck, in supposing it to be an adjective used substantively (like χαριστήριον, σωτήριον, &c.), and, by the ellipsis of Σῶμα, denoting an expiatory victim, a propitiatory sacrifice, by which alone the metaphor can be made congruous. Of this they adduce an example from Dio Chrys. Ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι must not (as is generally supposed) be connected with διὰ τῆς πίστεως, but, as some of the best Expositors (including Prof. Stuart) are agreed, with ἱλαστήριον. And this Bp. Bull has evinced with his usual ability, Examen p. 7., who renders: "Quem proposuit Deus placamentum in Sanguine suo per fidem."

— εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικ. αὐτοῦ] "in order to declare His justice and righteousness," [including his veracity]; or, as others explain, His mercifulness. Πάρεσιν, forgiveness; literally, "passing by." Προγεγ. committed before the coming of Christ.

26. ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ] "by the forbearance." At πρὸς ἔνδειξιν, &c., there is an epanalepsis, like that of δικαιοσύνη δὲ Θεοῦ, supra v. 21. Ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, i. e. the time of the Gospel dispensation.

— δίκαιον.] No little difference of opinion exists as to the sense of this word; which some eminent Expositors interpret merciful, others, faithful to his promise. But however these significations may be permitted by the usus loquendi, yet, as Stuart has shown, neither is here allowed by the context and the course of the reasoning. It is therefore best to retain the usual signification just. "In the clause εἰς τὸ εἶναι—Ἰησοῦ, the Apostle (says Stuart) looks back to the whole sentiment proposed in vv. 21—24; which is, that all men are sinners, and that a regard merely to the Law, i. e. a sense of justice merely on the part of God, or he being δίκαιος merely, does not in itself permit justification by overlooking or setting aside the penalty of the Law; but the death of Christ is an expedient of infinite wisdom, by which the full claims of the Law may be admitted, and yet the penalty avoided, because a moral compensation or equivalent has been provided, by the sufferings of him who died in the sinner's stead." Thus the atonement of a Redeemer has made the exercise of God's mercy consistent with his justice. And (as Bengel happily expresses it) "Summum hic paradoxon evangelicum; nam in Lege conspicitur Deus justus et condemnans, in Evangelio justus ipse, et justificans peccatores."

27. The Apostle now infers from what has been said, that all reason for boasting of their proper merits was excluded both to Jews and Gentiles.

— διὰ νόμου πίστεως.] i. e. by the law which requires faith as the condition of justification, and refers every thing to faith alone, and the grace of God.

28. λογίζομεθα οὖν.] 12 MSS. and some Latin Versions and Fathers have λογ. γάρ, which is edited by Griesb., Knapp, and Titm.; but rashly; since the common reading is not only supported by the strongest testimony, both external and internal. For it was as likely that οὖν should be changed to γάρ by the early Critics, as γάρ to οὖν. Besides, the context effectually excludes γάρ, and demands οὖν, as is observed by Tholuck and Rinck. The sense may be thus expressed: "We come, then, to this conclusion—that man (meaning men at large, both Jews and Gentiles) is justified by faith; apart from and without reference to the works of any law." So it is well observed by Stuart, that "what is meant by being justified by faith is sufficiently plain here, inasmuch as it is opposed to justification by works, i. e. on the score of merit, or perfect obedience." The learned Commentator, therefore, explains the words to mean, "we count it as certain that men are justified in a gratuitous manner, through faith in Christ, and not by perfect obedience to the Law." This view of the sense is supported by the weighty authority of Bp. Bull, who in his Harm. Evang. and elsewhere strenuously maintains this view.

29. ἡ Ἰουδαίων—ἐθνῶν.] What is here said seems intended to refute an objection of the Jewish adversary; who might lay hold on the term ἄνθρωπον in the generic sense, and ask, "What, then, is God the God of the Gentiles as well as the Jews?" For that is, I conceive, the sense contained in the timidly expressed question ἡ Ἰουδαίων—μόνον. See supra vv. 5 & 9, and Notes. To this the Apostle replies first by an interrogation, and then by a plain assertion, which is, in the next verse, supported by the reason; namely, that one and the same God hath himself established this method of justification both for Jews and Gentiles, and therefore must be the God of the latter as well as of the former.

30. On the difference, if any, between ἐκ πίστεως and διὰ τῆς πίστεως, and why the Apostle should have used both expressions, and not preferred either one or the other, much has been said, but nothing determined. The Apostle, I conceive, did not mean the very same sense in both, nor use the difference solely for the sake of the antithesis; but meant thereby to hint at a certain difference in the mode of justification. The Jews (the περιτομή) would be justified out of faith [in the Gospel] namely, by Christian faith being added to their Jewish faith; but the Gentiles solely through the faith [the Gospel], without any part of the religion they had professed being left as a substratum.

31. νόμον.] Not the law (for there is no Article) but a law, i. e. whether that of Revelation or nature. Of course it must, from the context, (as Tayl. and Middl. have seen) mean moral obedience, as being opposed to faith (and grace). "Few texts of Scripture (observes the latter), when rightly understood, are more important."

IV. Here commences Part II. of the Epistle (extending from hence to the end of ch. viii.) in which it is proved, that the Gospel doctrine of justification by faith, or gratuitous justification, does not make void any Law, whether natural or revealed, but is quite consistent with both. The Apostle had before evinced, 1. that justification and salvation are by faith only, gratuitous, and not by works of law; 2. that to this the Gentile has an equal claim with the Jew. But there existed two prejudices in the mind of the Jew;—one founded on their notions of the merit of Circumcision, as entitling them to the favour of God (which would lead them to hold that justification is by works of Law), the other founded on their birth-right,—as the children of Abraham, and heirs of the promise made to him. And this would lead them to deny that the Gentile has an equal claim to justification with the Jew. These two prejudices the Apostle now proceeds to encounter; the former, by adverting to Abraham, the father of circumcision; the latter, by examining the grounds of the covenant made with Abraham and his seed. He thus confirms both the above conclusions; proving, 1. that Abraham himself was justified by faith, and not by circumcision: (iv. 1—12.) that therefore justification is by faith, i. e. is gratuitous, and not by works of law; and belongs to the uncircumcised Gentiles, no less than to the Jews. 2. That the believing Gentiles are part of the true seed of Abraham, intended in the promise: (iv. 13—18.) and that therefore the Gentiles, by faith in Jesus Christ, have equal claim with the Jews to justification, and all other benefits of the covenant. See Young.

1. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν, &c.] The οὖν is conclusive, and the general sense is: What, then, shall we say that Abraham our father obtained [for justification] as to [any advantage from] the works of the flesh—or fleshly and external ordinances. Why Paul introduces the case of Abraham, in distinction from that of the Jews at large, see Stuart. The passage is akin to that at iii. 1. Some, as Hamm., place a mark of interrogation after ἐροῦμεν. And this is agreeable to the manner of St. Paul; but it has not the least countenance from the ancient Versions: and, moreover, an ellip. of χάριν after εὐρηκέναι is alike harsh and unnecessary. Κατὰ σάρκα may be construed either with τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν, or with εὐρηκέναι. The former of these modes is preferred by several ancient, and many modern Interpreters. And the sense thus produced is good; but a harsh transposition must then be supposed, and the sense at εὐρ. left deficient, nay, Wets. affirms, untrue. It is therefore better, with other ancient and most modern Commentators, to take it with εὐρηκέναι, and thus the reasoning will be complete. Κατὰ σάρκα does not, as is commonly supposed, refer exclusively to circumcision; but extends also to the other external rites of the Law, as opposed to the κατὰ χάριν at vv. 4 & 15, and denotes (as is said at Heb. vii. 16. ix. 10.) such as are performed κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς σαρκικῆς. Thus σὰρξ sometimes (as Gal. iv. 23. Rom. ix. 8.) denotes what is external or physical, in opposition to what is internal and spiritual. See also 1 Cor. x. 18. Phil. iii. 3. Gal. vi. 12, where it, as here, refers to external privileges, but especially to circumcision, as a sign of the covenant. See Stuart, who, after an elaborate discussion, determines κατὰ σάρκα to refer to circumcision. The interrogation implies, as often, a strong negation, which is supposed in the following εἰ γὰρ, where we have a reason for the negation.

2. εἰ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ—Θεόν.] In order to ascertain the true sense of this verse, it is necessary first to decide whether the words are to be supposed to come from the Jewish objector, or from the Apostle. And the particle γὰρ has so extensive a use, that the point may yet be left undetermined. On either of the above views a good sense is made out: in the former case, by Dr. Taylor; in the latter, by Prof. Stuart: and indeed, after all, the sentiment is much the same according to either. Yet the latter, as being the more natural mode, seems to deserve the preference. It has been well remarked that the general declaration, in fact, includes two—the Major and the Minor of an hypothetical syllogism, from which the conclusion (which is suppressed) may easily be collected. Thus the sense may be expressed as follows: “I grant that Abraham had advantages from his external privileges; he was, however, not justified by any works or merit of his own; certainly not in the sight of God [however he might of men]; for the Scripture saith,” &c. This the Apostle proceeds to prove from the Old Testament.

3. ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀ. τῷ Θεῷ.] i. e. reposed implicit credence on God's assurances; and especially as to what seemed, at the time of the promise, highly improbable,—the having a very numerous offspring.

—ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικ.] On the interpretation of these words the Commentators are by no means agreed. The ancient and early modern ones recognise in them the doctrine of imputed righteousness; while most recent Commentators take them to mean no more than this: “Abraham believed in God, and his belief was accounted in him as righteousness, and, accordingly, he obtained the favour of God.” See Grot., Schleus., and Iaspis. And so (I add) it must have been taken by Philo p. 493, who, in the course of a copious explanation of the nature of this faith, says it was εἰς ἔπαινον τοῦ πεπιστευκότος: also by Chrysost. i. 489. And, indeed, St. James ii. 23, applies the passage in that sense; which it may doubtless admit,—but it is surely susceptible of a higher sense; and this St. Paul has here chosen to adopt; for the context plainly shows that far more is meant by the words than the recent Commentators are willing to allow. The following seems to be the full sense: “Abraham placed entire confidence in God and his promises, with respect to offspring, &c. performing all such things as, by the light of nature, reason, and conscience, he supposed would be acceptable to God; though unenlightened by that future revelation of his will which he anxiously anticipated. Therefore God reckoned his pious reliance and devotedness to him for, and took them instead of, all those more perfect observances of faith and practice which a future revelation of his will should promulgate and enjoin.” So Prof. Stuart, after remarking that the phrase ἐλογίσθη εἰς δικ. being at v. 4. interchanged with λογίζεται κατὰ χάριν, affords a satisfactory view of its meaning, thinks it must be, that in consequence of Abraham's belief, he was treated or accepted as righteous; i. e. he was gratuitously justified. See vv. 4, 5. Of this sense of λογίζεσθαι (by which it is synonymous with ἐλλογεῖν) Stuart adduces examples from Levit. xvii. 4. Hos. viii. 12. 1 Sam. i. 13. Lam. iv. 2. Rom. iv. 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 22, 23, 24. “In judging Abraham (says Mackn.), God will place on the one side of the account his duties,—on the other his performances. And on the side of his performances he will place his faith, and by mere favour will value it as equal to a complete performance of his duties, and reward him as if he were a righteous person. But neither here, nor in Gal. iii. 6, is it said That CHRIST's righteousness was counted to Abraham. Further, as it is no where said in Scripture, that Christ's righteousness was imputed to Abraham, so neither is it said any where that Christ's righteousness is imputed to believers. In short, the uniform doctrine of Scripture is, that the believer's faith is counted to him for righteousness by the mere grace or favour of God through Jesus Christ; that is, on account of what Christ hath done to procure that favour for them. That is all. Nor does the Scripture carry the matter farther.” On the doctrine of imputed righteousness, see Mackn. here, and Prof. Stuart; and on the nature of faith and works, as contradistinguished by St. Paul, see Bp.

Bull's Harm. Apost. and Prof. Stuart on this passage.

4. τῷ δὲ ἐργ.] An illustration taken from common life. "Now to the labourer his wages are not reckoned as a favours, but regarded as the payment of a debt." Of course, it is implied that the work is done; for that is indispensable to the application, which is here, as often, mixed up with the illustration. Wets. compares Thucyd. ii. 40. οὐκ ἐς χάριν, ἀλλ' ἐς ὀφείλημα τὴν ἀρετὴν ἀποδώσαν. I add Herodian ii. 11, 14. χάριν οὐκ ᾔδεσαν ὀφλημα γὰρ αὐτὸν ἀποτίνειν, ἀλλ' οὐ δωρεάν διανέμειν, ἐλογίζοντο. By τῷ ἐργ. must here be meant, "To him who performs all the ἔργα νόμου, who yields entire obedience to the precepts of the law."

5. τῷ δὲ μὴ ἐργ.] This is to be explained from τῷ ἐργ., and must therefore mean, He who does not perform his duty thoroughly, and therefore has nothing whereof to boast, cannot pretend to have wrought all righteousness, and therefore cannot rest on it. See Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. p. 29. The words πιστεύοντι δὲ—ἀσεβῇ, then, must be explained with reference to μὴ ἐργαζομένῳ. And hence Commentators have done wrong in limiting the sense to believing, since it seems to include abandonment of all claim to salvation on the score of works, and such hearty and entire acceptance of the plan of salvation through grace, as shall secure a competent fulfilment of the conditions on which justification and acceptance are suspended. Now if this be the sense of πιστ., it will follow that τὸν δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἄσεβῃ must signify who justifieth the sinner; for it clearly appears from the context that τὸν ἄσεβῃ is only a variation in phrase for τὸν ἐργαζόμενον, and is to be explained in exact conformity to that term.

To such a person, it is added, λογίζεται ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ εἰς δικαιοσύνην, by which is meant, that "his faithful, though imperfect service (in many things μὴ ἐργαζομένη, and therefore ἀσεβής) is accounted and reckoned for righteousness: or, in other words, he is treated as the ἐργαζόμενος, and hath, κατὰ χάριν, the μισθὸν assigned to him, as if it were an ὀφείλημα."

6. καθάπερ καὶ Δ. &c.] q. d. "This mode of justifying men is agreeable to what David says, when he speaks of the blessedness," &c. Χωρὶς ἔργων, "apart from works," without any consideration of the merit of the works, and consequently by grace only. It is plain that, to impute, or reckon, righteousness without works, is the same as to impute faith for righteousness. On this and the next two vv. see Bp. Bull's Examen, p. 23.

7. ἐπεκαλ.] Literally, "are covered up," "put out of sight," i. e. (as the parallelism requires) forgiven.

8. οὐ μὴ λογίσηται ἁμ.] This is plainly equivalent to the foregoing phrase, and (as Stuart observes) plainly shows what Paul means by faith being imputed for righteousness. As to the ratio metaphoræ, Camer and Grot. remark that it is drawn from the accounts of men who have dealings in trade: where, if any expense be justly charged, it must be paid; but it may be crossed out, or withdrawn, and then it is not liable to be paid.

9. The Apostle has now prepared the way to refute the special allegation designed to be made by the question at ver. 1. He has already shown that justification on the ground of merit is out of the question; for even Abraham and David were justified gratuitously, and not ἐξ ἔργων. (Stuart.) He now proceeds to prove (up to v. 25.) that the blessedness of justification without reference to works is not confined to the Circumcision (i. e. the Jews), but extends to the Gentiles also; which position is established, 1. from Abraham having been justified before he was circumcised (v. 9—12.); from which it is argued that the Gentiles, therefore, who have the same faith as Abraham, will have it in the same way counted to them for righteousness. 2. This extent of blessing is proved from God's promise to Abraham.

—λέγομεν γὰρ, &c.] There is here a short clause omitted, to which the γὰρ belongs, q. d. [We may see this, too, by the case of Abraham,] for we have said, &c. With respect to the facts themselves, Abraham was not circumcised till he was 99 years old, v. 25. But before Ishmael was born, Abraham had his faith counted to him for righteousness, Gen. xv. 6. compared with Gen. xvi. 16. Whence it is evident that Abraham was justified in uncircumcision more than 13 years before he and his family were made the visible church and people of God by circumcision.

11. καὶ σημεῖον ἔλ. περιτ.] The Apostle's meaning is, that though Abraham's receiving circumcision after he was justified, was a proof that circumcision did not cause that justification, nevertheless circumcision was not without its use;—being a σημεῖον, or σφραγίς, a sign and seal, a pledge and confirmation of the acceptance of his faith while uncircumcised. On this sense of σημεῖον, see Note on John iii. 33; and on the present verse, see Stuart, who, in common with other Expositors, regards σφρ. as exegetical of σημεῖον, and considers both words as meant to express the same thing; but here conjoined, to strengthen the sense. For my own part, I am, on mature consideration, induced to consider σημεῖον as connected solely with περιτομῆς and I apprehend the sense to be: “He received the mark of circumcision;” there being an allusion to the mark in the flesh which is always left by circumcision. So in my Note on Thucyd. ii. 49. 7. (Transl.) I have proved that the effects of violent disorders, whether in scars or otherwise, are said ἐπισημαίνειν, to leave their mark on the body; in which way the term is used not only by Medical writers (as Hippocrates and Galen), but also by others, as Pausanias vii. 24. 6. τοῦτο δὲ ἀλλαχού τοῦ σώματος ἐπισημαίνει (leaves its mark); καί, &c. So σφραγίς in Lycoph. Cass. 780; and both terms in Eurip. Iph. Taur. 1372. δεινούς δὲ σημαντροῖσιν ἐσφραγισμένοι. Thus there will be no difficulty respecting the Genitive, which will be simply definitive, i. e. of kind. That circumcision was considered as a seal of their covenantal privileges by the Jews, is clear from numerous passages cited by Schoettig and Wets.

At τῆς sub. οὐσης, or γενομένης. Εἰς τὸ εἶναι α., “so that he is.” Πατέρα denotes figuratively author, pattern. See John viii. 18. James i. 17. Δι' ἀκροβυστίας is for ἐν ἀκροβυστίᾳ, “in an uncircumcised state.” Comp. Gen. xvii. 5.

12. τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτ. Sub. οὐσι, “the uncircumcised.” Στοιχεῖν τοῖς ἔχουσιν τινος is a phrase importing similarity and conformation to, imitation, &c. The τοῖς before στοιχοῦσι, at which some Expositors have stumbled, and which Tholuck thinks is solecistic, Stuart regards as a resumption of the sentence begun with the preceding τοῖς, and interrupted by the οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον, ἀλλὰ καί.

13. The Apostle now proceeds to another confirmation of his assertion respecting gratuitous justification; and encounters the second prejudice,—that the Gentiles, as not being Abraham's seed, could not be entitled to the promises. The Jew gloried in belonging to a nation to whom God had given a revealed law, and looked upon the pre-eminence this gave him, as a proof that God would shew him especial favour. To take away all ground of glorying in this respect, the Apostle proceeds to remind them, that Abraham was not justified by any such privilege; the Law being given above 400 years after his time. With respect to this, he observes, that the great promise of the heavenly inheritance, made to Abraham and his seed, did not rest at all upon the Law, including the ordinance of circumcision; so as to constitute those only heirs, who were Abraham's children according to the flesh; but it rested on the righteousness of faith, so as to constitute those the true children of Abraham, interested in the blessing, who follow the example of the faith of Abraham. (Stuart and Young.)

If we may judge from the remarkable diversity of opinion among Commentators, it would seem no easy matter to determine the nature of this promise, and the true sense in which Abraham, and also his seed, is said to be κληρονόμος τοῦ κόσμου. 1. Almost all the ancient, and most of the earlier modern Commentators take the words in a spiritual sense, and refer them to the universal prevalence of true religion, comprehended in the promise, “in thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed;” all believers being regarded as Abraham's children. 2. Glass, Crell., Par., Gommar, Pisc., Bp. Bull, Mackn., Ammon, Hardy, Hamm., Parkh., Schleus., and Slade understand τοῦ κόσμου, not of the earth only, but the land, viz. of Canaan. And it is remarked by Mr. Slade, that the first promise, i. e. of the land of Canaan, was not made, as Whitby asserts, to Abraham on his circumcision, but upon his belief in God's word; as appears from Gen. xv. 6, 7, where the land he was thus to possess was a type of a better country, i. e. a heavenly (Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Hebr. xi. 14, 16.), promised to the sons of Abraham in every age, i. e. to those who, like him, practically believe the word of God.” Therefore (continues he) τοῦ κόσμου refers primarily to the land of promise, and secondarily to the blessings vouchsafed to all believers. 3. Koppe and Rosenm. remark that τὸ κληρονόμον—εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου was a perpetual phrase for designating the felicity promised to Abraham and his seed. So Tanchuma p. 165. 1. Abrahamo patri meo Deus possidendum dedit cælum et terram. A mode of speaking derived from Gen. xii. 7. vii. 13, 15. xv. 7. But ΠΛΗΡΗ ΓΩΝΙΑ, which properly denoted Palestine, was gradually understood of the whole world, especially when, in a later age, the prophecies contained promises of an universal empire to Abraham's posterity, by means of the Messiah. Whichever of the above interpretations be adopted, κληρονόμον must (as it very well may) be taken in the sense possessor, a signification derived from the Hebrew idiom. But no easy matter is it to determine which of the above interpretations deserves the preference. It should seem that the third, specious as it may seem, is scarcely tenable, as offering too vague and general a sense; whereas it is plain from ver. 17. that a particular one was intended. Of the other two, the first has much to recommend it, and is adopted by Prof. Stuart. I am myself, however, inclined to prefer the second. The promise is considered as two-fold: 1. to Abraham and his posterity, taken literally of the possession of the land of Canaan; 2. spiritually, viz. of the spiritual seed of Abraham (referred to supra v. 11.), and importing that they shall be co-extensive with the world; a fulfilment of the promise that in him should all the families (i. e. nations) of the earth be blessed. The words διὰ δικαιοσύνης πίστεως are explained by Stuart to mean, that it was gratuitously given; faith being the medium through which it was conferred.

14. οἱ ἐκ νόμου] i. e. those who are righteous by performing the deeds of the law, who rest on it for justification. The phrase is like οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, οἱ ἐξ ἀπειθείας, &c.

— κεκένωται — κατήρηται.] These two terms differ as κενὸς and ἀργός, the former signifying vain, unnecessary, the latter ineffectual and useless. Both faith and promise would have become so, since the thing would have become due as a claim of merit.

15. ὁ γὰρ νόμος ὀργὴν κατεργ.] The sense is: "For the tendency of law is to make persons amenable to punishment for the violation of it." Inasmuch as laws give occasion to offences (which are but the breach of laws), and offences lead to punishment.

— οὐ γὰρ οὐκ — παράβασις.] The γὰρ seems to refer to a clause omitted; q. d. [And this is the case with any law] for, &c. We should, indeed, have expected οὐ γὰρ ἔστι νόμος, &c.; and accordingly Beza would cancel the οὐκ. But this is unnecessary; for (as it has been seen by Pareus and Crell.), since the Apostle is arguing from the necessary connection of causes and effects, the proposition is convertible, and contains, by inference, the affirmative one, that where there is law there is transgression." After all, however, the verse may be (and Stuart thinks it is) not an illustration or confirmation of the next preceding one, but of ver. 13, which declares that the promises made to Abraham stand not upon law-ground, but on that of gratuity: in other words, are made on condition of faith. Ver. 14 assigns one illustration or confirmation of this assertion. In ver. 15, a second reason is assigned why the promise is not διὰ νόμον; namely, that the law is only the occasion of bringing upon us Divine wrath and punishment, by reason of our offences against its precepts. And as all men sin, the law against which they offend is the instrument of their condemnation, not their justification. See more in Stuart.

16. The argument is: "Because, then, the law can never justify, but only condemn, it follows that if justification be at all bestowed on sinners, it must come in some other way than a legal one." (Stuart.) Διὰ τοῦτο, "wherefore, on this account." At ἐκ πίστεως repeat ἡ ἐπαγγελία [γέγονε] from v. 13. the promise of inheritance. See i. 4. At ἵνα sub. ἡ scil. δικαιοσύνη. Κατὰ χάριν, "on account of gratuitous favour." Παντὶ τῷ σπέρματι, i. e. to both the kinds of Abraham's seed above-mentioned, not only to the Jews, but to those who were ἐκ τῆς πίστεως Ἀβραάμ, followed the faith of Abraham, in consideration of which they, though uncircumcised, are called Abraham's seed. Πατὴρ πάντων ἡμῶν, viz. by the descent of faith, and spiritually. Inasmuch as he is the father of all who believe, whether Jews or Gentiles.

17. καθὼς γέγραπται] "agreeably to what is written in Scripture." Gen. xvii. 9. Sept. Of τέθεικά σε, the sense seems to be: "I have [now] constituted thee, or, I do hereby constitute thee" &c.; "a promise of which (observes Hardy) the true and real fulfilment must be spiritual, and therefore belongs to the spiritual seed, of which Abraham is father in respect of faith." "In fact, there is (as Stuart remarks) a double pater-nity assigned to Abraham. Many nations are to descend from him literally: his seed are literally to possess the land of Canaan. But he is also to become the spiritual father of many nations; and in him are all the families of the earth to be blessed."

— κατέναντι οὐ ἐπίστ. Θεοῦ] The construction is: κατέν. Θεοῦ, οὐ (for ᾧ) ἐπίστευσσε. Render: "who (i. e. Abraham) is the father of us all, in the sight of that God on whom he believed. It is plainly a case of grammatical attraction, and the only strangeness is in the order of the words; which however has a parallel at Mark vi. 16. Acts xxi. 16.

— τοῦ ζωοποιούντος—ὡς ὄντα] The sense is disputed. Some Commentators, ancient and modern, take the words of the ἐκφρασις of Abraham and Sarah, v. 19. An interpretation ably, but not, I think, successfully, maintained by Crell. and Grot. Still less tenable appears to be that of some Fathers and modern Commentators, who take ζωοπ. in a metaphorical sense; which is very harsh, and little accordant with the words following. The most rational, simple, and satisfactory interpretation is that of Theodoret, Tolet., Par., Est., Elsn., Carpz., Loesn., Doddr., Schleus., Rosenm., Iaspis, and Koppe, who take the expression in its physical sense. And though there may be an allusion to the circumstances of Abraham and Sarah, v. 19., and of Abraham's being the father of many nations yet unborn,—still these two clauses seem principally meant to express the omnipotence of God by examples of what were thought most to require omnipotence; namely, raising the dead, and exercising creative controlling power. This interpretation is well illustrated by Loesn, Carpz., and Schoettg., who besides several passages of the Rabbinical writers, compare 2 Macc. vii. 28., where God is said to have created the universe ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων; and Philo, p. 728. τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι.

"By καλεῖν &c. (as observes Stuart) is meant calling [into existence] things that have at present no existence, and employing them for his purposes, just as he directs and disposes of things that already exist."

18. The Apostle having shown that the doctrine of gratuitous faith does not impugn the Scriptures, by appealing to the example of Abraham, and the declarations of David; and having insisted on the justification of Abraham previous to the covenant of circumcision, and independently of it, concludes the chapter by an animated description and commendation of Abraham's faith, and showing the happy consequences of imitating it to all who profess to be disciples of Christ. (Stuart.) In παρ' ἐλπίδα ἐπ' ἐλπ. there is an elegant Oxymoron, with which Grot. compares the spes inspirata of the Latin writers. The sense is: "who, contrary to all grounds of hope, believed with a confident hope." In this and a kindred passage at Acts ii. 6. κατασκηνώσει ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, there is some Genit. understood at ἐλπίδι, which is supposed to be supplied from the context and the subject. Here it is ἐπαγγελίας, "the assurance," namely, that he should be the father of many nations, Gen. xv. 5. The words εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι are to be closely united with the preceding, and are for ὥστε γεν., "that he should become."

—οὕτως—σου.] Namely, as numerous as the stars of heaven, which is to be supplied from the context of the passage in Genesis.

19. καὶ μὴ ἀσθενήσας.] An elegant litotes for "being strong in faith." So οὐ διεκρίθη at ver. 20. Οὐ κατεν., "did not mind or regard," namely, by way of distrust. Νεκρ., "præmortuum;" inefficient as to procreation. That Abraham 40 years after had six children by Keturah, does not invalidate this assertion; for (as Whitby and Mackn. observe) "since Abraham's body had been renewed by miracle, as was Sarah's, (Hebr. xi. 11.) it might preserve its vigour long after."

20. εἰς τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν τ. Θε. οὐ διεκρ. τῇ ἀπ.] The best Commentators are agreed in taking διακρίνεσθαι here in the sense of διστάζειν, ἐνδοιάζειν, to hesitate, doubt: and εἰς, in the sense of at, is very frequent. Before τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ supply ἐπὶ, by, through. See xiv. 1. Matt. xxi. 21. Acts x. 20.

—δοὺς δόξαν τ. Θε.] Any one is said to give glory to God, when he is induced to do or say any thing out of reverence to God. (Koppe.)

21. πληροφορηθεῖς.] See Note on Luke i. 1.

22. ἐλογίσθη] scil. ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ.

23. οὐκ ἐγράφη, &c.] This (as Theophyl. remarks) is an answer to a tacit objection; q. d. what is that to us?—Ans. "Much: it was written on our account, so that we may obtain the like justification, if we have a like faith." Δι' αὐτὸν signifies "for any thing personal to him," as to record his merit, or for his praise.

24. τοῖς πιστ.—νεκρῶν] i. e. (as Stuart explains) "those who believe in what God has done and said with respect to the Messiah, will be justified through their faith, in like manner as Abraham was by his."

25. διὰ τὴν δικ. ἡμῶν.] On account of our justification, i. e. in order that the work of justification might be completed; for if Christ be not risen, then our faith is vain. Nay, Bp. Horsley remarks, that as our transgressions were the cause of Jesus being delivered up, so our justification must be the cause of his being raised again. His resurrection was the immediate consequence of man's forgiveness and justification. (See viii. 10.) To assure us that we shall be justified through faith.

V. Here begins what Schoettg. calls the Tractatio cum Christianis. Having established these two points—1. the efficacy of the Gospel to justification, for which end the law failed; 2. the extension of this grace to all, both Jews and Gentiles, through faith; the Apostle proceeds to the remaining Gospel-graces, in their progression.

1. Justification, or pardon of sins past. 2. Peace with God (vi. 1.), which ensues immediately upon Justification, and is the same with Reconciliation (v. 10.) and a State of favour (v. 2). 3. The Hope of glory (v. 2.) or of the glorious inheritance of the Sons of God in heaven. See 1 Pet. i. 3, 4. 4. The Gift of the Holy Spirit (v. 5.), which is the seal of our adoption (viii. 15.) and the earnest of our heavenly inheritance, Eph. i. 14. These are privileges freely conferred upon us by God, upon our admission by Baptism into the Christian Covenant. 5. Sanctification of heart and life, through the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, vi. 2, 4, 6, 11, 14, 22. viii. 3, 4, 12, 13.—This is the condition to be fulfilled on our part; upon which there follows:—6. A grounded Hope of a glorious Resurrection, v. 11. vi. 5, 8, 22. viii. 14, 16, 17, 18, 23, 24, 25. 7. Salvation finally perfected in the everlasting possession of the heavenly kingdom, v. 9, 10, 11. vi. 22, 23. viii. 13, 17, 18, 19, 23. (Young.)

The Apostle proceeds in this Chapter to exhibit the blessed fruits of this justification. 1. We have peace with God (with whom we were before in a state of enmity, being alienated from him (comp. vv. 6—10.), and we enjoy, through Christ, free access to a state of favour with God, and they are led to rejoice in the hope of future glory, vv. 1, 2. 2. We are supported and comforted in all our afflictions during the present life; nay, we may even rejoice in them as the instruments of spiritual good to us, vv. 3—5. 3. All this good is rendered certain, and the hope of it sure, by the fact that Christ, having died for us while in a state of enmity and alienation, and having thus reconciled us to God, will not fail to perfect the work which he has thus begun, vv. 6—10. 4. We may now rejoice in God (who is truly our covenant God, as he had been that of the Jews), on account of the reconciliation which Christ has effected, v. 11. 5. This state of reconciliation or filial relation to God is now extended to all men (i. e. proffered to all, laid open for all, rendered accessible to all), in like manner as the evils occasioned by the sin of our first parent have extended to all, vv. 12—14; yea, such is the greatness of Christ's redemption, that the blessings procured by his death far exceed the evils occasioned by the sin of Adam, vv. 15—19: they even exceed all the evils consequent upon the sins of men, who live under the light of revelation, vv. 20, 21.

1. δικαιωθέντες] “having [thus] been justified.”

— εἰρήνην] reconciliation and friendship with God (as opposed to a state of alienation and enmity, v. 10.) through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. Koppe compares Jerem. xvi. 5. Sept. ἀφέστηκα τὴν εἰρήνην μου ἀπὸ τοῦ λαοῦ τούτου.

2. προσαγωγὴν.] The word properly denoted approach, but was often used of the permission of approach to great persons; and, by an easy transition, might denote introduction to a state of favour and acceptance; for such is the sense of χάρις.

— καυχώμεθα.] The word here, as often in St. Paul, denotes not glorying, but exultation; rejoicing in any thing.

— δόξης.] The felicity of the saints in heaven is so called here and elsewhere (as 2 Cor. ii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 10. Heb. ii. 10. 2 Pet. 1.—3.) in order to console them while suffering here on earth. So in 2 Cor. iv. 17. afflictions are said to work out for them αἰώνιον βάρος δόξης.

3. καυχώμεθα ἐν τ. θλ.] Almost all the recent English Expositors have thought that καυχ. should be rendered not glory, but rejoice. This, however, very incorrectly represents the sense; and the above Interpreters were led to adopt that view from not perceiving the true scope of the Apostle, which is ably pointed out by Bp. Warburton (Div. Leg. vol. v. p. 139). “St. Paul (says he) opposing the advantages which the Gentile converts had by Faith, to those which the Jews gloried to have by the Law, adds, in order to show those advantages in the highest superiority, that the Christian Gentiles could glory even in that which was an opprobrium among the Jews,—namely, tribulation. But the followers of Christ, who were taught that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God, had the same reason to glory in the roughness of the road, as the ancient AGONISTÆ had in the toils which procured them the victory. So Theodoret (after Chrys.) explains it σεμνυνόμεθα, καὶ μέγα φρονοῦμεν, ὡς κοινωνοῦντες τῷ Δεσπότη τῶν παθημάτων. Comp. 1 Pet. iv. 13., which passage seems to have been written with a view to the present. “We exult under tribulations,” we bear them even with exultation, as knowing that they work more exalted felicity. The formula οὐ μόνον δὲ, sub. τούτο, is frequent in St. Paul, though rare in the Classical writers.

3, 4. εἰδότες ὅτι—ἐλπίδα.] A beautiful climax, as at ix. 29, 30. x. 13. seqq. Similar ones are adduced by Schoettg. and Wets. from the Rabbinical writers. Κατεργάζεται, “is productive of,” i. e. tends to produce.”

4. δοκιμὴν.] Not probation as the Syr. and Vulg., or experience, as E. V.; but the sense is (with an allusion to the δοκιμή by which the goodness of certain articles was put to the proof) the same as that in which we sometimes use the word proof, to denote something approved and shown to be excellent by proof and test; as “arms of proof.” So Theophyl. ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ δοκιμὴν (approved) τὸν πειραζόμενον (tried) ἀπεργάζεται. and Theodoret: δόκιμος ἀποδείκνυται, καὶ τῇ ἐλπίδι τῶν μελλόντων ἐρείδεται.

5. ἡ δὲ ἐλπίς οὐ καταισχ.] “And the hope

[in question] puts one not to [the] shame [of disappointment].” The metaphor has allusion to the shame felt by having relied on delusive promises. So κατασχύνω is used at ix. 33. x. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 6. Wets. compares Eustath. on Hom. II. 871. 10. Αἶας ἀριστεύσει, οὐκ αἰσχύνεσθαι τὴν τοῦ Μενέσσεως ἐλπίδα. And so the Schol. on Thucyd. vii. 77. uses the expression ἐλπίσι ἀνεπαισχύντοισι.

— ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη—ἐκκέχ. The preceding words οὐ κατασχύνει may be repeated, q. d. [It is not a fallacious hope], because we have a convincing proof of its reality, in the unbounded grace of God diffused on us by His Holy Spirit, and given as a pledge of His love.

6. ἔτι γὰρ Χριστὸς, &c.] The Apostle now sets forth the greatness of the love of God shed abroad in their hearts, by an argument a fortiori, et a minus credibili ad majus credibile, deduced from God's unspeakable love already manifested, in giving His Son for their redemption, when as yet they were in the state of heathens and enemies. (Young). q. d. “if Christ hath already done the greater thing for you [i. e. reconciled you to God, when you were dead in trespasses and sins, will he not much more complete the work?” Thus the connexion is this: [Of the love of God we have another proof], for when we were yet without strength, in a helpless state through sin, Christ in due time (at the period determined in the councils of God, the fulness of time, Gal. iv. 4.) died for the ungodly race of man.

— ἀσθενῶν.] The term properly denotes weak, generally through sickness, and with an adjunct notion of misery. Now, considering the effect of sin in depraving and weakening both the mental and moral energies (see Is. i. 5.), it well expresses the helplessness of sin. Ἀσεβῶν just after seems used κατ' ἐναντίωσιν, q. d. when we were yet in a state of extreme spiritual weakness, nay, sinfulness, Christ, &c. These terms, as also ἡμαρτωλῶν and ἐχθρῶν, seem meant chiefly of the heathens; though not to the exclusion of the Jews.

7. μόλις γὰρ, &c.] The magnitude of the benefit is now set forth by a popular mode of illustration,—showing the difference between the voluntary sacrifice of Christ for sinners, and the possible case, of any one dying for an eminently good and beneficent man, but scarcely of one dying for a merely just man. Of the two γὰρ the first is meant to introduce the illustration, and may be rendered now: the second is meant to introduce a limitation; q. d. [I do not say none] for, &c. It is strange that there should have been any difference of opinion on the δικαίου and τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, which some take of things, not persons. But thus the Article would be required at δικαίου, and the force of the illustration much weakened. Both are undoubtedly meant of persons; and there appears to be a climax, or ascending gradation, as Bp. Jebb calls it, Sac. Lit. p. 3. The ancient and early modern Commentators, indeed, do not see this distinction between δικαίου and τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ; (and thus suppose a tautology) but the more eminent ones from the time of De Dieu downwards, have recognized it. And certainly it is as strongly marked as can well be; for, according to the distinction observed in the Classical writers, δίκαιος signifies one who is strictly just; ἀγαθός one who is benevolent, χρηστός. “The Apostle's object (says Bp. Jebb) is to illustrate the exceeding love of Christ, by a contrasted analogy, derived from human feelings. Look around you in the world;—where will you find a person ready to die for a just man? Is it more than a remote probability, a mere perhaps, that you will find a person with magnanimity to die even for that rare character, THE GOOD MAN? But not such was the love of Christ: he died for those who not only were not good, who were not even just; for the weak, and the ungodly; for sinners, and for enemies.

8. συνίστησι] “sets forth, or displays.” See supra iii. 5. and Note. The ὅτι should be rendered namely that; as in x. 9. 2 Cor. v. 14. Phil. i. 27. ii. 22. Col. i. 19. 1 Thess. i. 5. ii. 14. where (as Schleus. well observes) it stands in the place of an explanatory or declarative particle.

9. δικαιωθέντες—σωθησόμεθα.] Δικ., “having been justified,” is equivalent to καταλλάγντες, implying final salvation. Τῆς ὀργῆς, punishment.

10. εἰ γὰρ ἐχθροὶ, &c.] Here there is another antithetical illustration, closely connected with the foregoing. At ἐχθροὶ sub. either τοῦ Θεοῦ, from τῷ Θεῷ; or, if ἐχθ. be (as it seems), an adjective, supply τῷ, by which it will signify, “hateful to.” Κατηλλ., “were brought back to the favour of God.” Koppe regards καταλλάγντες as put for δικαιωθέντες; which may, in a popular acceptance, be true; but in the one case God is considered as a monarch, in the other as a judge. Καταλλάττεσθαι (by an ellip. of διαφοράς, sometimes supplied) signifies “to change one another's differences, exchange them, mutually lay them aside." When said of those who have before been friends, it signifies to be friends, or become friends again. But this language is properly applicable to those only who are on some footing of equality. When used of those who are not so, it is said improprie, and can only mean redire in gratiam, "to be again received into favour." Now it is obvious that this applies, in a still stronger degree, to the word when used ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, of God. Then it must be explained θεοπρεπῶς, and only imply on the part of God, the granting of pardon, and affording the means of obtaining and preserving his future favour; and, on the part of man, a humble and thankful acceptance of the offered boon.

—ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ.] This does not mean, as some suppose, by his resurrection; though that is implied. Koppe rightly regards it as expressed antithetically, for ζῶντος αὐτοῦ, his living for the purposes just adverted to, viz. to complete the work of our redemption, by acting as our Intercessor. See Heb. vii. 25.

11. οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ, &c.] Sub. τοῦτο. Chrys. and the Greek Commentators rightly supply ἐσώθημεν from σωθησόμεθα, at v. 9.; v. 10. being parenthetical. Καυχώμενοι is in construction dependent upon σωθησόμεθα; but, in fact, it may be regarded as employed instead of a verb finite; on which see Win. Gr. § 39, 5. The general scope of the argument is: "And not only have we this hope of future salvation, but at present, we rejoice in God."

—τὴν καταλλαγὴν.] The accuracy of our common version has been impeached, by Dodd., Mackn., Newc., and Hey; but defended by Abp. Magee, on the ground that the word corresponds to what Whitby and Taylor call the first justification, which is plainly distinguished from the final salvation. A more satisfactory defence is advanced by Bp. Burgess, who remarks that "the alteration of the word reconciliation makes no difference in the signification of the passage; since the reconciliation obtained by Christ's death, is the consequence of the atonement and expiation made by him, as is obvious from various passages of Scripture." See Heb. ii. 17. 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. Heb. ix. 26. Still it would, I apprehend, have been better, had our Translators employed the more directly corresponding term reconciliation, as they had just rendered καταλλαγέντες reconciled. Though indeed the words atone and atonement were, in the time of our Translators, regarded as equivalent to reconcile and reconciliation. See Todd's Johnson.

12—19. These verses are difficult, and have been variously interpreted. The main purpose is (as Stuart observes) evidently this: to heighten our views respecting the blessings which Christ hath procured for us, by comparing them with the evils which ensued upon the fall of our first parent; and by showing that the blessings in question not only extend to the removal of those evils, but far beyond. So far the general scope is plain: but, as Stuart observes, the detail is replete with difficulties; which have, however, been, for the most part, successfully encountered by the learned Professor in his very valuable commentary, which I strongly recommend to all those of my readers who are desirous of understanding the course of reasoning in this important portion of Scripture; and must even content myself with referring them to his excellent analysis of the contents of these verses.

—διὰ τοῦτο.] The Commentators are not agreed whether this is to be regarded as a particle of inference, or a particle of transition. The latter mode of explanation seems only an avoiding of the difficulty; while the former involves some harshness, by ellipsis and otherwise. I conceive that it simply means "quæ cum ita sint," "This being the case;" "there being this reconciliation;" as xiii. 6. Matt. xiii. 13; xiv. 2; xviii. 26; xxi. 43.

In the words following, the best Commentators are agreed, that "the latter part of the comparison is left to be supplied from the subsequent verses; the sense being suspended, on account of intervening explanations and illustrations, till we come to verses 18, 19, & 21." Or, to express it in more critical language, ὥσπερ δι' ἐνὸς—ἁμαρτίας ὁ θάνατος (to use the words of Mr. Turner) "form the protasis of a comparison, giving rise to a digression, to prove and illustrate it, and continued through the following verses to the 18th, when the protasis is repeated in different terms, and immediately followed by the apodosis οὕτω—ζωῆς, the language of which is adapted to the last form of the protasis. The sense is: "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death on all as its consequence, so by one δικαίωμα (righteousness) all are restored to a state of life." See a similar parenthesis in vii. 2 & 3.

—εἰσῆλθε] "was introduced." A frequent idiom. So Thucyd. ii. 54. ἡ νόσος—ἐς Πελοπόννησον οὐκ εἰσῆλθε. Διῆλθε, by the same idiom, signifies "was transmitted," namely, from generation to generation.

—ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον.] There has been some doubt raised by certain recent Commentators on the sense of ἐφ' ᾧ; which they would take as put for ἐν ᾧ, or assign the sense "unto whom," and even yet more far-fetched significations. All these interpretations, however, seem alike unfounded and unnecessary. They were, indeed, devised to avoid the difficulty resulting from the ancient and common interpretation "inasmuch as all have sinned," since it is objected, that infants have not sinned, and yet are liable to death. But the difficulty is not such as needs to be removed in so violent a manner; for ἡμαρτον ("sinned,") merely implies that they "are treated as sinners," "are considered guilty in the sight of God;" i. e. on account of Adam's fall. Thus the expression will be equivalent to ἀμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν at v. 19. See Storr.

13. This and the next verse are meant to establish the proposition contained in the preceding one; and that by anticipating an objection; namely, that since, when there was no law, there was no transgression, death ought not to have been inflicted. The difficulty in this passage is chiefly occasioned by extreme brevity, and a blending of the objections with the answers. The sense of the whole mainly depends upon the interpretation of ἄχρι νόμου, which Origen, and also some modern Commentators, render "during the law." A signification inadmissible, and indeed inapplicable. See the learned discussion of J. A. H. Tittm. de Synon. p. 33, seqq. on the force of ἄχρι and μέχρι, which is intimately connected with the sense of this whole passage. His researches go to establish the ancient and common interpretation, by which ἄχρι νόμου is explained to mean, from the Fall, "until the law was promulgated;" i. e. before the promulgation of the law; and μέχρι Μωϋσ. "until Moses gave the law." The common interpretation of the whole passage is also confirmed by the Greek Fathers and Commentators. See the details in Stuart. The argument in vv. 13 & 14, is stated by Mr. Holden well thus: "Adam was subjected to death because he violated the law respecting the forbidden fruit; but from his time till that of Moses, men were subjected to death who had not violated any similar positive or express law; therefore they must have been subjected to death and treated as sinners, not for their own actual sin, but in consequence of Adam's sin."

— ἐλλογεῖται.] Literally, "entered to our account," "laid to our charge."

14. ἐβασίλευσεν] "had exerted his uncontrollable force." This is said by prosopopœia; of which examples are adduced by Wets. from the Rabbinical and the Classical writers. Τοὺς μὴ ἁμαρτ., "who had not sinned." So Winer in Gr. Gr. p. 46. gives examples of ἡμαρτησα for ἡμαρτων. By the persons here adverted to, are meant, as Bp. Warburton remarks (Works, Vol. vi. p. 259), "those who died before they came to the knowledge of good and evil, namely, infants and idiots." The words ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμ. τῆς παραβ. 'A. are to be connected with ἐβασίλευσεν.

namely, Christ. Wets. has shown, that in the Rabbinical writers, and even in Josephus, mention is often made of the first Adam; which, of course, implies a second Adam. On the points of similarity see Carpz. in Recens. Synop. The chief one is that here adverted to by the Apostle; namely, that "by the first Adam sin came into the world; by the second came righteousness." And as all mankind were represented in Adam, as the cause of their punishment; so were they all represented in Christ, as the cause of their restoration.

15. ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς τὸ παράπ., &c.] Here regularity would have required the corresponding part of the comparison between Christ and Adam, to have been resumed: but the Apostle, struck with a difference in some respects, again stops to remark this difference. And first he observes, that if God's justice, in the infliction of punishment, was general in its effects, much more has his goodness been general in freely bestowing mercies through the Gospel. (Newc.)

— οἱ πολλοί.] Not "many;" but "the many;" i. e. (by an idiom which I have fully explained in Rec. Syn.) all mankind. Ἡ χάρις — ἐν χάρ., "the grace of God and the gift [of righteousness] by grace." Ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάρ. is a Hebraism for "a gratuitous gift." By this the Apostle hints that this grace is purely a gift, and unmerited. Ἐπερίσσευσε; i. e. "the benefit of the free gift hath abounded to a far greater extent than did the injury of;" &c.

16. καὶ οὐχ ὡς δι' ἐνὸς, &c.] The sentence is exceedingly elliptical; so that the Commentators in vain endeavour to bring it to any thing like a regular construction. Some verb must be supplied; whether ἐστὶ, or ἔχει, matters not. But θάνατος and εἰσελθὼν cannot be supplied (with Koppe and Valpy) by any rule of ellipsis. The true ellip. is what is suggested by the next clause τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα, &c. Thus in the subsequent verse παραπτώματος is to be supplied at ἐνὸς, from παραπτωμάτων in the next clause. The διὰ also implies ἐλθὼν, or such like. Thus we may render: "And not as was the transgression, which came through one (i. e. Adam) who sinned, so is the free gift." The sentence would have been more plainly worded thus: καὶ οὐχ ὡς δι' ἐνὸς, ἁμαρτήσαντος τὸ κρίμα, οὕτω δι' ἐνὸς, δικαιούντος τὸ δῶρημα.

— τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα—δικαίωμα.] Here there is the same kind of ellip. as in the preceding verse. At ἐξ ἐνὸς supply παραπτώματος from παραπτωμάτων in the next clause; also ἐλθὼν, as before. The ἐκ in ἐκ πολλῶν ἁμαρτ. is adapted to the ἐξ of the antithetical clause, and therefore must not be too rigorously interpreted. We may render "on behalf of," or "on the part of." At εἰς sub. ἐγένετο, "issued in," produced. The terms δώρημα (free pardon) and χάρισμα (gift of salvation), are equivalent, and denote the δικαίωμα. The πολλῶν has great force; for, as Theophyl. (cited in Recens. Synop.) observes, "the pardon granted by God did not take away that one sin of Adam only, but all the sins which were committed in the world after it." See Note on Matt. xx. 28.

κατάκριμα, τὸ δὲ χάρισμα ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων εἰς δικαίωμα. Εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἐνὸς παραπτώματι ὁ θάνατος 17 ἐβασίλευσε διὰ τοῦ ἐνὸς, πολλῷ μᾶλλον οἱ τὴν περισσεΐαν τῆς χάριτος καὶ τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικαιοσύνης λαμβάνοντες, ἐν ζωῇ βασιλεύσουσι διὰ τοῦ ἐνὸς, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.—"Ἀρα 18 οὖν ὡς δι' ἐνὸς παραπτώματος εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους, εἰς κατάκριμα· οὕτω καὶ δι' ἐνὸς δικαίωματος εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους, εἰς δικαίωσιν ζωῆς. "Ὡςπερ γὰρ διὰ τῆς παρακοῆς 19 τοῦ ἐνὸς ἀνθρώπου ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν οἱ πολλοί, οὕτω καὶ διὰ τῆς ὑπακοῆς τοῦ ἐνὸς δίκαιοι κατασταθήσονται οἱ πολλοί. "Νόμος δὲ παρεισήλθεν, ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παρά-20

17. εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἐνὸς, &c. Now is introduced the third advantageous difference. The γὰρ is continuative; and the εἰ signifies "if [as is the case]," to which the οὕτως corresponds. Τοῦ ἐνὸς, i. e. Adam. See Note on v. 15. The words διὰ τοῦ ἐνὸς, "through that one," are exegetical of the τῷ—παραπτώματι. Περὶσσεΐαν τῆς χάρις is for χάριν περισσοτέραν, as 2 Cor. viii. 2, denoting what is transcendent. Τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικ. is for τῆς δικαιοσύνης δωδωρημένης, the justification granted by grace. By the ἐν ζωῇ βασιλ. is meant (as Mackn. observes) "that they shall have infinitely greater happiness in their new life, than they had miseries and sorrows in the state into which they were brought through Adam's disobedience, expressed by the reigning of death in this verse, and in v. 14." The term expresses height of felicity, with an adjunct notion of exalted honour; in which view Wets. aptly adduces Manil. v. 361. "Regales ut opes et magna araria servant, Regnantes sub rege suo, rerumque ministri." He might have yet more aptly cited 2 Tim. ii. 11. εἰ ὑπομένομεν, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν.

18, 19. The Apostle now turns back to complete the comparison commenced at v. 12, and sums up the argument; for ἄρα οὖν is a usual expression with him for such a purpose, and may be rendered "So, then." See Hoogev. de Part. There is here something very elliptical in the construction; and the sense can only be gathered from the context. In the first clause, after δι' ἐνὸς παραπτώματος, we must supply τὸ κρίμα: and in the second after δικαίωματος, supply τὸ χάρισμα. There is also a verb left to be supplied, as at ver. 16, namely, ἦλθεν. Δικαίωσις ζωῆς seems to mean such justification as should restore them to the salvation they had forfeited; literally, pardon for life.

which, as appears from the foregoing, is equivalent to πάντες. It is very important to attend to this force of the Article, and to bear in mind that throughout this whole passage it is (as Abp. Whately observes) "the main drift of the Apostle is to set forth the universality of the Redemption, as being co-extensive with the evil introduced at the fall, which it was designed to remedy." So the great BENTLEY, in his masterly Sermon on Popery, after quoting what is said at ver. 12, and the redditio at ver. 15, remarks: "Who would not wish that our Translators had kept the Articles in the version which they saw in the original? thus, 'If through the offence of the one (that is Adam) the many have died, much more the grace of God, by the one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto the many.' By this accurate version, some hurtful mistakes about partial redemption, and absolute reprobation, had been happily prevented. Our English readers had then seen, what several of the Fathers saw and testified, that οἱ πολλοί, the many, in an antithesis to the one, are equivalent to πάντες, all, in v. 12, and comprehended the whole multitude, the entire species of mankind, exclusive only of the one. So again vv. 18, 19, our Translators have repeated the like mistake; where, when the Apostle has said, that 'as the offence of one was upon all men (εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους) to condemnation, so the righteousness of one was upon all men to justification: 'for,' adds he, 'as by the one man's disobedience (τοῦ ἐνὸς) the many (οἱ πολλοί) were made sinners, so by the obedience of the one (τοῦ ἐνὸς) the many (οἱ πολλοί) shall be made righteous.' By this version the reader is admonished and guided to remark, that the many in v. 19 are the same as πάντες, all, in v. 18." The meaning, therefore, of vv. 18, 19, may be thus expressed (with Mr. Holden): "As, by Adam's disobedience, all men are brought into a state of condemnation, so, by Christ's obedience, all men are brought into a state of justification and life; i. e. have the means of attaining that justification which will be crowned with eternal life."

It is not, however, to be understood as meant, that all mankind are actually "made righteous;" but only that the benefit of this δώρημα, or χάρισμα, or δικαίωσις ζωῆς, is held out to all: and if they do not reap the benefit of it, it is through their own fault; and that all who are justified must become so alone through Christ.

20. νόμος δὲ παρεισήλθεν. The Commentators are not agreed whether νόμος denotes the

πτωμα. Οὐ δὲ ἐπλεόνασεν ἡ ἁμαρτία, ὑπερπερίσσευσεν ἡ 21 χάρις· ἵνα ὥσπερ ἐβασίλευσεν ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ, νιον, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

Law of Moses, or the Law of nature, or a Rule of life, which Bp. Middl. proposes. Almost all ancient and modern ones adopt the first mentioned interpretation; which, however, is strongly impugned by Mackn. and Middl.; by the latter, because that would break his Canon of the Greek Article. But their objection applies rather to the version "entered privily;" for certainly that is not applicable to the introduction of the Law, which was ushered in with all possible pomp and notoriety. I am inclined to regard νόμος, with Mackn. and Middl., as signifying Law, a rule of life, including both the Law of nature and of Moses. Thus παρεισῆλθεν may mean, not "secretly or silently entered," as Mackn. and Middl. suppose, but "was introduced." And this is confirmed by the Syriac and some modern Versions and Commentators.

Παρά here means by the bye, or indirectly. A view of the sense, also, I find, adopted by Prof. Scholef., who considers the Apostle's meaning to be, "that when sin had entered, the direct and obvious method would have been to introduce the Gospel as its great counteraction and remedy; instead of which, the Law came first to answer a collateral end, viz. to aggravate the evil, and make it more manifest and desperate, that men might be most effectually prepared to welcome the blessing." Thus it was an indirect step towards the accomplishment of God's ultimate purpose."

— οὐ.] This may be taken either of time, or place; each interpretation supported by good Commentators. The former is preferable; but both may be admitted.

21. διὰ δικαιοσύνης "by justification of sin." "The word (says Koppe) differs from χάρις as effect from cause." Mr. Young remarks, that "looking over the comparison, as now completed, we may observe that the principal terms are four on each side: thus—

Adam, Transgression, Condemnation, Death :
Christ, Obedience, Justification, Life :
so that the result of the inference drawn at v. 12 is, Wherefore, as by the offence of Adam, condemnation and death came upon all men; even so, by the obedience of Christ, the second Adam, justification and eternal life were restored to all men."

VI. Some Commentators are of opinion, that the design of this and the next two Chapters is, to vindicate the Gospel doctrine of Justification from certain misconstructions, and to prove that it does not make void the law. In the present, say they, the Apostle shows it is quite consistent with the law written on the hearts of men; and so far from dissolving our obligations to holiness, confirms them. Others (as Theophyl., Schoettg., and Mr. Young) think that, as in the foregoing Chapters, the Apostle had considered the graces and privileges conferred on the Christian convert, upon his admission to the Covenant, he now proceeds to treat on the Christian life subsequent to baptism; i. e. sanctification, or Christian holiness as subsequent to justification: pointing out what obligations are laid upon us; what conditions are required for maintaining our state of grace, and securing our inheritance; and what helps of Divine grace are afforded, for enabling us to fulfil those conditions. 1. The Apostle, in chap. vi., states the obligations to holiness, under which we are laid by our baptismal vow, and other Christian engagements; and also by the different results of a life spent in the service of sin, or the service of God: this he does in chap. vi. 2. He in chapters vii. and viii. inquires what helps were afforded toward Sanctification, in the Jewish and Christian dispensations. Of these views the latter seems to be the more correct; but the Apostle had probably both designs in mind, the former subversively to the latter. And purposing to establish the obligation to Christian holiness. He does it by counteracting two grand abuses, which had been made of his doctrines. 1. That of free grace; 2. that of the Christian's freedom from the law. But in order to a full comprehension of the course of argument pursued by the Apostle in chapters vi.—viii., the reader is referred to the copious synopsis and elaborate exegesis of Prof. Stuart.

1. τί οὐν ἐροῦμεν;] This is not, as Schleus. imagines, "a formula of transition;" but a formula by which something that another might reason or think, is adverted to for the purpose of disavowing it. Nor is this use confined to St. Paul; for it sometimes occurs in the Classical writers. So Arrian. Epict. p. 17. (cited by Wolf) τί οὐν ἐγὼ λέγω· ὅτι ἀπρακτόν ἐστι τὸ ζῶον; μὴ γένοιτο!

2. οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁμ.] The ancient and the best modern Commentators are agreed, that the sense is; "How shall we who have died to sin (i. e. who have solemnly renounced it at our baptism) live any longer therein." The πᾶς represents the inconsistency of such conduct. See Gal. ii. 18. It is well observed by Koppe, that the ratio metaphoræ is formed on a singular mode of speaking,—by which the rite of immersion in the baptismal water, and egress from it, were used as a symbol of breaking off all connection with the present sinful life, and giving oneself to a new and pure one. "As therefore (continues he) it was usual for those baptized to be, on that account, called both dead and buried, and raised again to a new life, hence the Apostle, according to his custom, applies this manner of speaking to the purpose of describing the cultivation of Christian virtue (to which every Christian had bound himself) under the similitude of death and resurrection." Elsn. and Wets. adduce many passages of the Classical writers, which show that to be dead to any thing or person, denoted to have broken off all connection therewith.

Ζήσομεν ἐν αὐτῇ denotes the habitual commission of it. So Wets. cites examples from the Classical writers of ζῆν ἐν οἴνῳ, or ἐν πότοις.

3. ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε ὅτι ὅσοι ἐβαπτ., &c.] Under the same metaphor the Apostle proceeds to show, from the nature of the baptismal covenant, that Christians have engaged to be conformed to the death and resurrection of Christ by dying unto sin, and rising again unto righteousness.

Ἡ ἀγνοεῖτε occurs also at vii. 1, and is equivalent to “have you forgotten, or are you not aware of this truth?” Βαπτίζεσθαι εἰς τινα is equivalent to βαπτ. εἰς ὄνομα τίνος, and denotes to profess oneself any one’s disciple by baptism; which was understood to engage the disciple to the profession of the doctrine promulgated by his teacher. Εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ ἐβαπτ. may be rendered, “have been baptized unto his death.” But the sense is not so clear as that of the foregoing phrase. The best Commentators, however, think that it must mean, “to bind oneself by baptism, to die unto; i. e. lay aside, all sin,” as Christ laid down his life: the εἰς denoting conformity to. See Bp. Marsh’s Lectures, p. 385.

4. συνετάφημεν] “we have been [thus] buried [in the waters of baptism.]” There is a plain allusion to the ancient custom of baptism by immersion, on which see Suicer’s Thes. Eccl. in v. cited in Bingham’s Antiquities, Vol. I. p. 522, and Bp. Sherlock cited in Recens. Syn. And Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. Vol. II. p. 152, has shown that initiation into the Greater Mysteries was by the Philosophers figuratively termed a dying, or engaging to die unto, and renounce a worldly and vicious life.

— εἰς τὸν θάνατον.] “After the similitude of, or in conformity to his death.” Supply αὐτοῦ from the αὐτῷ just before. In fact, it is called for by the Article τόν. Διὰ τῆς δόξης τ. Π., “through the glory, i. e. power, of the Father.” Ἐν καινότη. ζωῆς is for ἐν καινῇ τῇ ζωῇ, “in a new life.” Περιπατεῖν here, as often, denotes habitual conduct. It is observed by Iaspis, that the Apostle has put only two members of the comparison, when there should properly have been four, omitting one in the protasis, and another in the apodosis. The passage, in a complete state, he says, would be this: ὥσπερ ἡγέρθη Χριστὸς ἐκ νεκρῶν, καὶ περιπάτησε ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς συνεγε-θέντες αὐτῷ ἐκ νεκρῶν, ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς περιπατήσωμεν.

5—11. The main idea being thus introduced, the Apostle now proceeds to expand the thought, and present it in a variety of costume, suitable to the nature of the case, and to impress the whole on the mind of the reader. (Stuart.)

5. εἰ γὰρ σύμφυτοι—ἐσόμεθα] i. e. if we have been closely united with, or assimilated to Him in His death, we shall also be assimilated to, (i. e. regenerated with,) Him, in the likeness of his resurrection. Grot., Loesn., Carpz., and Koppe remark, that σύμφυτος is used often of the closest union and most intimate friendship. Τῷ ὁμοιώματι is for καθ’ ὁμοίωμα. Also ἀλλὰ καὶ would properly denote imò etiam; but, in this elliptical use, it may be rendered “utique, sane etiam.” Here we must repeat σύμφυτοι.

6. The Apostle now enforces this obligation to Christian holiness, from the engagement which every Christian comes under by baptism, of being conformed to the fellowship of Christ’s sufferings, by crucifying the flesh, with the affections and lusts.

— τοῦτο γινώσκοντες.] Many take this as a participle for a verb. But a particle such as ἐπειδὴ, is also necessary. It is better to regard γινώσκ. as a Nominativus pendens, ὑμεῖς being understood. Thus it is equivalent to a verb with ἐπειδὴ. This use of γινώσκων occurs also in 1 Tim. i. 9. James i. 3. 2 Pet. i. 20. Soph. Antig. 188. τοῦτο γινώσκων ὅτι, &c. Antiphanes in Alceste: τοῦτο γινώσκων ὅτι.

— ὁ παλαιὸς ἢ ἄνθρωπος.] This seems to denote the corrupt disposition, and even nature which men derive from Adam, and which belongs to them in their unrenewed state: what is properly applicable only to human nature being (by personification) applied, by a metonymy of the subject for the adjunct, (as in Eph. iv. 22, and Col. iii. 9.) to the concrete man. Thus Adam is called by the Rabbins the man of sin. To this is opposed the new man, the holy disposition and character infused by the Holy Spirit, and required by the Gospel. See Eph. iv. 24, and Col. iii. 10.

— ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τ. ἀ.] Τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἀμ. is not to be regarded, with many eminent Commentators, (especially the recent ones,) as simply put for ἁμαρτία, but sin is considered, (suitably to the foregoing metaphor,) as a body, possessing power within the man, as an imperium in imperio; a body consisting of many members, in particular vices. Comp. vii. 24. Καταργηθῇ, “might be deprived of its vigour and efficiency, and no longer cause sin.” Τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας is plainly the same with ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρωπος. And τοῦ δουλεύειν is for ὥστε δουλεύειν.

enforces the declaration in the foregoing (that when the old man is crucified, Christians cannot be devoted to the service of sin) by a simile drawn from natural or physical death; and ἀποθανὼν is to be taken, figuratively, of him whose corrupt nature has been crucified with Christ; q. d. "He who is [thus] dead [to sin] is freed from its power." For δεδικαίωται is for ἐλεύθερός ἐστι, "is freed from its slavery;" as viii. 2. Gal. ii. 20; v. 20. 1 Pet. iv. 1. πέπαι- νται ἁμαρτίας. At the same time there may be here, as Crell. thought, a blending of the proper with the figurative sense of the illustration, and that from which it is compared: q. d. "As a man corporeally dead is freed from the authority of all those that in his lifetime had power over him; so he that is thus figuratively dead, is freed from the power of sin, which formerly acted in him." The term δὲδ. is used in preference to ἡλευθέρωται, in order, as Crell. suggests, to remind us what we may hope for, if we thus shake off the slavery of sin.

8. εἰ δὲ ἀπεθάνομεν—αὐτῷ.] Some Commentators regard this as an admonition, "Since we are dead with Christ, we ought," &c. That, however, is refuted by the πιστεύομεν. The common interpretation (ably maintained by Theophyl. & Whitby) is, with some slight modification, preferable. Render: "Now if we have thus died with Christ [by having our corrupt nature crucified with him] we trust that we shall also live with him [in immortal happiness]." See 2 Tim. ii. 11. Pr. Stuart well observes, that "in this and the next verse the Apostle resumes the sentiment of v. 4. for the sake of adding a new circumstance, by way of establishing his position; viz. as Christ died but once, and thenceforth lives for ever a new life, so the believer dies once for all to sin, when he truly dies to it."

9. εἰδότες.] See Note on v. 6. γινώσκοντες.

10. ὁ γὰρ ἀπέθανε—Θεῷ.] The δ is for καὶ ὁ, "in respect to this." See Note on John xvii. 1—5. And τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ may mean, in his dying, "he died on account of, for the expiation of, sin (see 1 Thess. v. 10.) once for all," i. e. so as to complete and perfect our redemption. See Heb. vii. 27. ix. 26—28. Stuart, however, maintains, that Christ's "dying to sin," means, that he died in order to diminish its power or influence. But this, though it be true, is not, I apprehend, the whole truth. It is not easy to fix the sense of ζῇ τῷ Θεῷ, to which various senses, none of them inapposite, are assigned by the Commentators. It probably means (and so I find Stuart explains), "unto the glory and honour of God," which was promoted by his resurrection.

11. λογίζεσθε, &c.] "Now (observes Stuart), follows the comparison of the members with the head." The sense is: "So also consider yourselves as persons who have renounced sin, whose corrupt nature has been crucified; but who are alive unto God, by living to his honour, service, and obedience." Ἐν Χριστῷ expresses, that it is to Christ's mediation that we are to ascribe both our dying unto sin, and our living unto God.

12, 13. Now comes the conclusion: "From these considerations, then, let not sin reign," &c. By ἁμαρτία is meant, not peccatum, but vitiostas, that propensity to evil which exists in every man. "The Apostle (remarks Chrys.) does not say, Let not the flesh energize; he does not bid us destroy nature, but regulate our passions." The Apostle, by a bold figure, personifies Sin as a tyrant, striving to hold mastery over men. Θνητῷ is not what many recent Commentators maintain, a mere epithet of ornament; but is used to hint, 1. that the pleasures of the body are, from its liability to disease and death, very fleeting and temporary; and that therefore there is the less reason to gratify corporeal appetites. 2. That the labours of resisting temptations to vice are but of short continuance, and therefore such as need not seem formidable. 3. To admonish them of the near approach of that period when the dominion of sin would work death spiritual and eternal. This view is confirmed by Stuart, who thinks the word is used in order impressively to point out the sin and folly of permitting the lusts of a frail and perishable body to have dominion over the soul.

Griesb. and Knapp, with the approbation of Koppe, have cancelled the words αὐτῇ ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ, on the authority of some MSS., Versions, and Fathers; but, I conceive, without reason. For though some MSS. have not the αὐτῇ ἐν; and others retain the αὐτῇ, but cancel the ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ; yet scarcely any omit both. And if even the majority of both classes of MSS. omitted all the words, it would be uncritical to cancel them; since, when removed, they leave the passage so cropped and curtailed in sense, as no writer would suffer a passage to appear. We should then have to im- plore the kind aid of some other MSS., to dis- cumber the sentence of what would then be worse than useless, the words εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν. With far more prudence Vater has restored the whole passage in the text, and Tittm. ταῖς ἐπι- θυμίαις αὐτοῦ. To me it seems, that, although the authority for retaining all the words is so great, that none ought to be actually removed from the text, yet, that the state of the evidence (as reported by Wets. and Griesb.) is such as to justify us in suspecting that the passage is not as it was left by the Apostle. Gratz and Rinck are of opinion (as I myself formerly was) that the present reading was formed of two readings; namely, ὑπακούειν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ, and ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ, the ἐν being added afterwards. But, though agreeing in their premises, they so far differ in their conclusions, that Rinck thinks the true reading is ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ; Gratz, ὑπακούειν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ. Rinck will not believe that ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ could have been expelled by the αὐτῇ, but rather αὐτῇ by those words. It is not, however, very likely, that any Scholiasts would think it necessary to gloss the αὐτῇ. If they had, they would surely have glossed by ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτῆς, not αὐτοῦ, as, in fact, did Origen, Ruffin., and Theodor. And so one of Matthæi's MSS. I cannot, therefore, bring myself to believe that we have in the common text two readings, one a gloss upon the other. We have rather, I suspect, the original reading (which I believe was ὑπακούειν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ); and, mixed up with it, the attempts of some scholiasts (not scholiasts) to improve it; who thought the words ought to have been accommodated to the principal term ἁμαρτία, not to the subordinate one σώματι. I suspect that αὐτῇ was first inserted, and then ἐν, to help out the construction. For the omission of αὐτῇ ἐν there is the authority of several of the most ancient and valuable MSS., many of the best Versions, and very many Fathers. It is not probable that the words αὐτῇ ἐν were removed (as Matthæi fancies) "to clear the sentence;" for even with them it is not overloaded. The only objection to it is, its extreme harshness; though that, of itself, is no reason why it should be altered, but the contrary, agreeably to the most certain of all Critical Canons. And though we no where else read of the lusts of sin (but only of the lusts of the flesh or the body), yet, it may here be tolerated, because sin is personified as a tyrant,—just as supra v. 6, 7. he is considered as a master over a slave.

13. μηδὲ παριστάνετε, &c.] We have here a continuation of the imagery (in which sin is considered as a slave-master), introductory of a kindred admonition. Thus there is not a military allusion (as was thought by Wets. and others), but ὅπλα is here to be taken in its primary sense, to denote tools or instruments, as in Herodot. vii. 25. ix. 121. Herodian vii. 11. and elsewhere. Thus the sense is, "neither yield up your members to Sin, for him to use as tools, or instruments of wickedness." Compare vv. 16. 29. and see Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 13.

13. ἐκ νεκρῶν ζῶντας] "as those who, after having been [spiritually] dead, are now alive."

14. ἁμαρτία γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ, as Chrys. and Theophyl. remark, has reference to a clause omitted, q. d. "[Exert yourselves and fear not] for sin shall not [as you apprehend] have dominion over you." The next γὰρ assigns a reason why sin shall not work their destruction, namely, that they are not under Law, but under Grace. I entirely agree with Carpz., Doddr., Mackn., and Middl., that by νόμος is meant Law in general. "It is true (says Middl.) that if understood of the law of Moses, the argument will be coherent with respect to the Jews; but it ought to be remarked that the design of the Apostle is far more comprehensive; and that he means to contrast the nature of all law, (i. e. of every rule of life, which offers neither mediation nor atonement, and consequently makes no provision for the inevitable weakness of man), with grace, i. e. with a gracious dispensation, which requires not an unsinning obedience, but only the best exertions of frail creatures, giving assurance of pardon through faith, where our obedience has been imperfect."

15—23. The Apostle proceeds to argue, that the dispensation of grace vouchsafed to us, so far from encouraging sin, demands a service to righteousness, utterly inconsistent with any sinful habit.

16. οὐκ οἶδατε, &c.] After earnest dissuasion, the Apostle resorts to serious admonition, by placing before them the alternative, that they must serve some master,—either Sin, who will lead them to death; or righteous obedience, which will conduct them to justification. They who obey Sin are the vassals of sin, and must receive the wages of sin—DEATH. Εἰς ὑπάκ. is for ὥστε ὑπακούειν. The ᾧ is by some rendered "whatsoever." But as ἁμαρτία was just before personified, so it should seem that the ᾧ here is put in the masculine, for accommodation to it; though by Sin may, in an under sense, be meant a habit of sin, as by ὑπακοή a habit of obedience. The εἰς in εἰς θάνατον and εἰς δικ. denotes event, result, or consequence, as Rom. v. 16. where εἰς κατάρκισμα and εἰς δικαίωσιν are similarly opposed. Θάνατος here denotes spiritual and eternal death, the death of the soul, the awful ὄλεθρον αἰώνιον ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου 2 Thess. i. 9. Δικ. should not be rendered righteousness; since, as appears from the kindred passage at v. 16. (see also iv. 25.) it is for δικαίωσιν, which word properly denotes acquittal, but in St. Paul forgiveness of sins, and consequent acceptance and admission to salvation. This I find confirmed by Bp. Bull Harm. Ap. p. 42., where after remarking that ὑπακοῆς is to be taken metonymically, for the law of the Gospel which we are to obey—and that δικαιοσύνη is used as often for δικαιώσις; renders “Ejus servi estis, cui auscultatis, sive peccati ad mortem, sive Evangelii ad justificationem vitæ.” A similar mode of explanation is to be adopted at ix. 30, 31. Gal. ii. 21. iii. 21. and elsewhere.

17. “The Apostle now transfers what had been expressed generally, to the case of the Romans.” (Koppe). Thus vv. 17, 18, as also 19, 20, are not meant to follow up the argument; but only to impress his readers (of the Gentiles), by showing them, that they are themselves examples of what he is declaring. See Stuart.

— χάρις τῷ Θεῷ.] Sub. ἔστω. The phrase is scarcely ever found in the Classical writers. The only passage adduced by the Commentators (Arrian Epict. iv. 4. τότε ἐγὼ ἡμάρτανον, νῦν δ’ οὐκέτι· χάρις τῷ Θεῷ) is, no doubt, borrowed from the N. T., which the writer appears to have diligently perused. In ὅτι ἦτε, &c., there is a difficulty (arising from the words seeming to express a sense the reverse of what the Apostle must have meant), which is not removed by supplying, as Beza and many others have done, μέν. Nor do I see how the difficulty is to be solved by merely “taking the whole phrase together,” as Stuart proposes. It is better to suppose (with Grot. and Koppe), that as the participle is often put for the verb;—so here, by a Hebraism [or rather popular idiom] the verb is put for the participle, which would be equivalent to a verb with καίπερ, although. The ἦτε is emphatical. Render: “God be thanked that, though ye were [once] the servants of sin, ye have [now], on the contrary (δὲ) obeyed,” &c. A Classical author would have written: ὅτι, πρὶν μὲν ὄντες, &c.—νῦν δὲ, &c. Ἐκ καρδίας, “cordially.” In εἰς ὃν παρεδ. τύπον διδαχῆς there is a well-known hyperallage, by the figure attraction (see Glass Phil. Sacr. 168.), as in the Virgilian “urbem quam statuo, vestra est.” Thus it is for τῷ τύπῳ διδαχῆς εἰς ὃν τύπον παρεδόθητε, i. e. to be formed upon as upon a model.

18. ἐλευθερωθέντες δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς ἀμ.] i. e. being liberated from the bondage of: sin being still considered as a slave-master. There is not an allusion (as Hamm. and Mackn. imagine) to the manumission, but to the transfer of slaves (whether by purchase, or otherwise) from the service of one master to that of another. The words ἐλευθ. δὲ ἀπὸ, &c. are, I conceive, meant to be (as Crell. has pointed out) suspended in construction on the preceding sentence; though not, as he imagines, on ὑπηκούσατε. The truth is, ἐλευθ. δὲ is put for καὶ ὅτι ἐλευθ., “and that being freed.” Ἐδουλώθητε is for δούλοι ἦτε; which, however, is meant to hint that it is their duty so to be. The sense of the term, however, is modified by the context. Obedience to God is properly not a slavery, but a service; or, at least, an ἐθελοδοουλεία, such as that spoken of in Plutarch T. ii. 768. (cited by Wets.) οἷς ἀν ἔρωσ κύριος ἐγγίνεται, τῶν ἄλλων δεσποτῶν καὶ ἀρχόντων ἐλεύθεροι, καὶ ἄφειτοι, καθάπερ ἱεροδουλοὶ, διατελοῦσιν.

19. ἀνθρώπινον λέγω, &c.] On the sense of this phrase the Commentators are not agreed. There are, however, but two interpretations entitled to attention: 1. That of many eminent ancient and modern Commentators, who think that the Apostle wishes to soften the harshness of the term ἐδουλώθητε, and make it more consonant to the doctrine of the freedom of Christians under the Gospel. For to the words δούλοι δικ., δουλωθῆναι, &c. they think this expression ἀνθρώπινον λέγω (i. e. κατ’ ἀνθρώπου or ἀνθρωπίνως) is to be referred. Thus the sense will be: “I use that expression of common life, (viz. ἐδουλώθητε) though somewhat harsh, and not very suitable to the free state of Christians, in order that you who are weak, and accustomed to refer every thing to the senses, may the more fully understand in what your duty consists; which is in obeying righteousness.” 2. Chrys. and some other ancients; and, of the moderns, Wets., Schleus., and Stuart explain it to mean; “I use such language as men are accustomed to employ, in regard to the affairs of common life.” So the Classical writers have the phrase ἀνθρώπινως λέγω. These interpretations seem, in some measure, to merge into each other. See Note on iii. 5.

— ὥσπερ γὰρ, &c.] The Apostle, having explained the reason why they should free themselves from the servitude of sin, and answered an objection arising from thence, returns to his admonition. (Crell.) Παρεστ. should be rendered, not “have yielded,” but “[once] yielded.” This is apparent from the οὕτως νῦν παραστήσατε. It is strange that the Commentators should not have seen that δούλα is here not a substantive, but an adjective; which, indeed, was the primitive use of the term; δούλος being, in its original use, as much an adjective as ἐλεύθερος. “So (observes Scheid ap. Lennep) the Persian BEND, a bond-servant, from binden, to bind.” Ἀκαθαρσία and ἀνομία are by many recent Commentators accounted synonymous. But as ἀκαθαρσία, in the signification lasciviousness, has at i. 24. been applied to these very persons, so that seems to be the sense here. Thus the word is synonymous with ἀσελγεία and πορνεία. See Tittm. de Synon. p. 155. Comp. 2 Cor. vii. 1.

From lasciviousness the Apostle, I conceive, now

rises to ἀνομία in general, as used of every kind of unlawful conduct. In εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν and εἰς τὸν ἁγ. there is a peculiar idiom, which has occasioned some difference of opinion as to the full import of the words. The ancient, and almost all modern Commentators think that the εἰς denotes accumulation, i. e. “vice upon vice.” They, however, adduce no sufficient proof; and this mode of explanation will not suit εἰς ἁγιασμόν. I should rather think that the εἰς (like the Heb. ל) denotes purpose, as in Mark i. 4. and often. Thus the sense will be, “for the promotion and dissemination of vice of every kind.” Δικαιοσύνη denotes right conduct in general, as opposed to ἀνομία: and εἰς ἁγ. signifies “that you may become holy,” and consequently be blessed and saved.

20. The connection and the scope of this verse (not a little obscure) may, I think, be laid down, with Prof. Stuart, as follows: “As you once served sin, so now you must serve holiness. Your present relation admits of no other conclusion; for when you served sin, you deemed yourselves free from all obligation to righteousness: [so now, serving holiness, count yourselves free from all obligation to sin.]”

— ἐλεύθεροι ἦτε τῇ δικ.] The Commentators have been not a little perplexed with this rare use of ἐλεύθερος, and the unprecedented syntax of Dative for Genit. But, in fact (as Mackn. saw) δικ. is not governed of ἐλεύθ., but of ἐπὶ understood. And Macknight and Wahl rightly render, “free with respect to righteousness,” i. e. as to any dependence upon it, or obedience to it. There is, however, a yet greater irregularity in the sentence, namely, that we have here (as occasionally elsewhere in St. Paul) an antithetical clause left to be supplied. This was seen by Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, and afterwards by Crell. and Grot. They paraphrase thus: “When ye lived in vice, ye were alienated from all virtue, not only wholly averse from any subjection to it, but free from that subjection. Now therefore be as subject to virtue, and as wholly alienated from subjection to sin.”

21. τίνα οὖν καρπὸν, &c.] Render: “What fruit (i. e. advantage), then, had ye at that time in respect of those things?” Τέλος is here, as Wets. observes, for πλήρης μισθός; of which use Loesn. and Carpz. adduce examples.

22. νυνὶ δὲ] See Note supra iii. 21. Δουλω-ζέντες, &c. “engaged to the service of God.” So Apuleius, cited by Wets.: “Da nomen huic sanctæ militiæ;—teque jam nunc obsequio religionis nostræ dedica, et ministerii jugum subi voluntarium. Nam cum coperis Deo servire, senties fructum tuæ libertatis.” Εἰς ἁγιασμόν “in respect to holiness, or sanctification,” as Stuart explains.

23. τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια—αἰώνιος.] This is a resumption of what was said at ver. 21. τὸ γὰρ τέλος—θάνατος, in order to introduce another circumstance; and to contrast death as the wages of sin, and the desert of a vicious course, with eternal life as the free gift of God, awarded to faith and holiness, through Jesus Christ, and not as the reward of merit. There is (as Grotius, Gatak., and Wets. have shown) an allusion to military affairs; ὀψώνια being the regular soldier’s pay, (on which I have fully treated at Luke iii. 14.) and χάρισμα the donative freely given, on certain occasions, by the emperors.

VII. The Apostle here resumes, and continues the argument advanced at iii. 31, that the Gospel method of Justification does not make void the moral law. And in doing this he engrafs what he has to urge on what was said at vi. 14, “for ye are not under Law, but under Grace,” which implied the greater efficaciousness of the Gospel for the Sanctification he had just mentioned, than the Law of Moses, or any Law. This he evinces in the present and subsequent Chapter, showing the inefficacy of any Law to sanctification, and how the grace of the Holy Spirit, under the Gospel, supplies that defect. So far from making void the law, he proves that it is the only means of delivering men from the bondage of sin, to which they are subjected while under Law, and further shows the nature and blessedness of that deliverance. The first six verses of the present Chapter illustrate by a popular image (not to be too much pressed upon) derived from the case of matrimony (which is only an obligation till the death of one of the parties) what was said at vi. 14. seqq. And having before compared the condition of Christians (especially the Jewish Christians) to that of slaves, who have passed into the service of another master, the Apostle here compares the condition of those persons with that of a wife, who, after the decease of her husband, may be married to another; evidently alluding to the abrogation of the Law of Moses, as being dead, and therefore no more to be observed than a dead husband is to be regarded by a surviving wife. The same applies to the Law of Nature.

This view of the scope of the Chapter, and especially of the first four verses, is confirmed by the elaborate researches of Prof. Stuart. He commences by observing, “that the difficulty complained of in the first four verses has been chiefly occasioned by Commentators instituting too minute a comparison between the conjugal connection, and the connection of Christians with the law; since a minute and exact comparison was not intended, and cannot be made." The points of dissimilarity are then pointed out by the learned Commentator, who truly observes that the object of this comparison was to illustrate and defend the sentiment at vi. 14, "for we are not under the law, but under grace." The basis of the whole comparison he states to be as follows: "Brethren, you are aware that death, in all cases, dissolves the relation which exists between an individual and a law by which he was personally bound. For example: the conjugal law ceases to be in force by the death of one of the parties. So it is in the case of Christians. They not only die to sin, i. e. renounce it, when they are baptized into the death of Christ, vi. 2—11; but they also die to the law at the same time, i. e. they renounce all their hopes and expectations of being sanctified by the law; so that sin will no more have dominion over them. They do, by the very fact of becoming real Christians, profess to receive Christ as their 'wisdom, and justification, and sanctification, and redemption,' 1 Cor. i. 30."

1. γινώσκουσι νόμον.] The Commentators are not agreed whether by νόμον is meant the Law of Moses, or Law in general. The former view is adopted by most Commentators, ancient and modern; but the latter is ably maintained by Est., Crell., Schoettg., Koppe, Mackn., Wakef., and Middl., who interpret "to persons who know the nature of Law divine and human." "The greater part (says Bp. Middleton) of St. Paul's readers probably had not extended their views to the imperfection, which must belong to every dispensation not providing an atonement. And he might have said merely that he knew τὸν νόμον, the Mosaic law. But he here addresses them with some degree of rhetorical complaisance; and takes it for granted that they had made a general application from their own particular experience: and the design of the Epistle (see Note on ii. 13.) led him to speak, directly or indirectly, of the imperfection of all the possible schemes of salvation, which offered not a redeemer."

Of these two interpretations, the latter seems preferable, being such as the propriety of the Article requires; from which we must not unnecessarily suppose any deviation. But, at the same time, the difference between the two is more apparent than real; for the Law of Moses is especially adverted to by the Apostle in this Chapter, and the law of nature, or that of works, held in a subordinate consideration.

As to the construction, and consequently the sense of the words ὅτι ὁ νόμος κυριεύει τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ, the τοῦ ἀνθρώπου is by several modern Commentators construed with ὁ νόμος. But though this absolute use of κυριεύω is frequent, and the transposition is one not rare in St. Paul, yet it is not to be introduced unnecessarily; which would be the case here. And, as Doddg. observes, "if it seems to remove one tautology, it introduces another and a worse;" for the second verse plainly expresses the same sense as would thus be assigned to the first. Besides (as it has been also observed) to render ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ "as long as he (i. e. the man) liveth," would be contrary to the Apostle's design, which is to prove that they had outlived their obligations to the Law. I therefore prefer the view adopted by Origen, of the ancients, and the most eminent modern Commentators; who assign to ζῇ the sense "is in force," of which Koppe cites as an example Soph. Antig. 206. οὐ γάρ τι νῦν γε ἀκῆθες, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ ποτε ζῇ ταῦτα (scil. τὰ προστάγματα) Θεῶν. There is, indeed, somewhat of harshness in referring ζῇ to νόμον; but not greater than we frequently find in the writings of St. Paul, in which the context and the scope of the reasoning is generally a better guide than the seeming construction. Μόνον is to be understood; i. e. so long as it is in force, and no longer. Τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, i. e. the person subject to its authority. The γὰρ in the next verse should be rendered "for example."

2. ὑπανδρός] "one who is engaged (ὑπὸ) to obedience and fidelity to a husband." At νόμῳ sub. ἐπί. Thus it is equivalent to κατὰ νόμον. The νόμον τοῦ ἀνδρός must mean the obligation laid upon the wife by the husband's right to her, which, of course, must cease at his death. At κατήργηται ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου there is, as at Gal. v. 4, an hyperallage, for κατήργηται ὁ νόμος τοῦ ἀνδρός, "the law or right over her by her husband, is annulled." For a law is said καταργεῖσθαι, when it ceases.

3. χρηματίζει] "she will be accounted." In ἐὰν γένηται ἀνδρὶ ἐτέρῳ we have a common phrase, to denote the cohabitation of matrimony or of concubinage, occurring in Lev. xxii. 12. Deut. xxiv. 2. Judg. xiv. 20. and sometimes in the later Classical writers, as Achill. Tat. and Heliodorus. Τοῦ μὴ εἶναι is for ὥστε μὴ εἶναι.

4. Now follows the application of this principle to the case in question. Hence I have ventured to edit ὥς τε for ὥστε; the sense being plainly, "And so," "in like manner." And Wakef. and Jaspis, I find, render thus. Examples of ὥς τε in this sense for καὶ ὥς, and that for οὕτως, and of the confusion of ὥστε and ὥς τε, may be seen in Steph. Thes. p. 10, 993. Nov. Ed. 2 Cor. 3. 6.

With the words following, the early modern Commentators found much difficulty, for the removal of which the only effectual method is (with Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, with the Pesch. Syr. Vers., as also Grot., Crell., Whitby, Hammond, Taylor, Wakef., Koppe, Newc., Rosenm., and other eminent Commentators) to suppose an hypallage, by which ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ ("ye are dead to the law") is taken for ὁ νόμος ἐθανατώθη ὑμῖν, i. e. (as the scope of the argument requires), ye are freed from the necessity of performing the works of the law in order to justification. "By this mode of expression (says Taylor) the prejudice of the Jew is favoured, who might have been disgusted, had the Apostle said that the law, for which the Jews had so great a veneration, was dead: and yet the sense is the same; because the relation is dissolved, whichever of the parties be dead."

— εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι, &c.] i. e. so that now ye are another's, are no longer subject to the abrogated law, but are become Christ's, who was raised from the dead to complete the work of Redemption.

— ἵνα καρποφ. τῷ Θεῷ.] These words are to be referred to all the preceding ones, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι—ἐγεσθ., and the sense is, "in order that ye should bring forth fruit (i. e. of holy obedience) unto God." Chrys. and Grot. seem right in supposing the term καρποφορ. to be used in conformity with the foregoing similitude, the offspring of marriage being its fruits.

5. ἐν τῇ σαρκί.] This may mean (as some Latin Fathers and most of the early modern Commentators and Wolf suppose), "in the unregenerate state, under the dominion of fleshly lusts;" so vi. 6. σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας. But, from the context (see v. 16.) it should seem that the words are better understood (with Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, as also Grot., Vorst., Hamm., Whitby, Locke, Carpz., and almost all the recent Expositors), "under the carnal ordinance of the Law," the phrase being frequently put in opposition to ἐν πνεύματι εἶναι, to be under the Gospel, and partakers of its spiritual blessings. Compare viii. 2. viii. 8, 9. Every law of works must be more or less carnal, as regarding external and corporal, rather than internal and spiritual things; the body rather than the soul. Τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν is a Heb. phrase for τὰ πάθη τὰ ἁμαρτωλά; the sinful affections of the unregenerate state. Πάθος is the usual term in this phrase, as Rom. i. 26. πάθη ἀτιμίας. At τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου some participle, as γεγονότα, must be supplied. Διὰ τοῦ νόμου is by many rendered "under the law," for ὑπὸ τῷ νόμῳ, as iv. 11. 2 Cor. v. 11. 2 Tim. ii. 15. But it is plain from v. 8. that (as the ancient and early modern Commentators saw) more is meant, which is probably this; that these passions were generated by the forbidding effect of the law, which rather excited a desire for what was forbidden. See the Note on v. 8.

— ἐνηργεῖτο] wrought. The verb is here, as in 2 Cor. iv. 12. a deponent, though almost always elsewhere a passive. Ἐν τοῖς μέλ., "in our bodily organs," the seat of sensuality. See v. 22. and 1 Cor. vi. 15. Col. iii. 5. James iv. 1.

— εἰς τὸ καρποφορῆσαι, &c.] "so as to bring forth fruit which tended unto death."

6. νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] The connexion is: "[And such would have been the natural consequence of sin] but now we are delivered," &c.

— ἀποθανόντες.] The reading of the textus receptus is ἀποθανόντος. But ἀποθανόντες is found in very many MSS. (including Rinck's Venice ones) all the early Edd., and many of the best Versions and Fathers, together with the Greek Commentators; and it has been adopted by almost every Editor from Wets. to Vater. With reason,—as much required by the context, as it is supported by MSS., &c., and (as Wakef. says), "gives clearness to a passage before inexplicable." The sentence may be rendered: "But now we are freed from the law, being dead to that law in which we were held bound; so that we worship God according to a new and spiritual mode, not in the old and literal one," i. e. by the law of Moses. The construction, as Rosenm. observes, is: νυνὶ δὲ κατηργ. ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, ἀποθανόντες [ἐκείνῳ scil. νόμῳ] ἐν ᾧ κατειχόμεθα; which, as Ammon says, is, by hypallage, equivalent to νυνὶ δὲ ἀποθ. τῷ νόμῳ, ἐν ᾧ κατειχ., ἐλευθεροὶ ἐσμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. Instead of ἐν ᾧ a Classical writer would have said ᾧ. So Thucyd. iii. 12. δέξει τὸ πλεόν ἢ φίλια κατειχόμεθα. Perhaps, however, the present is a stronger idiom, and not quite of the same nature; there being, probably, a metaphor taken from fastening any one in a pair of stocks. See Note on Acts xvi. 24. Ἐν καινότη. πνεύματος seems put for "in a new state," namely, that of a spiritual religion, [the Gospel]; not that of an old and literal, or ceremonial, one, the law of works. And thus, as Iaspis observes, "Non tollit igitur, sed mutat modo obligationem nostra religio."

7. The Apostle now preoccupies two objections, which might be made from the foregoing expressions; 1. on the tempting tendency or power of the law. This he overrules, 7—12, by denying that what was said of the power of sin under the law, was to be understood as implying that the law was the cause of sin. He shows, on the contrary, that it only convicts men of sin, detects and prohibits it. That it was only made an occasion of sin by the evil propensities of our nature.

These, he represents, were excited by the prohibitions of the law; and first drew us into sin, and then, by sin, subjected us unto death. 2. On the condemning power of sin, which is answered from v. 12 to 25. See Note there. (Rosenm. and Young).

7. ὁ νόμος ἁμαρτία;] “Is, then, the law the cause of sin?” To this it is replied by the strongest negative, q. d. (observes Stuart) the law is not the efficient cause of sin: but still there is a sense in which the law is connected with sin. What this is the Apostle goes on to describe. Τὴν ἁμαρτ. οὐκ ἔγνω, i. e., as Theophyl. and Theodoret explain, “I should not have fully known the nature of sin in all its latent principles and tendencies.” Or (as Stuart lays down the sense), “Unless the law had put restraint upon sinning, I should never have known how great is my propensity to evil and sin. My desires were excited by the check put upon them by the restraints of the law. Thus my character was fully developed, and I came, through the law, to know my own sinfulness. In this way πᾶσα ἐπιθυμία (v. 8.) was wrought in me, so that I have a knowledge of sin, such as I should never have acquired in any other way.” This seems to be the connection between vv. 7, 8. Νόμον is taken by Koppe, Wakef., Rosenm. and Mackn., of law in general. But, as it plainly refers to the ὁ νόμος before and after, it can only be taken of the Mosaic law.

The most enlightened Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that the Apostle here, and up to the end of the Chapter, is not speaking in his own person, or of his own case; (for that would be contrary to the whole scope of his discourse, and to what is said at viii. 2.) but is personating the character of another, whether the Jew, or the Gentile. On this μετασχηματισμός (as the Rhetoricians call it), found also at 1 Cor. iv. 6, Gal. ii. 18, see Hamm., Locke, Schoettg., and Dodd. It occurs also in the Classical writers, and, like the κρίσις, is usually to be attributed to delicacy, and a wish to avoid giving offence. It is well observed by Dodd., that “the character here assumed is that of a man first ignorant of the law,—then under it, and sincerely desiring to please God, but finding, to his sorrow, the weakness of the motives it suggested, and the sad discouragement under which it left him, and last of all, with transport discovering the Gospel, and obtaining pardon and strength, peace and joy, by it.” “The Apostle, however (as Mr. Holden remarks), is here representing the state of men who live under any law requiring works, or perfect obedience, for justification; consequently he is describing the case of every man who does not possess the righteousness of faith, which is by Jesus Christ, showing that every man is convicted as a sinner by the law under which he lives; and this, first, with respect to the law of Moses, v. 7—13, and 2dly, with respect to the law of nature, v. 14—

23.” The conclusion, then, is evident, that the Gospel, so far from making void the moral law, and giving encouragement to sin, is the only method of delivering mankind from sin and spiritual death.

7. τὴν γὰρ ἐπιθυμίαν οὐκ ᾔδεν.] The sense is: “I had not known the sinful nature of lust; i. e. forbidden desire.” Vitringa and Schoettg., indeed, maintain (and in proof thereof adduce various citations from the Rabbins) that the wiser Jews admitted evil concupiscence to be a sin. And I have in Recens. Synop. proved this of Josephus. Grot., too, and some other Commentators, affirm the same thing of the Gentiles: which, however, Wolf flatly denies; though in the face of no inconsiderable evidence, to which I have in Rec. Syn. added two passages that must decide the point, one from Euriip. Hippol. 317, where, among other frank confessions of guilt for evil concupiscence, is this: χεῖρες μὲν ἀγνὰι, φρόν δ’ ἔχει μίασμά τι. And Orest. 1604. Με. Ἀγνός μὲν εἰμι χεῖρας. Ὅρ. Ἀλλ’ οὐ τὰς φρένας. Yet even more of such instances would not prove the Apostle wrong; since (as Crell. well observes) he is not speaking “de sapientibus viris, et Philosophis, quorum ob summam paucitatem ratio hac in parte non est habenda.” And what he says is quite true of the bulk of mankind in every age; namely, (as Stuart paraphrases it,) that “even immoderate desire, that internal feeling which the law might not seem to modify, has been aggravated by its restraints.”

The best Commentators tell us that οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις is, according to a not uncommon usage of the Apostle, (See xi. 26 & 27. Hebr. xii. 27.) an imperfect quotation, meant to suggest to the mind the whole of the commandment. Nay, the judicious Bâle Editor marks it as such in the text. But there is no proof that the Apostle meant it as a citation, strictly speaking, at all. He probably deemed the words sufficient to indicate in substance the tenth commandment.

8. ἡ ἁμαρτία] i. e. (as Theophyl. explains), “the propensity to sin inherent in our corrupt nature.” Sin, moreover, is, as many Commentators think, here personified, as an enemy endeavouring to compass his death, by taking every opportunity to urge him to what the law forbids. And κατειργάσατο ἐπιθυμίαν must be understood with reference to that perversity of human nature, by which, as the Poet says, “Nititur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata,” and which verifies the saying of Solomon, “Stolen water is sweet, and bread eaten furtively is pleasant.” Prov. ix. 17.

—χωρὶς νόμου] i. e. (as Theodoret explains) “without the existence of the law,” which enjoins what is to be done, and forbids what is not to be done. Ἀμαρτία νεκρά, sin, (i. e. lust,) would be comparatively dead, would languish, or would be inoperative, since without law there is no transgression.

9. ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων—ποτέ.] In this and the two next verses the Apostle expresses the same sentiment, only further unfolded; and, as almost all the best Commentators are agreed, still sustains the character of a man who, till he knew the law, led a life comparatively innocent; but, incited to sin by the law, however salutary in itself, fell into sin, and thereby sunk into every kind of misery. See Koppe and Stuart. As to the attempts of some Commentators (as Paræus, Beza, Pisc., Carpz., Rosenm., and Terrot) to establish that Paul here speaks in his own person, and adverts to what he had himself experienced in his youth, that is destitute of any real proof, and involves the passage in inextricable difficulties.

Ἐζων seems to have reference to the security, and comparative happiness, of men in such a state as is here meant. Ἐλθούσης, “when it was introduced.” Neut. for passive, as often in Thucyd. Ἀνέζησεν, i. e. (as Theophyl., Grot., and the best Commentators explain) “it began to show itself in its true character as sin, thus bringing conviction home to my heart.”

10. ἀπέθανον] i. e. “I felt spiritually dead, as guilty of death.” See Theophyl. and the Note of Dr. Shuttleworth.

At ἡ εἰς and αὕτη εἰς participles must be supplied, by ellipsis. The simplest is that of the verb substantive accommodated to the sense. Of the two prepositions the first denotes intent and scope, the second termination; and the sense is well expressed by Abp. Newcome thus: “And [so] the commandments which, if observed, would have given life, became the occasion of death on account of human infirmity.” It is truly observed by Rinck, that the demonstrative αὕτη has an intensive force, as at v. 16; ix. 6. 1 Cor. iii. 17; vi. 4; xvi. 3.

11. ἀφορμὴν λαβ.] i. e. taking occasion of that aggravation of the desire, which, by the corruption of human nature, is excited by the restraints of the law.

—ἐξηπάτησέ] “lured and tempted me to sin;” ex. gr. insinuating that the prohibitions of the law are unreasonable, and that the thing is pleasant and profitable, and will perhaps go unpunished. In short, using such sophistry as that by which the Serpent deceived Eve. Δι' αὐτῆς scil. ἐντολῆς, i. e. “by my non-observance of it.”

12. ὥστε.] “And so,” or “so then.” The Apostle shows that the fault was not in the commandment, but in the man. Ἄγιος is a term properly (like the Latin sanctus) applied to Law, and signifies what justly claims our reverence and obedience. See Tittm. de Syn. p. 22. With respect to δίκαιος and ἀγαθός, the former signifies “what is just in itself,” and here hints that the Law is not the cause of the misery of those who violate it; ἀγαθός, “what is calculated for good.”

13. τὸ οὖν, &c.] The Apostle now considers the condemning power of sin under the law. The sentiment is substantially the same as at v. 7. An objection is supposed, q. d., “What, then, has this good law been the occasion of death to me? how can a thing deserve the appellation of good, if it tends to one's ruin?” To the negation which follows, the Apostle subjoins what may establish that denial. The scope of the passage (as Theodoret. says) is to show the cause of the above evils. But in laying down the construction and determining the sense, the best Commentators have pursued two different courses: Beza, Schmid, Wolf, Elsn., Mackn., and Rosenm., together with most of the Editors from R. Stephens to Tittm. and Vater., point ἡ ἁμαρτία and repeat γέγονε θάνατος. Thus ἵνα φανῇ must be construed with κατεργαζομένη, which will be taken for κατεργάζεσθαι. So φαίνεται καλουμένη in Thucyd., and a similar idiom in the best ancient Classical writers. There is, however, not a little harshness in the repetition of γέγονε θάνατος. There is something frigid in φανῇ so interpreted. And how the sense assigned to the rest of the words can be extracted from them, I am quite at a loss to imagine. I see no reason to abandon the mode of interpretation almost invariably adopted by the ancient Translators and Commentators and most modern ones, which is ably supported by Crell., Schliting, Turner, and Bp. Middl. The Commentator last mentioned has shown how inconsistent the other is with the propriety of the Greek Article; and he thinks there is little doubt but that our common version (which is supported by that of Wakef.) is right. At κατεργαζομένη sub. ἤν; or take it as participle for verb, Hebraicæ. Thus we may render: “Hath, then, this good become death to me? By no means. Nay sin, that it might appear to be sin, was working death to me by what is good: that sin might, by means of the commandment, be [and appear to be] exceedingly sinful (i. e. heinous in its nature.)” “Just as a disorder (observes Theophyl.) which, when it has become worse, may be said to display, by means of the medical art, its extreme virulence, in not being removed even by that.” Thus the law is cleared of all blame, as to its being the cause of death; yet the Apostle proceeds, vv. 14—20, to show the utter inefficacy of the Law, whether of Moses or of Nature, to Sanctification.

14 ἡ ἁμαρτία διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς. ^q Οἶδαμεν γὰρ ὅτι ὁ νόμος ^{q 1 Kings 21. 20, 25. Isa. 50. 1. 1 Mac. 1. 15.} πνευματικός ἐστιν· ἐγὼ δὲ † σαρκικός εἰμι, πεπραμένος ὑπὸ ^r τὴν ἁμαρτίαν. ^r ὁ γὰρ κατεργάζομαι, οὐ γινώσκω· οὐ γὰρ ^r Gal. 5. 17. 16 ὁ θέλω τοῦτο πράσσω, ἀλλ' ὁ μισῶ τοῦτο ποιῶ. 14. The Apostle now proceeds to show the cause why the Law cannot keep any one in his duty, and make him abstain from sin, but rather provokes his desire to sin; and he depicts graphice the contest of sin and human corruption, while a man is struggling, ineffectually, by his own strength, to obey the law of God; showing (to use the words of Stuart) that “even against the voice of reason and conscience, as well as against the Divine precepts, does carnal desire prevail. Thus do men yield the moral self to the power of the carnal self, and plunge deep into ruin, while the voice of God’s law is thundering in their ears, and the voice of their consciences is loudly remonstrating against their conduct. Hence it is plain that the Apostle’s object is, to show that to be under grace, and not under the law, affords the only hope for the sinner.

— ὁ νόμος πνευματικός ἐστιν.] There are several senses in which this is true; but the context requires us to interpret (with Vater Lex.) suadet ζῶν πνευματικὴν “enjoins those things that are agreeable to the Spirit;” or the spiritual principle within them,—namely, their reason and conscience.

14. ἐγὼ δὲ σαρκικός εἰμι.] Augustin, and most of the early modern Commentators (especially of the Calvinistic school) maintain that the Apostle here speaks of himself; and of regenerate Christians. But the ancient Commentators, and the later modern ones are of opinion that he speaks of the unregenerate, and consequently per μετασχηματισμὸν, as before. Thus the Apostle means to say, that the Law enjoins what is holy and spiritual, but that through the evil propensities of man’s corrupt nature, men sin against it, and are consequently subjected to death by it.

Instead of σαρκικός, many ancient MSS. and some Fathers have σάρκινος, which is edited by Griesb., Koppe, and Knapp. But the new reading is plainly a correction of the early Critics; the Classical writers often using σάρκινος, but very rarely σαρκικός, though one example is adduced by Matthæi from Plutarch. Tittm. and Vater have, with reason, retained the common reading; as had been done by Wets. and Matth.

— πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμ.] A strong expression, suited to the foregoing image, and derived from the O. T., as 1 Kings xxi. 20. ἐπράθη ποιῆσαι τὸ πονηρὸν, “sold himself to commit wickedness.” Is. l. 1. ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν ἐπράθητε. The Commentators explain this “devoted to sin.” The sense, however, is stronger, there being a phrasis prægnans, compounded of two, i. e. “sold to sin,” and “doing its drudgery;” denoting “one who is willingly and entirely devoted to the slavery of sin.”

15. This verse is meant to exemplify and illus- trate what was said in the preceding one. On the sense of οὐ γινώσκω, Commentators are not agreed. Many, from Erasm., Crell., and Grot. downward, take it to mean “I approve not.” A sense, indeed, very suitable; since by disapproving what they act, contrary to the Law, they acknowledge that the fault is not in the Law, but in themselves. Yet no sufficient authority for this signification has been adduced, and it is not quite agreeable to what follows. But see Stuart. It seems better, therefore (with all the ancient Translators and some moderns, as Wakef. and Vat.) to take it in the sense “non intelligo,” σκοτοῦμαι, as Theophyl. explains; since it is the effect of sin and the natural corruption of the heart thus to darken the understanding. This, then, and the passage following present separate traits of the spiritual bondage of the unregenerate, the latter springing out of the former.

Σύμφημι properly signifies “to say what another says,” “assent to his opinion;” but when used of a thing, it signifies “to bear concurrent testimony in its favour.” Here again, and throughout this argumentation, νόμος denotes any law, both natural and revealed.

17. νυνὶ δὲ—ἁμαρτία.] The sense is: “Now, then, it is not so much I that do it as Sin.” “From both the foregoing instances the Apostle draws the same conclusion,—that the man, thus acting in opposition to his conscience, and best resolutions and endeavours, can hardly deserve the name of a free agent; but must labour under the influence of some fatal bias; some inbred, indwelling principle of sin.” (Young.) “The Apostle here, for the purpose of his argument, considers man as having two distinct natures, the Spiritual and the Carnal. The former he now speaks of as the real self, which he calls at v. 17, 19, & 25. ἐγὼ, v. 22. τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, and v. 23. τὸν νόμον τοῦ νοῦς, and describes viii. 1. by κατὰ πνεῦμα; the latter is called ὁ νόμος τῆς ἁμαρτίας at v. 23, and τὸ σῶμα τοῦ θανάτου τούτου, v. 24. ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος at 2 Cor. iv. 16, and ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρωπος at Rom. vi. 6. Eph. iv. 22. Col. iii. 19. Raphel illustrates this from a passage of Xen. Cyr. i. 21, where Araspus complains of two souls contending within him. (Whitby and Mackn.) Socrates, too (as we learn from Xenophon and Philo) used to say, Δύο ἔχω ψυχὰς, &c.

18. παράκειται μοι] "is at hand," "is attainable." So 2 Cor. viii. 12. ἡ προθυμία πρόκειται. Οὐχ εὐρίσκω, literally, "I find not the means or ability."

19. οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω—πράσσω.] A repetition, only more strongly worded, of the sentiment at
 v. 15. See Thucyd. iii. 45.

20. This is a repetition, with some alteration, for greater force, of what was said at v. 17.

21. εὐρίσκω ἄρα—παράκειται.] There is somewhat of difficulty in determining the con- struction, and, as thereon depending, the sense of this passage. Many eminent Commentators lay down the following construction: Εὐρίσκω [κατά] (per, by) τὸν νόμον, ὅτι ἐμοὶ τῷ θέλοντι ποιεῖν τὸ καλόν, ἐμοὶ τὸ κακὸν παράκειται.
 By τὸν νόμον they understand (as do most Commentators) the law of Moses. But this involves a very harsh ellipsis, and the Mosaic law has here nothing to do with the argument. Others (as Knapp and Tholuck) construe thus: Ἐμοὶ τῷ θέλοντι ποιεῖν τὸν νόμον [scil. ποιεῖν] τὸ καλόν, ἐμοὶ τὸ κακὸν παράκειται. But this is doing such great violence to the construction, that the sense thus extorted cannot be depended on. Hence I prefer (with Theodoret, Beza, Pisc., Crellius, De Dieu, Grot., Wolf, Newc., Mackn., Wakef., Schleus., Rosenm., Vater, Ammon, Middl., and Stuart,) to suppose τὸν put for τοῦ-τον, and to take νόμον in the sense of norma, dictamen, "a principle of action," and of our constitution, called the law in our members at v. 25.
 Thus the construction will be this: Εὐρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον, ὅτι ἐμοὶ τῷ θέλοντι ποιεῖν τὸ καλόν τὸ κακὸν παράκειται ἐμοὶ. q. d. I experience this to be the principle of my nature,—that when I would do good, evil is at hand and ready to beset me, bringing me into captivity to the law in my members." The repetition of ἐμοὶ is not pleonastic, but makes τῷ θέλοντι more pointed.
 It is not, however, necessary to suppose the τὸν put for τοῦτον, but (as I suggested in Rec. Syn., and, I find, had occurred to Bp. Middl.) the Article in its anticipative force will suffice; meaning the law or principle about to be described, as impelling him to evil, when he is endeavouring to practise good. There is yet one difficulty remaining, which, though left unnoticed by the Commentators, I cannot pass over sicco pede; namely, how to account for the Article τῷ, which nevertheless is found in, I believe, all the MSS.

 Now, according to the sense above expressed, it would seem to be, to say the least, useless. But as the Article, especially when used with a particle, is perhaps never such, we are rather warranted in supposing that the sense is here imperfectly developed. It will, I think, be found to be this: "To me who am desirous to do good."
 This is a stronger sense than the other, and more direct and suitable to the Apostle's argument; by which the most that can be asked is granted in argument, in order that the refutation may be complete and decisive.

22, 23. These verses illustrate the preceding sentiment; or, as Stuart observes, the sentiment is substantially the same as in v. 15—17; but the costume is different. Συνήδομαι is an expression similar to σύμφημι τῷ νόμῳ ὅτι καλὸς ἐστὶ at
 v. 16, but much stronger. Besides, as Grot. remarks, "to approve is the office of the under- standing; to delight in, that of the heart." By τῷ νόμῳ τ. Θε. is meant, as Koppe observes, any Divine law, or rule of life, as opposed to the law or principle just mentioned. On the τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρ., see Note supra ver. 17. The expression occurs in Plato and Philo. (indeed it had before been used by Pythagoras), and perhaps Philo borrowed it not so much from Plato, as from the Theology of his own countrymen; vestiges of which are found in Josephus and the Rabbinical writers.

"Ἐτερον νόμον," "another principle or impulse."
 It is sometimes called the νόμος ἐν σαρκί, opposed to which is the νόμος τοῦ νοός just after νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος at viii. 2. The following important passage of Plato (Phæd. p. 301.) as illustrative of the subject, has escaped all the Commentators: ἡμῶν ἐν ἐκάστῳ δύο τινὰ ἐστὶν ἰδεαὶ ἀρχοντε καὶ ἄγοντε, οἷν ἐπόμεθα, ἡ ἄν ἄγῃτον, ἡ μὲν ἐμφντος οὐσα ἐπιθυμία ἡδονῶν, ἄλλη δὲ ἐπικτήτος δόξα, ἐφιεμένη τοῦ ἀρίσ-
 του. The ἐν τοῖς μέλεσι has reference to sensuality as seated in the various organs of the body. In ἀντίστρατ. and αἰχμ. we have metaphors derived from military affairs; and the two terms well designate the conflict between reason and passion. So Aristan. cited by Schleusn.
 Lex. ἔρως ἀντιστρατεύειν τοῖς ὑπερηφανοῦσι
 φιλεῖ.

24. ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ θαν. τ.] A harsh τῷ Θεῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν!—Ἄρα οὖν αὐτὸς ἐγὼ τῷ μὲν νοῒ δουλεύω νόμῳ Θεοῦ, τῇ δὲ σαρκὶ νόμῳ ἁμαρτίας.

1 VIII. ΟΥΔΕΝ ἄρα νῦν κατάκριμα τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν, [ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα.]

and somewhat difficult expression, which is best explained by the Greek Commentators, and many eminent moderns, who take τοῦ θανάτου for θανατικοῦ, or θανατηφόρου, "which subjects us to this death," "this deadly evil,"—namely, this carnality and bondage to corruption, which leads to death temporal and spiritual.

25. εὐχαριστῶ, &c.] A brief and consequently obscure mode of expression, which would have been more plainly phrased thus: 'Ὁ Θεός, διὰ Ἰ. Χ., &c. ὡς εὐχαριστῶ. This clause (I agree with Crell. and Rosenm.) is from the Apostle in his own person; and is a parenthetical exclamation, or pious ejaculation, proceeding from sympathy for the wretched person just described. In the inference at the next verse the Apostle uses αὐτὸς ἐγὼ, "I, the same [person]," to denote a return to the μετασχηματισμός, or speaking in the person of another,—namely, of human nature, as the Greek Commentators saw. The latter part of this verse (which ought to have been made a separate verse) is well observed by Gratz. in the Preface to his Greek Testament, (Mogunt. 1827,) to be a resumption of what the Apostle had been saying about the frailty and corruption of human nature,—and is, in fact, a summary of what was said more at large supra vv. 17—25. Finally, "the grand deduction (observes Stuart) which the Apostle intends to draw from all this,—that we must be 'under grace,' in order to subdue our sinful passions and desires; in other words, that Christ must be our Sanctification as well as our Justification."

VIII. Having shown that all men, whether under the law of Moses, or of nature, so far from being justified, are convicted as sinners; and having thus evinced the inefficacy of the law to sanctification, from the want of that supernatural aid, which can alone enable us to overcome the inherent corruption of nature; finally, having at v. 25. pointed to the remedy provided in the Gospel of Christ, the Apostle now proceeds to develop and enforce the argument at vii. 14. for Christian sanctification, (founded on the superior efficaciousness of the means of grace afforded by the Gospel) and describes the nature and blessedness of this Gospel deliverance, by contrast with the misery of those who sought to justify themselves by their own righteousness, described in the latter part of the foregoing Chapter. (Young.) In the preceding Chapter (v. 7—25.), the Apostle has illustrated and enforced the proposition made in vii. 5., viz., that while in a carnal state, our sinful passions are not only exercised, but they are even rendered more vigorous or energetic, by reason of the restraints which the Divine law puts upon them; and consequently, that they bring forth fruit unto death. The present Chapter exhibits the reverse of all this [namely, the nature and blessedness of the deliverance by the Gospel]. It is a commentary on vii. 6., or at least an enlargement and illustration of the sentiment there exhibited. As v. 6, there is the antithesis of v. 5: so here, viii. 1—11. is the antithesis of viii. 7—25.

1. νῦν.] Prof. Stuart joins νῦν with ἄρα, and renders now then, i. e. now agreeably to this. But whether this method of joining νῦν with ἄρα, as if forming together a formula of inference, can well be admitted, I greatly doubt. Of this no example occurs to me either in the Scriptural or Classical writers. Perhaps he was thinking of ἀφ' οὗν, which is a frequent illative formula, found also in the O. T.; whereas ἄρα νῦν is, I repeat, found nowhere. Nay νῦν itself has never any illative force; while both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, it not unfrequently signifies (by an ellipsis) "as things now are," which is the sense here, q. d. now that they are delivered by the grace of God, through Christ. There is a reference to the salvation by grace implied in the first clause of the verse preceding. The inference in ἄρα may, with Stuart, be referred to vii. 4. 6. Τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. The best Commentators suppose that there is an ellip. of οὗσι; and that εἶναι ἐν Χριστῷ is a periphrasis, signifying, "to become Christians by baptism," being thus united with Christ. And they refer to 1 John ii. 5. iii. 6. v. 20. John xv. 7. The phraseology, however, of one writer is no rule for that of another, and those passages are not quite to the purpose. Indeed, the ellipsis will be unnecessary, if μὴ περιπατοῦσι be closely connected with τοῖς ἐν Χ. I., as is done by R. Steph., Matthæi, and the recent Bâle Editor, and the τοῖς supposed to belong to περιπατοῦσιν. This, too, is required by the sense; for μὴ περιπατ. signifies, "to those walking," i. e. if they do but walk: whereas τοῖς περιπ. as at v. 4., would be, "to those who walk," whereas the hypothetical, not the declarative, sense is here required.

— μὴ κατὰ σάρκα—πνεῦμα.] This clause is rejected by Mill, Semler, and most Critics, and is cancelled by Griesb., Koppe, Knapp, and others; but only on the authority of seven ancient MSS., three of the worst Versions, and some Fathers; and consequently without sufficient reason. Rinck in loc. has shown that the MSS. (all of the Western recension) which omit it, are of that class which often do omit what may be dispensed with, or might seem a repetition. And he gives several examples. The words, he testifies, are found in all the MSS. he has collated. Indeed they cannot well be dispensed with, for they seem to have reference to both what was said in the last verse of the preceding Chapter, and in the 2d verse of the present. Besides, the sense seems to require some limitation. These arguments, however, almost entirely apply to the words μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπ. The rest are probably (as Beng. pointed out) an addition from v. 4.; since for the evidence for the omission of these, there is all that is alleged for the omission of the whole clause, with the addition of two of the most ancient MSS., A. and D., countenanced by Cod. G., the Syr., Vulg., and Armenian Versions, together with Chrys. and several other of the Fathers. The reason for the addition is quite obvious; whereas for the omission none can be imagined.

2. ὁ γὰρ νόμος—θανάτου.] The νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος and the νόμος τῆς ἁμαρτίας have reference to the two principles of action, mentioned in the preceding Chapter, by which the carnally minded and the spiritually minded are respectively led. The former is so called, as being implanted by the Spirit, the Giver of life. With respect to ζωῆς, the best Commentators take it for ζωοποιούντος, abstract for concrete. But it should rather seem that the force of the Genit. in ζωῆς (life and happiness), and θανάτου (death and misery), denotes tendency. The assertion contained in this verse is confirmed in v. 3. 9. seq.

3. τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον, &c.] This is confirmative, and explanatory of what was said at v. 2.: "We are thus made free, because what the law," &c. The construction here is irregular; but not to be adjusted by taking τὸ ἀδύν., with some, as a Nominat. or Accusat. absolute. The ancient and early modern Interpreters (as also Koppe) rightly regard it as an anacoluthon, and supply ἐποίησε from the subject matter. The Genit. in νόμου has the force of a Dative, "what it was impossible for the law to do." By the law is meant chiefly the law of Moses; but also any law of works.

—ἡσθένει.] The sense is, "was [too] weak." An idiom found in the Classical as well as the Scriptural writers, and on which I have fully treated on Thucyd. At ἐν ὁμοιώματι sub. γενόμενον, which is expressed at Phil. ii. 7. Σαρκὸς ἁμ. is for σαρκὸς ἁμαρτωλῆς. Thus the full sense is, "in a body like that of man's," (implying all the infirmities of human nature), and only differing from it in being without sin. This is with reason accounted as an indirect proof of the two-fold nature of our Lord. Περὶ ἁμ. Koppe well explains "for the expiation of sin," i. e. as a sacrifice for sin. There is, however, no ellipsis of Ἰουδαίαν, as Bos imagined; but rather of προσφορά, "sin offering," as Koppe supposes. So Heb. x. 18. προσφορά περὶ ἁμαρτίας.

3. κατέκρινε τὴν ἁμ. ἐν τῇ σαρκί.] On the sense here, the Commentators are not agreed. Many explain it "punished sin in the flesh," i. e. the body of Christ. An interpretation somewhat confirmed by what goes before: but it is scarcely allowable to take τῇ σαρκί for τῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ σαρκί. It is better, with the ancient and several modern Commentators (as Grot., Bishop Bull, Schoettg., and Young), to interpret κατέκρινε "put it down (as the Classical writers use κατακρύπτειν), destroyed, suffered it not to reign over us." A sense of κατακρίνω rare, but found in 2 Pet. ii. 6. πόλεις—κατέκρινε. "This interpretation (observes Mr. Young) is confirmed by the evident relation which κατέκρινε in v. 3. has to κατακρίμα in v. 1. The condemnation is taken off from the sinner, and laid upon Sin; that Person, who was said vii. 13. to be exceeding sinful; and which, vii. 17., is represented as the real author of the sinner's evil deeds. Now (continues he), as death is properly and intimately connected with judicial condemnation (see v. 12. 16, 17.) Sin, which, as a Person, is condemned in the flesh, is rightly interpreted to be the same with sin killed in the flesh, or the reigning power of sin in the members destroyed." "This κατάκρισις is (as Stuart observes), effected by the sin-offering of Christ; who came to save his people from the power as well as the penalty of sin."

4. Τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου.] Several considerable Expositors, as Whitby and Koppe, explain this "the reward promised to the righteous," πληρωθῇ being taken for συμβαίνειν. But though this signification of δικαίωμα is very agreeable to what precedes, yet it requires such harshness in the explanation of the words following as cannot be tolerated. The true interpretation is, doubtless, that of most eminent modern Commentators. "the requisition of the law," "what the law requires;" πληρωθῇ denoting "might be fully accomplished."

5. οἱ γὰρ κατὰ σάρκα—φρονοῦσιν.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted. So Newc. "[And this righteousness cannot be fulfilled in any others] for," &c. Φρονεῖν τὰ τινος (sub. πράγματα) is a phrase occurring in the best writers, but in the sense "to take part with a person," not, as here, to heed, care for, set one's affections on a thing. I have, however, adduced one example from Aristot. Eth. x. 7. ἀνθρώπινα φρονεῖν. Grot. observes, that the word is here transferred from the intellect to the affections, (as in Matt. xvi. 23.); the notions of men being swayed by the affections. And those, it may be added, by their sensual appetites.

6. φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς.] The γὰρ is for δέ, autem. And φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς is equivalent to τὸ φρονεῖν τὰ τῆς σαρκὸς just before, i. e. the being devoted to the flesh by the medium of the animal propensities. Compare a kindred passage of Gal. v. 19. Θάνατος and ζωὴ are used, θάνατος· τὸ δὲ φρόνημα τοῦ πνεύματος ζωὴ καὶ εἰρήνη.

 7 Διότι τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς ἔχθρα εἰς Θεόν· τῷ γὰρ

 9 ἐν σαρκὶ ὄντες, Θεῷ ἀρέσαι οὐ δύνανται. ^c Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ^{c 1 Cor. 3. 16.}
 ἐστὲ ἐν σαρκὶ, ἀλλ' ἐν πνεύματι, εἴπερ πνεῦμα Θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ^d ἐν ὑμῖν. ^{d Gal. 4. 6. Phil. 1. 19.} εἰ δέ τις πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ οὐκ ἔχει, οὗτος οὐκ
 10 ἔστιν αὐτοῦ. εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρὸν ^{d Acts 2. 24. supra 6. 4, 5.}
 11 δι' ἁμαρτίαν, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ζωὴ διὰ δικαιοσύνην. ^d Εἰ δὲ ^{d 1 Cor. 6. 14. 2 Cor. 4. 14. Eph. 2. 5. Col. 2. 13.}
 τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἐγείραντος Ἰησοῦν ἐκ νεκρῶν οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, by metonymy, for what causes them. And the words are to be taken (as often before), partly in a natural, and partly in a figurative sense.

7. διότι] “quippe, since;” for the clause refers to the τὸ γὰρ φρόνημα—θανάτος in the preceding verse. On ἔχθρα see Tittm. de Syn. P. ii. p. 8.

—δύναται.] Repeat ὑποτάσσεται. The most enlightened Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that δύναται must be taken in a popular sense, as in the next verse, so as not to exclude the liberty of human action, or interfere with men's free will. See Bp. Bull's Apolog. pro Harm. p. 74., and Prof. Stuart, the latter of whom shows that we are not to resort to any metaphysical subtleties; what the natural and physiological powers of the sinner are, not being here the subject of discussion. This moral impossibility is no wonder; since the φρόνημα σαρκὸς is by its very nature directly opposed to the law of God; and as long as it continues such, must be so. “Thus how (it is beautifully observed by Augustin) can snow be warmed? for when it becomes warm, it is no longer snow. And so it is with the carnal mind.”

8. δέ.] “Now then,” or “so then.” For this is a conclusion from the argument at v. 4—7. They cannot please God (i. e. while they continue such), any more than rebellious subjects can please their prince.

Ἐν σαρκὶ is explained by Hamm., Locke, and others, ‘under the fleshly dispensation of the law.’ But the context here will not permit such a sense. It is plain that ἐν σαρκὶ εἶναι denotes ‘to be under the influence of the carnal principle.’ See Turner and Stuart.

9. Here the opposite character is brought forward, by way of contrast. The ὕμεις is emphatic; q. d. ‘Ye who are Christians.’

Εἴπερ is, by the earlier Commentators, explained si modo, if so be that. By the later ones in general, since. The former interpretation is confirmed by the early Versions, and the Greek Commentators; and as it seems more suitable to the context, merits the preference. See Mr. Young's paraphrase. Bp. Middleton has here an elaborate Note on the sense of πνεῦμα in the phrases πνεῦμα Θεοῦ and πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ, and the sense of Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν. After showing that there is not, as Michaelis fancied, any imitation of the Platonic philosophy, he subjoins the following able note: “I incline to the opinion that πνεῦμα Θεοῦ is not here to be understood of the Holy Ghost, and also that the three phrases are nearly of the same import; as is evident from the context.

The sense of πνεῦμα in this and in several other places will probably be best deduced from Luke ix. 55. οὐκ οἴδατε οὖν πνεύματός ἐστε, where it means indisputably spirit, mind, temper, or disposition: in like manner we meet with πνεῦμα δουλείας, πνεῦμα σοφίας, πνεῦμα πραότητος, &c. all common Hebraisms, in which the Genitive is to be construed as if it were the corresponding adjective agreeing with πνεῦμα. Two of the phrases in question appear to me to be of the same character, so that πνεῦμα Θεοῦ and πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ will signify a godly and a Christian frame of mind. So also 1 Cor. vii. 40. πνεῦμα Θεοῦ cannot be taken of the Holy Spirit in the personal sense, but must mean divine aid, or inspiration. The proposed interpretation exactly suits the context. ‘They who are carnal,’ says St. Paul, ‘cannot please God: ye, however, are not carnal, but spiritual, if, indeed, a godly spirit dwell in you: but if any one have not a Christian spirit, then he is not Christ's. If, however, Christ be in you, your body, it is true, shall die, in consequence of [the original] transgression [of Adam], but your soul shall live through the righteousness [of the Redeemer].’ I admit, however, that in v. 11. τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἐγείραντος Ἰησοῦν can be taken only of the Holy Spirit; for there the Hebraism has no place; and even τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, 1 Cor. iii. 16. may be interpreted in the same sense.”

10. εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς—δικαιοσύνην] If πνεῦμα here signify the spiritual part of man, as the antithesis almost demands (and this interpretation is confirmed by Theodoret) the view of the sense taken by Bp. Middl. above may be acceded to, though some may prefer to explain τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ζωὴ διὰ δικαιοσύνην, with Mr. Turner, ‘the soul is already alive to God and eternal things, because of that justification which the Gospel imparts.’ If, however, πνεῦμα signify the Holy Spirit, the sense will be what I have laid down in Recens. Synop. And this seems to be confirmed by the next verse. So Mr. Young (who considers the sentiment to be akin to that in Gal. v. 24.) taking the διὰ to mean “with respect to,” thus paraphrases: “And whether Christ be in you or no, by the inhabitation of his Holy Spirit, is a thing not difficult to be ascertained; for if Christ be in you, it will be seen by evident effects in your life and conversation; your carnal affections will die in you, and all things belonging to the Spirit will live and grow in you.”

11. See Bp. Middl. above, and John v. 21. and Note. Τὸ ἐνοικῶν αὐτοῦ πν. Instead of this the Edd. Princ., the textus receptus, and several MSS. and Fathers, have τοῦ ἐνοικῶν-

12—17. The inference from the foregoing reasoning is now drawn; introducing an earnest exhortation to live suitably to the above views of Christian obligation, and a representation of the happy consequences resulting from being spiritually united to Christ.

— ἄρα οὖν, &c.] These particles have here a conclusive force, "So then;" and the sentence contains (as Taylor observes) an inference from the reasoning which occurs in the two foregoing Chapters, and up to v. 11. of the present: pointing out (as Young observes) the infinite obligation we Christians are under to a life of holiness and purity; since no less depends on the fulfilment, or non-fulfilment, of that condition, than eternal life, or eternal death. Ὁφειλέτης εἶναι often signifies, "to be bound to perform service for any one." Here the sense is, "we are under a strong obligation," of which the Commentators adduce some examples from the Classical writers.

13. Πνεύματι] "by the influence of the Holy Spirit," called in the next verse the Spirit of God, as sent by Him. Bp. Middl., however, thinks it is here used in an adverbial sense, to mean spiritually, being opposed to the κατὰ σάρκα in the next verse. And he takes the πνεύματι Θεοῦ in the next verse to mean "little more." But I cannot agree with the learned Prelate; who, indeed, has no one of the Commentators to support him in this view. All of them, ancient and modern (even Crell. and Schlitting), are agreed, that it is to be understood of the Holy Spirit. It is plain that here, as occasionally elsewhere, the Bishop's Canon, of the Gr. Art., was a mote in his critical eye; for he seems to have thought it would otherwise be broken. Yet without reason; for (as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed), πνεῦμα here denotes not the Holy Spirit personally, but his influences and operations. Now, according to the Bishop's own Canon, p. 165., this sense always rejects the Article. So that had the Article been here employed, it would have been against his Canon.

— τὰς πράξεις τοῦ σώματος.] Τὰς πράξεις is, as the best Commentators are agreed, a metonymy for παθήματα, or τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, affections, which produce deeds. See Gal. v. 24. Thus, to "mortify the deeds of the body," is to "crucify the old man with his lusts," to forego those actions to which our carnal lusts incite us.

Of course ἀποθνήσκειν and ζῆν are used to denote respectively, the rewards and the punishments of a future state.

14. ὅσοι γὰρ, &c.] "In this (says Koppe) lies the force of the Apostle's proof, that they shall live." Namely (as Stuart explains), that as, being led by the Spirit of God, they show that they are children of God, and consequently will have a portion of the heavenly inheritance. The γὰρ, however, may only be illustrative of autem, and the passage be intended (as Chrys. and Theophyl. say) to show the reward of this mortifying the lusts of the flesh: q. d. they may (as Mr. Young explains) take to themselves the confirming testimony of the Holy Spirit himself. The sense of God's Fatherly love is shed abroad in their hearts; they are delivered from slavish fear, and are enabled to address God with filial confidence, as a reconciled Father. Ἀγεσθαι is often used of moral impulse; but this (as Est. observes), does not imply compulsion, but rather supposes that we have the power to resist the Holy Spirit. See Chrys. and Theophyl.

15. οὐ γὰρ ἐλάβετε πν. δουλ., &c.] This is confirmatory of what was said of the Spiritual adoption; and shows the nature thereof, in order to point out to Jews its high superiority over that of the Mosaic Law. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted: q. d. "[that ye are sons of God, is clear from your disposition] for ye have not received, ye do not bear," &c. The ancient, and some modern Commentators have wandered from the true sense by interpreting πνεῦμα the Holy Spirit; whereas, as the best Commentators are agreed, it signifies a spirit, or disposition. Δουλείας is for δουλικόν, by an idiom common to all languages. The best Commentators, rightly, refer the words to that servile spirit which pervaded the whole of the Mosaic Law; which dealt in threatening and punishments, and required continual expiations of sin, partly by severe penance as it were; consequently engendering in those subject to it the disposition of slaves, who abstain from offences not through love of their master, but "metu crucis et pendens habent." Εἰς φόβον, "so as to produce fear." Πάλιν, i. e. under a new Dispensation or Religion, as in the former one. Υἰοθεσία here should, perhaps, be rendered, not adoption, but sonship. Κράζομεν, "we cry out [unto God]." The first person is used to accommodate what is said to all Christians of all countries and ages. On Ἀββὰ see Note on Mark xiv. 36. The ὁ Πατήρ is thought by some to be Nominative for Vocative, Attice, as ὁ Θεός in Luke xviii. 13.; by others, to be a mere explanation of the Ἀββὰ; which is not very probable. And although (as Schoettg. observes) the Jews used, in common discourse, to conjoin Hebrew and Greek words, yet that principle will not apply here. It is better to suppose (with Tolet. and Doddr.) that the Apostle intended, by this union of Hebrew and Greek terms of invocation, to represent the adoption as common to both. And, indeed, from the other passage in which this form occurs, it would seem that Abba Pater! was then the form by which the Gentiles also commenced their prayers; (as the Jews simply with Abba) and perhaps formed the first words of the prayer pronounced by persons after having received baptism.

16. αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα.] Crell., Grot., and many of the recent Commentators, take this to mean "the very spirit" (i. e. the filial feeling) we have received from God by the Gospel." This, however, would require something different from αὐτὸ τὸ πνεῦμα; and for συμμ. we should have had ἐπιμ. There is no reason to abandon the ancient and common interpretation, "the Holy Spirit." As to the πνεῦμ. ἡμῶν, it denotes, as Bp. Middl. says, the spirit or mind of man, the internal conviction of the mind and conscience. Thus the sense is this: "The Holy Spirit, by His sanctifying influences on our heart, confirms the testimony of our mind and conscience, that we are children of God."

17. εἰ δὲ τέκνα, κ. κλ.] Here is an inference drawn from the foregoing premises, and consisting of several members rising by climax; q. d. "But if sons of God here, then undoubtedly Heirs hereafter: Heirs of glory and immortality." "Here, then, (observes Mr. Young,) the Apostle has attained the perfection of his argument; and shown that the Gospel of Christ is indeed, what he undertook to prove it, "the Power of God unto Salvation." For the condition of entering into eternal life, and receiving the promises, being a Sanctification of soul and body, according to the heavenly doctrine of our Lord Jesus; and the means of fulfilling this condition being ministered unto us abundantly under the Gospel, in the gifts of the Holy Spirit; it is manifest that all Christians, if it be not their own fault, "may have their fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

Κληρ. is used to denote that the possession is as certain, fixed, and unalienable as heritable property was among the Jews.

—εἴπερ συμμ., &c.] Many ancient and modern Commentators take the εἴπερ to mean siquidem; which sense may seem more suitable to what follows. But the common interpretation si modo, is more natural, and agreeable to the usage of the N. T. Render: "if we be ready to suffer with him," i. e. as he did.

"The Apostle (Taylor remarks) introduces the mention of suffering with address, and not until he had raised their thoughts to the highest object of joy and pleasure, the happiness and glory of a joint inheritance with the ever-blessed Son of God. Now this would greatly qualify the transitory afflictions of this world, and dispose them to attend to the other arguments which he had to offer." "Accordingly, bearing in mind the fiery trials of faith they would be exposed to, the Apostle (says Mr. Young) now fortifies their patience by several topics of consolation; and first, by the consideration of the greatness of the glory to be revealed in them at the resurrection of the just."

—ἵνα συνδοξ.] The ἵνα has, as Crell. remarks, the eventual sense.

18. λογίζομαι γὰρ, &c.] This has reference to the συμπάσχ. just before; q. d. "[Nor scruple at the sacrifice]; for the reward shall greatly exceed the toil." Λογίζομαι does not, it should seem, signify (as many Commentators imagine) "I form this conclusion;" but is for οἶμαι, except that it has a stronger sense. Ἀξια is, as Grot. explains, put for ἀντάξια. Ἀξιος properly signifies "what draws the balance." Here Bulkley aptly compares a similar sentiment of Plato de Repub. p. 336, that neither the happiness of good men, nor the sufferings of the wicked, are to be compared with that which awaits them both in another state. Ταῦτα—οὐδὲν ἐστι πληθεῖ οὐδὲ μεγέθει πρὸς ἐκείνα, ἃ τελευτήσαντα ἐκάτερον περιμένει.

19. ἡ γὰρ ἀποκαρδ. τῆς κτίσεως—ἀπεκδέχ.] There is perhaps no passage of the Apostle more difficult than the present, or on which the opinions of Commentators are more various. The sense depends much on the meaning assigned to κτίσις. On which, and the general import of the passage, there are three views which chiefly merit attention. 1. That of the ancient and many eminent modern Interpreters, (especially Luther, Grot., Capell, Danhauer, Doddr., Michael, Knappe, and Rosenm.), who take κτίσις to mean the whole visible creation, which, by a metonymic allegory or prosopopœia, (common both in the Scriptural and Classical writers,) is represented as doing what is applicable only to man, i. e. anxiously expecting and hoping, groaning and mourning over the prevalence of sin and misery, and looking with anxious expectation for some deliverance; namely, such a renovation as the Jews especially supposed would take place in the age of the Messiah. The above view of the passage is ably supported by Carpz.; though it has to some appeared, in its sublimity, unsuitable to the plain and didactic style of the Apostle. Accordingly, they propose other interpretations which may avoid this difficulty. Some (as Hamm., Le Clerc, Wets., Wahl, Noesselt, and Schless.) take κτίσις not of a physical, but moral creation, understanding by it the Christian Church, converted from Judaism, or Heathenism. This, however, is liable to insuperable objections, which are well stated by Ammon. The principal one is, that thus κτίσις would require to be accompanied by some adjunct. See Eph. iv. 24. 2 Cor. v. 17. Hence a third interpretation has been struck out (and adopted by some of the most eminent Commentators) which steers a middle course between the two former, and it may be thought in media tutissimus ibis.

By this, κτίσις is supposed to mean all intelligent and sentient creatures,—the whole creation capable of feeling the passions above adverted to; i. e. the human race, of whom the Gentiles formed the great bulk. This interpretation is ably supported by Whitby and Ammon. Yet there is no necessity to abandon the ancient and commonly received one, especially as it may include the last mentioned; for ἡ κτίσις and πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις may very well be rendered “the world,” “the whole world.” So Iaspsis says: “Fingit Paulus universum mundum, velut unam personam, cui sensum tribuit, ut in Psalmis perpetuó.” Hence both the tropical and the proper sense may have place in this sense; the latter, of course, being the principal one. As to the objection founded on the too great sublimity, that can by no means be allowed; and he must have studied the Apostle to little purpose, or must be utterly destitute of all taste, who sees not, that there is no kind of sublimity in writing to which the Apostle was not fully equal; nay, that he is just such a writer in whom we might expect the most daring as well as sublime imagery.

But to advert to the interpretation of some particular expressions,—ματαιότητι is best explained “weakness, corruption, and misery.” Ὑποτάξαντα is by some understood of Adam, by others, of Satan, by others, again, of God; which last view is preferable; especially since it includes the other two. On the construction of the next words Commentators are not agreed. Almost all think there should be a parenthesis; which some place at τῇ γὰρ ματαιότητι—ὑποτάξαντα, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι being thus connected with ἀποδέχεται. Others think it consists of οὐχ ἐκούσα—ὑποτάξαντα, merely connecting ἐπ' ἐλπίδι with ὑπετάγη. Others, again, are of opinion that there is no parenthesis, connecting ἐπ' ἐλπίδι with ὑποτάξαντα. Thus the ὅτι will signify because. The 1st method seems contrary to the laws of parenthesis; and the 3d yields a feeble and unsuitable sense. The 2d is preferable. But, in fact, the whole portion at vv. 20 & 21, is, in some measure, parenthetical; the γὰρ at v. 22. being resumptive, and v. 22. an epanalepsis of what was said at v. 19, which is then made to lead to another sentiment suspended on the ἡμεῖς included in οἶδαμεν. Thus the sense will be: “For the world (i. e. God's creatures) was made subject to imperfection, corruption, and misery (not by any will of its own; i. e. not as a punishment for any voluntary demerits of the sufferers; but by Him who thus subjected it), yet with a hope [on their part] that this very creation [i. e. these his creatures] will be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and admitted to the glorious liberty which pertains to the children of God.” Φθορᾶς may perhaps be meant to be taken both in a moral and a physical sense, to denote both liability to sin, and to disease and death: nay, some Commentators confine it to the latter. At v. 22. πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις signifies the whole world, (i. e. all sentient creatures) and συστενάζει and συνωδίνει constitute a metaphor taken from a woman in travail, to denote extreme agony and great anxiety for deliverance.

— ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν.] Though something had been already done for the deliverance of the heathens, yet it was comparatively little.

23. οὐ μόνον δὲ, &c.] On the force of the phrase οὐ μόνον δὲ, see Note supra v. 3. The sense is: “And not only have they (i. e. the world at large, almost entirely heathens) this feeling,—but even we Christians, &c.” for most of the best Commentators are agreed that by αὐτοὶ—ἔχοντες is meant all Christians to whom the Spirit had been given, as an earnest of their complete deliverance by the Spirit at their final νιοθεσία. Bp. Middl. accounts for νιοθ. being anarthrous, by its being in apposition with τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν. And he renders: “even we wait for a deliverance from death as our adoption.” But the natural construction rather requires us to suppose (with all other Commentators) that τὴν ἀπολ. is in apposition with νιοθεσίαν; by which I am not aware that any canon of the Article is broken. Render, “waiting for [our] adoption;” namely, “the deliverance of our body from mortality and corruption.” So Theophyl., p. 82, and Chrys. The general sense of the passage is thus expressed by Prof. Stuart in his Synopsis: “Now that such a glory is yet to be revealed; (in other words, that there is a world of surpassing glory beyond the grave) the whole condition of things, or rather of mankind, in the present world, abundantly proves. Here a frail and perishable nature serves to show, that no stable source of happiness can be found on earth. From the commencement of the world down to the present time, it has always been thus. In the midst of the sufferings and sorrows to which their earthly existence exposes them, mankind naturally look forward to another and better world, where happiness without alloy and without end may be enjoyed. Even Christians themselves, joyful as their hopes should make them, find themselves still compelled by sufferings and sorrows to sigh and groan, and to expect a state of real and permanent enjoyment only in heaven; so that they can only say, for the present, that they are saved, because they hope or expect salvation in another and better world. The very fact, that here they, like all others around them, are in a state of trial; and that they only hope for glory, shows that the present fruition of it is not to be expected."

24. τῇ γὰρ ἐλπίδι ἐσώθημεν.] The connection of this assertion with the preceding is much debated. See Recens. Synop. The most correct view seems to be that of Crell., Grot., and the most eminent Commentators down to Rosenm., Iaspis, and Stuart,—that ἐλπ. is to be taken emphatically, as if μόνον succeeded. The sense is, "We have as yet attained salvation only in hope," i. e. have attained only to a state in which a hope of it may be entertained. By ἐλπίς βλεπ. is meant hope that is realized in fruition by the attainment of its object. There is an allusion to sight as being the realization of faith. So 2 Cor. v. 7. διὰ πίστεως περιπατοῦμεν, οὐ διὰ εἰδούς. The next words contain a sentiment expressed populariter, of which the sense is, "But when the thing hoped for is actually possessed, how can it be said to be the object of hope, which must be at an end?"

25. εἰ δὲ ἀπεκδεχόμεθα.] This also seems expressed with popular laxity; and the best key to the sense is to consider the Presents ἐλπίζ. and ἀπεκδ. as used of what is to be done, thus: "But if we have to hope for what we see not, then should we with patience wait for it." The state of hope, to which we are confined, implying that we should wait with patience for the desired blessing. "And (to use the words of Mr. Young) as it is of the essence of Hope to exclude fruition, and always to look forward to something future; so ought it to be an inducement to us to wait with patience for the blessing which is yet at a distance."

It may be observed that ὑπομονή here denotes not only a patient waiting for the blessing hoped for, but a patient endurance of the trials and tribulations to be encountered in this state of probation; whereby that state of peace and blessedness will be both enhanced by contrast, and increased in intensity, "knowing that our labour shall never be in vain in the Lord."

26. ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα, &c.] Taylor renders "Agreeably to this [constitution of things] the Spirit helpeth," &c. But for this sense of ὡσαύτως there is no authority; any more than for that of moreover, which is assigned by others. Indeed there is no warrant for departing from the usual signification in like manner, in the same way. The only difficulty is to ascertain how it applies. That, however, has been satisfactorily done by Prof. Stuart, who lays down the sense as follows: "In like manner as hope supports, cheers, and renders us patient, so do the influences of the Spirit aid us in all our distresses." On the sense of Πνεῦμα, however, Commentators are not agreed. The ancient and most modern ones take it to mean the Holy Spirit; but many recent ones, animus et sensus Christianus, which, they say, is personified. This, however, is harsh in the extreme. The objection to the former interpretation, that the office of intercession with God belongs to our Saviour, not to the Holy Spirit, has no force; for the intercession here meant is of another kind; which has been well illustrated by Carpz. as follows: "The intercession of the Spirit differs from the intercession of Christ as well in respect of person as of office. For the Holy Spirit is of the ἄλλος Παράκλητος promised by Christ, John xiv. 16. The points of difference are these: 1. That the Holy Spirit is our Paraclete, by virtue of his abiding and dwelling in the heart (v. 37.); but Christ, by virtue of his office, as Advocate in Heaven. (Heb. ix. 24.) 2. That Christ intercedes with the Father formally, as God-man, Mediator, and our High Priest, by virtue of his own merit. (Heb. vii. 25.) But the Holy Spirit, sent by the Father and the Son to the faithful, intercedes effectively in the heart, as our Helper, by strengthening us from the efficacy of Christ's merits, and claiming it for us as our own by faith (2 Cor. iv. 12.); by impelling us to prayer, and suggesting to us how we ought to pray (Zach. xii. 10.); by exciting in our hearts aspirations, unutterable by the tongue, to our Heavenly Father (Rom. viii. 26.); finally, by himself praying, as it were, in us—for us, so that we by him cry Abba, Father!" See also Stuart, who, after an elaborate examination of the various senses, decides in favour of the Spirit of God or Christ (as supra vv. 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 13, 14, 23.) by which must here be meant the Holy Spirit, sent from the Father and the Son.

Συναντιλαμβάνεσθαι signifies literally "to lay hold of any weight to be carried, on the opposite side, and so helping a person to shoulder it." It of course implies our concurrence with this heavenly aid. Ἀσθενείαις denotes those infirmities and frailties of the flesh, which disinclose us to bear the trials of virtue, and indispose us even to discern our real good, or to form such prayers as may be acceptable to God; which particular is adverted to in the next words.

—ἀλλ' αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα—ἀλαλήτοις.] On these words much, but needless, difficulty has been raised. See Stuart. Now from the ἀλλ' (imo) it is plain, that something more is intended than what is contained in the preceding sentence. And as it is there said that the Spirit helpeth our weakness in prayer and otherwise; so here there is an illustration by example given of His help in prayer, namely, not only by exciting us to pray, and strengthening us in prayer, but suggesting to us what we should pray for, and how our prayers should be expressed. This influence of suggestion is in order to set the thing in the strongest point of view, by making, per μετάληψιν, the Holy Spirit utter what he only suggests. However, the words following, στεναγμοῖς ἀλαλ. must not, with Wets. and others, be referred to the Holy Spirit, but to the persons thus assisted in prayer; for the expression στεναγ. would be by no means suitable to the former, while it is highly so to the latter. Render, "by aspirations," i. e. by means of, by exciting aspirations.

27. This verse is variously interpreted; but the sense seems to be this; "He who searcheth the hearts (i. e. God, ὁ καρδιογνώστης) knoweth and approveth what is the mind or intent of the Spirit [thus suggested to the pious], for it is according to the will of God that he thus acts;" or, partly with Stuart, "The Searcher of hearts knows what the aspirations of his children, thus excited by the Spirit, mean; for the Spirit excites in them unutterable desires, in accordance with the will of God; and which he will accordingly grant."

28—39. "The Apostle goes on to assure those to whom he is writing that all things (i. e. the sufferings, and sorrows, and trials of the present life) will prove to be instruments, in the hand of a wise and powerful God and merciful Redeemer, for promoting the final and greatest happiness and glory of all true saints. The accomplishment of this end cannot fail. The purpose of God in respect to the saints can never be disappointed. Nothing can ever separate them from the care, and kindness, and affection of that Saviour who has redeemed them. The inference to be drawn from all this is, that Christians have no reason to despond or to be discouraged, while suffering the evils and trials of life. Their hopes and expectations should be elevated above the world, and be in accordance with the glorious inheritance that awaits them." (Stuart.)

—τοῖς ἀγαπῶσι τὸν Θεόν] i. e. not to all who are called (see Matt. xx. 16.), but to those only who love and obey him. Πάντα, all things, even adversity; this being a part of the Divine economy, in the great mystery of our redemption, to bring his sons to glory through sufferings. By ἀγαθόν is meant their good in the end, i. e. either here or hereafter. Even the heathens were convinced of this truth, as appears from the Classical citations adduced by Wets.; and the Rabbinical writings abound with similar sentiments.

The clause τοῖς κατὰ πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς is meant to expand the sense contained in ἀγαπῶσι. At κατὰ πρόθεσιν sub. Θεοῦ from the preceding Θεόν. Πρόθ. signifies firm purpose, or design, viz. as Young explains, "of gathering together in one all things in Christ, both Jews and Gentiles; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers together with the Jews of his promise in Christ by the Gospel. See Eph. i. 9—11. iii. 3, 5, 6, 11." Τοῖς κλητοῖς, "who are called," i. e. taken into covenant. See Note on i. 6.

29. προέγνω.] Many Commentators take this to mean "fore-approved, or loved." So Young explains, "those whom he regarded with especial favour, before the rest of mankind; the same with those whom he chose in Christ before the foundation of the world (Eph. i. 6.): i. e. all Christians, all of whatever nation, who should embrace the faith of Christ. And as under the Law the Jews were God's chosen and peculiar people, τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ ὃν προέγνω, as St. Paul styles them, xi. 2. his people whom he foreknew (comp. Amos iii. 2. and see Deut. vii. 6, 7, 8.): so, under the Gospel, Christians are God's chosen and peculiar people, οὗς προέγνω." There is, however, no authority for the above signification; and I see no reason to abandon the common interpretation, "those whom he foreknew would be such," i. e. lovers of God; especially as it includes the sense of the other interpretation. "For whom (says Mr. Holden) did He thus regard? clearly only those who love him, who obey the calling, and embrace the Gospel." See Mackn. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are mostly agreed that προέγνω is to be understood of prescience of character; and προώρισε, of determination founded on such prescience. Yet Prof. Stuart denies that there is any thing in the text to this purpose, or that which the Calvinistic Commentators propound, "out of his mere good pleasure." After a most elaborate discussion of the sense, as far as philology can determine it, he thinks it to be as follows: "All things must work together for good to Christians,—to such as are called to the privileges of a filial relation, and were chosen before the world began, to be conformed to the image of God, and to be advanced to a state of glory." Συμμόρφους τῆς εἰκ. τοῦ γενέσθαι is equivalent to συμμόρφ τῇ εἰκόνι τ. γενέσθαι. But here the Dative is rather required, as Phil. iii. 21; though the Genit. is sometimes so used. Εἰκ. is equivalent to τύπου, or ὁμοιώματος and συμμόρφ. is for ἰσομόρφους, which is best (because most simply) explained by Stuart of resemblance in a moral respect.

—εἰς τὸ εἶναι—ἀδελοῦς.] I have in Recens. Synop. proved that the sense is, "that he should be the principal, best beloved, and chief of the redeemed, his brethren, joint-inheritors of his glory." Koppe here cites a Rabbinical writer who uses the same term of the Messiah; and Philo, of the Logos. "However, our Lord is (as Chrys. observes) here termed πρωτότοκος, only by dispensation, since in his Godhead He is μονογενής."

30. οὓς δὲ προώρισε, &c.] The best Expositors are agreed that the sense is: "those whom He pre-ordained and determined to be conformed to the image of his Son;" i. e. (explains Young) "in his purpose and counsels of mercy, for the salvation of mankind, God's will and decree respecting all those who should embrace the faith of Christ was, that they should be conformed to the image of his Son. This predestination (continues he) is the Divine decree for carrying into effect the merciful purpose of saving mankind through his Son Jesus Christ."

Ἐκάλεσε, i. e. called by the preaching of the Gospel; namely, to have a conformity with Christ on earth, not only in his sufferings, but in his holiness, in order to attain conformity in his glory; or invited them to partake in the benefits of the Gospel, offering the terms of his covenant to those who conformed to its conditions by faith and holiness.

— ἐδικαίωσε.] Many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, explain this of "forgiveness of sins, and admission to a state of pardon and grace by baptism; which, if duly improved, will lead to glorification and final salvation." And they, in general, hold that there are, strictly speaking, two justifications, adoptions, and glorifications. While some of them suppose but one, the first being the commencement, the second the consummation of the thing. But for such a notion, especially as regards glorification, there is no warrant in Scripture. And of adoption, nothing is here said. It is plain that as ἐκάλεσε must mean such a calling as proceeds from the foreknowledge and the predetermination of God, in respect to the objects of it (and consequently cannot but be effectual), so ἐδικαίωσε must denote the result of it, in justification or pardon of sins both first and final (if, indeed, there be two justifications), and final glorification. See Prof. Stuart in his Note, and especially in his Excursus viii. It is a point on which Commentators are at issue, whether these Aorists should be taken as Futures, or as Presents. The latter is greatly preferable; but it will be better to take them of what is customary, apart from all particular times; a sense of the Aorist which is frequent in the Classical, and not without example in the Scriptural writers. Certainly this language is not meant (as many imagine) of the Roman Christians only, but of all Christians of every age; and was intended to represent generally the plan of salvation, and the various steps of it; and has therefore been well termed by Paræus the golden and indissoluble chain of salvation, "exhibiting (says Taylor) the order and connection of the purpose of God concerning our salvation," and which is ably traced by Carpoz thus: "In vv. 28 & 29 are mentioned the Divine benefits before the creation of the world, i. e. from eternity. 1. The πρόθεσις, or determinate purpose of granting felicity to those who should believe in Christ to the end of life. 2. The πρόγνωσις, the prescience of God (conjoined with his love), by which he foreknew all and each who would believe in Christ. 3. The προωρισμός, the determination and decree of conferring eternal happiness on all and each of them. At ver. 30 are enumerated the Divine benefits granted ἐν καιρῷ, in tempore, in this life. 1. Ἡ κλήσις, calling to faith, or an offering of grace, which here comprehends actual conversion and regeneration; since God illumines the intellect of man by the Holy Ghost, sways the will, and confers faith on those who do not perversely reject his offer. 2. Δικαίωσις, justification, by which is meant the being declared just by God, and absolved from guilt and punishment. 3. Δόξα, glorification, which takes its commencement in renovation and sanctification, and is perfected in life eternal.

31. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν π. τ.] "The Apostle now concludes with a triumphant expression of his full assurance of the happy result of their present trials (see v. 31—39.) For God having given such a stupendous proof of his purpose of love towards them, as to give his own Son to suffer in their stead; it is impossible to think that any thing shall ever wrest them out of his hands: but he will support them under all afflictions. defend them against all enemies; and having begun a good work in them, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." (Young.)

The best Commentators are agreed that τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν is a form of speaking signifying, "What inference, then, shall be drawn from what has been said?"

— εἰ.] Many recent Commentators render "since." But the sense seems to be, "if [as is the case]." In this use, Hoogeveen says, it implies an affirmation; referring to Homer II. φ. 216. The interrogation implies the negation, i. e. none. And by καὶ ἡμῶν scil. ἔσται, is meant shall venture to oppose, or shall successfully oppose; that being implied.

32. ὅς γε—οὐκ ἐφείσατο.] The γε here is very significant, and may be rendered especially. The τοῦ ἰδίου is emphatic, in opposition to ἑαυτοῦ, q. d. his own, not an adopted Son. This strengthens the inference. In οὐκ ἐφείσατο there is much elegance, such as we find in the Classical writers (see Wets.), and probably there is a reference to Gen. xxii. 12.

ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν does not (as the heterodox Interpreters make it) signify "for our benefit," but (as Koppe acknowledges) in our stead, and for the expiation of our sins. On the vicarious nature of Christ's sufferings (which Schoettg. ably shows is here inculcated), see Abp. Magee on the Atonement, Vol. i. App. No. xlii., also No. xxx. In πῶς οὐχί, implying a strong affirmation, there is great spirit. See Note on Matt. xvi. 11. By τὰ πάντα must be meant all afflictions which may be for our real good, and agreeable to His own wise counsels.

33. τίς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ ἐκλ. Θ.] It has been debated who are meant by the accuser and the condemner. The ancient and earlier modern Commentators understand the Jews; the later Commentators, the Gentiles. It should seem that neither opinion ought to be held to the exclusion of the other, but that both may be admitted. The accusers might be both Jews and Gentiles, though on different grounds. The interrogation implies a strong negation, i. e. οὐδεὶς.

On the punctuation of this verse there is some difference of opinion. Many of the most eminent Editors and Commentators place notes of interrogation at δικαίων, ἀποθανόν, ἐγερθεὶς, Θεοῦ, and ἡμῶν, q. d. "Who will lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? will God who justifies them do it?" This, they think, is more spirited and in the Apostle's manner. But the common punctuation (which is supported by almost all ancient and most modern Commentators), though it may have less of rhetorical δεινότης, has more of Apostolical gravity; nay, (as has been proved by Taylor, Rinck, and Ammon,) yields a better sense; namely, "Since God justifieth us, what matters who accuses or condemns us?" In ὁ Θεὸς δικαίων, &c. Grot. thinks there is an allusion to Job xxxiv. 29. Ἐγκαλέσει is for ἔγκλημα ἔξει; of which Wets. adduces an example from the Schol. on Thucyd. i. 26. Μᾶλλον δὲ ἐγερθεὶς is added for their consolation under present afflictions. On δικαίων see Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap., p. 3.

34. ἐντυγχάνει ὁ. ἡ.] "is continually acting as our Mediator and Intercessor." See Hebr. vii. 25. Examples of this sense are adduced by Dr. Burton from Philo.

35. τῆς ἀγάπης τ. Χρ.] This may mean either the love Christ bears to us, or the love we bear to him. Recent Commentators generally prefer the latter interpretation; but the former, which is supported by the antients and most moderns, is far more agreeable to the context.

—Θλίψις, ἢ στενοχωρ., &c.] Of these terms Θλίψις and διωγμός are modifications of misery arising from persecution. The last is by far the stronger term; and perhaps the two which precede it represent, as it were, passive, indirect, and private persecution; διωγμός, active and public persecution. The three next terms seem, in a manner, exemplifications of the former; λιμός and γυμνότης, which denote want of the necessities of life, referring to στενοχωρία and Θλίψις; and μάχαιρα, which denotes violent death, to διωγμός.

36. καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] q. d. even though the words of Scripture (describing the fate of God's servants of old) should become applicable to us. Θανατούμεθα signifies "we are being killed;" i. e. some are continually killed, and others daily expecting death. Πρόβατα σφαγῆς (answering to the Heb. כְּבָשִׂים נֶחֱמָסִים) literally signifies sheep of the slaughter, slaughter-sheep, sheep put aside and destined for death. This use of the Genit. denoting destination is illustrated by Rosenm. from Ps. cii. 20. נַחֲמָסִים בְּנֵי, sons destined for death; i. e. those condemned to death.

37. ὑπερνικῶμεν] "we are triumphantly victorious." Of this signification of ὑπερνικᾶν, examples are adduced by Wets. and Koppe. The sense is, "fortified by Divine assistance, we have even more strength than is necessary for us to overcome all obstacles." See the Note of Taylor.

38, 39. Here we have the same sentiment, but in other words, both more copiously enlarged on, and more pathetically expressed; being explained per merismum, i. e. by a mention of the various parts of the universe in which any power to sway the minds of men may be imagined to exist. We are not, therefore, too anxiously to press upon each single term, but to regard the words as an enumeration of the parts of the universe. (Koppe). It should seem, however, that the most powerful things and persons are mentioned first: 1. No thing—no fear of death, no hope of life. 2. No Being, however powerful, no not even angels, or principalities, or powers. Angels are simply mentioned, as being the most powerful of God's creatures; and thus it is needless to refine upon the manner of the thing, or debate how angels can be supposed to derogate from man's faith and virtue. Ἀρχαί and δυνάμεις may denote, as some imagine, other orders of angels. See Eph. vi. 12.

Col. ii. 15. But it is more probable that they denote (as Wets. thinks) human powers, ἀρχαὶ signifying the principal, and δυνάμεις the inferior ones. Οὔτε θάνατος οὔτε ζωὴ is explained by most recent Commentators “nothing whatever.” But there is more significance and truth in the interpretation of Grotius, (adopted and illustrated with examples by Wets.), “no fear of death, nor hope of life.” Hence is confirmed the exposition offered by Grot. and Kypke of the next words, οὔτε ἐνεστ. οὔτε μέλλοντα, “neither present nor future evils.” So also the words following οὔτε ὑψίωμα οὔτε βάθος probably mean (what the usus loquendi permits) “neither the height of prosperity nor the depth of adversity.” See Koppe.

Κτίσις may be taken, with Grot. and Koppe, for χοῦμα, or πρᾶγμα, res, whatever exists in rerum naturā, not only all substances, but whatever can be imagined. “This is indeed (as Stuart observes) an anchor sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil; a blessed, cheering, glorious hope, which only the Gospel and atoning blood can inspire.”

IX. With the eighth Chapter concludes what may be called the doctrinal part of the Epistle: the following Chapters being employed,—1. in anticipating and removing such objections as might be made; 2. in giving practical admonitions. Now commences the third part of the Epistle, comprehending Chaps. ix., x., and xi., of the contents of which Schoettgen presents an analysis:—“To remove the scruples of the Jews, (whether Christians or not) 1. we have a præ-occupatio; which was necessary, that it might not be thought that, having abandoned their religion, he had spoken against them from a hostile feeling (ix. 1—3, repeated in x. 1, 2.) 2. He shows that God had alone, of his good pleasure, chosen Jacob, rather than Esau; and that therefore the Israelites had not by nature any superiority (ix. 4—23.) 3. That the Jews must submit to the Divine dispensation; otherwise, though they are the people of God, they will not be saved (x. 3—15.) 4. That they had always been disobedient (v. 16—21.) 5. Therefore God justly rejected them; though he reserved to himself some (xi. 1—32.) 6. Whereupon the Apostle utters an exclamation of wonder, and praises God in his works (v. 33—36.) In Chap. xi. 11—24. is introduced an admonition to the Gentile converts, not to suffer their reception into the Divine favour to puff them up, and lead them to neglect the will of God.” The scope of the Apostle in the present Chapter, is, as Stuart truly observes, to support, illustrate, and defend against objections the positions which have been laid down in the foregoing Chapters. 1. He shows that, though the predestinated, called, justified, and glorified, are both of Jews and Gentiles; yet that that involves no breach of the promises made to Abraham and his seed; for the natural seed, as such, are not the specific objects of the promise. 2. That God hath always chosen the objects of his favour where he pleased, without regard to external privileges, advantages, or relations. Accordingly, examples of God’s sovereignty are adduced of various kinds, some having respect to temporal advantages or disadvantages; and some both spiritual and temporal. Thus the eighth Chapter is the key to the ninth, where the Apostle shows that God, in calling, justifying, and glorifying, does only what he has a perfect right to do; which is analogous to the examples of his dealings in the Jewish Scriptures, and accords with the doctrines and predictions which they contain. So Stuart, in whose note may be seen more to the same effect.

1. ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χρ.] The best Commentators are agreed that this is a form of solemn protestation, partaking of the nature of an oath, similar to that at 2 Cor. i. 23. xi. 10. Eph. iv. 17. 1 Tim. v. 21. The full sense of the words is: ‘I protest by Christ that I speak truth. I take the Holy Spirit, who knoweth my heart (see Acts v. 23.), to witness that I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness, that,’ &c.

2. λύπη—καρδία] i. e. ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου, (which is mentioned just after) i. e. ‘for them and their lost estate.’

3. ἡυχόμεν γὰρ αὐτούς, &c.] The sense in this disputed passage turns on the words ἡυχόμεν and ἀνάθεμα, which each requires to be carefully discussed. In considering the former, it is of importance to attend to an idiom connected with it, which was first noticed by Photius, and has since been recognized by Grot., Wolf, and most judicious Commentators; though not admitted by many of the early modern Interpreters; namely, that there is here the Imperfect for the Optative with ἂν; as in Acts xxv. 22.; and which is to be found in almost all the Greek writers, from whom I have, in Recens. Synop., adduced many examples which had occurred in my own reading. It should seem, then, that “the Apostle (as Photius observes) does not say εὐχομαι, but ἡυχόμεν (for ἡυχόμεν ἂν), meaning, ‘I could ardently, earnestly, wish, i. e. if it were possible and permitted me, if I had my choice.’ Thus far all is clear.” But it is not easy to determine the sense of the words which state the nature and object of this wish; namely, ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. All the ancient and early modern Commentators (and also Benson and Koppe) suppose them to denote the being accursed, and therefore separated from the society of Christians, and consequently excluded from the benefits of salvation. The propriety of this sense is ably maintained by Whitby and Wolf. The expression, it may also be observed, is strongly hyperbolic, and akin to that in Gal. iv. 15. All the other interpretations which have been devised, to avoid what some have thought a considerable harshness, I have, in Rec. Syn., shown to be liable to insuperable objections, either on the score of phraseology, or of sense. As to ἀνάθεμα, it corresponds to the Heb. כרת, which signifies to cut off; and figuratively, to separate from, or destroy. Thus ἀναθεματίζειν is by the Sept. used in both these senses. The former, however, was the more ancient acceptation; the other may be supposed to have arisen much later, when it became necessary to resort to ecclesiastical censures, in order to support the declining influence of the Jewish Hierarchy. Thus ἀνάθεμα and its derivatives came to be used for excommunication; and no wonder, since the persons so anathematized were supposed to be devoted to the wrath of God, and his heaviest punishments. Thus the expression ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χ. seems (by allusion to the Jewish excommunication) to mean 'being an outcast from Christ, and excluded from the benefits of his religion.' The sense, then, meant to be expressed by the Apostle seems to be as follows: 'I am ready to make any possible sacrifice, however great, that may be lawful, in order to prevent the rejection of my brethren and countrymen, and to accomplish their deliverance.' Or, with Stuart, thus: 'Such is my affection for my Jewish brethren, that could I put myself in their stead, and take on me the consequences of unbelief to which they are exposed, I would willingly do it, in order that they might be saved.' In αὐτοὺς ἐγὼ there is a strong emphasis, i. e. even I whom you suppose to be so ill affected to you.

4. The Apostle proceeds to speak honourably of his countrymen, enumerating their privileges; he does this to show his good will to them, and to awaken their solicitude not to lose that Divine favour, by which they had been so long distinguished; hinting, too, that God wished them to be saved, by vouchsafing to them the adoption and glory, &c.

—ὧν ἡ υἰοθ.] "By this (says Bowyer) is meant the privilege of being the children of God; and consequently a right to the inheritance of the children of God. Now this privilege the Israelites derived from their progenitor Seth, whose descendants 'called themselves by the name of the Lord,' Gen. iv. 26. i. e. the children of God; and they are expressly so termed, Gen. vi. 2. This privilege was renewed to Shem, the ancestor of the Israelites, after the flood, Gen. ix. 26. This adoption was further confirmed to Abraham, Gen. xv. 12–21., and to his natural offspring in the fourth generation, when they were to be put into possession of the earthly Canaan; on which account God calls Israel his son, and his first-born, Exod. iv. 22, 23. Deut. xiv. 1. But more especially when this earthly Canaan was considered as a pledge of the adoption to the everlasting possession of the heavenly Canaan, to which God had adopted Abraham, Gen. xviii. 18."

—καὶ ἡ δόξα] Some Commentators take this to mean the glory of the adoption. That, however, would require the addition of αὐτῆς, which would be but an insipid additament. Others suppose it to mean the glory accruing to them from the miracles wrought by God, and the honour of the Divine presence. This, however, is far-fetched. Something more particular seems meant; namely, either (as Beza, Pisc., Tol., Grot., Hamm., and others think) the ark of the covenant, (see 1 Sam. iv. 21. Ps. lxxviii. 61.) or (as Est., Camer., Vitringa, Locke, Schoettg., Carpz., and Bowyer understand) the Schechinah, or symbol of God's glorious presence, which resided in Seth's family till the flood, and afterwards appeared occasionally to Moses, Joshua, Samuel, and others, —until finally it dwelt among the children of Israel from the erection of the Tabernacle to the destruction of the Temple, taking up its abode over the ark of the covenant, and called by the Septuagint δόξα Κυρίου.

—αἱ διαθήκαι] The plural must not, as some say, be regarded as put for the singular, per enallagen, Atticè; nor are we to suppose the covenant split into two parts, the legal and the typical; but, with De Dieu, Schoettg., Wets., and Koppe, we must suppose that the Apostle uses the plural to favour the complacency of the Jews, by accommodating himself to their mode of speaking; who, as we find from the Rabbinical writings, used to consider every renewal of the original covenant (for there was, in fact, but one from Adam to Christ), as those with Noah, Abraham, Isaac, &c., in the light of a new covenant.

—ἡ νομοθεσία] namely, 'the giving of the law,' i. e. the law given from Mount Sinai.

—ἡ λατρεία] ἡ νομικὴ ἱερουργία, the Levitical service or worship mentioned in Exod. xii. 26., and forming a part of the νομοθεσία.

—αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι] This refers to the various divine promises; both those delivered by Moses, and those, after his time, confirmed and repeated by the Prophets, respecting the possession of Palestine; and especially of the Messiah, who should appear and proceed from their nation.

5. ὧν οἱ πατέρες] The sense is 'whose ancestors are the Patriarchs,' i. e. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, together with some celebrated personages of the early history of the Israelites.

—ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς—αἰῶνας] In interpreting a passage, on the sense of which there has been much controversy, even among orthodox expositors, it is proper to proceed with great caution. One thing is plain, even from the presence of the καὶ, that ὧν must be referred not to πατέρες, (with some) but to Ἰσραηλῖται and that ἐστὶ must be supplied from the preceding εἰσι, and be taken in a popular sense for 'is, or was to be, born.' With this is closely connected the τὸ κατὰ σάρκα (by ellipsis, for κατὰ τὸ κατὰ σάρκα μέρος) which words are emphatical, and allude to the other, or Divine nature of Christ; a doctrine agreeable to what the Jews themselves expected from the Messiah; all of whom knew that he would be man, and the more enlightened maintained that he would also be God. See the passages from the Rabbinical writers cited by Schoettg., Wets., and Koppe.

But to proceed to the next clause ὁ ὧν ἐπὶ—

ἀιών. ^b Οὐχ οἶον δὲ ὅτι ἐκπέπτωκεν ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ. ^b Num. 23. 19. John 8. 23. supra 2. 28. & 3. 3. Heb. 11. 18. τοῦ γὰρ πάντες οἱ ἐξ Ἰσραὴλ, οὗτοι Ἰσραὴλ. ⁱ Οὐδ' ὅτι

αἰώνας, the words attest so strongly the Deity of Jesus Christ, that it is no wonder every endeavour should have been made, on the part of those who deny it, to evade so irrefragable an evidence. These attempts have been made in various ways, 1. by cancelling Θεός; 2. by interpreting it in a lower sense, as put for Κύριος; 3. by altering the present reading on conjecture, substituting ὦν ὁ for ὁ ὦν; 4. by altering the punctuation, so as to make the words be predicated of the Father, thus forming a doxology; viz. either by placing a comma after σάρκα, (in the sense 'May God, who is over all, be blessed for ever!') or by placing it after πάντων, in the sense, 'God be blessed for ever!' Now as to the cancelling the Θεός, few even of the Socinian Critics venture upon so desperate a method. I say desperate; for, notwithstanding the ill-judged and uncalled for admissions of Schoettg., Clarke, and others, the truth is, that no portion of Scripture contains better evidence for its genuineness, it being found in all the MSS. hitherto collated, in all the ancient Versions, and all the Fathers, with a few slight exceptions. See Middl. In fact, the Socinians have seen the impregnable authority of the word, and have therefore generally assailed the passage in the three other modes; but with as little success. For, 1. as to taking Θεός for Κύριος, that has been completely demolished by the powerful arm of Bp. Middl. And, 2dly, as to the alteration on conjecture of ὁ ὦν into ὦν ὁ, it is totally unsupported by MS. authority, inasmuch that Mr. Belsham himself grants that it cannot be admitted. Indeed, (as Bp. Middl. and others have shown,) even if admitted, it "would introduce an argument improbable, and Greek impossible." As to the attempt made to evade the plain sense of the words by converting them, with change of punctuation, into a doxology, that has even less to be urged in its defence, and, in both its forms, is annihilated by Bp. Middl.; who has shown that doxology would here be out of place, and that, if it were admitted, the passage would require to be worded very differently. And it is in vain for the Socinians to urge "the irregularity of the Apostle's style," since, however irregular, he is a law unto himself. Besides, as Koppe well observes, this principle is not to be called in rashly and unnecessarily, otherwise every thing of certainty in interpretation will be destroyed. Indeed, so objectionable is this mode, that even Socinus, Crellius, and Schliting themselves reject it. That the context requires the common interpretation, and that no objection will lie from εὐλογητός εἰς τοὺς αἰώνας being elsewhere applied to the Father, but rather that it is a confirmation of the Deity of Christ, is proved by Mr. Slade. Here it may be proper to notice a difficulty powerfully urged by Wets. and Koppe, namely, "why so few of the Fathers ever employed the passage in proof of the Divinity of Christ." Now were that really the case,—it might be sufficient to say, that the Fathers were cautious of citing a passage which was capable of perversion, and, by its sense being pushed too far, of being made to support a dangerous heresy. But, in fact, we need not resort to this argument; for

Dr. Burton, in his Testimonies of the Ante-Nicene Fathers, has satisfactorily established the fact, that the passage is expressly quoted as asserting the divinity of Christ by Irenæus, Tertullian, Hippolytus, Cyprian, Athanasius, &c.; and that there is no reason to suppose that any persons ever proposed a different interpretation, till after the Socinian controversy began.

It must, however, be confessed, that even of those Commentators who refer the words to Christ, all are not agreed on their exact sense. Many modern Expositors (even Stuart) think that ὁ ὦν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεός is equivalent to ὁ ὦν ὁ μέγιστος Θεός, "who is the Supreme God," thus making God the Son supreme over God the Father: a doctrine not only not found in Scripture, but contradictory to what is there found (see 1 Cor. viii. 6. xv. 27. sq. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Phil. ii. 9.): a doctrine, too, against which both the ancient and the most eminent modern Theologians alike contend. See Bp. Bull's Defens. Fid. Nic. § 4. That, therefore, cannot be the sense of the passage: to exclude which, some eminent Critics (as Erasmus, Grot., Schoettg., and Whitby) have been led to somewhat countenance the Socinian methods of reading and expounding above adverted to. Others (and among them the Authors of our Common Version), with far more judgment, place a comma after πάντων, taking ὁ ὦν ἐπὶ πάντων to signify "who is Lord over all," as in John iii. 3. ὁ ἄνωθεν ἐρχόμενος ἐπάνω πάντων ἐστί. Eph. i. 22. sq. Phil. ii. 9. Matt. xx. 18. Thus the sense of the passage will be: "And of whom, as concerning the flesh (i. e. in his human nature) Christ is descended; who is [in that capacity] Lord over all [created beings]; being indeed God, blessed for ever." For this punctuation, however, there is no confirmation in ancient authority, and still less any support from the usus loquendi. Nor is there any occasion to change the common punctuation, if we only take care to keep out the objectionable interpretation just adverted to: which may very well be done; for the epithet supreme over all, as given to God the Son, will not imply any superiority over God the Father, but only be understood of all created beings. And thus the real sense of the passage will only (as Bp. Pearson says) testify the equality, or rather the identity of Christ's Deity with that of the Father; and still continue (as Doddridge says) "a proof of Christ's proper Deity, which all the opposers of that doctrine have never been, nor ever will be able to answer."

6. οὐχ οἶον δὲ—Θεοῦ.] The sense is, "I do not say this as though I would insinuate that the word of God (i. e. the Divine promises) had failed of its effect. So far from that, it is rather confirmed. The rejection of the Jews is agreeable to God's former dealings with them; for all the descendants of Israel are not of the true Israelites, to whom the promises were made, God having limited them first to Isaac, vv. 7—9, and then to Isaac's son Jacob, vv. 10—13, rejecting all the other children. Therefore he now acts in the same manner by rejecting the unbelieving Jews, and accepting those who, by believing, are the true spiritual Israelites." In ἐκπέπτωκεν

there is a metaphor taken from archery. So Thucydides viii. 81. καὶ ἵνα τῶν ὑπαρχουσῶν ἐλπίδων ἐκπίπτειν. The οὐ γὰρ is for ἀλλ' οὐ.

7. οὐδ' ὅτι εἰσι, &c.] What now follows, up to v. 13, illustrates the sentiment,—that the being endued with benefits from God does not depend upon birth and descent. To this purpose the Apostle adduces examples, to which the pride of the Jews (who boasted of their descent from Abraham) could oppose nothing; namely, as being drawn, 1. from the posterity of Abraham himself,—not all of whose descendants, but only the offspring of Isaac, experienced the particular favour of the Lord, to the neglect, in some degree, of the Israelites, the descendants of Keturah; 2. from Isaac, of whose children, not Esau, but Jacob, was, by the Divine dispensation, the destined progenitor and founder of that nation hereafter to be so much favoured. (Koppe.)

7. ἀλλ' ἐν Ἰ. κληθ. σοι σπέρμα.] Here we have a popular ellipsis, to be supplied as follows: “for thus was it said, these were the words.” The sense is, “In Isaac shall thy seed be called;” or, in other words, “It is in and by Isaac that thy seed shall be named, and obtain celebrity.” The Apostle (observes Taylor) here and afterwards does not give the whole of the texts, but only a hint, by a way of reference; which to the Jews, who were well conversant in Scripture, would be enough.”

8. Here it is shown, that whatever difference might exist between Isaac and Ishmael, that was to be ascribed solely to the good pleasure and gracious promise of God. Τέκνα τῆς ἐπ., for τέκνα ἐπηγγελμένα. The sense is, “those sons to whom pertain the felicity mercifully promised to Abraham.” Λογίζεται εἰς is for νομίζεται εἶναι. See the Note of Mackn.

9. ἐπαγγελίας γὰρ ὁ λόγος οὗτος.] Here we have the same sentiment confirmed from Scripture. The passage alluded to is Gen. xviii. 20, which agrees in sense, though not quite in words, with the Hebrew and the Sept. A typical sense is intended, on which see Chrys.

10. οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ, &c.] The Apostle now goes on to show, that not only did God make a distinction, κατὰ πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ, among the natural descendants of Abraham, but that even among the descendants of him who was “the Son of promise,” he made a like distinction; and that, too, in a case where the respective merit of the parties could not be the ground of distinction. Nay, that this reception was determined on before the children were born; and consequently before they could have had any merit or demerit. But if

God, κατ' ἐκλογὴν, makes such distinction among the legitimate children of the “Son of promise,” then the same God may choose, justify, and glorify those who are κλητοὶ in respect to the heavenly inheritance. If it is not unjust, in the one case, to distribute favours κατὰ πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ, then it is not in the other. (Stuart.) It is well remarked by Mr. Slade, that “the Apostle may be supposed to adduce this case, merely from its being yet stronger than the other. In the case of Isaac and Ishmael, there were two mothers; but Rebecca had only one husband, and her children were twins.” The construction here is irregular, and falls under the head of anacoluthon, by which a sentence is commenced in one syntax, and is afterwards changed into another, the sentence being not finished as it was begun. Thus the proper construction would be: Οὐ μόνον δέ [τοῦτο] ἀλλὰ καὶ Ῥεβέκκα, ἐξ ἐνὸς κοίτην ἔχουσα ἐρρήθη—ὅτι, &c. Κοίτην ἔχουσα is, per metalepsin, for συλλαβούσα, “having conceived.”

11. μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων—κακόν.] Taken from Gen. xxv. 23, the words μηδὲ πραξάντων—κακόν being added, to show the Jews that Esau lost the honour of being the root of the people of God, on account of his profanity in despising that honour (Heb. xii. 16.); and thus all notion of individual merit in either, as to obtaining the Divine benefits, might be removed, and all occasion for objection on the part of the Jews cut off. (Koppe & Mackn.) The Apostle does not mean (as those of the Calvinistic persuasion imagine), that there is destined to all men individually a state either of eternal happiness or eternal misery, not according to the merits of each, but according to a Divine decree, or on account of the imputation of Adam's sin. For, 1. the subject treated of is concerning the rejection of the Jews, and the election, in their place, of the Gentiles, who embraced the doctrine of Christ. Therefore the Apostle is not speaking of the whole human race. 2. If St. Paul had held the opinion of a decree firm, fated, and absolute, so as to be affected by nothing that men ever should do, or ever had done, he could not have felt an anxious wish that it might be changed, and that the event might turn out otherwise; as he does in v. 3. Of this decree the result was the servitude of Esau's posterity, v. 12. So that there is no reference to the state of men in another life; for there servitude can have no place. 4. The Apostle is speaking, not of individuals, but of the Church, or a congregated body of men, vv. 24, 25. 5. He speaks of the patience and long-suffering of God, v. 22; all idea of which is done away, if he leaves nothing to men, but does every thing himself. 6. He speaks at vv. 28, 30, 31, of the justice of the Judge, in assigning rewards and punishments; which cannot have place, if no regard is had to what those whom he will judge either have done, or have not done. (Wets.) It is plain from Gen. xxv. 23, "two nations are in thy womb," that Jacob and Esau are not spoken of as individuals, but as representing the two nations springing from them; and that the election of which the Apostle speaks is not an election of Jacob to eternal life, but of his posterity to be the visible church and people of God on earth, and heirs of the promises, in their first and literal meaning. Deut. vii. 6, 7. Acts xiii. 17. That this is the election here spoken of, appears from the following circumstances. 1. It is neither said, nor is it true, of Jacob and Esau personally, that "the elder served the younger;" this being true only of their posterity. 2. Even if Esau had served Jacob personally, and had been inferior to him in worldly greatness, it would have been no proof at all of Jacob's election to eternal life, nor of Esau's reprobation. As little was the subjection of the Edomites to the Israelites, in David's days, a proof of the election or reprobation of their progenitors. 3. The Apostle's professed purpose in this discourse being to show, that an election, bestowed on Jacob by God's free gift, might either be taken from them, or others might be admitted to share therein with them, it is evidently not an election to eternal life, which is never taken away, but to external privileges only. 4. This being an election of the whole posterity of Jacob, and a reprobation of the whole descendants of Esau, it can only mean, that the nation which was to spring from Esau should be subdued by the nation which was to spring from Jacob; and that it should not, like the nation springing from Jacob, be the Church and people of God, nor be entitled to the possession of Canaan, nor give birth to the seed in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed. 5. The circumstance of Esau's being older than Jacob was very properly taken notice of, to show that Jacob's election was contrary to the right of primogeniture, because this circumstance proved it to be from pure favour. But if his election had been to eternal life, the circumstance of his age ought not to have been mentioned, because it had no relation whatever to that matter. (Whitby, Taylor, and Mackn.) In the above view even Carpz. coincides, as does indeed almost every other Commentator of repute. See, however, Prof. Stuart, who is of opinion that it does not relate to temporal condition or privileges, (as referred to nations or communities,) but to effectual calling, to justifying and glorifying; of course, as referred to individuals. And, indeed, if the object of the Apostle in making such an appeal to such an instance of the κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις, be, as Stuart supposes, to justify and support what had been said at viii. 28—39, there could be no doubt that it must be so. But that reference is taken for granted rather than proved.

— ἵνα, &c.] "[This was said and done] in order that," &c. Πρόθεσις is for βουλή or προαίρεσις. And ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις is well explained by Stuart to mean a purpose which proceeds from one's own free choice; moved by internal, not external, causes or motives. Thus the reasons of the Divine counsels are far from being represented as arbitrary, or ungrounded, but only as being such as are not disclosed, and pertain to God alone. The μένη, "might stand firm," πῶς, "be a convincing argument." Ἐκ τοῦ καλοῦντος, i. e. dependant on the will of the caller, chooser, or bestower.

12. ὁ μερίζων.] Like major natu in Latin. And so in Gen. xxix. 16. The meaning is: "The posterity of Esau the elder shall be compelled to serve that of Jacob the younger;" as is plain from the words preceding, "two nations are in thy womb."

13. καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] The sense is: "An example of the foregoing truth may be seen in the passage of Scripture where it is written, Jacob," &c. The best Commentators, both ancient and modern, are agreed, that in Ἰακώβ and Ἡσαὺ we are not to consider the two brothers personally, but as the founders the one of the Israelitish, the other of the Idumæan nation, and, in fact, as the nations themselves. They are also agreed, that the terms which indicate the disposition of God towards them are to be interpreted with an attention to the laws of parallelism, and to be understood comparatively,—namely, of greater and less favour; so Carpz. well paraphrases, "on the posterity of Jacob I confer greater worldly advantages, and superior external prerogatives: but on the posterity of Esau, the Idumæans, I bestow benefits more sparingly." See Chrys., Theophyl., and Whitby.

14. The Apostle, intending to show the liberty of the Divine election, brings every thing forward, more Judaico, in the way of objection, with the answer subjoined. His meaning, then, may be thus expressed: Objection: In having chosen the posterity of Isaac and Jacob for his people, and not the other nations, may not God be charged with injustice? Ans. By no means; we must not even entertain such a thought. He then proceeds to prove the position, that God may freely choose a certain nation for his people, and reject the others. This he shows, 1. from the testimonies of Moses, in which God claims to himself this supreme right, vv. 15, 28. 2. From the argument that God, as Creator, hath full power over the created, vv. 19—24. 3. From the predictions uttered concerning the Jews, vv. 25—29. (Schoettg.) In not having bestowed on all the Israelites, but on some only, this blessing of faith in Jesus Christ, the greater part being left in unbelief, the Apostle shows that God does not act unjustly; a truth which he had before declared, and variously illustrated and vindicated, and which he here again inculcates; 1.

By laying down the general position, that whatever the Deity doeth, that cannot of itself be unjust, μη γένοιτο! 2. By showing that this was no other than the usual mode of God's acting, (which he exemplifies by the case of Pharaoh,) and that it would be both foolish and impious, on that ground, to call God to account (vv. 15—21.) 3. That the unbelieving Israelites themselves could not complain of the grace of God being withdrawn from them,—since he had hitherto evinced himself so lenient and indulgent, in bearing with their unbelief and iniquity (v. 22.) Finally, he shows that by their unbelief this very benignity of God,—namely, in bringing other nations in their place to the blessings of true religion, is even more magnified, v. 23. seqq. Here, again, however, Prof. Stuart is at issue with those who maintain the above views of the scope of this passage. Yet he does not exclude the reference they maintain. And upon the whole, I confess that I am inclined to agree with the learned Professor in including both; and am disposed to admit, that the object of the Apostle in this chapter may be not merely to vindicate the Divine proceedings, in regard to giving or withholding favours in this present world, or the external privileges of religion; but also in respect to the future lot of saints and sinners in another.

15. ἐλεῶ ὃν, &c.] The general sense is, that God acts, in the distribution of his favours, according to his own pleasure. This is (as Koppe says) a phrase, used either when we do not choose, though we can, to give reasons for conferring benefits on another; or when we wish to prevent those whom we benefit from ascribing to them any peculiar merit of their own. The reasoning of the Apostle is this: "God cannot be unjust because he distributes his favours κατὰ πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ. He may surely do what he will with his own. Nay, your own Scriptures inculcate the same doctrine, where God is introduced as saying," &c. Thus the meaning is, that in conferring privileges or favours, whether upon nations or individuals, God acts according to his sovereign pleasure. See Bp. Bull's Apolog. pro Harm. p. 55.

16. ἄρα οὖν, &c.] The ἄρα is conclusive, q. d. "From what was said it cannot be collected," &c. From the above Divine declaration it followed of course, not, indeed, that it is quite superfluous for a man himself to work, and use the faculties and powers granted him by God,—but that the exertion of those powers does not of itself suffice to the obtaining of his wish; that depending wholly upon the grace and goodness of God; and therefore that it ought not to be ascribed to the most active exertions of any man, if he should enjoy the Divine benefits in a greater degree than another. (Koppe.)

17. λέγει γὰρ, &c.] Another example of the position at v. 15; and as the preceding one, taken from Moses, was of acceptance, so is this of rejection. God long preserved Pharaoh,—not in consequence of any merit in him; (for he was one of the most presumptuous sinners on record;) but that his Divine power might in the end be more signally displayed in him, and that the miracles wrought for the deliverance of the Israelites might spread the name of Jehovah throughout the whole earth.

Ἐξήγειρα is by some understood of Pharaoh being brought into being, or as monarch of Egypt; by others, of his preservation during the various plagues inflicted, especially that of the boils. The first interpretation has no support from the usus loquendi. The second, indeed, is not destitute of that support (so Ps. cxiii. 7 & 8. Sept. ὁ ἐγείρων ἀπὸ γῆς πτωχόν—τοῦ καθίσαι αὐτὸν μετὰ ἀρχόντων): but (not to say that Pharaoh was born to a throne) it is at variance with the context, both in the passage of Exodus and the present; each of which plainly requires the third-mentioned sense, namely, preservation from disease and death. And although I know of no direct evidence of such a signification in ἐξεγείρω, yet it occurs in other words of similar signification, as ἀνίστημι. So Thucyd. ii. 49. 8. λήθη ἐλάβανε παραντίκα ἀναστάντας. Prof. Stuart, indeed, after a most elaborate discussion of the sense of ἐξεγείρω in the LXX. (where it is almost always found) concludes that the meaning is here "roused thee up." That sense, however, appears very frigid and jejune, and is not to be reconciled with the context, except by a very harsh exegesis; and is moreover forbidden by the Sept. διετηρήθης, which though a very free version, well represents the sense, and shows how the Hebrew word תִּתְּמַנֵּה was understood by the Translator; the expression meaning literally, "kept thee on foot, or a-standing, kept thee preserved." So Ps. xix. 8. Sept. αὐτοὶ ἔπεσαν, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἀνστήμεν καὶ ἀνωρθώσμεν, stand upright.

18. ἄρα οὖν ὃν θέλει—σκληρύνει.] The difficulty in this disputed passage hinges on the sense of σκληρύνει, of which even the ancients were divided in opinion. Basil, Origen, and Theophyl. think that God, in fact, hardened the heart of Pharaoh by his long suffering, and delay of punishment, (whereby the κακία, or guilt, of the offender was increased,) in order that, on the measure of his iniquity being filled, the Divine justice in punishing him might be made more manifest. Œcumen. and many others interpret it, "suffers to be, or grow, hard; thereby leaving him to the exercise of his own free will." While Gregor. Nyss. ap. Œcum. explains "hardens himself." The earlier modern Commentators adopted one or other of these interpretations; until, in the middle of the last century, an original one was proposed by Carpz. or Rambach, and adopted by Ernesti and most Commentators down to Wahl; namely,—that the expression is to be understood with reference to the antithetical word ἐλεεῖ, and, by the lex oppositionis, is to be rendered, “treats with less kindness.” But though this is agreeable to the context, the evidence for that signification of the word is weak, merely resting on Chron. x. 4. σκληρύνει ζυγόν, and Job x. 4. ἀποσκληρύνει τέκνα, of which passages only the latter is at all apposite. The expression (as Koppe observes) plainly has reference to the case of Pharaoh, in the narration of whose story this very word often occurs (as Exod. vii. 3. ix. 12. x. 20, 27. xiv. 4, 8.) and in the sense to render obstinate. Besides, the words following τί ἔτι μέμφεται; have no sense, if they be not referred to obduracy. I would therefore prefer the interpretation of Basil and Origen, of whom the latter regards the expression as founded on the popular mode of thinking and speaking. “Thus (continues he) good and kind masters sometimes say to servants who have taken occasion from that kindness to harden themselves in disobedience, I have made you bad,—I am the cause of your offences.” This view, too, is adopted by many eminent modern Commentators from Grot. to Iaspsis, and adopted by Bp. Blomfield in the Notes to his Sermons.

19. ἐρεῖς οὖν μοι.] This adverts to an objection, which might be started by the Jew; viz. How, then, could this σκληροκαρδία be justly punished by God, since God himself is the ὁ σκληρύνων? How can God feel wrath against sinners, since no one can resist his will? For if he hardens men, they are not to blame, but God. (Koppe & Schoettg.) It is plain from the context that we must supply σκληροκαρδίας, ἀπειθείας, or the like. The sense is: “Why (or by what justice) does he yet, or now, find fault with us for unbelief and perversity?” τῷ γὰρ βουλ. &c. “who has [ever] resisted his will or purpose [successfully]?” which carries with it the adjunct sense, “who can resist it?” and consequently we have only fulfilled his will,” which is (as Mr. Young observes) a well-known answer and excuse of men obstinate in wickedness. See Jerem. ii. 25. xviii. 11. Ezek. xxxiii. 10.

20. μενοῦνγε, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, &c.] The Apostle does not directly answer the objection, because it was one not proper to be proposed; yet makes some reply in the way of reproof, 1. by showing that it is foolish and presumptuous for men to canvass the dispensations of God (vv. 20 & 21). 2. That though God has the same power over his creatures as the potter over the clay, yet that he does not act capriciously or arbitrarily, but that his dealings with the Jews, as with all men, are consistent with his attributes, justice, and mercy, vv. 22—24.

Μενοῦνγε has the force of a strong negation of any thing, and an affirmation of the contrary. “Nay but.” In the Classical writers it never commences a sentence. The ἄνθρωπε is an indirect antithesis with Θεῷ. Σὺ τίς εἶ suggests, as Chrys. remarks, the nothingness of man; for even human masters say to a murmuring servant, Begone, answerer! See also Tit. ii. 9. Ἀνταποκρ. signifies to reply in a disputatious spirit. Compare Jer. xviii. 2—10., which passage greatly illustrates the present, as it has an evident reference not to individuals, but to nations.

In illustration of this use of πλάσμα Wets. compares Aristoph. Av. 587. who calls men πλάσματα πηλοῦ.

21. ἡ οὐκ ἔχει—πηλοῦ.] Ἡ οὐκ, annon? This use of the Genit. after ἔξουσία in the sense “over,” occurs in Matt. x. 1. and John xvii. 2. In the Classical writers it is very rare. The only example that I have met with is in Thucyd. v. 50. κατὰ τὴν οὐκ ἔξουσίαν τῆς ἀγωνίσσεως. The sentiment is founded on Is. xlv. 9. Φεράμα signifies any thing kneaded, like dough. Σκεῦος is a general term applied to vessels or utensils, of every sort. Εἰς τιμὴν and εἰς ἀτιμίαν are to be taken comparatē, for “more or less honourable” uses. The meaning being, that the potter can work up his clay into any sort of vessels he pleases; nay, after having made them, he may unmake them, converting them from more honourable to less honourable uses. See Wisd. xv. 7. The Apostle had in mind Jer. xviii. 6. Chrys. shows that the sole point of similitude is to the perfect pliancy of the clay to the potter, no reference being had to conduct, so that it can have nothing to do with the question of free will. See an excellent Discourse of Dean Tucker, “on the Potter and the Clay,” and Bp. Van Mildert’s Bampton Lectures, p. 381.

22. εἰ δὲ θέλων, &c.] Here we have a more direct answer to the objection at v. 19.; what had been said being applied to the present case of the Jews and Gentiles. With respect to the phraseology, some recent Expositors would take the εἰ interrogatively, for nonne? or supply ἦν after θέλων. But it is better, with the older Commentators, to suppose an Anantapodoton or Anacoluthon, supplying οὐκ ἔχει ἔξουσίαν. Ὀργή here signifies wrathful punishment, as in i. 18.; and τὸ δυνατόν is for τὴν δύναμιν. Theophyl. well explains ἤνεγκεν ἐν πολλῇ μακροθυμίᾳ as put for ὑπομονὴ ἡνέσχετο. By the σκεῦη ὀργῆς are (as the best Interpreters, ancient and modern, are agreed) meant the Jews, with whose perversity God had so long borne,—that, far from having to complain of severity, if now cast off, they would have to acknowledge much mercy and long suffering. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that the expression is by no means to be taken of individuals created by God for eternal punishment. See Chrys. and Grot. The latter rightly explains κατηρτ. to mean not fitted (or adapted), but fit, ἔτοιμοι, as Chrys. expounds it. This use of the past participle for a verbal adjective is an idiom of not unfrequent use, and if borne in mind will often solve great difficulties. The term ἀπώλεια is strongly expressive of ever-during wrath, and final rejection.

23. τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης α.] A Hebraism, for “his most abundant glory.” See supra ii. 4. The σκευὴ ἐλέους, as opposed to the σκευὴ ὀργῆς, must denote persons mercifully accepted by God, with reference to the whole body of Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles. See Note on Acts ix. 15. Προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξ., “had prepared, destined for glory.” The προ only denotes destination. So Philo Jud. cited by Carpz. ὁ Θεὸς τὰ κόσμῳ πάντα προητοίμασεν εἰς ἔρωτα καὶ πόθον αὐτοῦ. The glory here mentioned must be understood, with Mackn., not of the glory of eternal life; for, as he observes, the Scripture never speaks of that as bestowed on nations, or bodies of men, complexly (v. 24.), but of the glory of being made the Church and people of God.

24. ἐκάλεσεν.] This is explained by Grot. “has invited and brought over to obedience;” verbs of counsel and striving being often so taken as to include the event. The ὡς καὶ serves to introduce an illustration. The passage in view is Hos. i. 6—10., blended with ii. 23. The Apostle (as Bp. Horsley observes) first alleges two clauses, but in an inverted order, from the 23d verse of the 2d chapter, which seems to relate more immediately to the call of the Gentiles; I will call them my people, &c., and her beloved, &c. And to these he subjoins, as relating solely to the restoration of the Jews, that part of the prophecy of the first Chapter which affirms that “in the place where it was said unto them, ye are not my people, there shall they be called the children of the living God.” From these detached passages thus connected, he derives the confirmation of his proposition concerning the joint call of Jews and Gentiles to the mercy of God.

There are here some minute differences between the Hebrew, the Sept., and the Apostle; but no more than the accommodation of the passage from the restoration of the Jews to the calling of the Gentiles (on which see Doddg.) rendered necessary. On the use of οὐ with a substantive or an adjective, I have fully treated in Recens. Synop., adducing many examples and references to Critics.

27. We have here another passage expressive of the same sentiment, of which the sense and connexion are ably laid down by Surenh. ap. Recens. Synop. Κράζει is not to be regarded (with Schoettg. and Wets.) as a mere Jewish form of citation, but signifies palam profitetur, with allusion to the loud and authoritative tone which Prophets were justified in assuming. See Note John vii. 28.

—τὸ κατάλειμμα σωθήσεται.] The ancient Commentators treat the Article as pleonastic. Bp. Middl. takes it to denote the remnant of the Israelites reserved by the Almighty for the purposes of his vengeance. I am inclined to think that τὸ κατάλειμμα was the name given to the remnant of the dough reserved for the next bread-making, literally the leaven, the leav-ed, left. The term usually implies a small number. Wahl thinks that in συντ. καὶ συντέμνων there is a hendiadys. But it should rather seem that the latter term is meant to be exegetical of the former. Δόγον is by some explained account; by others, matter, like the Heb. דבר. It should seem that both senses were in the mind of the Apostle; and that he meant, “will soon settle this account, and cut short the affair.” There is thought to be a reference to Is. x. 25.

29. Here we have another passage on the same subject with the preceding; namely, that it is to be ascribed to the singular goodness of God, that a very small part only (to the exclusion of the great bulk of the Jews) possess the promised felicity. (Koppe.) Bp. Lowth and Koppe think there is here a reference to some invasions of Judæa, made by Resin and Pekah, at the latter end of Jotham's reign. Others think it descriptive of the times of Ahaz, when Judæa was invaded on all sides; by the Syrians and Israelites from the North, by the Edonites from the South, and by the Philistines from the West, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5—19. Whether the sense of the Apostle be an accommodation of that of the Prophet (as most recent Commentators maintain) may be doubted; for it is certain that the Prophets had often a two-fold view; and that under an esoteric sense referring to political prosperity or adversity, was couched, καθ' ὑπονοίαν, an esoteric and spiritual one. As in κατάλειμμα there is a metaphor taken from bread-making, so in σπέρμα there is one from sowing; since it denotes the small remnant left, in the fertile countries of the East, for seed. In ὁμοιώθημεν there is a blending of two modes of expression, which are kept separate in a fine parallelism of Ezek. xxxii. "The object (as observes Stuart) of the whole of these quotations is only to show, that God of old threatened to destroy great multitudes of the Jews for contumacy; and consequently it is no new thing now to say, that great numbers of them will perish, while the Gentiles are received into favour."

30. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν, &c.] It is plain from the context that the sense of this somewhat indefinite formula is, "What is the conclusion to be drawn from what has been above said?" as ushering in a recapitulation of the whole of what the Apostle has been treating of in this Chapter. Young traces the plan of the Apostle as follows: "He proceeds from ix. 30—33. and x. 1—3. to inquire into the cause both of the rejection of the Jews, and the adoption of the Gentiles to be God's people in their stead: commencing, as usual, from an objection of the Jews, τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν, &c.; His reply being understood to this effect: "However strange these things may appear, yet so they are;"—and the ground of the acceptance of the Gentiles to God's favour (viz. their embracing the condition of justification under the Gospel, which is faith in Jesus Christ) being briefly hinted in those few words, thrown in as it were in the middle of the objection, v. 30. δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως, "but that justification which is by faith:" he goes on Ch. ix. 32. to Ch. x. 3. to state more at length the ground of the Jews' miscarriage: this he places in that fatal error of theirs concerning the way of justification and acceptance with God; they sought it by the performances of the Law; whereas, it is only to be obtained through the faith of Christ."

considered by Hamm, and others as agonistic terms. It is, however, not clear that the Apostle intended any such allusion, any more than the Psalmist in "Seek peace and pursue it;" or Thucyd. ii. 63. τὰς τιμὰς διώκειν. In such cases the metaphors only imply eagerness and anxiety. The words δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως (scil. διδομένην) are exegetical of the preceding, and explain the kind of justification unto which they had attained, and how obtained. From what follows it is plain that πίστει is for τῆς πίστεως, i. e. faith in Christ, which implies a full acceptance of his Gospel, and an obedience to all its requisitions, whether of belief or practice.

31. Ἰσραὴλ δὲ διώκων, &c.] Some would remove the difficulty, which has here caused disagreement, by supposing a pleonasm; others, by supposing an hypallage: methods alike unfounded, unnecessary, and at variance with the antithetical clause εἰς νόμον δικαιοσ. οὐκ ἔφθασε. It is plain from the next verse that νόμος must be taken in its ordinary acceptation. The obscurity here has arisen from excessive brevity, and the complete sense is as follows: "Israel, following after the law, and aiming at justification from it, yet missed of its aim; not having attained unto a law which could give justification, or unto the law which gives justification, namely, that of Christ."

32. διὰ τί; ὅτι, &c.] Now follows the reason why God excluded the Jews from the felicity of Christ's kingdom; not because it had been so determined by God by any absolute decree; but because they, priding themselves on their attachment to the Law of Moses, rejected the Gospel of Christ. (Koppe.) The recent Commentators are generally of opinion that what is here adduced from the O. T. does not properly refer to the Messiah, but is applied by accommodation. That principle, however, is here unnecessary; for the Prophets themselves often intermixed with promises of temporal deliverance encouraging anticipations of that deliverance, both temporal and spiritual, which was to be expected from the Messiah. Nay, the Jewish Interpreters themselves refer the words to the Messiah. As to the discrepancies between the Apostle and the Hebrew and Sept. in this quotation, I would observe that it is, properly speaking, no quotation at all. It is merely a reference to what is said in Scripture; and though formed on two passages, Isai. viii. 14. and xxviii. 16. does not profess to be a citation from either. The latter clause, however, differs scarcely at all from the Sept., but recedes from the Hebrew. It is the opinion, however, of Grot., Capell, and Randolph, that the LXX read, not that חיש (as appears from the Arabic حاش) is susceptible of that sense. The meaning, however, intended by the Prophet seems to have been "He need not flee for fear." The force of the Future seems to have been known to the LXX, by their rendering not in the Future and Indicative, but the Subjunctive.

X. The Apostle now applies himself to correct this fatal error, by stating at large the relative nature of the Law and the Gospel as means of Justification. And first he commences with a softening: "It is the anxious wish of my heart." On the use of μὲν without the apodictic δὲ, see Rec. Syn. The sense may be thus represented: "For my part, the wish of my heart is," &c.

The reading αὐτῶν for τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, though edited by Griesb., Vat., and Tittm., merits little attention. Only nine or ten MSS. have that reading; and none of Matthæi's or Rinck's MSS. Vater, indeed, thinks it more likely that αὐτῶν should be changed into τὸν Ἰσραὴλ than vice versâ. But I doubt not that it arose from the margin, where it was meant to fill up the ellip. at εἰς σωτηρίαν, and afterwards in some MSS. expelled the τοῦ Ἰ. The αὐτῶν might very well be omitted, because τοῦ Ἰ. is a noun of multitude for "the people of Israel." Whereas αὐτῶν after ὑπὲρ would involve a harshness almost intolerable.

2. ζῆλον Θεοῦ.] Not "zeal of God," as our Common Version renders; but "a zeal for or towards God." Grot. well observes that all nouns of this sort have a Genitive sometimes of subject, and sometimes of object, as here. The expression is derived from Ps. lxxiii. 9. Compare Acts xxi. 20. xxii. 3. 2 Cor. xii. 2. Οὐ κατ' ἐπίγνωσιν, "not in conformity with, or regulated by, sound knowledge, or true religion."

3. ἀγνοοῦντες γὰρ, &c.] This is meant to show how they come to be thus ignorant of Divine truth, with the means for attaining unto it in their possession. By τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικ. is denoted that method of justification (viz. gratuitous, or by faith) which God has revealed in the Gospel of Christ. By ἰδίαν δικ. is meant a justification of their own, i. e. resting on the works of their Law. The Apostle so terms it, because, being a law of works, it made every one's salvation depend upon his own merits; and thus such a law might, in a popular sense, be called a justification of his own. Στήσαι is the opposite to ἀναιρεῖν. And the metaphor seems derived from the propping up and buttressing of a weak structure, which cannot stand by itself.

—οὐχ ὑπετάγησαν] "have not obediently accepted." It was remarked by an ancient Philosopher, that "many would have attained unto wisdom, if they had not thought they had already attained unto it."

4. τέλος γὰρ νόμου X.] Here is more plainly set forth the mode by which God is pleased that men should be brought to salvation by Christ. The term τέλος, however, admits of more than one sense. It may, with some ancient and modern Commentators, be explained, "Christ hath put an end to the Law, in the case of every believer in him." This sense, however, is not agreeable to the context. The true one seems to be that of Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, adopted by Fell, Carpz., and Young, "Christ is the end, perfection, and accomplisher, or rather the scope, end, and final object of the law for justification;" as in Acts xiii. 38. sq. So Stuart explains it to mean, "Belief in Christ, receiving him by faith, and thus attaining to the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, accomplishes the end or object of what the law (i. e. perfect obedience to the law) would accomplish." The Apostle shows that there is only one justification, and that what the law attempted, the Gospel fulfils; and therefore he who chooses the one by faith, fulfils the other; whereas he who aims at the other, must miss of this. This benefit of Christ extends to all believers, Gentiles no less than Jews. "The proof of the whole rests, observes Mr. Young (as is expressed in vv. 1—10), upon the impossibility of the condition of Justification by the Law, and the easiness of the condition under the Gospel."

5. The words of this verse are meant to confirm what was just said,—namely, that what the Law did not, and could not accomplish, Christ completed. For Moses, indeed, says a man is justified by the works of the law. But then no one was found able to fulfil it. So that it is not possible to be thus justified. (Chrys. & Theoph.)

—ζήσεται.] This is generally understood (as also it is explained by the Jewish interpreters) of life eternal, i. e. salvation. But some of the best Commentators and Theologians (as Hammond, Whitby, Mackn., and Warburton) explain it of life in this world, with an implied notion of happiness and prosperity. Yet it should seem that the words of Moses were meant, under their chief and primary sense, of life and prosperity in this world, to contain an obscure promise of everlasting life. See Note on iii. 28.

6—8. The subject of these somewhat obscure verses is justification by faith, and the admonition meant to be inculcated is to believe and doubt not. This the Apostle expresses in words derived from Deut. xxx. 11—14; and as the phrases “ascending to heaven” and “descending to Hades” were proverbially applied (like the in cælum ire of Juvenal Sat. iii. 75, and the cælum petere of Horace Od. i. 3, 38, to denote a moral impossibility, or at least an extreme difficulty); so there the sense intended is, that “it is not impracticable to attain a knowledge of God’s laws.” And here the Apostle, accommodating the words to his present purpose, and applying them to the Gospel, by the formulas τοῦτέστι Χριστὸν καταγαγεῖν, and τοῦτέστι Χρ. ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναγαγεῖν, means to inculcate the facility of exercising faith, and consequently obtaining salvation; q. d. (to use the words of Mr. Turner) “The system of the Gospel demands faith, which is comparatively easy of acquisition; it does not require from you any thing of vast difficulty, as if the heavens were to be scaled to bring down Christ, or the abyss of Hades to be fathomed to bring him up [See the Note on John iii. 13. Ed.]; but it asks only what is within the reach of every one, what cannot be withheld without obstinate prejudice,—that is, a belief in its divinity.” The above, however, are perhaps not to be regarded as merely formulas expressive of impossibility or great difficulty, but as meant to advert to those points at which the faith of the unbelievers chiefly staggered. See Theophyl. and Carpz. ap. Recens. Synop. By the ἄβυσσον is meant (as the Syr. Translator and Mackn. have seen), the place of departed spirits; so called because it was supposed by the Jews to be as far below the surface of the earth as heaven was thought to be above it. See Ps. cxxxix. 8. and Bp. Lowth de Sacr. P. Hebr. p. 200.

The words μὴ εἴπῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου well express that sort of self-confidence in which unbelief usually originates..

8. ἐγγύς σου—καρδίᾳ σου.] The sense is, “The word, i. e. the doctrine of justification by faith (termed in the next clause, the ‘word of faith’) is easy to be understood, and demands our faith.” What Moses meant by τὸ ῥῆμα, was (as Bp. Bull observes, Harm. Ap. p. 13.) præceptum justitiæ activæ, since he immediately subjoins וַיֹּאמֶר “that thou shouldst do it.” Things obscure or difficult were by the Hebrews said to be far off: while things easy to be attained were said to be nigh.

9, 10. Taken out of the artificial form in which the sentiment is expressed, it would run thus: “If thou shalt confess and profess with thy mouth, and believe with thy heart, by a vital and influential faith, that Jesus is the Lord, and that God, as such, hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; thy faith shall be counted for righteousness. For with the heart man believeth, and with the mouth confession is made unto justification and salvation.” Compare Mark xv. 16. 1 John iv. 15.

11. πᾶς] every one, whether Jew or Gentile. See Note on v. 5. ix. 17. 33.

12. οὐκ ἐστὶ διαστολή] “no distinction.” See Note on iii. 22.

—ὁ αὐτός—πάντων.] The sense is: “The same person (i. e. one and the same person) is Lord of all, both Jews and Gentiles.” Πλουτῶν, i. e. abundant. Eis, “in respect” to some quality which those who call upon him need; i. e. (as Grot. says) χάριτι, or χρηστότητι; which is confirmed by Eph. i. 7. πλουτοῦ χάριτος. and Rom. ii. 4. πλουτοῦ χρηστότητος. The same expression, too, occurs in Philostr. Vit. Ap. iv. 8. ἐς τὸ κοινὸν πλουτεῖν. Ἐπικαλεῖσθαι is here to be understood of every kind of precatory address to God. See Bp. Bull’s Harm. Ap. p. 43.

13. Κυρίου.] The original word for this (in Joel iii. 5.) is יהוה (Jehovah), whence it is certain that the Prophet speaks these words of the true and only GOD; and yet it is as certain that the Apostle here ascribes them to our Lord Jesus Christ, from the words following, “How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?” For the Apostle in this whole Chapter discourses of faith in Christ, and from the words foregoing, of which these are a proof, and to which they are connected by the particle γάρ; for those words, "whosoever believeth in him shall not be ashamed," are spoken by the Prophet Isaiah, of Jesus Christ the Corner-stone. (Isaiah xxvii. 16.) And so they are interpreted by St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 6, 7. And in the Prophet Joel these words follow, εὐαγγελιζόμενοι οὗς Κύριος προσκλήσεται, "and the evangelised, whom the Lord shall call shall be saved." Here then, we have two arguments for the Divinity of Christ.—1. That what is spoken of Jehovah is ascribed to him.—2. That he is made the object of our religious invocation. (Whitby.) This criticism is ably supported by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 149., and by Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. C. v. § 1. & 4.

14, 15. πῶς οὖν ἐπικαλέσονται, &c.] On the scope of these and the following verses the Commentators are not agreed. Grot. and Hamm. suppose vv. 14, 15, to contain an objection on the part of the Jews, that they had not had sufficient opportunities of knowing the truth; and they think that to this the Apostle replies in vv. 16, 17. See, however, Recens. Synop. and Mr. Slade. The scope of the passage is well traced by Mr. Young as follows: "And because the Jews were very greatly offended by the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles, and were in a more peculiar manner exasperated against St. Paul on that account (see Acts xxii. 22. 1 Thess. ii. 16.), and therefore would be less disposed to listen to his advice, and so to believe and be saved; he takes occasion from this last text of Scripture, to vindicate the Divine commission of himself and the rest of the Apostles, to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles; this he does, 1st, from the necessity of the case; for if it was God's good pleasure, as the Prophets signified beforehand, to grant repentance unto life to the Gentiles; it must certainly have been his intention that the offer of salvation should be properly made to them. This view is much confirmed by Carpz., who further observes that the sentiment is expressed by an elegant sortes (as in Rom. v. 3—5. viii. 29, 30. James i. 15. 2 Pet. i. 5—7.), proceeding from effects to causes, by the aid of four questions (to be explained negatively), as follows: 1. No one will call upon Christ, nor acknowledge him to be his Saviour and Lord, if he does not believe in him. 2. No one will believe in Christ, if he has not heard of him. 3. No one will hear of Christ, unless there be some one to preach (Luke xxiv. 47.). 4. No one will preach Christ (cum ικανότητι et ἐνεργείᾳ, 2 Cor. iii. 5.) except he be regularly called and sent. On the first of these Bp. Bull well remarks: "Hæc fides cultum istum parere apta nata est. Fieri omnino non potest, ut non colat, qui non credit; fieri vix potest, ut non colat, qui credit."

15. καθὼς γέγραπται.] The construction, which is here very obscure, is most ingeniously, and perhaps rightly, traced by Prof. Stuart as follows: "The importance of the heralds of salvation, in order to bring men to believe on a Saviour, is implied in the high commendation which the Saviour bestows on them 'according to what is written,' &c."

The passage ὡς ὠραῖοι, &c., is taken from Is. lii. 7.; and though by most recent Commentators supposed not to have reference to the times of the Messiah; yet, since it appears from the Rabbinical citations of Wets. that the Jews themselves so understood it, there is no reason to lower this to a mere accommodation; but we may suppose that the Prophet here, as in very many other passages, couches under the primary and exoteric a secondary and esoteric, or mystical sense. The Apostle does not cite from the Sept., which is here manifestly corrupt, but gives a new version of the Hebrew, with the omission of the unimportant words "upon the mountains." Unless (which I rather suspect), the LXX. in the time of St. Paul read ὡς ὠραῖοι οἱ πόδες ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρέων, afterwards corrupted (the οἱ being absorbed in the οἱ following) into ὡς ὠραῖοι οἱ πόδες, and ὡς ὠραῖοι ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρέων οἱ (and after ὡς) πόδες. By ὠραῖοι is meant grateful, acceptable; and by οἱ πόδες, "the approach." Compare Acts v. 9. and Soph. Elect. 1358. Thus the feet of the messengers is not (as many suppose) put for the messengers themselves, since by their approach "the idea (as Bp. Jebb says, Sac. Lit. p. 126.) is excited of their progress towards us; we admire them yet afar off; our imagination kindles at the prospect of good things to come." The words εἰρήνην and τὰ ἀγαθὰ are, by their parallelism, synonymous; and denote what St. Paul, Eph. vi. 15., calls τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς εἰρήνης, where see Note.

16. ἄλλ' οὐ πάντες ὑπήκουσαν τ. ε.] It has been rightly seen by Crell., Locke, and Taylor, that this contains the Jewish objection, q. d. "But not all, nay, very few, have hearkened to this good news from God; which is strange, and may be thought some disparagement of a Divine commission." Thus the words following will be the Apostle's answer, in which something from the preceding sentence must be repeated; q. d. "True; very few have hearkened to the Gospel; inasmuch that we may say, in the words of Isaiah, 'Who hath believed,' &c. Or, by introducing this passage of Isaiah, the Apostle may mean to argue, that the want of success complained of was predicted by the Prophet; and therefore ought to be no well founded objection to the Divine commission of the Apostles. generally agreed that the ἄρα is conclusive: and it is well remarked by Koppe and Rosenm. that the passage is similar to that at v. 14, 15., and is meant to inculcate the necessity of the Evangelical office, and to vindicate the Divine authority of the Christian doctrine against the Jews.

18. ἀλλὰ λέγω· Μὴ, &c.] On the scope see Stuart. Mr. Young well states the general sense of the Apostle to be, that "how great soever the mass of incredulity might be, it must be attributed altogether to the perverseness and malignity of the hearers; and by no means to any want of diligence in the teachers; who had indeed most zealously fulfilled their commission; insomuch that what the Psalmist says concerning that universal teaching by which "the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy work," may fitly be applied to the preaching of the Apostles." Schoettg. adduces two examples of a similar accommodation of the words of the Psalmist by a Rabbinical writer: and Carpz. a similar sentiment from Philo. This quotation agrees verbatim with the Sept. and also with the Hebrew, except that it has the וְ rendered line, which discrepancy Dr. Randolph and others seek to remove by supposing that the LXX. read וְ. An ingenious conjecture, but not necessary to be adopted: for (as Rosenm. and others have seen) וְ may have been taken by the Sept. in the sense chord, which, by metonymy, will denote sound. Thus there will be a parallelism with the clause following. At all events, the Apostle followed the Sept. because it was more suitable to his accommodation of the words to the propagation of the Gospel throughout the whole world.

19—21. By way of reconciling these things to their belief, the Apostle now shows that both the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles, and their joyful acceptance of it, and the rejection of the Jews, had been foretold by their own Prophets. (Young.)

—ἐγνων.] The sense of this word is somewhat disputed: but the best Commentators are agreed that it is to be taken in the usual signification of the verb, and that τοῦτο is to be supplied; meaning the promulgation of the Gospel not only to the Jews, but to all nations. And the interrogative with the negative implies a strong assertion, q. d. "But, I say—did not Israel know that, upon their unbelief, the Gentiles would be adopted, and made partakers of the privileges of the Gospel?" Yes, surely they did, or might; for Moses, first, tells, &c. [speaking in the person of God]. The words (taken from Deut. xxxii. 21.) agree with both the Hebrew and Sept., except that ὑμᾶς is, for accommodation's sake, put for αὐτοὺς. In ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει there is not (as Grot. and Koppe imagine) an oxymoron; and therefore the examples they accumulate are irrelevant. There is rather an ellip. of ὄντι. By οὐκ ἔθνει is meant "not God's people by any peculiar covenant." Ἀσυνέτῳ, as Grot. observes, does not mean simply foolish, but affected with the folly of idolatry, the knowledge of the one true God being the only true wisdom. Παραζηλώσω and παροργιῶ denote "will excite your jealousy and wrath by conferring on them benefits which you thought belonged exclusively to you. The ἐπὶ signifies respecting. I agree with Mr. Turner, that "from the severity of the punishment immediately afterwards denounced, the prophecy has in view (though Rosenm. and other recent Commentators deny it) the rejection of the Israelites, and the admission of the Gentiles to be God's covenant people."

20. δὲ] "imo vero." In ἀποτολμᾷ the ἀπο is intensive, as ἐκ often is. The word is not unfrequently found in the Classical writers. Ἀποτολμᾷ καὶ λέγει is put, by Hendiads, for ἀποτόλμως λέγει. The words εὐρέθην, &c. are from Is. lxx. 1 & 2; but the two members of the sentence are taken in inverse order. The subject is the rejection of the Jews, and the adoption, in their place, of the Gentiles. The sense of the two parts of the parallelism will become plainer by mutual comparison. For, as Koppe and Rosenm. observe, "God is said εὐρίσκεισθαι and ἐμφανῆ γενέσθαι, when he by his benefits excites men to worship and obey him; and the terms ζητεῖν and ἐπερωτᾶν, like the Heb. וְ and וְ, are synonymes used to denote devout worship of God."

21. The connection is thus traced by Theophyl. That the Jews might not have to say, Thou wast found by the Heathen, but with us thou didst not choose to hold intercourse, there follows, "All day long I have stretched forth," &c.

Τὸ πρὸς is best rendered de, concerning. With the exception of a slight transposition, the words agree with the Sept.; but ἀπειθούντα and ἀντιλέγοντα have only one term corresponding to them in the Hebrew, namely, וְ. Hence some Critics suspect that they represent a double interpretation. But it is more probable that the Translators used two words, to more accurately represent the force of the single Hebrew term; though ἀντιλέγειν does in the Scriptures often denote rebellion as well as contradiction. Ἐξεπίτασα is, as Paræus says, “metaphora a matribus, quæ petulantes pueros passis ulnis ad se revocant, venientes complecti paratæ.”

XI. The Apostle, having thus plainly asserted the rejection of the Jews, and the reception of the Gentiles into their place as the people of God, and this without having yet made particular explanations or limitations, now proceeds to suggest various considerations, which might serve to correct the wrong views that his countrymen would probably entertain, in regard to the declarations which he had just made. The Jew would, very naturally, ask (as Paul suggests in v. 1.), “Is it true, then, that God has actually cast his people away, to whom pertained the adoption, and the glory, and the covenant, and the promises? Can this be consistent with his veracity?” These questions the Apostle, anticipating them, proceeds in Ch. xi. to answer, shewing, vv. 1—5, that now, as formerly in times of the greatest declension, God has still a remnant among his people, who are true believers, i. e. belong to the spiritual seed of Abraham. But this remnant are those whom the election of God according to his purposes of grace has made the subjects of his mercy, and who are not saved by their own merits; while the rest are given up to their own hardness of heart and blindness of mind, even as their own Scriptures have expressly foretold, v. 6—10. Yet it will not always remain thus. The whole of the nation will, at some future day, be brought within the pale of the Christian Church. Their present general unbelief is now the occasion of the Gospel being preached to the Gentiles, and of the increase of the Christian Church among them; so that even their rejection has been the occasion of blessings to others. How much more, then, is to be hoped from their general return to God! v. 11—15. This return must take place. The nation, from its origin, were consecrated to God, and they must yet return to him; for although some of its branches were broken off because of unbelief, and others were grafted in to supply their place, yet in due time they will be again received. The Gentiles, therefore, who have been thus grafted in can have no reason to indulge in pride and boasting on account of this. They are cautioned against such a spirit, and exhorted to guard with the greatest watchfulness against unbelief, since this would occasion them also to be rejected. Nor ought they to demean themselves loftily towards the Jews, who were yet to be received back to the Divine favour, and fully restored as the people of God, vv. 16—27. Although they are now enemies of the Gospel, good comes to the Gentiles through this; and the promises made to their fathers of old are not forgotten, and will yet be fully carried into execution, vv. 28, 29. They, although now in a state of unbelief, will obtain mercy in the like manner as the Gentiles have obtained it, who were once in the same state, vv. 30, 31. For God had showed both Gentiles and Jews that they were alike included in unbelief, and justly subject to the condemning sentence of the law; and he has suffered them to come into such a state, that he might display, in the more signal manner, his mercy towards them, v. 32. The ways and judgments of God, in his proceedings with Jews and Gentiles, are beyond the reach of human wisdom; they are deep, unfathomable mysteries, which can be fully searched out and known only by the Infinite Mind. (Stuart.)

1. μὴ ἀπώσατο—τὸν λαὸν αὐ.] With respect to the nature of the rejection, the Apostle, speaking in the person of a Jewish objector, inquires whether it will be total and universal; whether God has utterly cast off his people? Ἀπώσασθαι is a very strong term (as appears from the examples in Wets.), and imports total abandonment. “The Apostle (observes Koppe) refutes the objection, 1. by experience; since many of the Jews, and, among the rest, Paul himself, were followers of Christ (v. 1.); 2. by a familiar example taken from the O. T., and accommodated to the present purpose, vv. 2—4. It is well remarked by Grot., that between μὴ γένοιτο and ἐγὼ γὰρ, &c. there is a sentence left to be supplied, viz. “For how, then, would it fare with myself?” q. d. otherwise I should pronounce reprobation on myself, since I am an Israelite.” The ἐκ σπέρματος (for γένους) Ἀβρ. implies “and with all the privileges of that descent.”

2. οὐκ ἀπώσατο, &c.] The Apostle solemnly repeats the negation implied in μὴ γένοιτο. Προέγνω, i. e. foreknew would be his people. See Note supra viii. 28—30.

—ἐν Ἠλίᾳ] i. e. (as the best modern Commentators are agreed) in that part of the book of Kings which treats of the actions of Elijah, namely, the 17th, 18th, and 19th Chapters. On this idiom, see Note on Mark xii. 26. Ἐντυγχάνει. This verb properly signifies, with the Dative of person, “to have an interview with any one;” and as this is sometimes in behalf of another, so the verb often takes ὑπὲρ with a Genitive. But it is also applied to a representation made against any one, as here and in 1 Macc. viii. 32. x. 61, 63, & 65. xi. 25. with or without κατὰ.

3. κατέσκαψαν.] See Note on Acts xv. 16.

4. ὁ χρηματισμός] "the Divine response." The word is used, like χρηματίζειν, of every extraordinary method by which God made his will known to men. Here, however, it has reference to that still small voice, the Bath-Col, 1 Kings xix. 12. Κατέλιπον, "I have left to me;" which is equivalent to "there are left to me."

—τῇ Βάαλ.] The masculine form is generally found in the O. T.; though sometimes the feminine. Whence it appears that the God was supposed to be of both sexes, designating either the sun or moon. In the former capacity it was worshipped (under the form of a bull) by the men; in the latter by the women. See Selden de Dis Syris, and Calmet.

5. κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος] "according to a gratuitous election," not made on the ground of merit, but free grace and mercy.

6. εἰ δὲ χάριτι—χάρις.] Abp. Newc. well paraphrases thus: "Now if this admission into the Gospel covenant be thus freely bestowed, it cannot arise from works, from obedience to the law of Moses: for then favour would lose its nature, and would become just retribution, and not free donation."

The two last clauses εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων—ἔργον are omitted in 7 MSS., the Copt., Arm., Æth., and Vulg. Versions, in some Greek, and in most of the Latin Fathers; are rejected by Erasm., Grot., Mill, Semler, Gratz, Koppe, and Stuart; bracketed by Tittm. and Vater; and cancelled by Griesb. and Newc.: but, I think, without sufficient reason. For, 1. The Versions in question are inferior to the Syr. and Arabic ones, which have the clause. 2. There is no proof that Chrys. and Theodoret had not the words in their copy, since the latter often passes by clauses for the sake of brevity, and the former what is unsuitable to the purpose of a Homily; though it has been shewn by Matth. that words and clauses are often omitted in MSS. for no better reason than that Chrys. does not treat on them. The antiquity of this passage is attested by its being found in the Peschito Syriac Version, and the most ancient of MSS. the Vatican 1209. It may be added, that the MSS. in which it is not found are such as have been noted for various kinds of alteration. The valuable Venice MSS. recently collated by Rinck all have the clause. As to the cause of the omission, there can be little doubt but that the MSS. in question had in their originals χάρις (by mistake) instead of ἔργον at the end of the sentence; and thus the clause might easily be omitted ob homoteleuton, the preceding clause ending with χάρις. The sense is well expressed by Theophyl. thus:

"If we be acceptable to God from works, grace has no longer any place; since, if grace have place, works are gone and exist no longer. For where there is grace, work is not grace; and where there is work, grace has no place."

7. τί οὖν; scil. ἐροῦμεν, "What conclusion shall we draw from what has been said [but this]?" "Ο ἐπιζητεῖ Ἰ. "what the people of Israel collectively (i. e. the bulk of the people) seek [namely, justification and acceptance with God] they have obtained not." Τοῦτο for τοῦτον, on the authority of all the early Editions and many of the best MSS., was adopted by Mill and Wets., and edited by Matthæi, Griesb., Knapp, Tittm., and Vat., and rightly; since no reason can be given for the change of τοῦτον into τοῦτο by the scribes; whereas of τοῦτο into τοῦτον, there is an obvious one. Of this syntax with the Accus. examples are adduced by Wets., though not all of them to the purpose. It should seem that the ancient Homeric syntax, after having been long preserved in Macedonia and the remote provinces of Greece, was afterwards introduced into the Common, and at length into the Hellenistic dialect.

Ἡ ἐκλογὴ is for οἱ ἐκλεκτοὶ (abstr. for concr., as ii. 26; iii. 30; xv. 8.) denoting the τό λείμμα κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος at v. 5, that very small, but select and choice portion of the Jewish nation, which had faith in Christ, and thus obtained justification and acceptance.

—ἐπωρώθησαν] "became hardened, or hardened themselves;" for the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that the Passive is for the reciprocal, as John xii. 40. Or it may, Stuart thinks, merely indicate state, or condition, without regard to the agent. And thus the sense will be; were in a state of blindness, or callousness of conscience. On the term πωρ. see Note on Mark vi. 52. Yet I am inclined to admit, with Stuart, that personal agency is here, by the force of the context, made too prominent to justify us in sinking it: and since that agency, as appears from the citations from the O. T., in the next verse, is, at least in a certain degree, God's; we must suppose such an agency on the part of God, as shall be consistent with the freedom of man as a free and accountable agent. See James i. 13 & 14, and compare supra ix. 17 & 18, and Note.

8. καθὼς γέγραπται] "agreeably to what is said." This is not an exact quotation from any part of Scripture; but most resembles Is. xxix. 10; and the sentiment of the latter is to be found in vi. 9. Ezek. xii. 2. The πνεῦμα κατανύξεως is by the best Commentators explained a state of mind stupid and destitute of all sense of good and evil. See Grot. and Hamm. The words ὀφθαλμοῦς—ἀκούειν are taken from Deut. xxix. 3. All the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that ἔδωκε, &c. must be understood of permitting them to become such. See Chrys. and Theophyl. ap. Recens. Synop. The ὀφθαλμοῦς τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν is well paraphrased by Theophyl. "having eyes to see the miracles, and ears to hear the instructions of the Lord and the Apostles, yet so as not to use either of them to the purpose intended."

The words ἕως τῆς, &c. are, as Koppe observes, added by the Apostle by way of accommodating the passage to his present purpose, q. d. "And this their obduracy has continued unto this day."

9. γεννηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα, &c.] As against those who had inflicted injuries on him, evils are denounced by the Psalmist similar in kind; so here, by accommodation, condign punishment is invoked on the Jews for their injurious treatment of the Messiah. Εἰς ἀνταπόδομα α., "for a retribution upon them." The words εἰς θήραν are neither in the Sept. nor the Hebrew, and are exegetical of εἰς παγίδα; in which there is a metaphor taken from birds or beasts being caught by food placed in a trap.

10. σκοτισθήτωσαν—βλέπειν i. e. "may they fall, like blind persons, into the evils prepared for them!" Καὶ τὸν νῶτον—σύγκαμψον, i. e. make them groan under heavy burdens which bow down the back with labour. A lively figure of bondage, and misery, amply fulfilled in the yet more grievous subjection of the Jews to the Roman yoke, which took place soon after these words were written. On the imprecations in this and some other passages of Scripture (at which some have so stumbled, that they have sought, by some philological device or other, to get rid of it at any rate), see some sensible remarks of Prof. Stuart.

11, 12. "The Apostle concludes by saying,—that God had permitted the Jews for a time to reject the Gospel of Christ, not that he felt any satisfaction at this their unbelief, and the misery consequent upon it; but in order that the Gospel itself might so much the more rapidly be transmitted to the Gentiles; especially since he foresaw that this very salvation, which the Jews saw bestowed on the Gentiles, might excite them to imitate their faith: that therefore the Gentile Christians ought, indeed, to adore the goodness of God towards them, but by no means to boast over, or insult the Jews; since whatever blessings they themselves experienced, they ought to ascribe solely to the Divine goodness, and not to their own merits: lastly, that the Jews themselves, if they return to a better mind, may finally experience the same Divine mercy; an event that will really sometime take place." (Koppe.)

11, 12. "The Apostle shows that all has been done in order to the accomplishment of a plan of the most wonderful and comprehensive goodness: for, 1. the rejection of the Gospel by the Jews (which was the cause of their own rejection by God) was the means of salvation to the Gentiles; through the offer of the Gospel to them, and their embracing it. 2dly, The fulness of the Gentiles, or their general acceptance of the Gospel, is one of God's remedies for the obduracy of the Jews; εἰς τὸ παραζηλώσαι αὐτοὺς, v. 11. by provoking them to jealousy and emulation; and so to a desire of regaining their ancient state of favour with God. See v. 11, 14, 25, 26, 31. And compare Deut. xxxii. 21. And 3dly, when the Conversion and Restoration of the Jews (which is here expressly foretold, vv. 25—29.) shall have taken place, it will prove a great revival of the genuine spirit of Christianity among the Gentiles, and be the means of converting the whole world, xi. 12, 15." (Young.) "V. 12. contains a sentiment expressed twice. There is, moreover, an antithesis between εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα—ἔθνῶν and πόσω—αὐτῶν: but the antithesis is irregular, by the former member being of two parts which form a parallelism; whereas, the latter has but one." (Koppe.) The deficient apodosis he thus skilfully restores, and lays down the construction as follows: εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα—κόσμος, πόσω μᾶλλον ἢ ἀνάστασις αὐτῶν; καὶ εἰ τὸ ἥττημα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος ἔθνῶν, πόσω μᾶλλον τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῶν; Again, πλοῦτος is for πλουτισμός, blessing and saving. "ἥττημα is by some explained paucitas, diminution; but better by Wets., Carpz., Koppe, and Schleus. conditio deterior. Thus πλήρωμα will denote a prosperous condition."

13, 14. Some (as Elsn., Bowyer, Newc., and Rosenm.) place these verses in a parenthesis, since v. 15. is closely connected in sense with

v. 12. But though the portion is in some measure interposed, yet there is, properly speaking, no parenthesis; as is evident from the γὰρ which commences the passage. It would be nearer the truth to say that the clause ἐφ' ὅσον—δοξάζω is parenthetical, as it was plainly considered by the Pesch. Syriac Translator. And thus the sense of the passage is much cleared; for εἰπὼς is, as Koppe says, equivalent to ἵνα εἰ δυνατόν, (as in Acts xxvii. 12. Rom. i. 10. Phil. iii. 11,) “To try if, by any means, I may,” &c. Thus the passage may be rendered: “Now I speak [thus] to you Gentiles, (and, inasmuch as I am the Apostle of the Gentiles, I glory in, or I assert the honour and dignity of my office) to try if, by any means, I may excite to emulation,” &c. This I find supported by the opinion of Prof. Stuart, who rightly regards the γὰρ as explicatory. I cannot, however, agree with him in considering the μὲν as “explicatory, or rather affirmative;” still less, that it auget vim orationis. I would rather say diminuit vim orationis; which is far more suitable to the modesty of the sacred writer on other occasions. Indeed, whenever this μὲν without δὲ occurs with the personal pronouns ἐγὼ or ἡμεῖς, it has this force. And it not unfrequently so occurs in the Classical writers. The following examples will suffice. Xen. Œcon. xv. 4. ταῦτά μοι δοκοῦμεν μὲν—ἐπιδοραμηνεῖναι τῷ λόγῳ. Cyrop. i. 4. 12. ἐγὼ μὲν οὐκ οἶδα. ii. 2, 3. Anab. vii. 7. 10. ἀλλ' ἐγὼ μὲν, ἐφη, λέγω. Instances, indeed, are found in all the best writers, especially the Attic ones. But so little has this nicety of Greek idiom been known to the Editors, that they seem to have conspired together to cancel what they erroneously thought useless. The sense of δοξάζω, which I have adopted, occurs in John viii. 54; and is supported by most of the best recent Commentators. Σώσω may be rendered, with Pisc. and Vorst., “may put into the way of salvation.”

15. εἰ γὰρ ἡ ἀποβολή, &c.] The best Commentators are agreed that ἀποβολή is used, by a metonymy of the effect for the cause, to denote that obstinate unbelief, which caused the rejection of the Jews. The present verse connects with, and is further illustrative of, the sentiment at v. 12, and the sense is: “If their sin, which occasioned this casting away, has been the means of reconciling the world, by bringing about the death of Christ; what shall the receiving of them again into the divine favour be (whenever it shall take place), but so happy a change, both to themselves and to the Gentiles, as may, in a manner, be said to raise the whole world from death to life. Ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, by a figure common to all languages, denotes (as Turretin and Stuart explain) quoddam genus resurrectionis, something great and surprising, like what a general resurrection from the dead would be. “And since (observes Stuart) we have at Ezek. xxxvii. 1—14.

the moral renovation of the Jews, designated under the similitude of a resurrection; so it is probable that the Apostle had that passage in mind: and if so, the ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν must denote a general conversion of them to Christianity. Καταλλαγή means the occasion or means of their being reconciled. So Joseph. Ant. xiv. 11. 3. τὴν τούτου τελευτὴν ἀσφάλειαν Ὑρκάου (the means of his security) νομίζων.

16. εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχή—οἱ κλάδοι.] Here we have a continuation of the foregoing reasoning, the δὲ signifying furthermore. But on the exact nature of the imagery Commentators are not quite agreed. Ἀπαρχή denotes properly the first-fruits of the new corn, or the dough first made for bread. See Numb. xv. 17—21. But Φύραμα cannot (as some imagine) denote the rest of the grain, after the first-fruits had been presented; but (as coming from φυράω, to mix up and knead flour in bread-making) can only denote the dough; and here ἀπαρχή must mean only the cake made of the first mass of dough, and offered to God as first-fruits; and φύραμα the whole mass of dough, out of which the cake was made. The meaning intended by the Apostle is well expressed by Schoettg. and Carpz. as follows: “If now a great part of the Jews, at the beginning of the New Covenant, have, like primitive offerings of good fruit, been received, on account of their faith, into the Church of Christ, and made partakers of justification and sanctification (Acts ii. 41; iv. 4); so neither has the remaining mass of the Jews been rejected without hope of salvation, but may likewise be received into the Church of Christ, and obtain justification and sanctification; i. e. if the mass shall evince the same faith as the first-fruits.” “By holy,” observes Mr. Locke, “is here meant that relative holiness whereby any thing hath an appropriation to God.”

17. εἰ δὲ τινες] The Apostle here preoccupies an objection; namely, that branches, though from a good trunk, yet when broken off, are valueless, and can derive no esteem from the virtue of the trunk; in answering which, he paves the way for the admonition following. There is a lively image taken from engraving trees, though not after the usual mode, which is not of the wild olive into the garden olive, but the contrary; for which the Commentators assign many reasons; which, however, are rendered nugatory by a fact ascertained by the researches of Bredenkamp; namely, that it was in ancient times usual so to engraft, in order to promote fecundity.

Ἀγριέλαιος must here signify (by an ellipsis of κλάδος) a wild-olive branch. Ἐγκεντρίζω literally signifies to prick in, and is used with reference to the notch made into the stock, in order to be engrafted. Though several eminent Commentators assign to ἐν the sense of pro or loco; yet it seems rather to mean among. Thus the sense of the passage will be: 'If some of Abraham's children were cast off for their unbelief, and thou [Gentile], being a wild-olive branch, wert grafted in among them,' (i. e. the branches which remained, the believing Jews), and with them partakest of the root and fatness (i. e. the fatness of the root, per Hendiadyon) of the olive-tree, i. e. of the promises to Abraham, and the privileges of God's Church.

18. μὴ κατακαυχῶ τῶν κ.] 'do not boast against and despise.' In the clause εἰ δὲ κατακ., οὐ σὺ &c., there is an ellipsis of γινώσκει ὅτι; q. d. "Know that the Jews owe nothing to you, but you all to the Jews; since the hope of salvation was transferred from the Jews to the Gentiles, not vice versâ." (Koppe.)

19. ἐρεῖς οὖν] 'Now then thou wilt say.' The ἵνα may, with some Commentators, be used to denote the consequence, not the cause, as some others say. And thus the sense will be: 'God, by casting off the Gentiles, has made room for me.' The καλῶς, however, will not prove this; since it may be taken populariter, in a concessive sense, as we say "well; granting it to be so." So in Mark xii. 32. Luke xx. 39. John iv. 17.

20. σὺ δὲ τῇ πίστει ἔστηκας] There is an ellip. of μόνον, and the σὺ is emphatical; q. d. "But it is by faith only that thou standest," i. e. continuest in the Divine favour, into which thou hast been admitted.

—μὴ ὑψηλοφρόνει] The Greek Commentators suppose an ellip. of τοίνυν. But there is rather an Asyndeton. Φοβοῦ, i. e. lest thou shouldst, for a similar cause, be in like manner rejected.

21. τῶν κατὰ φύσιν] 'the natural branches,' i. e. the Jews; so called because naturally descended from Abraham, the root or trunk of the olive-tree. At μήπως sub. ὅρα or the like.

22. Ἴδε οὖν χρηστότητα—Θεοῦ] Render: 'See then the kindness and the severity of God.' The καὶ is, as often, for τε καὶ, 'not only—but.' The Apostle admonishes them not so to rest upon the kindness of God to them, as to grow secure, and forget his severity. The words following show the objects and grounds for the exercise of each of these attributes. Ἐὰν ἐπιμείνης τῇ χρηστ., i. e. (as Crell., Vorst., Grot., and Whitby explain) 'if thou remain in that state in which thou hast been placed by the goodness of God, through faith in Christ, by which this goodness is retained; if thou retainest God's goodness to thee, by continuing to endeavour to be worthy of it, and improving this advantage.' This explanation is confirmed by the Greek Commentators. Hence it is strange that Professor Stuart should, in his Notes, choose to render 'provided thou dost maintain a state of integrity,' as an antithesis to τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ in the following verse: alleging that χρ. may have this sense; and referring for example to Ps. xiii. 1, 3. xxxvi. 3. cxviii. 66. Sept. But in the last mentioned passage it denotes the kindness of God. And in the others, χρ. is used without the article, and in the phrase ποιεῖν χρηστότητα. Whereas here the use of the article (which has here the sense of renewed mention. See Middl. Gr. Art. iii. 1. 1.) limits the reference to the χρ. before mentioned, namely the kindness of God. The Article is found in all the MSS., and is expressed in the Pesch. Syr.

At ἐπεὶ there is an ellip. of ἂν, which (as supra v. 6. iii. 6. and often) includes that of ἄλλως.

23. The sense of this verse and the last clause of the preceding is: 'The heathens too may finally be deprived of the benefits now offered or enjoyed; and, on the other hand, the Jews be finally invested with them.' Ἐγκεντρ. may be rendered, 'will be grafted in,' which implies what may be, not what shall certainly be. Δυνατὸς γάρ, &c. The δυνατὸς is by Crell., Grot., Mackn., Rosenm., and Koppe supposed to have an adjunct notion of willing. For when God is said to be able to do a thing, there is often understood not solely His power but His will to do that which He is able. Hence it is implied that nothing but their unbelief hinders their being again received into the favour of God; "Cessante causâ cessat effectus," as Iaspis remarks.

24. εἰ γὰρ σὺ ἐκ τῆς—τῇ ἰδίᾳ ἐ.] The sense of this figurative language is: 'That the Gentiles should be brought to the felicity of Christ's kingdom was far more improbable, than that the Jews should be brought thereto, since it was originally destined for them.' The Gentile nations at large are compared to the wild-olive tree, and each of them singly to one of its branches. Παρὰ φύσιν. Some interpret this 'contrary to the order of nature,' which forbids a wild and bad tree to be engrafted on a good stock. But see Note supra v. 17 & 18. The sense should rather seem to be, 'not grafted in by nature, but by art.' Καλλιέλαιος is supposed to be a word formed by the Apostle, to correspond to ἀγριέλαιος. But Schleus. says it is found in Aristot. de Plantis i. 6.

25. The Apostle now proceeds more directly to assert the future reception of the Jews.

Γὰρ is here a particle of confirmation. It is rightly remarked by Schoettg. that μυστήριον denotes in the sacred writers, not a thing intelligible, but what lies hidden and secret, till made known by the revelation of God. The μυστήριον here meant is the future conversion and restoration of the Jews; and that the blindness and obdurate unbelief of the Jews was not universal, but in part, and will only continue till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, i. e. till their conversion be completed. The expression ἵνα μὴ ᾗτε παρ' ἑαυτοῖς φρόνιμοι is (as Grot. remarks) taken from Prov. iii. 7. μὴ ἴσθι φρόνιμος παρὰ σεαυτῷ (i. e. in thine own opinion) and Is. v. 21, συνετοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. The sense (which is variously interpreted) seems to be 'that ye may not be puffed up with an opinion of your own peculiar favour with God, and consequent privileges. At μέρους there is an ellip. of μόνον, and ἄχρις οὗ here denotes continuation, as in Rom. v. 15. xi. 8. The expression "in part to Israel," means "to some Israelites," as opposed to all at v. 20, and is (as Stuart says) used per charientismum, i. e. a softened mode of expression. Πλήρωμα is best explained as equivalent to πλήθος τῶν ἐθνῶν (as opposed to the ἡττηματὶ at v. 12.), and signifying the great bulk of the heathens, in a manner all. At εἰσέλθῃ must be supplied εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, or εἰς τὴν πίστιν.

26. σωθήσεται] i. e., as the best Commentators are agreed, 'shall be put into the way of salvation,' 'have the means of salvation bestowed on them.' See Note on Matt. i. 21. Whitby has an elaborate Dissertation on this conversion of the Jews here spoken of; of which there is a careful abridgment in Recens. Synop., together with some further remarks upon this important subject.

—καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] The words are from Is. lix. 20, and agree with the LXX., except that ἕνεκα is there used for the ἐκ here, which, indeed, Beza and Koppe suspect crept in from an abbreviation of ἕνεκα. But it were strange that it should have crept into all the

MSS. And to suppose, with Mr. Turner, that the Apostle has modified the language of the Prophet, to accommodate it to his purpose, involves a principle which should not be resorted to unnecessarily. It seems best to suppose, with Vitringa, that together with this passage of Isaiah the Apostle had in mind Ps. xiv. 7. τίς δώσει ἐκ Σιών τὸ σωτήριον, and thus blended both into one. In καὶ ἀποστρέψει, &c., the Hebrew slightly differs from the Sept., which is followed by the Apostle. But, as Vitringa observes, there is nothing of unfaithfulness, but merely a freedom of translation.

27. καὶ αὕτη—διαθήκη.] These words are, as Koppe remarks, taken from the same passage of Isaiah; though (as is not unusual in the Jewish writers) the passage is not completed; the rest being left to be supplied by the reader. The words ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν are supposed to be taken from Is. xxvii. 9. and the sense is thus expressed by Koppe: "These are the benefits which I promise them; After I shall have liberated them from the Divine punishments, I shall give my spirit to them," &c.

28. κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον—πατέρας.] These words are meant to meet a tacit objection, q. d. "It cannot be that all Israel will be saved, and experience such grace from God; since they are God's enemies, and God is theirs." To which the reply is: "They are indeed enemies; but are nevertheless beloved, though in another respect." (Crell.) Δι' ὑμᾶς the best Commentators render, "for your sakes," or advantage, viz. that the Gospel may come unto you.

—κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἐκλογὴν, &c.] The sense is, "but in respect of their election, as the posterity of a nation chosen by God for his peculiar people, in that view they are beloved." Διὰ τοὺς πατέρας, i. e. on account of, and in respect of the love which God bore to their forefathers. Whitby observes that "in this Chapter there is mention made of a double election; 1. ἐκλογὴ χάριτος, vv. 5. 7. the Gospel election; 2. ἐκλογὴ διὰ τοὺς πατέρας, an election for their fathers' sake," in which sense the whole nation of the Jews were styled the elect, Deut. iv. 27. vii. 6—8. ix. 5. Gen. xvii. 7.

29. ἀμεταμέλητα γὰρ, &c.] This assigns the reason why the Israelites even yet, on their forefathers' account, cease not to be beloved; and this is founded on the constancy of the Divine will, which decrees nothing of which the Deity can ever repent. (Koppe.) God will never repent of the promises which he made to the fathers, and therefore never change his purpose in regard to the bestowment of spiritual blessings on their offspring. (Stuart.)

30—32. The sense of this portion (which is parallel with v. 11) is as follows: "As you Gentiles, who were once disobedient to God, by idolatry, and consequently without knowledge of God (see Rom. i. 20.) have at last obtained mercy and introduction into God's Church and covenant, as it were, through the obstinate unbelief of the Jews, who crucified the Lord of life (which was the occasion of the Gospel being preached to the Gentiles); even so, they also, though now unbelieving, may obtain mercy, through your mercy [i. e. through the mercy vouchsafed to you exciting them to seek for mercy], and at length receive the Gospel from them; for God hath permitted all, both Jews and Gentiles, to be shut up and remain in unbelief, that he may have mercy on all." The term ἐλεηθῶσι is adapted to show that salvation is not of human merit, but of Divine grace. The words τῇ τούτων ἀπειθείᾳ signify, as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, "at," "on occasion of," their disobedience.

Of the words συνέκλεισε—ἀπειθείαν two interpretations are adopted. The ancients and earlier moderns, with Wets. and Carpz. render, "hath convicted all of sin, hath proved that they all lie under it," namely, by his holy law. See iii. 19, 20, 21. iii. 9. Gal. iii. 22. If this interpretation be admitted, συνέκλ. will be used by a Latinism. Other Commentators, however, as Pisc. and most of the recent ones (with the E. V.), interpret, "hath shut up all in disobedience and sin, subjected them to its control," i. e. hath permitted them to be subject to it. By τοὺς πάντας is meant mankind at large, as (it has been shown by Conybeare Bampton Lect. p. 107.) the Israelites understood the words. The passage is well paraphrased by Stuart thus: "God hath left both Jew and Gentile to fall into unbelief, or disobedience, in order that the true nature of sin might fully appear; and that he might thus magnify the riches of his grace in pardoning multiplied and repeated transgressions." Compare Rom. v. 20. sq.

33—35. Filled with a deep sense of human demerit and Divine mercy, the Apostle concludes by breaking forth into admiration at the unfathomable depth, and infinite abundance of the wisdom and mercy of God, evinced in making first the rejection of the Jews a means of calling the Gentiles; and then working upon the contumacious Jews by his mercy shown to the Gentiles. On this noble epiphonema, where ὦ βάθος πλούτου is almost Pindarically bold, see Bp. Jebb, Sacra. Lit. p. 117, seqq. who supposes the Apostle to have had in mind Ps. xxvi. 6. ἡ δικαιοσύνη—πολλή. Job xi. 7, 8. v. 9. xxxvi. 22, 23. Jerem. xxiii. 18. Is. xl. 13—15. Job xxiii. 18. xli. 2. See also Wisd. ix. 17. Eccles. xviii. 2—5. The learned Prelate, with his accustomed taste, remarks that "the first line proposes the subject. The notion of depth (continues he) as a quality attributed alike to God's riches, and wisdom, and knowledge, is first expanded in the next couplet. Riches, wisdom, and knowledge are then, in a fine epanodos, enlarged upon in an inverted order." It may seem strange that three particulars should have been thus made, when our authorized Version (in common with almost every other, ancient and modern and most Commentators), makes but two; πλούτου being regarded as only intensive of βάθος, and as standing for πλούσιον. But the method in question is supported by Chrys., Theophyl., and Theodor., and adopted by some modern Critics, as Schleus. and Mr. Rose ap. Parkh. And it is placed almost beyond doubt by Eph. iii. 8. τὸν ἀνεξιχνίαστον πλοῦτον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, for πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος, or χρηστότητος, and Phil. iv. 19. κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτοῦ, also by Philo in two passages adduced by Schleus. The sense in all those passages, and, no doubt, in the present, is best explained, not riches, but abundant goodness and grace.

By τὰ κρίματα the most eminent Commentators understand the governance of God's providence; and by the ὁδοὶ the ways by which his plans are carried into effect. "His wisdom and ways (says Locke) are far above their comprehension; and will they take upon themselves to advise Him what to do? which is the purport of v. 34." That of v. 35. ἢ τίς προέδωκεν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀνταπ. αὐτῷ is well expressed by Locke: "Is God in their debt? Let them say for what, and He will repay it them." The passage, formed on Job xli. 3., is (as Stuart remarks) designed to have a bearing on all claims to the Divine favour, which can be preferred on the score of desert or services rendered to God; and repress a spirit to which the Jews were too prone."

36. This verse is suspended upon a negative clause, involved in the interrogation of the preceding one; i. e. [Surely no one]; for of Him, &c., and consequently He may dispose of all according to his Sovereign Will. The verse may be thus paraphrased: "For from Him, as their original Creator, all things are derived; through Him, as their continual preserver and constant governor, all things consist and subsist; and to Him, as their ultimate end, all things and all actions tend; so as to contribute to his praise and glory, illustrate his perfections, and finally accomplish his wise and benevolent purposes. Let then his majesty, wisdom, and goodness, be magnified and adored for ever! Amen." The passage ὅτι ἐξ αὐτοῦ—τὰ πάντα seems to have been imitated by Marc. Anton. xiv. "Ὁ φύσις! ἐκ σοῦ πάντα, ἐν σοὶ (by thee) πάντα, εἰς σὲ πάντα. Wets. compares Oppian Hal. i. 409. Ζεῦ μάκαρ, ἐς δέ σε πάντα καὶ ἐκ σεθεν ἑρρίζονται (I conj. ἑρρίζονται). In reference to the three links of this glorious chain, Grotius compares Theocr. Idyll. 'Ανδρῶν δ' αὖ Ἡτολεμαῖος ἐνὶ πρωτοῖσι λεγέσθω, καὶ πύματος, καὶ μέσος" which was probably in the mind of Milton in his noble line:—"Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end."

XII. Having now completed the doctrinal and argumentative part of his Epistle, the Apostle proceeds, in conclusion (as is usual in all his Epistles), to the practical part; urging, for the benefit of both the Jewish and Gentile converts, exhortations to the moral duties of justified Christians. "This Parænesis (observes Carpz.) consists of three sections. The first inculcates the general duties of Christians, which respect all Christians, of whatever rank or degree, station or dignity. (C. 12.) The second treats of political or social duties, such as are to be observed with respect to their superiors, their equals, and themselves. (C. 13.) The third treats of private duties, oeconomic and ceremonial, such as are to be observed by Christians in their social intercourse with each other, especially towards those who have not hitherto been convinced, or are as yet weak in the faith."

First, he beseeches the believers to lead a life worthy of such immense mercies and benefits; to present their bodies to God a living sacrifice, as opposed to the dead ones under the Law; holy, in opposition to external and legal ones, and acceptable to God, in allusion to the selection of the victims for sacrifice; which, in order to be acceptable to God, were required to be immaculate.

1. παραστήσαι.] The best Commentators are agreed that there is here a sacrificial metaphor, for προσφέρειν, admove, Heb. תָּמַנְתָּ, Σώματα is used in accommodation to the preceding metaphor. Of ζώσαν the foregoing general explanation is perhaps inferior to that of Photius and Iaspis, who suppose the expression to mean the moral (i. e. tropical and spiritual), sacrifice of the Gospel, in opposition to the corporeal and ceremonial one of the Law. Θυσίαν signifies the victim.

— τὴν λογικὴν λατρ.] The best mode of construing is to regard these words as put in apposition with the preceding, by an ellip. of οὖσαν; q. d. for this is your reasonable service. On the sense, however, of λογικὴν the Commentators are not agreed. By Erasmi., Beza, Grot., Zeg., Hamm., Mackn., Schleus., and others, it is explained rational, as opposed to the irrational rites of heathenism, or the corporeal ones of Judaism. This interpretation, however, is liable to objection, and the preference seems to be due to that of the ancients, and of the moderns, Est., Mede, Deyling, Olear., Wets., Dodwell, Carpz., Koppe, Rosenm., Wahl, Iaspis, and Bretschneider, who explain it "spiritual, offered up with the spirit and heart," as opposed to lifeless rites and ceremonies. Perhaps, however, the two interpretations, which, in some measure, merge into each other, may be conjoined, i. e. rational and spiritual service.

2. μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε—μεταμ.] These verbs may be taken in the reciprocal sense, "do not conform yourselves to." I would compare Thucyd. v. 103. μηδὲ ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πολλοῖς, conformari ad multitudinem. The μεταμ. enjoins the exercise of our own vigorous exertions to obtain this transformation, in dependence on the aids of the Holy Spirit, without which the work will never be effected.

— εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν, &c.] The Apostle, it should seem, now means to point out the most remarkable effects of this ἀνακαινώσις τοῦ νοῦς; namely (according to the best interpretation of δοκιμ.) the proving, trying, and approving what the will of God is (or what he would have us both believe and practise); what is good and acceptable to Him, and perfect, where the nouns (for such they are τὸ ἀγαθόν, &c.) are in apposition with, and exegetical of, τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, what is good, acceptable, and perfect. The sentiment, therefore (as Stuart observes), is, that a renewed mind is essential to a successful inquiry of practical and experimental Christian truth, in its full extent, τέλειον.

Διὰ τῆς χάρ. τῆς δοθ. μ. Most modern Commentators explain this "by virtue of my Apostolical office and authority." But since Θεοῦ must (as Phot. remarks) be thus understood, which would be very harsh, I prefer, with the Greek Commentators, to explain it "by the Divine grace," the gift of inspiration, which authorizes me to direct and admonish. Παντὶ τῷ ὄντι ἐν ὑμῖν seems to be a popular idiom, for ἐκάστῳ ὑμῶν, such as we find in Eph. i. 1. and elsewhere. The admonition, it will be observed, is rendered more striking by the paronomasia between φρονεῖν, ὑπερφρονεῖν, and σωφρονεῖν, of which I have, in Rec. Syn. adduced examples from Thucyd. and other writers. The words παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν are added to strengthen the sense. Grot. compares ὑψηλοφρονεῖν; and Koppe, 2 Macc. ix. 12. ὑπερηφανῶς φρονεῖν. I add μειζον φρονεῖν in Thucyd. In φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφ. we have an acute dictum per paronomasiam. Ἐκάστῳ ὡς is for ὡς ἐκάστω, as ii. 27. Or there is an ellip. of οὕτως. The πίστεως is explained by the ancient and many eminent Interpreters of the χάρισμα at ver. 6, namely, the extraordinary gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. So Eph. iv. 7. ἐνὶ δὲ ἐκάστῳ ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ Χριστοῦ. By others it is understood of the measure of religious faith and knowledge allotted to each. Both senses may, in some measure, be conjoined. See Carpz. ap. Recens. Synop.

4, 5. καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν ἐνὶ σώμ. &c.] A familiar illustration of the subject, from a comparison (by allusion) of the natural body with the body politic or social; as in the well-known Apologue of Menenius Agrippa in Livy, ii. 32. See Bp. Sanderson's Sermons ad Populum, p. 193 sub. fin.

—οἱ πολλοί] is not, as Koppe imagines, for πάντες, but signifies, "we the many, οἱ ὄντες πολλοί, we who are many." See 1 Cor. x. 17. The sense is, "In like manner we Christians, who though many, are one body, have been united into and form one body (i.e. in respect of) Christ, considered with a reference to him as the head of the whole society." Ὁ δὲ καὶ εἰς is an anomalous idiom, found also at 2 Macc. v. 36, borrowed, it should seem, from the common dialect, and standing for οἱ καὶ ἕνα, or εἰς ἕκαστος καὶ ἑαυτὸν.

6. ἔχοντες δὲ χαρίσματα, &c.] The construction in this and many of the subsequent verses is anomalous; and the Commentators endeavour in vain to reduce it to any regularity. Photius ap. Œcum. has been most successful, whom see in Recens. Synop. Ἐχοντες is a Nomin. pendens, and must be taken at each member ἀπὸ κοινοῦ, its sense being adapted to circumstances. Be that as it may, the general intent of the Apostle is clear,—which is to excite them to the zealous exercise of the gifts of the Spirit; so, however, that those who enjoyed the higher kinds should not interfere with one another. See v. 8, and 1 Cor. xii. 4. sqq. At εἴτε προφ. sub. ἔχει, ἐχέτω αὐτήν, or ἔχοντες, ἔχομεν. On the nature of this προφητεία there has been much discussion. See Recens. Synop. It should seem that the προφήτης denoted not merely an Interpreter of Scripture, as some imagine; but one who, by Divine inspiration, and therefore authoritatively, explained and set forth all the mysteries of the Gospel, and publicly preached and exhorted, for the purposes of Christian edification and consolation; as 1 Cor. xiii. 2.

This is directed to be done κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως, which is not to be taken, as the phrase is used by Theological writers, of the general plan of revealed truth, nor be supposed to refer to any article of faith. On its exact sense, however, Commentators differ. See Rec. Syn. and Dr. Campbell's Dissertation, iv. § 13. One thing is clear and admitted, that κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν means pro ratâ portione, pro ratione, in proportion to. And τῆς πίστεως may be interpreted (with some eminent moderns) of the χαρίσματα, just before mentioned; or rather, with the ancients and some moderns, "the measure of faith" at v. 3. So Stuart takes it to mean, "Let the prophets speak [only] as they have faith [imparted to them] to do it." The Apostle (as Phot., Beza, and Crell. observe) first lays down προφητεία and διακονία each as a genus; and then enumerates their species,—of the former two, of the latter three.

7. διακονίαν.] The words διάκονος, διακονεῖν, and διακονία, though general terms, and used of the Apostles themselves, are often in the N. T. taken of some certain specific office undertaken in the cause of the Christian religion (compare 1 Cor. xii. 5. 2 Cor. ix. 1.), and exercised by those Christians who did not so much employ themselves in explaining the doctrines of the Gospel, as in managing the external and temporal affairs of the Church, and of individuals. On the kinds of Deacons see Suic. Thes. i. 862, and Bingham's Eccl. Ant. ii. 20. At διακονίαν supply ἔχῃ, from the preceding ἔχοντες; and at ἐν τῇ διακονίᾳ supply ἔστω, as Ælian V. Hist. ὄντες ἐν γεωργίᾳ, and 1 Tim. iv. 15. ἐν τούτοις ἰοῦσι.

8. ὁ παρακαλῶν.] There has been no little debate as to the respective senses of ὁ διδάσκων and ὁ παρακαλῶν, which some regard as meaning the same thing; while others take them to relate to different offices. It should seem that as ὁ προφητεύων is plainly distinguished both from ὁ διδάσκων and ὁ παρακαλῶν, so that these two are also meant to be distinct. In what, however, the distinction consisted, it is not easy to say with certainty. It seems most probable that (as Stuart suggests) the ὁ διδάσκων was an ordinary stated Teacher, who taught according to the degree of religious knowledge which he possessed: and that the παρακαλῶν was an Exhorter, i. e. one who urged men to the practical duties, dwelt upon the promises and threatenings of the Gospel, and thus aided and completed the work which the διδάσκαλος had begun. Thus the expression will be equivalent to the ἀντιλήψεις of 1 Cor. xii. 28.

On the next words ὁ μεταδιδούς—ἐν ἰλαρότῃτι there is even yet greater diversity of opinion. Prof. Stuart has here an Excursus of no ordinary length, which abounds in information, but does not, I apprehend, satisfactorily settle the question as to the interpretation. He thinks that by ὁ μεταδιδούς, ὁ προϊστάμενος, and ὁ ἐλεῶν, the Apostle refers to private individuals in the Church, conspicuous for their attention to the duties respectively indicated by those words, the management of the external temporal affairs of the Church, including the relief of the sick and poor. In one thing I entirely agree with him, namely,—that the Commentators had gone upon an unfounded assumption when they took for granted, rather than proved, that ὁ μεταδιδούς, ὁ προϊστάμενος, and ὁ ἐλεῶν designate officers or offices in the Church. Vitrina, indeed, long ago, saw that in the case of ὁ ἐλεῶν; and it is true of all three. And therefore to endeavour to draw any parallel with the gifts and offices stated by the Apostle at 1 Cor. xii. 28, is to needlessly embarrass the subject. For my own part, I am decidedly of opinion that the scope of the words ὁ μεταδιδούς—ἰλαρότῃτι is to give an admonition to the persons who exercised the gifts, or discharged the offices above mentioned. According to this view, there can be no difficulty in referring ὁ ἐλεῶν to the διάκονος, with allusion to that alacrity so requisite in the due discharge of so onerous and invidious an office. As to the ὁ μεταδιδούς and ὁ προϊστάμενος, they belong, I apprehend, both to the προφήται and the διδάσκαλοι, and have reference to the then two great divisions of the ministerial office, namely, teaching and governing. Thus the two offices are mentioned distinctly at 1 Cor. xii. 28, and also at 1 Thess. v. 12. ἔρωτῶμεν ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, εἰδέναι τοὺς κοπιῶντας ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ προϊστάμενους ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ νοσητούντας, where the κοπ. is equivalent to the διδασκ. in the present passage, and the νοσητούντας corresponds to the παρακαλ. here. This is confirmed by 1 Tim. v. 17. οἱ καλῶς προσεστώτες πρεσβύτεροι διπλῆς τιμῆς ἀξιοῦσθωσαν· μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ, i. e. who were both προεστώτες and διδάσκαλοι. It is scarcely necessary to observe that in ὁ μεταδιδούς the expression (which means not “he who distributes,” for that would be ὁ διαδιδούς), but “he who imparts,” is quite as applicable to the communication of spiritual knowledge, as of worldly goods. So Rom. i. 11. ἵνα τι μεταδῶ χάρισμα ὑμῖν πνευματικόν. In this view, ἐν ἀπλότῃτι may very well mean, “in simplicity and sincerity,” i. e. not δολῶν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. So 2 Cor. i. 12. ἡ γὰρ καύχησις ἡμῶν αὕτη ἐστὶ—ὅτι ἐν ἀπλότῃτι καὶ εἰλικρινείᾳ Θεοῦ ἀνεστράφημεν—πρὸς ὑμᾶς. See also 2 Cor. xi. 3. I would only further observe, that the Apostle, in this passage, by χαρίσματα seems to advert not to the extraordinary and miraculous gifts only, but also, as in the case of the παρακαλῶν, and perhaps the διδάσκαλος, to the ordinary graces of the Holy Spirit.

9. Now follow the private virtues to be cultivated by all Christians. Ἀγάπη denotes the Christian philanthropy described at 1 Cor. xiii. 1. — ἀποστύγοντες, &c.] The construction here and in the following verses is very irregular, and like that at Heb. xiii. 5. To take the participles, with Koppe and others, for verbs, is explaining nothing. It is better to suppose an anastrophe, the participles being used as if suspended on some verb which occurred in the preceding sentence. Had the Apostle written ἀγαπᾶτε ἀνυπόκριτως, the construction would have been regular. The terms ἀποστύγ. and κολλώμενοι are very strong. Theophyl. explains the former by ἐκ ψυχῆς μισούντες; and Pareus, the latter, “non bonum frigide probantes, sed flagrantissimè complectentes.”

10. τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ—φιλόστοργοι.] Sub. όντες. From philanthropy (which is chiefly conversant in kind actions) the Apostle rises to something higher, and exhorts them to be φιλόστοργοι τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ; where τῇ φιλ. is a Dative of instrument, denoting the mode in which we ought to be φιλόστοργοι. Φιλόστοργος is properly used of the natural affection subsisting between parents and children; but it is also employed to denote tender affection generally.

— τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλήλους προηγ.] The force of this injunction seems to be mistaken by almost all Commentators, who understand it of humility; which would here be out of place. The context rather suggests the idea of a readiness to treat others with respect, civility, and kindness, even anticipating them in it: a sense of τιμῇ frequent in the N. T., and of which many examples are adduced in Schleus. Lex.; and, among the rest, the present passage. This interpretation, too, is supported by the authority of Chrys. and the Greek Commentators. And so, I find, Crellius, who remarks: “Loquitur de honore qui ex quâdam benevolentia et humanitate oritur, qui cum in externis et consuetis signis, tum in multis aliis humanitatis officiis positus est.” See Acts xxviii. 10. Nay, Calvin admits that the expression may denote omne genus officii. And Schleus. says that it denotes "omnia humanitatis et honestatis officia;" referring to this passage. The kind of τμη will, of course, vary according to the station of the person to whom it is shown; but even those in very unequal stations may and ought to lead each other onward to the exercise of this τμη.

11. There has been no little debate as to the sense, and indeed the reading, in this verse. It is not agreed whether the clauses are to be regarded as containing separate and independent injunctions, or as belonging to some other, and connected together. Of those who regard them in the former light, some suppose τῇ σπουδῇ μη ὀκν. to contain an admonition to diligence in their worldly callings. But, surely, that would suppose the sense to be very imperfectly developed. It should rather seem that the words τῇ σπουδῇ—ζέοντες are closely connected together, and are not an independent admonition, but meant to strengthen another with which they are connected in the context. Thus some, as Koppe, refer them to the admonition following, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλ.; of course, understanding σπουδῇ of spiritual concerns. A method, however, not a little harsh. It is far more natural to refer the words (with Chrys. and Theophyl., of the ancients, and Crell., Calvin, and R. Stephens, of the moderns) to what precedes, and suppose them intended to mark the manner in which the foregoing duties (of brotherly love and kindly attention) should be performed; namely, with active and zealous diligence. The word σπουδῇ is used, on this very subject, at 2 Cor. viii. 16. τὴν αὐτὴν σπουδὴν ὑπὲρ ὕμων. The Article (not used at Rom. xii. 8. 2 Pet. i. 5. and elsewhere) has the use of renewed mention; q. d. in this your diligent endeavour. And if it be asked how σπουδῇ can be ὀκνηρά, we may answer (with Crell.), that though no one can be diligently slothful, or slothfully diligent, yet "eadem orationis formā, in tradendis illis præceptis, uti voluit Apostolus, et in hoc quidem præcepto contrarium per contrarium illustrare." Thus the phrase τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες is meant to be exegetical of the preceding; and we may compare Acts xviii. 25. ζέων τῷ πνεύματι.

In determining the import of the words following τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, the reading has first to be settled. Now all the early Editions, except the Ed. Pr., with almost all the MSS. and the best Versions, have Κυρίῳ, which was edited by Beza, Schmid, and the Elzevir Editor, and was retained by Bengel., Wets., and Matthæi. Καιρῷ, however, was recalled by Griesb. and Koppe; but Κυρίῳ was finally restored by Tittm. and Vater: and, I think, rightly; since the external evidence for Καιρῷ is exceedingly slender (only that of about three MSS. and a few inferior Versions and Fathers); and the internal not superior to that of Κυρίῳ; for although it may seem entitled to preference, as being the more difficult reading, yet that Canon has its exceptions; and especially where the reading may be accounted for from a mistake in decyphering an abbreviation (which Matth., Wets., and Rinck say is the case here), or when the reading, though it seem the more difficult, yet may be suspected to have arisen from alteration, as being more suitable to the context, according at least to the view of the Emendatores. Now such might easily happen in the present instance; for notwithstanding what the above Critics urge, καιρῷ is not unsuitable to the context, nor does it yield a sense unworthy of the sacred writer. See Calvin. Yet I believe Κυρίῳ to be the genuine reading; it being more in the manner of St. Paul. And it is only requisite to perceive the scope of the words τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλ., to discover the great propriety of Κυρίῳ. Now it was well seen by Chrys. and Theophyl., of the ancients, and Tolet., Calvin, Whitby, and Wets., of the moderns, that the words are not meant to inculcate an independent and general precept (as the Critics who altered the word, thought), but to enforce the injunctions foregoing, to brotherly love and kindly attention, on the ground that whatever should be done, would be done unto the Lord, and would be rewarded by him. So Matt. x. 40—42. ὁ δεχόμενος ὑμᾶς ἐμὲ δέχεται—οὐ μὴ ἀπολήσῃ τὸν μισθὸν αὐτοῦ.

12. τῇ ἐλπίδι χαίροντες, &c.] Of this passage various views have been taken. See Recens. Synop. I am now inclined to think that it has no connexion with the preceding, but treats on a separate subject,—the bearing up under affliction by the power of hope, and the support and comfort of earnest prayer. A view of the passage confirmed by Chrys. and Theophyl. See also Scott. Προσκαρτ. is a very strong term occurring also in Acts i. 14. vi. 4. Bretschneider thinks the construction at τῇ θλίψει unprecedented; which it certainly would be, if θλίψει were in regimen with ὑπομένοντες. But, in fact, it is not; the dative being dependent on some preposition understood, as ἐν or ἐπί. This absolute use of ὑπομένω occurs at Matt. x. 22. 2 Tim. ii. 12. James v. 11. perhaps formed on Dan. xii. 12. μακάριος ὁ ὑπομένων.

13. ταῖς χρεΐαις—διώκοντες.] Here is enjoined charity to the poorer Christians, and hospitality to strangers, especially, as we may suppose, preachers of the Gospel (See Heb. xiii. 2.); a kindness which the want of inns, and the utter neglect of their former connexions, would make particularly acceptable. Διώκ. is a strong term, which may be rendered, "studiously cultivating."

14. After treating of brotherly love, charity, and hospitality, the Apostle proceeds to enjoin the duties of patience under injurious treatment, intermixing admonitions to the kindred duties of sympathy, humility, and the cultivation of concord and peace with all men. The terms εὐλογ. and καταρ. are of the strongest sort, and the emphasis arising from the same thing being expressed affirmatively and negatively, imparts much energy to the sentiment.

15. χαίρειν, &c.] “Jam abrupto illo constructionis filo, inseritur post Imperativum ejus loco Infinitivus, et dein rursus participia ita adhibentur, ac si vel præcedentibus vel sequentibus juncta essent.” (Vater.) On this idiom see Win. Gr. Gr. § 37, 7, who would supply δεῖ. On the sentiment see Recens. Synop., where to the parallel passages adduced by Wets. from the Classical writers I have added several others.

16. τὸ αὐτὸ—φρονούντες.] This injunction, as appears from the context, relates not to unity of sentiment, but of disposition. See Recens. Synop. Μὴ τὰ ὑψηλὰ φρονούντες is equivalent to μὴ ὑψηλοφρονεῖτε at ii. 21., and is best rendered by Tyndal, “be not high-minded.” With respect to the words τοῖς ταπεινοῖς συναπαγόμενοι (the sense of which is disputed), they seem to mean, “Holding intercourse with the lowly; not proudly standing aloof from them.” The verb, especially in this sense, is rare; and it is well explained by Chrys. συμπεριφρόμενοι The ratio metaphoræ is this:—A person is said συναπάγασθαι when he is met with by a crowd, and is hurried away with them in the direction they are going. But as passive verbs are often used in a reciprocal sense, so συναπάγασθαι may signify to yield oneself to a multitude, and go with them. Now this admits of a good as well as a bad sense; in the former of which it is here taken, and figuratively denotes to condescend to; which will express humility in all its various offices, “a humble disposition.” The clause following μὴ γίν. φρόν. π. ἐ. admonishes against that self-conceit which excludes all humility. It is founded on Prov. iii. 7. Is. v. 21.

17. The Apostle, having shown how studiously Christians ought to cultivate peace and concord one with another, proceeds to teach how they ought to do it with other men. (Crell.) He at the same time inculcates forbearance towards enemies, and patience in supporting the injuries inflicted by them, as opposed to that thirst of vengeance, which only serves to perpetuate hatred, and inflame animosity. (Koppe.) Sentiments parallel to this of μηδενὶ κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ ἀποδ. are adduced by the Commentators from the Classical writers; I have in Recens. Synop. added others.

estimation of all men [whether Christians or heathens];” with which compare 2 Cor. viii. 21. Phil. iv. 8. Προνοεῖσθαι καλοῦ occurs at 1 Tim. ii. 8. and Sext. Emp. ap. Wets.; and προν. τοῦ δικαίου in Joseph. Ant. ix. 1, 1. where πρόν. is for πρόνοια ποιεῖσθαι. The syntax with the Accus. is thought rare; but I have adduced several examples in Recens. Synop., especially from Xenophon. I would also compare Prov. iii. 4. (which passage seems to have been in the mind of the Apostle), προνοῦ καλὰ ἐνώπιον Κυρίου καὶ ἀνθρώπων. In such a case the verb has a signif. pregnantem, including the notion of doing, as if we were forecasting. This admonition is parenthetical, and has reference both to what precedes, and what follows.

18. εἰ δυνατόν—εἰρηνεύοντες.] An injunction to a virtue nearly allied to that of forbearance; the striving to live at peace with all men [both Christians and non-Christians]. In εἰ δυνατόν and τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν (where supply κατὰ and μέρος) “as far as you are concerned,” the latter qualifies and explains the former. In εἰρην. the endeavour is to be understood. The limitation shows (what general experience confirms), that it is not possible to live at peace with all, for when “we speak of peace, they make ready for war,” Ps. cxx. 7. The full substance of what is here meant by εἰρηνεύειν is ably stated by Dr. Barrow, Works, vol. I. Serm. 29, on the present text. He there shows, 1. that it is not barely a negation of doing or suffering harm, or an abstinence from strife and violence; but a positive amity, a disposition to perform such kind offices, without which good correspondence among men cannot subsist. 2. That it implies not some few transitory performances, proceeding from caprice, but a stable condition, a continual cessation from injury, and a promptitude to do kind offices. 3. That it supposes a reciprocity not only in performing good and forbearing to do bad offices, but a receiving the like treatment from others. 4. That it imports not only an outward cessation from violence and a demonstration of amity, but an inward purpose of continuing therein. Thus the being at peace differs only, in degree of obligation, and latitude of object, from the state of friendship properly so called.

19. In this verse the pronouns are emphatic, and the scope of the whole is to forbid private retaliation, enjoining the injured party to leave vengeance to God, or to the human judge acting for God. The clause δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ,

however, admits of two senses. The ὁργή may be referred to the person injured; in which case δότε τόπον will mean, "let it go, defer venting it," give space to that anger, which is a furor brevis, and may thus have time to cool. So the Arabic Version, Ambros., De Dieu, and Surenh. But no such sense can be shown to be inherent in the words; neither would it be suitable to what follows, "for it is written," &c. It is therefore better, with the ancient and earlier modern Commentators, to refer the ὁργή to God; q. d. leave it to the wrath of God to avenge you, or to him who is properly the minister of vengeance, as representative of God. This I would confirm and illustrate from Eurip. Suppl. 511. ἐξαρκέσας ἦν Ζεὺς ὁ τιμωρούμενος ἡμᾶς δ' ὑβρίζειν οὐκ ἐχρὴν τοιήνδ' ὕβριν, and Phocyl. xiii. 72. μὴ μιμοῦ κακότητα, Δίκη δ' ἀπό- λειψον ἄμυναν, Πεισῶ μὲν γὰρ ὄνειαρ, ἔρις δ' ἔρων ἀντιφυντεύει.

In the quotation just after, the Apostle neither follows the Sept. (which is here very inaccurate), nor the Hebrew; but forms something founded on both; which, however, represents the full sense. The pronouns are highly emphatic. The words λέγει Κύριος form no part of the quotation, but are added (as often elsewhere) to point out the speaker.

20. ἐάν οὖν—κεφ. αὐτοῦ.] Taken verbatim from Prov. xxv. 21, 22. The Hebrew has nothing corresponding to τοῦτο ποιῶν, which was added by the Translator to make the sense plainer. The ancient Commentators have well remarked that there is here a sort of climax, q. d. "I not only exhort you to forbearance, and a striking after peace; abstaining from private vengeance; but I enjoin you to do good to your enemy, by performing the common offices of humanity to him, if he should need them." Of the words following, ἄνθρακας αὐτοῦ, &c., there are two interpretations almost equally entitled to be adopted. 1. That of the Greek Fathers and most of the earlier modern Commentators, as also Wets., Rosenm., Koppe, Locke, Schleus., and others: "By so doing, thou wilt, if he persevere in his enmity and injury, bring down an increased wrath and enmity from God." Such is undoubtedly the sense of the phrase in the passage of Proverbs, and wherever it occurs in the O. T.; and as the words preceding treat of the Divine vengeance, it is very suitable: nor is this sentiment liable to any objection, when properly understood; for, as Locke remarks, "the persevering malice of the injurer is supposed." According to the 2d interpretation (adopted by Jerome and Hilary, of the ancients, and by many eminent moderns up to the present time), there is supposed to be a metaphor taken from fusing metals; the meaning being, "Thou shalt melt down his enmity, and soften him to kindness," as metals melted by covering the crucible with hot burning coals. And this seems supported by the admonition following νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν; though the context, in a passage consisting of so many separate and independent injunctions, is not decisive. And the admonition in question may be an independent one, pointing to a step higher in the climax, and intended to prevent any misunderstanding of the foregoing, as if giving countenance to procuring evil to one's enemy. Upon the whole, however, the preference may perhaps be due to that interpretation which seems required by the context. Either may be considered more probable than that of others (as Augustin, Hamm., Doddr., Carpz., Ammon., &c.), who take the expression to designate the pains of contrition. With the noble sentiment of subduing malice by kindness and benefits, Wets. compares several parallel ones in the Classical writers; and I have adduced not a few in Recens. Synop.

XIII. This Chapter forms the second section of the practical part of the Epistle; in which are inculcated the moral duties of all Christians, commencing with those towards magistrates and governors; an injunction, considering the seditious spirit of the Jews and Jewish Christians, very necessary. Here, after explaining the nature and Divine origin of government, (telling them that all governments derived the power they had from God, though they had not the frame of the government from Him, as the Jews had) he exhorts the Christians to faithfully and cheerfully perform their duty in this respect. Similar admonitions are found at Tit. iii. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14.

1. πᾶσα ψυχὴ.] So the Heb. כָּל נֶפֶשׁ, every individual without exception, in whatever rank of subjects. Ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχ., "the magistrates set in authority, celsis potestatibus;" so οἱ ὑπερέχοντες at v. 3, and οἱ ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντες at 1 Tim. ii. 2.

— αἱ δὲ οὐσαι ἐξουσίαι.] Including rulers and sovereigns not only de jure, but de facto. The ἐξουσία is not found in six MSS., the Vulg., and some other Versions and Latin Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. But without good reason; for though it has been thought that the word was added by the librarii, yet it is more probable that it should have been omitted in six MSS. (having for the most part a common source) than that the Apostle should fall into omission which would involve such great harshness. As to the Versions, they are no evidence, since the idiom of the Latin would rather require the omission of the word; and the other Versions are such as chiefly follow the Vulg.

— ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τετ.] By this it is only meant, that they are permitted to hold the office they hold by the disposing Providence of God;

though mediately appointed by the authority, or invested with it by the consent, of man.

2. ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος] “he who sets himself in array against.” See Note on Acts xviii. 6. The metaphor seems accommodated to the τεταγμ. just before, as that was to ὑποτασσεσθαι. So Epict. 29. ὡς ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τεταγμένους εἰς ταύτην τὴν τάξιν. Διαταγή, “constitution or ordinance.” So Ezra iv. 11, and διάταγμα at Heb. xi. 3. Κρίμα signifies condemnation, implying punishment, not merely temporal (as some ancient and modern Commentators explain; for that is at variance with the context) but Divine. Ἐαυτοῖς may seem pleonastic; but it is expressed to strengthen the sense.

3. φόβος] “terriculamentum,” cause of fear; an idiom like terror in Latin, frequent both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. So in an Inscription cited by Wets. Εἰμὶ κριτῆς γὰρ ἡπιος Ἰσχυδίκους, τοῖς δ' ἀδικούσι δέος. Ἐργῶν is for ἔργατῶν, where the Apostle in οὐκ εἰσὶ φόβος τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔ. describes what is usually, and what ought always to be, the case.

— μὴ φοβεῖσθαι.] On this use of μὴ see Win. Gr. p. 156. Hoogeve. says it here differs from οὐ, in this, that οὐ would have been denying the whole of the sentence, οὐ θέλεις φοβεῖσθαι, whereas μὴ only denies τὸ φοβεῖσθαι; i. e. “is it then thy wish to live exempt from the fear of the power?” Ἐπαινον. Implying favour, and, as the case may be, reward. I would here compare Menander ap. Grotii Excerpt. p. 761. Νόμον φοβηθεῖς, μὴ παραχθήσῃ νόμῳ.

4. εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν.] This suggests another reason, namely, that he is not only the appointed minister of God to us,—but is such for good, i. e. both natural, civil, and moral, as the Commentators show.

— τὴν μάχ. φορεῖ] i. e. “possesses the power of life and death,” which was represented by the Governors having a sword carried before them. Ἐκδικος, “an avenger.” The word is scarcely found elsewhere, except in the Greek Translators of the O. T. and in Aristæus. Εἰς ὀργήν. The words are not, as Koppe imagines, redundant, but correspond to εἰς ἀγαθόν.

5. ἀνάγκη.] The necessity here is not absolute, but hypothetical, i. e. as Schleus. explains, “quæ est e nexu rerum humanarum inter se invicem, et ipsâ naturâ humanâ.” Thus it is equivalent to καθῆκόν ἐστι, or δεῖ, (of which idiom several examples are adduced by Wets. from the Classical writers,) for the obedience in question is plainly political, not religious; and the words following suggest the motives; viz. not only through dread of the ὀργή, or penalty annexed to disobedience, but διὰ τὴν συνειδήσιν, “for conscience sake,” through religious motives. Thus disobedience, as Hardy says, involves not only a breach of law, but a sin.

6. Of the two γὰρ's, assigning the reasons why taxes should be paid to rulers, the first refers to the high usefulness of rulers; the second urges that they are appointed by God to a ministration which, upon the whole, is highly beneficial to men. See Dr. Barrow's Sermon on 1 Tim. ii. 1 & 2, where at § 5. he observes that to princes and governors we stand indebted for the greatest benefits of common life. “They (continues he) necessarily take much care and trouble, and are exposed to many hazards for our advantage. To their industry and vigilance, under God, we owe the fair administration of justice; the protection of right and innocence; the preservation of order and peace; the encouragement of goodness, and correction of wickedness; for they are God's ministers continually attending on these very things. And considering the mischiefs issuing from want of government, we may say that he must be a very bad governor, to whom the words of Tertullus might not without flattery be applied.” At φόρους τελεῖτε must be supplied αὐτοῖς; and (as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed) the αὐτὸ τοῦτο must be referred not to φόρους τελεῖν, (as commonly supposed, and even Koppe explains) but to τὸ λειτουργεῖν τοῦ Θεοῦ, which is included in λειτουργοί. On the senses of λειτουργοί see Note on λειτουργία at Luke i. 23. Now without the payment of taxes the ends of the λειτουργία could not be attained; for, as Tacitus cited by Koppe observes, “Nec quies gentium sine armis, nec arma sine stipendiis, nec stipendia sine tributis haberi queunt.” And yet it is God's will that the λειτουργία should be performed, and consequently that the taxes necessary to that purpose should be paid.

7. ἀπόδοτε—ὀφειλάς] “whatever is due, both physically and morally.” At τῷ some supply αἰτούντι: others ὀφείλετε, taking the τῷ for ᾧ: both methods involving some harshness.

As to the difference between φόρος and τέλος, the former denoted the land-tax and the capitation tax, and is nearly the same with the κηνσος at Luke xx. 21. The τέλη were the vectigalia, and customs levied on the imports and exports. Again, φόβος may denote the reverential homage due to kings and governors; τιμὴ the respect due to all who are in authority.

8. μηδενὶ—ἀλλήλους.] The Apostle takes occasion, from the word ὀφειλάς, to pass from what respects the political law to that which regards morals and the mutual offices of Christians one to another; and shows that these precepts, as they had been valid before Moses, so now also did they remain, but with the glorious supplementa of the Christian dispensation. (Grot.) The general scope of the sentence is plain; but there has been some doubt as to the details. De Dieu, Koppe, and Rosenm. take ὀφείλετε in the Indicative. But that is at variance with the context, which is wholly occupied with injunctions; and, therefore, the common interpretation (adopted by the ancients and almost all moderns) is preferable. "Christian charity (as Carpz. observes) is here described as a continual debt, which is ever being paid, but is always owing, and never discharged in this life. This fine turn is, as Wets. observes, imitated by Milton in his Paradise Lost, B. iv. 55.

— "A grateful mind

By owing owes not, but still pays; at once Indebted and discharged."

— τὸν ἕτερον] for τὸν πλησίον, i. e. any person with whom we have any connection. So our Lord, in his parable of the good Samaritan, has taught us thus to extend the signification of the word, making thereby the command as unlimited as the benevolence of the Deity, and co-extensive with the sphere of human action. Πεπλήρωκε, implere solet, fulfils. By τὸν νόμον is, I think, with Bp. Middl., meant the Law in general, and not, as some Interpreters suppose, the second table only of the Law.

9. τὸ γάρ·] On the idiom here and at ἐν τῷ just after, the Commentators are not agreed. It is, I conceive, put for ὅτι; nor is it used δεικτικῶς. I would rather suppose, with Koppe and Pr. Scholefield, that there is an ellip. of γεγραμμένον; who well renders the verse thus: "For the commandment, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet, and whatever other commandment there is, is briefly comprehended in the precept, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

The words οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις are omitted in six uncial and several other MSS. and the Edit. Princ., are rejected by Mill, Beng., Vat., and others, and cancelled by Griesb. But surely without sufficient reason; since we may quite as well imagine the omission of the clause (by the homeotel.) as its insertion. If introduced, it would have been brought in in some other place. The clause is retained by Wets. and Matth. On the idiom in εἴ τις, see Rec. Syn. here and on Mark xi. 25. Ἀνακεφαλαιούται literally signifies "is summed up;" a metaphor taken from casting up accounts. Ἐαυτὸν for σεαυτόν. By loving one's neighbour as oneself, is not meant that we should love him as much as ourselves, but in the same manner, though not to the same degree, as we love ourselves. And this is confirmed by the words following, which seem to be exegetical, and meant to show the nature of this love; namely, that we should be as careful to avoid injuring him, as we would of injuring ourselves. To which purpose it is admirably observed by Bp. Sherlock, in one of his Sermons, that "what the principle of self-preservation is with respect to ourselves, the same is charity with respect to our neighbour."

10. ἡ ἀγάπη—ἐργάζεται.] Here we may, with the Commentators, suppose abstract for concrete, "He who loveth," &c. But this is not necessary; and the sense seems to be, "Love consists in not injuring our neighbour." And true it is, that a great part of the love we owe to our fellow-creatures is only required to be shown by not injuring them; which will often operate as a positive benefit.

Of the next words, πλήρωμα—ἀγάπη, the sense is uncertain. It may either be, that "love is the end and scope of the commandments respecting our neighbour;" or, which is preferable, that "in love is comprehended the fulfilment of the law." Hence the same precept is called in James ii. 8. the νόμος βασιλικός, and in 1 Tim. i. 5. the τέλος τῆς ἐπαγγελίας.

11. The Apostle now proceeds to inculcate, up to the end of this Chapter, the duties of Christians towards themselves: and, to excite them to the zealous observance of these and the above mentioned virtues, he adds this new reason,—that the return of Christ to the earth, to save and bless, is an event not far distant. Holiness of life is then compared to the conduct of men in the broad day-light, and in full view of their fellow-creatures, and who are therefore held in a strong moral restraint. (Koppe.)

— καὶ τοῦτο, &c.] In καὶ τοῦτο we have a form of transition, involving an ellip. The mildest proposed is ποιείτε, “[And this admonition especially observe,]” for εἰδότες τὸν καιρὸν. The sense (disputed by Commentators) seems to be, “knowing that this is the critical season [for action].” The words following are exegetical of the preceding, “that now it is time to be roused from the sleep of inactivity, security, &c., and to be awake to a sense of duty.” The reason for this is suggested in the next clause.

— νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον—ἐπιστ.] On the sense of these words the Commentators are divided in opinion. Of the four interpretations detailed and reviewed in Recens. Synop., two only seem entitled to attention. 1. That of Crell., Mackn., Rosenm., Schleus., and most Commentators for the last century, who render, “Now is our knowledge of the doctrines of salvation greater than when we were first converted.” Now this yields an unobjectionable sense; yet such as cannot be proved to exist in the words. It is better, with Locke and Koppe, to take σωτ. of the literal advent of Christ. That sense, however, is destitute of any good authority, and is liable to some serious objections, started by Whitby. The best founded interpretation is that of the ancient and some modern Commentators (as Taylor), who by σωτηρία understand the period of death; as being the commencement of eternal salvation to the righteous: meaning that every day will bring them nearer to their final salvation, if they are to be saved. So Stuart, who adopts this view, well paraphrases: “We are hastening to retribution: every day brings us nearer to it: and in prospect of the reward, which now almost appears in sight, as we approach the goal of life, let us act with renewed effort as duty requires.” With respect to ἐπιστεύσαμεν, it is well observed by Grot. that πιστεύω is one of those verbs which denote action either in commencement, progress, or conclusion. Here it denotes commencement. The sense is well expressed by the Pesch. Syr., “than when we were converted to the Christian faith.”

12. ἡ νῦν προέκοψεν—ἤγγικεν.] The metaphor here is plainly founded on the imagery of the preceding verse: and the sense to be assigned to νῦν καὶ ἡμέρα will depend on the mode of interpretation there adopted. Hence it will be meant either that the night of heathen ignorance is drawing to a close, and the day of Gospel light dawning, or that the dark and obscure state of this life is far advanced, and the day of eternity is fast approaching. According to either interpretation, the following admonition will be very apposite.

— ἐνδυσώμεθα—φωτός.] The Commentators

are not agreed whether by ὅπλα be meant armor, or articles of dress. The latter view is adopted by many eminent moderns; but there seems no good reason to abandon the other and more general view.

13. εὐσχ. περιπατ.] “Let us conduct ourselves decorously, as men in the full blaze of day, and the full view of the public.” Agreeably to which metaphor, the Apostle then dissuades them from those vices which, in ancient times, were committed almost exclusively in the night. 1. those of drunken revelry; 2. as springing from thence, those of lewdness; 3. those crimes which usually arise from the former, as quarrelling and strife.

14. ἐνδύσασθε—Χρ.] i. e. Take upon you his dispositions, follow his example. A metaphor ex vestitiaria, and found also in the Classical writers.

— τῆς σαρκὸς—ἐπιθυμίας.] Notwithstanding the refinements of recent Expositors, the most natural and true interpretation of the passage is doubtless that of the ancient and most modern ones, “Do not so make provision for the body, as to gratify its lusts.” Εἰς here denotes end and purpose.

XIV. Now commences the third Section of the practical part of the Epistle (extending throughout this Chapter, and up to the 13th verse of the next), in which are detailed various duties, private and civil, to be performed in daily intercourse; especially towards those who, not fully satisfied as to the abrogation of the ceremonies of the Mosaic Law, did not, in this respect, evince faith, but scrupled at the eating of certain foods, and the regarding of seasons. Then is shown the use of Christian liberty in things indifferent. Lastly, is subjoined an exhortation to the preserving of concord, both among Jews and Gentiles recently converted to Christianity. (Carpz.)

The Apostle having given so many precepts for the sake of caution and restraint upon the Jewish part of the Church (whom he doubtless had in view at Ch. xiii.), now turns to the Gentile part, and addresses to them some salutary cautions with respect to their demeanour towards their Jewish brethren. (Stuart.) He is, in fact, addressing all who were not strong in faith, whether Gentiles or Jews. Who, indeed, are particularly meant by the ἀσθενούντες τῇ πίστει, has been somewhat disputed. Certain eminent Commentators (as Carpz., Koppe, and Eichhorn) maintain that they were a species of Jewish Esenes, who (like the Greek ἀσκήται) practised all those various mortifications of the flesh, in order to attain greater power in the spirit,—such as were adopted by the Monks of a later age. But I entirely agree with Rosenm. and Prof. Stuart, that although there were then various classes of persons who practised asceticism, especially in the abstinence from animal food, either wholly or partially—yet the manner in which the Apostle here speaks of them forbids such a notion; for, instead of attacking their pride and vain-glory (as at Col. ii. 21—23.), he throws his shield over them, and directs that their scruples, which were conscientious and sober, may be respected. And when we consider that in v. 5. mention is made of the distinction that the persons in question made between days, and compare this with what is said at Col. ii. 16, there can (as Stuart shows) be little doubt that the whole difficulty was one which arose from Jewish scruples about the use of meats which had been offered to idols, and afterwards sold in the market (which the persons in question thought would communicate pollution to those who used it), and the observance of certain fasts and feast-days. But for the better understanding of the whole, especially as a general question, the reader is referred to a powerful discourse of Bp. Sanderson, ad Clerum, on v. 3, where, after commencing with the remark, that “so long as there is either weakness on earth, or malice in Hell, it cannot but be that scandals will arise, and differences grow in the Church of God. What through want of judgment in some, of ingenuousness in others, of charity in almost all, occasions (God knows) of offence are too soon both given and taken; whilst men are apt to quarrel at trifles, and to maintain their differences even about indifferent things.” Then, after ably stating the occasion, tracing the scope, and shewing the connection of the text with the context, he divides it into two points of doctrine: I. That we are not to despise others, be they never so weak, or we never so strong. And that both for the sin’s sake, by which it is hurtful to the despisers, and for the scandal’s sake to the despised. II. That we are not to judge and condemn others, 1. from our want of communion; 2. our want of skill; 3. from the uncharitableness, and, 4. the scandalousness of the thing itself. Or thus: 1. We have no right to judge; and so our judging is usurpation. 2. We may err in our judgments; and so our judging is rashness. 3. We take things the worst way when we judge and condemn. 4. We give occasion of offence by our judging, and thus it is scandalous. Thus the Apostle endeavours to draw both parties (as being both in the wrong) to this honourable composition,—that the strong in faith shall remit somewhat of his superciliousness in despising the weak; and that the weak shall abate somewhat of his acrimony in condemning the strong. Finally, the question is one of great importance, as laying down a rule for our guidance on all other occasions, by which a weakness of judgment in faith may show itself, if not in scruples about meats and days, yet in a scrupulous forbearance of some things, from a persuasion that they are, or a fear lest they should be unlawful, but which, in truth, are not so, but only indifferent.

1. τὸν ἀσθενούντα τῇ πίστει.] According to the foregoing view, this will denote “one who is doubtful, or not fully persuaded of the propriety or impropriety of certain things in themselves indifferent, and is not satisfied as to the liberty which Christianity allows in those cases. By τῇ πίστει, which should be rendered “his faith” or belief, is denoted a full persuasion of mind, as to what is lawful or unlawful. Προσλαμβάνεσθε is variously interpreted. The word properly signifies to lay hold of and draw any thing or person to us; and, from the context, here seems to mean receive into Christian communion, with the adjunct notion of taking into kindly intercourse. See also xv. 7. and Gal. vi. 1. Of the words following μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν, the sense is not very clear, and consequently has been variously expounded. See Recens. Synop. and Stuart. I apprehend that if we keep close to the usual sense of the terms (which in a case of difficulty it is always best to do), and attend carefully to the context, we shall see that the sense must be this, “[but] not for the purpose of examining and agitating with him doubtful or disputed points,” namely, since as contempt and harshness might urge him to apostasy, so to perplex his mind with points which his Christian judgment is not sufficiently mature to enable him to grapple with, might drive him into scepticism. See Calvin.

2. The Apostle now illustrates the thing by an example, and shows why he has given the precept. On the idiom ὃς μὲν—ὁ δὲ for ὁ μὲν—ὁ δὲ (found in the later writers) see Matth. and Win. Gr. Πιστεύει φαγεῖν, “is persuaded he may eat.” This seems a popular idiom, since it is not found in the best writers. Πάντα, all kinds of food without distinction, even those forbidden by the Mosaic Law. Λάχανα, i. e. rather than forbidden meats.

3. ὁ ἐσθίων.] Supply πάντα. Κρινέτω, for κατακρ. Προσελάβετο, “has accepted him, admitted him to the benefits of the Christian religion.” See Note on v. 1.

4. σὺ τίς εἶ, &c.] “by what right dost thou hold judgment over another’s servant?” This use of the phrase σὺ τίς εἶ occurs also in the Classical writers. At τῷ ἰδίῳ, &c. sub. ἐπί, coram. Στήκει and πίπτει are forensic terms, and signify “to stand or fall in judgment,” to be acquitted, or be condemned. Σταθήσεται is best explained by Carpz. “consistet ac stabilietur.”

“Deus succurret imbecillitati ut στήκη.” Since, however, there is a continuation of the forensic metaphor, I would render, “He shall be held acquitted in judgment,” viz. of this matter. Under δυνατός, able, is also implied willing, as xi. 23.; which passage defends the common reading here; some MSS. having δυνατεῖ, which is received by Griesb. into the inner form.

5. ἡμέραν] such as the Jewish Sabbath, Passover, Pentecost, σκηνοπηγία, &c., which some maintained should be kept holy. Prof. Stuart shows at large, that although it has been disputed by some eminent Expositors and Theologians whether the Christian Lord's Day be not here included, yet that, from a comparison of the kindred passages of Col. ii. 16. Gal. iv. 10. with the present passage, it seems clear that ἡμέρα here relates to days which the scruples of Jewish Christians deemed sacred, and has no relation to the ἡμέρα which all agreed to keep holy. See Rev. i. 10. The παρά seems to mean holier than; that being implied in the comparison denoted by παρά. In the antithetical clause supply ἴσῃ, in the sense “equally appropriate to religious purposes.” In ἕκαστος—πληροφορεῖσθω there is a brevity of expression, which requires us to supply from the context ἐσθίων καὶ μὴ ἐσθίων, κρίνων καὶ μὴ κρίνων ἡμέραν. The general sense of the passage, though it has been disputed, seems certainly to be this: “quisque de sua animi sententiā certus fieri studeat:” or, “Let every one act with fulness of persuasion that he doth what is lawful,” let him act according to the conviction of his own mind.

6. The Apostle now gives examples of both the discrepant sentiments, as well in respect of days, as of meats; and shows, by a new reason, that those who in this instance think differently, ought not to feel contempt for each other.

—ὁ φρονῶν.] Literally, “he who minds, observes.” Κυρίῳ, for εἰς τὸν Κύριον, “with a reference to the Lord,” and in obedience to his understood will. Εὐχαριστεῖ τῷ Θεῷ must be so accommodated as to apply both to the ὁ ἐσθίων and the ὁ μὴ ἐσθ. In the former case, it relates both to the returning thanks for the food, and to the Christian liberty of unrestricted use; in the latter case, the sense is, “returns thanks to God for the gift of abstinence.” The καὶ before ὁ ἐσθίων is inserted, on the authority of most of the best MSS. and Versions, and many Fathers, as also all the early Edd., except the Erasmusian. It was, after being cancelled in the 3d Ed. of Stephens, that of Beza and the Elzevir, restored by Beng., Matth., Griesb., Knapp., Tittm., and Vat.: and rightly; since it is required by propriety, and might easily have been omitted by the scribes.

7. οὐδεὶς γὰρ—ζῇ.] By οὐδεὶς is meant no Christian. With respect to the ἑαυτῷ ζῇ and ἑαυτῷ ἀποθνήσκει, the general sense may be (as Grot. and Koppe explain), that whether alive or dead, we are in the power of God. But to consider it more particularly, ἑαυτῷ ζῇ seems to signify, “liveth after his own will and pleasure,” so as to give no account of his actions to any one but himself; and consequently ex opposito, οὐδεὶς ἑαυτῷ ἀποθνήσκει must mean “no one has, at death, any power over himself and his fate in another state of existence; nor ceases to depend for every thing upon the Lord, by whom he is to be judged.” The sense of the next clause is, that in every state of our existence, whether in this world or in the next, we belong to Christ; he is our Lord both here and hereafter.

9. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ—κυριεύσῃ.] The sense is: “Nay for this end and purpose Christ died, and, after his resurrection, rose again unto glory, and yet liveth, that he might be sovereign of the whole human race, both the quick and the dead.” Hence it is inferred that we are to live unto Christ, and not unto men. Prof. Stuart, however, regarding the ἵνα as denoting result or consequence, thinks the meaning is, that this universal dominion was a fruit or consequence of Christ's death. But it is, I think, better to retain the usual signification of ἵνα; especially as the Professor himself grants that it was one of the ends which the Saviour had in view.” In fact, it was an end desirable to him only with a view to another end and result, the salvation of man. In καὶ ἀπέθανε—ἀνέζησεν the reading is disputed. Some MSS. omit the first καὶ; others, καὶ ἀνέστη, and both are cancelled by Griesb. Many MSS., with several Versions and early Edd., for ἀνέζησεν, read ἐζήσεν, which is preferred by Mill and Wets., and edited by Beng., Matth., Griesb., and Vat. Again, Tittm. edits: καὶ ἀπέθανε καὶ ἀνέζησεν; while Rinck would read ἀπέθανε καὶ ἀνέστη. Under all the circumstances, I see no sufficient authority to cancel any word, especially as the sense of the context admits, nay requires, the whole. And the καὶ ἀνέστη might be omitted by reason of the two καὶ's. That ἐζήσεν ought to be read for ἀνέζησεν, there is no doubt. The ἵνα might arise from the αι preceding, or come from those Critics who rejected καὶ ἀνέστη as useless; a very unsafe principle in a writer who (like Thucydides) is sometimes as diffuse as he is at others obscurely brief. Here, however, there is nothing verbose or pleonastic. Ἀνέστη καὶ ἔζησε being for ἀναστῶν ἔζησε. Ἐζησε means, in its full sense, lived, liveth, and will live to all eternity; denoting that immortal life wherein “he ever liveth to make intercession for the faithful.” See Heb. vii. 25.

10. σὺ δὲ τί κρίνεις, &c.] Here the Apostle subjoins another reason to dissuade them from exercising rash judgment, or entertaining undue contempt; and that is suggested partly in the term ἀδελφ., which is emphatic; but chiefly in the words following, πάντες γὰρ παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ Χρ., which import that we are all alike amenable to this judgment, and therefore are not warranted in judging, much less condemning and despising each other: all must be left to the judgment of one great and true Estimator, and none ought to presume to intrude upon his province.

11. γέγρ. γάρ] “agreeably to what is said in Scripture,” namely, in Is. xlv. 23. in which there is some variation from the Sept. and the Hebrew; yet not near so great as would at first sight appear; for, 1. the words λέγει Κύριος form no part of the quotation, but were (as often) added by the Apostle to indicate the speaker. 2. The words εἰ μὴ ἐξελεύσεται—ἀποστραφήσονται were omitted by the Apostle, as not necessary to his purpose. 3. In the next words the Apostle follows the Sept., at least in the Alexandrian and some other MSS. The only real discrepancy is in the ζῶ ἐγὼ, which, however, is but an equivalent (and Scriptural) expression to the κατ' ἑμᾶντοῦ ὁμνῶ of the Sept. Finally, I cannot but advert to the manifest corruption in the Sept., namely, of εἰ μὴ before ἐξελεύσεται. It is strange that no Editor or Critic should have noticed it, especially as it is so easily emended. I would confidently propose to read ἢ μὴν, a frequent formula jurandi both in the Classical writers and the Sept. See Gen. xlii. 16. If, however, the Translator wrote εἰ μὴ, I have no doubt that he had in his MS. אִם בְּנֵי before אִם, thus rendering literally a formula jurandi equivalent to ἢ μὴν, and occurring in Job i. 11. Is. v. 9.

13. μηκέτι οὖν ἀλλήλους κρ., &c.] In these words (which contain a conclusion drawn from the preceding) is an injunction not only to abstain from unjustly judging those who entertain different sentiments in matters of conscience, but to beware lest the weaker party should, by our actions and sentiments, feel aggrieved, and thus be led into a worse error (Koppe); namely, heresy, or apostasy.

The Commentators notice the anantanaclasis in κρίνωμεν and κρίνατε, the word being first used in the sense “to pass severe and unjust judgment upon,” and then that of “resolve.” A similar use of στασιάζειν is adduced by Raphael from Herodotus. Πρόσκομμα and σκάνδαλον are nearly synonymous; the latter being exegetical of the former.

14. οἶδα καὶ πέπ., &c.] The Apostle here anticipates an objection. Οἶδα καὶ πέπ. is a strong expression, to denote full persuasion from complete knowledge. Ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰ., i. e. by the teaching of Jesus Christ himself, and not by human reasonings. See Theophyl.

—ὅτι οὐδὲν κοινόν.] By the limitation suggested by the context, the sense must be, “no kind of meat is, in its own nature, impure (i. e. unlawful); but to him who accounts it to be unlawful,” to him it is unlawful; i. e. (as Grot. and others explain), “The persuasion of any food’s being forbidden is to a Christian Jew, as long as he is so persuaded, sufficient to make it unlawful for him to use that liberty which it has given him from the yoke of the Mosaic ordinances.” Bp. Sanderson, in his 4th Sermon at Clerum, observes, that we may from this passage safely conclude that it is lawful for us to do all those things, concerning which there can be nothing brought of weight sufficient to prove them unlawful. The εἰ μὴ is said to be put for ἀλλά: but it is, in fact, used in its ordinary sense, and is only introductory of another and an exceptive clause.

15. διὰ βρῶμα] “through food,” i. e. the eating of food, and, as appears by the context, thy eating of food. See the next verse. Λυπεῖται is explained by the older Commentators, “is grieved and hurt;” by the more recent ones, “is brought into grief,” i. e. self-condemnation, by being induced to do what he believed to be unlawful. Κατὰ ἀγάπην, "agreeably to Christian charity," which requires us, for the sake of a weaker brother, to suffer one's own liberty to be circumscribed, in any manner not unlawful. Ἀπολλυε does not imply final perdition, but a present falling from a state of salvation, by apostasy or otherwise.

16. ὑμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν.] The earlier modern Commentators take this to mean "your Christian liberty, which is in itself so good." While the ancient and most recent modern Commentators explain it "your holy religion, which is your chief good." The latter sense is good, but the other is more agreeable to the context; and is well expressed by Abp. Newcome thus: "Act not so as to give occasion that your right sense of your Christian liberty in the indiscriminate use of foods be evil spoken of."

17. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν—πόσις.] A popular and familiar mode of expression, meaning, "In the Christian religion and the worship prescribed by it, it is not meats and drinks that are considered, but virtue, peace, spiritual joy," &c. i. e. as Bp. Sanderson explains, it consists in the exercise of holy graces, and the conscientious performance of unquestioned duties. Χαρὰ ἐν Πνεύματι ἀγ. signifies an inward joy from the consolations of the Holy Spirit.

18. τούτοις] "these dispositions and habits." Εὐάρεστος—ἀνθρώποις. This seems to be a popular expression, meaning "is in favour with God and man."

19. ἄρα οὖν τὰ τῆς, &c.] A conclusion drawn from the preceding. "Since a peaceable spirit is so well pleasing to God, let us study peace, and what tends to mutual edification." See Acts ix. 31, and Note.

20. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ] i. e. the propagation of the Christian religion, by the faith and Christian piety of the person in question.

—κακὸν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ—ἐσθίουσι.] At κακὸν sub. βρώμα. The words may be referred either to the weak Christian, who, if he eateth διὰ προσκόμματος, (i. e. σὺν προσκόματι, stumblingly, with an uncertain and dubious mind) sinneth; or, to the more knowing and advanced Christian, who, if, by eating, he offends and causes another to sin (διὰ προσκόμματος, for μετὰ προσκόματος, i. e. occasioning an offence to him) he himself also sinneth.

21. καλὸν τὸ μὴ φαγεῖν, &c.] The sense may be well expressed, with Abp. Newc., thus: "It is matter of duty to abstain from flesh used in sacrifice to idols; or to abstain from it altogether; or from any other act, in the presence of those who may thus be ensnared into sin and perplexed with doubts." This use of the plural κρέα for the singular κρέας is found in the best writers. At ἐν ᾧ sub. ποιεῖν. Προσκόπτει is for σκανδαλίζεται. The words ἢ σκανδαλίζεται ἢ ἀσθενεῖ are omitted in three MSS. and some Versions and Fathers; and even rejected by Mill and Koppe, as being a gloss. This, however, can hardly be true of ἢ ἀσθενεῖ; and if that clause be genuine, so probably must the preceding one.

22. σὺ πίστιν ἔχεις.] The ancient and early modern Commentators read this interrogatively; the more recent ones declaratively; which latter mode is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac, and is more agreeable to the style of the Apostle. By faith is meant a full persuasion that what one is doing is right and lawful; or, in other words, the full assent of the conscience. Κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε, "keep this persuasion to yourself, and your God; use it when you have no other witness; and do not, in exercising it before men, employ it so as to cause your fellow Christian and weaker brother to fall from duty."

—μακάριος, &c.] The sense is, "happy is he who doth not condemn himself in the use he makes of what he allows himself to do; namely, by using it in an imprudent manner."

23. ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος—ἐστί.] The sense is: "And he who doubteth [whether it be right to eat] is condemned, i. e. is liable to be condemned [nay, is self-condemned], if he eat; because he doth it not from faith."

By πᾶν δὲ—ἐστίν is meant, "Whatever is done without a full persuasion that it is lawful, is sinful." See an excellent Discourse of Bishop Sanderson on this text. By this (being his 4th ad Clerum,) in which, after ably settling the connection and scope of the text, he shows that faith must here be the persuasion of the judgment and conscience. And he proceeds to inquire, 1. What is the power of the conscience, as concerning the lawfulness or unlawfulness of actions. 2. Whether, in every thing we do, an actual consideration thereof be necessarily requisite. 3. What degree of persuasion is required for the warranting of our actions? Whether or no, and how far a man may warrantably act, with reluctancy of conscience. Wherein is considered the case, 1. of a resolved conscience; 2. of a doubting conscience; 3. of a scrupulous conscience. Upon the whole, he proves that the true import of the text is, in effect, this: "Who-soever shall enterprize the doing of any thing which he verily believeth to be unlawful, or, at least, is not reasonably well persuaded of the lawfulness of it; let the thing be otherwise, and in itself what it may be, lawful or unlawful, indifferent or necessary, convenient or inconvenient, it matters not; TO HIM IT IS A SIN."

Here Wets. and Grot. compare similar sentiments from the Classical writers; and Schoettg. some from the Rabbinical ones.

The doxology just after, which in the textus receptus comes in at the end of the Epistle, is, in the far greater part of the MSS. and several Versions and Fathers, inserted here: which position was approved by Grot. and Hammond, and adopted by Mill, Wets., Matth., and Griesb., but has been rejected by Knapp, Vater, and Stuart. It is a question of difficult determination, and in which no certainty can be attained. External evidence is certainly in favour of the insertion here; yet the contrary testimonies are very weighty, including the two most ancient of the MSS., (the Alexandrian and Vatican,) and the most ancient of Versions. As to the internal congruity of the passage, as Stuart shows, is strongly against its insertion; and though St. Paul does sometimes insert a doxology in the body of an Epistle, yet (as he points out) it is in quite a different situation from the present. I cannot, therefore, venture to admit it.

XV. In the present Chapter St. Paul continues to exhort the Church at Rome to strive after unity and peace. He sets before them the self-denial of Christ, vv. 3, 4. He beseeches God to give them the spirit of Christian unity and love, vv. 5, 6. He exhorts them to a mutual kind reception of each other, v. 7. He shows that the reception of the Gentiles into the Christian Church had been clearly and often predicted, vv. 8—12; and prays God to fill them all with joy and peace, v. 13. He apologizes, as it were, for writing to the Church of Rome, by describing the nature of his office as an Apostle to the Gentiles, the labours which he had performed while holding this office, and the affectionate desire which he had cherished of paying the Church at Rome a visit, vv. 14—24. He describes to them the plan of his future journeys and labours, expresses his hope of yet visiting them, and begs an affectionate interest in their prayers to God for him, vv. 25—32. (Stuart.)

1. By the οἱ δυνατοί, as opposed to τοῖς ἀσθενέσι, must (as Koppe and Rosenm. remark) be understood the more abundant in knowledge, and the stronger in faith (xiv. 22. compared with Luke xxiv. 19, and Acts vii. 22. δυνατοὶ ἐν λόγῳ); and by the ἀδυνατοί, those less skilled and knowing, and therefore in hesitation and doubt, as to the lawfulness or unlawfulness of any thing. By the ἀσθενήματα are meant the unfounded though conscientious scruples adverted to in chap. xiv. βαστάζειν signifies to bear with; a metaphor taken from strong persons helping weak fellow-travellers, by occasionally carrying for them their burdens. By ἑαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν is meant gratifying ourselves by having our own views received as absolute verities.

2. ἕκαστος ἡμῶν, &c.] Γὰρ after ἕκαστος is absent from nearly all the best MSS., many Versions and Fathers, and the Ed. Princ. It was introduced by Stephens from the Erasmus Editions, and though expunged by Beza in his first Edition, afterwards crept into the subsequent ones, and so was introduced into the textus receptus; but was again cancelled by Beng., Matth., Griesb., and Tittm.; rightly I think.

—ἀρεσκέτω εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἶκ.] By adding εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἶκ. (i. e. so far as may be for his good and edification, and that of the Church) the Apostle means to limit his precept, that complaisance may not be carried to abject subservience. Εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν and εἰς οἶκ. must be closely connected, the latter serving to qualify and explain the former, and prevent a misunderstanding of the sense. For as Theodoret observes: ἔστιν ἀρέσκειν καὶ ἐπὶ λύπῃ καὶ ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τοῦ πλησίον. So Theophr. Ch. Eth. 5. περὶ ἀρεσκείας—ἡ δὲ ἀρέσκειά ἐστιν—οὐκ ἐπὶ ἡδονῇ ἢ δόξῃ παρὰ σκευαστικῇ.

3. οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἤρρεσεν] "sought not his own gratification [but the good of others];" which latter clause is implied in the air of the former.

The next sentiment, "nay, he bore patiently the insults of men," is clothed in the words of Ps. lxxix. 10, which even Rosenm. admits to be strikingly applicable to Christ, though he denies it to be primarily meant of the Messiah. But, as Mr. Turner observes, it is for him to prove that the application varies from the intention of the original author. "Besides, (continues Mr. T.,) he himself admits that various other sentences of the O. T. were by the Jews of that time (nay, even are by those of the present day) conceived to treat of the Messiah. And whence could have arisen such an opinion, unless it had had its foundation in tradition, handed down from the times of the Prophets themselves? Moreover, the Apostle himself, in the words following, refers to those numerous passages which occurred in the O. T., as written for the instruction and consolation of believers in the Messiah. For it has been well pointed out by Grot. and Crell., that the words ὅσα γὰρ—προεγράφη are meant to anticipate an objection,—namely, that the passage has reference to David, not to Christ or Christians. To which this is the answer, part of which is contained in a suppressed clause dependent on γὰρ, q. d. [It does indeed pertain to David, but it is typical of Christ] or at least may serve for our example and instruction.”

4. διὰ τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ τῆς παρ. τ. γρ.] The sense is: “through the patience which the Scriptures recommend and exemplify, and by the [motives for] consolation which they supply.” In ἔχωμεν is implied κατέχωμεν.

5. ὁ δὲ Θεός, &c.] The full sense of the verse is ably drawn forth by Bp. Sanderson, in a Sermon on this text, where, after pointing out the connexion and scope of the words, he shows the nature of the prayer here made; and after observing that prayer is properly united with instruction, and that God is the only Author of peace,—he inquires why God is called the God of patience and of consolation; and treats on the choice of these attributes, and their union here. On the matter of the prayer, he considers these particulars: I. The thing prayed for,—namely, like-mindedness, which is explained and pressed on by various considerations. II. He considers the first qualification of the agreement prayed for; ἐν ἀλλήλοις importing that it be universal and mutual. III. He considers the second qualification in κατὰ Χριστὸν, importing an agreement; 1. unto truth and holiness, and 2. after the example of Christ. With respect to the expression Θεὸς τῆς ὑπομονῆς, the learned Prelate rightly understands it effectivè (as the next attribute τῆς παρακλ. must be understood) of that patience which is from God as the cause, and man as the subject. Accordingly, God is called the “God of consolation,” because “it is he that putteth comfort and cheerfulness into our hearts.” And he observes, that being to pray for unity, the Apostle might well make mention of patience as a special help thereto, and consolation as a special fruit and effect thereof.” He then notices the expression τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν as being one peculiar to St. Paul; and shows that, though it be used with reference both to the understanding and judgment, and to the will and affections, yet that both may here be supposed meant to be comprehended; namely, that God would so frame the hearts of these Romans one towards another, that there might be, as far as possible, an universal accord amongst them, both in their opinions and affections.” This view of the subject is supported by the opinion of Tiren. and Calvin.

The κατὰ Χριστὸν following is susceptible of two senses, both suitable to the context: 1. “according to truth and godliness in Christ Jesus,” according to what the spirit of Christ and his religion requires; 2. (as in the margin of our Bibles) “after the example of Christ;” a sense adopted by many eminent Expositors, and among the rest by Bp. Sanderson in a Sermon on this text.

6. Bp. Sanderson, in his 13th Sermon ad Aulam, on this text, (the sequel to that on the preceding verse) ably draws forth the full import of the words, and distributes it into four points. 1. He treats of glorifying God, and proves that the glory of God should be intended as our chief end, for four reasons: 1. as being the chief good; 2. as that whereunto we are both in duty and (3dly) in wisdom obliged. Hence he adduces an inference of admonition, that we do not bestow on any creature, or draw to ourselves, any of that glory which is due to God. II. He shows the reason of the style God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, or the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and why it is here used. III. He considers the glorification of God ὁμοθυμαδὸν καὶ ἐνὶ στόματι, with mind as well as mouth, and what it imports. IV. He shows how much God is glorified by Christian unity and one-mindedness; and this is the main scope and design of the whole passage. On the force of ὁμοθ., (which implies unanimity,) see Note on Acts ii. 46. Τὸν Θεὸν καὶ πατέρα τ. Κ. ἡ. I. X. should (as the best Commentators and Critics are agreed) be rendered “the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.” Compare 2 Cor. xi. 31. Eph. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3; and see Bp. Middl. And, as Whitby and Bp. Pearson remark from the Fathers, “the first Person in the Trinity is the God and Father of Christ in respect to the latter’s manhood, and eternal filiation or derivation from the Father, being God of God; his Father in respect of his Divinity, or as He is the Word.”

7. διὸ προσλ. ἀλλήλους] This unity (he meant to say) would be especially evinced, if the Gentile and the Jewish Christians should mutually receive and show kindness to each other. On the force of προσλαμβ. see Note supra xii. 1. The force of the word must, however, be somewhat accommodated in sense, as applied to Christ, with reference to his benignity, notwithstanding our being enemies by evil works. See supra v. 10. Εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ is indeed, by most Interpreters, construed with what immediately precedes; by which a tolerable sense arises, but one not so good, or so suitable to the context as by referring the words to προσλαμβάνουσα ἀλλήλους, and considering καθὼς—ὡς as an illustration. Thus εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ will signify the end or purpose, i. e. that so God may be glorified. Compare John xvii. 23. A view of the words supported by the authority of Chrysost., Theophyl., Theodor., and Æcumen.

8. λέγω δὲ, Ἰησοῦν, &c.] This supplies a reason for what has been just said. The Apostle's argument, to suggest why believers, of whatever nation, should live in mutual harmony and good offices, is this,—“that the Gentile ought to respect the Jew, since Christ exercised his ministry among the Jews, and was peculiarly the Messiah of the Jews, thereby fulfilling the predictions of their Prophets, and the promises made to Abraham (and through him to the Patriarchs), that ‘in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed:’ that therefore the Jews and the Gentiles had reason to glorify God for his mercy imparted to both.” (Rosenm.)

Λέγω δὲ here and at Gal. iv. 1. & v. 16. is regarded by Schleus. as a formula of connection. But I rather think, with Mr. Rose ap. Parkh. p. 490, that it gives peculiar force to what the Apostle brings forward; and, as Stuart says, accuratius definit. Ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας Θεοῦ, ‘for the establishment of the truth of God,’ i. e. his faithfulness in keeping his promises. In ἐπαγγ. τῶν πατέρων the Genitive is one of object. Βεβαιῶσαι τὰς ἐπαγγ., ‘to confirm the promises,’ i. e. by performing what had been promised.

9. Koppe here recognizes an anacoluthon, for τῶν δὲ ἐθνῶν—Θεοῦ. But most Commentators supply λέγω and ὀφείλειν, referring to a similar ellip. at iv. 13. “The Apostle (says Taylor) is persuading the converts to a cordial coalition in public worship, and is giving each party a substantial reason why they ought to unite their hearts as well as voices.” But, as it would be more difficult to persuade the Jew, he applies to him several quotations out of Scripture, Ps. xviii. 49. Deut. xxxii. 43. Ps. cxvii. 1. Isa. xi. 10. the first and last of which, as Whitby shows, the Jews interpreted of the Messiah. All of them agree with the Sept., and, in their general sense, with the Hebrew; and tend to prove, that the Gospel privileges were to be extended to both Jews and Gentiles.

13. The Apostle concludes this exhortation to unity by a suitable prayer, that they may be filled with all joy and peace, and may have a lively hope of future glory through the influences of the Spirit shed abroad in their hearts, who thus will give them an earnest of that glory. Comp. Eph. i. 13. sq. and Rom. viii. 23. Thus ver. 13. is a kind of link to unite the foregoing admonitory matter, with the subsequent apologetical portion, the latter to qualify and make more palatable the former.

14. Now commences the epilogus or conclusion, forming the 4th and last portion of the Epistle, and consisting of two parts, in the former of which, up to the end of this Chapter, the Apostle, after good wishes and prayers for their spiritual welfare, addresses them in endearing language, and apologizes for what might be likely to give offence; in the latter (which occupies the last Chapter) he resumes and continues the same endearing language to the end.

—ὅτι καὶ αὐτοί, &c.] ‘ye yourselves also;’ which, as Pisc. observes, involves the further sense, ‘even without my admonition.’ Beza well compares the Homeric τί με σπεύδοντα καὶ αὐτὸν ὀτρύνεις; the expression π. πάσης γνώσεως must not be too rigidly interpreted. Its sense is determined by the words following, δυνάμενοι καὶ ἀλλήλους νουθετεῖν: and the sense of the whole passage is, ‘Ye are full of benignity and kindness—so abounding in all [Christian] knowledge, as to be able to admonish each other, [as well as to receive admonition from me.]’ Comp. 1 John ii. 20, 27.

logetical language was, as Mackn. observes, necessary, since he had opposed some of their strongest prejudices, and rebuked them for certain irregularities of conduct. He excuses his freedom by pleading the strong obligation and sacred duty imposed on him as an Apostle, and the Apostle of the Gentiles. This gives him an occasion of advertng to his own labours in converting the heathens, and to mention what he further meant to do in that cause. Ἀπὸ μέρους, 'in some respect,' may be construed either with ἔγραψα or with τολμ.

16. εἰς τὸ εἶναι—εἰς τὰ ἔθνη] The general sense is, 'That I should bestow my especial attention to the conversion of the Gentiles to the religion of Christ.' The Apostle, however, uses a formula derived from the Jewish religion, in order the more strongly to impress on the Jewish Christians the dignity of his Apostleship; calling himself, not διάκονος, but λειτουργός, a sacred minister; (see Note on Acts xxvi. 16.) and saying his office is, not κηρύσσειν, but ἱεουργεῖν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, i. e. to preach the Gospel as a priest of the New Covenant, by which men are made θυσίαι ζῶσαι. So προσφορὰ and ἡγιασμένη, a little after, are likewise terms borrowed from the Temple service. See more in Carpz. and Koppe, the latter of whom and Rosenm. pass over the important words ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, which are meant to suggest the means whereby they have been made, and are preserved, pure; namely, the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit on their hearts, and not by external rites.

17. καύχησιν] 'a reason for glorying and rejoicing;' namely, in his labours having been so blessed. At τὰ πρὸς Θεόν sub. ἀνήκοντα.

18. οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω λαλεῖν, &c.] On the sense of this passage some difference of opinion exists. Grotz. and Carpz. recognize here a delicacy of idiom, q. d. 'I can scarcely venture to say what Christ hath not done by me,' i. e. how much he hath done. This may, indeed, be admitted; but there is more of simplicity in the common interpretation, which is adopted by Stuart, who expresses the sense thus: 'I do not, in saying this, claim any praise, by exaggerating my success, or taking to myself the credit of what others have done.' Perhaps, however, the right view of the sense is that adopted by the Greek Commentators, who consider this as a brief mode of expression, for οὐ γὰρ τολμ. λαλεῖν τι, ὧν οὐκ ἐγώ, ἀλλὰ κατειργ. Χριστός.

19. Πνεύματος Θεοῦ] Πνεύμ. ἁγίου is found in several MSS., some later Versions and Fathers, and is preferred by Mill and others, and edited by Griesb., Knapp, and Tittm.; but without reason. The common reading is justly retained and defended by Wets. and Matth., who have well remarked that the new one was merely a glossâ, the vulg. being somewhat a rare expression.

—ἀπὸ Ἱ. καὶ κύκλῳ] 'from Jerusalem and the neighbourhood.' The term κύκλῳ may, by the usage of the best Greek writers, have great latitude, and comprehend a very extensive radius of country about Jerusalem, including Palestine, Syria, and the adjacent parts of Arabia. But Jerusalem is especially mentioned, from its being the centre, whence the rays of Divine knowledge beamed. Πεπληρωκέναι τὸ εὐαγγ. τ. X. is an expression deviating from Classical usage, and probably Hellenistic, being parallel to that of Col. i. 25. π. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. The early Commentators explain it "to fully evangelize;" the later ones regard it as a Hebraism, derived from a similar use of the correspondent term רַבַּנ, to complete, perfect, which (especially in the Chaldee dialect) often signifies to teach. But the other is the simpler and truer interpretation. Stuart renders "I have spread abroad."

20. οὕτω δὲ φιλοτ.] The participle depends upon a verb preceding, ὥστε πεπληρωκέναι; but, in translation, may be rendered by a verb in the Preterite: q. d. Thus have I striven. Φιλοτιμεῖσθαι properly signifies to be studious of honour: and as such a pursuit implies zeal, labour, and diligence, it comes to signify 'to do any thing with zeal, diligence, &c.'

21. ἀλλὰ καθὼς γέγορ.] 'thus making good in my own case the words of Scripture.'

—οἷς οὐκ ἀνηγγέλη, &c.] The words (from Is. lii. 15.), which exactly agree with the Sept., are by the Jewish Interpreters referred to the Messiah, but applied by the Apostle to his own case. The words περὶ αὐτοῦ, however, have nothing corresponding to them in the Hebrew.

19, 20., his desire to visit new countries for the purpose of evangelizing the Gentiles. Τὰ πολλὰ is to be taken adverbially, for very much.

23. μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων, &c.] This is by some recent Interpreters explained to mean, "there being no longer any place where Christ has not been preached." But the more natural sense is that assigned by the ancient and several modern Commentators, "there being no longer any sufficient occasion for my apostolical labours here." So τόπον ἔχειν in Heb. xii. 17.

— κλίμασι ["parts of the country."] The word properly denotes one of those divisions of the sphere, between the Equator and Arctic Pole, of which the ancient Geographers made seasons. Ἐπιποθίαν, "a strong desire." The word is very rare, and synonymous with ἐπιπόθησις, which occurs in 2 Cor. vii. 11. Τοῦ ἔλθεῖν, for ὥστε ἔλθεῖν.

24. ὡς ἂν "as soon as." An idiom found only in the later Classical writers. On the question whether St. Paul did ever take this journey into Spain, see Recens. Synop. I have there shown that it is very probable he did; but, at the same time, not improbable that St. James had several years before, barely planted the Gospel in that country; which, from its vast extent, would admit of St. Paul's labours, without his being said to "build on another man's foundation."

— ἂν ὑμῶν — ἐμπλησθῶ.] The sense is, "after I shall have been, in some measure, satisfied with [the pleasure of] your society." So Ælian, cited by Koppe, says, of the peacock displaying its gay plumage: ἔα γὰρ ἐμπλησθῆναι τῆς θεας τὸν παρεστῶτα.

The words ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς and γὰρ after ἐλπίζω, omitted in 7 ancient MSS., several Versions, and some Fathers, are rejected by Mill, and cancelled by Griesb. and Tittm.; but without reason. See Matth. and Rinck.

25. νυνὶ δὲ πορ., &c.] The Apostle adds this, that they may not expect him very soon.

26. Μακεδονία καὶ Ἀχαΐα i. e. the Christians in Macedonia and Achaia.

27. εὐδόκησαν γὰρ, &c.] Grot. observes that there is here an anaphora, together with an epanorthosis, "They were pleased, I say, to show that the thing was not obligatory."

— τοῖς πνευμ. αὐτῶν ἐκοινωνήσαν.] This syntax (a Dative of thing) rarely occurs in the Classical writers. The Dative depends upon ἐν understood, which is expressed in Gal. vi. 6. The Accus. with εἰς is equivalent to this. Κοινωνεῖν has usually a transitive, but here it has an intransitive sense.

28. σφραγισάμενος.] Some Commentators render this "cum assignavero:" but the best ancient and modern Interpreters are agreed that it means, "having safely consigned this money, as under seal." Of which sense Loesn. adduces an example from Philo. Καρπὸν, "fruit of their beneficence," the contribution, v. 26.

29. οἶδα ὅτι ἐρχόμενος—ἐλεύσομαι.] The sense is: "I know that when I come to you, I shall come with power to bestow the most exuberant benefits of the Gospel, and the religion of Christ," namely, by imparting the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. See i. 11.

The words τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ (omitted in 8 MSS., 2 indifferent Versions, and some inferior Latin Fathers) are rejected by Mill, and cancelled by Griesb.; but most rashly. Matthæi has shown the weakness of the evidence as regards the Fathers; and I add, that Chrys. certainly read the words; which any one conversant with the style of the sacred writers will see are genuine. Indeed, one might suspect that the omission arose, not from the early Critics, but merely from the scribes, and was occasioned by the two τοῦ's.

30. The Apostle concludes with entreating them to commend himself and his fortunes among the Palestine Jews to God. He entreats them both by Christ, whose religion they profess, and by that love which is the fruit of the Spirit; begging that they would aid him and his efforts, by the co-operation of their prayers to God on his behalf. Συναγωνίσασθαι is a strong expression, and implies that the prayers must be earnest and persevering.

31. τῶν ἀπειθ. ἐν τῇ Ἰ.] i. e. the unbelieving Jews, who bore a deadly hatred to Paul, and sought his life. Koppe remarks that the Apostle does not desire to be preserved from calamities, but only that he may be so strengthened as to be enabled to overcome them; and that he may be the means of cheering the afflicted Christians at Jerusalem. "ἵνα ἡ διακονία, &c., the sense is, "that my service may be acceptable to the saints," i. e. be kindly accepted or taken by them; for acceptable, in one sense, it was sure to be to somewhat indigent persons. Yet when Paul considered the violent prejudices of the Jewish Christians against the Gentile converts, and especially against himself, the Apostle of the Gentiles, and, upon this occasion, their Almoner, he might well have some doubts whether they would come under any obligation to the charity of those who set so lightly by the Mosaic ceremonial ordinances. See Stuart.

XVI. This Chapter contains the concluding portion of the Epistle; consisting of various commendations and salutations, intermixed with a solemn warning, in respect of those among them who sowed divisions, and caused offences, and an earnest desire that they would cultivate kindness and candour. Then, after expressing the salutations of several Christian friends who were with him, the Apostle concludes with a noble and impressive doxology, comprising earnest prayers for them, and devout ascriptions of glory to God.

1. Φοίβην.] She seems to have been in the company of those who conveyed this Epistle, though not herself the bearer of it. It is plain that she was known at Rome, and is here probably commended to the Roman Christians, as needing their friendly notice and assistance.

— διάκονον.] According to the constitution of the primitive Church, there was an order of women discharging part of the public business of the Church, consisting of two kinds, 1. Elderly women, (πρεσβυτιδες) presiding over, and superintending the morals of, the other female Christians; 2. deaconesses, (διάκονοι), who discharged some of the offices of the ministry, as baptizing the female converts; and who also collected and distributed the contributions for the relief of sick and poor females, besides other offices less important. See Bingham's Antiq. L. xi. 12., Cotelier. on the Const. Ap. iii. 15. and Suic. Thes. in v.

2. ἐν Κυρίῳ] "in the name and on account of Christ." Ἀξίως τῶν ἀγ., "in such a manner as Christians ought to receive each other." Παραστήτε αὐτῇ, literally, "stand by her." Ἐν ᾧ ἂν ὑμῶν χρῆζῃ πράγματι, "in whatever office she may need your assistance." Προστάτις, "a protectress," like patrona in Latin.

3. συνεργούς μου ἐν Χ.] "my coadjutors in promulgating the Gospel of Christ." See Phil. ii. 25. 1 Thess. iii. 2.

4. τὸν ἑαυτῶν τράχ. ὑπέθηκαν.] Literally, "submitted their necks [to the sword]," i. e. hazarded their lives. This is by some supposed to relate to the perilous situation of Aquila and Priscilla in the tumult at Corinth. See Acts xviii. 12.

5. τὴν κατ' οἶκον ἐκκλ.] Not, I conceive, "their own family," as some Commentators explain; but, as most ancients and moderns interpret, "the congregation which met at their house;" the Christians yet, it seems, worshipping κατ' οἶκον, and not in a public building for general worship. See Acts xx. 20.

— Ἀσίας] instead of the Vulg. Ἀχαΐας. So several ancient MSS. and some Edd. and Fathers, which is preferred by Grot., Mill, Beng., Whitby, Valck., Koppe, and Rosenm., and has been edited by Griesb., Knapp, and Tittm. the term ἀπαρχή suggests the idea of one person only (see 1 Cor. xv. 20.) and as in 1 Cor. xvi. 15. Stephanas is called the ἀπαρχή τῆς Ἀχαΐας, Epernetus could have no claim to the name.

7. ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις.] The sense is somewhat uncertain. Whitby, Koppe, and others take it to mean, that "they were eminent teachers;" ἀπόστολος being sometimes used in a lower sense; as in 2 Cor. vii. 23. Phil. ii. 25. But in both those passages the Article is not found, as here; which, I think, determines it to mean Apostle in the highest sense. Thus the ἐν will signify inter; q. d. "who were well known, and held in consideration by or among the Apostles."

8—15. Salutations are sent to 26 individuals, and two whole families. By which it is plain, 1. that Paul, though he had not yet been at Rome, yet well knew the Christians who resided there; 2. that he well remembered them, since he called them all by name, and assigned to each his respective commendation; 3. that he felt persuaded that the Romans would not take this letter amiss, though written somewhat boldly, xv. 15. (Carpz.)

13. ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κ.] equivalent to τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χρ. just before.

16. ἀσπάσασθε—φιλ.] As the Apostle had before bidden them salute certain persons in his own name, so he now bids them salute each other. On the reason for which injunction, see Chrys. and Theophyl. in Recens. Synop. On this kiss of peace much has been written by Whitby and others, who trace it to ancient Oriental usage, and suppose it to have been borrowed from the Synagogue. It appears that, in the Apostolic age, the kiss was given to each other at the end of the Liturgy, and before the Communion Service, and was understood to express mutual love; and, in things spiritual, equality. The custom continued during a great part of the first century, and is noticed by several early Ecclesiastical writers. Why the Apostle has not more frequently made mention of it (having only adverted to it here and in 1 & 2 Cor. and Thessal.), has been the subject of various conjectures. Be the cause what it may, there is reason to think that the custom, so liable to abuse and misrepresentation, was laid aside at a very early period of the Christian Church.

16. αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Χρ.] i. e. as Grot. has shown, of Greece, in which he was writing.

17. Before he concludes, the Apostle again touches on the subject of those dissensions which he had heard prevailed among the Roman Christians, and the suppression of which was one principal purpose of the Epistle. Of these, then, he admonishes them to beware. He bids them mark those that caused divisions and raised factions, and also that occasioned scandals and offences among the unbelieving. Now these σκάνδαλα might arise both from the immoralities of those who made profession of Christianity, and from the folly of those who, by the introduction of heretical and false opinions, caused the Heathen to take unjust offence at the Gospel. But, from the context, it should seem that the former scandals were most in the mind of the Apostle.

18. Who these heretics were, and what their doctrine was, cannot with certainty be determined; yet, from the subject of the Epistle, it seems probable that they were Jews; who, with an outward appearance of sanctity, were carnal, and led an immoral, or, at least, a sensual life (which latter seems to be adverted to in the words δουλεύουσιν τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ), and only aimed at making the profession of the Gospel a means of gaining a luxurious livelihood. Χρηστολογία properly means a kind address; but is here used, in malam partem, to signify a plausible discourse, consisting of mere professions, without any reality. So Pallad. Epigr. C. 1. 2. (cited by Wetsius.) Μισῶ τὸν ἄνδρα διπλοῦν πεφυκότα· χρηστὸν λόγιοις, πολέμιον δὲ τοῖς τρόποις. The word following, εὐλογίας, is synonymous and exegetical of χρηστ., and is merely a detorsio ad deterius of the primary signification of εὐλογία, which is not blessing, but (in our old English idiom) "speaking any one fair." By ἀκάκων are meant those who, having no evil in themselves, suspect none in others, and consequently are easily deceived.

19. τὸ ἐφ' ὑμῖν.] Sub. μέρος, "on your behalf," "on account of you." The words θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς—κακόν are well paraphrased by Grot. thus: "I wish you to be so prudent as not to be deceived, and so good as not to deceive."

20. τὸν Σατανάν.] Many modern, and especially recent Commentators, understand by this the persecuting Jews and Judaizers. See Whitby. But Grot. has shown that it must mean the great (enemy of God and man; whose personality, it may be added, our modern Heresiarchs are so anxious to overturn, that they hazard the greatest absurdities of interpretation to attain their purpose.

— ἡ χάρις—ὑμῶν.] The sense is: "And for these and all other purposes may the favour and help of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you!"

25. The construction is suspended at τῷ δυν. (in the Apostle's manner) and resumed at v. 27. μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ. We may render καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα "even the Gospel;" for κηρ. is in apposition with εὐαγγ.; the object of Paul being (as Stuart observes) to shew that the Gospel which he preached was the true one.

— κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν—σεσιγημένον.] The sense is, "agreeably to the revelation of the mystery [of the Gospel] which was kept unrevealed from ancient times," i. e. before any revelation had been promulgated. By "this Gospel," the Apostle means the gratuitous justification of the Gentiles as well as the Jews by faith, without the observance of the law of Moses. Χρόνοις αἰωνίοις is nearly equivalent to ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων in Eph. iii. 9. and Col. i. 26; and may be rendered "during a long course of ages." With respect to the doctrine itself of redemption, it is plain from those passages, and from 2 Tim. i. 9. Tit. i. 2. and 1 Pet. i. 20, that it had been revealed from the beginning, but faintly and obscurely.

26. The construction in this verse is, γινῶ. τε διὰ γραφῶν προφητικῶν, εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, and which was made known by prophetic declarations given, by the command of God, for the purpose of bringing all nations into obedience to the Gospel.

C. I. Corinth was the capital of Achæa, and from its situation (as Thucyd. says) ἐν πόρῳ, (in the passage between Peloponnesus and the Upper Greece, and in connexion with both the Ægean and Ionian seas) it was a place of great resort, and in some measure the Emporium of Greece. Hence the inhabitants were rich, but luxurious; and, as in most commercial places, dissolute in their morals. From the devoted attention paid to commerce at Corinth, a considerable number of Jews had settled there, as well as in other trading places of the civilized world; and consequently there was a mixture of Jewish superstition and Gentile scepticism and licentiousness: for the place abounded in sophists, and swarmed with prostitutes. St. Paul, compassionating the miserable state of this great city, had gone thither first of Greece, about A. D. 52, remaining there a year and a half, and planting a Church, consisting partly of converted Jews, but chiefly of Gentiles. On his departure, he was succeeded by Apollos, who preached the Gospel with great success. But the peace of the Church was soon afterwards gradually disturbed by the intrusion of false teachers, who, with great pretensions to enlightened Christian knowledge, endeavoured to subvert St. Paul's apostolical authority; but were resisted by his friends. Hence two parties were formed—Pauline and Anti-pauline; the latter comprehending not only some of the adherents of Apollos, but all those of the false teachers. And besides this, the same disputes between the Jewish and Gentile converts (as to the extent of Christian liberty, in the use of meats unlawful, or which had been offered up to idols) existed, as did in the Roman Church. Moreover, the extremely corrupt state of society at Corinth infected even the Christian converts; who had not sufficiently eradicated the licentiousness to which they had been addicted before their conversion, nor abandoned that philosophical scepticism so prevalent in Corinth; but introduced it into Christianity. Hence both immorality and a kind of philosophised Christianity, which even denied the resurrection of the dead, were but too prevalent. Besides this, the license of wealth had produced its usual effects among the richer members of the Church. Hence arose insolence to their poorer brethren, whom they prosecuted before the heathen tribunals concerning matters which might have been settled by arbitrators among their Christian brethren: nay, they showed their contempt of them by contumelious treatment at the Lord's Supper. Even those persons, too, who were most enlightened in Christian knowledge, entered into violent controversies respecting celibacy and marriage, &c.: nay, those who possessed the highest Spiritual gifts, abused them in various ways by pride, insubordination, or otherwise. The Apostle, being informed of this state of things, towards the close of his second visitation of Ephesus, (about the end of A. D. 56, or the beginning of 57), partly from some of the family of Chloe (i. 11.), and partly by letters from the Corinthian brethren, vii. 1. wrote this Epistle, with the design, 1. of supporting his Apostolical authority, and vindicating himself from the calumnies of his adversaries; and 2dly, of applying suitable remedies to the disorders which had crept in.

1—9. form the exordium of the Epistle, containing, as usual, a conciliatio benevolentia.

1. κλητὸς ἀπόστολος.] See Note on Rom. i. 1.

— διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ.] The recent Commentators generally render θελ. benignitate. But there is no reason to deviate from the common interpretation decreto. So Valekn.: θέλημα “proprie est animi jam determinati statutum decretum.” Thus it is equivalent to the κατ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ at 1 Tim. i. 1.

— Σωσθένης.] Supposed by some to be the person mentioned at Acts xviii. 17.; though others imagine it was the scribe who wrote this Epistle;

and St. Paul, they conceive, joins Sosthenes with himself out of modesty, or from prudence. Almost every thing, however, concerning the person in question, is mere conjecture. All we can be sure of is, that, from being joined with St. Paul in this prefatory address, he must have been a person of great consideration. Crell., Valckn., and Rosenm., indeed, regard the ὁ ἀδελφός as indicating the celebrity of Sosthenes. But the expression is more properly regarded by Bp. Middl. as merely a designation of fellow-Christian.

2. ἡγιασμένοις—κλητοῖς ἁγίοις.] Both these expressions are, by most recent Commentators, regarded as mere designations of Christians, considered as separated from the world at large, set apart for the profession of true religion, and furnished with extraordinary helps and motives to holiness; those being called to the Gospel who have obeyed the call, and are thus placed in a state of salvation. But surely they must be designations of true and faithful Christians, and suggest what all Christians ought to be, and, if they would obtain the blessings of the Gospel, must be. Τοῖς ἐπικ. τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, &c., is regarded as a periphrasis for Christians. But we are also to remember as ἐπικαλεῖσθαι often signifies to invoke for religious purposes, to worship, it is clear that worship was paid to Christ, and consequently supplies a proof of the Divinity of our Lord. Ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, i. e. every place as well as Corinth. Thus the Epistle is called by Chrys. a Catholic Epistle. The words αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἡμῶν are by some early modern Commentators referred to τόπῳ: but by the more recent ones, as well as by the Greek Commentators, to Κυρίου ἡμῶν, per exanorthosin, q. d. “our Lord, did I say? Not so; but αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἡμῶν, their’s as well as ours;” which method is preferable.

After this affectionate salutation, the Apostle proceeds to conciliate their good will, by congratulating them on the abundant gifts and graces bestowed on them by God; and that in order to introduce, without offence, those reprehensions which the state of the Church at Corinth demanded. First he adverts to those dissensions which had broken its peace.

4. πάντοτε] “perpetually,” i. e. whenever

I make my prayers to God. Χάριτι, i. e. his favour, as vouchsafed in the things now particularized.

5, 6. The Apostle now more fully explains what he had said, by enumerating those various benefits of which the Corinthians had been made partakers by Christ and his doctrine. (Krause.)

—ὅτι] “siquidem, quandoquidem.” Ἐπλουτίσθητε, for περισσεύετε, ye abound. Compare 2 Cor. viii. 7, ix. 11. 1 Thess. iii. 12. The words ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ, &c., are (as Crell. and Pott observe) a further explication of the preceding general enunciation ἐν παντί; q. d. δηλονότι ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ, &c. And ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ καὶ πάσῃ γνῶσει may denote (as Schoettg. and Pott say), a thorough knowledge of the Christian religion.

6. καθὼς—ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν ὑμῖν.] This is variously interpreted, and is indeed susceptible of more than one suitable sense. See Recens. Syn. and Pott. The most probable, however, is this; “inasmuch as the truth and excellence of the Gospel of Christ has been confirmed, and is fully established among you;” namely, by the extraordinary spiritual gifts above mentioned.

7. μηδενὶ χαρ.] “no spiritual gift, whether ordinary or extraordinary,” such as was bestowed on other Churches. Ἀπεκδεχομένους, “whilst ye are waiting for,” [namely, in humble hope]. Τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν Χριστοῦ is nearly equivalent to τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ in 1 Tim. vi. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 1. 8. Tit. ii. 13. The only difference is, that ἀποκ. suggests the appearance or advent to judgment, as 2 Thess. i. 7. 1 Pet. i. 7. 13.

8. ὃς καὶ βεβ.] Some Commentators refer the ὃς to Χριστοῦ; but others (and indeed all the most eminent ones), to Θεῷ, at v. 4; which seems far preferable, not only because there is a manifest distinction between him who βεβαιώσει, and our Lord, whose day is mentioned; and because, if ὃς had been to be referred to Ἰ. Χρ., the Apostle ought to have written, not ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κ. Ἰ., but ἐν ἡμέρᾳ αὐτοῦ; but especially because (as Pott well observes), from v. 4. forwards ὁ Θεός is He to whom the summa orationis is referred; while τὸν Χριστοῦ is here only mentioned per occasionem; and hence at v. 8. ὁ Θεός is again expressly mentioned. By βεβαιώσει is meant “will do his part to confirm them, by furnishing them with the requisite means.” See Whitby. This, the Apostle proceeds to say, they may expect, for God is true to his promise to confirm, strengthen, stablish, all who faithfully seek him in the Gospel. Εἰς τέλος, i. e. to the end of this state of trial.

9. εἰς κοινωνίαν τοῦ Υἱοῦ, &c.] The sense seems to be, “to a participation in the benefits obtained by his Son Jesus Christ for all true Christians.”

10. seq.] The Apostle now proceeds to complain of various schisms which had arisen among the Corinthian Christians; with the intent, if possible, of restoring concord. (Krause.) He also endeavours to vindicate the simplicity of Christian doctrine, as well against the ambitious boasters of the Greek Philosophists, as against the superstitious Jews, that he may recal both of them to the truth, v. 10. Ch. iv. 21.

— διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος, &c.] “in the name and by the authority of Jesus Christ committed to me.” Or, with others, “by the love of Christ.” Τὸ αὐτὸ λέγειν is equivalent to τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, τὸ ἐν φρονεῖν, ὁμοφρονεῖν, and other terms denoting concord and unity; and of this sense examples are adduced by Wets. from Thucyd. and Polyb. Some confine the sense to agreement in doctrine. But this is an undue limitation of the sense, which the Apostle more fully unfolds in the next words; where σχίσματα may denote disagreements in doctrine as well as affections; especially since, in the words following ἥτε δὲ κατηρτισμένοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοί, (where we have a continuation of the same idea, by a metaphor derived from repairing a broken vessel, or mending a rent vestment); and the expression is equivalent to καταλλάσσεσθαι. Νοί refers to the mind or disposition; γνώμη, to opinion or sentiment.

11. τῶν Χλόης] sub. οἰκέων.

12. The Apostle now proceeds to unfold his meaning; for λέγω τοῦτο, both in the N. T. and the Classical writers, is adapted to the purpose of explanation, and answers to the Latin scilicet, nimirum. Literally, “My meaning is this.” Ἐκαστος is only to be referred to the generality, i. e. the factions; each one of them (singuli) said, I am, &c. On this whole passage (especially ἐγὼ δὲ Χριστοῦ) Commentators have sought difficulties needlessly. As to the new modes of interpretation propounded by Pott and Heydenreich, they are, more or less, liable to objection. No difficulty need be found in Paul,

Apollos, and Cephas, being mentioned as heads of parties; for the words are not St. Paul's, but those of persons supposed so to speak. That parties called themselves of Paul, or of Apollos, or of Cephas, involved no blame to those persons, since it was done without their wish. Hence St. Paul lays the blame on the Corinthians themselves. As to Cephas, or Peter, the party called by his name seems to have been so denominated, not so much from any attachment to the person of Peter, (as in the case of Apollos,) but with reference to his understood, though in some respects misunderstood, opinions as to the obligation of the ritual part of the Mosaic Law on Jewish Christians. Accordingly, the persons in question were doubtless Judaizers.

As to the difficulty connected with ἐγὼ δὲ Χριστοῦ, to cancel the words (with Bp. Pearce) would be to cut the knot, and to alter Χριστοῦ to Κρίσπου, merely on conjecture, is little better. The best mode of encountering the difficulty is to suppose (with Storr, Bertholdt, and Heydenreich) that those who called themselves Χριστοῦ were persons pretending to have derived their knowledge of the Gospel either from the fountain head, i. e. immediately from Jesus Christ, or at least from his nearest relatives, James the less, Simon, and Jude; the first of whom held a very great authority among the primitive Christians, being (as Euseb. H. E. i. 7. or iii. 11. 20. tells us) called ὁ δεσπότης.

13. μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός;] These words are variously interpreted. Most modern Expositors take them to mean, either, “is the doctrine of Christ divided and different?” or, “is the Church divided, has Christ sanctioned divisions in it?” or “does Christ belong to any one part only?” But the simplest mode of interpretation, and the one most accordant with the context, is that of the ancients, which is adopted by Tiren., Menoch., and Pott, which supposes the sense to be: “Are there then more Christs than one?” are there others to whom the honour and authority of Messiahship is communicated?”

In the words following, the interrogation involves a strong negation; and, from the emphasis in Παῦλος, the answer is, οὐχί· ἀλλὰ Χριστός. On the phrase εἰς τὸ ὄνομα βαπτίσσεσθαι, see Note on Matt. xxviii. 19.

14. εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ.] The best Commentators are agreed that this phrase (by an idiom common even to modern languages) signifies, “I exceedingly rejoice.” Thus his enemies

ριστῷ τῷ Θεῷ ὅτι οὐδένα ὑμῶν ἐβάπτισα, εἰ μὴ Κρίσπον

16. οἶκον] "family," including every age and sex, and, of course, infants. So Ignatius Epist. p. 21. cited by Wolf: ἀσπάζομαι τοὺς οἴκους τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου σὺν γυναιξὶ καὶ τέκνοις. The phrase οὐκ οἶδα εἰ must (notwithstanding what some say) imply uncertainty; but that is not inconsistent with inspiration, when properly understood. See Dodd. and Whitby.

17. The Apostle now passes to a vindication of his doctrine, and the method he had pursued in communicating it. Up to ii. 2. he treats of its nature, and declares that he cannot accommodate it to the prejudices of men, so as, like the false Apostles, to keep out of view, or sophisticate, what would be censured by many, and seem to them foolishness. Then at Chap. ii. 3. seqq., he details the method he had pursued at Corinth in preaching the Gospel. (Rosenm.) οὐκ—ἀλλὰ non tam—quam.

Ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγον is put for ἐν λόγῳ σοφίας, or λόγῳ σοφῶ; as in ii. 13. ἐν διδακτοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις. or as 1 Pet. ii. 1. 16. σεσωφισμένοις λόγοις; i. e. not what was to men learning, acumen, or eloquence.

—ἵνα μὴ κενωθῇ—Χριστοῦ.] Campb. well paraphrases: "lest to human eloquence that success should be ascribed, which ought to be attributed to the divinity of the doctrine, and the agency of the Spirit, in the miracles wrought in support of it."

18. ὁ λόγος—σταυροῦ] "the doctrine of salvation through a crucified Redeemer." Ἐστὶ, "appears." I would compare Thucyd. v. 41. τοῖς δὲ Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐδόκει μωρία εἶναι ταῦτα. The ancient and the best modern Commentators have shown that ἀπολλ. "rem denotat ex effectū;" and that the sense of the clause is: "To those who disbelieve and reject the Gospel, and therefore perish, it appears foolishness; but to those who believe and embrace it, and are thereby saved, it is regarded as the power of God;" i. e. the powerful means, employed by Him for bestowing salvation on men. See Rom. i. 13. and Note.

19. γέγραπται γάρ, &c.] q. d. So that the words of Scripture may be applied. The citation agrees verbally with the Sept., (except that for ἀθετήσω, "will set aside," we have there κρίνω) and in sense with the Hebr. Ἀθετ. is only a free version instead of the literal one κρίνω. By the σοφῶν and the συνετῶν are meant those who seem so, especially to themselves. Σοφία and σύνεσις properly differ as our learning, and talent, i. e. natural acuteness. (See my Note on Thucyd. ii. 97. 6. εὐβουλίαν καὶ σύνεσιν); but the terms are in use synonymous. The full sense of the passage, in its present application, seems to be: "I will destroy and take away the credit of the wisdom, &c. of the wise, by showing its inefficiency towards discovering any means of obtaining pardon and reconciliation for man from his offended Maker." See Chrys. and Theophyl.

20. πού σοφός, &c.] The Apostle now applies the sense of the passage, thus understood, to the present case, employing words which are by some supposed to be a quotation from Is. xxxiii. 18; but by others, more properly, regarded as a sort of parody on it, retaining the point in πού—πού where the interrogation has the effect of a strong negation; q. d. "They are no where, are naught." Here Bp. Middl. compares Demosth. πού δ' ἄλεις; πού τράπεζαι; πού σπονδαί; By the σοφός are designated the heathen philosophers; and by γραμματεὺς the Ἰσραῖλ, or Jewish Theologians; though it may, with some, be taken to denote men of letters in general. The συζητητὴς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου is best interpreted "the subtle disputer of this world only," the Sophist, who rests on mere human wisdom. It is not agreed whether the Apostle has reference to the Heathen σοφισταί, or to the Jewish Ὀσσητι, who deduced from Scripture allegorical, mystical, and cabalistic senses; held subtle disputations on decrees and customs; and, in short, were very like the Scholastic Theologians of the middle ages. Both, it should seem, are intended (so Theodoret, ὁ ἐκ τούτων καὶ ἐκείνων διαλεκτικὴν ἡσκούμενος τέχνην); and the sense taken generally is, "a subtle disputant on difficult questions, and curious, but empty, speculations," the ζητήσεις καὶ λογομαχίας of 1 Tim. vi. 4. By τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου is hinted his intentness on what concerns this world only, without a serious thought on the next.

—οὐχὶ ἐμώραnen, &c.] This interrogation with a negation involves a strong affirmation; and the sense is,—that God, by promulgating a plan of salvation which no human wisdom could have devised, much less accomplished, has thereby placed in a strong point of view the inefficiency of mere human wisdom for the purpose of salvation. See Theophyl.

21. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ—πιστ.] These words are closely connected with the preceding, showing the cause why God did so, and are exegetical of what went before. Thus they may be rendered, "For after that, by the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God." Thus ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ will mean either, "by permission of God's wise providence" (which is confirmed by the expositions of the Greek Commentators); or, according to others, "amidst the wisdom of God, so conspicuous in his works both of nature and providence." Pott, however, thinks that the true construction of the passage is as follows: Ἐπειδὴ ὁ κόσμος διὰ τῆς σοφίας οὐκ ἔγνω τὸν Θεόν ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, for αὐτοῦ. Where τὸν Θεόν ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ is for τὸν Θεόν κατὰ τὴν σοφίαν αὐτοῦ. The former interpretation, however, bears in its simplicity the stamp of truth, and is more agreeable to the paronomasia. The force of διὰ τῆς σοφίας is well expressed by Pott, "adhibito omni ingenii acumine, ac eruditiois apparatu." Εὐδόκησεν, "thought good, vouchsafed." Μωρίας τοῦ κηρύγματος is for κηρύγματος μωροῦ, i. e. according to a figure occurring in the Classical writers (as Thucyd. vi. 17. οὐκ ἄχρηστος ἦδε ἡ ἄνοια. and Soph. Antig. 95. ἀλλ' ἔα με καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἐμοῦ δυσβουλίαν) what was thought, or seemed to men, foolishness. Σῶσαι τοὺς πιστεύοντας is best explained "to put into the way of salvation those who should believe the Gospel pronounced by this preaching." See Whitby.

22, 23. Here a reason is given, by illustration, why the Gospel should seem foolishness to so many of the Jews and Gentiles. The sense is [For] while the "Jews require a sign, and the Greeks, &c., we, on the other hand, preach Christ crucified." Prof. Scholefield justly notices that ἐπειδὴ is not, as it is generally considered, redundant. Yet I cannot agree with him in regarding the δὲ as such; for though we were to admit that it is not unfrequently redundant, it is plainly not so here, since the Apostle means to contrast his own conduct with that of the votaries both of Judaism and Gentilism. The γὰρ is to be repeated from the preceding verse.

—σημεῖον.] 12 MSS., 5 Versions, and some Fathers have σημεῖα, which was preferred by Bengel, and edited by Griesb., Knapp, and Tittm.: but the common reading has been restored by Vater and Pott., as it had been retained and defended by Wets. and Matth.; and rightly; for the evidence of MSS. is insufficient, and that of Versions and Fathers, though strong, yet, in a case of this kind, is exceptionable. But the internal evidence in favour of the common reading is yet stronger than the external; and it is most convincingly established by Whitby, Wolf, and Bp. Jebb, Sac. Lit. p. 190, who remarks that "if the Jews had but required signs and miracles in general, abundance had been performed by our Lord and his Apostles, abundance were at that very time performing in the Corinthian Church, to which St. Paul was then writing. It is evident, therefore, that they were eagerly expecting some particular sign of the Messiah, in and from the heavens." Besides, σημεῖον is required by the parallelism with σοφίαν, and in σκάνδαλον and μωρίαν.

Here the Jews and Greeks are well characterized. The Jews seek a sign from heaven, some miracle agreeable to their gross conceptions; the Greeks do not so much require miracles, as wisdom; but it must be human wisdom, set off by the aids of rhetoric, and grounded on the deductions of human reason and philosophy.

23. ἡμεῖς δὲ, &c.] "But we simply preach," &c. Χριστὸν ἐστ. is equivalent to τὸν λόγον (the doctrine) τοῦ σταυροῦ, the Gospel. The sense of the next words is: "Though it be to the Jews a stumbling block (as contrary to all their secular expectations) and to the Greeks foolishness, as not resting mainly on the principles of reason."

24. κλητοῖς.] In this is implied obedience to the call. Θεοῦ δύναμιν καὶ Θεοῦ σοφ., i. e. the powerful and wise means by which God works the salvation of men (see supra v. 18, also Whitby's paraphrase and Grot.); meaning (as Dr. Burton says) that the Gospel is really the sign, which the Jews asked for, and the wisdom, which the Greeks sought after.

25. ὅτι τὸ μωρὸν—ἀνθρώπων ἐστὶ.] This is meant to anticipate an objection, and give a reason for the preceding. "Probat (says Pott) loco quodam communi:" where τὸ μωρὸν and τὸ ἀσθενὲς are to be taken like μωρίας, supra v. 21. and after σοφώτερον supply τοῦ σοφοῦ from the context; and at ἰσχυρ. τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ. Thus the sense is: "For the teaching of God, though it be thought foolish, and the dispensations of God, though seemingly weak, are wiser and stronger than all which the wisdom and power of the world could accomplish." I would compare Philo Jud. Νομίτας γὰρ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην λογίοντα κατὰ σύγκρισιν τῆς ἀληθείας ἀφωρίαν εἶναι, where ἀφ. may be rendered infantium, in the sense in which the word is used by Cicero Topic.

26—28. The Apostle now proceeds to trace the counsel of God in bringing men to the Christian religion, and to explain who those are whom He will think worthy of the benefits of it; appealing to the example of those Corinthians who had been converted to Christianity. (Pott.) The foregoing view proceeds on the supposition that by τὴν κλῆσιν is meant their call to the Gospel in general; whereas there is great reason to think, from the context, that it must mean the particular calling of the Ministers to their office. Thus the supplementary words at the end of the verse, “are called,” κλητοὶ εἰσι, to be fetched from the foregoing κλῆσιν, must mean “called to preach the Gospel.” This view I find confirmed by Prof. Turton (Text of the English Bible, p. 65), in the following able examination of the context. “The Apostle, from v. 17 to v. ult. is discoursing on the mode of preaching the Gospel, and the agents employed for that purpose. The preaching of the Gospel was (v. 17.) not with ‘wisdom of words;’ it was, as it were, (v. 21.) ‘the foolishness of preaching;’ and with regard to the agents, St. Paul declares (vv. 27, 28.) that ‘God had chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise—the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty—and base things of the world and things that are despised—yea, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are.’ And the reason assigned (v. 29.) is, that ‘no flesh should glory in his presence.’ In the midst of all this comes in v. 26; which, of course, ought to accord with what goes before, and what follows. Can any thing be more manifest than the object of the Apostle in this place? For the purpose of the ‘calling’ spoken of, it was not the ‘wise,’ not the ‘mighty,’ not the ‘noble;’ no: God had chosen ‘the foolish things’ to confound ‘the wise’—‘the weak things’ to confound ‘the mighty’—‘things base and despised’ to confound ‘the noble.’ When, therefore, our Translators give it, as the meaning of the verse, that ‘not many wise,’ &c. are called, it must be understood called to preach the Gospel.”

—βλέπετε γὰρ, &c.] Render: “for ye see the mode in which this calling to the ministry has taken place,” i. e. the kind of persons who have been called. In τὰ μωρὰ and τὰ ἀσθενῆ we have things for persons; and τοῦ κόσμου is for ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. “Ἰνα κατασχ., i. e. ‘to put them to shame, by showing that what they could not effect by their wisdom, had been accomplished by what they accounted foolishness.”

28. καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα—καταργ.] The Apostle adds another link in the chain of antithesis, by employing an expression which partakes of the Hyperbole, or the Oxymoron, but is not unfrequent in good writers. Καταργ. is here, as often, to be understood logice, i. e. in the sense “to cause men to see that those persons are no-bodies, of no esteem.”

29. ὅπως μὴ—πᾶσα σὰρξ] “that no human being should boast,” or ascribe what he does to his own wisdom or eloquence. For αὐτοῦ, I have edited τοῦ Θεοῦ, from very many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Edd., and with the concurrence of Beng., Wets., Matth., and Griesb.

30. ἐξ αὐτοῦ] scil. Θεοῦ, sub. μόνου. Εἶναι ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰ. signifies “to be Christians.” Thus the sense is: “by the dispensation of God alone can ye become Christians.”

—ὃς ἐγεννήθη—ἀπολύτρωσις.] Br. Warburton has an excellent Sermon on this Text (Vol. ix. 79.) which, he says, “gives us a full and exact character of the personage of Jesus, and of the nature of the religion he was to propagate among men.” Wisdom and Righteousness, continues he, describe a Messenger sent from God with the publication of the eternal law of Truth and Right: Sanctification and Redemption denote the Messiah foretold; who was to atone for man’s transgression, and restore him to his lost inheritance. This text, therefore, is a beautiful summary of Gospel blessings, admirably adapted to the Apostle’s views and purposes; as will appear from an examination of the context, in which the learned Prelate shews at considerable length the full import of the words, and the nature and advantages, both to Jews and Gentiles, of Jesus being made to them Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption. Finally, he proves that the teaching wisdom and righteousness was what made his mission expedient, but the bestowing Sanctification and Redemption made it necessary; and that consequently the former was but the secondary, while the latter was the primary end of Christ’s mission.

31. ἵνα, καθὼς γέγραπ.] “So that [to use the words of Scripture],” These are taken, in sense, from Jer. ix. 23, 29; and the meaning is: “He who is disposed to boast, let him ascribe all of which he boasts to the Lord [Jehovah].”

II. 1—6. The Apostle, returning to the subject treated of at i. 17. (whence, v. 18—31, he had somewhat digressed), now more copiously treats it. He did not attempt to catch their attention by splendour of diction or by ingenuity of reasoning. It was his sole object to deliver the message of salvation by Christ. Whatever knowledge, therefore, he possessed, he resolved to keep it out of sight, and speak as if he had it not; confining himself solely to the things which related to the redemption for sinners through His blood. Whatever did not bear upon this great doctrine, he disclaimed. We are not to understand the Apostle's meaning to be, that he confined himself to the topic of the crucifixion of Christ, i. e. to the exclusion of other parts of the revealed truth (as the various relations of man to God, the attributes of God, and man's nature and destination, &c.), but that (to use the words of Scott) he preached "the whole counsel," as the great circumference to that circle of which "Christ crucified" is the centre in which all the lines meet. The Apostle then proceeds to show why he purposely disclaimed all human wisdom, namely, because the doctrines he had to teach, being a special revelation from God, were far above the reach of the human understanding; inasmuch that their nature could not be thoroughly understood, or correctly received, by the naturally corrupted minds of men.

1. There is here some difference of opinion as to the construction. Some, as Rosenm. and Krause, trace it as follows: καὶ γὰρ ἔλθων πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, καταγγέλλων ὑμῖν τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἦλθον οὐ καθ' ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας, for ἐν ὑπεροχῇ. Others thus: Καὶ γὰρ ἔλθων πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, οὐκ ἦλθον καταγγέλλων (for ὡς καταγγ., i. e. ὥστε καταγγέλλειν) ὑμῖν τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ κατ' ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας. The sense is the same either way; but I agree with Chrys. and Heydenreich in preferring the latter mode of construction, as being the more natural and obvious. Τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ is a periphrasis for "the Gospel," as 1 Cor. i. 6.

2. οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινα, &c.] The general sense is: "I resolved so to carry myself as to show no knowledge, but of." &c. The τοῦ is cancelled on the authority of a few MSS., by Griesb. and Tittm.; but uncritically. It was, no doubt, thrown out to remove a difficulty in construction. But the idiom (on which see Win. Gr. Gr. § 38. 3, 6. Note 3.) is elsewhere used by the Apostles; and yet not so often as to induce us to suppose it to have been introduced by the scribes.

3. Thus far the Apostle has spoken of the subject of his teaching. He now adverts to the method which at Corinth he had pursued in preaching the Gospel.

—ἐγενόμην πρὸς ὑμᾶς] for ἡμην παρ' ὑμῖν, "I was among you;" perhaps a Latinism for apud vos. As to the sense of ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ καὶ ἐν φόβῳ καὶ ἐν τρόμῳ, most Commentators are, with reason, of opinion that ἀσθεν. has reference to those bodily infirmities and personal disadvantages, which impeded the Apostle's usefulness, and were the source of much mortification; inasmuch that the ἀσθενεία here, and the ἀσθενής at 2 Cor. x. 10. may mean the same as the thorn in the flesh at 2 Cor. xii. 7. By the φόβῳ καὶ τρόμῳ is, I think, denoted extreme modesty.

4. οὐκ ἐν πειθοῖς ἀνθ. σοφίας λόγοις.] There are few passages which have more perplexed Editors and Critics than this. From the multitude of varr. lectt., the Critics suspect corruption. But variety is sometimes only an attestation of the difficulty found by the ancient Interpreters; and often shows only the modes in which they sought to remove it by Critical conjecture. A course which can very rarely be approved, and never where, as here, the general sense of the passage is clear. It would, indeed, on a slight glance, seem difficult to perceive what there is exceptionable in the common reading. The only objection (and that which, I conceive, led to such extensive alteration of the passage) is to πειθοῖς; for the adjective πεισῶς, persuasorius, is, we are told, found in no other writer. Be it so—but since the Apostle uses many rare words, and his style differs materially from that of the Classical writers, where is the wonder that he should use a word which, though it may not have been employed by other writers, yet was probably in use in the language of common life? It is not, however (as some say) contrary to analogy; but it is formed on the model of φειδῶς and μῖμος. The Critics, however, hazard conjectures; of which the most probable is that of Hemsterh. and Kuhn., for πειθοῖς to read πεισανοῖς. This, however, has not the slightest support from MSS. or even Fathers; for though Chrys. does once or twice cite πεισανοῖς, yet he elsewhere has πεισοῖς. Far preferable is the reading πειθοῦ (from πεισῶ, persuasion, which occurs in Euseb. and Zonaras) found in 7 or 8 MSS., several Fathers, and the Syriac, Armenian, Slavonic, and Italic Versions. But the authority is by no means sufficient to warrant any alteration of the text; for the evidence of Fathers is negated by their sometimes citing the passage in the common way of reading; that of Versions is, in a case of obscurity, difficulty, or doubt, exceptionable. As to the argument urged by some, that in πειθοῖς the s has been repeated from the σ following,—that depends upon whether ἀνθ. be retained; which will be considered further on. Or, at all events, the argument turns two ways; since it was as likely that the s should be absorbed by an σ following, as that an σ should have been added to πεισοῖ from the following word; indeed, this does occur in some MSS. and Fathers. Or it might be so altered to suit ἀποδείξει. Finally,

(which involves the greatest objection) the reading in question will render it necessary either to cancel λόγοις, or change it into λόγων; for neither of which alterations is there any tolerable authority, except that of those MSS. and Fathers in which πειθοῖ is found. And to admit that, would be reasoning in a circle. The common reading, then, must, by every rule of criticism, be retained.

With respect to ἀνθρωπίνης, it is omitted in 8 MSS. and the Syriac and Æthiopic Versions, as also in some MSS. of the Vulg. and Origen; evidence only just sufficient to occasion some doubt of its genuineness, but not to warrant its being cancelled, with Griesb. and Tittm.; especially from ἀνθρώπων in the verse following.

— ἀλλ' ἐν ἀποδείξει—δυνάμεως.] Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say, πνεῦμα must here denote the operations of the Holy Spirit, both ordinary and extraordinary, namely, the Gifts imparted by St. Paul; and δυν. refers to that highest sort, the working of miracles.

6. σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν, &c.] The Apostle now shows, that if human wisdom be wanting to his preaching, it is not devoid of divine wisdom. On the exact sense, however, of this obscure passage, there is some difference of opinion. See Wolf, Pott, and Heydenr. It should seem to be this: “But we too have wisdom to address our hearers withal; which we bring forward among those advanced in spiritual knowledge. But that wisdom is not of this world.” By σοφίαν is simply meant the doctrine of Christ crucified, and salvation by Him, who, it is said, supra i. 30. ἐγενήθη ἡμῖν σοφία, δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ ἁγιασμός καὶ ἀπολύτρωσις, where see Note. The τέλειοι are opposed to the οἱ μαιψάνοντες, the vñπιοι further on (as Hierocles opposes τοὺς τελείους το τοῖς ἀρχομένοις), and are the same with the πνευματικοί, opposed to the ψυχικοί v. 14. and the σαρκικοί iii. 1. 4. But Heydenr. thinks, that by τέλειοι the Apostle had reference, not to Christians simply, but to such, among both Christians, Jews, and Heathens, as were cultioris sanctionisque ingenii. By τῶν ἀρχ. seem to be meant generally persons of authority and influence in the world, both Jews and heathens; whether as political governors, or teachers of religion, or masters of human wisdom, the σοφοί, δυνατοί, εὐγενεῖς at i. 26. Τῶν καταργουμένων is best explained by Pott as signifying (by a popular idiom), “qui vanitatis convicti sunt.” This is, in fact, meant to be affirmed of their wisdom itself, which is proved to be encephalic and folly, as compared with true wisdom.

7. ἀλλὰ λαλοῦμεν—μυστηρίῳ.] At ἐν μυστ. sub. οὐσαν, “a Divine and mysterious wisdom,” namely, that of the Gospel. Τὴν ἀποκεκ. is added to further unfold the idea (see Eph. iii. 9. Col. i. 26. Eph. i. 9. Rom. xvi. 25.); and both together denote the all-wise counsels of God for the salvation of men, planned from all eternity, but not to be fathomed before their completion; nay, not even at that time to be thoroughly understood, but in many respects hidden and obscure. See v. 9. The προσω. has reference to the eternal counsels of God (πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου) for the salvation of men. See Acts iv. 28. Rom. viii. 29. sq. Eph. i. 5. 11. At προῶ. supply, from the subject matter, ἀποκαλύπτειν. The sense is: “which God had from eternity planned, and purposed to reveal.” Εἰς δόξαν ἡμῶν some refer to the Apostle, or to the Apostles in general; q. d. “to the glory of the publishers.” But they are better understood (with the best ancient and modern Interpreters) to mean us Christians, q. d. “to our [future] glory and felicity.” Thus the general sense of the verse is: “What we preach is not the wisdom of this world, but that which proceeds from God: mysterious, indeed, and formerly hidden and unknown; but which God had from eternity pre-determined to reveal, and promulgate, to be the means of glorification to us believers. By what has been said in the foregoing verses, the Apostle means, that they were not to suppose the extent of Divine revelation to be limited to what the mind of man is naturally able to discern; but were to regard what was preached, as coming from the fountain of Infinite Wisdom, and relating to truth which could not have entered into the heart of man, unless supernaturally imparted to him. Hence he infers, that whatever difficulties might present themselves, respecting detached parts of the Divine system, they were to be obviated, not so much by reference to what is known independently of Revelation, as by what may be collected from the Sacred Word. See more in Bp. Van Mildert's Bampton Lectures, p. 178. Tittman, however, in a Dissert. on v. 10—16., is of opinion that the sense is: “tradimus, quæ esse intelliguntur a perfectioribus.”

8. ἔγνωκεν] “thoroughly understood.” See Recens. Synop. Τὸν Κύριον τῆς δόξης. This must mean the glorious Lord, implying God-head; such being a title of the DEITY. See Ps. xxiv. 10. Acts vii. 2. compared with John xvi. 3. Acts iii. 17. xiii. 27. 2 Cor. iii. 13. seq.

9. ἀλλὰ, καθὼς γέγραπ.] But (to apply the words of Scripture). The passage intended is, no doubt, Is. lxiv. 1. But the dissimilarity with the Hebrew and Sept. is so great, that some have fancied the words were quoted from a lost apocryphal book, or traditionary story of the Rabbins. The expression, ὡς γέγραπται, however, is no where else applied to any but the Canonical books of Scripture. Besides, the resemblance to the Hebrew in sense, nay, even words, is such, that we cannot suppose any other passage intended. If the passage be well considered, it will be evident, that it is a tolerably faithful citation ad sensum, though not ad litteram. For 1. the words ἐπὶ καρδίαν—ἀνέβη form no part of the quotation, but are merely exegetical of the preceding, though formed on Is. lxv. 17. The words ἀπὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος οὐκ ἤκούσαμεν ought not to be taken in comparing the Apostle with the Hebrew and Sept., since he plainly did not mean to cite them. As to the ἃ at the beginning of the verse (which has nothing corresponding to it in the Hebrew or the Sept.), I am inclined to think that it is not genuine, but arose from the αι preceding. As far as concerns the vestigia literarum, I should be ready to adopt the conjecture δ, if there were better authority for it, and did I not doubt whether such a use of the Article can be admitted, or would be agreeable to the Hellenistic usage; which rather rejects the Article where it seems necessary, than causelessly introduces it. Thus at Job xxix. 11. ὅτι (I conj. ὅτε) οὐς ἤκουσε καὶ ἐμακάρισέ με, ὁφθαλμός δὲ ἰδὼν με ἐξέκλινε, where we should have expected τὸ οὐς. It is not my present purpose to consider the question as to the corruption of the Hebrew or Sept.; suffice it therefore to say, that the Sept. seems to me here to be very corrupt, but the Hebrew quite correct, though obscurely elliptical; and yet the ellipsis of ὡς is not a very unusual one; and so ἄνθρωπος in Greek. At ὡς there would be an impersonal use (as in 1 Sam. ix. 9.), like the French on, and the German man. As to the ellipsis of the relative ὡς before ὅτι, it is frequent. The next ellipsis, corresponding to “such things,” or rather ‘what thou doest,’ is very unusual, yet is agreeable to the genius of the language. The sense is well expressed by Bp. Lowth, and is, in itself so good, that it is matter of wonder why the learned Prelate should have thought that “we are here reduced to the dilemma of supposing, either that the Hebrew has been wilfully corrupted by the Jews, or that the Apostle’s quotation is not made from Isaiah, but from some Apocryphal Book.” I have ventured to bracket the ἃ, especially since I find the passage quoted by Clemens Romanus ad Corinth. 34. without it.

The Apostle, then, plainly accommodates the words of the Prophet to his present purpose. Now accommodation admits of some change; and it may easily be shown that there is here no change in sense. And a slight modification of the words is the more permissible, since the best Interpreters, ancient and modern, think that the subject is probably the same both in the Prophet and the Apostle; namely, the blessings of the Gospel dispensation.

10. The Apostle now shows how things so hidden and remote from human imagination, could have been known to himself and the other Apostles,—namely, by the revelation of the Holy Spirit. The next clause shows why we cannot of ourselves conceive or know these truths.

—τὸ γὰρ Πνεῦμα.] Sub. μόνον: “for the Spirit [alone] searcheth into and knoweth all [these] things; even the deep counsels of God.” This sense of ἐρευνᾷ “to know thoroughly, as from diligent scrutiny,” occurs also in Rom. viii. 27. Rev. ii. 23. By βάθη is meant the σοφία ἐν μυστηρίῳ ἀποκ. v. 1., those mysterious dispensations, which lie hid from human view; such as the calling of the Gentiles.

11. This exact knowledge of the mysteries of God by the Spirit is now illustrated by an apt comparison. q. d. for, as nobody can tell the inward thoughts and designs of any man, but the man himself; so it is the Holy Spirit of God alone, that can be acquainted with the secret counsels of God. Hence it is clear that the Spirit is omniscient, and intimately united with God, just as the soul of man is with the body.

—τίς γάρ, &c.] Construe τίς ἀνθρώπων, for τίς ἄνθρωπος. The ἀνθ. is emphatic. τά. Sub. νοήματα from the context. τὸ πνεῦμα is for νοῦς. τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ, for τὸ ἐνοικοῦν, denoting its privacy, and being hidden from others. τοῦ ἀνθρώπου is used, and not τινός, or ἐαυτοῦ, in order (as Pott observes) to make the application of this example from man to God the stronger.

12. ἡμεῖς δὲ, &c.] This is, by the best Commentators, restricted to the Apostle himself, who, they suppose, uses the plural number from modesty. Yet it may mean himself and the other Apostles. τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ κόσμου, “the temper and disposition of the world,” which deals in human wisdom only. See John iii. 13. 31. τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ is variously interpreted; but the best Commentators take it to mean (vi oppositi) “the spirit or mind which is given by God [through the Holy Spirit],” equivalent to the σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν μυστηρίῳ v. 7.

—ἵνα εἰδῶμεν—ἡμῖν.] The full sense is: “[And this has been done], that we may fully know [and appreciate] the things freely given to us by God;” i. e. the various blessings, both of this world and the next, imparted by the Gospel of grace.

13. διδακτοῖς ἀνθ. σοφ. λόγοις.] Mr. Holden recognizes in this “a plain declaration that the very words of the Apostolical writings were dictated by the Holy Spirit.” I must confess that I cannot be induced to take such a view, even though I find it adopted by Dr. Burton. Not to say how improbable it is that this should be the sense intended; and what awkward consequences would flow from it; suffice it to say, that no other Commentator has so understood the words; not even of the ancients, who would, if any, have been likely so to do. It is generally agreed that by λόγοις is meant, the manner of treating a subject; comprehending, as Pott says, the “expositionis rationem, argumentorum delectum, pondus atque ordinem, totumque dicendi genus,” so in German, vortrag, wording.

—πνευματικοῖς πνευμ. συγκρίνοντας.] The best Commentators are agreed that by πνευματικὰ are meant the things revealed by the Spirit in the O. T.; and by πνευματικοῖς, the revelations of doctrine made by the same Spirit to the Apostles, under the New Dispensation. Several eminent Commentators propose to supply ἀνθρώποις, meaning the τελείους at v. 6. That, however, would require the Article. ‘Ἁγίου, omitted in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, is rejected by Grot., Mill, and Beng., and cancelled by Griesb. and Vater; but, I think, without sufficient reason.

14. The Apostle now gives the reason why this heavenly wisdom was not held in due honour by many, but treated with contempt; namely, that the ψυχικός ἄνθρωπος, &c.

—ψυχικός δὲ ἄνθ.] Ἁνθρωποὶ are those who have the ψυχὴν (or animal and sensual principle, which man enjoys in common with the brutes) only, without having, or at least using, the πνεῦμα, or intellectual faculty, which is peculiar to man; and who, of course, are destitute of the illumination of the Holy Spirit: men who are either led by sensual impulses only, or rely solely on the light of nature, slighting every thing which cannot be brought to the evidence of the senses. Such a person, therefore, it is said, οὐ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύμ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, “does not admit, or hearken to, the doctrines revealed under the guidance of God’s Holy Spirit,” nor care to understand or appreciate them; for, in fact, they seem to him foolish, nor can he understand them, they being to be searched out and discovered alone by the spirit or understanding, under the illumination of the Holy Spirit, of which he is destitute. “By this (as Bp. Van Mildert, Bampton Lectur. p. 179, observes) we are not to understand that the mind of man is physically incapable of apprehending such truths, when propounded to him; nor that it requires some special illumination of the understanding, to enable him to discern the terms of the propositions laid before him in Scripture; but that these truths are not naturally to be discovered by the greatest exertion of his intellectual faculties. They cannot be known until revealed by the Spirit of God; nor will they even then be fully received, but by the effect of the same Spirit in subduing the pride, and cleansing the corrupt affections of the human heart.” Thus (observes Chrys.) as the eyes of the body, though the most beautiful and useful of the members, yet, without light, cannot see; so the ψυχὴ cannot discern, unless enlightened by the Holy Spirit.

15. ὁ δὲ πνευματικός, &c.] The sense seems to be: “On the contrary, the man who is guided by the intellectual faculty when enlightened by the Holy Spirit, is able to discern all things revealed by the Spirit of God; but he himself is not to be discerned, understood, or judged of by any natural (i. e. not spiritual) person.” Many recent Commentators take πάντα as accus. singul. mascul., and assign the following sense: “The spiritual man can discern and determine upon every one who is not so, but he himself can be thus judged of by no one [who is not so].” But this is scarcely permitted by the context.

16. Now follows the reason for this inability; in expressing which the Apostle tacitly employs the words of Is. xl. 13; and as there is no direct citation, the application of the words may well be, as it is, very different from that of the Prophet. The Commentators, however, differ in their interpretations, according to the view they take of αὐτόν; some referring it to Κυρίου, others to ὁ πνευματικός. The ancient and most modern ones prefer the former; by which there is supposed to be an inquiry, whether any man has so known the mind of the Lord, as to be able to give him counsel or instruction. See Slade and Heydenr. Many, however, of the best Commentators refer the αὐτόν to πνευματικός, and assign the following sense: “for what [natural] man hath known the purposes of God, so that he may instruct him,” i. e. the spiritual man: but we have the mind of Christ, and are therefore able to judge all things, and to instruct and discern the spiritual man. This latter mode is far more agreeable to the context; it being evidently the Apostle's intention to expose the absurdity of a natural man presuming to instruct a spiritual man in spiritual things, or of any ordinary Christian or Teacher presuming to dictate to an inspired Apostle like himself; for it was plainly the Apostle's principal purpose here to establish his own authority, which had been called in question among the Corinthians.

III. In order to check their contentious spirit about teachers, and their boasting of having had a clearer insight in divine truths, the Apostle now proceeds to anticipate an objection of his adversaries, that the Corinthians had scarcely received from him the rudiments of the Gospel; and that they therefore did right to prefer teachers who had communicated the capita rerum. He shows why he had not fully instructed them on those abstruse subjects, on which their teachers had plausibly speculated, namely because, though they had been many of them endued with the supernatural gifts of the Spirit, yet he had observed such things in their disposition and conduct, as rendered it improper for him to speak to them, as to persons qualified to receive the deeper discoveries of Divine wisdom. On these the Apostle did not much treat, because he knew the Corinthians could not bear them; and also that instructions would feed carnal passions, instead of generating faith and love. See more in Scott.

2. The Apostle continues to illustrate what he is saying by a metaphor (suggested by the νηπίοις just before) taken from the custom of feeding infants with the lightest food, as milk, pap, &c. By βρῶμα is meant the στερεὰ τροφή of Heb. v. 12; both expressions denoting the more sublime and mysterious doctrines, as γάλα does the elementary and simple ones, namely, the corruption of human nature, and the rich mercy of God in redemption by the blood of Christ; faith, regeneration, the nature and necessity of holiness, the influences and fruits of the Spirit, the eternal happiness or misery of all men, &c. Ἐπότισα is meant to relate, per syllepsin, to both the γάλα and βρῶμα; an idiom frequent in the Classical writers. See Win. Gr. § 31. 3. a.

The καὶ after ἐπότισα is not found in several MSS., some Versions, and many Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb.; but without reason: for the authority is insufficient, and we can better account for its omission than for its insertion. There is more to be said for the οὐδέ, which is received by Griesb., Knapp, Tittm., and Vater, instead of οὔτε. But though strict propriety of language requires it, yet, as the Apostle is inattentive to such minutiae as this, it seems rather to have come from the early Critics; especially as the MSS. in which it is found are generally such whose text has been systematically altered.

3. ὅπου] “whereas:” of which sense see examples in Rec. Syn. Ζήλος, ἔρις, and διχοστασία are not, as Krause imagines, mere synonyms; but there is rather a Climax; “envy (as Grot. observes) leading to strife, and strife to faction.” Οὐχὶ σαρκικοὶ ἐστέ; for this envying and strife are by the Apostle at Galat. v. 20. numbered among the works of the flesh; “which include among them (says Grot.) all those affections which do not tend to the glory of God and the welfare of man, but are merely directed to our own selfish gratification.” By σαρκικοὶ the Apostle does not intend the prevalence of the sensual appetites, but of the malignant or selfish passions. Thus a man may be, in some respects, thus carnal, yet, in other respects, not destitute of spirituality. By κατ' ἄνθρωπον is meant correspondent to the habits of mere unregenerate man.

4. See Note on i. 12.

5. διάκονοι] i. e. persons merely instrumental in producing, and not the authors of, faith and conversion; and who therefore ought not to be set up as heads of the religion. Ἀτ' ἐκάστω ὡς there is, as Grot. observes, an inverse construction for ὡς ἐκάστω; q. d. to each his office, his ability to exercise it, and his success in it. Ἀτ' ἔδωκε supply πιστεύειν, i. e. if the words be referred to the evangelized; but if to the evangelizers, the sense will be, even according as the Lord gave to each his peculiar office ἐν τῷ διακονεῖν. The words ἀλλ' ἢ are not found in several very ancient MSS. and some Versions, and are cancelled by Griesb.; but on insufficient grounds. The external proof that they are not genuine is very slender, and the internal by no means strong; since it is more probable that the words were removed by those who objected to the inelegance of the Greek, than inserted by those who wished to remove an abruptness.

6. Here the metaphors are derived from agriculture; of which, in the East, irrigation forms an important operation. ἡύξανεν, literally, “made to grow,” i. e., as Abp. Newcome explains, by the miraculous powers communicated to us, and by the influence of his Spirit.

7. ἐστί τι] Sub. μέγα, i. e. comparate. An idiom frequent in the N. T. See Acts v. 36. and Galat. ii. 6. and Notes.

8—17. Annectere videtur Ap. argumentum secundum ad dissidiorum, ex nimio honore, aliis doctoribus præ aliis tribui solito, oriundorum, stultitiam reprehendendam; idque inde repetitum, quod, quomodo doctores omnes, qui uni eisdemque consilio promovendo destinati sint, hoc ipsum promoverint, et quonam adeo honore, quibusque præmiis aliis præ alio dignus sit, non penes homines, sed solum Deum judicium esse possit, debeatque. (Pott.)

—ἐν εἰσιν] “are one and the same,” i. e. entirely united in affection, work, and purpose. Hence there ought to be no faction.

—ἕκαστος δὲ—κόπον.] This (as the Greek Commentators remark) was added to repress sloth, as if all the labourers would be on the same footing, and receive the same reward. The words, therefore, form an epanorthosis; q. d. they are not so far one, but that respect will be had to each one's labour and pains, and he will receive his own reward proportionably. It is labour to which reward is promised, not success of labour, which is not in any minister's power.

9. Previously to describing this κόπος, the Apostle briefly points out the scope to which it is to be directed. In συνεργοί there is a resumption of the foregoing agricultural metaphor. The συν in συνεργοί may be referred either to God (q. d. “We are fellow-labourers with God”), or to the Apostles and preachers of the Gospel (q. d. “We are fellow-labourers of, and employed by God.” So σύνδουλοι in Matt. xviii. 29. But the latter seems more agreeable to the context. Γεώργιον, i. e. the field cultivated. In the next clause the Apostle slides from the agricultural into an architectural metaphor; both being employed in Scripture with reference to men as the object of God's purposes in the Gospel. See Matt. xiii. 38. John xv. 1. Is. lxi. 5. and 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 20. The pronouns are emphatical, and the sentiment is: “You are, as it were, the field which God cultivates, and the building which he erects; we are his labourers in both works.”

10—15. Thus far the Apostle has proceeded on the supposition that the labourers were skilful and faithful: he now adverts to those who were, more or less, not so; and in doing this, he continues in the architectural metaphor just adopted. The whole passage is allegorical. The Christian congregation being the building, and its ministers the architects. St. Paul had, by the free grace of God, laid a sure foundation; if that be removed, there is quite another building. Whatever superstructure be added, it must await the issue of that day of trial, which will bring every man's work to the test.

10. κατὰ τὴν χάριν, &c.] “according to the office [of Apostle of the Gentiles] graciously committed to me by God.” Θεμέλιον τέθεικα, i. e. “by communicating the elementary truths.” In ἀρχιτέκτων St. Paul adverts to his own dignity, as Apostle of the Gentiles. The ἄλλος is, as Pott remarks, to be taken collectively, with reference to those persons (Apollos and others) who had followed the Apostle at Corinth. On the mention of “building thereon,” the Apostle engrafts an admonition to those who are, or may hereafter be employed in it. Ἐποικοδομεῖ, scil. ἐπ' ἀλλότριον θεμέλιον. The words θεμέλιον and ἐποικ. are emphatical and antithetical.

11. δύναται] “can,” consistently with what is right, i. e. ought. (Grot.) Παρὰ ἄλλων (taken, as often, for a comparative), signifies than or besides. This idiom is supposed to be Hellenistic; but it occurs in the Classical writers. Κείμενον scil. ὑπ' ἐμοῦ. The sense of Ἰησοῦς Χρ. is, as the best Commentators have seen, the History of Jesus Christ, comprehending the doctrines and precepts, the promises and threatenings of the Gospel, as we find them stated in the Evangelists, or, as Scott explains, the Person, mediatorial office, righteousness, atonement, intercession, and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. I have double bracketed the ὁ, since it is not found in the earliest Edd. and many MSS. and Fathers, and has been cancelled by Beng., Wets. Matth., Griesb., Tittm., and Vat.

12. The sense of this and the following verses is somewhat obscure, arising from a certain confusion in metaphor. But the difficulty has been increased by a misapprehension of the Apostle's general purpose in this passage; which was not, as is commonly thought, to represent one edifice, but (as the best Commentators are agreed) two. The Apostle means to say, that on the foundation of those elementary principles two very different buildings might be erected. And thus the metaphorical expressions are meant to designate the good and the bad superstructure, respectively. I have pointed accordingly; for (as Pott and Heydenr. have seen) there is after ξύλα an ellip. of εἴτε, for ἢ εἴ τις ἐποικοδομεῖ. The Syr. supplies the particle.

The words ἐκαστος—γενήσεται are closely connected with the foregoing, and form, as Pott says, the apodosis. The sentiment is, “Whether any one builds on this foundation a solid and splendid building, like a magnificent Temple, or a mean hut, formed of boards and thatched with dried grass, each architect's work will be made manifest." The best Commentators are agreed that λίθους τιμ. designate those precious marbles, with which palaces and temples were built, or at least the walls cased. See Is. liv. 11, 12. The hut in question is supposed to be built of upright posts and pales, filled up with twigs daubed over with clay, and the whole thatched with stubble or offal hay.

13. ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει.] This may mean, as many Commentators suppose, "time will show [this]." So the Latin adage, "dies docebit," and the Greek χρόνος πάντα εἰς φῶς φέρει. But this interpretation is forbidden by the presence of the Article. From the words following, it seems best, with the ancient and several eminent modern Expositors (and recently Pott and Heydenr.), to take it of the day, i. e. the day of judgment. Mackn., Middl., and Burton, indeed, understand the day of persecution (see James v. 3. 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 12.): but besides that that would suppose the meaning to be most anigmatically expressed, the other is more suitable to the gravity of the context, and is required by the idea meant to be suggested in ἐν πυρὶ ἀποκαλ.; for God's judgment is often elsewhere compared to a fire. Ἀποκαλύπτεται may be, with some, referred to ἔργον (building), the words ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει being regarded as in some measure parenthetical; and thus a good sense will arise. But it is more natural to refer ἀποκ. to the nearer antecedent ἡμέρα; and thus a more simple construction is obtained. The sense, too, which it yields, is equally good; for the day of judgment will (as we learn from 2 Pet. iii. 10) be revealed with fire.

14, 15. μένει] "remain [uninjured by the flames], abide the fiery trial." Μισθὸν λήψεται and ζημιωθήσεται are opposed to each other; and in the former there is an ellipsis of ἔργου, to be taken from τὸ ἔργον just before; in the latter an ellipsis of τοῦ μισθοῦ, from μισθὸν preceding; q. d. He shall be mulcted of, lose the reward, which he would have received for his work. At αὐτὸς σωθ. those Commentators are not a little perplexed, who refer the passage to Christians in general; but without reason; for it is plain that the Apostle had only in view Christian teachers. The sense of the passage is, indeed, obscured by a blending of the physical and the metaphorical parts of the comparison, the first of which represents a builder, whose house is, as it were, burnt over his head, and who with difficulty and danger escapes through the fire. From the passages cited by the Philological illustrators this appears to have been an almost proverbial expression, as in Jude 23. and Livy xx. 35. ex damnatione collegæ et suâ proprie ambustus evaserat. The second designates a Christian teacher, the superstructure of whose doctrine does not square with the fundamental principles of Christianity previously laid down, and accordingly is brought to ruin: thus, then, he loses his labour, and is himself saved with very great difficulty.

That this passage cannot, upon any principles of just interpretation, be adduced to countenance the Popish doctrine of purgatory, I have shown in Recens. Synop.; remarking that the notion has no support in any of the earlier Fathers, and the countenance seemingly afforded by the later ones, is not without suspicion of interpolation; of which we are enabled to convict the Romanists in one instance, that of Theodoret in loc., where see the Note of Noesselt.

16. οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ναὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε.] There is here a recurrence to the idea at v. 9., but suggested by the foregoing architectural metaphor; and under this imagery the Apostle speaks of the whole body of Christian converts, as being the Temple of God, built by Him and consecrated to his service. Just as in the O. T. God is said to dwell among the Jews; who are accordingly styled the habitation and the Temple of God. And he further assures them that the Spirit of God dwelleth in them, and is attested by his gifts and graces, as God manifested his presence in the Temple at Jerusalem; q. d. Ye are not merely the building of God, but his Temple, as being that in which his Spirit dwelleth. This is meant to point a denunciation against false teachers, who corrupt the minds of their disciples with error. The general sense is, that the indwelling of the Spirit constitutes the Temple of God: and that every true Christian is both individually such a sacred shrine, and that the whole Christian Church forms collectively the complete and magnificent building substituted in the place of the Jewish Temple. The assertion is, that if any one shall corrupt or injure this body of the Church, composing the spiritual Temple of God (whether by false doctrines, or a contentious and sectarian spirit, or by a conduct unworthy of his high calling, see vi. 15—19.), him shall God destroy. It is strange that Abp. Newc. should render φθερεῖ but corrupt, which spoils the beauty of the antonomiasis subsisting between φθείρει and φθερεῖ. Compare Acts xxiii. 2, 3., where the expression used is not imprecatory, but predictive. Here φθείρει is not so much predictive (as Theophyl. considers it), but rather denunciatory. Ἅγιος is here very significant, and even emphatic, q. d. holy [and therefore not to be violated or injured with impunity].

17. οἵτινές ἐστε ὑμεῖς] “which kind of Temple [in inviolability] ye [the body of Christ] are.” The construction here is remarkable; the plural οἵτινές being used instead of the singular ὅστις, by a not very unusual idiom; whereby, when a relative is placed between two substantives, it sometimes takes the number of the preceding, sometimes, as here, of the following. See Matth. and Buttm. Gr. Gr.

18. The Apostle now traces the origin of the dissensions which harassed the Corinthian Church, (Crell.) adducing a third argument to prove the folly of making schisms. (Pott.)

— μηδεὶς ἑαυτὸν ἔξαπ.] The words μηδεὶς ἑαυτὸν ἔξαπατάτω are meant to be referred, not, as some suppose, to what precedes, from v. 10.; but to what follows; and are a formula (occurring also in Matt. xxiv. 4., where see Note Eph. iv. 14. 2 Thess. ii. 3. 1 John iii. 7. and Jer. xxxvii. 9.) intended to give force and solemnity to a warning or a precept, by hinting at the danger of despising it, through the deceptiveness of persons, or the deceitfulness of things. Thus the sense is, “let no one deceive himself,” either by resting on the vain opinion of his own wisdom, or of wisdom in general, which, without Divine aids and lights, cannot but fail him. Δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι. I have in Rec. Syn. proved that the sense is not, “thinketh himself to be wise,” nor, “seemeth to be wise;” but “has the reputation of being wise.” So Thucyd. i. 79. ἀνὴρ ξυνετὸς δοκῶν εἶναι. The words ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ are by some ancient and modern Interpreters construed with the words following. But it is more natural, and agreeable to the style of Scripture, as well as to the context, to connect them (as do most Commentators, and among the rest, Pott), with the preceding. Render, “in knowledge of the things of this world.” Μωρὸς γενέσθω, “let him renounce all pretensions to wisdom superior to what the word of God reveals.” Ἴνα γέν. σοφός, “in order that he may become really wise,” i. e. unto salvation.

19. ἡ γὰρ σοφία, &c.] The full sense is, “[and this indeed is necessary] for the wisdom of this world [only] is [but] foolishness in the estimation of God.” Dr. South (in an able Sermon on this text, vol. i. 375. seq.) takes σοφία here to mean that worldly wisdom, which lies in practice, and goes by the name of policy,—a kind of practical cunning having something of the nature of a trade. This he thinks plain from the πανουργία in the next clause. But from what the Apostle immediately subjoins at v. 10., especially adverting to διαλογισμούς (see Rom. xiv. 1.) and μάταιοι (see Rom. i. 21.), it should seem that he had also in view that sort of wisdom which consists in speculation, and, however admired by the learned among the heathens, was called by St. Paul “vain philosophy” and science falsely so called. To this, there is reason to think, the false teachers and their disciples were exceedingly attached, and with it corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel. By σοφία is meant the wisdom of men who rest on their own intellectual powers, without a reference to God; a wisdom which has no more effect in procuring salvation than folly. This truth the Apostle then establishes from Scripture, namely, Job v. 13.

— ὁ δρασσόμενος] scil. ὁ Θεός ἐστι. Render “it is God who catcheth [and holdeth fast] the crafty in their own cunning.” The Apostle here follows the Hebrew rather than the Sept., and renders more forcibly. Διαλογισμούς, “devices, plans.”

21—23. Having thus shown the folly of schisms, the Apostle adds an exhortation; not to boast, some of one teacher and some of another, to the disregard of all the rest, since not only all teachers, but all events that may befall them, are made subservient to the general good of the Christian body. (Pott.)

— καυχάσθω] “boast of,” by ranging himself under any one’s banners, as leader of the Sect, (which was the case both with the Jews and Greeks) seeing that they are but men, and instruments of God for the salvation of the world. In the words which express the reason, the πάντα is by some Commentators referred to things, namely, the endowments of the Apostles and teachers; by others, to persons, namely, all teachers. The latter is preferable, especially as the other sense may be included; to hint which, it seems, the neuter was used for the masculine. Render: “All teachers and all the various endowments they respectively enjoy, are yours,” i. e. meant to be promotive of your spiritual good. Compare Rom. viii. 24. This πάντα is then (Pott and Heydenr. observe) explained per μερισμόν. The general sense of the passage is clear; but how to adjust the language to the ordinary rules of construction, is not easy. It is, by the best Expositors, supposed to contain the following sense: “Yours are all teachers [and their endowments]; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas: nay, yours is the whole universe, and whatever it affords, whether distributed into things endued with life, or destitute of it; whether into things present, or things future (compare Col. i. 16. Rom. viii. 39.), all are yours, i. e. are meant to be subservient to your real and ultimate good." The component parts of the above μερισμός are well explained by Newc. as follows: "or life, as exercising your virtues, and prolonging your usefulness: or death, as displaying your faith and patience, and leading to glory: or things present, the gifts of the Spirit, the good or evil things of life: or things to come, the happiness and immortality which you shall inherit: all things are for the benefit of Christ's faithful disciples, and work together for their good."

With respect to the words ἡμεῖς δὲ Χριστοῦ, &c., they doubtless mean: "But [though all things and persons be yours] you yourselves are Christ's subjects," and therefore ought not to attach yourselves to any other, as head of the Church. The words Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ are meant to bring the gradation in this spiritual Hierarchy (with which Wolf compares a similar one in Philemon) to the highest pitch;—"Christ is God's," i. e. (as the best Commentators explain) in his office of Mediator and Redeemer. See Chrysost. and Whitby.

IV. The first five verses of this Chapter closely connect with the preceding, being a sort of collary, showing what followed from the foregoing; namely, the exact degree of estimation in which Christian teachers ought to be held; to whom the Corinthians had hitherto assigned either too much, or too little honour. (Krause.) That they might not be too proud of their new teacher, to the undervaluing of himself, the Apostle shows that all preachers are but stewards of the manifold mysteries of God, and are valued in the sight of God according to their fidelity, which could not now be known to men; and that therefore they ought neither to be too much extolled nor depreciated, till Christ, their Lord, shall come, who will assign them their due honour. Moreover, that having nothing but what they have by him received, such stewards have no ground of glorying. Then in order to point out the difference between the false teachers (so admired by the factious) and himself and the other Apostles, he draws a striking contrast between the luxury and ease in which the former were living at Corinth, with the poverty and persecution which the Apostles endured. He further intimates that he shall shortly come, and put to the test the claims of his adversaries, by seeing the supernatural powers which they can bring forward for their confirmation.

1. ἄνθρωπος] is put (like the Heb. אָדָם or שָׂרָא) for κρεσστος. Οὕτως, "in this [following] manner." Ὡς ὑπὲρ. Χρ., and consequently not Lords of your faith, so that ye should be called after them. Οἰκονόμους μυστηρίων Θ., "stewards and dispensers of the benefits of the Gospel, by preaching its doctrines; which are called mysteries, because they were not discoverable by human reason, but only to be known from Divine revelation." He means to say that they are stewards only, not the proprietors of that which they dispense, and therefore are in all respects to follow the directions of their Master, and fidelity is their chief duty. On the points of parallel between the duties of an οἰκονόμος and a minister of the Gospel, see Raphael. and Scott.

2. ὁ δὲ λοιπὸν.] A form of transition equivalent to τὸ λοιπὸν at Eph. vi. 10, and which may be rendered cæterum, nunc; or, with Heydenr., potissimum.

3, 4. εἰς ἐλάχιστόν ἐστι.] An Hellenistic phrase, equivalent to the Classical παρ' οὐδέν ἐστι, or οὐδέν διαφέρει, &c. Ἀνακρίνειν properly signifies "to examine the qualities of any thing or person;" and sometimes it denotes, as here, the result of that scrutiny, whether for praise, or blame. Now the result of the ἀνάκρισις in question would, in the followers of Paul, be praise; in the followers of Apollos and others, blame. To soften the seeming harshness of this, the Apostle adds, ἢ ὑπὸ ἀνθρωπίνης ἡμέρας, i. e. "or of any man's judgment;" ἡμέρα, being often used to denote a day of judgment, but here simply judgment. It is, however, so anomalous an expression, that Jerome would regard it as a Cilicium. We may rather suppose (with Beza, Olear., Dobree, and Pott), that St. Paul chose to say day instead of judgment, with allusion to that great day of final judgment, about the award of which alone he was anxious. His meaning seems to be this,—that whether he be approved or censured by human judgment, is of little consequence to him, in comparison with the unerring judgment of God at the great day.

Then, to preclude all idea of arrogance, he adds ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐμavτὸν ἀνακρίνω, the sense of which briefly worded, and therefore obscure, clause seems to be: "[As to human judgment, so far as the judges from being able to determine], that I cannot even judge myself [or determine whether I am superior or inferior to the other teachers.]"

The next clause οὐδὲν γὰρ—δεδικαίωμαί is parenthetical, and the sense is, "I am not conscious to myself of having done any wrong [in my ministry]; yet am I not, on that account, justified and free from blame;" namely, it should seem, that of sinning occasionally through ignorance, or deficiency in even what was right. So Pott: "siquidem plura mihi supersunt prestanda." At οὐδὲν sub. κακόν, as in the Nil conscire sibi of Horace. The word is sometimes expressed, as in a kindred passage of Job xxvii. 6. οὐ γὰρ σύννοϊδα ἐμavτῷ ἄτοπα πράξας. The words ὁ δὲ ἀνακρίνων—ἐστὶ must, from the context, mean: "He alone who has to judge me at the last day is the Lord." See Bishop Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 25.

5. On this the Apostle founds a weighty admonition, of universal application.

—πρὸ καιροῦ] "aforetime," namely, as is just afterwards explained, the time of Christ's judgment at his second advent. Φωτίζειν signifies to bring to light, i. e., in a popular sense, to make known; synonymous with φανερ. just after. The sentiment is: "He will bring to light [and pass judgment on] the most secret actions, and hidden thoughts and plans."

Ἐπαινος, is like the Latin fama, a word of middle signification, denoting what is thought or said of any one, either for praise or blame; and sometimes, as here, it has an adjunct notion of reward or punishment as resulting therefrom. Of course this is intended primarily of the teachers before mentioned; but it is applicable to all Christians.

6. ταῦτα δὲ, ἀδ., μετεσχ. εἰς ἐμ.] Μετασχηματίζειν signifies to transfer, by accommodation to oneself, what may be said of another. The sense is: "These things [namely, 'which I have now written, on the authority of teachers,' iii. 35. seqq.] I have in figure applied to myself and Apollos for your sakes, for your instruction;" q. d. "I have brought forward this in my own person and that of Apollos, as if what was said of others (whom I, out of delicacy, forbear to mention), were applicable to us; intending, under my own name and his, to admonish you as to the degree of estimation in which you ought to hold any teachers of the Gospel. The Apostle had recourse to this μετασχηματισμός, partly, we may suppose, from motives of prudence and moderation, but chiefly that he might be enabled thus to intimate, in the least invidious manner, the true dignity of ministers of the word.

6. ἵνα ἐν ἡμῖν—φρονεῖν.] "Ὁ γέγραπται is commonly introductory of what is written in Scripture for general admonition; but the best Commentators are agreed that here, agreeably to the context, it can only mean, "what has been written in this Epistle." Supra iii. 7, 9, 22. The next words ἵνα μὴ—ἐτέρου signify, "that ye may not be vain of one teacher to the prejudice of another." Thus the expression is equivalent to καυχᾶσαι ἐν ἀνθρώποις supra iii. 21. On ἵνα with an Indicative, see Winer and Alt.

7. The Apostle here apostrophizes the false teachers, using the singular number, to make the address more pointed. [Why dost thou boast] for who, &c.² Διακρίνει, "distinguishes thee, makes thee superior to the generality?" Heydenr., however, is of opinion that what is here said is meant for the Corinthian Christians at large. It seems, indeed, to have been intended for both the teachers and the people; with some accommodation of sense in ἔλαβες, according to the application. Thus, also, as to the reference in ἔλαβες, whether it be, as some say, to God, or (according to others) to Paul, it may be understood of both: the natural endowments and spiritual gifts as ascribed to the former,—the religious knowledge in general, to the latter. Though I am inclined to think that the Apostle had the former chiefly in view, meaning that there was nothing that they had not received immediately from God, or mediately, through his instrumentality, as Apostle.

8. ἥδη κεκορεσμένοι ἐστέ, &c.] The best Commentators are of opinion that this is spoken ironically, and directed against the false teachers, Paul's adversaries; q. d. "I see ye are like persons who are satiated at a feast; ye think ye have all, and need no more knowledge." But it should seem that there is a reference to the people also. By κεκορ. ἐπλουτήσατε and ἐβασιλεύσατε the Apostle merely places the same idea in different points of view, by varying the metaphor, so as to rise in climax. The 1st is taken from persons filled with food, so as neither to need nor desire more. The 2d, from persons so rich as to have no want of, or desire for more wealth. The 3d, from one who, from being a private person, is raised to the throne, and, having therefore attained the highest station, has nothing further to wish. Ἐβασίλ. ought (as in the case of ἐπλουτ.) to have been rendered "ye reign;" which must be taken in the metaphorical sense, common in the Latin regno, as denoting the obtaining whatever we desire, without the controul of others. So Horat. Epist. i. 10. 8. Vivo et regno, simul ista reliqui. So Heydenr. explains it as equivalent to ἐγενήθητε ὑπερλίαν σοφοί, &c. In the next clause, καὶ ὁφελόν γε ἐβασιλεύσατε, &c., irony passes into sarcasm. As to the sense, that adopted by most Commentators, "I wish ye had the authority of princes, that ye might afford protection to us in persecution," is frigid, and at variance with the context, which demands the figurative sense above adverted to. The true mode of explanation is that of the ancients and some moderns (as Calvin, Lightfoot, Tiren., Menoch., Krause, Vat., Pott, and Heydenr.), who assign as the sense: "Would that ye were so abundant in all spiritual riches; for then I might partake of your prosperity in the credit and honour which I should enjoy from having converted and taught you; since the fame of the disciple tends to the honour of the teacher."

9. δοκῶ γὰρ ὅτι ὁ Θεός—ἀνθ.] The words are obscure from deep pathos, and the only way to understand them is to ascertain the connection, and trace the scope of the passage. The latter should seem to be, to contrast his own situation with theirs, and thus put them to shame. As to the former, the link of connection seems to subsist in a clause omitted, to which the γὰρ has reference, q. d. [And well may we Apostles form such a wish]; for how different is our situation as compared with yours; for while you abound in every good thing, and carry your heads high, we, &c. This use of δοκῶ is (like our I trow) subservient to irony or sarcasm. Ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἀποστ. ἐσχάτους ἀπέδειξεν, "hath set us Apostles in the lowest place." Ἀποδείκνυμι signifies to show, appoint any one his place. As to ἐσχάτους (which term simply signifies the lowest or last in a row), there is not, perhaps (as many imagine), any allusion to the gladiatorial exhibitions of the Amphitheatre, but only an expression to denote the meanness of their condition. At ἐπιθαν. repeat ἀπέδειξε. There is supposed to be there an allusion either to the bestiarii, or the gladiators. But possibly the Apostle intended (as Chrysostom, Pott, and Heydenr. think) to express only the general idea of men condemned to death, and who are in continual expectation of meeting their fate. The words following, indeed (ὡς θεάτρον ἐγενήθημεν) countenance the former view; but it should seem that the Apostle there adduces a new figure, engrafted on the former. Thus the sense of ὅτι θεάτρον—ἀνθρώποις seems to be: "And, in one point of resemblance, we may truly be called ἐπιθανάτιοι; for we, like them, are become a gazing-stock to the whole universe, both angels and men." Θεάτρον is taken for θεάμα; and θεάτρον ἐγεν. is for θεατριζόμεθα, as in a kindred passage of Heb. x. 33. With respect to the difficulty started by some—how angels can be supposed present at such a spectacle, it may be answered, that καὶ ἀγγέλ. καὶ ἄνθρ. are put per μερισμόν, being enumerated as the constituent parts of τῷ κόσμῳ preceding. See Calvin, Krause, Pott, and Middl. If this be thought not satisfactory, we may, with Chrys., Grot., and Heydenr., suppose that the world [of intelligent beings] is here distinguished into two parts, the superior and the inferior family, as were the visible and invisible spectators. And so probably the passage was taken by Origen, who says (Contra Cels. viii. p. 398.) that God permits to evil spirits the permission to vex the pious, ἵνα καὶ ἐν τοσοῦτοις εὐσεβεῖς μένοντες, φανεροὶ τέως τοῖς μὴ βλέποντιν αὐτῶν τὴν ἔξιν, ἀοράτοις καὶ ὁράτοις θεάταις γένωνται. This view is confirmed by 1 Tim. v. 21. Διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ—καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν ἀγγέλων.

10. ἡμεῖς μωροὶ—ἄτιμοι.] In this antithetical sentence the Apostle reverts to irony, which is, however, dropped at the end of the verse. Διὰ Χριστόν is for ἐν Χριστῷ. The idea meant to be conveyed by ἀσθ. and ἰσχυροὶ is not quite clear. It seems to be, "weak in presence, infirmities, and worldly advantages," as opposed to being buoyed up by outward advantages and prosperity.

11—13. The contrast is here carried forward; from what affected the mind, to what pressed on the body; and that in a pathetic enumeration of various sufferings. The expression with which the description is introduced, ἄχιοι τῆς ἄρτι, serves to show the continuity or perpetuity of the evils, q. d.

"[Nay, not to mention past afflictions] up to this present day we are scantily supplied with food and drink, and are in want of necessary clothing." Γυμνητεύειν properly signifies to be lightly clothed (like the γυμνήται), and from the adjunct, to be ill clothed. The first καὶ is emphatical, and signifies even. Κολαφ. is explained by the best Commentators to mean, "we are ignominiously treated," as xi. 20. 2 Cor. xii. 7. Ἀστατοῦμεν, "we have no settled abode."

12. κοπιῶμεν ἐργαζόμενοι τ. ἰ. χ.] The circumstance of having to support himself by severe hand-labour is, with reason, enumerated among his miseries; for a misery it must have been to one so circumstanced.

—The Apostle now adverts to the manner in which he bears all this, and his general demeanour. "The foregoing endurances (observes Theodoret) put his fortitude to the proof; these following spring from a higher principle."

—εὐλογοῦμεν.] Literally, "we give good words." See Rom. xii. 14. and Note. Ἀνεχ.,

"we bear it patiently." Compare the ἀνέχου καὶ ἀπέχου of Epictetus.

13. παρακαλοῦμεν] "we intreat [to be better used;"] or, as others explain, we entreat God to forgive them. The next clause, ὡς περικαθάρματα—ἄρτι, forms the highest step of the climax; in which the Apostle sums up the details of injurious treatment in a few words; the sense of which, however, is disputed. Περικαθάρματα τοῦ κόσμου, is by many Commentators, ancient and modern, regarded as a sacrificial term, with allusion to the expiatory sacrifices of the Greeks and Romans; among whom, in times of public calamity, some poor wretch was selected from the dregs of the people, to be offered up as a lustration sacrifice. Such persons, however, were called καθάρματα, or περικαθάρματα, with reference to the purification, or expiation, effected by their sacrifice; which can have no place here, unless the term be taken, in a very qualified and highly figurative sense, of those who undergo the greatest evils from their fellow creatures. See Heydenr. and Phot. And when we consider the expression which follows, and which is evidently meant, by a parallelism, to be exegetical, πάντων περιήψιμα, there is little doubt but that the sense of περικαθάρματα is "the cleansings up," as περιήψιμα "the sweepings up or around;" metaphorically denoting the vilest things, or persons. Theophyl. regards both terms as having the same sense, and equivalent to ἀποσπόνγισμα: but περικ. rather means quiescibilis. So Theodoret explains: οὐδὲν διαφέρειμεν τῶν ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις (read οἰκίαις) ὡς περιττῶν, ἀπορρίπτονμένων ἢ λαχάνων, ἢ λημμάτων (I conj. λυμάτων). Thus it will mean the outcasts of society. Examples of this sense of περιήψιμα are frequent; of περικαθ. very rare. Nay, the word itself is so uncommon, that it is not improbable the Apostle himself formed the expression (as he does some others) on the περιψ. just after.

14. The Apostle now turns the discourse from the teachers, to the Corinthian Christians in general, and softens the seeming harshness of the preceding expressions.

—ἐντρέπων.] Ἐντρέπειν properly signifies "to turn away," and then "to make any one turn away his eyes, by staring at him," and figuratively "to make him ashamed."

15. In παιδαγωγοῖς and πατέρας the Apostle contrasts the severity and mercenary service of instructors, to the gentleness and disinterested spirit evinced by himself. Ἐν Χρ., "in the doctrine of Christ." In διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς ἐγέννησα he shows the nature of the paternity he speaks of; namely, that of having converted them to Christianity.

16. μιμηταί μου.] Not, "imitators of my modesty," as many Commentators explain; for it seems to be simply the Apostle's intention to deduce from his spiritual paternity the inference, that they should be imitators of him; just as parents and teachers are to their children and pupils, the exemplar by which they are to model their character. The imitation, therefore, in question is to be extended to every branch of Christian doctrine and duty.

17. Τέκνον, disciple or convert. Ἐν Κυρίῳ, "in the business of the Lord," the spreading of his Gospel. The words τὰς ὁδοὺς μου τὰς ἐν Χρ. (sub. οὖσας) "my methods of Christian instruction." See Chrys. and Theophyl. The next words καθὼς πανταχοῦ—διδ. suggest that these injunctions involve nothing new, but what is common to all the Christian congregations, and therefore ought not to have been deviated from.

18. ὡς μὴ ἐρχομένου] "as though I were not coming [to you]." Ἐφυσιώθησαν has a very extensive sense, and is well explained by Pott, "are puffed up with an opinion of their superior wisdom, carry themselves insolently, and arrogate all the authority of deciding in matters pertaining to the Church."

19. γνῶσομαι—δύναμιν.] We have here a sentence of infinite dignity and vigour, the interpretation of which depends upon the sense to be assigned to τὴν δύναμιν. This some ancient, and most of the earlier modern Commentators explain of the power of working miracles. That, however, is somewhat harsh, and scarcely permitted by the words following. It is better (with some ancient and most recent Commentators) to understand it of the ability of performance, as opposed to that of mere words, boasting and promises, of what they can and will effect. So Grot., Whitby, Locke, Krause, Pott, and Heydenr. We need not, however, exclude the power of the Holy Ghost as evinced in the spiritual gifts, which contributed so much to the δύναμις of the Apostles and first teachers of the Gospel.

Γνώσομαι, "I will put to the proof [in order to know]:" for, according to Glass's Canon, verbs of knowledge often denote, not knowledge alone, but certain motions, affections, and effects, which are conjoined therewith.

20. οὐ γὰρ ἐν—δυνάμει.] The interpretation of these words depends upon the sense assigned to the preceding. If the first-mentioned interpretation be adopted, τῇ δυνάμει will denote (as Newc. explains) the power of working miracles, of knowing the heart, and of inflicting Divine vengeance. If the second be adopted, it will denote the power of effecting something, as opposed to bare words. And the best Commentators are, with reason, agreed that the words are meant of teachers of the Gospel, and that βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ signifies the promulgation of the Gospel. We must supply ἔστι, i. e. κατεργάζεται, "is accomplished." Thus λόγῳ and δυνάμει will respectively denote boasts, promises, and mere words, as opposed to the power of effecting what may serve to confirm the truth of the Gospel, to explain its doctrines and promote its efficacy on the heart and life. Here again the spiritual gifts are included; though when taken as a dictum generale, they must not be considered.

21. τί for πότερον, "whether [of the two things] do you choose." Ἐλθω, must I come. Ἐν (for σύν) ῥάβδῳ. This seemingly proverbial expression (which has, as Schoettg. thinks, a reference to the corporal discipline of the Jewish Church) is, as the ancient and most eminent modern Commentators are agreed, equivalent to ἐν κολάσει, or ἐν παιδευτικῇ ἐνεργείᾳ, alluding to the castigation by severe reproof, or by spiritual censures, or, when the extremity of the case demanded it, by inflicting miraculous judgments on the refractory.

V. Nexus hujus sectionis cum proximè præced. ex voc. πεφυσιωμένοι c. iv. 19. v. 2. repetendus videtur hic: vos arrogantia et vana superbia inflati estis, iv. 19. vos, quos potius piget arrogantiæ vestræ, cum pessimæ notæ hominem in familiaritatem vestram receperitis. (Pott.) The true connexion seems to be this,—that after having noticed their arrogance, and his own power of punishing obstinate offenders, he proceeds to animadvert on an instance which would be likely to call for punishment, and now demanded severe reproof.

1. ὅλως ἀκούεται ἐν ὑμῖν πορ. There is an ellipsis of εἶναι, and the sense is: "It is generally reported that," &c. The Apostle first notices the existence of πορνεία in general, and then specifies a flagrant instance of it. Now πορνεία is a general term to denote illicit sexual intercourse of all kinds. In the present case, it must be understood in the sense of incest; and unless the woman in question had been separated from the father by legal divorce, adultery.

Whether the man was living with the woman in marriage, or in concubinage, is not agreed. The latter opinion is the more generally adopted; though probability lies the other way. Ἐχειν in the sense to be united in conjugal union, is frequent both in the Classical and Scriptural writers; while in the other sense it probably no where occurs in the Scriptural ones. Yet from 2 Cor. vii. 12. it should seem that the father was then alive.

—ὀνομάζεται.] This word is rejected by many Critics, and cancelled by most of the recent Editors; but on insufficient grounds, since MSS. (only ten) which have it not, are confined to one family, and, however ancient, are altered ones. And Versions and Fathers are not good evidence in a case like this. Besides, we may better account for the omission than the insertion of the word; namely, from a fear lest the sense arising from them could scarcely be justified. For that this and even more incestuous connections were named among the heathens, cannot be doubted. But that will only prove, not that ὀνομάζεται is spurious, but that the sense generally assigned to it is incorrect. The true import seems to be, "is heard or spoken of [as occurring]." And so the word is taken at Eph. v. 3. πορνεία—μηδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν; "reported as being practised among you." Thus the sense will be the same, whether the word be retained, or not: for in the former case, ἀκούεται must be supplied from the preceding, and in the latter ὀνομ. will have the sense of ἀκούεται. And it is possible that ὀνομ. might be inserted from the margin, where it was meant to supply what seemed wanting to the sense, without running into tautology. But I am far more inclined to think that the ὀνομ. was thrown either by bold Critics, who scrupled at the sense arising, or fastidious ones, who thought the style would be improved by removing the word. Thus in Latin, the passage reads better without the word. I must not omit to add that ὀνομ. is also supported by the Pesch. Syr. Version. Finally, what is here said can hardly be regarded with most recent Commentators, as savouring of hyperbole; since (as I have shown in Recens. Synop.) great as was the corruption of morals among the heathens of that age, such a connection as the present was so exceedingly rare, that it might be almost said to be unheard of.

2. καὶ ὑμεῖς πεφυσιωμένοι, &c.] Editors and Commentators are not agreed whether this should be taken interrogatively, or declaratively. Several modern Editors and Expositors prefer the latter; but, I suspect, biassed by the Vulgate, which had a great influence both in punctuation and interpretation. It must be confessed, too, that there is some difficulty connected with the former mode. Yet it seems to have more spirit, and to be more agreeable to the air of the context; and is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Versions and the Greek Fathers and Commentators. And the more difficult construction is, in a writer like St. Paul, more likely to be the true one. Though, indeed, there is no great harshness; for the sense may be thus expressed: "And now [while such enormities are committed in your society] are ye puffed up with spiritual pride? [as if all things were right among you,] and do not ye [as ye ought] rather mourn [over this fall and your disgrace] and take measures that he who hath done this deed should be removed from your society?" Ἐπειθ. alludes to that formal mourning over any scandal brought on the whole body, which accompanied the excommunication of the offender, who was bewailed for as one dead; a custom borrowed from the Synagogue, and long retained in the Church. Hence, under the idea of mourning is couched that of excommunication, which is particularly enjoined in the next clause.

Ἐξαρθῇ ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν may be rendered, "should be removed from among your body." A mild expression, instead of the harsher one ἐκκοπή, and meant to suggest the possibility of his restoration to the body, after thorough repentance and reformation. See 2 Cor. ii. 7.

3. ἐγὼ μὲν γάρ, &c.] The construction is: ἐγὼ γὰρ ἥδη κέκρικα—τὸν οὕτω τοῦτο κατεργ. παραδοῦναι τῷ Σατανᾷ, and the rest are to be reckoned as sentences inserted. See Pott. Ἐν πνεύματι, in spirit and mind, namely, by my solicitude for you. So Plutarch cited by Wets.; κἂν μὴ παραγένηται τῷ σώματι, παρόντα τῇ γνώμῃ.

The ὡς is omitted in 7 or 8 MSS. and a few Versions and Fathers, and is rejected by almost all Critics. But the authority of MSS. for its omission is very slight. As to the Versions, they are in such a case of little weight. And if the word were (as the Critics say it is) pleonastic, that would be no reason why it should be cancelled. For such redundancy usually implies no more than a non-correspondence to any foreign language in some expression. But, in fact, ὡς is here not redundant, but is rather elliptical, for ὡς εἰμι; q. d. Being (as I am) absent in person.

Κέκρικα. The sense seems to be: "I do hereby determine [and direct]." They are told that they will do well to use this his Apostolical authority, to take steps (such as are then suggested) for removing the offending member. Οὕτω, "so [scandalously]."

4. The construction here is disputed. That part of the words are parenthetical, is obvious; but how far the parenthesis ought to extend, is not so certain. Some, as Chrysost., include ἐν

τῷ ὀνόματι—πνεύματος. Others (and indeed the most eminent Commentators) only take συναχθέντων—πνεύματος, which seems preferable. Παραδοῦναι scil. ὑμᾶς depends upon εἰς τὸ, or ὥστε, understood, "in order to your delivering him," and the passage may be rendered thus: "I do hereby direct that ye (being assembled together, and I being spiritually and virtually present with you, by the signification of this my opinion) do, in the name and in behalf of our Lord Jesus Christ, and acting by the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, deliver the person so described," &c. At τὸν τοιοῦτον there is an epanalepsis.

5. παραδοῦναι—Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ.] On the exact sense of this passage there is no little difference of opinion. See Recens. Synop. It should seem that (as the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, are of opinion) we have here plain vestiges of a formal excommunication, indicated by παραδοῦναι τῷ Σατ. (with allusion to the chief words of the excommunication), and a punishment in the flesh, indicated by εἰς ὄλεθρον τῆς σαρκός. Now that the Apostles had the power, and sometimes exercised it, of inflicting death or disease supernaturally, cannot be denied. But whether this can be considered as an example of its exercise may be doubted. There seems to be no more than an injunction to pass sentence of excommunication; but not to inflict disease. In εἰς ὄλεθρον τ. σ. is, I think, only intimated one purpose of the excommunication which might be expected to follow, and, if God so pleased, would follow it.

The words ἵνα τὸ πνεῦμα—Ἰησοῦ may be thus paraphrased: "that his soul, corrected, humbled, and reformed by these sufferings, may be saved at the day when Christ shall come to judge the world."

6. οὐ καλὸν τὸ καυχ. ὑμῶν.] The Greek Commentators, and also Grot., Whitby, Locke, and Macknight refer this to the false teacher. That, however, is harsh, and it is better (with Menoch., Hall, Rosenm., Krause, Iaspis, Pott, and Heydenr.) to regard it as a general reproof, founded on πεφυσιωμένοι at v. 2; the Corinthians having, it seems, in a letter to Paul, boasted of the excellent state of things in the church, and perhaps hinted their superiority to other churches. Thus the sense is: "Your boasting is not well founded or commendable [while such foul sins are committed among you]."

—οὐκ οἴδατε.]. This must not be regarded, with Pott, as merely a form of transition; but neither must its sense, with some, be too much pressed on: it merely refers to what is subjoined as what is, or ought to be, well known. So iii.

16. and elsewhere. Μικρὰ ζύμη, &c. is a proverbial saying (occurring also in Gal. v. 9.) found in the Scriptural and Rabbinical, and even the Classical writers. Thus ζύμη is applied to whatever has metaphorically the power of corrupting; as evil example.

7. ἔκκαθ. οὖν τὴν παλαιὰν ζύμην.] The Apostle takes occasion from the above similitude to exhort the Corinthians (under a new allegory, derived from the Jewish custom of putting away leaven at the Passover, then probably at hand) to forsake vice and vicious men; since vice can never be banished from the Church, unless those who will not abstain from it are banished with it. It appears that the Apostle had in view all persons who sinned like the person in question. Νέον φύραμα, "a new-made mass of dough" (i. e. before the leaven is put in). Καθὼς ἔστε ἄζυμοι. "As ye are, by your Christian profession, bound to be unleavened," i. e. uncorrupted by vice and vicious persons. The sense of the words καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα—Χριστός is: "We Christians have also a Paschal lamb,—even Christ, who died for the expiation of our sins; which sacrifice obliges us to greater purity of life than the Jews were bound to observe." There is, as Abp. Magee has shown, an allusion to the whole work of atonement and expiation accomplished by Jesus Christ, who is compared to the Paschal lamb.

8. ἑορτάζωμεν] "let us keep our feast," i. e. (as Loesn. explains) let us with alacrity worship and serve God in holiness of life; or (as Pott explains) let our whole life be spent as a festival-day. The words μηδὲ—ἀληθείας are explained by Pott as put for δηλονότι μὴ κατέχοντες ζύμην, τουτέστι τὴν κακίαν καὶ πονηρίαν, ἀλλὰ τὰ ἄζυμα, τουτέστι τὴν εἰλικ. καὶ ἀλή-θειαν. Ἀλήθ. denotes true virtue, and εἰλικρινεία signifies properly such a purity and whiteness as will bear the closest examination, like that of an article inspected in the full light of the sun.

9. Ἐγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπ. μ. σ. π.] Having expressed his wonder that they had not yet expelled from their society a noxious member, and enjoined them immediately to do it, the Apostle again adverts to the subject of fornication in general (on which he had touched at v. 2), in order to give some further admonition, and explain his meaning more fully.

On the exact import, however, of ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, Commentators are much divided in opinion. Some of the most eminent (as Calv., Beza, Grot., Capell., Le Clerc, Mill, Wets., Beng., Heins., Pearce, Mosheim, Mich., Semler, Rosen., Schleus., Krause, Vater, Pott, and Heyd.) think that the words have reference to an Epistle, which St. Paul had already written to the Corinthians, but which is now no longer extant. Others

(as the Greek Fathers and Commentators, and, of the moderns, Vorst, Est., Olear, Glass, Whitby, Wolf, Fabric., Lardner, Pyle, J. Jones, Mackn., Newc., Middl., and Towns.) contend that τῇ ἐπιστολῇ is meant the Epistle he is then writing. Bp. Middl., however, admits that the question can never be so decided as to preclude all future doubt; since the reference in the Article may be either to the Epistle St. Paul was writing, or, to a former one: and the meaning of ἔγραψα is not less ambiguous. He justly observes that one thing alone is certain,—that our common version, "in an Epistle," is not correct. "Ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, then (continues he), must be rendered 'in the letter,' or, 'in my letter:' but the question is, What letter? the present, or a former one? That it may (continues he) denote the letter St. Paul is writing, is beyond dispute; as appears from Rom. xvi. 22. Col. iv. 16. 1 Thess. v. 27. 2 Thess. iii. 14, and two passages of Libanius cited by Lardn. At 2 Cor. vii. 8, indeed, ἡ ἐπιστολή can only mean the former Epistle: but there the reference to it is evident, because the Apostle had just been speaking of its effects; which is not the case here. There seems, then, no internal evidence for a lost Epistle, unless ἔγραψα and the general import of the passage compel us to suppose one. But the first Aorist, it is well known, has often a Present signification, and even a Future one, and is not necessarily to be understood in a Past sense. At v. 11, ἔγραψα again occurs, where we have: νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, Μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, ἐάν τις, ἀδελφός ὀνομαζόμενος." The learned Prelate then proceeds to show (as had been before done) that there is no external evidence for supposing a former Epistle now lost. The reference, however, must not be supposed (with some) to what follows in this Epistle; but rather to the direction which has been given to expel the fornicator; which certainly might, from the Apostle, be regarded as equivalent to a general command not to associate with fornicators, especially as the admonition to "purge out the old leaven," i. e. fornicators and such like, would favour the same opinion. "Lest, however (to use the words of Mr. Towns.) they should so far mistake the command as to withdraw themselves entirely from the world, the Apostle explains himself; and informs them, v. 10, that this injunction does not extend to fornicators among the heathens, for with such, in the ordinary intercourse of life, they must associate, but that it applies only to their Christian brethren."

10. καὶ] for καίτοι, "and yet." By the τοῖς πόρνοις is denoted lewd persons in general. Τοῦ κόσμου is tacitly opposed to τῆς ἐκκλησίας, or τῶν ἀδελφῶν. And what is said of dissolute persons is also applied to other notoriously worldly persons, or to open heathens. On the ellip. of ἀλλως after ἐπεὶ see Note on Rom. iii. 6.

11. νυνὶ δέ.] The δέ is not, as it would seem to be, adversative; nor used with a reference to time; but (as Prof. Scholef. remarks) in a sense similar to that in Heb. xi. 16. νυνὶ δὲ κρείττονος ὀρέγονται. Thus the sense will be, "But what I really mean by writing thus, is"—So that (as Prof. Scholef. observes) it will be an explanation of, not an opposition to, the ἔγραψα of v. 9.

—ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος.] This is more significant than ἀδελφὸς ὢν, and denotes one who makes a public profession of Christianity. Instead of the common reading ἢ before πόρνος 7 MSS. and many Versions and Fathers, the Ed. Princ., and those of Beza, Schmid, and Beng., have ἢ, which is approved by Wets. and Matth., and edited by Griesb., Knapp, Vat., and Tittm.: rightly; since propriety requires it, and the evidence of MSS., were they far better collated than they are, is, in matters of accentuation, of no authority; whereas that of Versions is, on any thing affecting the sense, as strong.

Μηδὲ συνεσθίειν may be explained with the best Commentators, "to hold no familiar intercourse" (μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι v. 9., of which this is an explanation); community of table being a figure expressive of intimacy. See Luke xv. 2. Gal. ii. 12. This was meant to strengthen the efficacy of excommunication, and, under certain circumstances, to supply its place. For (as Grot. remarks) In excommunicationis locum, ubi aut presbyterium non est, aut ecclesia est lacerata, succedit privata familiaris commercii fuga."

12. The connection is this: "[I give these directions respecting your conduct to sinning brethren] for what business is it of mine (at τῷ μοι sub. μέλει or προσήκει) to judge those without the pale of the Church?" Kypke compares Joseph. Ant. iv. 13. where οἱ οἰκεῖοι (the Jews) are opposed τοῖς ἔξωθεν.

The sentiment is then illustrated by an example drawn from common life; where some (as Theophyl., Michael., Seml., Rosenm., and Heyden.) point: οὐχὶ τοὺς ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε. But this, as Pott observes, neither the context nor the use of the particle οὐχὶ will permit. Indeed, there is no good reason to abandon the common punctuation, according to which the sense will be: "Have you not the right to judge those within the Church? Those that are out of its pale God will judge. So then [exercise ye this power, and] cast out that wicked person from among you!" The Apostle here seems to have had in mind Deut. xxiv. 7. καὶ ἔξαρεῖς τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν. And hence is confirmed the καὶ of the present passage, which Griesb., Vat., Krause, and Pott, have cancelled, on the authority of several MSS. Κρίνει, instead of κρίνεις, is edited, from many good MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Edd., by Wets., Matth., Griesb., Krause, Tittm., Vat., and Pott.

VI. The Apostle now proceeds to touch on a subject perhaps suggested to him by the foregoing κρίνετε,—namely, the litigious spirit which prevailed among the Corinthian Christians; and he introduces it with the abrupt earnestness of one astonished and shocked at the existence of the evil practice in question. Prof. Dobree suspects that this incestuous union gave rise to some question of property, and observes, that if so, this will account for the apparent confusion of two subjects.

1. τολμᾷ τις, &c.] The best Commentators are of opinion that this may be rendered: "can any one bring himself to?" &c. But as the subject is an offence of no ordinary magnitude in the then state of the Church, and as the air of the sentence is that of strong reprehension, there is no reason to pare down the natural force of the expression, which, as Heydenr. remarks, "usurpatur de ausis impiis et nefandis, quæ quâ ratione quis sustinere, quâ fronte illa se impetrare quis possit, mirum et animo vix complectendum videatur." Πράγμα is a forensic term, signifying a suit, or such a matter as would afford ground for a suit at law. Τὸν ἕτερον, "another," or, as Bp. Middl. takes it, his neighbour, as Rom. xiii. 8, and infra x. 24. 29. The reason of the Article being used is, he says, this,—that two persons are supposed, who stand in a certain relation to each other." The truth is that, in almost every instance of this idiom (and here especially), it would be better to render, "the other party." Κρίνεσθαι, litigari, to be impleaded. Τῶν ἀδίκων is for τῶν ἀμαρτωλῶν, equivalent to τῶν ἀπίστων, τῶν ἔξω, as opposed to οἱ δίκαιοι, or ἄγιοι. The recent Commentators are of opinion "that as the Jews had permission from the Romans to hold courts for the decision of suits at law, one among another, so this privilege had been granted to the Christians, especially the Jewish Christians: but that some Corinthian Christians, despising the Christian Judges, had recourse to the Heathen ones, from some false notions respecting Christian liberty, and a disinclination to assimilate themselves with Jews." It is plain that by τῶν ἀγίων are here meant, not Christian Judges authorized to finally decide suits, but private arbitrators, by whose decision they were not obliged to abide, and often did not abide, but brought their suits before the Roman Judges. In after times, however, it appears from the Const. Apost. C. 46, 47. (where there is much matter illustrative of this passage), that there were regular trials, in courts composed of the presbyters and deacons.

2. οἱ ἅγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρινούσι.] There are few passages on which the Commentators are more divided in opinion than this. Of the numerous interpretations, the principal ones are stated and considered in Recens. Synop. Suffice it here to say, that they may be distributed into two classes, 1. that of those who suppose this κρίνειν (which is generally admitted to refer to some privilege and honour) designates a privilege to be enjoyed by Christians, or at least some of them, on earth, and in this life; either then, or to be bestowed afterwards. 2. That of those who understand by it a privilege to be enjoyed in a future state, and at the day of judgment. Now, in order to arrive at the true sense, in the interpretation of any passage confessedly obscure, it is proper to keep close to the literal import of the terms used, neither straining the meaning of any, nor explaining it away by undue limitations. And above all, we must admit no interpretation that is not agreeable to the context, and does not accord with the scope of the argument. Now if the various interpretations in question be tried by this test, they must nearly all of them be rejected. As, for instance, those which are founded on a limiting the sense of οἱ ἅγιοι, so as to designate Christian teachers, or magistrates; whereas it must designate Christians at large, meaning, of course, true Christians and accepted in Christ. The same remark applies to the confining the privilege, or honour, to this life; whereas, from the context, it must be meant of another world. Again, as judging is the subject of the context, no interpretation of κρίνειν must be admitted, that is inconsistent therewith, or is unsuitable to the scope of the argument carrying on,—which is to show the fitness of private persons (if they correspond to the title of οἱ ἅγιοι) to act as arbitrators, in order to settle disputes between their fellow Christians. Now if tried by this test, that interpretation must be rejected which has been adopted by most of the Foreign Commentators for the last century, who suppose the sense to be, “Christians can rightly judge of heathens,” i. e. perceive their errors in things pertaining to religion. Moreover that no interpretation of κριν. τὸν κόσμον must be admitted, that is inconsistent with κριν. ἀγγέλους. Now this is fatal to the interpretation of Whitby and others, who suppose the sense of κριν. τὸν κόσμον to be, “they shall judge and condemn the world,” i. e. by the faith preached for a testimony unto them; as did Noah. Far more attention is due to the interpretation of the ancient Expositors almost universally, and some few modern ones; by which, κρινούσι being taken for κατακρινούσι, the sense is supposed to be, that “the accepted servants of Christ shall condemn both men and angels, by comparison, i. e. shall place them in a worse light, and increase their condemnation.” See Matt. xii. 29. 41. seqq. But, though this has been ably maintained by Chrys. and others, it should seem to be untenable, as being by no means agreeable to the scope of the context, and the course of argument. Upon the whole, there is, after all, no interpretation that involves less of difficulty than the common one, supported by some Latin Fathers, and, of modern Divines, by Luther, Calvin, Erasm., Beza, Casaubon, Crell., Est., Wolf, Jeremy Taylor, Dodd., Pearce, Newc., Scott, and others, by which it is supposed that the faithful servants of God, after being accepted in Christ, shall be, in a certain sense, assessores judicii, by concurrence, with Christ, and being partakers of the judgment to be held by him over wicked men and apostate angels; who are, as we learn from 2 Pet. ii. 4. and Jude 26., “reserved unto the judgment of the last day.” There is little doubt but that the Apostle had here in mind the words of Christ, Matt. xix. 28. ὑμεῖς οἱ ἀκολουθεῖτε μοι, ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ—καθίσσεσθε ἐπὶ δωδ. θρ. κρίνοντες, &c., where see Note. For although as Crell. acutely remarks, “propria quædam ac peculiaris præ reliquis omnibus Christianis dignitas et excellentia apostolis promittatur, nihilominus tamen ad reliquos omnes Christianos, qui tum temporis etiam Christo aderunt, illique conjunctissimi erunt, licet in minori perfectione et gradu, extendi potest.” Objections, indeed, have been started to this interpretation, especially by Mackn.; but they are almost all founded in misconception of the Apostle’s purpose, and the nature of the expression, which is impropria. See Crell. This view avoids the objections so formidable if not fatal, to interpreting the κρίνειν strictly of judging; and, on the other hand, is abundantly sufficient for the purpose of the Apostle’s argument. There is (as Calvin remarks) an “argumentum a minori ad majus, q. d. Quum Deus tanto honore dignatus est sanctos, ut constituerit (quodammodo) totius mundi (imo angelorum) judices, indignum est eos excludi a levibus judiciis, tanquam minus idoneos.”

—ἀνάξιοί ἐστε κριτηρίων ἐλαχ.] An elliptical phrase, signifying “unfit for [the exercise of] judgment on matters of the smallest moment,” things of this life only, βιωτικά, as compared with those of a future state. On μήτι γε see Hoogev. de Part.

4. βιωτικά μὲν—καθίζετε.] Some eminent Commentators place a mark of interrogation after καθίζετε, which they take as an Indicative, in the sense: “If, then, you have controversies about worldly affairs, do you set them to judge who are the least esteemed in the Church, i. e. heathen magistrates?” This, however, is liable to serious objections. See Recens. Synop. and Calvin. Indeed, there is no reason to abandon the common interpretation (supported by the ancient and most modern Expositors) by which καθίζετε is considered as an Imperative. Τοὺς ἐξουθ., i. e. καὶ τοὺς ἐξουθ., “even those in least esteem [rather than heathen judges]." So Calvin well remarks, that this is said per anticipationem, q. d. "Vel postremus vestrum melius hoc præstabit, quam iudices impii, ad quos curritis; tantum abest ut hæc necessitas vos cogat." The Apostle intends an indirect censure of "the vain glory of the chief persons." In the τούτους there is no pleonasm, but rather a strengthening of the sense. Καθίζειν is properly used of judges, but it is also applicable to arbitrators.

5. πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω. The sense is: "What I have said tends to shame you," viz. as proceeding on the supposition that there is no person of judgment among you. Οὕτως οὐκ ἔστι, &c. This use of οὕτω (as of the Latin itane?) imports wonder mixed with censure; q. d. is it really so? In the repetition at οὐκ οὐδὲ εἷς, and even in the dialysis, there is much force; q. d. "Are none of your boasted teachers wise enough, none of your eloquent preachers acute enough, to decide a petty case of common law between Christian brethren?" For ἔστι many MSS. and Fathers, and all the early Edd. except the Erasmusian, have ἐνι, which is edited by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Krause, Tittm., Vat., and Pott; and rightly. Ἐνι for ἐνεστι is found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, and even where ἐν follows.

— τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ.] At the singular here many stumble, and would read ἀδελφῶν, from some MSS. That, however, is uncritical; and the singular must be retained, and may be taken (with Storr., Heydenr., and Winer) as a singular used collectively. See Gen. iii. 8. Or rather, with Pott, as a formula contracted by long use, from ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ καὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ, "between his brother and his brother," i. e. between one brother and another.

6. κρίνεται "is impleaded," has a suit.

7. ἥδη. This has a conclusive force, "Now then." Ὄλως, i. e. generally speaking, though there may be exceptions. Ἡττημα properly signifies an inferiority, and figuratively, as here, a defect or fault. Κρίματα is for κριτήρια, suits at law. In ἀδικεῖσθε and ἀποστερεῖσθε (the former of which is supposed to denote personal or general injury, and the latter injury in one's property) there is an unusual idiom, viz. "to bear to be injured, or deprived [of property]." See Glass.

Phil. Sac. & Winer's Gr. § 32. 3. A Classical writer would have said οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἐκόντες ἀδικεῖσθε. So Thucyd. iii. 47. 5. συμφορώτερον ἡγοῦμαι—ἐκόντας ἡμᾶς ἀδικήσῃναι, ἢ δικαίους, οὓς μὴ δεῖ, διαφθεῖραι. As to the present sentiment, Menander, cited by Steph., finely remarks: Οὗτος κράτιστός ἐστ' ἀνὴρ, ὃ Γωργία, "Ὅστις ἀδικεῖσθαι πλεῖστ' ἐπίσταται βροτῶν.

8. ἀλλά] "nay, or whereas." Καὶ ταῦτα, for καὶ τοῦτο (et quidem), is rare; but Rosenm. has adduced one example from Joseph., and Rinck others from Plato, more than sufficient to justify the common reading, instead of which many MSS. have καὶ τοῦτο, which is plainly an alteration.

9. ἢ οὐκ οἶδατε q. d. I need hardly tell you what you must know. Ἀδικοι, for οἱ ἀδ., the οἱ ἀδικοῦντες just mentioned. The Apostle then proceeds to enumerate all such vices as, including those he has been censuring (fornication and injustice) exclude from salvation. This he introduces with the impressive formula μὴ πλανᾶσθε, found in Luke xxi. 8. 1 Cor. xv. 33. Gal. vi. 7., and sometimes in the Classical writers. So Philo- lemon cited by Krause: Μηδὲν πλανηθῆς. ἔσται κἂν "Αἰδὼν κρίσις, Ἦνπερ ποιήσει θεὸς, ὁ πάντων δεσπότης. By the μαλακοὶ are denoted catamites; to which corresponds the ἀρσενοκοῖται; the former being the αἰσχροπαθεῖν-τες, the latter the αἰσχροποιοῦντες. There seems to be a sort of classification into groups, thus: Πόρνοι, εἰδωλολάτραι—μοιχοί, μαλακοί, ἀρσενοκοῖται—κλέπται, πλεονέκται—μέθυσοι, λοῖδοροι, ἄρπαγες. It should seem that ἄρπαγες is a stronger term than πλεονέκται, the latter denoting those who defraud others by deceit, the former, those who practise open extortion. It may seem strange that drunkards should be comprehended with those guilty of far greater crimes. But, in fact, vices go in clusters; and it is very rare to find drunkenness unattended with one or more of the other vices. The term λοῖδοροι is with reason put next to μέθυσοι, and intended perhaps to qualify it.

11. καὶ ταῦτα.] Some supply γένη. But, in fact, the neuter is for the masculine, because the vices in question are considered as things, namely vicious ἔθη. The plural, in which consists the peculiarity, is used with reference to the plurality of the vices.

ταῦτα τινὲς ἦτε. ἀλλὰ ἀπελούσασθε, ἀλλὰ ἡγάσθητε, ἀλλ' ἐδικαιώθητε, ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν.

^h Πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει· πάντα 12 μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τινος. ⁱ Ταῖς 13 βρώματα τῇ κοιλίᾳ, καὶ ἡ κοιλία τοῖς βρώμασιν· ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ ταύτην καὶ ταῦτα καταργήσει. τὸ δὲ σῶμα οὐ τῇ πορνείᾳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ, καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῷ σώματι· ^k ὁ δὲ Θεὸς 14 καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἡγείρε, καὶ * ἡμᾶς ἐξεγερεῖ διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως

— ἀλλὰ ἀπελούσασθε—ἐδικ.] In the 1st of these terms there is an allusion to baptism; in the 2d and 3d, to its effects and benefits, sanctification and justification. With respect to the next clauses ἐν τῷ ὀνόμ. τοῦ Κ. Ἰ. and ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, the first is by Hamm. and others referred to ἐδικ.; but it ought rather to be referred to ἀπελούσασθε, or perhaps conjointly; there being, it should seem, an allusion to the form of baptism “in the name,” &c. The second must be referred to ἡγάσθητε, and the words may be rendered, “by the Holy Spirit proceeding from, and imparted by, God.” Bp. Bull. in Harm. Apost. 1. Ch. i. § 3., thus distinguishes the terms: “Lavatio significat primam a vitiis per Baptismum purgationem; sanctificatio præparationem et quasi formationem hominis per gratiam Spiritus Divini, ad opera bona facienda, vitamque sanctam degendam; justificatio denique amorem illum Dei, quo jam sanctam vitam degentes complexitur, eosque in Christo vitæ æternæ præmio dignos censet.” Thus the Apostle commences with the first attained grace, and concludes with the perfective energy of the Holy Spirit.

12. πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, &c.] It is rightly remarked by Crell., Grot., Krause, Iaspis, Pott, and Heyd., that these words are supposed (by an ellip. of ἀλλ' ἐρεῖς μοι) to be the words of an objector, and such as were probably often used by those who wished to indulge in sensuality, and eating meats offered to idols; and who sought to justify it under the pretence of Christian liberty. By “all things” are meant all things which the Apostle has here in view; i. e. all kinds of food. To this the answer is ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει, where the ἀλλὰ has both a concessory and an exceptive force (on which see Devarius de Partic. p. 12. Ed. Reusm.); q. d. [True;] all things are given us to enjoy; but οὐ πάντα συμφέρει, all meats are not expedient to be eaten; because they may throw a stumbling-block in the way of others.

The Apostle then repeats the objection, in order to give an answer to it more effectually. In the words of the answer the Commentators suppose a paronomasia with ἔξεστι, q. d. “I have power over all meats, but none of them shall have power over me.” The ἐγὼ is adapted to the μοι of the supposed opponent, and (by an idiom peculiar to the popular style) the Future is to be rendered must.

13. τὰ βρώματα—βρώμασιν] scil. ἐστι, i. e. ἀνίκε, “are meant for.” Here the foregoing sentiment is further illustrated, and an objection anticipated; q. d. All aliments are meant for the sustenance of the body; and the body is fitted to the reception and digestion of them. Or rather it may be regarded, with some, as another argument of the opponent, containing an excuse for indulgence in sensuality. The words following τὸ δὲ σῶμα, &c. contain the answer of St. Paul; in which the τὸ δὲ σῶμα—σώματι are meant to reply to the τὰ βρώματα βρώμασι, and the ὁ δὲ Θεός—αὐτοῦ to the ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καταργήσει. It is true, that in the first case there seems no direct answer. But, in fact, the argument needed none; as it would be like arguing from the use to the abuse of any thing. The Apostle, therefore, it should seem, waves this, and replies to the apology in the peculiar case for which it was, no doubt, often pleaded, namely, fornication; and which may have been meant by the opponent to be implied in what was said. The answer, then, of the Apostle is this: “But [be that case of the body and meats as it may] it will not apply to natural appetites of another kind; for the body was not made for fornication” (i. e. There exists no necessity for satisfying the natural appetites in this case, as in that of food: the body was made to require food for its existence, but the gratifying the other appetites is not necessary to existence), but τῷ Κυρίῳ, i. e. for his service; which implies obedience to his will. “Now the will of God (says the Apostle elsewhere) is our sanctification, that we should abstain from fornication.” It is then added: καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῷ σώματι, which words admit of more than one sense. Most modern Commentators explain τῷ σώματι, “for raising and glorifying the body.” But this is harsh, and it is better to adopt the interpretation of the Fathers, and some modern Commentators, which is thus expressed by Heyd.: “ut Christo sit dicatum et sacrum, Christique potestati sese subjiciat, quemadmodum Christus in potestate sua continet corpora nostra, et jus illorum atque dominium habet, hoc corpus nobis est datum.”

14. ὁ δὲ Θεός—δυνάμει αὐτοῦ.] Here the Apostle replies to the second argument of the opponent; namely, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καταργήσει. It is well observed by Heydenr., that the sentence would have been more exact in inverse order, and with particles of comparison, thus: ὁ δὲ Θεὸς ἐξεγερεῖ ἡμᾶς διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, καθὼς καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἡγείρε. Pott construes the words thus: Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ (ὡς) τὸν Κύριον ἡγείρε καὶ (οὕτω καὶ) ἡμᾶς (τὰ σώματα ἡμῶν) ἐξεγερεῖ διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ. Sup- ply: “How, then, can you maintain that our body is utterly to perish, and therefore that while we live, we may do as we please. Our bodies are not destined to come to nought, but to rise to immortality,—an immortality of glory and felicity. But lust renders them unfit for the resurrection to life and bliss with Christ. See Phil. iii. 21. and John v. 29. Who, then, will suppose impure pleasures a thing indifferent; when they, for a transitory delight, plunge a man into an eternity of woe?" Ἥγειρε and ἐξεγερεῖ contain an adjunct notion of raising up to glory and felicity. For ἡμᾶς the common reading is ὑμᾶς. But that is justly regarded by Wets. as a typographical error of the 2d Edit. of Beza and the Elzevir Edit.

15. The Apostle now uses another and still more powerful argument against fornication.

—τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν] i. e. yourselves both body and soul. Μέλη τοῦ Χ. Sub. σώματος, the members of Christ's mystical body, namely, the Church, of which he is head, and the rest members inserted by baptism, and consecrated to his service. (Vorst. and Rosenm.) In ἄρας there is no pleonasm, as Krause imagines; but two clauses are blended into one. Prof. Scholef., however, regarding this use of ἄρας as uncouth, would (with Valckn.) read, from several MSS., ἄρα. But the MSS. are of little value, and it is far more likely, that an uncouth reading should be altered into an easy one, from conjecture, or pass into it by accident (since ἄρα οὖν often occurs in the N. T.), than that so plain a reading as ἄρα should inadvertently be changed into ἄρας. Besides, not to mention that the reading ἄρας has been proved by Matth. to be as ancient as the time of Origen, the proposed change enervates the vigour of the language of dissuasion resorted to by the Apostle. Ποιήσω πόρνης μέλη; i. e. both literally and figuratively, by being subservient to the lust of the πόρνη, and thus ceasing to be the Lord's, and dedicated to his service.

16, 17. Here is a further illustration of the preceding. Κολλᾶσθαι and προσκ. are words appropriate to the thing in question. Sometimes, however, it only signifies metaphorically to be attached to, as in Gen. ii. 24. Livi: scortis im-pliciti. Wisd. xix. 3. ὁ κολλώμενος πόρῃς. and Ruth ii. 8. At ἐν σῶμά ἐστιν sub. σὺν αὐτῇ; and at φησιν, sub. ἡ γραφή.

17. Ἐν πνεύμᾳ scil. σὺν αὐτῷ, for ἐν ἐστὶ σὺν αὐτῷ κατὰ τὸ πνεῦμα "is one heart and soul with him" (see Acts iv. 32.), as intimate friends are said to be ψυχὴ μία. Compare 1 John iii. 24.

18. ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος must be understood comparatē (being expressed populariter); especially if εἰς τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα ἁμαρτ. be understood, with many recent Commentators, of injuring the body by wasting its health and strength. Such an argument, however, would be more suitable to a Heathen moralist than to the great Apostle; and, in fact, is adduced, in reference to intemperance of every kind, by Socrates, ap. Xen. Memor. i. 5. 3. Though the Apostle might mean to include a sense of injuring, he intended, I conceive, chiefly that of disgracing and polluting the body, by using it for purposes not intended by its Maker, and profaning, what was meant to be dedicated, like a temple, to holy uses; as the Apostle more particularly mentions in the next verse.

19. τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν] for ὑμεῖς; but σῶμα is used for the argument's sake. Τοῦ scil. ὄντος. The οὐ is for δ, by grammatical attraction. See Note at iii. 16. and compare Rom. xiv. 7, 8. Οὐκ ἐστὶ ἑαυτῶν, "ye are not at your own discretion [but Christ's]." So that to abuse the body is to abuse what is not your own.

20. ἡγοράσθητε τιμῆς] "ye have been bought off, or redeemed;" in other words: Ye are bound to his service, as a bought slave to that of his purchaser, or him who has purchased his redemption. For ἡγορ. is by the best Expositors taken to mean "we are redeemed." Τιμῆς is meant to strengthen the sense of ἡγορ. Thus the Vulg. well expresses the sense by pretio magno. Δοξάσατε δὴ, &c., "make your body, then, subservient to the glory of God," i. e. consecrate both body and soul to his service. Ἀτινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ, both of which are God's, viz. by right of creation, and still more of redemption.

The words καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι—Θεοῦ are omitted in several MSS. of the Western recension, the Vulg., Coptic, and Æthiopic Versions, and several Fathers, and are cancelled by Griesb., Krause, and Pott; but strenuously defended by Matth., who has shown that the evidence of the Fathers is contradictory, and not of any great weight. It must however be confessed that, though they seem almost necessary to complete the sense, and correspond to vv. 16, 17, 19., yet they might have been added for that reason. Their high antiquity, however, is apparent from their being found in the Syriac Version.

VII. ΠΕΡΙ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοι, καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ γυναικὸς μὴ ἄπτεσθαι· διὰ δὲ τὰς πορνείας ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα ἔχτω, καὶ ἐκάστη τὸν ἴδιον ἄνδρα ἔχτω. Ἡ γυναικὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ τὴν ὀφειλομένην εὐνοίαν ἀποδιδότω· ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ἡ γυνὴ τῷ ἀνδρί. Ἡ γυνὴ τοῦ ἰδίου σώματος οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, ἀλλ' ὁ ἀνὴρ· ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ τοῦ ἰδίου σώματος οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, ἀλλ' ἡ γυνή. Μὴ ἀποστερεῖτε ἀλλήλους, εἰ μὴ τι ἂν ἐκ συμφώνου πρὸς καιρὸν, ἵνα σχολάζετε τῇ [νηστεία καὶ τῇ] προσευχῇ· καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ

VII. The Apostle now proceeds to answer certain questions, which, it seems, had been proposed by the Corinthians, on matrimony, and other kindred subjects. Whether that concerning the usefulness and necessity of matrimony proceeded from the Jewish Christians, or from the Gentile converts, the Commentators are not agreed. The former seems to be the most probable. It may, however, be safest to suppose, that the question was propounded by some of both the Jewish and Gentile converts.

1. καλὸν ἄνθρωπος.] The best Commentators are agreed that, by the context, καλὸν cannot mean pulchrum, or honestum, but utile, σύμφορον, i. e. (by a common idiom) better, namely, for the reason mentioned at v. 32, for the avoiding of care and anxiety. It is obvious that this is not an authoritative decision, but a friendly counsel, not treating the question generally, but with reference to those times.

Ἀπτεσθαι, denoting sexual intercourse, is to be understood chiefly of marriage; though possibly the Apostle might mean to include concubinage, which was then very common.

2. διὰ δὲ τὰς πορνείας.] The plural may, as Grot. thinks, have reference to the various kinds of lust mentioned supra vi. 9, 10. Διὰ here, as at x. 25, 27, “servit cautioni, ne quid fiat,” as Pott remarks. Ἐαυτοῦ and ἰδίου are generally considered by recent Commentators as pleonastic. But they denote property, which involves the duty of reciprocal fidelity: and, by implication, they forbid both polygamy and concubinage. This is not to be regarded as a permission to marry; for that was unnecessary; but as an admonition meant for those who could not lead a life of virtuous celibacy.

3. τὴν ὀφειλομένην εὐνοίαν.] Eleven MSS., two Versions, and some Fathers have ὀφειλὴν, which was preferred by Grot., Mill, and Beng., and has been edited by Griesb., Krause, Tittm., Pott, and Heydenr.: but, I think, on insufficient grounds. The external evidence for it is slender; and the internal not very strong. For as to the common reading being a gloss on ὀφειλὴν, that is far from certain. Nay, considering the commonness of the expression debitum conjugale, the contrary would be nearer the truth. The gloss might easily creep into the Vulgate and the Latin Fathers, and from thence into some Greek ones, and finally, into the Western recension. Of the Greek Fathers, Chrys., whose authority is alleged for ὀφειλὴν, did not so read. The expression only occurs in his paraphrase; which rather confirms the suspicion of ὀφειλὴν being only a gloss. From the commencing words of his exposition, it is plain that he read ὀφειλομένην τιμὴν, as indeed do some MSS., but evidently by a gloss on εὐνοίαν. The common reading, then, is justly retained by Wets., Semler, Matth., and Vater.

4. The words of this verse are exegetical of the former, and depend on ὀφειλομένην preceding.

5. The Apostle returns to the exhortation at v. 3., in order to further make known his wishes.

— μὴ ἀποστ. ἀλλ.] scil. τῆς ὀφειλ. εὐν. At τι sub. κατὰ, quodammodo. Ἐκ συμφώνου scil. γνώμης. Πρὸς καιρὸν contains a preceptory limitation of the Apostle, applying to both parties; though we find, from Ecclesiastical History, that it was sometimes not observed in the early Christian Church. Σχολάζειν τινὶ signifies to give one's σχολή, leisure and attention, to any thing. The words τῇ νηστεία καὶ, (not found in 7 uncial MSS., and a few others, besides several Versions and Fathers), were rejected by Mill and Beng., and cancelled by Griesb., Krause, Tittm., Vat., and Pott; but without sufficient reason. External evidence here is but slender, and the internal not strong, since the omission might arise from homœoteleuton; and fasting, in that age, usually accompanied a more than ordinary attention to religious duties.

— συνέρχεσθε.] The reading of MSS. and Edd. here varies. The early Edd. and several MSS., with some later Versions and Fathers, have συνέρχησθε. But συνέρχεσθε was edited, from several MSS. and early Versions, by Beza, 5, Schmidt, and Elzevir, and thus was introduced into the textus receptus. Again, ἦτε, which is found in some ancient MSS. of the Western recension, as also in several Fathers, is preferred by Mill and Beng., and edited by Griesb., Knapp., Krause, Tittm., and Pott. Considering, however, the source of the reading, and the nature of the expression, we may suspect this to be an alteration of the ancient Critics, in order to remove the seeming pleonasm; which, however, occurs infra xi. 20. xiv. 23. Acts ii. 1., and sometimes in the Sept., nay even the Classical writers. The reading in question has very little countenance from MSS. or ancient Versions, and must therefore be rejected, and the truth supposed to lie between συνέρχησθε and συνέρχεσθε. The latter is supported by the most important MSS., by many Fathers, and the Greek Commentators, and is, I think, recommended by its greater fitness. The MSS. collated by Rinck have most of them συνέρχεσθε, some συνέρχησθε, none ἦτε.

 βσίαν ὑμῶν. Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω κατὰ συγγνώμην, οὐ κατ' ἐπι-

10 ^u Τοῖς δὲ γεγαμηκόσι παραγγέλλω οὐκ ἐγὼ, ἀλλ' ὁ Κύ-

— μὴ πειρ.] “may not throw you into carnal temptation.” Διὰ τὴν ἀκρασίαν ὑμῶν. Expositors are not agreed whether the sense be “intemperance,” or “incontinence,” i. e. your not being able to contain yourselves. Many eminent modern Commentators, as Kransen and Pott, adopt the former; but others (as Wolf, Grot., Wets., and Heydenr.) the latter interpretation. Either makes a good sense, but the latter seems preferable; and though ἀκρασίαν (i. e. ἀκρατείαν) might have been more proper; yet examples are cited by Wets. more than sufficient to prove that the two words were sometimes confounded by the later writers.

6. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, &c.] The Commentators are not agreed whether this is to be referred to what follows, or to what precedes; or, if to what precedes, whether to what immediately precedes, v. 5, or, a little further off, at vv. 1, 2. The latter method is greatly preferable. And the words may be referred to the μὴ ἀποστερεῖτε and καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συνέρχεσθε at v. 5, or to v. 2; and then συγγνώμην may be rendered, with some ancient and several modern Interpreters, indulgence. Yet they are better referred to v. 1. But there is no reason why the λέγω δὲ τοῦτο may not be referred both to what precedes and follows on this subject; and thus the sense will be: But I say what I say, or am saying. It will not be necessary to render συγγν. “counsel,” (with many eminent Commentators,) but permission, as in our common Versions; which sense is adopted also by Doddr., Newc., and Wakef. See my Note on Thucyd. vii. 15, 3.

7. θέλω] for θέλωμι, “I could wish.” An idiom which Pott regards as Hebraic, since that language wants the optative mood; but it is rather an idiom of the common style. With respect to the expression εἶναι ὡς ἐμάντον, since it would, as Doddr. observes, be absurd to suppose the Apostle wished marriage to cease, it must be limited to mean, “have the same mastery over their appetites and passions as he had,” so as to be able to remain in virtuous celibacy, while it was by circumstances required. Thus Chrys. and Theodoret add: ἐν ἐγκρατείᾳ. The καὶ after ὡς is said by the Commentators to be pleonastic, (like ו in the Hebrew) as is often the case after nouns of similitude. In such instances, however, it always signifies either even, or too. Χάρισμα denotes the being able to remain such; so called, says Chrys., out of modesty, as not claiming any merit from continency. Yet this and every other gift of the Spirit does not preclude the necessity of human exertion. See James i. 17, and Matt. xix. 11. In ὃς μὲν οὕτως, ὃς δὲ οὕτως, we are not, with most Commentators, to suppose the sense to be, “One hath this gift, another hath it not;” for that would be inconsistent with the ἔχει χάρισμα just before. The words (as Pott observes) refer to the different degrees in which the χάρισμα is supposed to be granted.

8. τοῖς ἀγάμοις.] There has been some doubt as to the exact sense here. Ἀγαμος properly signifies unmarried, without determining whether the person to whom it is applied has ever been married. And such is commonly supposed to be its use here, denoting both bachelors and widowers. But the best Commentators from Grot. to Heydenr. are of opinion that it denotes those who have no longer a wife,—i. e. widowers; observing that, as the usus loquendi did not permit the Apostle to write χήροις, so he employed the general term in a special application. “The case of those who have never married is, say they, entered upon at v. 25. And as to the opposition alleged between the ἀγαμοὶ and the γεγαμηκότες at v. 10, and the ὁ ἀγαμος and ὁ γαμήσας at vv. 32 & 33, the connection, they observe, is there different.” At μείνωσιν sub. ἐγκρατευόμενοι from ἐγκρατεύονται just after.

9. εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἐγκρ.] “if they have not the power to practise temperance.”

— κρεῖσσον γάρ ἐστι γαμ. ἢ πυρ.] Bp. Pearce renders πυρ. “to be made uneasy:” a very defective representation of the sense, which does not (as almost all the English Commentators suppose) designate mere uneasiness or annoyance from the desire, but an inability to resist it, which indeed is implied in οὐκ ἐγκρ. So Theodoret: πύρρῳ οὐ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας καλεῖ τὴν ἐνόχλησιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν δούλωσιν τῆς ψυχῆς.

10, 11. The Apostle now answers their inquiries, as to the preservation of the marriage bond among Christians.

— παραγγέλλω—Κύριος.] The sense is commonly supposed to be, “not so much I command, as the Lord,” or, “not only I command, but the Lord.” It does not seem, however, that the Apostle meant even to include himself, when he used the strong term παραγγέλλω. The positive command of the Lord could require no reinforcement from the Apostle’s; and to his Master therefore (in whose code of morality the preservation of the marriage bond formed a new and striking feature, in strong contrast with the levity of divorce then practised under the sanction of the Law) the Apostle wholly refers this positive command, founded on Matt. v. 32. Comp. xix. 3—10. I have pointed accordingly, ριος, γυναῖκα ἀπὸ ἀνδρὸς μὴ χωρισθῆναι· (ἐὰν δὲ καὶ χω- 11 ρισθῇ, μενέτω ἄγαμος, ἢ τῷ ἀνδρὶ καταλλαγῆτω·) καὶ ἄν-δρα γυναῖκα μὴ ἀφίεναι. Τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς ἐγὼ λέγω, οὐχ 12

ὁ Κύριος· εἴ τις ἀδελφὸς γυναῖκα ἔχει ἄπιστον, καὶ αὐτὴ συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτοῦ, μὴ ἀφίετω αὐτήν· καὶ γυνὴ 13 ἣτις ἔχει ἄνδρα ἄπιστον, καὶ αὐτὸς συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτῆς, μὴ ἀφίετω αὐτόν. Ἠγίασται γὰρ ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἄπιστος 14 ἐν τῇ γυναικί, καὶ ἡγίασται ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄπιστος ἐν τῷ ἄνδρί· ἐπεὶ ἄρα τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν ἀκάθαρτά ἐστι, νῦν δὲ ἅγια 15
ἐστίν. Εἰ δὲ ὁ ἄπιστος χωρίζεται, χωρίζεσθω. οὐ δεδού-λωται ὁ ἀδελφὸς ἢ ἡ ἀδελφή ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις· ἐν δὲ εἰwith the support of most of the ancient Versions, and also of Heydenr. and the Bâle Editor. Or we may suppose, that the words οὐκ ἐγὼ ἀλλὰ Κ. are added per epanorthosin, to show that he here speaks κατ' ἐπιταγήν; and therefore the command is not his own but the Lord's. On the contrary, at 12. he says, ἐγὼ λέγω, οὐχ ὁ Κύριος.

— μὴ χωρισθῆναι.] This is closely connected with ἄνδρα γυναῖκα μὴ ἀφίεναι at v. 11; for the best Commentators are agreed that the words ἐὰν δὲ—καταλλαγῆτω are parenthetical. As to the use of ἀφίεναι and χωρισθῆναι, it may be observed, that a husband when divorcing his wife was said ἐκβάλλειν, or, by a milder term, ἀποπέμπειν, or, by the mildest, ἀφίεναι. The first term is most used in the O. T. as Gen. xxi. 20. Wisd. vii. 27. On the contrary, a wife who, from whatever cause, left her husband, was said ἀπολείπειν, or χωρίζεσθαι (passive for reciprocal); for the wife could not send away the husband, but only leave the house. Καταλλάττεισθαι and διαλλ. are by the best writers used of reconciliation of every kind both public and private. See Note on Rom. v. 10. From the use of καταλλ. and the air of the context, it is plain that the Apostle is not here speaking of formal divorces, effected by law, but of separations, whether agreed on or not, arising from misunderstandings or otherwise.

12. Here St. Paul speaks to the third point on which he had been consulted; namely, whether the marriage of a Christian and a non-Christian ought to be dissolved. This the Apostle decides in the negative.

— τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς] scil. γεγαμηκόσι, “the rest [of married persons].” Ἐγὼ λέγω, οὐχ ὁ Κύριος. Many eminent Commentators consider the words as equivalent to, “This is only my private opinion; is not founded upon any revelation from Christ, and forms no part of his doctrine delivered personally while he was on earth.” But this mode of explanation lies open to strong objections: see Slade. Certainly ἐγὼ λέγω must not be limited to private opinion, as if apart from inspiration; for the Apostle speaks with authority, as if in the full persuasion and consciousness of inspiration, especially when he concludes his decision (v. 17.) with καὶ οὕτως ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις πάσαις διατάσσονται. Our Lord, indeed, could not, without anticipating the designs of the Deity, touch on this question; but left it, together with many others, to be decided by the Apostles, under the guidance of that Holy Spirit, who was to lead them into all truth, as the Apostle was fully conscious when declaring at ii. 16. ἡμεῖς δὲ νουν Χριστοῦ ἔχομεν.

14. The Apostle now gives a reason why diversity of religion could not authorize separation; and that by an anticipation of the objection, “Shall I not be polluted by such close union with a profane and polluted person?” To which the answer is: “No; the believing wife is not polluted by the unbelieving husband, but rather the unbelieving is sanctified by the believing.” (Krause and Crell.)

On the exact sense of the passage, and especially of ἡγίασται, Commentators are divided in opinion. See Recens. Synop. I have there proved that it cannot well mean, “will gradually become holy by feeling better inclined to Christianity;” for that would be harsh; (besides, the argument is touched on at v. 16.;) nor, “is received into the number of Christians;” for then (as Heydenr. observes) the end of the verse would not correspond to the beginning, and a manifest inconsequence would arise. It is better with Chrys., Pisc., Grot., and others, to suppose ἡγιάζεσθαι to be here equivalent to οὐκ ἐστίν ἀκάθαρτος, or βέβηλος. But I still prefer, (with Crell., Sclater, Camer., Beza, Calvin, Whitby, Wolf, Doddr., Bengel, and Newc.,) to suppose the sense to be, that “the one is so sanctified by the other, that their matrimonial converse is as lawful, as if they were both of the same faith.” Since, however, this may be too limited a sense, and there seems to be an allusion to what took place in the case of marriage between Jews and heathens, and by a form of speaking transferred from the Jewish to the Christian Church, I would conjoin two of the above interpretations, and express the sense as follows: “He is reputed as if sanctified, because of one flesh with her who is holy; at least their matrimonial converse is as lawful as if both were of the same faith.”

— ἐπεὶ ἄρα—ἐστίν.] The sense is: “For otherwise (namely, if one party be not sanctified) your children would be considered impure and profane” (see 2 Cor. vi. 17. Acts x. 28.): “but now (i. e. in this case) they are holy;” i. e. form part of God's people. How strongly this supports the practice of Infant baptism, is manifest. See Doddr. in loc. and Colls on Inf. Bap. p. 35.

15. After having at vv. 12. & 13. directed that the Christian wife should not be the first to separate, if the other party be willing to live with her; the Apostle shows, in this verse, what is to be done by the Christian wife, if the Pagan husband be the first to break the marriage bond. She is directed to let the unbelieving party, if he will separate, separate. We are not, however, to suppose (with Grot. and others) that the marriage was, in such a case, ipso facto dissolved, so that the believing party might contract a fresh one. This is alike at variance with the letter and spirit of our Lord's decision (Matt. v. 32.); and, indeed, with the Apostle's own words in this Chapter. See vv. 10, 11, 30, and Rom. vii. 1—3. The sense, therefore, seems to be, what is laid down by Hamm. and Whitby,—that the conjugal union is not to be dissolved by reason of difference in religion; yet if the unbelieving party be disposed to separate, the believing party may blamelessly submit to such separation. Χωρίζεσθω is to be taken in a popular acceptance; q. d. “let him go.” At οὐ δεδούλ. we may supply συνοικεῖν αὐτῷ from the context and the subject matter. And ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις may mean “in such circumstances.”

The next clause (as Pisc., Crell., and others remark) limits the liberty, lest it should run into licence; q. d. God, however, hath called us [Christians] to live in peace; and, therefore, we must do every thing we can to live in peace; accordingly the believing must not afford the unbelieving party any cause for separation, by an unyielding spirit, or over precise scruples.

16. τί γὰρ οἶδας—σώσεις.] Here is another reason for avoiding causeless separation, and cultivating peace,—namely, that thus the believing party may bring over the unbelieving to the Christian faith: for σώζειν here, as often, signifies to put into the way of salvation, on which sense see note on Matth. i. 21. Κερδαίνειν is used as in a kindred passage at ix. 32. The εἰ signifies annon. Here the Articles τὸν and τὴν are for pronouns possessive.

17—24. This portion is digressive; the Apostle therein incidentally touching on other conditions of human life, which ought not to suffer change by reason of the change from Paganism to Christianity; showing by those examples, that the Gospel does not dissolve, or interfere with civil relations, or any other obligations before contracted, or which may be incumbent on men by their situation in life.

εἰ μὴ] for ἀλλὰ, sed verò; as at Matt. xii. 4. Rom. xiv. 14. Gal. i. 7. and often in the Classical writers. Grot. remarks that in ὡς there is a double transition, as at iii. 5. Rom. xii. 3. An idiom, I would add, occurring sometimes in Thucydides. The sense is: “According as God hath apportioned to each his situation in life, let him [continue to] live.”

—καὶ οὕτως—διατάσσομαι.] A brief mode of expression, in which something is left to be supplied to the sense; q. d. “And so do I ordain [not in your case only, but] to be done in all the Churches [which I govern].” V. 18. is an illustration by example of the preceding precept. I have, with Griesb., Knapp, Krause, Vat., Tittm., and Pott, removed the mark of interrogation at ἐκλήθη (introduced from the Vulgate), as in the Ed. Princ., and in the copy from which the Peschito Syriac Version was formed. The sense may be thus expressed: “Any one is [we will suppose] circumcised: [Then] let him,” &c. Μὴ ἐπισπάσθω (as Heysch. explains) equivalent to μὴ ἑλκνέτω τὸ δέρμα, “let him not use any means to remove the marks of circumcision;” which was done by drawing down the prepuce with a surgical instrument called the spaster. The process is described in Celsus de Medic. V. ii. 25. and Epiphan. de Metris 16. cited by Wets. The whole subject is elaborately discussed in a Dissertation of Groddeck, reprinted in Schoettg. Hor. Hebr.

19. ἡ περιτομὴ οὐδὲν, &c.] “Circumcision is of no moment, and uncircumcision of no moment; but keeping the commandments of God is something of consequence,” i. e. as being the test of genuine faith. Sub. τί ἐστὶ.

20. Here and in the next verse a general precept is laid down, followed by a special one, introduced by way of example, and to limit and explain the sense of the former. Μὴ σοι μελέτω is an idiomatical expression (on which see the Commentators on Eurip. Hel. 134.), signifying, “let not this be a trouble to you: be not solicitous about this [as though it could affect your acceptance with God; for grace knows no distinctions of bond or free].” Μᾶλλον χρῆσαι. Sub. ἐλευθερία.

22. ὁ γὰρ ἐν Κυρ., &c.] This is closely connected with μὴ σοι μελ. at v. 21, and the sense is: “for the Christian slave is the Lord's freed man (i. e. in a moral and spiritual sense); and in like manner the Christian freeman is the slave of Christ,” i. e. metaphorically, by being bound to obey his precepts. ἀπελεύθερος freeman; whereas the true sense is freedman. So the Vulg. libertus and the Pesch. Syr. ܠܝܒܪܬܐ, freed, Part. Præt. Pæel. So Suidas: ἀπελεύθερος· ἐλευθερωθεὶς. Theodoret notices this use of ἀπελ. (where the antithesis would rather have required ἐλευθ.), and remarks that ἀπελ. denotes τὸν ἐκ δούλων γεγεννημένον, where I conjecture τὸν ἐκ δούλου γεγ. ἐλευθερον, which is confirmed by Ammonius: ἀπελ. ὁ ἐκ δούλου ἐλευθερωθεὶς. But, it may be asked, is not the master, too, an ἀπελεύθερος Κυρίου? True; but, as Phot. has acutely remarked, the Apostle places the parallel in this light, the better to console the slave, q. d. and show him a point of superiority, inasmuch as ἐκ τῆς περιουσίας τῶν λέξεων θελεῖ δεῖξαι τὸ ἴσον δούλου καὶ δεσπότου. In fact, the whole is intended (Calvin says) "ad servorum consolationem et simul retundendum ingeniorum fastum." The condition, indeed, of slaves, in most parts of the ancient world, and especially Greece, was little inferior to that of the lower orders of freemen. So Eurip. Ion. 854. says: "Ἐν γάρ τι τοῖς δούλοισι αἰσχύνῃ φέρει, τοῦνομα τὰ δ' ἄλλα πάντα, τῶν ἐλευθέρων οὐδεὶς κακίων δούλος, ὅστις ἐσθλὸς ἦ. Of patience in bearing slavery, and on what principle, Grot. points to a noble example in the illustrious Epictetus, who is said to have left the following couplet as his Epitaph: Δούλος Ἐπικτιτος γενόμεν καὶ σώματι πηρὸς καὶ πενίῃ Ἴρος· καὶ (tamen) φίλος ἀθανάτους. For so I would point the passage. By the expression πενίῃ Ἴρος is meant (to use our own adage) "as poor as Job;" with allusion to the beggar of that name often mentioned in Homer's Odyssey.

23, 24. μὴ γίνεσθε δούλοι ἀνθρ.] The best Commentators are agreed that this is to be taken figuratively, in the sense "do not be blindly followers of men, conforming to their opinions," &c. The Apostle is, with reason, thought to allude to the false teachers above adverted to; meaning to caution the Corinthians against taking an unnecessary yoke, by subjecting their consciences to such dogmatical directors. He then repeats, on account of its importance, the general injunction with which he had begun to treat on this subject. See Note on v. 20., and an excellent Sermon by Bishop Sanderson on this text, his 4th ad Populum. Παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, "conformably to the will of God." See Bp. Sand. ubi supra. The τῷ is not found in many of the best MSS. and nearly all the early Edd.; and, after being introduced by Beza, was thrown out by Beng., Matth., Griesb., Krause, and Pott.

25. The Apostle now returns from his digression, and having before treated of the married and the widowed, now adverts to the unmarried of both sexes. On which sense of παρ., see Recens. Synop.

— ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω.] The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are in general agreed that the sense is: "I have no special command of Christ [issued by him while on earth] to urge." This deficiency, then, the Apostle proceeds himself to supply.

— γνώμην δὲ δίδωμι.] The ancients, and most moderns, interpret, "I give my counsel and private opinion." Others, "I give my decision." The former seems preferable, and it leaves nothing wanting; for surely the very private judgment of an inspired Apostle, even when not suggested by a special revelation, may be thought sufficient to decide in extraordinary cases, on which Christ left no command. Indeed, this may seem meant to be suggested in the words following, ὡς ἡλεημένος—πιστὸς εἶναι, especially if they be interpreted (with some ancient and almost all the most eminent Commentators for the last century), "As one who hath been so graciously dealt with by the Lord, as to be entrusted by him with the office of Apostle," equivalent to δεδοκιμασμένος ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, πιστευθῆναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, 1 Thess. ii. 4. See ix. 17. Gal. ii. 7. 1 Tim. i. 11, 12. The construction seems to be as follows: ὡς (οὕτως) ἡλεημένος ὑπὸ Κυρίου [ὥστε] πιστὸς εἶναι, "as being one who has been so graciously dealt with [as to be favoured with the Holy Spirit, and entrusted with the Apostleship], inasmuch that I am worthy of entire credit." Perhaps, however, the only clue to the true explanation of this obscure passage is to consider it as consisting properly of two sentences blended into one, in which πιστὸς would occur twice; first in the sense πιστευθεὶς (scil. τὸ κήρυγμα τοῦ εὐαγγελίου καὶ ἀποστολικὴν ἐξουσίαν.) 2d, that of worthy of being relied on.

26. νομίζω.] The sense, as required by the γνώμην just before, must be judico, arbitror. A signification very frequent in Scripture, and not rare in the Classical writers. Καλὸν is to be taken as at v. 1, where see Note.

— διὰ τὴν ἐν. ἀνάγκην.] The sense seems to be, "in respect of the present afflicted state of the Church." Ἀνάγκη is used both in the Scriptures and the Classics for θλίψις, to denote affliction and calamity in general. Here some understand the difficulties of life, and the inconveniences of matrimony. But, then, why should ἐνεστ. have been prefixed? It is in vain to attempt to change this from a special admonition intended for that time, into a general one for all ages. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that what is said (as especially appears from v. 29. seqq.) must have reference to the persecutions for the Gospel's sake, which were then beginning; though at the same time it may, I think, also advert to those peculiar difficulties in which a religion so much at variance with the customs of the world would involve its professors,—difficulties inseparable from a state of society where a new order of things was struggling for the mastery with the ancient and long accustomed one. Now in such a situation (as in all agitations and convulsions of society), the married would be liable to many more troubles than the single. So Eurip. cited by Grot.: Μία γὰρ ψυχὴ, ἧς ὑπὲρ ἀλγείν Μέντριον ἄλγος.

At ὅτι καλὸν there is a sort of anacoluthon; not, however, from inadvertence as to the construction, but resorted to as a kind of repetition serving to emphasis. At οὕτως εἶναι sub. ὡς ἔστι, as we should say, "to be (i. e. remain as he is," namely, unmarried. An example of the idiom is adduced by Heydenr. from the Acta Theclæ.

27. Δεδέσθαι and λέλυσθαι are in the best writers used of matrimony, with allusion to the vinculum implied. The Commentators are not agreed whether λέλυσθαι ἀπὸ γυν. is to be understood of the dissolving of marriage by death or lawful divorce, or of the being without a wife. The expression itself, from its nature, suggests the former sense; while the admonition following points to the latter. So that the expression was probably meant of both, and should be rendered free; since freed and free (like fitted and fit) will express both senses.

28. οὐχ ἡμαρτες.] By this the Apostle meant only to correct the error of those false teachers who (as we find from 1 Tim. iv. 3.) forbade marriage as sinful.

—Θλίψιν δὲ—τοιοῦτοι.] Render: "However, such will have trouble in the flesh;" namely, that of the ἀνάγκη mentioned at v. 26. The next words ἐγὼ—φέδομαι may either mean (as they are explained by the ancient and many modern Commentators from Grotius down to Schleus., Pott, Iaspis, and Heydenr.) "I [would] wish to keep you free from these evils;" or (according to many Latin Fathers and some modern Commentators, as Est., Wells, Newc., and Mackn.) "I spare you [the pain of dilating on these evils];" "I forbear to dilate further on those evils." The latter interpretation is preferable, and is confirmed by a parallel expression in 2 Cor. xii. 6.

29—35. The Apostle here more fully intimates what he meant by the expressions θλίψιν τῇ σαρκὶ ἔξουσιν, and ἐγὼ δὲ ὑμῶν φέδομαι, treating on the former at 29—31.; and on the latter at 32—35.

—τοῦτο δὲ φημι.] This, like λέγω δὲ τοῦτο, is a formula of transition, introducing a strengthening of what has been before said, or a further explanation of any thing. Before ὁ καιρὸς the textus receptus has ὅτι, which was first inserted by Schmidt and Elz., but was afterwards marked for omission by Wets., and cancelled by Matth., Griesb., Krause, and Pott; rightly, I think; for it probably arose from interpretation. On the sense of συνεσταλμένος Commentators are divided in opinion. The ancients and early moderns in general take it to mean angustus, contracted, i. e. short. But most recent Commentators, adopting a figurative sense (derived from hemming in), take it to mean troublesome and afflictive. See 2 Tim. iii. 1. The proofs adduced for either sense are but weak, but those of the latter preponderate. The former, however, is the simpler sense, and less requires formal proof. And as the latter is objectionable on the score of phraseology, the former is preferable.

The words τὸ λοιπὸν ἐστίν are in many MSS. and Edd. joined with the words following. But the senses assigned admit of no certain proof. And it is better, with most recent Editors, to take them with the preceding. Τὸ λοιπὸν is for κατὰ τὸ λοιπὸν μέρος χρόνου, "The time, as what remains, is short;" suitably to what is said further on, that the σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου with all its ties, conditions, and fortunes, whether prosperous or adverse, is fast passing away. I would compare Pind. Pyth. iv. 509. ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς, πρὸς ἀνθρώπων, βραχὺ μέτρον ἔχει. If the first interpretation of συνεσταλμένος be admitted, the sense will be, "The time, as to what remains, is [to be] one of trouble and affliction."

ἵνα is variously interpreted, according to the different views adopted of the preceding words; either in the sense "when," or "that." But it seems to denote result or consequence. As in the formula ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ γεγραμμένον, &c., q. d. "So that they who have wives will be as those who have them not. Such, at least, is the view of the sense of ὥσι here and throughout the whole passage, taken by most of the recent Commentators. This may be the true one; but it is liable to several objections, which I have urged in Recens. Synop. And though these may not be fatal, yet, from the air of the context, and the words which follow the whole passage (namely, παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου), I cannot but reject that interpretation. I would render: "So that they who have wives may be, or should be, as though they had them not." With the οἱ κλεινότες—ὡς μὴ χαίροντες I would compare what Aristotle, Rhet. ii. 15., says of old men (with reference to their apathy): Καὶ οὔτε φιλοῦσι σφόδρα οὔτε μισοῦσι διὰ ταῦτα· ἀλλὰ (κατὰ τὴν βίαντος ὑποθήκην) καὶ φιλοῦσιν ὡς μισήσοντας, καὶ μισοῦσιν ὡς φιλήσοντας. This view is ably supported by Wakef., Pott, Heydenr., and Rinck. The exhortation, however, is not direct, but indirect; though the scope of the Apostle is to inculcate, not a philosophic apathy, or a reining in of the passions for interest's sake; but a sitting loose to the things of this world, a keeping ourselves superior to its joys or sorrows, and great moderation in the use of our possessions; for the reason subjoined,—that they cannot long keep what they now possess; παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, where σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου is not, as many recent Commentators say, for κόσμος. The σχῆμα suggests the mode in which the world may be considered as passing away; namely, as Grot. and Valckn. have seen, like the shifting scenes in a theatre. This passage, I would observe, was probably in the mind of Philostr. Vit. Apoll. viii. 7. καὶ τί τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου;

31. καὶ οἱ χρώμενοι—καταχρώμενοι.] The best method of taking καταχρ., which is generally explained as equivalent to χρώμενοι, is that of Dr. Shuttleworth, who expresses the sense thus: "And those who use this world, as though they used (or rather I might say abused) it not." See note infra ix. 18. Thus is glanced a censure at the too luxurious way of living among some Christians at this seat of Grecian profligacy.

32. Ἀμερ. is here to be understood comparatively; viz. as much as their respective conditions in life would permit. The Apostle's meaning seems to be: "my object in speaking thus is, to keep you as much as possible unentangled with worldly cares." The words following are an illustration by example; and what is said must be taken emphatically. The unmarried person more especially, employs his thoughts, so to act as to approve himself to the Lord; the married person devotes his chief attention to worldly cares. Πῶς ἀρέσει τῇ γυν., i. e. by taking care of her and her children; which brings a multiplicity of cares. So Menander cited by Wets.: τὸ γυναικ' ἔχειν, εἶναι τε παῖδων, Παρμένων, πατέρα, μερίμνας τῷ βίῳ Πολλὰς φέρει.

34. Μεμέρισται is by several eminent Commentators explained, "is distracted by cares." That interpretation, however, is harsh, and not agreeable to the context. The true sense seems to be that assigned by the ancients, and several eminent moderns (as Grot., Beza, Casaub., E. V., and Doddr.), "there is a difference between."

In this verse there are many varr. lectt. Some MSS. introduce a καὶ before μεμέρισται, others before ἡ γυνή; and others, again, at both places. The evidence for the second var. lectt. is considerable; and that for the first not slight. It will mean "so also." Indeed, authority is so great as to seem to demand the insertion of καὶ also before ἡ γυνή. But surely the Apostle would not have used καὶ thrice in a clause of six words.

May we not therefore suppose, that those MSS. which have the καὶ there, were copied from others which had the καὶ marked for insertion, above or in the margin, and that they introduced it in the wrong place? Besides, the καὶ might easily be introduced before γυνή by those who pointed: τῇ γυναικί, καὶ μεμέρισται. Since καὶ would thus be necessary. Others, repeated the μεμ., which is unwarily adopted by Heydenr. For my own part, I cannot but suspect that the καὶ, which has been so variously inserted, has place no where, and only arose from those who mistook the construction of the passage; and therefore I have chosen to follow Erasmus, the textus receptus, Griesb. and Tittm., in inserting it no where, rather than the Ed. Princ., Beng., Matth., and Vater, in inserting it after μεμέρ.

35. ἵνα βρόχον ὑμῖν ἐπιβ.] On the sense of βρόχον and the nature of this metaphor the Commentators are not agreed; some assigning the sense "rope," i. e. snare; others, "yoke," i. e. bond. And indeed the yokes of the ancients were often made of rope. The latter is adopted by the ancient and many eminent modern Interpreters, as Vorst., Grot., Pisc., Locke, and Heydenr.; the former by the greater part of the modern ones, which seems preferable. But whether the metaphor be, as they imagine, derived from bird-catching, may be doubted; since ropes were employed for other purposes as well as snares; and we may rather suppose a military metaphor; since in war, ropes were thrown out, with which an enemy was dragged away, and put to death, or captured. That, however, would require περιβάλω. The term is more probably used with allusion to the rope with a noose, used by the ancient huntsmen, whereby (as by the lasso of the South Americans) when thrown over the head of an animal, the beast was taken and compelled to go where the huntsman pleased. However, since the ratio metaphoræ is uncertain, it may be safest to express the sense so as to include both metaphors, q. d. My meaning is not to entangle your conscience, or lay any force on your wishes. "Two things (says Calvin) are here to be noted: 1. the end for which celibacy is to be desired; viz. not for itself, as being a more perfect state, but to enable one to serve God without distraction. 2. That no constraint is to be put upon the conscience, but every one be free to judge for himself."

— πρὸς τὸ εὐσχημον—ἀπερισπ.] Sub.
 ὑμῶν. It is put for πρὸς τὸ εὐσχημονεῖν καὶ εὐ-προσεδρεύειν τῷ Κυρίῳ, “for your [more] decorous and assiduous service on the Lord.” Instead of εὐπρόσεδρον, many MSS., early Versions, and Fathers, have εὐπάρ., which is edited by Beng., Griesb., Tittm., and Pott. But the external evidence for that reading is not very strong;
 that of the Fathers being, in such a case, slight;
 and here, not consistent. The MSS. which support it abound in altered readings; of which this seems one; since εὐπάρ. is a more Classical word than εὐπρόσ.; whereas εὐπρόσ. is found in the later Greek and Hellenistic writers, and its cognate words in the N. T., as προσεδρεύ-οντες, where some of these very MSS. have παρ., though no Critic pleads for it. To advert to another strong internal evidence,—εὐπρόσ. is (as Wets. and Matth. remark) the more modest and respectful term; προσεδρεύειν being applied to inferiors, and having a notion of respectful attention; παρ. to equals in rank.

36. The Apostle now subjoins a counsel for those who may not follow the foregoing advice.
 Εἰ τις ἀσχημονεῖν—νομίζει is best explained by the ancient and most modern Commentators, “If any [father] think he is incurring somewhat of disgrace, with respect to his virgin daughter;” namely, by her being unmarried; since the disgrace, which female celibacy implied, extended in some degree to the father. So Pseudo-Phalaris cited by Valckn. πᾶσι γὰρ ἀνθρώποις αἰσχισ-τον δέδοκται παρὰ τοὺς τῆς φύσεως χρόνους θυγάτηρ οἰκουροῦσα. The above sense of τὴν παρθ. a. is required by the context, and is confirmed from the Classical writers by Krause.
 Ὑπέρακμος; i. e. past the ἀκμή or flower of her age, the ἀκμή γάμου. Καὶ (sub. ἐὰν) οὕτως
 ὀφ. γίν. Here we have a popular expression, like our “If it must be so;” which will include reasons of all sorts, both on the side of the parent and of the daughter. Γαμείτωσαν, not “all virgins so situated,” as Dodd. explains, but the maid and her suitor.

37. δς] scil. ὁ πατήρ, as almost all the best Commentators are agreed, since the subject of this sentence must be that of the last.

—ἔστηκεν ἑδραῖος] “continues stedfast in his purpose.” A stronger expression than ἑδραῖος γίνεσθαι would be, which occurs in 1 Cor. xv.

 58, or even ἐπιμένει ἑδραῖος at Col. i. 23, in which (and in other passages cited by me in Rec.
 Syn.) there is a metaphor derived, not (as has been imagined) ἐ παλαστρά, but (as in Eph. ii.
 22, & iii. 17.) an architectural one, with allusion to a statue standing firm on its pedestal, (so Stob. Serm. i. 4, cited by Krause, ἀνδρίας μὲν ἐπὶ βάσεως, σπονδαῖος δὲ ἀνὴρ ἐπὶ καλῆς προαιρέσεως ἐστὼς ἀμετακίνητος ὀφείλει εἶναι), or to a pillar, or column, standing firm on its base, (so 2 Tim. ii. 19. ὁ στερεὶς θεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἔστηκεν, standeth sure); as in the noble passage of Dr. Young:

“On reason build resolve,

That column of true majesty in man.”

Ἀνάγκην refers both to the disposition of the daughter, and the domestic circumstances of both father and daughter. Τοῦτο κέκρικε. A strong term, used to express firm determination. Τηρεῖν τὴν ἐ. παρθ. A popular expression, signifying to keep her with him, not wed her.

39. The Apostle now subjoins an admonition respecting widows (probably in answer to some inquiry); tending to check their hastily forming second marriages.

—νόμῳ.] This is not found in about six MSS.
 and some Versions and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb., but without reason. It seems to have been expunged as admitting no very Classical construction, and also because some may have stumbled at the sense; which is (as Bp.
 Middl. has well explained) “by moral obligation,” “by the spirit of every law, Divine or human.” See Rom. ii. 25. Ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶ
 γαμ. A popular idiom, like one in our own language. Μόνον ἐν Κ., “so that it be consistent with her obligations as a Christian;” i. e.
 as Theodoret remarks, ὁμοπίστω, εὐσεβεῖ, σωφρόνως, ἐννόμως.

40. δοκῶ δὲ—ἔχειν.] These words are by some ancient and many modern Commentators thought, so far from expressing doubt, as others have supposed, to be an emphatic meiosis, expressive of the highest certainty. This, however, is with reason denied by Mr. Slade, who renders thus: “And I trust that I have the Spirit of God." But though that Version be confirmed by the authority of Rosenm. and others, it seems to be going too far the other way; for though not expressive of the highest certainty, δοκῶ yet denotes full persuasion, though modestly expressed. And this is sufficient to fully answer those who call in question the continual inspiration of the Apostle. With respect to the expression Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, Bp. Middl. thinks it cannot be taken of the Holy Spirit in the personal sense, but must mean "divine guidance." And Wakef. lowers it still further to "a divine spirit;" i. e. (as Bp. Middl. on Rom. viii. 9. thinks the phrase may mean) "a godly frame of mind." But it must surely imply "Divine aid, by the influence and inspiration of the Holy Spirit," "the influence or inspiration of the Holy Spirit sent from God." That Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ is equivalent to τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Bishop himself would not deny, since it falls under his own Canon C. iii. § 6. of nouns in regimen, in which "the Article is either prefixed to both the governing and the governed nouns, or else is omitted before both."

VIII. In this Chapter the Apostle (no doubt in answer to some previous inquiry) treats of the use of εἰδωλόθυτα, or meats which had been offered to idols. On the sense of the word, see Note on Acts iv. 20. It appears, from the researches of the learned, that it does not merely mean meats actually sacrificed to idols, but also that part of the victim which was reserved for the use of the Priests, and from which they often entertained their friends, or gave part to the poor, or sometimes sold it in the market. Though, as the animal, when alive, had been formally consecrated to the use of the god, and had been partly offered on his altar, so the meat in question might, in a certain sense, be said to be offered to the idol. See more in Heydenr., the Tract on the Lord's Supper, appended to Cudworth's Intellectual System, and the Note of Dr. Shuttleworth. Now it was a question of some moment to Christians living among idolatrous Gentiles, whether it was lawful for them to participate in any such meats. In deciding this, the Apostle seems to allude to certain plausible arguments employed to justify the use of it; ex. gr., that the idol was not a God, but a mere stock or stone; and if this their opinion of the idol was notorious, their participation of food in the temple consecrated to its worship, could not involve any acknowledgment of its godhead, and therefore could be no more a sin, than eating a common meal. This sophistry the Apostle confutes; and shows that, though idols were mere "vanities," yet, by participating in feasts made of meats which had been offered to them, Christians occasioned a scandal to their weaker brethren, and ought therefore to abstain.

1. On the punctuation and interpretation of this whole passage, vv. 1—4, there is some doubt; to remove which, many eminent Critics would regard οἶδαμεν ὅτι πάντες γινώσκοντες ἔχομεν as a part of the letter of the Corinthians; to which the Apostle answers in the following words: thus the passage, they think, forms a kind of dia- logue between St. Paul and the Corinthians. All this, however, is purely hypothetical, and creates more difficulties than it removes. Indeed, it is unnecessary; for the difficulty may be removed by supposing a parenthesis, commencing either at ἡ γινώσις (as Vater, Knappe, Krause, Gratz, Pott, and Heyd. suppose), or rather (according to Schmid, Bos, Raphael, Wolf, Schulz, Newc., Griesb., and Winer), at ὅτι πάντες. For whether, on the common mode of interpretation, without a parenthesis, or on that of making the parenthesis commence at ἡ γινώσις, we encounter this harshness,—that γινώσκοντες must mean "this [kind of] knowledge;" viz. of the matters in question; which the doctrine of the Greek Article will not permit. Yet I cannot entirely agree with those who insert ὅτι πάντες γινώσκοντες ἔχομεν in the parenthesis; for the words evidently do not consort with those following. I have, therefore, chosen a middle course, and separated the clause both from what precedes and what follows, by a kind of hypo-parenthesis, which also, by its notation, will indicate that in the words preceding there is a breaking off of the construction, which, after the long parenthetical portion introduced to show the effects of knowledge without charity, is resumed with an οὖν epianaleptic, and a repetition of the most necessary words which occurred before the parenthesis. Of this several examples may be seen in Winer's Gr. Gr. § 5. Thus the ὅτι πάντες γινώσκοντες ἔχομεν may be rendered, "for we have all knowledge;" a tacit censure on the prevalent conceit of the Corinthian converts. Now this mention of knowledge gives the Apostle an opportunity of introducing, for admonition's sake, a weighty gnome (introduced, for greater effect, without a particle) on real as contrasted with false knowledge, and on its value as compared with the love of God. 'H γινώσις, however, does not denote "knowledge" simply, but "the knowledge [I allude to]," "this knowledge," (as at v. 7.) and even religious knowledge; as far as it is considered as a branch of science, and confined to speculation only; and unaccompanied with an attention to practice as well as theory, love to man, as well as devotion to God. Thus, in the very opposition of γινώσις and ἀγάπη, it is implied that the former is separate from the latter. See Chrys. Οικοδομεῖ, "promotes the edification of themselves, and the furtherance of the Gospel." See Rom. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. x. 23, and c. 14, and Heydenr. in loc.

2. It is rightly remarked by Pott, that in this verse the sentiment at ἡ γινώσις φυσιοῦ is amplified, as in the next verse that at ἡ ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ is expanded.

—δοκεῖ εἰδέναι τι] "fancies that he knows something (great, or any thing thoroughly)." There is here a conjoint notion of pride and conceit, as in the case of a δοκησίσοφος, who is vain of his knowledge, and rests in it, without applying it to practice, by the discharge of his duty to men. Such a person as yet knoweth nothing; neither that, nor any thing else, as he ought to know it, i. e. completely; namely, because he

3. [Εγνώσται ὑπ' αὐτοῦ.] This is explained by some ancient and many modern Commentators, "is acknowledged and approved by God." But though this be a frequent signification of the word, it is here not permitted by the context; since, as Pott remarks, a sense is required the opposite to οὐδέπω—γινῶναι. It seems best, therefore, (with some ancient and many of the best modern Commentators,) to suppose ἐγνώσται taken in a Hophal sense, "is made to know;" i. e. is taught by Him; as 1 Cor. xiii. 12. Gal. iv. 9. An idiom which, Pott shows, is found both in Classical and Hellenistic Greek; referring to John v. 42. Rom. ii. 18, compared with vv. 19, 20, 21.

4. The οὖν is here resumptive, of which examples are adduced by Raphael. The Apostle now, 4—6., refutes two arguments urged in defence of eating idol meats, 1. that the Heathen Gods are not existent. This he grants and confirms; but shows v. 7. that the conclusion thence deduced is false.

—οὐδὲν εἰδῶλον.] By εἰδῶλον is meant, not the image itself of the God worshipped under the image, but (as Pott and Heydenr. explain) the so called gods, deastri, thus termed by the Jews in contempt; q. d. a mere "shadow," "of nothing" (as Isaiah says xli. 24.), non-entities, μάταια, vanities, no existence, much less divinity. Οὐδὲν ἐν κόσμῳ ἐστὶ is a popular phrase similar to one in our own language, literally, "nothing in the world" [but stocks and stones]. See Bp. Bull's Works, p. 112. D.

5. καὶ γὰρ εἶπερ, &c.] This is meant for explanation, and to anticipate an objection. By λεγόμενοι is meant νομιζόμενοι, i. e. (by the power of the emphasis) only those accounted, not really such; μὴ φύσει θεοί. The passage is well illustrated by Loesen. from the following of Philo p. 122. οἱ δὲ λεγόμενοι δεσπότες δόξης μόνον οὐ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν νομιζονται· ἀνάγκη δ' ὡς ὑπὸ κλον καὶ δοῦλον οὕτως ἡγεμόνα ἐν τῷ παντὶ εἶναι καὶ κύριον γένεσθαι· ἀν' οὗ τῷ ὄντι ἄρχων καὶ ἡγεμὼν εἰς ὃ Θεός, ὃ λέγειν ἦν περὶ πάδες ὅτι πάντα αὐτοῦ κτήματα.

Εἴτε ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ εἴτε ἐπὶ γῆς are enumerations of the constituent parts of the κόσμος preceding. By the former it is thought, are meant the Dii Olympii, or maiores; by the latter, the ἐπιχθόνιοι, the minores, inferior deified powers, presiding over the fountains, woods, mountains, rivers, &c.; or the Dii minorum gentium, the Demi-gods, Divi, Genii, received into the number of Gods for their virtue, and acting as messengers between the celestial gods and mankind. With respect to the words θεοὶ πολλοί, καὶ κύριοι πολλοί, Pott rightly regards the θεοὶ as the same with the οἱ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ before; and not to be distinguished from the κύριοι, by which name (he adds) the gods and goddesses both of Greece and Rome were called. By the same term (denoting power and domination) the Heb. לַבַּי was used to designate the Canaanitish gods and goddesses adopted by the Israelites; and sometimes the Tyrian Hercules, and such other deified mortals become tutelary deities. See Warburton's Divine Leg. Vol. vi. p. 388. Pott well remarks that, "by this accumulation of terms the Apostle meant to exhaust the notion of polytheism (which is also meant by the repetition of πολλοί), in order that the notion of the one God, to be worshipped by Christians, might be the more prominent."

6. ἀλλ' ἡμῖν εἰς Θεός, &c.] The sense seems to be: "But [whatever be their opinions] there is to us (there is believed by us Christians to exist) but one God, the Father, from whom, as Creator and First Great Cause, all things have their origin, and we for Him (i. e. for his service and glory, see Col. i. 16.); and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom [as the efficient cause] are all things, and we by Him, i. e. are what we are, viz. created and redeemed." On the sense of the phrases respectively applied to God the Father (ἐξ οὗ, καὶ εἰς αὐτόν), and to God the Son (δι' αὐτοῦ), there are various opinions. The best exposition of them will be found in the ancient Commentators: who in the Father recognize the origin of all things, and their continuance; who to the Son ascribe, mediately, the creation of all things, and, as respects Christians, a two-fold creation, natural and spiritual. But almost all recent Commentators recognize only a moral creation, and explain καὶ ἡμεῖς δι' αὐτοῦ, "and we [Christians] are by him [what we are];" i. e. regenerated and saved. See 1 Pet. i. 21. This view is confirmed in Theodoret cited in Recens. Synop., and adopted by Mr. Towns. As to the Socinian perversion, founded on the distinction here laid down between the Father and the Son, the Apostle (observes Mr. Holden) by calling the Father "the one God," does not exclude Jesus from being the God of Christians, any more than he excludes the Father from being Lord, by calling Christ "the one Lord." On the contrary, he intimates, by this mode of expression, that Father and Son are one God and one Lord, in the unity of the Godhead." See also Mr. Slade.

that an idol is nought, has no virtue to sanctify or to pollute. The sense of the words following is: "But some, in the secret persuasion of the idol's being something (i. e. a real being, or a representation of one), even yet eat of the food, as if it were food offered to some really existing dæmon." This sense of συνεῖδ. is satisfactorily established by Schoettg. and Schulz.

— καὶ ἡ συνείδησις—μολύνεται.] The sense seems to be, "and their perception of right and wrong, being weak and ill-informed, their conscience is, as it were, defiled, [and they feel self-condemned];" i. e. by doing what they believe to be wrong. So, in Ammian xv. 2. (cited by Pott) he is said "polluere conscientiam," who is troubled with the reproaches of an evil conscience; and in Ecclus. xxi. 30. the whisperer μολύνει τὴν ἐαυτοῦ ψυχὴν.

8. βρῶμα δὲ ἡμᾶς, &c.] The best Commentators are of opinion that this is spoken in the person of the Corinthians, and contains the other plea (and that derived ex rerum naturâ) by which they justified their eating idol-meats; q. d. "But food (i. e. the eating, or the abstaining from certain meats) does not recommend us to the favour of God." If the words be supposed to be the Apostle's, they may, with some, be regarded as concessory. At all events, it comes to the same thing. To advert to the phraseology, περισσεύομεν signifies properly "to introduce any one to the notice of another," his superior,—and, from the adjunct, "to recommend to the favour of any one." Περισσεύομεν and ὑστερούμεθα signify, "are we the better or the worse [Christians]." The inference, as Pott observes, is left to be supplied, which is: "Therefore it matters not, whether we sit down to table at idol-feasts, or not." To which the Apostle answers: βλέπετε δὲ, &c. q. d. [True]; "but be careful, lest the exercise of this liberty of yours," &c; for such (as the ancient and many modern Commentators explain) is the sense of ἐξουσία, as denoting, what is claimed as a right, though it may be an abuse of right. Thus it is shown to be sinful at x. 15—23.

10. ἐὰν γὰρ—ἐσθίειν.] Here we have an illustration by example, q. d. "Thus, for instance, if he see you, who have this [boasted] privilege, sitting at table in an idol-temple, will not his conscience (weak, uninformed, and wavering as he is) be emboldened, so as to eat what has been offered to idols?" Κατακείμενον is a vox sol. de hac re, appropriate to the reclining posture of eating food, both among the Orientals and the Greeks.

— εἰδωλείῳ.] A word frequent in the Apocrypha, and of the same form with Ποσιδῶμειον, and many others ending in—ειον, which are properly adjectives with an ellip. of ιερόν. On the sense of οἰκοδομηθήσεται there has been some doubt. By Wets., Storr, Rosenm., and Pott, it is thought to be used ironically: which, however, is too harsh. It is better, with the ancient Commentators, and also Grot., Schmid., Kypke, Valckn., and Krause, to render it, "will be confirmed, i. e. emboldened;" as Mal. iii. 13. οἰκοδομούνται ποιοῦντες ἄνομα. Joseph. Ant. xvi. 6. εἰς νοθεσίαν αὐτῶν οἰκοδομῶν αὐτοῦς.

11. ἀπολείται] "will be caused to perish [by thee];" i. e. as far as thou art concerned." Δι' ὃν Χρ. ἀπέθ. This places in a stronger point of view the enormity of the offence.

13. διόπερ—σκανδαλίσω.] This is the conclusion of the whole reasoning; expressed, however, out of modesty, not in the form of a command (though meant to be such) but, per coitionem, in his own person.

IX. In continuation of the same subject the Apostle proceeds to show, by his own example, that many things in themselves lawful, ought to be abstained from for the sake of others; and how many things of much greater consequence he had abstained from, that he might not offend weak brethren, or throw an impediment in the way of religion. (Krause and Rosenm.)

1. οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος; οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐλεύθερος;] Seven MSS. and some Versions and Latin Fathers make ἔλ. precede ἀπόστ.; which was approved by Grot., Beza, and Beng., and has been edited by Griesb., Knapp, Krause, Tittm., and Pott. But without sufficient reason. The MS.

evidence is slender, that of Latin Fathers of little weight, and far overbalanced by the Greek Fathers, and that of Versions is liable to exception. The above Critics, indeed, urge that the climax requires this; there being, they think, a gradation from his right as a man, to his right as an Apostle. But that is taking for granted what requires to be proved. It should rather seem, that in this verse he (as Lightf. remarks) does not treat of political, nay, not even of Christian liberty generally, but of Apostolical liberty. And so Wets. thought (who retains the common reading) subjoining: “δ. ἀποστολῇ agit distinctus, in v. 2. de libertate, v. 4. seqq.” The common reading, then, with reason retained by Wets. and also Matth., who has well vindicated it, and shown its superiority to the new reading. Rinck, too, after testifying that all the MSS. he has collated have the common reading, gives the preference to it, and ably shows the origin of the transposition. There could, indeed, have arisen no doubt as to the correctness of the common reading, had the true nature of the words been perceived; which was long ago seen by Crell., who remarks that it is as if there had been written οὐκ εἰμι ἀπόστολος καὶ [διὰ τοῦτο] καὶ ἐλεύθερος; So Semler renders, “nunc ego, cum apostolicâ auctoritate polleam, nunc ipse juris sum.”

The next words are meant (as Crell. observes) to anticipate an objection,—that Paul was not one of the Apostles, and therefore had not any such authority. The words of the answer to which, by the interrogation with a negation, have the force of a strong affirmation; namely, that he has seen Jesus Christ in the flesh. “The Apostles (observes Whitby) being chosen to be witnesses of the resurrection, it was requisite that St. Paul should also see him risen. Hence the language addressed to him by Ananias, Acts xxii. 13—15, and his own declaration to Agrippa, Acts xxvi. 26. Accordingly, we find that Christ was seen of him, xv. 8.; nay, often appeared to him after his resurrection, Acts xviii. 9. xxii. 18., and that he was taught the Gospel by the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ.” In the words following, οὐ τὸ ἔργον—Κυρίῳ, Paul proves his Apostleship; namely, from having, in the exercise of that office, converted them to Christianity; which, without Divine assistance (a proof of his divine mission) could not have been done. Therefore, by so doing, ἀποστολικὴν διακονίαν ἐπλήρωκε. In the Classical writers, too, the pupils or elevés of any one are said to be their work. So Philo cited by Wets: ἐμόν ἐστι ἔργον Γαΐος. The words ἐν Κυρίῳ signify “in the business of the Lord and his religion.”

2. εἰ ἄλλοις—οὐκ εἰμι.] It is well observed by Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, that St. Paul here speaks κατὰ συγχώρησιν; q. d. granted that I am not an Apostle to others, or, if there be any who doubt of my Apostleship, you cannot doubt it, to whom I have approved myself as such. Ἀλλὰ γε, at certè; on which sense see Devar. and Hoogew. The εἰ is rendered by Pott quodsi vel maxime. The words ἡ γὰρ σφραγίς—Κυρίῳ are corroborative of the preceding. Σφραγίς, as it properly denoted the impression made by a seal, which, being affixed to writings, is a proof and evidence of their authenticity,—so it came to mean generally a demonstration. Thus the sense is: “Your being in the Lord (i. e. your conversion to Christianity) is a decided proof of my apostleship, as a seal is of the authenticity of a writing; or as a seal put by a workman on his work proves it to be his work.” Comp. 2 Cor. iii. 2.

3. ἡ ἐμὴ ἀπολογία—ἐστί.] Expositors are not agreed whether what is here said ("this is my defence") is meant of what precedes, or what follows. Most of them refer it to the latter; which certainly makes a good sense: but it is more agreeable to the course of the argument (well traced by Crell. and Calvin) to refer it to what precedes; as is done by many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern. Ἀπολογία and ἀνακρ. are forensic terms, used by St. Paul in order to glance at the arrogance of those who sat in judgment (ἀνακρ.) on his Apostleship, debating on his claims; as if, because he had waived the use of his privilege of Apostle, he was no Apostle, but only an ordinary minister.

4. Having vindicated his Apostleship, he adverts to his rights and privileges therein, which, however, he shows he had often forborne to use. (Krause and Pott.)

— ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν φαγεῖν, &c.] Ἔχομεν is by the best Commentators taken for ἔχω. But it may be understood of all the Apostles. By φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν is meant maintenance suitable to the situation which they held; a right originally granted to the Apostles by our Lord, Matt. x. 9. The Commentators have shown that it was the custom, among all the nations of antiquity, for the publicly appointed teachers of religion to be liberally supported by those whom they instructed.

5. ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν.] Most ancient, and many modern, Commentators take ἀδ. γυν. to mean a sister-woman, i. e. a Christian woman, or matron. Thus it will refer to those pious women, who followed the Apostles for instruction, and sometimes, as in the case of our Lord, ministered to them of their substance. As, however, περιάγειν implies conveyance and sustenance at the expense of the Church, that cannot be thought of. The best modern Commentators are, with reason, agreed that ἀδελφ. γυν. means a sister-wife, i. e. a wife who shall be a sister, namely, Christian, as vii. 15. Or rather we should, as I proposed in Recens. Synop. (and which is adopted by Dr. Burton), take γυναῖκα as a subst. qualifying ἀδελφ., and suppose an ellipsis of οὖσαν, q. d. “a sister who shall be our wife.” Such is nearly the view of the sense taken by Chrysost. The chief reason for the Apostles being allowed this privilege was, not so much that those females might minister to their domestic comfort; as that they might be instrumental to the conversion or religious instruction of females, especially the unmarried.

6. ἢ μόνος ἐγὼ, &c.] The sense is, "Are we to be made exceptions to the general rule, that Apostles have the privilege, &c. The μόνος ἐγὼ καὶ Βαρν., Doddr. thinks, points at some peculiar spleen which had arisen against the two Apostles of the uncircumcision. But it should rather seem that this was especially expected from them, by the circumstances under which they had begun, and carried forward the work of evangelization; which had led them first to adopt, and afterwards to persevere in, the method of subsisting by their own labour. See more in Scott, who well observes that thus, by not requiring ministerial support, they seemed to have lost their right to it, and were generally left to struggle with difficulties for want of assistance. The drift of the Apostle, in adverting to his having waved this liberality, was probably what Mr. Scott supposes, namely, that the Corinthians might see, as in a glass, the impropriety of their selfish exercise of their liberty in eating εἰδωλόθυστα.

7—14. The Apostle here subjoins arguments for the right in question, and illustrates it by three examples; two taken from common life, and the custom of the Gentiles, the third from the injunctions of the Mosaic Law.

— τίς στρατ. ἰδίοις ὀψων. Render: "Who ever serves as a soldier at his own expense?" The construction of ἐστ. with a Genit. is rare, and with the Genit. and ἐκ. is regarded by Steph. Thes. C. 1909. as unexampled elsewhere. There is an ellip. of μέρος τι, by a Hebraism, the Commentators say; but this partitive construction is, more or less, common to all languages. The application, as Pott observes, is left to be supplied, which is: "So neither ought the Apostles," &c.

8—10. To human enactments the Apostle now adds Divine sanctions.

— κατὰ ἄνθρ. "by a reference to the practice of men and the sanction of human law." See Note on Rom. vi. 19.

10. μὴ τῶν βοῶν. Sub. μόνον, suggested by the emphasis, whence also is implied [and not of men also?] For perspicuity, however, it is added, ἢ δι' ἡμᾶς πάντως λέγει; of which words the sense is, "Or saith he it [not] especially for us [men];" q.d. may not men learn much from this; namely, that (by an argument a minori ad majus) the ministers of the Gospel have a right to maintenance. Then the words following directly affirm what was only before indirectly asserted.

— καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν, &c. With these words both the ancient and modern Interpreters have been perplexed. The numerous varr. lect. only show that the ancients felt the difficulty, and endeavoured to remove it in the same manner as have some moderns, namely, by Critical conjecture. Griesb. and others edit (from a few MSS. and some Versions and Fathers) ὅτι ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ὀφ. ὁ. ἄ. ἄ. καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τοῦ μετέχειν. But I agree with Rinck, that this is magis "facilius intellectu quam verius." And he truly remarks, that no one would have added the somewhat obscure words τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ by way of explication, and least of all in an inverse order. In fact, Rinck has successfully traced the origin of the corruption (for such it is) in the MSS. whose reading Griesb. has followed. The passage assuredly needs not emendation, but explanation; and the following will, I apprehend, be found the true construction and interpretation: καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν (ὀφείλει ἀλοῶν) ἐπ' ἐλπίδι (τοῦ) μετέχειν τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ, "And he that reapeth ought to reap in hope to partake of [the fruits of] his hope. So Horace says of the husbandman, "spe finis dura ferentem." Here we have an argutè dictum united with a paronomasia, such as is frequent in St. Paul. Of this sense of ἐλπίς examples are adduced by Krause and Rosenm. Finally, μετέχειν is here put for ἔχειν, or χρῆσθαι, as in Heb. v. 13. Herodot. vi. 107. Xen. (Econ. xvii. 6. See my Note on Thucyd. vii. 69. ἡλκίας μετέχων.

11. Here is a further argument (with a continuation of the agricultural metaphor) to prove that, on principles both of justice and gratitude, ministers are entitled to a competent provision.

— τὰ πνευματικὰ "the seed of religious instruction." Τῷ μὴν is a dativus commodi. At μέγα supply μή τι εἴη and ἔργον, which is expressed in Eurip. Inc. Frag. 401. (cited by Kypke) Τὸν λαβόντα τῶν λόγων Καλὰς ἀφορμὰς, οὐ μέγ' ἔργον εὖ λέγειν. Τὰ σαρκικὰ θερίσσομεν,

 18 ἔχω· εἰ δὲ ἄκων,—οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι. Τίς οὖν μοί

12. εἰ ἄλλοι, &c.] An argumentum a minori ad majus. By the ἄλλοι are meant those who had casually visited, and evangelized the Corinthians; and of whom some probably settled at Corinth, and became the ψευδοπάστολοι, false teachers, so often alluded to by St. Paul; and whose own conduct, in this respect, was directly the reverse of St. Paul's, evincing both tyranny and rapacity.

—τῆς ἐξουσίας ὑμῶν.] The best Commentators are, with reason, agreed that ἐξουσία here signifies right, as in Matt. xxi. 23. Acts xxvi. 10. and elsewhere; and moreover, that the ὑμῶν is a Genit. of object for eis hmas, as ἐξουσία πνευματικών, “power over spirits,” in Matt. x. 1. and ἐξ. πάσης σαρκὸς in John xvii. 2. But the true ratio idiomatis may be, that as μετέχουσιν ἐξουσίας is a compound phrase, equivalent to ἐξουσιάζουσιν, it may take the same regimen as that would,—namely, the Genitive.

—στέγομεν] “we suffer, endure.” So Themistocles cited by Wetstein: τὸν οὐ στέγουντα ὕβριν. How it comes to mean this is as follows: Στέγω (which is cognate with τέγω, tego) signifies properly to keep out, or off; (as a ship when it is not leaky,) or to keep in, as a vessel which is water-tight. Hence it comes to mean continere and sustinere. See my Note on Thucydides ii. 94. 10. Ἐγκοπὴν δώμεν is for ἐγκόπτωμεν, “should hinder the [success of] the Gospel,” by the people grudging the expense of my maintenance, and imputing to me interested motives.

13, 14. Here we have another argument, derived from the Mosaic Law. Τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζ., for ἱερατεύοντες, “qui sacris operantur,” those who officiated in the worship of the Temple. Wets. compares Hom. Od. ε. 101. οἱ τε θεοῖσι ἱερὰ τε ῥέζουσιν. The words οἱ τῷ θυσ. προσεδρεύοντες, &c. form a parallelism; though the superior Priesthood, who especially attended at the altar, seem by those words to be designated, as by τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζ. the inferior. See Chrys. On προσεδρ. see Note at vii. 35, and compare προσέχειν τῷ θυσ. in Heb. vii. 13. The Commentators cite προσεδ. ταῖς Θεοῦ τίμαις from Diod. Sic., and προσεδ. τῇ θεραπείᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ from Joseph. Συμμερίζεσθαι signifies properly to share any thing with another. Here the thing is put for the person, improprie.

14. διέταξε.] Namely, at Matt. x. 10, and Luke x. 7. διέτ. is for διάταγμα ἐποίησε, or ἐνομοθέτησε. The τοῖς καταγγέλλουσιν is a Dative of reference, instead of an Accus. with a preposition. Of ζῆν ἐκ, or ἀπό τινος, as said of that which supplies a living, Kypke adduces several examples. Εὐαγγ. must not, with Mede and Scholz, be interpreted of the support or stipend, but of the thing itself,—preaching the Gospel.

16—18. The Apostle now shows that he has not used this power, and why. Οὐδενὶ τούτων, i. e. none of the things which pertain to that power, and are included in it (see vv. 4. & 5.); i. e. neither money, nor money's worth. “Ἴνα οὕτω γεν. ἐν ἐμοί,” “that this should be done in my case.” Καλὸν with μᾶλλον is for καλλίον, as Mark ix. 42. The syntax with the Dative is Hellenistic Greek.

—ἢ ἵνα τίς κενώσῃ.] The sense is, “rather than any one should be enabled to make my boasting [namely, that I am burdensome to none] void.”

16, 17. On the exact scope (which is somewhat obscure) of these verses, see Rec. Syn. The sense is very well expressed by Abp. Newc. thus: “I say my glorying; for if I merely preach the Gospel, I have no glorying. For I am under a moral necessity of doing this, and incur guilt if I do it not. And I must not merely preach the Gospel, but preach it with ardour and disinterestedness. For, &c.; but if I preach it against my will, a trust is committed to me, of which I must give an account.” After ἄκων must be supplied from the preceding context ἀνάγκη μοι ἐπικεῖται πράσσειν τούτο, “do it I must,” for οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι, where observe the inversion of construction for ἡ οἰκ. πεπίστευται μοι, as Rom. iii. 2. So Thucyd. vii. 57. Συνέβη δὲ τοῖς Κρησὶ—ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀποίκους ἀκούσας μετὰ μισθοῦ ἔλθειν. where see my Note. In short, the sense of v. 17. is very well expressed by Gilpin and Valpy in the following paraphrase:—

ἐστιν ὁ μισθός; ἵνα εὐαγγελιζόμενος ἀδάπανον θήσω τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς τὸ μὴ καταχρῆσασθαι τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ μου ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. ⁱ Ἐλεύθερος γὰρ ὢν ἐκ 19 πάντων, πᾶσιν ἑμαυτὸν ἐδούλωσα, ἵνα τοὺς πλείονας κερδήσω. ^k Καὶ ἐγενόμην τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ὡς Ἰουδαῖος, ἵνα 20 Ἰουδαίους κερδήσω· τοῖς ὑπὸ νόμον ὡς ὑπὸ νόμον, [μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον] ἵνα τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον κερδήσω· ^l τοῖς 21 ἀνόμοις ὡς ἄνομος, (μὴ ὢν ἄνομος Θεῷ ἀλλ' ἔννομος Χριστῷ,) ἵνα κερδήσω ἀνόμους. ^m Ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἀσθενέσιν 22 ὡς ἀσθενής, ἵνα τοὺς ἀσθενεῖς κερδήσω. "If I do this willingly, i. e. freely, without claiming any reward for my pains, which I might do, I have a reward, a special reward from God, and may glory in it: but if I preach unwillingly, (demanding a maintenance for my pains, and refusing to preach without it) then a dispensation of the Gospel is committed to me; and in preaching I only discharge a trust, of which I cannot boast or glory."

18. μισθός.] Some difference of opinion exists as to the import of this expression. Most Expositors take it in its ordinary sense: and Wets., Rosenm., Krause, and Iaspis here recognize an acutè dictum; q. d. What, then, is my reward? why truly to receive no reward at all. But though such turns do occasionally occur in the Apostle, they are not to be supposed unnecessarily. And here the sentiment would not suit the context: for the οὖν is here evidently meant to introduce a conclusion from the foregoing premises. That sense, too, is forbidden by the ἵνα θήσω, which rather denotes the means than the mode. It is best, with the ancient and early modern Commentators (including Hesych.), to consider μισθός here used, by metonymy, for the cause of reward, the ground of boasting; for the two are, in the present passage, interchanged; q. d. "What, then, is my hope of reward, or [ground of glory];" or, as Crell. explains, "Quid igitur est, quod mihi in hoc munere obeundo singularem mercedem afferre potest, et efficere, ut jure gloriari possem?" The sum of the Apostle's declaration is admirably expressed by Calvin. Καταχρ. is by almost all the best Expositors taken for χρησασθαι (compound for simple.) A view supported by the Pesch. Syr. Version, ܡܢܚܠ; and which is thought to be required by the course of argument. Yet I cannot think that the compound was here used without some cause. The κατα is, I think, intensive, and I would render, "ut perutar,"—"that I may use to the uttermost." Hence it is meant to be hinted, that the pressing his right in a case like this would be a kind of abuse of it. See Calvin. In fact, καταχρ. here seems to correspond to καταχρ. supra vii. 31, (by a kind of significatio prægnans,) the full sense being, "So as to not use (or rather I might say abuse) my power."

19. Having, at vv. 2—18, spoken with reference to the question οὐκ εἰμι ἀπόστολος, (showing that he had, for avoiding offence, waived his right as Apostle, and preached the Gospel cost-free,) the Apostle now adverts to the other and subsequent question, οὐκ εἰμι ἐλεύθερος; (Pott.)

— ἐλεύθερος ἐκ πάντων] i. e. under no obligation to serve them. Ἐμ. ἐδούλ.; i. e. acting as their servant, declining no labour, and making myself subservient to their wills; becoming τοῖς πᾶσι τὰ πάντα. "ἵνα τοὺς πλείονας κερδήσω. Here the Article is not, as some say, pleonastic, but signifies "the more," i. e. more than he otherwise would. Κερδ. may be rendered, "might gain over to Christianity." Comp. Matt. xviii. 9 & 15. 1 Pet. iii. 1.

20, 21. Here is shown the nature of the δουλεία just mentioned. Ὡς Ἰουδαῖος, viz. by the observance of Jewish rites and ceremonies. See Acts xxi. 26, and xvi. 3. By τοῖς ὑπὸ νόμον are meant Gentile Proselytes to Judaism; some of them converted to Christianity, but yet adhering to the Jewish rites and ceremonies.

Between ὑπὸ νόμον and ἵνα are found in several MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, the words μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον, which were approved by Mill and Beng., and admitted into the text by Griesb., Knapp, Krause, Tittm., Vater, and Pott. But I rather agree with Matth., that they ought not to be received, since, although the clause might have been omitted per homœoteleuton, yet it is very improbable that this should have taken place in all the MSS. except fifteen; which might, as Matth. observes, be corrupted from the Vulgate, the insertion being, as he thinks, formed in order to correspond to the μὴ ὢν—Χριστῷ in the next verse. The authority of Fathers here is of no great weight, especially since they are inconsistent with themselves. I have, in this second edition, admitted the clause; but have taken care to express my doubts of its authenticity, by inclosing it in brackets.

21. τοῖς ἀνόμοις] i. e. τοῖς μὴ ὑπὸ νόμον, v. 20,—namely, the Gentiles, οἱ νόμον μὴ ἔχοντες, Rom. ii. 12 & 14. To these he became ἄνομος by not observing the Mosaic Law. This use of the word ἄνομος, however, being somewhat irregular, the Apostle explains it by the parenthetical clause μὴ ὢν ἄνομος Θεῷ, which signifies "not as though I were under no Divine Law," ἀλλὰ ἔννομος Χριστῷ, "but under law towards Christ, and the precepts of the Christian Religion."

22. τοῖς ἀσθενέσιν.] This has reference to the less instructed, and therefore superstitiously scrupulous, both of Jews and Gentiles. See supra viii. 11 & 12. To these Paul accommodated himself in things indifferent, and, to sum up the whole, says: τοῖς πᾶσι (scil. καὶ Ἰουδαίοις, καὶ ἀνόμοις, καὶ ἀσθένεσι) γέγονα τὰ πάντα; i. e. (as Pott explains) εὐτράπελος, (sensu bono,) μυρίας τροπὰς τραπόμενος, πρὸς πάντας εὐάριστος, παντοῖος γέγονα. The τὰ before πάντα is not found in several MSS. and Fathers: and Bp. Middl. would cancel it. Indeed, two passages of Ach. Tatius and Lucian cited by the Commentators have πάντα joined with γενέσθαι without the Article. But there it is only used for παντοῖος γενέσθαι, and is not followed by τοῖς πᾶσι which makes a material difference. The Apostle, it seems, used the Article at πάντα because he used it at πᾶσι, intending thus to strengthen the antithesis. Σώσω, "may put them into a state of salvation."

23. τοῦτο δὲ ποιῶ—γένωμαι] q. d. "This conduct I adopt (i. e. these compliances I make) for the Gospel's sake, (i. e. for its further propagation) to the end that I may, with you, be partaker of its benefits."

24. The mention of the future rewards of the Gospel suggested to the Apostle the idea of the prizes in the agonistic contests; and, accordingly, on this he founded the following exhortation,—to strive after the rewards of the Gospel as strenuously as the athletæ did after those of the public games; such as the Olympic, the Isthmian, the Pythian, and the Nemean. The Apostle points his admonition by the argument,—that whereas in those games, though all run, only one receives the prize; in the Christian race all may receive the rewards, inasmuch as they are held out to all. The Apostle's reasoning (says Bp. Warburton, in a Sermon on this text, vol. x. p. 91. seqq.) is as follows:—"Worldly attainments are like the contentions in your games, where, though the athletes be many, and the struggle great, yet the prizes are extremely few, and the success very uncertain: for each adventurer hath an adversary in every other. On the contrary, they who aspire to that immortal crown, which Religion holds out, are sure to win; the rewards being certain, as coming from the all-bounteous hand of our heavenly Father. Therefore put in for this prize; which no accidents of time or fortune, nor any thing but your own fault, can hinder you from obtaining."

25. ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος] for ὁ ἀγωνιστής. This is referrible to all the various kinds of gymnastic games. Ἐγκρατεύεται, "practices ἐγκράτειαν." For the preparatory training for ἀγωνιστάι lasted ten months. Of the extreme abstinence and temperance required three examples are given by Ælian V. H. iii. 30. & 10. 2. 11. 3. So Epictetus Enchir. C. 35. (cited by the Commentators) graphically describes the thing thus: δεῖ σ' εὐτακτεῖν, ἀναγκοτροφεῖν, ἀπέχεσθαι πεμμάτων, γυμνάζεσθαι πρὸς ἀνάγκην, ἐν ὥρᾳ τεταγμένη, ἐν καύματι, ἐν ψύχει, μὴ ψυχρὸν πίνειν, μὴ οἶνον, ὡς ἔτυχεν· ἀπλῶς, ὡς ἰατρῷ παραδεδοκέναι σεαυτὸν τῷ ἐπιστάτῃ, εἰτα εἰς τὸν ἀγῶνα παρέρχεσθαι. Bp. Warburton, ubi supra, observes that "the Apostle here urges another argument for their engaging in the heavenly race, and preferring the pursuit of spiritual things to things temporal; q. d. The pursuit of the former has not only these advantages of certainly above that of the Games, but they are without any peculiar drawback; since the preparation for the spiritual prize is not more severe than that for the earthly." Whence the learned Prelate establishes these two truths, 1. That the worldly advantages so considerable as to deserve the name of a prize, are of the most uncertain and difficult attainment. 2. That the immense rewards which Religion holds out to its faithful servants are within the reach of every one. Here all things are as promising and easy as they are discouraging in the pursuit of worldly ambition. Instead of anxiety, toil, labour, opposition, oppression, and final disappointment—all here is peace and pleasure; joy in believing, Divine assistance in obtaining, and full security in possessing."

—φθαρτὸν στέφ.] i. e. a wreath of the leaves of trees, laurel, or wild olive, or pine, and sometimes only of parsley.

26. ἐγὼ τοίνυν οὕτω τρέχω] q. d. Having then, this heavenly prize in view, I, for my part, so run, &c. On the sense of οὐκ ἀδήλως considerable difference of opinion exists. The most probable interpretations are the two following: 1. That of Bp. Pearson and Pott, who regard it as put for οὐκ ὡς ἀδήλου ὄντος βραβεῖον vel σκόπον. 2. That of Theodoret, the Vulg., Beza, Luther, Hamm., Elsn., Wolf, Kypke, Wells, Warburton, Rosenm., Schleus., Wahl, Bretschn., Krause, and Heydenr., who take ἀδήλως for ἐπ' ἀδήλῳ, in incertum [eventum], dubio exitu, obscurâ et ancipiti victoriâ, as if dubious of the result, and therefore faintly. So Lucian: ἐπὶ τῷ ἀδήλῳ καὶ ἀμφιβόλῳ τῆς νίκης πονοῦσι. This use of ἀδήλ. also occurs in 3 Macc. vii. 34.; and the interpretation connected with it seems to deserve the preference.

In ὡς οὐκ ἀέρα δέρων we have a pugilistic metaphor; there being many ways in which pugilists might beat the air,—namely, either in private exercise, or as a prelude to the contest, or during the contest itself, when aiming a blow and not reaching their object. So Ariosto Orli. Fur. Canto ii. 51. Feri Gradasso il vento è l'aria vana. This last seems to be the meaning in the present case. With this metaphorical use of πυκτεύω I would compare Anacr. cited by Casaubon Anim. ad Athen. p. 782. ὡς μὴ πρὸς

^r Ἐρωτα πυκταλίζω. The absence of the Article before αέρα, Bp. Middl. thinks, "may be accounted for by regarding the words as put, by an Hendiadys, for the compound air-beater." But may we not rather consider αέρα in the same light with substantives denoting the principal objects of nature, as the sun, moon, &c.? And as those are admitted by the Bishop to be anarthrous, so may such as denote the elements.

27. ἀλλ' ὑπωπιάζω, &c.] After having shown how he does not, the Apostle shows how he does fight. Ὑπωπιάζειν properly signifies to strike under the eye; and as that is especially severe to an adversary, it thus came to denote "to treat harshly," so as to subdue any one's spirit. The next term δουλ., goes still further, and signifies, "to gain the complete mastery over." Hence both terms denote figuratively, "to mortify the body, by bringing its appetites into complete subjection" (literally, by beating it black and blue).

— μήπως ἄλλοις κηρύξας, &c.] Most recent Commentators here suppose a continuation of the agonistic figure. Κηρύξας they explain, "after having served as a herald to others," by proclaiming the Gospel: and ἀδόκιμος, they say, was the term applied to one who failed to obtain the victory. But it was rather applied to those who, from badness of character, were not allowed to contend. See Chrys. cited by Wets. Besides, not to say that it would involve a considerable confusion of metaphor, by the Apostle representing himself both as an ἀγωνιστής and a κήρυξ, the κήρυξ (as I have proved from very many passages of the Dramatists) was not a person of sufficient dignity for the Apostle to represent himself under that character. And moreover, there is no proof that the κήρυξ addressed any exhortations to the candidates for the prize; but only that they proclaimed (as our criers do) the laws of the combat; which custom is implied at 2 Tim. ii. 5. οὐ στεφανοῦνται, ἐὰν μὴ νομίμως ἀληθέσῃ. The task of exhortation, as well as of announcing the victory and crowning the victor, belonged solely to the ἀγωνοθέτης. In short, it seems that there is no agonistic allusion at all; that being dropped at δουλ. As to the sentiment, it is injudicious to lay such a stress as is done by some Anti-Calvinistic Commentators, on this expression, as if the Apostle doubted or feared for his salvation. The best Commentators, from Chrys. to Pott, are agreed, that the Apostle here, as often, speaks per κίνουσιν, and intends to hint an admonition to the Corinthians that they should bring under the body, lest, &c. Yet the passage will, even in this view, prove the possibility of Christians falling from a state of grace.

X. On the connexion of this Chapter with the preceding, there is a difference of opinion. Nay, some eminent Commentators contend that there is no connexion at all. But the ancient, and many considerable modern Interpreters (as Grot., Crell., Pearce, Wets., and Heydenr.), are (more rightly) of opinion that there is one; and they only differ as to the vinculum, which some suppose to be in the ἀδόκιμος just before; while others (as Pott) trace it to the subject of the εἰδωλόθοντα at c. viii. The former view, however, seems the best founded. "The Apostle (says Grot.) had just before described himself as mortifying the lusts of the flesh, that he might not fail of the hoped-for prize. He admonishes the Corinthians to do the same, and not to suffer themselves to be lulled into security (as many then did) by the consideration of the many spiritual gifts they had received from God; since by these they were by no means placed beyond danger; but were under so much the greater obligation to care and watchfulness." This he shows to be adumbrated in the circumstances of the Hebrew people in the desert; in which the wiser Jews recognised a type of the times of the Messiah. In short, the connexion may be briefly traced as follows: "[I have spoken of so running that ye may obtain, and of becoming reprobate and rejected]; for [mind] all do not inherit God's favour, who enjoy external privileges; as will appear by the example of our forefathers, who, though they enjoyed many precious external privileges, yet incurred the Divine displeasure and severe punishment." On this the Apostle follows the general conclusion at v. 12. ὥστε ὁ δοκῶν ἐστάναι βλεπέτω μὴ πέσῃ. And to this he at v. 14. subjoins a special one, on the duty of avoiding the eating of meats offered to idols; q. d. they must not think every thing lawful to them, because they are called by God as his chosen people; for the Jews were God's chosen people, yet they were formerly punished for disobedience, and are now rejected for contumacy.

1. Ἀγροεῖν may signify not so much to be ignorant of, as unmindful of. Ὑπὸ τὴν νεφ. ἦσαν, i. e. "were all under the guidance and protection of the cloud."

2. εἰς τὸν Μ. ἐβαπτίσαντο.] With this passage the Commentators are not a little perplexed; and consequently much diversity of interpretation exists. I have in Recens. Synop. stated the two most probable views of the sense; one supported by nearly all the ancient and early modern Commentators (thus expressed by Theophyl., εἰς τὸν Μωσῆν ἐβαπτίζοντο, ἀντὶ τοῦ, αὐτὸν ἀρχηγὸν ἔσχον τοῦ τύπου τοῦ βαπτίσματος, τύπος γὰρ βαπτίσματος ἦν, τό, τε ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην εἶναι, καὶ τὸ τὴν θάλασσαν διελθεῖν.), the other by almost all Commentators from the time of Hamm. downwards, who take the sense to be: "were, by passing under the cloud (yielding themselves to its guidance) and through the sea, as it were baptized, or initiated into the religion promulgated by Moses; and thus thoroughly recognised his Divine mission, and bound themselves in future to obey his laws. For baptism, say they, was a symbolical rite, by which any one bound himself unto faith and obedience to any teacher of religion; and the baptism itself was a form of initiation into that religion. Now this, indeed, does express St. Paul's meaning; but not, I apprehend, his full meaning. He did not, I conceive, merely mean to trace a similarity, by tacit comparison, between what the Israelites went through, and Christian baptism; but intended to represent the former as typical of the latter; i. e. the being baptized unto Moses, as typical of the being baptized unto Christ." It has been well observed by Whitby and Bp. Marsh (Lect. p. 384) that "the Jews, who admitted proselytes by baptism, appear to have generally considered the passage of their forefathers through the Red Sea, not as a mere insulated historical fact, but as something representative of admission to the Divine favour by baptism. They said that "they were baptized in the desert, and admitted into covenant with God before the Law was given." Nay, both they and St. Paul seem to have regarded all the circumstances of the Exodus as typical; namely, either of Christ, or of some rite of his religion. See also Is. iv. 5. The complete sense, then seems to be that laid down by Abp. Newc. as follows: "They were figuratively and typically baptized; they were initiated into the law given by Moses, and led to acknowledge his divine mission, through these miracles expressive of baptism." The material of the cloud and sea (being nothing but water) was well adapted to express this typical representation of baptism, both Jewish and Christian.

For ἐβαπτίσαντο many MSS. and Fathers have ἐβαπτίσθησαν. But that is evidently a gloss, proceeding from those who were not aware how closely connected the reciprocal force of the Middle verb is with the Passive voice.

4. βρῶμα πνευματικὸν—πόμα πνευμ. Some Commentators suppose the food and the drink to be called πνευματικὸν, because given miraculously from heaven (see Heydenr.): others, inasmuch as they had a spiritual import,—by being typical, the food, of Christ (the true bread from heaven, John vi. 50.), and the drink, of the blessing of the Gospel; including an allusion to the Holy Spirit. See John vii. 37—39. The latter is, I think, the true view: and, if so, there is also an allusion to the Eucharist.

—ἔπινον—πέτρας. Pressing on the literal sense of these words, many eminent Commentators have supposed the meaning to be, that the water at first miraculously drawn from the rock, was afterwards conveyed as miraculously, through the desert. They have, however, no better authority for the fact than some Rabbinical stories adduced by Wets. and Schoettg.: and the whole is a mere superstitious notion, resting on no solid foundation, and proceeding from utter misapprehension of the figurative language of the Apostle; which is by Calvin, Glass, Wolf, Rosenm., Krause, and Heydenr., rightly understood, not of a natural rock, "tanquam causa materialis (to use the words of Wolf) ex quâ," but of a spiritual rock, "tanquam causa efficiens, a quâ illa aqua et potatio profecta sit." Of this signification of ἐκ there are examples in abundance. So Theodoret explains: βούλεται εἰπεῖν, ὅτι οὐ τοῦτο ἦν ἐκείνους ἡ πέτρα, ἀλλ' ἡ θεία χάρις, ἡ καὶ τὴν πέτραν ἐκείνην παρ' ἐλπίδα πᾶσαν ἀναδοῦναι τὰ ρείθρα τῶν ὑδάτων παρὰ σκευάσαντα. The meaning, then, is, that Christ, who is typified by that rock, every where accompanied and was present with them, supplying water miraculously furnished; which, as it never failed them, might be said popularly to follow them, as Christ, who supplied it, did; either really, though invisibly, or figuratively and spiritually, by his perpetual and present help and protection. The general sense is (in the words of Mr. Holden), that "the Israelites had the same spiritual advantages and privileges offered to them typically, which are offered to us really."

5. οὐκ ἐν τοῖς πλείοσιν. Most of the recent Commentators take this as put for ἐν ὀλίγοις μόνον. But there is simply a meiosis (of which I have adduced several examples in Rec. Syn.); q. d. with most or very many of whom God was sore displeased, namely, with all but Joshua and Caleb. On this sense of οἱ πλείονες see Note on Rom. v. 19.

At κατεστρώθησαν γὰρ &c. there is a clause omitted, to which the γὰρ refers; q. d. [This we may infer,] for they were, &c., i. e. from their being stretched; since κατεστ. (founded on Numb. xiv. 16. κατέστρωσεν ἐν τῷ ἐρήμῳ) signifies, not were overthrown, but "were stretched or stretched [dead] over the desert;" a usage of καταστρ., like ὑπω in Numb. xiv. 16., frequent in the Classical writers (so Ælian Anim. vii. 2. cited by Wets.: λοιμός δὲ αὐτοὺς ἄφνω συλλαβὼν κατέστρωσε.) and meant to represent death in its most appalling form, here denoting (as Theophyl. says) τὴν ἀστροφάν αὐτῶν ἀπώλειαν. Doubtless, too, it was intended as an awful image of the eternal perdition of the wicked, and meant to serve for an awful warning, by example, to sinners of every age. See Chrys. and Calvin.

6. τύποι ἡμῶν ἐγενήθη. "came to pass as examples to us;" (ἡμῶν being put for ἡμῖν, as in a kindred passage of 1 Pet. v. 3. See also Heb. iv. 11.) or, figurative representations of God's dealings with his disobedient creatures. Ἐπι-θυμητὰς κακῶν is a general expression further on unfolded particularly. Render: "lusters after evil things." This term ἐπιθ., Theophyl. observes, is used, because every evil originates in ἐπιθυμία. So Thucydides iii. 45. represents desire and hope as the passions which lead men into evil, καὶ πλεῖστα βλάπτουσι. It has reference, not merely, as Theophyl. supposes, to the savoury idol feasts, nor, as Grot imagines, to a discontent with necessities, and a coveting of luxuries; but to evil concupiscence of every kind,—namely, the coveting sinful or inexpedient indulgences,—"cupiditates (says Calvin) quæ ex fastidio donorum Dei, et nostrâ incontinentiâ proveniunt." That evil covetousness against which God, by the mouth of his prophet (Hab. ii. 9.), denounces heavy woe.

7. The Apostle now applies the above principle to the different vices and sins to which the Corinthians were prone; commencing with that of abusing their Christian liberty, by indulging in the use of meats offered to idols.

—εἰδωλ. γίνεσθε.] Namely, by participating in idol-feasts; as is plain from the rest of the words of this verse, which refer to the sacrificial feast to the honour of the golden calf mentioned at Exod. xxxii. 6.

—ἐκάθισεν] "sat down to table;" according to the ancient posture, afterwards changed to reclining, and adopted from the Gentiles. On the sense of παίζω here (which is somewhat disputed) see Rec. Syn., where I have shown that it is best to assign to the word here a general signification (similar to that in Herodot. ix. 11. and 1 Chron. xv. 29. Esdr. v. 3.), including leaping, dancing, singing, and all other kinds of festal sport. And certainly it may admit of this, since παίζω (anciently παῖσσω) was derived from παῖς, and literally signified to play the boy.

8. πορν.] This has reference to all sorts of illicit connection with women, with allusion to the sin of the incestuous person. On ἔπεσον εἰκοσιτρεῖς see Numb. xxv. 1—9.

9. μὲδὲ ἐκπειρ. τὸν Χρ.] There are here two varr. lect., Κύριον and Θεόν, of which the former is by many recent Critics supposed to be the true reading; though, from the slender authority for it (only that of eight MSS., one Version, and some Fathers), no Editor has ventured to introduce it into the text. Rinck's MSS. have all Χριστόν, except one, which has Κύριον. Of the two readings, indeed, Κύριον and Θεόν, the former has most to countenance it; but there is reason to suspect that both proceeded (as Vater remarks) from those who stumbled at Χριστόν, not well knowing how the Israelites could be said to tempt Christ; and partly, it is probable, from those who wished to destroy this proof of the Divinity of Jesus Christ: for, as Bishop Bull (Defens. Fid. Nic. i. l. 15.) has shown, the words of the textus receptus prove both the pre-existence of Christ, and his Deity. Suffice it to say, in the words of Mr. Holden, "Him whom the Israelites tempted was God: but here it is said that they tempted Christ, who consequently is God." In fact, He whom they then tempted was the same Person whom they now tempted, their Redeemer, who was then with them as JEHOVAH, and often appeared to Moses in the form of an Angel. See Calvin. On the perfect propriety of Χριστόν in this instance, the reader is referred to Dr. Burton's Testimonies of the Ant-Nicene Fathers to the Divinity of Christ, and Abp. Magee on the Atonement, vol. ii. 675. Ἐπείρασαν signifies "tried the patience and long-suffering of God; namely, by murmuring at their condition, and God's dispensations;" under the influence of impatience, "which (as Calvin remarks) would anticipate the designs of God, and refuses to be governed by Him; but would bind Him to its own will and pleasure." Thus some of the Corinthians murmured at the restraints of the Gospel, and the spiritual authority exercised over them.

10. ὀλοθρευτοῦ] 'the destroying angel,' mentioned at Exod. xii. 23. Heb. xi. 28., and often in the O. T. under the name of "the angel of death." There is here a reference to Num. xiv. and other parts of the O. T. This verse seems meant to be, in some measure, exegetical of the former.

11. ταῦτα δὲ πάντα—ἡμῶν.] This is a repetition, though more perspicuously and forcibly expressed, of the admonition at v. 6.

—τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων.] It has been fully established, by the researches of the most eminent Commentators (as Grot., Crell., Lightf., Schoetg., Wolf, Pearce, Whitby, Ros., Pott, and Heydn.), that this does not mean, as is commonly supposed, "the ends of the world;" but that there is an allusion to the Jewish mode of computing the duration of the world, and distributing it into three Æons, or periods of 2000 years each: 1. the age before the Law; 2. that of the Mosaic Dispensation; 3. that of the Messiah. Thus the sense will be, "upon whom the end of the æons, or ages, i. e. the last æon or age, is come, namely," the age of the Messiah, the last dispensation of God to man.

12. An admonition is now subjoined, founded, by conclusion, on the examples which had been adduced of the consequences of abusing God's mercy and long-suffering, by any kind of disobedience to his will.

— ἑστάναι.] Namely, in sure acceptance with God. Πείσῃ, i. e. fall away from a state of grace, and relapse into sinful habits.

13. πειρασμός — ἀνθρώπινος.] This is (as Chrys., Theophyl., and Crell. observe) an anticipation of an objection, and removal of an excuse. q. d. These temptations are not, as they are sometimes alleged to be, above human strength; are no more than human nature is made liable to, and may be enabled to bear. Of this sense of ἀνθρώπινος, see examples in Recens. Synop. and an excellent Sermon on this text by Dr. South, vol. vi. 283, where, after observing that true faith is bottomed upon God's infinite wisdom and power, who alone can deliver man out of temptation, he recounts the principal temptations which threaten the souls of men; and then observes, that in opposition to these, we must consider, 1. that the strongest temptations to sin are no warrants to sin; and 2dly, that God delivers only those who do their utmost to deliver themselves. That God's deliverances are of two sorts: 1. those whereby God delivers immediately, and by himself; and, 2. by various providential means. See also an able Discourse of Bp. Atterbury, entitled, "Temptations not irresistible." In short, the promise in question may be supposed to import, that God will so direct and overrule every event, as well as communicate strength to bear even the most adverse ones,—that we shall never be tried or tempted above our power, if duly employed, to bear; but will, in his providence, or by his grace, make a way, by which we may, if we are not wanting to ourselves, escape unhurt from the temptation or trial. As a motive of encouragement, we know that God is "faithful to his promises, and may therefore be relied on to give his aid."

— τὴν ἑκβασιν] "the mode of deliverance," the Article being used (as Bp. Middleton remarks) in reference to the temptation from which escape is to be made.

14. The Apostle subjoins, as an inference from the above examples and warnings, a solemn admonition.

— φεύγετε ἀπὸ τῆς εἰδωλ.] i. e. "Avoid every approach to idolatry," such as was contracted in attending on idol feasts. The Apostle now returns to the subject treated of at C. viii.—namely, the eating of idol-meat; and shows how far it is lawful, and how far unlawful. He first shows that it is not lawful for them to eat at idol-feasts; since that is a kind of idolatry, 14—24: but that it is lawful for them to eat the flesh that had been so offered, when sold in the market and set on private tables, 25—33. In order to evince

the necessity for this abstinence from participation in heathen rites, he lays down the position, that every sacrificial feast is a kind of worship;—and consequently attendance at it is an association in the worship of the deity to whose honour the feast is instituted. This he illustrates by two examples: one taken from the Christian Lord's Supper, the other from the sacrifices of the Jews; from which he at v. 20 draws the conclusion, that Christians who were accustomed to be present at heathen sacrificial feasts were considered by other heathens as persons favourable to their idolatrous religion, in the same manner as those who were present at the sacred feasts of the Christians, thereby declared publicly that they belonged to the society of Christians.

15. ὡς φρονίμοις λέγω.] An expression meant to soften the harshness of what he may have to say. The Apostle addresses them as persons of wisdom and judgment, because they valued themselves on their superior knowledge, and in order that he might make his appeals to their reason and conscience more effectual. See Theodore.

16. τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλ.] This is best explained as put for τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας, ("the cup for, or over which, we give thanks to God,") and it is supposed to have been a popular phrase to denote the Eucharist, and adopted from what was called "the cup of blessing" at the Paschal feast. See Note on Matt. xxvi. 26. "Ὁ εὐλογοῦμεν is exegetical of the ποτ. εὐλ., and (according to the opinion of most of the more eminent Interpreters, ancient and modern, is put for καθ' ὃ εὐλογ. [i. e. εὐχαριστοῦμεν] τὸν Θεόν.

In οὐχὶ κοινωνία, &c. many Commentators think that the ἐστὶ signifies "is a symbol of." But it may more simply be taken in the usual sense, and, conjoined with κοινων., be regarded as a popular form of expression: thus the best Commentators, ancient and modern, adopting a metonymical mode of interpretation, suppose the passage to be equivalent to: οὐχὶ οἱ πίνοντες τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογ. κοινωνοὶ τοῦ αἵματος Χρ. εἰσι; οὐχὶ οἱ ἐσθιόντες τὸν ἄρτον τὸν εὐλογ. κοινωνοὶ τοῦ σώμ. Χ. εἰσι; and Chrys. paraphrases thus: "Those who participate in the Lord's Supper are κοινωνοὶ τοῦ αἵματος καὶ τοῦ σώματος Χριστοῦ, and thereby form one society of worshippers of Christ, and commemorators of his death and sacrifice for sin." The Accusatives ἄρτον and ποτήριον are regarded as put for ὁ ἄρτος ὃν κλώμεν, &c.; or else κατὰ ἐστὶν ἐνθάδε. The Apostle means to argue, that as Christians who participate in the Lord's Supper are supposed, by commemorating his expiatory death, to be in communion with Christ, and the Christian society; so, by a parity of reasoning, those who participate in heathen sacrificial feasts must thereby be supposed to be in communion with idols and idolaters, or at least to be favourably inclined to idolatry. Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. ix. 2. Vol. vi. 296, maintains, that as the religious ordinances of the heathens, here adverted to, were feasts upon sacrifice, so the nature of the expression used by St. Paul plainly denotes that he considered the Eucharist not (with the Socinians) as a mere commemoration of a dead benefactor, but as a feast upon sacrifice.

17. ὅτι εἰς ἄρτος—ἐσμέν.] This may be rendered: “for as there is one loaf, so we, the many, become one body;” i. e. “as the loaf is one, so we, the many (i. e. we all) are one body,” professing ourselves thereby to be all members of that body of which Christ is the head. Thus (as Hesych. shows) it is as if he had written: “Ὅσπερ εἰς ἄρτος ἐστίν, οὐ μετέχομεν, οὕτως ἐστὶν ἐν σῶμα (Eph. iv. 4.) ὃ ἡμεῖς οἱ πολλοὶ (for ἡμεῖς πάντες) ἐσμέν. The words may be thus paraphrased, with Bp. Warburton, ubi supra: “Our being partakers of one bread (or loaf) in the communion makes us, of many, [which we are by nature,] to become, by grace, one body in Christ:” the communion of the body and blood of Christ uniting the receivers into one body, by an equal distribution of one common benefit.” The loaves, or rather cakes, of Judæa were usually (especially at the Paschal feast) of a very large size; so that a considerable number may be supposed to partake in common of one of them.

18. βλέπετε τὸν Ἰσρ., &c.] Another example, to show the force which is inherent in a feast conjoined with religious observances; and that taken from the customs of the Israelites; who used, at festivals, to make an entertainment of the relics of the victims not only for their servants, but for strangers. (Pott.) By Ἰσρ. κατὰ σάρκα are here denoted the natural descendants of Israel as a nation,—Jews by birth, who worshipped God by sacrifices, and were as yet unconverted to the Christian religion. The sense of οὐχὶ οἱ ἐσθ., &c. is, “Are not those, who eat of the flesh of the victims, supposed to be participators in the sacrifice on the altar; and of the benefits of that sacrifice. The application is left to be supplied, which is: οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐσθίοντες τὰ εἰδωλόζυγα, κοινωνοὶ τῶν δαιμονίων γίνεσθε. Now that was supposed to bring them in communion with the Deity; especially as He was supposed to be personally, though invisibly, present. Indeed, that communion was implied by the benefits, whether real, or (as in the case of the heathens) imaginary, being confirmed by a pact or convention between the sacrificer and his God. See Warb. ubi supra.

19—22. The Apostle here shows that, even their own premises being conceded, the conclusion they draw would not follow; since the ground of censure consisted in this,—that the Pagans must necessarily suppose that Christians, who were present at their sacred feasts, worshipped the deities, to whose honour those feasts were instituted. (Krause.)

—τί οὖν φημι;—ἐστων.] The sense is: “What is my meaning?” That an idol is any thing, i. e. has any divinity; or, that the idol-meat is any thing? (i. e. differs from other meats.) No; this is not my meaning.

20. ἀλλ' ὅτι.] Render, “No; but my meaning is, that,” &c. This ellipsis of οὐχὶ after an interrogation is occasionally found, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. So Arrian (cited by Raphael): μή γὰρ τὸ ἦθος ἐξήλωκα αὐτοῦ; ἀλλὰ τὴν παιδίαν σώζων ἐρχομαι πρὸς αὐτήν. I add Liban. Or. 104. D. κειμένους ἐπεμβαίνει ἀνδρείδος; ἀλλ' ὁ πρῶτος κατενέγκεν. The words ἃ θύει—Θεῷ are (as Schleus. remarks) taken from Deut. xxxii. 17. By the δαίμων. are meant the falsely called deities of the heathens, elsewhere termed εἰδῶλα.

—οὐ θέλω δὲ ὑ., &c.] “Now I would not wish you,” &c. By κοιν. γίνεσθαι, &c. see Note supra, v. 18.

21. οὐ δύνασθε] q. d. “Ye cannot, consistently; it is not suitable, and therefore not lawful for you.” “The inconsistency (as Bp. Warburton shows) was this: that they who eat and drink in the feast on that sacrifice are partakers of the supposed benefits of the sacrifice, and consequently are parties to the federal rites which confirmed those benefits: so that the same man could not, consistently with himself, be partaker of both tables, the Lord's and that of devils. The inconsistency arising from the Pagan and Christian rites having one common nature, (a feast or sacrifice,) which, springing from contrary originals, destroy one another's effects.” Πίνειν ποτήριον and μετέχειν τραπέζης Κυρίου signify, per merismon, a partaking of the Lord's Supper. The expression πίνειν ποτήρ. alludes to the wine partly poured out and partly drunk at the sacrificial feasts: the μετέχ. τραπ., to the banquet set

22. The Apostle here intimates, that to attempt such an inconsistency must be highly displeasing to God. Παραζηλοῦν may signify either to excite any one to jealousy, or to anger. The former sense (which is chiefly adopted by the earlier Interpreters) has much to recommend it in the usage of the Sacred writers; but the latter, which is preferred by most of the recent Expositors, is more agreeable to what follows, μη ἰσχυρ. αὐτοῦ ἔσμεν, in which something is required to be supplied; q. d. "Are we stronger than He, [that we can venture to brave his wrath?] The two senses, however, merge into each other; the jealousy, and the anger of God being convertible terms; and accordingly united in a parallelism at Ps. lxxix. 5; where the noble exclamation (misunderstood by the Translators) ought to be thus rendered: "How long, O Lord, wilt thou be angry?—for ever? How long shall thy jealousy burn like fire?—for ever?" The repetition is required by the context, and admitted by the proprietas linguæ. For we have here an example of the Synthetic or Constructive parallelism, on which see Bp. Lowth de Sacr. P. Lect. xix., and Bp. Jebb, Sac. Lit., p. 27, of whom the latter well observes, that "in this kind of construction a part is sometimes to be supplied in the latter line, taken from the former, as Job xxvi. 5." This view is confirmed by Jerem. iv. 4. "Lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it." See also Ezek. xxxvi. 5. By "like fire" is meant "so as not to be satisfied." For at Prov. xxx. 16. fire is numbered among the "four things which say not it is enough." Of course, the jealousy here spoken of is to be understood ἀνθρωποπαθῶς; the relation of God to his chosen people being in Scripture often compared with that of the husband to the wife.

23. The Apostle now reverts back to the objections at vi. 12. He shows that some limitations must be assigned to their Christian liberty, and general expediency and mutual edification consulted, in the use even of things lawful. The μοι here is in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found, and is cancelled by Griesb., Krause, and Pott; but without reason: for the suspicion that it may have been introduced from vi. 12. seems ungrounded. I rather agree with Rinck, that the Apostle seems to have here, as often, repeated the same objection in the same words, as at vi. 12. It is surely, as Rinck says, less credible that the Eastern Recension should have repeated μοι from the parallel passage, than that the Western should have thrown it out, probably from mistaking its scope. "Vereor enim (he shrewdly adds) ne quis censor Alexandrinus verba πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν non pro objectione alterius acceperit; et demiratus, cur ad apostolum ipsum referrentur, pronomen damnaverit." Indeed, I see not how the μοι can well be dispensed with,—since in the latter, at least, of the two clauses it is emphatical, having reference to τὸν ἕτερον or τοὺς ἑτέρους, as was seen by Chrys. and Crellius,—and as, indeed, is plain from the next verse. At any rate, πάντα ἔξεστί μοι contains the objection of the Corinthians, and the words following its answer. Theodoret, indeed, to prevent the words from being referred to the Apostle, places a mark of interrogation after ἔξεστι. But this destroys the beautiful κοινωνίαις, so frequent with the Apostle, and found in the words immediately preceding; which, it may be observed, serves to confirm the μοι here.

24. μηδεὶς—ἐκαστος.] Many regard this as a general gnome, comparing that in 1 Cor. xiii.: "Charity seeketh not her own." That passage, however, is not of general application; nor assuredly is this. Both are to be restricted to the case in question, and the subject matter. Here there can only be reference to the use of idol meats, and other ἀδιάφορα. The passage is evidently meant to unfold a sentiment which was only implied in the preceding verse; and the sense is: "Let no man consider how his actions affect himself only, but also others;" meaning, that we must not consider our own gratification, when it injures the spiritual welfare of others.

Ἐκαστος is not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, as also some Versions and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. But there is no sufficient ground to cancel, though there may be to suspect the authenticity of the word.

25. μηδὲν ἀνακρ.] The best recent Commentators consider this as put for μηδὲν κρέας scil. κρέατος γένος ἀνακρ., "examining no kind of meat, to see [whether it be idol-meat or not]." And this interpretation is supported by the πᾶν following. See Note on Acts xvii. 11. Διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν may refer either to the conscience of others (i. e. lest by so doing you raise needless scruples), or your own; i. e. lest, on inquiry, you should learn that it is idol-meat, and your conscience be wounded, if you eat it: or, if you ascertain that it is not so, your conscience be unnecessarily disturbed.

26. τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου—αὐτῆς.] This refers only to the second interpretation of συνείδ., q. d. [You need none of you feel scruples in your own minds:] for as the earth and all its productions are the Lord's, so there is nothing naturally impure, but it is only so in the opinion of any one. Πλήρωμα here signifies whatever fills up the world, all God's creatures, animate or inanimate. So πλήρωμα θαλάσσης in Ps. xcvi. 11.

καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς. Εἰ δέ τις καλεῖ ὑμᾶς τῶν 27
 ἀπίστων, καὶ θέλετε πορεύεσθαι, πᾶν τὸ παρατιθέμενον ὑμῖν ἐσθίετε, μηδὲν ἀνακρίνοντας διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν. ^s Εὰν 28
 δέ τις ὑμῖν εἴπῃ· Τοῦτο εἰδωλόθυτόν ἐστι· μὴ ἐσθίετε, δι' ἐκεῖνον τὸν μηνύσαντα, καὶ τὴν συνείδησιν· [τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς.] συνείδησιν δὲ λέγω, 29 οὐχὶ τὴν ἐαυτοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὴν τοῦ ἑτέρου· ἵνατί γὰρ ἡ ἐλευθερία μου κρίνεται ὑπὸ ἄλλης συνειδήσεως; ^u εἰ [δὲ] ἐγὼ 30 χάριτι μετέχω, τί βλασφημοῦμαι ὑπὲρ οὗ ἐγὼ εὐχαριστῶ;

27. καλεῖ] for παρακαλεῖ ἐπὶ δειπνον.
 28. δι' ἐκεῖνον—συνείδησιν.] I have in Recens. Synop. shown that the sense is, “on account of, in deference to the scruples of the informant;” and that the words following, καὶ τὴν συνείδ., are exegetical of the foregoing, and put for διὰ τὴν συνείδ. αὐτοῦ, or τοῦ ἑτέρου; also that there is a Hendiadys for διὰ τὴν συνείδ. τοῦ μηνύσαντος scil. ἀσθενοῦς; the full sense being, “Eat not, out of respect to the conscientious scruples of your informant.”

The next clause, τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου—αὐτῆς, is absent from almost all the uncial MSS., and, in general, those of the Western recension, as also the Syr., Vulg., Cop., Sahid., Æth., Arm., and Italic Versions, and several Fathers; it is rejected by almost every Critic, and cancelled by Griesb., Tittm., Vat., and Pott. This, however, rests solely on internal evidence; the great objection to the clause being, that it seems superfluous.
 But to this it might be replied, How, then, came such a superfluous clause to be introduced into the great bulk of MSS.? Unless this could be satisfactorily accounted for, the question would have to be decided in favour of the clause. But here it is acutely remarked by Beng., Griesb., and Rinck: “Ad v. 26, vocabulo συνείδησιν utrinque prævio, librarius Orient. recidit.” This is, I think, satisfactory; and, considering that, if admitted, the clause cannot be made apposite without supposing the omission of a very long sentence to which it might be referred, I must decide against its authenticity. It is not, however, to be accounted an interpolation (as Dr.
 Burton terms it); for then surely no reason could be imagined why it should have been interpolated; but we may rather suppose it introduced by careless scribes from the Margin.

29. συνείδησιν—ἑτέρου.] This is a further explanation of the foregoing; q. d. I used the word συνείδησις simply; which, nevertheless, I wish to be understood not so much of your own conscience (for you who have knowledge are, I know, not troubled by the promiscuous use of food), but that of others who possess not that knowledge, and are easily disquieted. (Pott.)

—ἵνατί γὰρ ἡ ἐλευθερία, &c.] The sense of this clause has been not a little disputed. By many Expositors the words are regarded as not the words of the Apostle, but an objection of the Corinthians to his directions, in the sense: “Why is my liberty to be thus judged of or determined by other men’s consciences, or restrained out of regard to the conscience of others; q. d. I may have it, though I forbear to exercise it, on account of their scruples. Thus the words following are explained: “If I partake [of the meat] with thankfulness, why,” &c. But that these are the words of an objector is negated by the γὰρ; and surely to suppose them so without proof were uncritical. Besides, when St. Paul is introducing the words of an objector, he always, I believe, subjoins an answer: whereas, none such is found here; for to suppose it at v. 31 is utterly without foundation; and the supplementum in the place of it, introduced by some, is quite unauthorized.

 There is every reason, with the ancient and the most eminent modern Commentators, to suppose the words those of the Apostle, and intended as a caution (suggested by the use of συνείδησιν) to the following effect: “For why is my liberty to be so exercised as to be condemned by another’s conscience [while I do what he thinks wrong, but I believe to be right].” Thus v. 30 may be rendered: “If I, by [Divine] grace, be a partaker of this liberty, why should I so use it as to be evil spoken of for the use of that liberty for which I am thankful; i. e. why am I to occasion censure and give offence by the rash and imprudent use of that liberty, for the possession of which I am thankful?” So Theodoret: οὐχ ὁσίον (φησιν) ἄλλον λαβᾶσθαι διὰ τῆς ἐμῆς τελειότητος. This interpretation is strongly confirmed by the context; and there is nothing philologically unsound in it: for κρίνεσθαι may very well be taken for κατακρίνεσθαι, or βλασφημεῖσθαι.
 “Ἄλλης is for ἄλλοτρίου, which occurs in Rom.
 xv. 20. and Thucyd. i. 78. 1. Χάριτι may better be rendered “by grace,” than “with thankfullness,” which would require σύν χάριτι. The εἰ may, with Heydenr., be taken for εἰ καὶ, although (εἰ) as in 1 Cor. ix. 2. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. The above view of the sense is confirmed by the authority of Theodoret, Beza, Calvin, Pisc., Est., Bp. Hall, Wolf, Locke, Rosenm., Krause, Newc., and Heydenr. Of these, Calvin has ably proved such to be the sense, observing: “Admonet Paulus quantum incommodi sequatur, si promiscuè libertate nostra utamur, cum offensioe proximorum, quod scilicet eam damnabunt. Hoc pe-riculum nisi cavemus, vitiamus nostro abusu libertatem.”

I cannot omit to remark one peculiarity untouched on by all the Commentators, and yet closely connected with the true interpretation of the passage, and for want of seeing which many have missed the sense. I mean that idiomatical, and perhaps popular or provincial use of the Pre- sens tense, by which it denotes not what is, but what is to be, or ought to be. Something like this occurs in our own tongue, in the lax and little exact language of common life. And the use of the Present for the Future, common in Scripture, is nearly allied to it. The δὲ, omitted in many of the best MSS. and Versions, several Fathers, and the Ed. Princ., is rejected by most Editors, and cancelled by Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Vater, and Pott.; and rightly, I conceive. It arose, I suspect, from misapprehension of the true sense of the passage.

- 31 * Εἴτε οὖν ἐσθίετε, εἴτε πίνετε, εἴτε τὶ ποιεῖτε, πάντα εἰς ^{x Col. 3. 17.}

31. εἴτε οὖν ἐσθίετε—ποιεῖτε.] It has been well observed by Grot., that the scope of the admonition is, to bid them beware, lest by any act of theirs, under any circumstances, the glory of God (namely, by the spread and influence of the Gospel) should be injured. The sense comprehends a general under a particular admonition; and the οὖν is conclusive; what is said in this and the two following verses being the conclusion deduced from what has been brought forward in the three foregoing Chapters. Render: "Upon these principles, then, act;—in whatever ye eat and drink, and in all your conduct, keep an eye to the glory of God; and do not injure the cause of religion by throwing stumbling-blocks in the way either of unbelievers, to hinder them from embracing it, or of weak and scrupulous believers, to shake their attachment to it. With the sentiment the Commentators compare that of Socrates ap. Plato 35. C. ταύτην ἄρα αὐτῷ πρακτέον καὶ γυμναστέον, καὶ ἐξουστέον γε καὶ ποτέον, ἢ ἂν τῷ ἐνὶ δοκῇ τῷ ἐπιστάτῃ, καὶ ἐπαίοντι μᾶλλον ἢ ἑγὼ πασι τοῖς ἄλλοις.

32. ἀπρόσκοποι γίνεσθε.] The sense is: "Be not any occasion of stumbling, either to the Jews, or Greeks, or Christians;" "Beware lest the Jews have it to say, that you are not sincere worshippers of the true God; lest the Greeks say that you think there is no harm in idolatry; and lest Christians weak in the faith be induced to forsake their Christian profession." (Rosenm.)

33. πᾶσιν ἀρέσκω] i. e. I endeavour to please them (see Pearce). I consider what will approve itself to them; avoiding what will throw a stumbling-block in the way of their faith, defile and wound their conscience, lead them into sin, and imperil their souls. The πάντα must be taken with due limitation. (See Calvin.) The words seem meant to suggest the principle, which alone would make the rule of "pleasing all men" a safe one,—namely, by not consulting his own interest, but the spiritual good of his fellow Christians.

XI. 1. μιμηταὶ—Χριστοῦ.] This verse is closely connected with the last of the preceding Chapter, from which it ought not to have been separated. The words καὶ γὰρ Χριστοῦ are added, to preclude the idea of his holding himself up as a primary example.

The Apostle now proceeds to treat of various Ecclesiastical matters, and censures certain irregularities which had occurred in the assemblies for divine worship, or for religious purposes.

2. πάντα.] As they were chargeable with some inattention to his directions, the expression must be taken, with limitation, to mean, "upon the whole, ye have been observant of my ordinances." By the παραδόσεις are meant the directions, injunctions, and ordinances, whether written or oral, which the Apostle had left with them, or transmitted to them, for the regulation of the Church. Thus the word is often used in the sense precept, institution, &c. So 2 Thess. ii. 15. κρατεῖτε τὰς παραδόσεις, ἃς ἐδιδάχθητε, εἴτε διὰ λόγου, εἴτε δι' ἐπιστολῆς. "In matters (observes Rosenm.) respecting the preservation of order and decorum, there were many things which in themselves did not concern religion, but which it was advisable to have established on general rules, lest discordant customs or disputes should injure the Church, and from disputes schisms should arise."

3. Θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, &c.] This is closely connected with the caution given at x. 21, and the general admonition at x. 30. And the Apostle means now to draw their attention to certain cases in which they had abused their Christian liberty in things indifferent, and thereby occasioned great offence to the Jews, the Gentiles, and even Christians themselves. That they may be the better disposed to obey his present injunctions, he begins with commending their obedience aforetime. In θέλω ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι we have a form of serious exhortation to attend to what is going to be said, and implying that it is spoken authoritatively. So I find in an Epistle of a Roman Proconsul to the Milesian Magistrates, Joseph. Ant. xiv. 10. 21. βούλομαι οὖν ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, Ang. I wish you to mind this.

—ὅτι παντὸς ἀνδρὸς, &c.] The Apostle (doubtless in answer to some inquiry in the letter of the Corinthians) proceeds to treat of the behaviour of women who were moved by inspiration to speak in their assemblies. And first, as to whether the women ought to have their heads covered. Now this question the Apostle thought proper to treat as one closely connected both with the subjection of wives to their husbands, and with the honour of the husbands; which would be disgraced by any such impropriety in their demeanour, as might be imputed to levity, or such violation of custom, as would imply insubordination. See xiv. 34. 1 Tim. ii. 12. Now the custom was, for all married women, as well as single ones, to wear veils in public. Hence to depart from that custom (which was regarded as symbolical of subjection to her husband, and amongst the Jews was a token of modesty) would be to act out of character, and thus occasion disgrace to the husband, and scandal to the Church in the eyes of the heathens. This disorderly practice had, no doubt, first arisen among the Gentile converts; and has been, with great probability, ascribed to an imitation of the custom of the heathen priestesses, to prophesy, or otherwise discharge their religious functions, unveiled. In fact, it was the custom for all women to attend the sacred rites in the temples with heads uncovered. All this, however, was directly the reverse among the Jews and Jewish converts. Consequently, when the practice arose, it was (as deviating from what had been hitherto the custom) sure to be imputed by the heathens to immodest feeling, especially since, in the heathen temples, the women being (there alone) unveiled, led to that familiarity between the sexes, which often produced very improper results. Hence it is strictly forbidden. The Apostle, however, insists first on the argument as regards the dishonour done to the husband, by thus seemingly disavowing his authority. And he contrasts the case of covering the head during public worship, as regarded the women and the men respectively. Upon the whole, it must be borne in mind, that all that is here said has respect only to those times, places, and opinions, where the customs were directly the reverse of our own. And accordingly it is of no further importance to us than as furnishing us with a principle of universal application—namely, that Christians must not, in externals, rashly recede from decorum; that in things indifferent they should use the same manners and customs as their contemporaries and fellow-countrymen; so that whatever may be accounted as base must be abstained from, though it may in itself have nothing wrong, in order to avoid all suspicion or offence: and, above all, that in public assemblies for religious worship, persons of both sexes should assume such dress and demeanour, as are, according to the custom of the country, thought decorous and suitable to their respective relations to each other, and to the common Head of the Church; “so that all things may be done decently and in order.”

—Κεφαλὴ is here for κύριος, as in Achmet cited by Wolf. Dr. Burton regards the order of the sentence as inverted. It ought, he thinks, to be: κεφαλὴ γυναικός ὁ ἀνὴρ· κεφαλὴ τοῦ ἀνδρός ὁ Χριστός· κεφαλὴ τοῦ Χριστοῦ ὁ Θεός. Ought, however, is an inappropriate term. It might have been so written; but it is quite as correct, and more natural as it is. Had St. Paul indeed, written the sentence with rhetorical exactness, he would probably have employed the particles of comparison ὡς and οὕτως, and framed it thus: ὡς παντὸς ἀνδρός ἡ κεφαλὴ ὁ Χριστός ἐστι, οὕτως κεφαλὴ γυναικός ὁ ἀνὴρ· καὶ ὡς κεφαλὴ γυναικός ὁ ἀνὴρ, οὕτως Χριστοῦ ὁ Θεός. It is well observed by Dr. Burton, that κεφαλὴ γυναικός ὁ ἀνὴρ would have been enough for the argument: but that St. Paul adds the analogy of order and subordination in the church.

The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are generally agreed that Christ is here represented as subordinate to God, considered as Mediator; in which relation he received his kingdom from Him (see xv. 27. John xvii. 2. Heb. ii. 8.); though Mr. Holden is of opinion that “there is also a reference to Christ’s subordination to the Father, even in his nature, as deriving his essence and perfections by an eternal generation from the Father.” Yet how one can be engrafted on the other, it is not easy to see. And, after all, it may be best to suppose, with Theodoret, Ambrose, and Heydenr., that there is simply a reference to the human nature of Christ. So Ambrose refers the expression “ad assumptam carnem, quia Divinitas, utpote creatrix, caput est creature.”

4. On the sense of προφητεύειν in this and the next verse, Commentators are not agreed. Some, as T. Aquinas, Beza, Calvin, Paræus, and Dr. Burton, take it to signify to interpret Scripture under Divine inspiration. Others (as Est, Wells, and Bp. Pearce), to teach, and communicate by inspiration the doctrines of revelation. Since, however, the word is in the next verse applied to women (who it appears from xiv. 34. sq. were not permitted to teach and preach in public), most Commentators for the last century, to avoid this difficulty, have adopted the interpretation of Menoch. and Mede; to sing sacred hymns under the impulse of the Holy Spirit. But such a sense of the word is unauthorized. The first mentioned sense is liable to the same objection as the second; though, in fact, that would seem to hold equally against every possible one; for the Apostle says in the same Chapter, v. 14., that “it is a shame for a woman to speak in the Church.” Bp. Pearce, however, maintains that teaching is consistent with both the above passages; since here it is teaching by divine inspiration; (a circumstance quite extraordinary) which is not the case in those passages; for (continues he) “when St. Paul imposes silence on women in the Church, he means silence not in opposition to any gift of the Spirit; but to the desire, which those who had not the Spirit might have, of instructing others, or being themselves instructed in Christian knowledge.” I see not, however, why he should confine the sense to teaching. It may, I think, denote every other sort of speaking, under divine inspiration, to edification, exhortation, and instruction, in addition to that of praying just before mentioned; all equally fulfilling the prophecy of Joel ii. 28. applied by St. Paul, Acts ii. 17., to the times of the Gospel, namely, that their daughters should prophesy. This view is most confirmed by Heydenr., who understands προφ. here “de actu sacro singulari, ad singulos singulasque duntaxat charismatibus extraordinariis præditos et instructos pertinentes.”

10 ἀλλὰ γυνὴ διὰ τὸν ἄνδρα· διὰ τοῦτο ὀφείλει ἡ γυνὴ ἐξουσίαν

which is expressed in a passage of Plutarch cited by Krause. As to the sense of τὴν κεφαλὴν in this and the next verse, Commentators are divided in opinion, whether the word should be taken in its figurative sense, as just before, or in its natural one. One thing seems certain, that as there are two propositions affirmed, of the man, and of the woman, in the same terms, it would be harsh to interpret one in the natural, and the other in the figurative sense. Nay thus the import of κεφαλὴ might be thrice changed in the compass of three short verses; which would be very harsh. And as in the case of the woman the natural sense is plainly alluded to in the words following, and therefore cannot be excluded; so also it cannot well be excluded in the case of the man. And yet the context (at v. 3.) strongly supports the metaphorical sense; which, indeed, is the most important, and was probably most in the mind of the Apostle. So Heydenr. assigns as the sense: "Christus viri, vir mulieris dominus est; dominum ergo suum, Christum, vir, si caput operiat; dominum suum maritum, si retegat caput, dedecorat mulier." See also Calvin. In order to remove the above difficulty, it should seem best to suppose, with Heydenr., that there is intended a union of the two senses, per amphiboliam, either, as he supposes, by engrafting the metaphorical sense on the natural, or (which, I think, is preferable) by understanding the metaphorical sense to be the principal, and the natural the subordinate, or under sense, in the case of the woman. And thus there may also be supposed a double sense of καταισχύνει, per Dilogiam; denoting, in the former case, 1. to insult, or disparage, namely, by contravening the intentions of the Great Head of the Church, or disobeying her head: 2. to disgrace or dishonour, namely, by acting out of character, and violating common propriety. Now, in the case of the man, to carry the symbol of subjection (i. e. having the head covered up in public) was tantamount to acting like a woman, and consequently disgracing his dignity as a man. In the case of the woman, the Apostle (to represent the dishonour in the strongest point of view) says, it is one and the same thing (i. e. as bad) as if her head were shaven; for that is the force of the idiom καὶ κειράσθω, "let her even be shorn." i. e. she may as well be shorn; which, it has been fully shown, was regarded as the greatest possible disfigurement and disgrace to a woman; and was only adopted in extreme grief, or inflicted, as a mark of infamy, on adulteresses or harlots.

7—12. The scope of this portion is further to illustrate the impropriety of such an abandonment of the veil (or rather coif, i. e. head-covering), as being alike a dishonouring of the man, and a disgracing of the woman. For that notwithstanding the woman enjoys the same dignity in things pertaining to religion; yet nature herself requires that the superiority should be conceded to the man in domestic and civil affairs; and the Law of God, by its injunctions, confirms those dictates. See more in Heydenr. First, the Apostle, at v. 7., draws a contrast between the man and the woman, as to the use of head-covering in public. The man (he says) ought not to employ it, as being εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ, the image of God, as holding, in delegation from Him, the governance of all creatures (Gen. i. 26, 27. Ps. viii. 4—6. Wisd. ix. 2.), including woman. Man is thus considered as a type of God, just as a viceroy was called εἰκὼν τοῦ βασιλέως, a ray from his brightness, and shining (like the moon) with borrowed light. In this is implied the duty of consulting the glory of God, by not abandoning the place of dignity assigned by God. As to the woman, the contrary is meant to be asserted of her. And the sense, if expressed at full length, would be: γυνὴ [ὀφείλει κατακαλύπτεσθαι ὅτι] δόξα ἀνδρός ἐστίν. The woman is said to be δόξα ἀνδρός in the same sense as the man is δόξα Θεοῦ, and with the same additional meaning by implication; i. e. she was created out of him, and for his use, and therefore ought not only to be subject to him, but should so act as to contribute to his credit and honour. See 2 Cor. viii. 23. 1 Thess. ii. 20.

8, 9. Here are shown the grounds of this inferiority, 1. in respect of nature, by the woman having been formed from the man; (Gen. ii. 18—21.) 2. In posteriority of creation; 3. in purpose of creation, namely, to be a helpmeet for him. Now subserviency implies inferiority.

10. ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν—ἀγγέλους.] There are few passages that have so perplexed the Commentators as the present. The difficulty centres in the meaning of the terms ἐξουσίαν and ἀγγέλους, which, though in themselves plain, yet seem to yield, according to their ordinary import, no very apposite sense. The former is by almost all Commentators explained to mean a veil. But, from the context, and from its being at v. 15. interchanged with περιβόλαιον, it should rather seem to mean a kerchief (couvre-chef). So Theophyl. κάλυμμα. Ἐξουσία is plainly the name of the article of dress in question (of which mention is made in Ruth iii. 15. Is. iii. 23. Comp. v. 7.), and is best left untranslated,—i. e. Exousia. Of this use of the word (exceedingly ἔχειν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους. Πλὴν οὔτε 11

 ἀνὴρ χωρὶς γυναῖκος, οὔτε γυνὴ χωρὶς ἀνδρός, ἐν Κυρίῳ·
 ὥσπερ γάρ ἡ γυνὴ ἐκ τοῦ ἀνδρός, οὕτω καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ διὰ τῆς 12

rare) one example has been adduced by Olearius, from Callistratus, who uses the expression ἐξουσία τριχώματος to denote a kind of topping, composed of braids of hair. So also the Latin Imperium is used in the later writers. Why it was so called, has been not a little disputed. That the point should be involved in obscurity, is no wonder, considering that the ratio appellationis, in names of things is often a matter of the greatest uncertainty. The term evidently denotes power, or authority; but with what reference Expositors are not agreed. The ancient and most modern ones suppose it to have been so called, as being emblematical of the authority of the husband over the wife: while many recent Expositors have adopted the opinion of Salmasius and others, that it is so called, not with reference to the authority of the husband over the wife, but of the married woman over the maiden. Yet, notwithstanding that there is much to countenance this opinion, it must, I think, be abandoned; the other view being far more suitable to the context and the scope of the Apostle's argumentation. Thus the sense is, "For that reason (i. e. in acknowledgment of the superiority of the husband, whose delegated authority she holds) the wife ought to have on her head an Exousia." This article of dress consisted of a piece of cloth of a square form thrown over the head and tied under the chin: of which the most exact representation I have seen is in an ancient family picture in the possession of my excellent friend, Sir Frederic Fowke, Bart., of Lowesby Hall, Leicestershire.

It still remains, however, to consider the sense of the following words, διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους, which have been thought to involve even more difficulty than the former. Most Commentators, adopting the usual signification of ἄγγελος, take the sense to be, "through reverence of the Angels;" who, according to what we read in various parts of Scripture, were ministering spirits attendant on the house of God, and symbols of his presence. To others, indeed, this has appeared so little satisfactory, that they have sought out such a signification of ἄγγελος, as, however rare in itself, might yield a more suitable sense. Thus some of the recent Commentators understand it of spies, sent by the heathen to watch for and report any improprieties, that might occur at the Christian assemblies. A method of exposition liable to insuperable objections, stated by me in Recens. Synop. Other interpretations have been adopted, which it is not necessary to notice, and conjectures proposed of the most improbable kind. Were any conjecture allowable in a case where the MSS. all unite in the present reading, I should venture to propose ἐγγελωντας, meaning such persons of the heathens as being permitted to attend at the Christian places of worship, would be likely to notice and ridicule any such inpropriety as that in question.

The abbreviation for ωτας might easily be confounded with ous. This conjecture, however, has no support from MS. authority. And to suppose, with Dr. Owen and Abp. Newc. (what had also occurred to myself), that the words διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους are a marginal gloss, is running counter to all the MSS., and indeed violating probability itself; for the words would, in effect, be no gloss at all. They might rather be a marginal remark, introduced from the ancient Scholiasts. But the number and extreme antiquity of our MSS., which all unite in the present reading, forbid this notion. Upon the whole, as we are not authorized to deviate from the received reading,—so, I apprehend, it involves no such difficulty as to make us abandon the usual interpretation. As to what is urged by Pearce and Newc., that "a just and sufficient reason having been assigned before, we can scarcely suppose that a new and less cogent one would be subjoined"—this is surely being too hypercritical, not to say disrespectful to the sacred writer. And certainly there is no reason why the Apostle should not strengthen his injunction by the addition of a consideration which, though less powerful, yet was likely to have material force,—though it would be rather in the way of appeal to their feelings than of argument. As an illustration of which, it may be sufficient to notice another similar passage of the Apostle at 1 Tim. v. 21. Διαμαρτύρομαι σε ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν ἀγγέλων, ἵνα, &c. In the present instance, where propriety and decorum were more particularly concerned, none surely could be fitter objects by whom to make the appeal, than those "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister unto those who shall be heirs of salvation" (see iv. 9.), and who, by their peculiar characteristics of purity, humility (see Is. vi. 2.), and preservation of that subordination, in which we have reason to suppose the various orders are placed, would feel peculiarly grieved (from the interest which they take in the concerns of men, considered as the lower family of God, see iv. 9.), at any such violation of the customary forms of propriety and decorum as might bring scandal on the Christian name. On the subject of the presence of Angels in places of Divine worship, the following examples and illustrations (selected out of a great number adduced by the Commentators) are important in defending the usual interpretation. Ps. cxxxviii. 1. Sept. ἐναντίον ἀγγέλων ἰσλαῶ σοι. (Compare also v. 2.) Philo de amore reckons among the auditors of the hymns sung at the Temple τοὺς ἀγγέλους λειτουργοὺς, ἐφόρους κατὰ τὴν σοφῶν ἐμπειρίαν, θεασαμένους μὴ τι τῆς ᾠδῆς ἐκμελές (i. e. out of tune, inharmonious, incongruous). So also, in the most ancient Liturgies and the Const. Apost. viii. 4. angels are supposed to be present at Divine worship, especially on solemn occasions,—either as joining in the services, or as being witnesses to what takes place, and also, as we read in Origen C. Cels. L. v. p. 233, in order that they may convey the prayers of the just to the throne of God.

11, 12. The sense of these verses is well expressed by Bp. Middl. thus: Notwithstanding, (such is the ordinance of God) neither is any man brought into being without the intervention of a woman, nor any woman without that of a man; for as (v. 12.) the woman (i. e. women generally) is originally from the man, so the man (i. e. men generally) is brought into being by the intervention of the woman (i. e. women): these and all other things are ordained by the wisdom of God. It is well remarked by Calvin: "Hoc additum est, partim ad cohibendos viros, ne mulieribus insulcent: partim ad consolandas mulieres, ne ægre ferant subjectionem. Hac, inquit, lege sexus virilis eminet supra muliebrem, ut mutua benevolentia inter se conjuncti esse debeant: neque enim alter potest altero carere." The words τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ scil. ἐστὶ are meant for both sexes, denoting that all these matters were ordained to be as they are, by the providence of God.

13. The Apostle here adds another proof of the impropriety of the thing in question, deduced from the natural feelings of good sense and decorum. For ἡ φύσις is best explained of an "instinctive and natural perception of what is right or wrong;" though some interpret it of use and custom; which, indeed, merges into the foregoing, since use is second nature. On the custom of men's wearing their hair long, and the origin, and cause of it, see Recens. Synop. Δόξα αὐτῇ ἔ., "it is an ornament to her, and becomes her." Ἀντὶ περιβ., "as a sort of natural covering, or veil."

16. δοκεῖ φιλ. εἶναι.] This is well explained by Luth., Casaub., Grot., and Wets., "thinks good;" i. e. "is pleased, to be contentious or disputatious [on this matter]." After εἶναι there seems to be a clause omitted,—namely, φιλόνεικος ἔστω τοῦτο μόνον λέγομαι.

—ἡμεῖς τοιαύτην—Θεοῦ.] "Such a custom is neither tolerated by us Apostles, nor in use in the churches of God generally." "Thus (observes Abp. Newc.) to the contentious he speaks with authority; to others, with deference."

17—22. The Apostle now brings forward another exception to the general commendation which he had bestowed on them, as to attention to his directions and ordinances: and that was in the celebration of public worship, and especially the Lord's Supper. He complains of their great divisions and factions,—and, as consequent thereupon, their irregularities in the celebration of the Lord's Supper; which were so great as almost to utterly pervert the purpose of its institution: in order to remedy these, he reminds them of its first institution and purpose.

17. τοῦτο παρ. οὐκ ἐπ., &c.] The full sense is: "While I am giving you this direction, I cannot but take occasion to censure you, on the ground that," &c. In οὐκ ἐπ. there is an elegant meiosis, of which examples are adduced by Raphael and Wets. from Aristoph., Plato, and Xenoph. See more in my Note on Thucyd. v. 105. The εἰς denotes not purpose, but result: which was not edification, but the reverse.

18. συνερχομένων—ἐκκλησία.] Expositors are not agreed whether ἐκκλησία means ecclesiā, or cætu, i. e. assembly. The former interpretation is maintained by Grot., Est., Fuller, and Mede. But the arguments they urge (some of them inconclusive) only prove that the word may have that sense; not that it must. Nay, the comparison with v. 20. leads to the contrary conclusion. There is more reason to suppose (with Camer., Pisc., Wolf, and most of the recent Commentators,) that the expression means "cætu [sacro], conventu, assembly." A sense more suitable to the Apostle's argument; which is to warn them against dissensions in an assembly met together for the worship of God. Besides, συνερχ. ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ here cannot well differ in sense from the repetition of the same thing, συνερχ. εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ at v. 20, which can only be understood of the assembly. Not to say, that there is some reason to doubt (with Dr. Burton) whether the word ἐκκλησία had acquired the sense Church (as of a building) so early. And although it would seem, by the antithesis, to have that sense at v. 22, yet even there it may only denote an assembly meeting in a particular place, i. e. a sense midway between cætus and ecclesiā. The Article, indeed, here might seem to decide in favour of ecclesiā: but it is not found in many of the best MSS. and the Ed. Princ., and was thrown out by Matthæi, Griesb., Knapp, Tittm., Vat., and Lachm.,—very properly; for it was more likely to be inserted, by those who wished to make the sense ecclesiā certain, than cancelled by those who sought to confirm the sense assembly. That the later Fathers (especially the Latin ones) should have adopted the sense ecclesiā, would cause the Article to be inserted. And the circumstance of the Vulgate having in ecclesiā, would tend the same way; considering what an effect the Vulgate had on the Greek text of the MSS. of the Western and African families.

19. δεῖ γάρ, &c.] Here δεῖ (like the expression ἀνάγκη at Matt. xviii. 7. and xxiv. 6.) does not import absolute necessity, but, as Bp. Pearce explains, "such as arises from the tendency of several causes to effect it;" or, as Theophyl. says, "it expresses what must take place, while men continue to be men;" q. d. It cannot but be, from the passions of men, that divisions will occur. "In this observation (says Bp. Warburton, Works, vol. x. p. 113.) the Apostle hints at one condition of the moral world, inseparable, as it is at present constituted, from its existence,—a mixture of truth and falsehood, analogous to things salutary and noxious in the natural. But, in both worlds, the good produced by this mixture is so eminent as fully to support the trite observation, that evil was suffered for the sake of a greater good : a species of which is here mentioned, the manifestation of the approved." He then shows at large the nature and the end of that manifestation,—its benefits to the approved themselves, and to the Church at large; evincing that thus the evil of heresies, by the gracious disposition of things, is turned to good, and heresy, by a contrary exertion, made to produce faith and charity; and thus God's general providence, in permitting evil to exist for the sake of good, and in bringing good out of evil, is amply vindicated. "Iva is here by many of the best Commentators, ancient and modern, supposed to have, not the causal, but the eventual force; q. d. whence it will come to pass, that they who are approved will be made manifest. Yet this is somewhat straining the sense; and it is better to consider Iva as adverting to the purpose of God in permitting this mixture of truth and falsehood in the moral world.

20. Distinctius indicatur, quâ de causâ et quâ ratione non in melius, sed in deterius convenient. (Heydenr.) On the expression συνερχ. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, see Note at Act ii.

— Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον.] On the sense of this expression some difference of opinion exists. By modern Commentators it is usually supposed to denote the Eucharist. And so Theodoret. interprets. The ancient Commentators in general, and, of the modern ones, the Roman Catholic Expositors almost universally, and some eminent Protestant ones (as Grot., Michælis, Markl., and Bp. Middl.,) suppose it to mean "a (or 'the') Lord's-day meal;" understanding it of the Agapæ, or feasts of charity, which then preceded the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. And certainly δεῖπνον is frequently used in the sense convivium : and we find Tertullian (cited by Heydenr.) calling the Agapæ a convivium dominicum. Besides, as Heydenr. remarks, it is clear from the whole context that the Apostle in this passage had in mind the Agapæ; since the abuses he censures are such as do not well apply to the Eucharist, but rather to the Agapæ. And yet, as Heydenr. admits, it can as little be denied that the Apostle had in view, at the same time, the Eucharist, which was added to the Agapæ as a post-cœnum. For the abuses that prevailed at the Agapæ, are chiefly censured on the ground that they made Christians unfit for the worthy celebration of the holy Sacrament, and indeed involved contempt and desecration of that sacred rite; as the Apostle sets forth at large in a representation of the true nature and purpose of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It is therefore best to suppose (with Heydenr.) that the Apostle has reference to the whole of that Lord's-day solemnity, which was composed of both Agapæ and Eucharist, in imitation of Christ's last repast with his disciples, which consisted of both the ordinary supper, and, after it, the Lord's Supper, then instituted and celebrated for the first time. Hence it is highly probable that in the Apostolic age these Agapæ took place before the celebration of the Eucharist; though in after ages the reverse became customary, as we may suppose, from the abuse of the Agapæ.

21. The Apostle here contrasts what the Feast was with what it ought to be. Τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον προλαμβ. The ancient and almost all modern Commentators, take προλ. to mean "eateth before others." Mackn. and Dr. Burton, however, explain it, "takes his own supper before the Lord's Supper;" which might, as far as the words themselves go, be admitted, were it not for the ἐν τῷ φαγεῖν united with προλ. as if to qualify it. But that demands the first-mentioned sense; which also is far more agreeable to the context. Τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον denotes the supper which each one had brought as his own contribution to the common meal. Προλ., antecapit, has reference to the eagerness with which each one (of the richer sort, we may presume) snatched up the food he had brought, and filled himself therewith, before the poorer class could well touch it; which would cause them (who had brought little or nothing with them) to fare very scantily. And as this (which is to be understood of the Agapæ preceding the Lord's Supper) was not an ordinary meal, it was a violation of propriety as well as Christian charity so to act; for though each brought his own supper, yet when it had been thrown into the common stock, it ceased to be his own. Thus the plenty of some shamed the want of others; which occasioned heart-burnings, and so defeated the very end of the solemnity. It is rightly remarked by the ancient Commentators, that the ratio oppositi requires the word to be interpreted only of satiety in both drinking and eating. We need not suppose any drunkenness or gluttony. See Note on John ii. 10. The fault with which they are charged is sensuality and selfishness at a meal united with the Eucharistical feast; and formed on such principles of Christian charity and brotherly communion, as would be a proper introduction to it; and ought, therefore, in spirituality, to be assimilated to it.

22. τῆς ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ "the congregation assembled to worship God." Τοὺς μὴ ἔχοντας. Sub. φαγεῖν; i. e. those who had brought scanty provision, and who would thus be inhumanly put to shame; for, if they must struggle with want, they ought to be left to bear it at home, not shamed with it by rude comparison with the plenty of their richer brethren; for (as an heathen Poet feelingly observes), “Nil habet infelix pauperatus durius in se, Quam quod ridiculos homines facit!”

23. To further show how unseemly and censurable was the abuse in question, the Apostle lays before them the whole history of the institution of the Lord's Supper; that they might the better understand the purpose of Him who instituted it, and thus more clearly see, that by such conduct that purpose was entirely frustrated.

I have in Rec. Synop. shown that παρέλαβον, &c., cannot be understood of tradition derived from the other Apostles; nor be supposed to denote merely, that the Eucharist is not the invention of himself or any man, but a Divine ordinance; but that the context, and the parallel passages at 1 Cor. xv. 3. Gal. i. 11 & 12, and 2 Cor. xii. 1, admit no other sense but the following:—“The institution which I am now about to treat on, is what I myself received from the immediate and personal communication of the Lord himself,—and, according to the express injunction therein contained, is appointed for your observance. It is not, therefore, of my own devising, nor that of any man, but Divinely instituted, and consequently imperatively binding on all Christians.” Παρεδίδοτο is rendered by most recent Interpreters, “was delivered up.” But though that be the proper sense of the word, yet it is only with the adjunct εἰς τινα or τινας, or εἰς φυλακὴν: and as treachery was combined with the delivering up of Christ, and seems by the context to have been in the mind of the Apostle, there is no reason to abandon the common interpretation.

24. εὐχαριστήσας, &c.] On this, and especially on the ἐστί, (signifies) see Note on x. 16. Matt. xxvi. 26. Luke xxii. 19 & 20. The words λάβετε, φάγετε are omitted in several MSS. of the Western recension, the Italic, Copt., and Sahidic Versions, and some Fathers; and are cancelled by Griesb. and others. And indeed we may imagine more reasons why the words should have been inserted than ejected. But as the present account bears a strong similarity to that of St. Luke, in whom the words are not found, may we not suspect that the early critics omitted the words, to purposely make that correspondence the stronger? Besides the MSS. in question are all of the altered sort, and not many in number. That the words are contained in the Peschito Syriac, is a proof of their high antiquity. As to what some urge, that the Apostle did not intend a statement of the exact words of our Lord, it is a mere gratuitous assumption.

Κλόμενον signifies, by a significatio prægnans, “broken and given.” Εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν, “in commemoration of my sacrifice, and the benefits thereby imparted to all Christians.”

26. καταγγέλλετε.] There is here a sign. prægn., “ye proclaim and commemorate.” At ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἔλθῃ there seems an omission of a clause, q. d. “[And this you are to continue to do] till he come.”

27. ὥστε] “this being the case,” i. e. such being the intent of the Lord's Supper. The best Commentators are agreed that the ἦ is for καί. Ἀναζῶως must not be construed with Κυρίου (as some recent Commentators contend), but be taken absolutely, in the sense “in a manner unworthy of and unsuitable for the purposes for which this rite was instituted.”

—ἐνοχος ἔσται—Κυρίου.] The sense is, “he will be guilty with respect to the body,” i. e. guilty of profaning the symbols of the body and blood of Christ, and consequently will be amenable to the punishment due to such an irreverence, and abuse of the highest of the means of grace. So, in a kindred passage of James ii. 10., γέγονε πάντων (scil. νόμων) ἐνοχος.

28. δοκιμαζέτω.] Let him examine himself, whether he eats it as he ought to eat the representation of the Lord's body, and see whether he hath the dispositions which the participation in so holy a rite demands; whether he feels a suitable gratitude for the sacrifice it commemorates, and is firmly resolved to observe the injunctions of its Founder; otherwise it will be taken not only ineffectually, but ἀναξίως, and therefore guiltily.

— καὶ οὕτως] "and [having] thus [examined himself];" or, tum demum. So Chrys. τότε.

29. κρίμα] for κατὰ κρίμα, condemnation, and consequently punishment, by the infliction of some bodily infirmity, sickness, or death. "Ενοχος ἔσται τοῦ σώμ. &c.; to further explain which the words μὴ διακρίνων τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Κυρίου are added, which the best Commentators interpret, "not distinguishing between the sacramental elements and symbols of the Lord's body, from the food used at an ordinary meal;" thus making the eucharist no more edifying than a common meal, by neglecting to properly estimate the sacrifice of the Lord typified in this holy rite. Ernesti, in his Opusc. Theolog. p. 136, remarks, that this use of διακρ. is derived from the distinguishing of meats according to the Mosaic law, in which persons are said not to distinguish meats, who eat alike of meats pure and unclean, or forbidden, without distinction, regarding the profane and forbidden as lawful and permitted.

30. διὰ τοῦτο] i. e. because of their partaking of the sacrament unworthily. For almost all Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that the Apostle means to make his warning of future punishment for such abuse the more effectual, by adverting to what had already taken place, in the sickness and mortality which had been inflicted. Ἀσθενεῖς and ἄρρώστοι are nearly synonymous terms; but the latter the stronger, and exegetical of the former. As κοιμᾶσθαι is almost always used in the N. T. of the death of the righteous, we may presume that the Apostle has reference to those who, although they had been visited with the temporal punishment of death, yet had, before they died, made their peace with God, by sincere repentance. Or we may suppose (with Scott) that the Apostle charitably takes it for granted.

Notwithstanding the presumptuous attempts of certain foreign Commentators to explain away the reality of the judicial inflictions of temporal punishments, they must certainly be considered as proceeding from God, and as altogether supernatural (similar to others mentioned at Acts v. 5. 1 Cor. v. 5. 2 Cor. x. 8. xiii. 2. 1 John v. 16. James v. 14, 15. Rev. ii. 22.); being intended to preserve the purity of Christianity, and vindicate the authority of the Apostles. These were probably confined to the Apostolic age, or perhaps a short period after it.

31. εἰ γὰρ ἑαυτοὺς διεκ. &c.] These words are exegetical of the preceding; and the sense is,

"if we would so judge and discern ourselves," as before mentioned, viz. whether we receive the Lord's Supper worthily or not, "we should not be adjudged to suffer such punishments as those just adverted to."

32. κρινόμενοι δὲ — κατακριθῶμεν.] This seems added to console those who were suffering under sickness so inflicted, and at the same time to impart serious admonition as to the use to be made of this correction from the Lord. The full sense is: "But when we are so judged and visited by the Lord, we are not capriciously tormented, but disciplined, like scholars at the hands of a master, for our good ultimate reformation, in order that we may not be finally condemned with the impenitent and unbelieving world.

33. συνερχόμενοι εἰς τὸ φαγεῖν] scil. εἰς τὸ Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον, to the Agapa, and the Lord's Supper which followed it. Ἀλλήλ. ἐκδέχ. The older Commentators in general regard this as equivalent to μὴ προλαμβάνετε, wait for each other. But the recent ones are generally agreed that it signifies, "receive each other, with the hospitality of private guests," implying a cordial community between the rich and the poor. Either sense is agreeable to the context; but since the latter is founded on a signification found nowhere in the Scriptures, whereas the former perpetually occurs, there seems no good reason to desert the ancient and usual interpretation.

34. εἰ δέ τις πεινᾷ, &c.] The sense seems to be: "If any one be so hard to be satisfied, that he cannot sufficiently gratify his appetite at the Agapa, let him take an antepast at home; and not make a feast, meant for religious purposes, subservient to the mere gratification of sensual appetite; lest he should so act as to incur condemnation and punishment."

— τὰ λοιπὰ] i. e. "What else requires to be set in order;" viz. in this and other parts of Ecclesiastical discipline.

XII. This and the next two Chapters treat of the nature and use of the SPIRITUAL GIFTS. In Chap. xii. St. Paul shows that all those gifts were alike imparted by the Holy Ghost, and all were for the use of the Church; and therefore that no one should value himself upon his gift, so far as to contemn another who had an inferior one. In Chap. xiii. he recommends love as a higher perfection than all the gifts of the Holy Ghost put together, because all those gifts must cease here, but love will remain for ever in heaven. In Chap. xiv. he gives particular rules about the use of their gifts in public assemblies. (Bp. Pearce.)

1. περὶ τῶν πνευματικῶν.] There is here an ellipsis, on which the Commentators, ancient and modern, are not agreed; some supplying ἀνθρώπων, but most χαρισμάτων. Either is suitable to what follows; (for the Apostle proceeds to treat fully of both spiritual gifts, and spiritual persons). But the latter is perhaps more so, and is confirmed by xiv. 1. and Rom. i. 11, and therefore seems to deserve the preference. The Corinthians, it seems, had disputed concerning the relative excellence and dignity of these gifts, and had applied to the Apostle to decide the preference.

Οὐ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν is a formula (occurring also at x. 1.), requesting serious attention and implicit credit.

2. οἴδατε ὅτι—ἀπαγόμενοι.] These words are not, as Rosenm. imagines, parenthetical; but meant to suggest the necessity of being well informed on this important subject; since they have now no longer the excuse of being immersed in the ignorance of heathen idolatry. There seems to be an emphasis on ὅτι ἔθνη ἦτε; q. d. but are now converted to the worship of the one true God. Τὰ εἰδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα; i. e. mere stocks and stones; q. d. (as Newc. explains) “unable themselves to speak, much less to inspire you with the gift of tongues, or of prophesying.” Ἀπάγεσθαι is a strong term, denoting being hurried away by a force which cannot be resisted; and here it refers to the blind infatuation, by which the heathens were led away into idolatry and vice, like brute beasts that have no understanding. This is especially alluded to in ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε, “as ye might be led;” viz. by custom, example, or inclination, just as it might happen.

3. διό “for which purpose,”—namely, that ye may not be thus ignorant, but have the requisite information. Γνωρίζω, “I give you this rule, to enable you to distinguish concerning spiritual things and persons.” The first οὐδεὶς must be understood chiefly of the Jews, who pretended to the Holy Spirit, and yet denied the Messiahship of Jesus. The phrases λέγει ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦν, and εἰπεῖν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, are to be explained, with reference to each other, of utter rejection, and of cordial acceptance of the Gospel. To advert to their more primary sense, λέγειν ἀνάθεμά τινι signifies “to call any one abominable and fit to be put away from the earth.” On the term ἀνάθεμα, see Note on Rom. ix. 3. Εἰπεῖν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν imports “to acknowledge constantly, publicly, and sincerely the Messiahship of Jesus, and thoroughly embrace his religion.” Ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ must, from the context, mean “by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.”

The best comment on this passage may be found in a kindred one at 1 John iv. 1—3, where is mentioned a similar mode of distinguishing true from false Christians. St. Paul means, that no one can solemnly disavow all belief in the divine mission of Jesus, and have the gifts of the Holy Spirit, however he may pretend to them; and, on the other hand, that there is no one who makes that confession sincerely and heartily, but must have the Holy Spirit, in some degree or other.

4—12. The Apostle now proceeds to enumerate the various gifts of different Christian teachers; and that for the purpose of showing that no one of them is to be despised, nor any one to be extolled above the rest.

I have in Recens. Synop. evinced how utterly inadmissible is that mode of interpretation, which has been so prevalent among the Foreign Commentators for the last half century, by which (for the purpose of removing certain difficulties) the χαρίσματα here mentioned are supposed to have been merely natural endowments, improved by use and art. For, while I readily acknowledge the difficulty of determining the exact import, and defining the limits of the several χαρίσματα, yet I maintain there is not the less reason to suppose them to have been, more or less, supernatural. And, although some of them may seem to imply human agency, yet that is not inconsistent with there being also Supernatural gifts; since, in all such cases, the co-operation of the human ἐνεργούμενος with the Divine ἐνεργῶν is perfectly agreeable to the analogy of the Gospel system. The first occurring and most important term Πνεῦμα must be interpreted of the Holy Spirit, I mean, in the personal sense; since personal agency is as much implied here as in the next two clauses. It is manifest that there is here alike a distinct recognition of the three persons of the Godhead: for the terms prove not only the personality of the Holy Spirit, but his Deity; as Bp. Midd. evinces in the following able observations:—“The concluding clause ὁ ἐνεργῶν τὰ πάντα ἐν πάσι must be understood as applicable alike to the Three Persons; else the two preceding verses would be defective, and only the last complete. It is the same Spirit—who does what? and the same Lord—who does what? ὁ ἐνεργῶν τὰ πάντα ἐν πάσι. The personality of the Spirit is also clearly asserted v. 11, where it is said to distribute gifts according to his pleasure, which is the attribute not only of a Person, but of a Being, who is omnipotent. The Spirit is there said to work πάντα ταῦτα, plainly comprehending all the miraculous powers enumerated from vv. 7 to 11 inclusive, among which are χαρίσματα, spoken of in v. 4, and ἐνεργήματα in v. 6. It appears, therefore, that all the miraculous powers mentioned 4, 5, 6, are in v. 11, ascribed to the influence of the Spirit, who is thereby made solely to be the cause of effects above severally ascribed to the Spirit, to the Lord, and to God; and, consequently, that He is identified with the other two Persons.” So also Bp. Sanderson, in his third Sermon ad Clerum, p. 42. well observes, that “that variety of gifts which in v. 4. is said to proceed from the same Spirit, is said likewise in v. 5. to proceed from the same Lord; and in v. 6. to proceed from the same God: and this only the Holy Ghost. And again (continues he) at v. 11., the Apostle ascribes to this Spirit the collation and distribution of such gifts, according to the free power of his own will and pleasure; which free power belongs to none but God alone. Which yet ought not to be so understood of the Spirit, as if the Father and the Son had no fellowship in this business. For all the actions and operations of the Divine Persons are the joint works of the whole three Persons. And perhaps here the three words, Spirit, Lord, and God, are all used to intimate that these spiritual gifts proceed equally and undividedly from the whole three persons, as from one entire, indivisible, co-essential Agent. It is in condescension to human dullness that these great and common works of power are sometimes appropriated to some one Person of the Trinity, after a more special manner than to the rest."

—διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων.] This is put for διαφορὰ ἐστὶ χαρίσματα. The word χάρισμα signifies any thing which κεχάρισται, has been freely bestowed, at the pleasure of the donor. In the N. T. χάρισμα is confined to God's gifts, as ἐνέργημα is to God's operations. Thus it is suggested that these are not mere natural endowments of mind, or acquired talents, but powers and faculties conferred by Divine influence. With respect to the three terms here employed, (namely, χαρισμάτων, διακονιῶν, and ἐνεργημάτων), they are generally regarded as synonymous. And such they, in one sense, are; being, as Chrys. says, ὀνομάτων διαφορὰ μόνον, ἐπεὶ πράγματα τὰ αὐτὰ. The difference, I conceive, refers only to the various particular views under which the gifts, taken generally, may be considered. They were all χαρίσματα, as being freely bestowed (1 Cor. ii. 12.); they were ἐνεργήματα, inasmuch as the gifts, considered as powers or faculties, were worked in men, by the energy of God, through the Holy Ghost. They were likewise διακονίαι, as being connected, more or less, with offices, of various kinds, belonging to the persons who held the Gifts; Apostles, Prophets, Teachers, Workers of healing miraculously, Speakers with and Interpreters of tongues supernaturally. The term διακ. is used perhaps to intimate, that the possession of the Gifts, or faculties, carried with it an obligation on the possessors to diligently exert them in the discharge of their particular functions. These offices are adverted to at vv. 7—11., and especially at vv. 28—31. The term διακονίαι, however, is chiefly applicable to those χαρίσματα, like the ἀντιλήψεις and κυβερνήσεις, where the office seems more prominent than the spiritual aid by which it was properly discharged; especially as the term διάκονοι was very early applied to those who discharged such office. See Note on v. 30.

7. ἐκάστω—συμφέρον.] The sense is, "But to each [in particular] is given the manifestation of the Spirit [vouchsafed to him], and that for usefulness (namely, to the Church at large) [not for ostentation or lucre's sake,] to himself." Φανέρωσις τοῦ Πνεύματος. is for φαν. χαρίσματός τινος τοῦ Πνεύματος. So Heydenr. well explains it "illud quo vis divina conspicua est; dona quibus impetendis manifestatur Spiritus Divini virtus et gratia." "Thus the χάρισμα was (as Bp. Sanderson observes) a manifestation of the Spirit, just as every other sensible effect is a manifestation of its proper cause."

8. The Apostle now proceeds to notice the different gifts separately. And here we enter upon a subject of the most difficult nature, and on which a wide difference of opinion exists. That it should be a most arduous task to settle the exact nature, and mark the discrimination of these χαρίσματα, is not surprising, since, as Paræus remarks, "we have lost the things which those terms were intended to denote." On this subject the earlier modern Commentators (with the exception of Grot. and Lightf.) are but indifferent guides. In later times more has been accomplished by Vitr., Whit., Locke, Doddr., and especially by Lord Barrington, Bp. Horsley, Dr. Hales, Mr. Towns., Prof. Heydenr., and myself in Rec. Syn.: but still the subject is involved in no little obscurity. The great error which runs through most of the disquisitions of the above learned persons is, that of supposing far more of regularity of plan in what the Apostle says, here and at vv. 28—31., than what, I suspect, he intended. Thus when Mr. Townsend lays before his readers a Table composed of three Lists of the χαρίσματα, and marks their correspondence, he is obliged to rest much on guess and hypothesis; and to resort to very bold suppositions. Here, at least, vv. 9, 10, 11, the Apostle, I apprehend, did not intend any regular list of the χαρίσματα; but only meant to adduce, by way of example, instances of diversity in those gifts, even where there seemed such a coincidence as might mark them out as belonging to the same class. It is, I should think, equally certain, that no regular list was intended at v. 29, 30. At v. 28. there is indeed more appearance of a regular list; yet even that, it seems, was not meant to be complete, since there is no mention made of the διακρίσεις πνευμάτων and the ἐρμηνεῖα γλωσσῶν, adverted to at v. 10. Such being the case, it is necessary to proceed with the greatest caution, and to, as little as possible, take for granted what cannot be proved. As to the passage before us, vv. 9, 10, 11, it should seem that the Gifts are, with the exception of πίστις (which is placed alone, as being the fundamental principle on which all the others were exercised) distributed into PAIRS. And to advert to the first of these, λόγος σοφίας and λόγος γνώσεως, the distinction, which is implied, has been variously explained. The ancient Commentators, in general, supposed the former to denote the faculty of speaking and teaching; the latter the mere knowledge of the Gospel, without the faculty of communicating that knowledge to others. But thus the word λόγος would, in the latter case, be useless. Not to say, that it is only those higher endowments, and those by which Christians could be useful to the Church, that are here meant. I prefer the explanation of Heydenr., who takes λόγος σοφίας of the gift of "teaching and preaching, in a popular way, the fundamental truths of Christianity;" and λόγος γνώσεως "de facultate, ingeniosioribus res altioris indaginis, doctrinas sublimiores atque arcanas, sermone poliori coloribusque rhetoricis ornato tradendi." And there is something to countenance this in the use of γνώσις by the earlier Fathers. But how uncertain this interpretation is, may be imagined from the fact, that another class of Expositors entirely reverse the sense; understanding the γνώσις of elementary and fundamental, and the σοφίας, of more recondite doctrines and instructions. To me it appears that λόγος σοφίας and λόγος γνώσεως are simply meant to point at the qualities requisite for the discharge of those functions connected with the Spiritual gifts corresponding to the terms in question; and, of course, must refer alone to the preaching and teaching, as carried on by the 'Απόστολοι, προφήται, and διδασκαλοι. Thus the λόγος σοφίας (especially as it comes first) seems to have reference to the Apostles; the λόγος γνώσεως, to the Prophets and Teachers. Or the former may refer to the Propheta; the latter, to the didascali. The above view is supported by the opinion of Lord Barrington, Bp. Horsley, Dr. Hales, and Mr. Townsend.

Πίστις may be taken as above suggested. Or if we suppose it to refer to the Gifts which involved the exercise of supernatural powers, it may (as Chrys. and Heydenr. suppose) denote the fiducia, or confident reliance on Divine aid, which was always indispensable to the working of miracles, even by the Apostles. See Matt. xvii. 20. xxi. 21. Luke xvii. 5, 6. Mark iv. 40. and Notes. Thus the χαρίσματα and the ἐνεργήματα may, with Heydenr., be regarded as the effects of this faith. Between the χαρίσματα iaμ. and the ἐνεργ. δυνάμεων it has been thought difficult to mark the distinction; the gift of miraculous healing (which must here be meant) being itself an ἐνεργήμα δυνάμεως. To avoid this, some, as Mackn. and Heydenr., explain ἐνεργ. of an inworking of miracles, i. e. enabling others to work them. An interpretation, however, philologically weak, and destitute of all foundation either in reason, or analogy, or support from the records of Ecclesiastical history. We may rather suppose, that the Apostle has reference to miraculous powers in general. The terms are, indeed, (what were allowable, from their forming a pair), transposed, as we find from v. 28. and v. 29., in both which places, ἐνεργ. δυν. is placed before the χαρ. iaμ., and that as proceeding from genus to species. The προφητεία has no reference to the προφήται of v. 28, 29., but denoted the gift of preaching the truths of the Gospel by inspiration. With this is classed as a cognate gift the διακρίσεις πνευμάτων, the faculty mostly, though not always (as Mr. Towns. imagines), imparted to the Prophets,—namely, that of determining (as Chrys. and other ancient Commentators suppose), on the pretensions to the gift of prophecy and teaching, and indeed of spiritual gifts in general; and sometimes (as we find from xiv. 29.), on the mode of exercising even acknowledged gifts. The last mentioned pair of gifts (so placed, doubtless, to intimate the inferior estimation in which the Apostle held them) are the faculty of speaking in various sorts of languages never previously learnt (on which see Ernesti's Dissert. on the gift of tongues in his Opusc. Theolog. pp. 457—476.), and the interpretation (doubtless in the vernacular tongue), of what was uttered by the persons endowed with the gift of tongues. These two gifts did not necessarily go together (the latter with the former); though (as we may infer from xiv. 5, 15.), they sometimes did.

11. πάντα δὲ ταῦτα—βούλεται.] Render: "Now that one and the same Spirit inworketh all these [diversities of gifts], dividing and distributing to each [of the persons favoured with them] separately his own gift, as he pleaseth." At ἰδίᾳ sub. μερίδι. It is very rarely found without some corresponding term; but an example occurs in Thucyd. ii. 13.

12. καθάπερ γὰρ, &c.] Under a metaphor derived from the mutual dependence of the various parts of the human body, the Apostle (as at Rom. xii. 4, 5.) inculcates the lesson, that all the members of the Christian body (i. e. all true Christians) should so act as to form one united whole, each mutually contributing to the common benefit of the Church. Render: "For as the body is but one, and [yet] hath many members, and all the members of this one body, many as they are, are but one body, so also is Christ (i. e. his Church) but one." Τοῦ ἐνός is not found in some MSS. and Versions, and is considered as an interpolation by Mill and Beng. It has, indeed, the appearance of coming from the margin; but its omission may have arisen from carelessness, it not seeming necessary to the sense.

13. καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἐνὶ Πνεύματι—ἐποτίσθημεν.] Most recent foreign Commentators understand this of the communication of the χαρίσματα. And to this the ἐποτίσθημεν is not unsuitable; while the sense arising is specious. But this method requires ἐν Πνεύμα to be read in the place of εἰς ἐν Πν., and then yields a sense not so natural as that arising from the interpretation adopted by almost all Commentators, ancient and modern, who here suppose an allusion to the two Sacraments. "By being baptized (say they) we are all made members of the body of Christ, and united one to another under Him, our head; and thus, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, we are all one in Christ, who, by baptism, have been admitted into his Church; and this union of ours one with another is testified and declared by our communion at the Lord's table, which is, here called a drinking into one spirit; referring to the sacramental cup."

14. In this and the next two verses the parallel is further developed and illustrated. Of καὶ γὰρ τὸ σῶμα—πολλά the sense is, "It is not one member, however important, which constitutes the body, but all together:" an argument often employed by orators to excite large bodies of men to unanimity and concord. The Apostle had probably in mind the well-known apologue in Æsop, which was probably derived (together with most of his others) from the East, that ever fertile source of fable.

15. οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο—σώματος] "it does not on this account form no part of the body." Such is the sense, according to the punctuation which I have adopted, with several eminent Editors and Translators, and as is required by the proprietas linguæ. Those who adopt the interrogation are obliged to sink the second οὐ by calling in the rule, that two negatives make an affirmative; which principle will not apply in a construction like the present.

18. νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] The sense is: "But as they are now constituted, God hath placed the members each of them in the body in that situation, and for that office which it hath pleased him."

19. εἰ δὲ ἦν, &c.] "But if all the members were one member, where would be the body?" q. d. there would be no body.

21. οὐ δύναται] i. e. cannot, consistently with fitness and propriety, and therefore ought not.

22. ἀσθενέστερα.] It is not agreed whether this refers to the eyes, or the brains, or the lungs and intestines. But there is no reason why it should not have reference to all such parts as are at once delicate, and yet indispensable to the functions of the whole body.

23. ἀτιμότερα.] By this is meant the lower parts of the trunk of the body, especially (as Abp. Newc. explains) "the ducts by which nature throws off what is redundant." Περισσ. τιμ. signifies, as Grot. shows, the more studiously clothing and cherishing them with raiment. The words καὶ τὰ ἀσχήμονα, &c. form a sort of parallelism on the former, to introduce the paronomasia between ἀσχ. and εὐσχ. This sense of εὐσχ. is illustrated by Krause from Diad. Sic. p. 54. τὰ πρόβατα τοῖς ἐρίοις τὴν σκέπην ἄμα καὶ εὐσχημοσύνην περιποιεῖ.

24. οὐ χρεῖαν ἔχει.] Sub. ἵνα αὐτοῖς τιμὴν περισσ. περιτίθεμεν. By the εὐσχήμονα, St. Paul adverts to the face, hands, &c.

By συνέκραςε is meant "hath attempered and adjusted the respective advantages of the various members, so as to form a just compound of the whole."

25. σχίσμα] "division, separation," by which the members would want mutual aid.

26. δοξάζεται.] This must be interpreted agreeably to the antithetical πάσχει, and the synonymous συγχαίρει; and the sense is, "receives attention," is made much of.

27. The Apostle now applies this apt similitude to the case he intended to illustrate; q. d. "what I have been saying holds good of you."

28. ἔθετο] "constituted;" a sense sometimes occurring in the Classical writers. On the various names of offices in this verse, see Notes supra, vv. 8, 9, 10. It is observable that here (not as there) the Gifts are arranged in the order of their dignity. Δυνάμεις is equivalent to the ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων at v. 10, meaning the persons having those powers. Ἀντιλήψεις and κυβερνήσεις are terms which are not found either at v. 8, 9, 10, or at vv. 29, 30, but are here inserted, the present being more in the form of a regular list. As to ἀντιλήψεις, the most probable of the many opinions as to the office which it designates is, that it is equivalent to the διάκονοι, or persons who attended to the sick, poor, and destitute, and probably had other duties not always the same. The term κυβερνήσεις (which is also exceedingly disputed) seems to be best explained, by the ancient Commentators, to mean those who had the government of a Church, and the management of its affairs (as an Ecclesiastical body); an office formed on that of the Ruler of the Synagogue among the Jews, and which afterwards merged in the office of the Presbyter, the προεστώτες πρεσβύτεροι of 1 Tim. v. 17. The above view is confirmed by what is said at a similar passage of Rom. xii. 7, 8, where, after the same comparison as occurs at vv. 12—17, the Apostle argues from thence as to the use of the various χαρίσματα, to which he then refers, but in a general way: εἴτε ὁ παρακαλῶν, ἐν τῇ παρακλήσει· ὁ μεταδίδους, ἐν ἀπλότητι· ὁ προϊστάμενος, ἐν σπουδῇ· ὁ ἐλεῶν, ἐν ἰλαρότητι, where προφ. and διακονία are, I think, meant to refer to the grand Division of the gifts (by which are to be understood the gifts of all those under the rank of Apostles) into preaching, or teaching and ministration, διακονία, or οικονομία. Then, in what follows, he means to refer to the distribution of the former into preaching and instructing (answering to the προφητεία and the διδασκαλία here) for the ὁ παρακαλῶν. The μεταδίδους and the ὁ ἐλεῶν seem to correspond to the ἀντιλήψεις here; and the ὁ προϊστάμενος, to the κυβερνήσεις here. (See the Notes on that passage.)

Finally, the γένη γλωσσῶν must, from a comparison of v. 10. and v. 30., be supposed to include the ἐρμηνεία γλωσσῶν. Nay, some Versions and Fathers subjoin ἐρμηνεία γλωσσῶν, which Heydenr. positively maintains to have been lost in the Greek Text, by reason of the repetition of the word γλωσσῶν. But it is far more probable that the words should have been supplied (as seeming necessary to complete the list) in the Versions and Fathers, than that they should have been lost, from such a cause, in all the MSS.

31. ζηλοῦτε δὲ—κρείττονα.] Some Commentators, ancient and modern, take ζηλ. as in the Indicative, and regard the sentence as interrogative. But the difficulty which has induced them to abandon the common interpretation (by which ζηλ. is taken as in the Imperative), will entirely vanish on recollecting that ζηλ. is a word of middle signification. Now if the term be taken in a good sense (of which see examples in Rec. Syn.), the Apostle will not, as has been thought, "thus unsay what he has before been saying." The sense intended by the Apostle seems to be as follows: "Have all the higher gifts? No; but all (you say) earnestly desire them. Be it so. Seek after them by prayer unto God, ye that have the lesser." The Imperative has often this sense of per me licet. The καὶ following is for καὶ τοι, sed tamen. Δείκνυμι, "I am showing," i. e. going to show you. Ὁδόν, "a method of attaining what you aim at," namely, by the cultivation of love, or universal benevolence. Καθ' ὑπερβολὴν is an adverbial phrase, here used for an adjective, as often in the Classical writers.

XIII. 1. This verse ought not to have been separated from the last verse of the preceding Chapter; since it is closely connected with it. In order to fully expose the error of the Corinthians, in overvaluing and priding themselves on Spiritual gifts, without due regard to ordinary usefulness, as regarded their Christian brethren, the Apostle now declares the most illustrious of them to be as nothing compared with Love; meaning to show by the strongest instances imaginable, that nothing could prove a man a true believer, who was destitute of this. The Apostle speaks in the first person per κοινῶσιν, to avoid giving offence.

— ἐὰν ταῖς γλώσσαις, &c.] q. d. “if we could speak the language of every nation, nay, even that of angels.” It is not necessary to debate (as do the old Commentators) whether the Angels have a language or not. It was sufficient for the Apostle to suppose this; especially as that was the opinion of his countrymen; some of whom even thought that certain of their Rabbins had attained a knowledge of it, which they supposed was the key to all mysteries.

— ἀγάπην] meaning “Love to God, and to man for God’s sake.” Γέγονα is best rendered by Wakef., “I am.” This idiom of the Pret. mid. for the Present is frequent. By the χαλκός is meant some brazen wind instrument: and the epithet ἢ ἠὲ suggests the idea of a trumpet; especially as as is so used in the Latin. But probably St. Paul meant another brazen wind instrument, like our horn, mentioned in Virg. Æn. iii. 140. On the κύμβαλον see Lampe and Ellis de Cymbalis, from which it appears that this was a hollow brazen plate, which, being struck against another such plate, emitted a very acute and sonorous clangor: and therefore the term should be rendered, not tinkling (which would only suit the κόδων or tintinnabulum) but clangorous.

The true key to the interpretation of this verse is to keep in view, that the Apostle is here adverting to the highest of those spiritual gifts before mentioned, which the persons whom he was addressing could aim at,—namely, that of the προφήται, or the διδάσκαλοι of the highest class—those possessed of the λόγος σοφίας, or the λόγος γνώσεως. The πίστις is the same as that at xii. 9. (where see Note), but is supposed to be of the most exalted kind. ὥστε ὅρη μεθ. is an hyperbolic expression, founded on that of our Lord at Matt. xxi. 21, 22, and elsewhere. Οὐδὲν εἰμι, “I am nobody,” i. e. I am entitled to no distinction on that account.

3. ψωμίσω πάντα τὰ ὑπάρχ. μ.] In order to perceive the full import of this passage, it is necessary to advert to the scope of the Apostle in the whole Chapter. He is here exerting himself to lessen the too great anxiety of the generality of the Corinthian Christians for the χαρίσματα above mentioned; and, in order to do this the more effectually, he brings forward a certain principle, which, he says, is of more value than them all, namely, ἀγάπη; by which, I conceive, he means real and heartfelt love towards God, and towards man. Not love towards God only, as shown in external forms and outward professions of zeal; nay, even laying down one’s life for the Gospel’s sake; but internal and heartfelt love towards God, as separate from all motives of vanity, self-interest, obstinacy, or fanaticism; also love to man, both for the sake of man, and also in order to please God; not in externals only, or for our own sake, to gratify our own vanity and to gain popularity, but internally and heartily. This opinion of the love of God being here intended to be united with that of man, is supported by the view taken by Doddr. and Scott, the former of whom defines this ἀγάπη to be “such a love to the whole church and the whole world as arises from principles of true piety, and ultimately centres in God.” And Mr. Scott, speaking of what the Apostle primarily intended, evidently perceived that something further was meant by him; and he gives a very edifying Note on the subject.

In the words ἐὰν ψωμίσω, &c., and ἐὰν παραδῶ, &c., the Apostle appears to have intended to give an example of two of the most remarkable of those external marks of religion, in its principal parts, love to God and to man; and thus to show that if even these be of no worth, it must à fortiori be true of others. Ψωμίζειν signifies properly to break into bits (ψωμοί), and, by implication, to distribute them, to feed any one therewith; in which sense it often occurs in the O. T. and the later Classical writers. Here, however, there is allusion to the mode in which such exalted charity was then usually evinced,—namely, by dealing out food in ψώμια at the gate of the house. So Is. lviii. 7. “Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry?” There may be an allusion to the ἀντιλήψεις or the ὁ ἐλεῶν of Rom. xii.

The next words ἐὰν παραδῶ—καθήσωμαι should be rendered, “though I deliver up or yield,” &c. So the Syr. and Vulgate Versions, and Doddr. There is, I conceive, an allusion to what is said at Dan. iii. 28. of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, that they “yielded up their bodies to be burned, that they might not serve any god except their own God.” Now this example belongs to the other branch of the ἀγάπη, namely, love to God; and this, as before, is represented in its most striking point of view,—by supposing the very laying down one’s life, by martyrdom, in the most excruciating tortures, to bear testimony to the truth of our religion. That this may be done from fanaticism, obstinacy, vain-glory, and such other carnal and selfish motives, the records of history amply prove. Of this a striking example is found in a passage of the — οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦμαι] i. e. I am nothing the nearer to salvation; the thing being done for my own sake, not God's.

4. Having said thus much in recommendation of this divine principle of Love (finely termed by Milton, "the golden key, which opens the palace of eternity"), the Apostle proceeds to describe it; and that (remarks Scott) as a man would gold, by showing its effects and abstract properties, and the marks by which it may be distinguished." To make what he says the more impressive, he personifies the principle, by using language suited to a person endued with it. And although these characteristics are mostly such as appertain to that virtue as it regards men; yet they are all of such a nature as originate in, and are inseparable from, the ἀγάπη as it regards God.

— μακροθυμεῖ, χρηστεύεται.] Μακροθ. denotes lenity, as opposed to passion and revenge: and χρηστ. gentleness, as opposed to severity and misanthropy. Οὐ ζηλοῖ seems meant to check the envy with which the possessors of the higher χαρίσματα were viewed by those who had the lesser, or none at all. On the sense of περπερεύεται Commentators are not agreed. Most ancient and many modern ones (especially the more recent) explain it (by a reference to its derivation from the old Latin perperus and the Æolic πέρπερος), "to act precipitately and rashly;" a signification confirmed and illustrated by Wets. with numerous examples from the Classical writers, and which has much to recommend it. See Recens. Synop. It is, however, scarcely agreeable to the context. Hence we may rather adopt the sense assigned by some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators (as Heins., Wolf., Fessel, Fabric., Valck., Rosenm., and Ernesti), "vaunteth not itself," for ἀλαζονεύεται a signification of the word found in Polyb., Marc. Anton., and Cicero. Heydenr., however, thinks the Apostle means to censure the vain loquacity of the Corinthians, in the use of the gift of tongues for ostentation only. And he renders: "Non blatus amor, vana verba non facit, non est vaniloquus." At all events, there can be little doubt but that περπερεύεται denotes pride as shown in words. Accordingly φυσιοῦται may refer to the carriage and bearing, to denote pride and haughtiness on account of certain external advantages.

5. οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ.] On the sense of this term, the Expositions are very various and unsatisfactory. The earlier moderns take the sense to be, "non agit inverecundè," "doth not behave itself unseemly;" while most of the recent Commentators explain it (with Grot.)

"avoids whatever in the opinion of men may be base or unseemly." The former interpretation is the simpler and more natural, and may very well include the latter. The word is properly a dramatic one, and was used of an actor who did not support the σχῆμα or deportment suitable to his assumed character. The meaning then seems to be, "avoids all conduct which may be indecorous, or, in common estimation, unbecoming the professors of pure religion." This, I apprehend, was in the mind of St. Clement, I Epistle to the Corinthians, v. 7. seqq., where, in a passage founded on this of St. Paul, he says: οὐδὲν βάνανσον, base (as connected with selfishness), ἐν ἀγάπῃ. When Clement adds οὐδὲν ὑπερφανον, he had, no doubt, in mind the οὐ φυσιοῦται of the present passage. The Apostle seems in ἀρχ. to allude both to the incestuous person, and to those who attended at the idol-feasts.

— οὐ ζητεῖ τὰ ἐαυτῆς.] Here ἐαυτῆς is emphatic, implying an ellipsis of μόνου: and the sense seems to be, "does not seek her own interest exclusively, without caring for the good of others;" "is not selfish."

— οὐ παροξύνεται.] Some limitation may seem necessary, and with that view our Common Version inserts easily. Doddr. and Newc., however, rather suppose some stronger sense intended than being provoked; namely, is "not hurried into high irritation, exasperation, or outrageous anger?" But as there is evidently a limitation to be made in the words immediately preceding, there is surely no reason why there should not in this. It seems to have reference to the provocation occasioned by attempts made to overreach.

— οὐ λογιζέται τὸ κακόν.] Some ancient Commentators explain this, "thinketh no evil;" i. e. is not prone to suspect it. That signification, however, though suitable to the context, is destitute of proof; and it is better, with most ancient and the best moderns, to render "imputeth not evil or injury," literally, does not enter it into a note-book, for future revenge. It may, however, simply mean μησικακεῖν.

6. τῇ ἀληθείᾳ] i. e. true and sincere virtue, as opposed to the ἀδικία just before, which is a general term to denote iniquity of every kind. So John iii. 21. ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. Thus the sense is, "rejoices not in the vices, but in the virtues of men."

7. στέγει.] This is by most ancient and many modern Commentators explained "beareth." But that sense would be superfluous, as being expressed in the ὑπομένει just after: and the best Commentators (supported by the authority of St. Clement in his first Epistle to the Corinthians) are agreed in interpreting it tegè, reticet, "covereth, suppresseth the faults and infirmities of others;" a sense of the word occurring in Eccles. viii. 20. οὐ δύνησεται λόγον στῆξαι. and sometimes in the Classical writers. See also 1 Pet. iv. 8. James v. 20. and compare Prov. x.

20. The πάντα, however, must here be taken with due restriction, according to circumstances, on which see Recens. Synop. The πάντα πιστεύει and πάντα ἐλπίζει denote such a spirit of candour, as is disposed to believe and hope the best of others, as far as facts and circumstances permit.

8. ἐκπίπτει] “is never to cease, or be out of use,” but will be practised in a future state. The εἴτε, &c., is generally taken to mean, “Whatever portion of these spiritual gifts be possessed by any one.” But the sense seems rather to be, “Whatever spiritual gifts of this kind there may be,” meaning all imaginable ones, and in every conceivable degree. Nor does the εἴτε, as would seem by our common Version, imply doubt; but when followed, as here, by a repetition of the same in the apodosis, it may be said to have merely a comprehensive force, and the import of εἰ here is exactly that which it has in εἴ τις, whosoever; an idiom occurring frequently in the N. T. Render literally, “whatsoever gifts of prophecy there may be.” Καταργ. I would interpret, with Newc., “shall be done away,” namely, by being no longer of use. Γινώσις here simply denotes the spiritual gift so called.

9, 10. Here the Apostle states the reason why these and such like spiritual gifts will cease and be done away; namely, because they will be partly useless, and partly imperfect, and to be superseded by the perfect knowledge to be enjoyed in heaven.

10. ἐκ μέρους.] It is meant, that the endowments and the use of these spiritual gifts are alike imperfect, as compared with that degree of both which is imaginable, or with the complete discoveries of another world.

11. This truth the Apostle now illustrates by two similitudes, one taken from the state of boyhood as compared to manhood; the other, from the view of objects through a dim and obscure medium.

—ὡς νήπιος ἐφρ.] Was affected as a child, had the dispositions, feelings, and understanding of a child. Ὡς νήπ. ἐλόγ., i. e. reasoned about things with a childish ignorance and misapprehension. Τὰ τοῦ νηπίου, denote the toys, the trifles, and frivolities of that age. Wets. compares Xenoph. Cyrop. viii. ἐγὼ γὰρ παῖς τε ὦν, τὰ ἐν παισὶ νομιζόμενα καλὰ δοκῶ κεκαπῶσθαι· ἐπεὶ δὲ ἤβησα, τὰ ἐν νεανιάκοις· τέλειος τε ἀνὴρ γενόμενος, τὰ ἐν ἀνδράσι. I would add Philostr. Vit. Ap. i. 17. p. 22. See also

Horat. Carm. iv. 10. 7. The application (left to be supplied) is: “Such will be the attainments in knowledge of the heavenly state, as compared with that supplied by the most exalted spiritual gifts.”

12. βλέπομεν—αἰνίγματι.] The cause of that obscurity which envelopes this passage, is, that the Apostle intermingles the natural and the metaphorical, the thing itself with that with which it is compared. Thus βλέπομεν properly belongs to the latter, but it is used for γινώσκουμεν; and ἐν αἰνίγματι, which properly belongs to the former, and for which one would have expected ἀμυδρῶς, is used of the latter. Ἐν αἰνίγ. denotes, as Hesych. explains, ἐν παρεκασίᾳ, “by guess,” as in attempting to solve a riddle. The ἐσόπτρου is to be understood (with Rosenm., Elsn., Pearce, Wets., and most Commentators since their time), of some of those transparent substances, which the ancients, in the then imperfect state of the arts, used in their windows; such as thin plates of horn, transparent stone, ill-prepared glass, and such like; through which they saw, indeed, the objects without, but obscurely.

Πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον is an expression found in Judg. vi. 22., and signifying what is seen on the closest inspection. Καθὼς καὶ ἐπεγνώσθην, “as we also are known by God,” (i. e. thoroughly and completely) even of that God who “spieth out all our ways:” nor is there a thought in our hearts but He “knoweth it altogether.”

13. νυνὶ δὲ μένει—ἀγάπη.] I have in Rec. Syn. pointed out the misapprehension of the sense of this v. by many modern Commentators, especially the recent foreign ones; and have shown that its import was well discerned by the ancients, and of the moderns, partly by Whitby, Pearce, and Mackn., and completely by Dodd. and Scott. The difficulty, I conceive, hinges on this—that the Apostle has omitted to mention the cause of the superiority; though he hints at it in the words νυνὶ μένει; namely, since the πίστις and ἐλπίς only remain in use now, in this world only; the ἀγάπη will also be exercised in another world, and to all eternity. The sense, then, may be thus expressed: “Now Faith, Hope, and Love, these three together, exist in the present scene only; but in the future world Faith and Hope will be done away, and therefore the greatest of these is Love,” meaning universal benevolence, as it is rightly explained in an able Sermon on this text by Bp. Warburton, vol. x. p. 252. It is, however, contended by Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost., p. 11., that St. Paul's meaning was not, that the superiority was due to Love solely on account of its duration in another life, but also because in this present life it is, as the Apostle admits at v. 2., far more useful and excellent.

XIV. 1. διώκετε τὴν ἀγάπην] “studiously, then, endeavour to acquire this love.” Here we have a venatory metaphor. Ζηλ. δέ, &c., “but [at the same time] be earnestly desirous of spiritual gifts.” The Imper. has here, as often, a preceptive force. Μᾶλλον δὲ ἵνα προφ., rather, however, that ye have that of prophecy. See Note on xii. 28.

2. ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ.] This is equivalent to the γένῃ γλωσσῶν at xii. 10. 28. where see Notes.

From what follows a case is contemplated, which would often occur,—that the language so spoken was unknown to the bulk of the congregation, the gift being exercised only as an evidence of the divine origin of the Christian religion; in which case it was directed that there should be an interpreter.

—οὐκ ἀνθρ. λαλεῖ] i. e. “he, as it were, addresses not men; It is as if he addressed them not;” for, as the Apostle adds, no one (nemo fere, next to none) understands him. Ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ, “but God [only].”

—πνεύματι δὲ λαλεῖ μυστ.] On the exact sense here some difference of opinion exists. The ancient Expositors generally, and almost all the modern ones, suppose it to mean, “although, by the impulse of the Holy Spirit, he speaketh mysteries.” But thus πν. will not yield any sense of importance; and the interpretation is forbidden by the doctrine of the Greek Article. It is, therefore, better (with Est., Vorst., Abp. Newc., and Bps. Middl. and Pearce) to take it in the sense animo; rendering, with Casaub., “Quippe cum nemo intelligat; sed animo loquitur arcana;” for, as observes Casaub., it being the use of speech “ut animi sensa declararet aliis; qui ita loquitur ut alii non intelligant, is animo magis quam ore loquitur.”

3. Most of the older Commentators, following the Vulg., regard οἰκοδομὴν, παράκλησιν, and παραμυθίαν as dependent upon εἰς understood. This, however, is too arbitrary, and makes the sense less direct. It is better with the Syriac, and most of the recent Commentators, to regard the words as governed of λαλεῖ; q. d. “speaketh edification;” i. e. what may fill their minds with instruction, exhortation, and consolation; make them wiser, better, and happier.

4. ἐαυτὸν] scil. μόνον, i. e. by the confirmation of his faith; for to speak thus must to himself be an undeniable proof of his being divinely inspired.

5. θέλω δέ.] Render, “vellem,” “I could wish you.” Ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ is thought to be a pleonastic form; but perhaps it is meant to be more strongly exceptive than εἰ μὴ above. Εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύῃ, sub. τις, i. e. if there be no interpreter at hand. Thus it will not be, as Dr. Mackn. supposes, at variance with v. 28. Besides, this is required by the spirit of v. 13.

6. By way of illustrating the subject, the Apostle puts the case,—that if he, for instance, (meaning, per κοινωνίαν, any one of the persons who possessed the above mentioned χαρίσματα) should visit them, and should merely display the gift of tongues,—what would his visit benefit them? Not at all; unless, he adds, I should address you ἢ ἐν ἀποκαλύψει—ἐν διδαχῇ, which words, indeed, have given rise to much discussion. Now in all these forms of expression, the ἐν is by Heydenr. supposed to denote the object of the speaking in question. But it rather, I think, marks the manner; though indeed the two senses merge into each other; q. d. in the exercise of, so as to exercise. It is, however, of more consequence to advert to the meaning of ἀποκαλύψει, γνώσει, προφητεία, and διδαχῇ, on which Expositors are much divided in opinion. Some take them all for Accusatives with εἰς, in the sense, “so as to explain and make known to you my meaning, either in the way of prophecy, or teaching in general.” A mode of interpretation harsh and inadmissible. The general sense seems plainly this,—that the use of the gift of tongues would be unprofitable, unless it were accompanied with some other gifts, which might contribute, in some way or other (see v. 3.), to the edification of the hearers. That the Apostle has reference to the Spiritual gifts above described, is the opinion of the best Commentators, and seems certain. The reference in προφητεία and διδαχῇ is plainly to the προφήται and διδάσκαλοι. But that in ἀποκ. and γνώσει is not a little obscure. If there be (by anticlimax) a descent from superior to inferior gifts, then ἐν ἀποκαλύψει would seem, as Mackn. and others suppose, to have reference to Apostles. So Gal. i. 12. ἐδιδάχθην δι’ ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. And at 2 Cor. xii. 1, 7. St. Paul speaks of the abundance of the revelations made to him by the Lord.

ὠφελήσω, εἰ μὴ ὑμῖν λαλήσω ἢ ἐν ἀποκαλύψει, ἢ ἐν γνώσει, ἢ ἐν προφητείᾳ, ἢ ἐν διδασχῇ; Ὅμως τὰ ἄψυχα φωνὴν 7 διδόντα, εἴτε αὐλὸς, εἴτε κιθάρα, εἰ διαστολὴν τοῖς φθόγγοις μὴ δῶ, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τὸ αὐλούμενον ἢ τὸ κιθαριζόμενον; καὶ γὰρ εἰ ἀδελον φωνὴν σάλπιγγ' δῶ, τίς 8 παρασκευάζεται εἰς πόλεμον; Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς διὰ τῆς 9 γλώσσης εἰ μὴ εὐσημον λόγον δώτε, πῶς γνωσθήσεται

Thus the ἀποκάλυψις (scil. τῶν μυστηρίων) here would correspond to the λόγος σοφίας supra xii. 8. Such is the view of the sense adopted by Mackn., who understands γνώσει of the λόγος σοφίας, the gift of a superior Prophet; and, again, προφ., of the gift of an inferior prophet; διδασκ., that of an ordinary pastor. Yet all this is surely too hypothetical. That ἀποκ. does not necessarily imply the revelation peculiar to an Apostle, is clear from v. 26. ἀποκάλυψιν ἔχει, where it is considered as one of the ordinary gifts, and (as I have there shown) probably attached to the προφητεία. So Theophyl. on v. 25. says: Ἰδοὺ γὰρ ἡ ἀποκάλυψις εἶδος ἐν προφητείᾳ. As to Macknight's distinction between superior and inferior Prophets, it is wholly fancied, and has nothing in the N. T. to countenance it; and, indeed, was only suggested by mistakenly supposing the λόγος σοφίας and the λόγος γνώσεως to themselves denote specific Gifts; which has been already shown to be groundless. In short, I am persuaded that ἐν ἀποκ. and ἐν γνώσει here have no reference to any Spiritual gifts, but only denote the effects and results of certain correspondent spiritual gifts; and, in the present case, those of the προφῆται and the διδασκαλοὶ. Thus ἀποκαλ. will denote the revelation of high doctrines propounded by the Prophets; and γνώσει, the ordinary knowledge of the fundamental truths of the Gospel imparted by the Teachers. This is perfectly agreeable to the scope of the passage, as above pointed out; for the Apostle means to advert especially to those Gifts that had most utility, and those assuredly were the προφητεία and the διδασκαλία. Thus at v. 1. the Apostle prefers it to all other gifts, on the score of high usefulness.

7. ὅμως.] Illustratur exemplo, quantopere pro re supervacanea atque inutili sint habendi sermones linguâ peregrinâ confecti absque interpretatione. (Heydenr.) Thus the sense of ὅμως seems plainly to be (as the best Commentators suppose) similiter, for ὁμοίως (as in Gal. iii. 15.), of which signification sufficient examples are adduced by Kypke. Heydenr., indeed, renders it atque, quin etiam. That signification, however, is destitute of authority; while the other is required by the connection.

— ἄψυχα.] Supply ὄργανα. Φωνὴν is for ἦχον, or φθόγγον, and is a term applicable both to wind and to stringed instruments.

— εἰ διαστολὴν τοῖς φθόγγοις μὴ δῶ] “unless they give a distinction in the sounds,” or rather “to the sounds,” or notes, as Pierce and Mackn. render. It should seem that the Apostle is not (as many suppose) speaking of the intonation necessary to the distinction of one note or tone from another; for that would be little pertinent to his argument; which does not respect one who can speak no language (as the words so interpreted would suggest), but one who uses a language that is not understood by his hearers. Yet neither can I agree with Rosenm. and Krause, that he is speaking of the laws of harmony and melody: for that will as little suit the argument. In fact, as Calvin says, “non est subtilius disputandum; quia Paulus id tantum psumpsit, quod vulgo percipitur.” Yet he must certainly advert to something which strikes the senses of the vulgar. And that I am inclined to think is the style, or peculiar characteristic of any tune, which the ancients denoted by the term mode; using it, in some measure, as we do key. This, I would observe, is confirmed by the expression just after, ἀδελον φωνήν; for without attending to the distinction of tones or notes, the performer surely could not be said to play on the instrument at all. There is evidently an allusion to those various and strongly marked characteristics, which among the ancients distinguished different kinds of music, whether sacred, domestic, dramatic, or military; insomuch that any person, with a tolerable ear, could tell to what class to refer any composition which he heard. Whereas if those characteristics were not observed in the air, he would not know what the tune was meant to be; whether, as we should say, a March or a Waltz. This, then, seems to be what the Apostle means; as is plain from the words following, which contain another illustration of the same kind, but more perspicuous, and serving to explain the preceding.

8. καὶ γὰρ εἰ ἀδ. &c.] The Apostle here adverts to a use of musical tunes, in which their distinction was especially necessary, viz. for military purposes. Now the military wind instruments of the ancients were not used merely for the purpose of directing the steps in marching; but also for the purpose of signifying to the soldiers, as it were by signals, what they were to do; whether to advance, or retreat, take up arms, or go to quarters: in fact, they performed all that is now done by our trumpets or bugles.

— εἰ ἀδελον φωνήν σάλπ. δῶ] q. d. if the trumpeter sound his instrument without proper attention to this distinction of tunes, and thereby make the signals in question indistinct; not distinguishing between that which sounds to arms, and that which signifies a retreat, or other military evolutions, no one will know what to do. So Polyb. xxx. οἱ μὲν αὐληταὶ φυσῶντες ἀδιάφωνα.

9. διὰ τῆς γλώσσης] “by the tongue,” meaning the organ of speech, as opposed to the musical instruments just spoken of. Εἰς ἀέρα λαλεῖν is a proverbial expression, to denote speaking in vain, like ventis verba profundere in Latin, and a similar one in our own language.

10. Here is another illustration by example ; in which we must attend to the elliptical and idiomatical cast of the words. I have in Recens. Synop. shown that the true ellipsis is, not ὅσα ἀνδρῶν, which would lead to a wrong sense, but ὅσα ἂν θέλοιτε : and that at εἰ τύχοι must be repeated τοσαῦτα. Thus the sense is : "There are (we will suppose) as many kinds of tongues in the world as ye choose, if so many there should be." The sense of οὐδὲν ἄφρων ἐστι is "none formed of inarticulate sounds," but is adapted to be significant to the persons who use it.

11. ἔὰν οὖν μὴ εἰδῶ &c.] Render : "Now, unless I know the meaning of the language [which may be addressed to me] ἔσομαι τῷ λαλοῦντι βαρβ. &c., I shall be, with respect to the speaker of it, a foreigner ; and the speaker will be, with respect to me, a foreigner." On this sense of βάρβαρος, i. e. one who speaks a language he understands not, see Note on Acts xxviii. 2. and Rom. i. 14., and my Note on Thucyd. iii. 68. The above signification of ἐν is Hebraic. A Classical writer would either have used ἐπὶ, or dropped the preposition. So in a kindred passage of Diog. Laert., of which I have not noted the page. Anacharsis says of the Greeks : ἐμοὶ δὲ πάντες Ἕλληνας σκυθίζουσι.

12. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς.] This must be taken, not with the preceding, but with the following words, and construed with ζητεῖτε. The οὕτω may be rendered, with Wakef., So then, or wherefore. The full force of οὕτω will be perceived by supplying the ellipsis, as follows : "Thus also (to apply this to your case), since you are anxious for, &c., strive, &c." Ζηλωτῆς is here taken as at xii. 31. and xiv. 1. Πνευμάτων is for πνευματικῶν (scil. χαρισματικῶν) abstract for concrete, which occurs at xiv. 1. In the next words there is a transposition, for ζητεῖτε ἵνα περισεύητε πρὸς τὴν οἰκοδομὴν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, "endeavour to abound, or be zealous of abounding in them" &c. The reason for the transposition seems to have been that οἰκοδομὴ was the principal thing meant to be enforced, and is therefore put first.

13. προσευχέσθω ἵνα διερμ.] On the sense of these words Commentators considerably differ in opinion. Some (as Mackn. and Dr. Burton) take it to be : "Let him [so] pray, that [another] may interpret his prayers." But this introducing a word which has nothing corresponding to it in the original, so as to quite change the sense of the passage, cannot be tolerated. Most eminent modern Commentators assign this as the sense : "Let him [so] pray, as that he may, or in such a manner that he may (by the words used in his prayer, or by explaining it in a known language) interpret and impart to others, what the afflatus has imparted to him ; and not, out of vain ostentation, utter it in a tongue unknown." But that sense cannot be extracted from the words without much violence, and would suppose the sacred writer to express himself most enigmatically. The most simple, and, it should seem, the true interpretation is that of the ancient and some modern Expositors, who assign the following sense : "Let him pray that he may likewise be enabled to interpret [what he says]." See xii. 10. and Notes. This view, as Heydenr. observes, is most agreeable to the words following, which contain a reason for the above.

14. Here the Apostle excites them to aim at higher gifts than speaking with tongues, by pointing out the inefficiency of that gift to general edification. The pronoun I denotes, per μετασχηματισμὸν, any person having the gift of tongues. Hence it is plain that τὸ πνεῦμά μου cannot mean the Holy Spirit, as many Commentators suppose ; nor, as others explain, "my spiritual gift." The true interpretation is doubtless that of the ancients and most moderns for the last century, "my mind." Render : "If I pray in a foreign language (without interpreting my words my mind prayeth, but my meaning (i. e. the meaning or purport of my prayer) produces no benefit to others."

15. τί οὖν ἐστι ;] Sub. πρακτέον, as Rom. iii. 9. vi. 15. The answer to the question is made (agreeably to the μετασχηματισμὸς) in the first person. The exact sense, however, is disputed. Some ancient, and almost all the early modern Expositors (together with Hamm., Whit., Rosen., Krause, and Iaspis) suppose the sense to be this : "The best to be done is to ask God to be endued with the faculty of divinely-inspired prayer in a foreign language ; not with the spirit and soul alone, and to our own edification only, but τῷ νοῖ, with meaning, so as to be understood by others also," i. e. that we may have, too, the gift of interpretation, as well as tongues. This sense of νοῖ is required by the context. See v. 19. But how προσεύξ. can be thought to contain any such sense as that here ascribed to it, however agreeable to the context, I see not. The general sense intended, allowing for the μετασχηματισμὸς, seems to be simply this : "We must, then, so pray with the Spirit, that others, as well as ourselves, may understand the meaning of our prayers." Thus νοῖ (as Heydenr. observes) is for τῷ νοῖ τῶν ἄλλων, i. e. εἰς τὸ νοεῖσθαι ὑπ'

ἄλλων, ἵνα τοὺς ἄλλους κατηχήσω. And he adduces an example of a vox intelligentia being used transitively of that which others may understand, i. e. be permitted to understand, from Nehem. viii. 9. 1 Chron. xxv. 7, 8. The above view of the sense I find supported by the authority of Theodoret, as follows: πνεῦμα τὸ χάρισμα καλεῖ νοῦν δὲ τὴν σαφήνειαν τῶν λεγομένων. Λέγει δὲ ὅτι προσήκει τὸν ἑτέρα γλώττη διαλεγόμενον, εἴτε ἐπὶ ψαλμῳδίας, εἴτε ἐπὶ προσευχῆς, εἴτε ἐπὶ διδασκαλίας, ἢ αὐτὸν ἐρμηνεύειν εἰς ὥφέλειαν τῶν ἀκούοντων ἢ ἕτερον τοῦτο ποιεῖν δυνάμενον συνεργόν τῆς διδασκαλίας λαμβάνειν. If this be not admitted, we may, with Theophyl., suppose τί οὖν ἐστι to mean, "What, then, is to be asked for?" And then, with several of the most ancient MSS., reading προσεύξομαι, and supposing an ellipsis of ἵνα, the sense will be, "that I may be enabled to pray with the Spirit," &c. Ψαλῶ may here, as in a kindred passage at James v. 13, be understood not necessarily of a hymn actually sung, but of a composition, perhaps half prose and half poetry, recited. This at least would seem to be the case from the passage of James, where see Note. See also Col. iii. 16. and Note.

16. ἐπεὶ, ἐὰν εὐλ.] Ἐπεὶ here signifies "since, in that case" (viz. that other case); as also in Rom. iii. 6. xi. 6. 1 Cor. v. 10. vii. 14. xv. 29. Heb. ix. 26. x. 2. and sometimes in the Classical writers. Ἐὰν εὐλογ., "if, or when, thou givest [God] thanks." τῷ πνεύματι, in the spirit, "with thy mind [only]," i. e. to thyself only.

— τοῦ ιδιώτου.] I have in the Note on Acts iv. 13, and 'in Recens. Synop. in loc., shown that ιδιώτης denotes a private person, as opposed to one in any office. Hence the sense assigned here by most Commentators, "one of the laity," might be admitted, if the context, &c. allowed it. But as that requires some more special sense, and the distinction between Clergy and Laity was probably not yet made, I would, as the context requires, interpret it, with Chrys. and Heydenr., "one who occupies the situation of an uninspired person, one not endued with the gift of tongues." The Article here denotes the genus of persons so circumstanced. Ἀναπ. τόπον is not a mere Hebraism; but the metaphor is common to both ancient and modern languages. The word ἀμήν is properly an adjective signifying true, and, as such, was used as well in solemn asseverations (when ἐστι was left to be understood), as after any prayer, which involved either asseveration (as when the praises of God were pronounced), or supplication, when his aid was sought; which required the ellipsis ἔστω. The τὸ at ἀμήν ought to be expressed, since it denotes what was customary. Εὐχαριστία is equivalent to εὐλογία, both being general terms to denote prayer and praise.

18. εὐχαριστ., &c.] This is (as Chrys. observes, introduced (like the καθὼς just before) to show that he does not depreciate the gift, because he possesses it not. The μου is not found in several ancient MSS. and Versions, and some Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. and Tittm. But the same phrase occurs at Phil. i. 3, and Philem. 4.; and it is less likely that it should have been interpolated here from those passages, than have been thrown out by the early Critics, as savouring of inelegance. Δαλῶν is for ὅτι λαλῶ, being so expressed, somewhat inaccurately, to avoid egotism.

19. In πέντε λ. there is an idiom, common to all languages, by which a small certain number is put for a very few. And the same, mutatis mutandis, may be said of μυρίους. Διὰ τοῦ ν. μου (or, as is read in many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, τῷ νοῦ μου) is by the best Commentators shown to mean "ex mentis meæ sensu." See Note supra v. 15. The next words are exegetical of the preceding.

20. After pointing out the true nature and comparative value of the gift of tongues, the Apostle endeavours to repress in them a too great anxiety for its possession—by showing that to wish for it without regard to the advantage thence resulting, were even puerile. And then using a delicate turn, suggested by the word παιδίον, he adds: ἀλλὰ τῇ κακίᾳ νηπ., of which the sense is, "but as respects vice, be even infantile." Theodoret excellently paraphrases thus: Μὴ ἀντιστρέψῃτε τὴν τάξιν ("do not invert the order of nature") μηδὲ τῶν παιδίων τὴν ἄνοιαν, ἀλλὰ ἀκακίαν ζηλώσατε τῶν δὲ τελείων μὴ τὴν πονηρίαν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀγχινοῖαν ἔχετε. This childlike simplicity our Lord himself often earnestly enjoined. (See Matth. x. 16.) And with good reason; since it is closely connected with virtues even of the highest kind. Thus it is finely remarked by Thucyd. i. 83 init. καὶ τὸ εὐθεῖς, οὗ τὸ γυναικῶν πλεῖστον μετέχει.

— ταῖς δὲ φρεσὶ τέλ. γίνεσθε] "but as to prudence and judgment, in approving those things which are excellent, be grown-up persons, and attain to something of the maturity of your Christian profession." This sense of τέλειος occurs in Eph. iv. 13. and Heb. v. 14. and elsewhere in the best writers.

21. ἐν ἑτερογλώσσοις.] The passage alluded ρογλώσσοις, καὶ ἐν χείλεσιν ἐτέροις, λαλήσω τῷ

 λαῷ τούτῳ, καὶ οὐδ' οὕτως εἰσακούσονται μου, λέγει

to is Is. xxviii. 11 & 12, which (as well as the kindred one of Jerem. v. 15.) may be regarded as predictive of the gift of tongues. Or (to use the words of Scott) "while it seems primarily to have related to the languages of those foreign nations by whom God intended to execute vengeance on Israel, it might also denote that he would instruct them by persons endued with the gift of tongues, to convince them that those persons taught the true religion." The words here quoted differ considerably from the Sept., but agree in substance with the Hebrew; this being a citation ad sensum rather than ad litteram. In fact, the only material difference is in the substitution of the first person for the third, to make the sense more pointed. Λέγει Κύριος are the words of the Apostle, and do not profess to be from the Prophet. By νόμος is here, as often, denoted the Old Testament. See John x. 34.

22. In order further to show the inferiority of tongues to interpretation, the Apostle adverts to the chief purpose which signs were meant to serve; namely, for the conviction of unbelievers, rather than the edification of believers.

— Ὡστε αἱ γλώσσαι, &c.] The sense is: "Wherefore the tongues in question are [meant] to serve for a sign, or mark, by which it may be known that the Christian doctrine is true. Yet these are [intended] not [so much] for believers as unbelievers; whereas the προφητεία, though it is not so much a sign to the unbeliever, yet is especially such to the believer; being a sign and a confirmation of their faith, and an increase of their knowledge."

23. The Apostle further evinces the inferiority of tongues, by showing the misconstruction which the use of the gift might occasion to the heathens; so that, unless employed in conjunction with interpretation, it might tend rather to the injury than the benefit of the Gospel.

The ἐὰν οὖν is not conclusive, but transitive, signifying now if, if for example. By πάντες I would not understand, with most Expositors, "all together, confuse, tumultuariè;" but simply all the persons present who speak in virtue of a spiritual gift. The ἰδιῶται should not (with some) be taken as supra v. 16. (for that would be unsuitable to what follows), but in the sense, "persons not conversant with Christianity." So Hesych. explains ἰδιώτας by ἀπείρους. See my Note on Thucyd. vi. 72, 3. ἰδιώτας, ὡς εἰπεῖν χειροτέχναις. The Apostle, we may suppose, is here designating such heathen (strangers) as might occasionally attend, or be induced to go once or twice, out of curiosity; and this by a tacit allusion to two sorts of persons: 1. those who were well inclined to the Gospel, but uninstructed in its doctrines; 2. such as were disposed to reject it, and went merely from curiosity, or to catch up something to censure or ridicule. This view is supported by the authority of Theodoret, who explains it by ἀμύητοι; and also by Heydenr., who takes it to mean "imperiti religionis Christianæ, extranei, de rebus Christianis haud satis edocti." The words following will have no difficulty, if referred to both, or to either of those classes, as the case may be. The ἐροῦσιν ὅτι μαίνεσθε ("they will say you are frantic enthusiasts") is evidently meant for both. At v. 24. we have the plural changed into the singular, in order that what has now been said should be referred to either of the above sorts of persons respectively. Ἐλέγχεται is (as the position shows) meant for the ἀπίστος, and signifies "he is convicted of error in the notions he had entertained of Christianity, and convinced of his sin in opposing God's true Religion; his understanding being convinced, and his conscience awakened." The ἀνακρίνεται (which is intended chiefly for the ἰδιώτης) seems to mean, "he is put on his examination, is made to discern aright of his condition, as a poor ignorant sinner needing the salvation of a Saviour. Ὑπὸ πάντων, "by all [the preachers]," each saying something that comes home to his conscience.

25. τὰ κρυπτὰ—γίνεται.] This may mean (as Mr. Scott explains) "his secret thoughts are divulged (viz. by being, as it were, spoken to. See Heb. iv. 12.), his secret objections answered, his secret sins reproved, and the real state of his heart made known to him." The words Καὶ οὕτω before τὰ κρυπτὰ are not found in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, and are cancelled by Griesb. and Tittm. But the words are more likely to have been thrown out, by over-nice Critics, to remove a tautology, than to have been introduced, as they must, through mistake, originating in the καὶ οὕτω just after. That such a mistake should have crept into nearly all the MSS. is very improbable. Besides, the words have great propriety, as serving to mark the consequence of the former; self-knowledge being the necessary consequence of close self-examination, carried on under the power of an awakened conscience. For although the generality of Expositors understand the κρυπτά—φανερά γίνεσθαι of the κρυπτά being made known to others; yet it should rather seem meant of the person himself. A view, I find, supported by the opinion of Calvin. See his admirable note.

The next words describe the effects of conviction of sin and compunction;—namely, humble and hearty prayer to God for acceptance, or furtherance in His grace; and an open acknowledgment of the truth of the religion which had before been rejected. The last clause seems meant for the ἄπιστος only.

26. Now follows the conclusion.—that the value of these χαρίσματα is not to be measured by the nature of the gift, considered in itself, but by the mode and degree in which the advantage of others, as well as the possessor, is promoted. On τί οὖν see Note supra v. 15. In the words following something seems wanting; to supply which, some suppose an ellip. of εἰ; a rather precarious expedient. Others read the words interrogatively; which is frigid and inefficient. Others, again, reject both the interrogation and the insertion, and render ἕκαστος ἔχει “each is ready and eager to supply.” But that is straining the sense. There is, in fact, no difficulty, if the words be taken of what is supposed to be done; and εἴτε or ἢ may, with Œcumen., Camer., and Schliting, be understood, which is expressed in the verse following. Thus the sense of the whole passage will be: “What, then, is to be done [to avoid these evils, and promote the good in view; why this]. Each [we will suppose], i. e. of the πνευματικοί, hath some gift or other: either he hath a psalm, or he hath, &c. [Well, be it so, so that all be done unto edification]. Keep that in view. Let every thing be done unto edification.” The terms expressing these gifts are to be explained with reference to what the Apostle has before said concerning them. Yet as he here speaks generally, and does not use precisely the same terms, the Commentators differ in opinion as to the sense, of which see a full discussion in Rec. Syn. Suffice it here to say, that the ψαλμὸν seems to have reference to the ψαλῶ at v. 15., and probably denotes an extemporaneous and inspired piece of poetry, adapted to be sung to some melody. Διδασχὴ seems to denote the instruction of the διδάσκαλοι mentioned at xii. 28, 29. The γλῶσσαν and ἔρμ. must be explained on the same principle. With respect to ἀποκάλυψιν, it may, from the general air of the context, be supposed to be something brought forward by a προφήτης. See Note supra v. 6.

27. The Apostle now gives some special direc- tions, by which the gift of tongues may be exercised to edification. The τις is used (like the French on) to denote several persons (on which idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. §. 487.) as in 1 Pet. iv. 11. εἰ τις λαλεῖ. Thus in both passages it is equivalent to εἴτε τινὲς λαλοῦσι γλώσση, and in both we may supply λαλεῖτωσαν from λαλεῖ. Κατὰ δύο ἢ τρεῖς means “two or three [only] at each time of meeting.”

28. ἐάν δὲ μὴ ἡ διερμ. “but if there be no one [present] who has the gift of interpretation,” i. e. neither another nor himself. See Chrys., Œcum., and Rosenm. Σιγάτω, scil. ὁ λαλεῖν βουλόμενος. Ἐαυτῷ δὲ λαλεῖτω is well explained by Chrys. λαλ. κατὰ διάνοιαν, ἢ ἥρέμα καὶ ἀψοφητί. By λαλ. τῷ Θεῷ is meant “address God [in silent prayer].”

29. δύο ἢ τρεῖς.] Sub. κατὰ, i. e. two or three at one meeting. By οἱ ἄλλοι are meant the rest of the prophets; namely, who are not to speak at that meeting. Of διακρ. the sense (as almost all Commentators are agreed) seems to be, “let them decide on what is spoken, whether it be dictated by the Spirit of truth or not;” namely, lest false prophets (of whom St. Paul warns them in his second Epistle, written a year after) should creep in. This office was attached to the prophetical one, and was exercised by those who possessed the gift of the διάκρισις πνευμάτων, spoken of at xii. 10., where see Note.

30. ἐάν δὲ ἄλλῳ—σιγάτω.] The sense (which has been debated) seems to be this: “If any revelation be made [by the Spirit] to another [prophet], let the first [prophet] have done speaking.” And in this way the passage is taken by the ancient and early modern Commentators. And in this sense σιγ. occurs in Acts xv. 13., and often in the Classical writers; as Polyb. ix. 13. 2. Several, however, of the modern Commentators (as Grot., Whitby, Locke, Pearce, Doddr., and Mackn.) stumbling at the idea of any one speaking by the Holy Spirit being silenced, take σιγάτω in the sense “let him permit the first to come to a conclusion,” or, “let him wait till the first has done speaking.” But so to strain the plain sense of words is not the way to remove difficulties. Here that may be done without resorting to such means: not, indeed, by sinking (with many recent Commentators) the supernatural in these gifts; but by supposing, that, in the exercise of this ministry, the prophets were so perpetually acting under a divine afflatus, or so entirely removed from the operation of their understanding, or the guidance of their own feelings of prudence or propriety, that they might occasionally need the suggestions of their brethren the other prophets, and sometimes to be reminded to come to a conclusion (though we need not suppose an abrupt one), when running into undue prolixity; which it is plain from the words following the Apostle had principally in view. Indeed, that those so speaking were not always under the actual influence of the Holy Spirit, is, I think, manifest from the direction of the Apostle καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι διακρινέτωσαν. Besides, that a person endued with any spiritual gift had the power, as free agent, of using or not using it, and might be controuled by authoritative admonition (without any disparagement of the respect due to the Spirit), is clear from this,—that those who possessed the gift of tongues are commanded to be silent when there was no one by to interpret it. All the prophets, I agree with Calvin and Paræus, whether speaking, or sitting in silence, were endued, indeed, with the Holy Spirit; but very differently at different times. But besides that general assistance of the Holy Spirit, by which they were enabled to discharge their duty, they were, no doubt, at times sensible of a special illapse of the Holy Spirit; which being extraordinary, might, in the case of a silent prophet, demand its requisition to be complied with by a speaking one.

31. δύνασθε γὰρ, &c.] The sense is: "For [thus] ye may all [viz. who are prophets] be enabled to prophesy one after another; so that all may [in their turn] receive or communicate instruction, or admonition."

32. καὶ πνεύματα προφ. προφ. ὑποτάσσεται.] The Commentators are not agreed on the exact sense contained in these words. Some ancient and most of the best modern ones regard this verse as asserting the possibility of obeying the foregoing injunctions; q. d. The spiritual gifts of the prophets are [not, like the phrenzy of the Heathen priests, beyond their controul, but] subject to the prophets; who may exercise them or not, as occasion may require. See Theophyl., Hamm., Whitby, Wolf, Krause, and Heydenr. Bp. Middl., indeed, urges that the propriety of the Article would require τοῖς προφήταις; and he adopts the interpretation of Schulz, Rosenm., and Schleusn.; (which, indeed, had been propounded by Chrys., Theod., Calvin, and Est.) "They who are divinely inspired are bound, at proper seasons, to give place to others who have been gifted with the same inspiration." This interpretation, however, involves no little harshness; it being thus necessary to take πνεύματα προφητῶν for προφ., and to supply τοῖς ἄλλοις. Now this would suppose the sentence to be written most enigmatically. As to the objection, urged by Bishop Middl., with respect to the absence of the Article τοῖς, it has no force; since, as both the nouns, προφητῶν and προφήταις, are without the Article, it cannot be necessary to the latter; especially since what is said may be supposed to be expressed gnomice. Moreover, the connection, as regards what precedes (πρῶτος σιγάτω), is quite in favour of the first-mentioned interpretation. And as regards what follows, no connection is necessary, since (though the Editors have failed to notice it) the words of v. 32. are parenthetical; and the γὰρ which commences v. 33. (not well rendered by Mackn. besides), has reference to the injunction and the reason for it at vv. 30, 31. q. d. "Let this injunction be observed, for it is the ordinance of that Being who is the Author not of confusion, but of peace and order." I have indicated this hypo-parenthesis by inclosing the words between two colons. They were meant, I conceive, to anticipate an objection, q. d. "How can it be proper for any prophet to be thus silenced; or how he should be able to controul the suggestions of the Spirit?" To this the answer is, that the exercise or non-exercise of their spiritual gift was at their own discretion (for such, as Chrys., Theophyl., Est., Whitby, and Mackn. have pointed out, must be the sense of πνευμ.); whence it followed, that whatever impropriety or evils arose from the undue exercise of the gift must be imputed not to the Spirit, but to the Prophet himself; whose duty it would therefore be to rein in his impetuosity, and yield to another, before he had finished what he intended to say.

33. ἀκαταστασίας.] On the proper sense of the word see Luke xxi. 9. It here denotes tumult and confusion, as opposed to εἰρήνη, quietness and order.

The words ἐν πάσαις—ἁγίων may be rendered: "as is the case in all other congregations of Christians." There is no reason, with many eminent Editors and Expositors from Bp. Pearce downwards, to connect these words with the words following. For thus the gravity and authority of the Apostle's injunction will be injured, and a great irregularity supposed,—namely, that of introducing an inferior reason first in the sentence. And what example is there of a sentence so commencing with an ὥς? This seems to have been an expedient resorted to from the connection between these words and the preceding ones, being not very obvious. But why should we not consider this (like very many others in St. Paul's Epistles) as a briefly-worded clause, standing in the place of a complete sentence, introduced by an illative particle? So Calvin (who rightly makes it refer to all that has been before said on the cultivation of order and peace) expresses the sense thus: "Nihil vobis hactenus præcepi, quod non observatur in omnibus Ecclesiis; atque ita continentur in pace." So also Theodor. (following the exposition of Chrys.) paraphrases: Οὐδὲν καινὸν νομοθετοῦμεν, ἀλλὰ τοὺς τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ὑμᾶς νόμους, οὓς αὐτοὶ τέθεικε τῆς εἰρήνης ὁ πρῶταυτίς. See Luke ii. 14. and John xiv. 27.

34. ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλ. σιγάτωσαν· οὐ γὰρ, &c.] This injunction (which, it is almost universally admitted, implies a total prohibition to women to speak at all in the congregation), seems to be contradictory to that at xi. 5. To reconcile which with the former, many Commentators suppose that the Apostle here refers to voluntary discourse, though even spoken with the ordinary aid of the Holy Spirit; and in ch. xi. to praying and prophesying under the extraordinary influence of the Spirit. According to this, the women were to keep silence, i. e. to refrain from speaking in public in the churches, except when they were influenced by an extraordinary inspiration. See Holden. But to that sense Whitby and Mackn. urge serious objections (which see in Recens. Synop.); and they maintain, that the Apostle at Ch. xi. only intended to say how the women should speak if they spoke at all, but here means absolutely to forbid it. Both solutions of the difficulty, however, are open to objections, and there seems to be no safe mode of removing them, but by supposing the προφ. there to mean some such inferior sort of the προφητεία, perhaps (expounding Scripture), as should not, by its exercise in public, contravene the order in this passage.

35. εἰ δέ τι μαθεῖν, &c.] This is meant to exclude the pretence of speaking for the purpose of interrogation, and for instruction's sake; which, as it would produce disorder, is forbidden.

36. The Apostle fortifies the injunctions contained in this and the two preceding chapters (but chiefly those in the foregoing verses, especially v. 33. which refers to the example of other churches) by adverting to a fact,—namely, that the Corinthians had no priority of conversion to plead, or any superiority over other Churches, which might give them a privilege to deviate from the general practice; q. d. is your's the mother Church, or the only Church? There is an allusion to Is. ii. 3. The inference is, "You must therefore submit to the custom of the generality." Now the mention of these irregularities naturally brings to the Apostle's mind the authors and abettors of them, certain persons who pretended to be endowed with the Gift of Prophecy, and other spiritual Gifts.

37. Δοκεῖ is wrongly rendered in our common Version "seemeth to himself;" and still worse by Mackn. and Holden, "is sure;" a sense which the word no where bears. The sense is, "is accounted," "is reputed" (as iii. 18. εἰ τις δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι), meaning, "if any one be really a prophet." In the words ἐπιγινώσκειτω—ἐντολαί there is a frequent Hellenism: and we may render: "let him understand or know that what I write unto you (i. e. my injunctions) are commands of the Lord;" just as what comes from an Ambassador may be said to come from his Sovereign. The τοῦ before Κυρίου is omitted in many of the best MSS. and some Fathers, and not found in the earliest Edd. It is cancelled by Matth., Griesb., Krause, Tittm., and Vater, and is probably an interpolation.

38. ἀγνοεῖ] i. e. professes ignorance, or, as it seems, from the antithesis, to mean, "is not disposed to acknowledge them as such." Ἀγνοεῖτω, i. e., by a popular idiom (being an example of the permissive Imperative), "per me licet, let him do so, suo periculo, I have no more to say to him." Comp. ii. 16.

39, 40. Here the Apostle sums up the whole of what has been before said. Μὴ κωλύετε signifies, "be no hindrance to," "discountenance not." Εὐσχημῶνς καὶ κατὰ τάξιν, "in a decorous and orderly manner." Εὐσχ. refers to the breaches of Ecclesiastical decorum before adverted to; and κατὰ τάξιν to the violation of order and subordination in the ministrations of the Church, with allusion to what the Apostle enjoined Christians (Eph. v. 21.) ὑποτάσσεσθαι ἀλλήλοις ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ. See also Coloss. ii. 5. βλέπων ὑμῶν τὴν τάξιν, which is rightly rendered by Schleus., "videns vestrum ordinem in dispositione et observatione rituum ecclesiasticorum." The various passages of the Classical writers which I have adduced in Recens. Synop. prove that τάξιν was applied to discipline and subordination, both political and religious.

XV. After repressing breaches of decorum, order, and discipline, the Apostle now proceeds to stop the progress of heresy; and especially on that vital doctrine of the Gospel, the RESURRECTION. The Corinthians were tainted with the Sadducean spirit of Jewish scepticism, or with the philosophical dogmas of the Grecians; each alike subversive of, or discouraging, all expectation of a resurrection, at least in the sense in which it is here meant by St. Paul,—namely, a resurrection of both soul and body in a future state. There were, it should seem, not a few, both of the Jewish and Gentile Christians, at Corinth, who entertained notions (founded on the dogmas they had held before their conversion) adverse to, at least, a resurrection of the body; and who had, in fact, brought with them their old tenets into the Christian Church, and corrupted its doctrines. Now the Sadducees, and also the Epicureans and Stoics, rejected alike the resurrection of the body and the soul; while the Essenes, the Professors of the Oriental philosophy, and the Platonists in general agreed in rejecting a resurrection of the body; while all three admitted a resurrection of the soul, at least in words; though there is great reason to think that the Philosophers of that age denied even the resurrection of the soul, at least in their esoteric discussions. At all events, the various sects of Gentile Philosophers all agreed in rejecting a resurrection of the body. Hence the ill reception which St. Paul met with at Athens, from his avowal of this doctrine. It appears, then, that the Corinthian heretics were of two kinds, corresponding to the above two classes; 1. those who rejected a resurrection both of the body and soul; 2. those who disbelieved a resurrection of the body, but admitted one of the soul. The persons of this class, however (namely, the Essenes and the Platonists), rejected a resurrection of the body on different grounds. The latter, taking for granted the absolute physical identity of the raised body, with the mortal body before existing, denied the possibility of the thing; the former, taking for granted the moral identity,—i. e. the being equally frail and corrupt, thought that if it were possible, it would be most undesirable, and the thing not to be reconciled with the wisdom and benevolence of the Deity. As to the former class, those who had been Sadducees or Epicureans, and still clung to the same notion—they endeavoured to justify this departure from what had been revealed by Christ, by taking (as the heathen Philosophers, of the Platonic school, especially, often did) the term ἀνάστασις in a metaphorical and allegorical sense, to designate a bidding adieu to ignorance and vice, and embracing light and truth, and practically approving this regeneration by a reformed life. Thus the ἀνάστασις they professed was nearly equivalent to the Stoical ἀναγέννησις, or παλιγγενεσία. Hence they might well maintain (as did Hymenæus and Philetus), that the resurrection (i. e. of the just), if such was its nature, was already past. The Sadducean notion had plainly been borrowed from the Gentile Philosophers, with whose writings the Jews became conversant soon after their return from the Babylonian captivity; and when the necessity of preserving their liberty against the attacks of the neighbouring monarchs of Syria, Persia, and Egypt, compelled them to form connexions with the Gentile nations of the West, especially the Greeks and Romans. But besides the unbelievers and the half-believers, in the doctrine of the resurrection, there was a third class, composed of those who might be called weak believers, inasmuch as, though admitting the doctrine of a resurrection of the body as well as soul, yet they felt doubts and scruples as to the time when, and the manner in which it would take place; and also whether those found alive at the general resurrection would have need to die, or be received into the company of the raised saints and angels, without any such change.

Now to the above three classes of persons, the Apostle, I apprehend, is here addressing himself; and, as it should seem, in the natural order,—i. e. of unbelievers, half (or mis)-believers, and doubting believers as to the doctrine of the resurrection. The first, it should seem, he encounters in the first 34 verses; the second, from v. 35—50, inclusive: the third from v. 51—57, inclusive. V. 58. contains the inference to be drawn from what has been before said, and involves an earnest exhortation. To advert to particulars, the errors or doubts of the several classes are encountered and corrected by the discussion of the three following questions, 1. Whether there will be a resurrection of the dead? This is proved, 1. from Scripture, v. 1—4; 2. from the testimony of eye-witnesses of Christ's resurrection, v. 5—12. For the connexion of the truth of Christ's resurrection from the dead, with that of the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, was of the closest nature; so that what proved one must prove the other: and the possibility of such a resurrection being shown, all arguments on the score of impossibility of the thing, would be completely demolished. 3. He argues the same question ex absurdo, i. e. by showing the absurdity of the contrary doctrine—thus: 1. If the dead rise not, Christ is not risen (v. 13). 2. It would be absurd to have faith in him, according to the preaching of the Gospel, if He is not risen. 3. The Apostles, who attest his resurrection, must be false witnesses. 4. The faith of the Corinthians, who believe it, must be vain. 5. All the believers who have died in the faith of Christ, have perished, if Christ be not risen. 6. Believers in Christ are in a more miserable state than any others, if there be no resurrection. 7. Those who are baptized in the faith, that Christ died for them, and rose again, are deceived. 8. The Apostles and Christians in general, who suffer persecution on the ground that after they had suffered awhile here, they shall have a glorious resurrection, are acting a foolish and unprofitable part (v. 30—35.) Now here it may be proper to observe, that there seems great reason to suppose (with Cocceius and Gerdes.) that by ἀνάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν the Apostle here, in his arguments for the resurrection of the soul (especially when he argues ex absurdo), means, in a general sense, not only a resurrection of the body, but the transition of the soul to a state of bliss in heaven. For (as Cocceius and Gerdes, show), the Apostle's arguments at 19—35. would be inconclusive, as based on a fallacy of consequence, unless those, whom he is here immediately encountering, denied the resurrection of the soul as well as the body; i. e. the doctrine of a future state in general, as did the Sadducees and Epicureans. And consequently ἀναστ. must be taken as at Matt. xxii. 31. Assuredly the strong expression ἀπολίσθαι and others would lose their force; since the reply would have been at hand, that 'the soul might live apart from the body; that thus our better part might ἐνδημῆσαι πρὸς τὸν Κύριον, and consequently our hope would not be utterly cut off; though the particles of flesh should not be restored to life: and accordingly there would still remain that anchor of hope for the faithful, that of preserving the soul in the blissful communion of Christ, and in the fruition of God himself.' Again, how would it follow, from there being no resurrection of the body only, that there would be no such thing as virtue, piety, or faith; since those might nevertheless profit the soul. So that supposing an immortality of the soul only it would still be the true interest of man to mortify carnal lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. Whereas the contrary doctrine, which denied the immortality of the soul, cut at the root of all virtue, and tended to immorality of every kind. We are (as Gerdes. well suggests) carefully to distinguish between the persons here had in view. The persons whom the Apostle addresses, informs, warns, and exhorts, are different from those against whose heresy and arts of persuasion he cautions them. The latter he no where directly attacks, but confines himself to addressing the former. Otherwise, indeed, his arguments would have been invalid (as addressed to Sadducean Jews, or Atheistical Gentiles): whereas they have their full force, as addressed to persons who acknowledged certain principles, on which the Apostle argues. Hence what is said of the resurrection, is meant of the resurrection of Christians, and of the just and pious, not of the wicked (though the Apostle recognizes both at Acts xxiv. 15.); their resurrection (which, as it appears, will be after that of the just) being, in some measure, implied in the former, as in the case of the immortality of the soul, in regard to the resurrection of the body. Especially since (as Gerdesius observes) qui distribuenda Deo supremo terrarum orbis Judaici præmia asserit, distribuendas quoque pænas negare nullo modo possit?

To pass on to the two other general heads, the Apostle at 35—49, or 50, with reference to the second class above mentioned (namely, those who disbelieved, or at least doubted of the resurrection of the body, but held a resurrection of the soul), shows that the resurrection in question will be a resurrection of the body as well as soul, and what will be the nature of the bodies thus raised, and in what manner the whole will be accomplished. Again, at v. 49, or 50—57. inclusive, he adverts to the third class, and shows the time and manner of the resurrection, and what will become of those who are found alive at that period. Finally, he concludes with a most solemn and impressive exhortation, as to the use to be made of the doctrine he is now communicating.

1, 2. The difficulty in these verses (which has led to much difference of interpretation) has been partly occasioned by the unusualness of the construction, and partly by the somewhat rare senses in which the words γνωρίζω and λόγῳ are used. As to the construction, there need be no doubt that it is, according to a common Grecism, for γνωρίζω τίνι λόγῳ εὐηγγελισάμην τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. So Gal. i. 11. γνωρίζω δὲ ὑμῖν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τὸ εὐαγγελισθέν ὑπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι κατὰ ἀνθρώπων. As to γνωρ., it must, from the context, mean πάλιν γνωρ. or ἀναγν., with reference to the re-communication of knowledge by calling it to remembrance. For the Apostle does not mean to say, that they need to be *t*ought it, but only to be *r*eminded of it, and kept firm in the belief of the doctrine; q. d. (in the words of Chrys.) οὐ γὰρ αὐτὸ δέισσε τὸ δόγμα μαθεῖν, ἀλλ' ὑπομνησθῆναι καὶ διορθῆναι. See also Theophyl. and Œcumen, and compare a very similar passage at 2 Pet. i. 12. By εὐαγγέλιον are meant the doctrines of the Gospel, especially those of the incarnation and resurrection of Christ, and the like resurrection and redemption of the righteous. See Rom. viii. 11. In ἐσθήκατε (which means “ye have persevered and do persevere”) there is an agonistic metaphor (see Eph. vi. 13.), or an architectural one, like ἐδραῖοι γίνεσθε at v. 57., where see Note. On the sense of λόγῳ no little difference of opinion exists. See Poole's Synops. and Heydenr. The latter gives the preference to the signification method, way. But that sense is ill supported. The word is, I think, best rendered, with Pr. Dobree, argument; by which τίνι λόγῳ will be, by Hebraism, for τίνα λόγον. So Dobree explains, “I am putting you in mind of the argument I chiefly used in my preaching.” It should rather seem that there is an ellipsis of ἐπὶ, and that λόγῳ is (as Theodoret supposes) for σκοπῶ, ground, purpose, purport, subject, or object; with reference to the doctrine of the incarnation and resurrection of Jesus. Σώζεσθε is best explained, with Whitby, “are brought into a state of salvation.” See his Note and the Note on Matt. ii. 23. The full sense of εἰ κατέχετε—ἐπιστ. is well expressed by Dobree thus: “[as you will perceive] if you have not forgotten my words: unless, indeed, you were converted from mere caprice.” Yet εἰκὴ rather means sine fructu, εἰ μὴ ἐπιστ. εἰκὴ being for κενή ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν; for the full sense is, as Heydenr. explains, “nisi, obliterata resurrectionis J. C. memoria, penitus evanuit, atque a fundamentis disjecta est fides vestra, et omnia prius credita conciderunt.”

3, 4. “Apertius indicatur, quale fuit Evangelium illud, quod Paulus Corinthiis nunciaverat; q. d. Doctrina palmaria ac principalis, quam, sicut ipse didici eam, ita et docui, fuit hæc, Christum mortuum, sepultum, excitatum denique a mortuis esse, secundum oracula Veteris Test. divina.” (Heydenr.)

— ἐν πρώτοις i. e. among the principal and cardinal truths of the Gospel, and most necessary to be believed, and forming the foundations of Christian faith; namely, the passion, death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. The burial is mentioned as proving his death, just as the appearance to Cephas and the 500 brethren attested his resurrection. The ὑπὲρ is not, as some consider it, for περί; but should be rendered on account of, for the expiation of, with allusion to the atonement made for us by Christ suffering in our stead. See Rom. iv. 25. Τὰς γραφάς must (notwithstanding what some recent Commentators allege), in this context, denote such parts of the Scriptures of the Old Testament as have reference to the sufferings, death, and resurrection of Christ; namely, not only the prophecies of the Messiah, but also to the sacrifices, and, in general, the ritual and typical ordinances which prefigured the great Sacrifice.

5. τοῖς δώδεκα.] There were then but eleven. But the Apostles were so called, by a figure common to all languages and nations, whereby any body of persons, who act as colleagues, are called by the number of which the body is properly composed, though it may not be complete at the time.—The reading ἑνδεκα is evidently ex emendatione.

6. ἐπάνω.] Supply ἡ. This peculiar use of ἐπάνω for πλείον (which seems to have been popular or provincial, not being found in the Classical writers) occurs also in Mark xiv. 5, but with a Genitive. Perhaps, however, it has properly no regimen, but is used parenthetically, like the Latin plus trecentos, 300 and more. On the nature of this evidence see Dodd., and also an elaborate Dissertation of G. Olearius de resurrectione Christi, appended to his Obs. Sac. p. 750.

7. This is by Expositors generally supposed to be a transaction (like that in the next verse) not recorded in the Gospels. That principle, however, should not be resorted to unnecessarily; and to suppose the appearance to be the same with that in Galilee, according to the promise in Matt. xxvi. 32, is founded on weak grounds. It is far better to suppose (with Pareus and Gerdes.) that there is an allusion to the last appearance of Christ to his Apostles and disciples generally, recorded at Matt. xxviii. 16. As to the particles εἶτα and ἔπειτα, they must not be pressed on, as if the appearances are referred to in exact chronological order; for I entirely agree with Bp. Warburton, in his admirable Sermon on v. 17 of this Chapter, that “the Apostle here does not mean to enter into particulars, but introduces his cloud of witnesses, with becoming dignity, in the gross.” Thus they may be taken merely to mean porro; unless, indeed, we suppose, with Heum. (to whose opinion Gerdes is inclined to assent), that v. 7 has accidentally been put out of its order, and ought to come in before v. 6, thus: “Ἐπειτα ὥφθη Ἰακώβω, εἶτα τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πᾶσιν, ἔπειτα ὥφθη ἐπάνω πεντακοσίοις ἀδελφοῖς ἐφάπαξ. Yet for this transposition there is not a particle of external evidence: and as to internal, it is difficult to imagine how such a lucidus ordo should have been perturbed. I am rather inclined to suspect that the words ἔπειτα Ἰακώβω, εἶτα τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πᾶσιν came from the margin, where they were the remark of some one who thought proper to record the tradition, found in the Apocryphal Gospel according to the Hebrews, and recorded at large by Jerome, in Catal. Scrip. Eccl. The words cannot, with Heydenr., be referred to the ascension of our Lord, because that would have required, not ἀποστόλοις, but ἀδελφοῖς.

8. ὥσπερ [τῷ] ἐκτρώματι—ἐμοί.] There are two points connected with this passage on which Commentators are divided in opinion: 1. on the sense and ratio metaphoræ of ἐκτρώματι; 2. on the force of the Article here. As to the former, ἐκτρώμα (not a pure Attic word, though found occasionally in good authors, as Hippocrates, Aristotle, Plato, and Aristides) has always the sense which Hesych. ascribes to it, ἐκβολὴ γυναικὸς, an abortion. With respect to the ratio metaphoræ, many eminent Commentators suppose an allusion to the name given, as Sueton. Aug. C. 35. tells us, by the Romans to supernumerary senators, viz. abortive. To this, however, it is objected by Bp. Middl., that thus the comparison would not hold good, since an abortion is brought forth dead, and the Apostle was living, both naturally and spiritually. He would therefore take the word to mean a last-born child, reference to the common notion of the last-born being the smallest and weakest of the progeny. But for this sense there is no authority; and indeed it would involve a most harsh catachresis. We may rather, I conceive, recur to another sense of ἐκτρώμα, which has not, perhaps, been preserved in any author, but which, no doubt, existed, and is recorded in Hesych. and the Glossaria; namely, ἄωρον γέννημα, a child born before the due time. So the Latin abortivus, though it generally means an abortion, yet in Horat. Sat. i. 3. 46. “ut abortivus fuit olim Sisyphus” has this very sense. Now such infants are invariably weak and feeble, scarcely deserving the name of children; which is, I conceive, what the Apostle means to say of himself,—calling himself so, as being an Apostle not formed and matured by previous preparation and instruction (a view of the sense, I would observe, supported by the authority of Theophyl., Hesych., Newcome, and Wahl.), but suddenly called to the office, by an instantaneous conversion. It is proper, however, to advert to the force of the Article here; though it does not, I think, afford any ground whereon to determine the exact sense intended by the Apostle. According to the first and third of the foregoing interpretations, the Article seems to have no force; unless we suppose, with Bp. Middl., that it is meant to apply the term particularly to the Apostle. So Luke xviii. 13. ἐμοὶ τῷ ἁμαρτωλῷ. If this be thought unsatisfactory, we may suppose, with Dobree, that the τῷ (which is not found in a few MSS.) came from the margin. And it seems not to have been read by Ignatius, who, in his Epistle to the Romans, similarly calls himself the “last of the Preachers,” καὶ ἐκτρώμα. Yet it is defended by a similar passage (imitated from the present) of Simeon Styletes in an Epistle to Basil: ἐγὼ (says he) ὁ ταπεινός, καὶ εὐτελής· τὸ ἐκτρώμα τῶν μονάχων. To read τῷ (for τινι) with many recent Critics, would introduce an Atticism, such as is nowhere found in the N. T. (which contains scarcely any thing of Atticism) nor in the Sept., nor indeed in any Hellenistic writer. As to ἐκτρωμα (on which the difficulty mainly rests) it must be understood according to one of the two last-mentioned interpretations. But whatever be its exact sense, it is plain that the Apostle calls himself such out of deep humility; for the ὥσπερ is extenuative of the harshness of the expression, not of the thing.

10. χάριτι δὲ Θεοῦ εἰμὶ ὃ εἰμι scil. ἀπόστολος. While, however, he, in deep humility, ascribes whatever he is, or has effected, to the free grace of God, yet he gives way to a brief impulse to feel proud of his labours (he notices not his miracles as being greater than those of all the other Apostles, i. e. taken singly, not conjointly. This, however, is speedily checked by the recollection, that he is not the sole doer of the work, but that he needs the co-operation of God's grace. Comp. Phil. ii. 13, 14.

11. εἴτε οὖν ἐγὼ, εἴτε ἐκεῖνοι, &c. At ἐγὼ repeat ἑκοπίασα from the preceding ἑκοπίασαν, and at ἐκεῖνοι supply ἑκοπίασαν from the context. Also at both ἐγὼ and ἐκεῖνοι repeat περισσώτερον. The sense is, "Whether [it be] I or they [who] laboured most, [it matters not]; this doctrine [the death and resurrection of Christ] we all preached, and ye professed your belief of it. And having thus attested your belief thereof, how can ye, consistently, call in question the other doctrine, so closely connected with it, of the resurrection of man from the dead.

12. εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς κηρύσσεται, &c. for εἰ δὲ κηρύσσ. ὅτι Χρ. ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγ. The sense is: "but if it be publicly maintained or announced by us all, that Christ arose from the dead," &c. Πῶς λέγουσί τινες; "how can some of you maintain?" The argument, as Crell. remarks, being this: "If Christ rose, then the resurrection of the dead is not only possible, but actual." We have here a conclusion from the foregoing premises, q. d. Now Christ really and actually rose from the dead, as has been evinced on irrefragable evidence. How, then, can any deny the possibility of a resurrection? For what has once been, may again be. And, ἐ contrario, if a resurrection of the dead were to be supposed to be a vain imagination, not deserving of our belief, our faith in the resurrection of Christ would be destroyed. It is well shown by Gerdes. that in v. 12—19, the Apostle treats of the connection between the resurrection of the dead and the resurrection of Christ, and the indubitable proof thereof; tacitly rebuking the Corinthians for dullness, in not seeing this, and for too great readiness to lend an ear to the suggestions of deceivers.

14. Here we have another inference. Κενὸν is by the ancient and earlier modern, and some recent Expositors, explained useless, as not attaining the desired end. Most Expositors, however, from the time of Grot. and Mackn., assign to it the sense false and unfounded. The former interpretation seems preferable; but both may be included, the latter as dependent on the former. The sense may be thus expressed: "If Christ had not risen, our testimony of his resurrection to life and glory would have been false, and an imposture (see v. 25.), and without any benefit to ourselves, and your persuasion of the truth of our report would produce no good to yourselves."

15. εὐρισκόμεθα δὲ καὶ ψευδ. The sense (as Chrys. shows) is: "Yea, we should [thus] also be made out to be false witnesses concerning God." Κατὰ is by the best Interpreters explained concerning; a signification of the word very rare, but which the Apostle chose to employ, probably as wishing to include the sense to the prejudice of, which falsification would occasion; inasmuch as it would almost imply a want of power in God to raise the dead; for the Gentile Philosophers denied it. So Pliny Hist. Nat. L. ii. C. 7. Revocare defunctos ne Deus quidem potest.

16, 17. It is well observed by Theodoret, that here the Apostle πάλιν τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἀνακυκλοῖ λόγους, τοῖς πλείοσι συλλογισμοῖς βεβαιώσας βουλόμενος τὴν περὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως πίστιν. On the logical form, see Gerdes. It is not, he shows, a mere repetition of the arguments at vv. 13 & 14, but serves for further illustration. For (to use the words of Heydenr.) πίστις does not here, as before, signify assent to the testimony of the Apostles, concerning the resurrection of Christ, but that faith which the Corinthians had accorded to the whole Christian doctrine: or (if it be thought better to understand τὴν πίστιν objectivè) the doctrine itself of the Gospel, which would be without any solid foundation, would be of doubtful and ambiguous faith; nay, would be liable to strong suspicion, were the resurrection of Christ taken away, in which we have the plainest demonstration of Gospel truth, and the most certain confirmation of its divine origin." "The Apostle (observes Heydenr.) addresses them by an interchange of Persons, speaking first in the second, then in the third, and lastly in the first per κοινῶσιν. At v. 17, he points out a new absurdity arising from the denial of Christ's resurrection,—that they would be under the penalty of unforgiven sin, which is inconsistent with the very elements of the Christian system. See a masterly Sermon by Bp. Warburton on v. 17, where he shows that this conclusion completes the proof of the miracle of the Resurrection. Here it is proper to bear in mind, that only the possibility of a resurrection of the dead, is what is sought hence to be established, not the fact of an actual resurrection. The truth of that is, as Heydenr. observes, proved in the subsequent verses, by the especial argument, that, according to the Divine decree, all things which had perished by Adam, are to be restored by Christ. On the full sense intended by the Apostle, see Calvin and Scott.

—ἐτι ἐστὲ ἐν ταῖς ἀμ. ὡμ.] The sense here is certainly not that assigned by many recent foreign Commentators, but what the ancient and most modern ones explain it, as follows: "Ye are yet liable to the guilt and penalty of your sins, [notwithstanding you may have repented of them]; evidently pointing to the atonement of Christ; for if Christ be not raised, he has made no atonement for sin."

18. ἄρα καὶ—ἀπώλονται.] Here another consequence is pointed out, q. d. "It follows, also, that those who have died in [the faith of] Christ, (οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χριστῷ, Rev. xiv. 13.) are perished," Such seems to be the real sense of the passage. Though many ancient and some modern Commentators (as Grot., Mackn., and Schleus.) take οἱ κοιμ. ἐν Χρ. to denote those who have suffered death as martyrs for Christ's religion. Ἀπώλονται, q. d. there is an end of them and all their hopes; all their labour, toil, and suffering for Christ's sake are thrown away and perish; they are disappointed of their hope of salvation, and are no better, in a worldly view, than if they had not encountered them.

19. Here (as Crell. and Calvin remark) we have another argument ex absurdo: and in what is said there is (as Crell. observes) an answer to a tacit objection,—namely, that the Apostles know there will be no resurrection, but preach the doctrine for present advantage. Now this is shown to involve an absurdity; because, by preaching the doctrine in question, they expose themselves to present evil of every kind; and if there is to be no resurrection of the dead, there will be no future state in which they could enjoy any reward. Thus they would act as they do without any motive.

—εἰ ἐν τῇ ζωῇ ταύτῃ, &c.] The μόνον must be construed after ζωῇ. By ἡμεῖς is not meant (as Grot., Gerdes., and others suppose), "the Apostles and preachers of the word," at least not those only, but also all Christians in that age of persecution. Ἐλεεινότεροι πάντων, "we are of all men the most to be pitied." In what respects they would be such, see Calv., Gerdes., Scott, and Heydenr. "It was (as Doddr. well shows) the hope of salvation alone which could counterbalance the many peculiar trials and hardships to which Christians were then subject; without which they would indeed be more miserable than all other men."

20. Having already shown, from the fact of Christ's resurrection, the possibility of our resurrection, the Apostle now applies himself to establish its certainty; and after having at v. 20. taken for granted, as already made certain, the truth of Christ's resurrection, he proceeds to deduce from it some considerations, on which we may ground the most confident reliance of all Christians being raised from the dead. These are deduced, 1. from the close consanguinity, as it were, of Christ, as Head of the Covenant, with faithful Christians, his members; inasmuch that a close connexion must be supposed between one and the other, however dissimilar may be the mode, v. 20—23., inclusive. To use the words of Heydenr.: "He the first born son of the Father, holding a principal place in God's family, went before us to that future life, to be hoped for after death by all his brethren, even the sons of his heavenly Father. Like unto the destination of Him, the first-born, must, by the Divine counsel, be that of the rest of God's children." The Apostle then draws a parallel between our relationship to Adam, and to Christ; and reasons that the fruits of each (death and life) must naturally arise. He also at v. 23. intimates that this connexion of Christ with faithful Christians, as of the head and the members, suggests naturally the order in which this resurrection should take place; and as Christ's resurrection was admitted by the persons he is addressing, to have really taken place, so ought that of his faithful servants to be confidently expected to follow.

—νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] The full sense is: "But as things now are [this is not the case]; Christ hath risen." Ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων is for ἀπαρχὴ πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, as in Col. i. 18. πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν. Rev. i. 6. πῶτος ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν. See also Acts xxvi. 23. There may also be an allusion to the first-fruits of the corn, which was an earnest and pledge of the ensuing harvest, and indeed a commencement of it. Jesus Christ was the first [to rise] of those who have died and risen again to die no more. For those raised by Elijah, Elisha, and our Lord, after being raised from the dead, did return to the grave. Ἐγένετο is not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, some Latin Versions, and some Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb.; but without reason; for both external and internal evidence are in its favour. See Matthæi.

21, 22. The Apostle here further proves the resurrection of Christ to be the cause (as well as the pledge) of our resurrection; for since by man (i. e. a human being) sin and death entered into the world; so by Man, by One in human nature, came the resurrection of the dead; and as, in consequence of their relation to Adam, all men are born mortal, and at length die; even so, in and by Christ, shall all be made alive. See Scott. All shall be raised by him, the wicked (as Burkitt says) by his power, as their Judge, the righteous by virtue of their union with him as their Lord. The meaning here is well expressed by Heydenr. as follows: "Our connection with Adam brought us death, our connection with Christ, life: by the one we became subject to the dominion of death; by the other, being raised from the dead we shall be delivered from that dominion: the evils inflicted on us by the former will be entirely done away by the latter, and the ruin arising from the former, which sticks so close to the nature of all men, will by the latter be completely removed." V. 22. is exegetical of the preceding, and the γὰρ signifies for example.

23. Here we have, as Heydenr. observes, an answer to a supposed doubt or question as to the seeming delay, and period allotted to the awful change in question: q. d. a certain order and fixed period of time is appointed of God for this effect; in due order and succession, by certain intervals, must this take place to all, and not before the time appointed must that resurrection be expected." The Apostle then proceeds to show what that order will be. It is, indeed, not agreed whether by τάγμα be here meant order of time, or of dignity. But the former sense is preferable; the meaning being "each at the time, and in the manner ordained by God;" namely, that Christ should rise first, by himself, long before the rest; then, at his second advent, all true Christians. Οἱ τοῦ Χριστοῦ; as Gal. v. 24. οἱ τ. Χρ. The Apostle says nothing about those who are not Christ's, the wicked. Those, we know, will be raised too, and as it appears, last.

24. εἴτα τὸ τέλος.] Sub. ἔσται. On the exact sense of τέλος Expositors are not agreed.

Heydenr. thinks it is to be taken for οἱ ἔσχατοι, (as at v. 23. ἀπαρχὴ is equivalent to ὁ πρῶτος) meaning those who shall rise last, i. e. all the rest except Christ's faithful servants: or, at the termination of the period of the resurrection. Yet either interpretation is harsh; and there is no reason to reject the one adopted by the ancient and most modern Expositors, by which τέλος is supposed to mean the end of the world, or of the Christian dispensation (the æconomical or mediatorial kingdom of Christ), or both, when Christ shall have gained a complete victory over sin and death, wicked angels and wicked men, and shall resign the government of all things to God the Father, adverted to in the words following, ὅταν παραδῶ τὴν βασιλ. τ. Θ.; which Grot. illustrates from the custom of Presidents, sent by the Roman Emperor to govern provinces; who, at their return, used formally to restore their authority into the hands of their sovereign.

— ὅταν καταργήσῃ—δύναμιν.] Some doubt exists as to the persons meant by πᾶσαν ἀρχὴν καὶ πᾶσαν ἐξουσίαν καὶ δύναμιν. Of course, powers adverse to Christ must be intended; but not, as some suppose, the empires and kingdoms of this world, i. e. human power generally, but with some ancient Expositors (as Chrys. and Theodoret.) and modern ones, as Newc. and Heydenr., by these adverse powers are meant such as yet hinder the consummation of the felicity obtained for us by Christ, and are a hindrance to the Divine counsels for the completion of man's restoration for the favour of God; namely, the kingdom of Satan, ἡ ἐξουσία τοῦ σκότους, Col. i. 13. Eph. vi. 12.; also sin, misery, and death. See also v. 26. The powers who act in league with Satan, to further his purposes, are called ἐξουσία and δύναμις, to suggest their systematic opposition to the kingdom of God and Christ; just as in 2 Thess. ii. 4. the ὁ ἀνθρώπου τῆς ἀμαρτίας (meaning the upholders of sin) are said to be ὁ ἀντικείμενος καὶ υπεραίριόμενος ἐπὶ πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν ἡ σέβασμα. The persons are here called an ἀρχή, as being a regularly organized body, in opposition to the ἀρχὴ of Christ.

25. δεῖ γὰρ βασιλ.] The δεῖ seems chiefly meant of the necessity of fulfilling the Scriptures, "which cannot be broken." This is clear from the words of David, Ps. ex. 1. then introduced.

26. ἔσχατος—θάνατος.] I would render (with the sanction of some eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, as Chrys., Theod., Gerdes., and Heydenr.), "And, last of all, the enemy Death is to be destroyed." Now as all enemies and obstacles are generally encountered in the order of difficulty, this suggests an idea of Death being the most formidable enemy. Thus what is said is equivalent to, "He will subject all his enemies,—even, at last, Death, [the greatest.]" Death is here personified, though elsewhere more usually represented under the name "Αἰδης, or Samäel, or Asmodeus; the meaning, however, being the state of death. The above view of the sense will enable us to explain the next words πάντα γὰρ ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοῦς πόδας αὐτοῦ; which can only be done by supplying a short clause, taken from the preceding, to which the γὰρ has reference; q. d. I say all, since δεῖ πάντας τοὺς ἑχθρούς ὑπὸ τοῦς πόδας αὐτοῦ τίθεσθαι, it is predicted of him, that He [i. e. God] hath put all things (by which is necessarily included all persons, all creatures, animate as well as inanimate) under his feet." The words of the Psalm were primarily meant of the first Adam, as being the representative of the human race; but are here, and in Heb. ii. 6, referred, in their secondary and mystical application, to the second Adam, Christ. Indeed, the whole Psalm is referred to the Messiah by our Lord himself, Matt. xxi. 16. Εἰπὼν, sub. ἡ γραφή. At ὅτι ἐκτός supply τοῦτο ἐστί. Render, "It is plain that [this must be] with the exception of Him who put all things under him." This sense of ἐκτός occurs in Acts xxvi. 22, sometimes in the Sept., and occasionally in the Classical writers.

28. ὅταν δὲ ὑποταγῇ, &c.] Of this obscure and disputed passage, the meaning seems to be this: "and when all things shall be subjected to Him (i. e. the Son), then shall the Son also himself declare himself to be subject to Him that had subjected all things to Him;" meaning (to use the words of Mr. Holden) that when all the designs of the Son's Mediatorial kingdom shall be accomplished, the Son, as Mediator, will become subject to the Father, i. e. will resign his mediatorial office to the Father, from whom he received it; that God (meaning the Godhead, comprehending Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) may be all in all [to men], i. e. reign without the intervention of a Mediator, which will no longer be necessary. That this passage, when properly understood, gives no support to the Arian and Socinian notions of the Son's nature being inferior to the Father's, has been proved by Pareus and others in the Critici Sacri, as also by Petav., Wolf, Whitby, Dodd., and especially by Gerdes. and Heydenr. "The truth (says Heydenr.) represented under this image is, that the Son of God, as soon as he shall have overcome death, and restored the dead to life immortal, will have discharged the whole office committed to him; and will then, as it were, take leave (missionem quasi petet a Patre) of that office on earth which he has now completely discharged; having vanquished all adversaries, that power given him by the Father, which he has hitherto employed for their defeat, he will no longer make use of for this effect, nor will it be necessary for him any longer to make use of it, since there will be no more enemies to subdue."

Τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν εἶναι is a phrase denoting to be possessed of complete power, equivalent to ὦν ἐπὶ πάντων, or ἐπάνω πάντων in Rom. ix. 5. See also John iii. 31. Eph. iv. 6 and i. 23. also my Note on Thucyd. viii. 95.

29. ἐπεὶ τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτ. ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν;] Here the Apostle resumes the subject he had broken off from at v. 23. At ἐπεὶ there is an ellipsis of ἄλλως, "Since [otherwise, i. e. if that were not the case, i. e. if there were no resurrection.]" On the sense of the next words, οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, a great diversity of opinion exists. If we were to judge of the difficulty of the passage from the variety of interpretations (see Poole's Syn., Wolf, Gerdes., and Heydenr.), we should say that this is the most obscure and least understood passage in the N. T. The learning and labour expended on ascertaining the sense has been immense, and the matter contained in the various Dissertations would form a good sized volume. Yet the result of this exertion has been by no means correspondent. In fact, the effect produced on readers of the whole mass would be, that, instead of imperfectly comprehending the sense of the passage, they would be quite at a loss to know what judgment to form of it. The main points of dissent in opinion among Interpreters are these: 1. Whether βαπτιζόμενοι is to be taken in a literal, or in a metaphorical sense. 2. Whether τῶν νεκρῶν is to be understood literally, or figuratively. 3. What is the force of the ὑπὲρ. Now, in every one of these questions, the great fault has been that of devising certain novel and almost unheard of significations; and which, however good in themselves, are not agreeable to the context, and the scope of the Apostle throughout this whole Chapter. As to those interpretations which proceed on taking βαπτιζόμενοι in a metaphorical sense, they seem entitled to little attention; and that which explains it "overwhelmed with miseries and calamities," cannot be admitted, for want of the addition of some word or words denoting misery or suffering. There can be no doubt but that the expression is to be taken in the natural sense. As to the interpretation of Le Clerc, Ellis, Deyling, Dodd., Newc., and Scott, who take the ὑπὲρ for ἀντί, an allusion being supposed to the case of those who, after the martyrdom of Christians, presented themselves for baptism, to supply the place of the martyrs,—that is destitute of Philological proof, and, as involving so very far-fetched an allusion, is not likely to be true. More attention is due to the interpretation of some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors (as Scaliger, Grot., Wall, Augustin, Heydenr., and Crell.), by which an allusion is supposed to the practice (in use, as we learn from Tertullian, Epiph., and Ambrose, in the first century) of vicarious baptism; i. e. of baptizing a living person in the place of, and for the benefit of one who has died unbaptized; just as, by some, the Eucharist was administered to the dead. But no certain proof has been adduced that the practice was prevalent so early as the time when this passage was written, or at Corinth. Nor is it to be believed that the Apostle would, for the sake of so precarious an argument (for the practice was, doubtless, very rare and secret), countenance so grovelling a superstition, involving a profanation of Baptism, as Calvin observes. "Obsecro (continues he) an verisimile est, sacrilegium, quo Baptismus inquinaretur, ac traheretur in abusum prorsus Magicum, Apostolum protulisse vice argumenti, et non saltem uno verbo verbulo notasse vitium." Yet surely the interpretation adopted by that able Expositor, "to be baptized in articulo mortis," besides being destitute of Philological proof, is liable, in some degree, to the same objection. And vain is it to urge, with Heydenr., that in such a case the Apostle argues ex concessis, and is using an argumentum ad hominem. For no other argument so used by St. Paul would have the same consequences. Although, therefore, the interpretation which refers it to vicarious baptism does indeed fit in with the words as they stand, (rather, perhaps, by a sort of coincidence than agreement), it cannot, I think, be admitted; since, besides being liable to the foregoing fatal objection, it is little suitable to the context, the sense thence arising, in conjunction with the argument of the context, being not a little frigid. And as to the interpretation of Gerdes, "ut potius (vel ex illorum hominum qui resurrectionem mortuorum negant, sententia) ipse ille baptismus sit baptismus pro talibus qui resurrecturi sint nunquam," i. e. "pro mortuis;" that sense, however agreeable to the context, cannot be extracted from the words without great violence. The interpretation most likely to be the true one is such as shall depend on no remote or far-fetched allusion; shall be agreeable to the context; and be shown, with some probability, to be inherent in the words themselves. Now this, if I mistake not, will apply to an interpretation most early adopted, namely, that of Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, and the generality of Expositors in modern times, including some very eminent names, as Hamm., Burkitt, Wets., and Pyle., who explain: "What will they be doing, i. e. what will they benefit themselves, who are baptized for the sake of, i. e. in hope of, the resurrection of the dead. They will be no better for it, either in this world or the next." The only objection that can be urged to this interpretation is, its supposing the ellipsis of τῆς ἀναστάσεως. But as that forms the grand subject of the whole Chapter, there is surely no great harshness in supposing it left to be understood. How simple and agreeable to the context is this view of the sense, will appear from an examination of the minute and accurate Analysis of Gerdesius. And that it should be the general interpretation, and such as unlettered persons immediately form in their mind (not at all, be it observed, helped out by the common translation, that being word for word after the original), is a proof that it cannot be really, though it may be grammatically harsh. This, interpretation, then, in its simplicity carries on it the stamp of truth. There is, with reason, supposed to be an allusion to the confession which preceded the rite of baptism, "I believe in the resurrection of the dead," and the interrogation which succeeded its answer in the affirmative, "Wilt thou be baptized in this faith, i. e. in the hope of a resurrection." There may also be (as the ancient Commentators think) an allusion to the ancient mode of baptism by immersion; which, while typifying a death unto sin and a new birth unto righteousness, also had reference to the Christian's communion with his Lord, both in death and resurrection from the dead. See Rom. vi. 4. συνετάφημεν αὐτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος εἰς τὸν θάνατον, &c. and Col. ii. 12. Certainly, Baptism is (as the best Theologians are agreed), if not a type of the resurrection, yet a sign and seal of the same. See Paræus, De Dieu, and especially the elaborate disquisition of Gerdes. Finally, the reception of Christian baptism and adoption of the Religion was one with the recognition of a resurrection of the dead; therefore, for any persons professing to be Christians, to disavow that doctrine, was gross inconsistency, and must deprive them of all benefit from that Religion. And here, too (as Calvin justly remarks) the Apostle, as before, is arguing ex absurdo.

Instead of the second τῶν νεκρῶν, some MSS., two Versions, and certain Fathers have τῶν ἀν-τῶν, which is approved by Mill and Beng., and edited by Griesb. and others: but without sufficient reason; for the external evidence is too weak; and as to internal, the new reading has every appearance of an alteration, to remove an inelegant repetition. But, in fact, such repetitions as this are often introduced for the sake of emphasis; which is indeed, here recognized by Calvin.

30. τί καὶ ἡμεῖς, &c.] By the ἡμεῖς understand "we Apostles," meaning especially himself. The sense is, "Why, too, are we encountering jeopardy every hour?" i. e. upon what other hope than of the resurrection of the dead?

31. καθ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω.] A strongly figurative phrase, expressive of his being continually in danger of his very life; for there is a climax on the preceding κινδυνεύομεν. Νῆ is a participle of solemn protestation. Of τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχησιν, &c. it is generally agreed that the sense is, "the boasting which I have concerning you," ὑμ. for ὑμῶν, i. e. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. By the mention of this the Apostle delicately hints at what is their duty.

32. εἰ κατὰ ἄνθ. ἐθηριομάχησα ἐν Ἐφ.] A difference of opinion exists as to the sense of ἐθηριομ., which some take in a literal, others in a metaphorical sense. The greater part adopt the former view, urging that the air of the passage suggests a reference to some imminent danger. This, they think, is confirmed by the strong language of the Apostle at 2 Cor. i. 8—10, with respect to some extreme peril at Ephesus: ὥστε ἐξαπορηθῆναι ἡμᾶς τοῦ ζῆν· ἀλλὰ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἐαυτοῖς τὸ ἀπόκριμα τοῦ θανάτου ἐσχῆκαμεν—ὅς τηλικούτου θανάτου ἐρρύσατο ἡμᾶς, &c. They further urge that Tertullian, Origen, and Cyprian so took the word; and that the fact itself, considering how frequent was this punishment for alleged treason in that age, is not improbable. This may readily be admitted; but whether the thing actually happened in the case of Paul, may be doubted. That it should not have been recorded by St. Luke would seem strange, and not to be paralleled by the omission of the story of the penitent thief in three of the Evangelists; though it may be admitted that several important circumstances must have occurred at Ephesus, besides those recorded in Acts xix. As to the air of the context, it suggests, I think, no more than extreme peril of life: for that is all that is meant by the expression κατ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω; and the language of the passage at 2 Cor. is exactly of the same nature, and amounts to no more. As to Tertull., Origen, and Cyprian recording a tradition, of the Apostle being exposed to wild beasts, the tradition itself might easily arise from no more than taking ἔθνη. here in a literal sense. That he should have been exposed to wild beasts, involves no improbability; but that such was meant to be asserted in the term under consideration, is more than can be proved. If the expression stood alone, there would be less difficulty in admitting that such might be the sense. But the κατ' ἄνθρωπον, with which it is associated, alters the case; since that admits of no sense very suitable to the literal import of ἔθνη; whereas the acceptance in which it is elsewhere used by the Apostle is such as highly favours the metaphorical sense ascribed to ἔθνη. by some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators (as Beza, Grot., Raphel., Pearce, Schoettg., Dodd., Newc., Wakef., and Rosenm.) who suppose the Apostle to mean only the imminent peril of life which he ran (as we find by Acts xix.) from the opposition of ferocious adversaries. And when we consider that such a use of θηριομαχείω was (as is proved by Philological illustrators) usual in that age, being found in Ignat. Epist. to the Romans, C. 5, there is great reason to think that this interpretation is the true one. Κατ' ἄνθρωπον may thus be regarded as an elliptical expression, for ὥστε κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγειν, or ἵνα κατ' ἄνθρ. λέγω, Anglice, “to employ an usual phrase.” To the examples adduced of this figurative use of θηριομαχείω I am enabled to add another from Liban. Epist. 606. l. ἃ ἐποιοῦν ἂν περὶ Σωκράτην, εἰ κατὰ Σωκράτην ἐγεγόνειν, ὅτε αὐτῷ τὰ θῆρια ἐπέκειντο, συγκόφανται πρεῖς. So Euripides in his Hel. 980, speaks of struggling with hunger as with a beast. See more in the Note on Ephes. vi. 12. The point is, however, after all, one of uncertain determination, and the view of the sense first stated may be the true one. Either seems preferable to supposing, with Chrys. and Heydenr., that κατὰ ἄνθρ. ἔθνη. means “quantum ad hominum voluntatem, quod in hominum potestate fuit, cum bestiis pugnavi,” meaning that it was their purpose to thrust him into the Circus among the bestiarii, from which peril he was delivered by Divine interposition. A method of interpretation exceedingly harsh.

The words φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν, αὖριον γὰρ ἀποθνήσκομεν are derived from Is. xxii. 13. Similar sentiments abound in the Heathen writers.

33. Leaving the argumentum ex absurdo, the Apostle now proceeds to direct exhortation and admonition. Μὴ πλαν. is a form appropriate to warning. The words of the admonition are by some supposed to be taken from Euripides; by others, from Menander. They occur in both; the latter probably deriving them from the former. This is not, however, a regular quotation (for then the metre would require χρῆσθ' instead of χρηστὰ); but had probably grown, by frequent use, into a popular gnome. The implied censure was, no doubt, meant for certain teachers, who encouraged, or permitted close intercourse with the Heathens; the same probably who had countenanced attendance at the idol-feasts.

34. The Apostle now presses home his admonition. Ἐκνήφειν properly signifies “to awake from a deep sleep,” especially that of drunkenness, as Gen. ix. 24., and elsewhere in the Sept., as also in the Classical writers: but it is also used, in a figurative sense, of awaking from the inebriety of error, and returning to a right mind. See Dr. Parr's Sermon on 1 Cor. xv. 8. Ἀδικαίως many Commentators supply ῥήσοις. But it is better taken for ὡς δικαίως δεῖ, “as it is right you should.” And this is supported by the authority of some ancient Versions. Μὴ ἁμαρτ. must, from the context, mean “fall into the errors [which have been above adverted to].” For the same reason, ἀγνωσίαν γὰρ Θεοῦ τινὲς ἔχουσι must denote persons who, upholding baneful errors as to the resurrection, and other fundamental doctrines, show that they know not God aright. The words πρὸς ἐντρ. λέγω are a formula of affectionate expostulation, occurring before at vi. 5.

35. πῶς ἐγείρονται—ἐρχονται.] The Apostle now proceeds to notice two objections, which were probably often urged, in the form of questions, to the doctrine of the resurrection: for, as Gerdes. shows, the Corinthian adversaries, like cavillers in general, sought to overturn the doctrine of the resurrection by puzzling questions. So here it is objected by way of interrogation, How can all the different parts of our bodies, which have been resolved into dust, or apparently annihilated by fire, or devoured by beasts, or have become so mingled with and converted into the nature of other animals, nay, of trees, plants, &c.—how can these, after having been for so many ages thus dissipated, be at length reunited, and coalesce into one body.” 2. [If that be possible] with what kind of body are the dead to rise? These objections the Apostle shows proceed from folly; and he introduces a popular illustration of the doctrine, derived from what subsists in plants. It is plain, however, from the air of the words, that (as Gerdes shows) the objects intended, by this moving of questions and starting of difficulties, not so much to ask the manner in which the resurrection of the body was to be effected, as (by an idiom common in our own language) civilly to deny its possibility.

36. Here the Apostle first proves, in a popular way, the possibility of the resurrection, by adverting to a similar process going on in the vegetable world; where the same objection to the possibility might, a priori, be made. Thus he shows that by a parity of reasoning, the body which dies may be quickened again; and at v. 42. asserts that it is so. Of course, ἀποθάνῃ is here to be taken, in a popular sense, for “as it were dies,” namely, by suffering corruption. He adverts to that mysterious process (as little to be accounted for as the resurrection of the body) going on in the buried and rotting grain; whereby the germ, or bud, fed by the corruption of the roots, springs up into new life. The expression ἄφρων must not be too rigidly interpreted, since it may only convey the idea of inconsiderateness, and want of due thought. Similar terms employed by our Lord are probably to be taken with a similar limitation of sense. The Apostle’s meaning is well expressed by Prof. Dobree as follows: “The living body is, like a seed, organized matter united with a vital principle: when the body dies, and the seed is sown, the organized matter is thrown off, and replaced by other matter, of different form and properties.”

37, 38. In these verses the Apostle adverts to the other objection involved in the words of ver. 35. πῶς δὲ σώματι ἔρχονται; And, continuing the same similitude, he shows, that it is not necessary that the bodies of the raised should be precisely, and in all respects, the same as when they died; since in like manner, in the case of grain and plants, the body committed to the earth is not the same, but in many respects different, yet essentially the same. Thus the objection raised from the dissipation of the particles of the body which has died, loses its force; since it is not necessary to that general identity, that the body raised should be composed of the very same particles; which is inconsistent with what the Apostle subjoins, ἀλλὰ γυμνὸν κόκκον (i. e. the grain apart from the blade and ear, which shall afterwards spring from it); in which expression it seems plainly implied, that the bodies shall differ as the grain and the ear differ, the latter being far more glorious than the former.

—καθὼς ἠθέλησε.] “God (observes Doddridge) is said to give it this body as he pleases, because we know not how it is produced; and the Apostle’s leading thought is, that it is absurd to argue against a resurrection on a principle which is so palpably false as that must be, which supposes us to understand all the process of the divine works.” The ἴδιον σῶμα is, I conceive, meant to further explain the σῶμα καθὼς ἠθέλησε, on which the whole sentence seems to turn; q. d. God hath ordained that each particular seed should reproduce, not its own body, but one far more glorious, and of a form such as it hath pleased the Almighty to assign to it.

39—44. In this passage the Apostle, proceeding in his confutation of the objections of his adversaries as to the quality of the bodies to be raised, employs an illustration of what he has been saying, and that by similitude. His main purpose is to inculcate, directly and expressly, the important truth, which at v. 37, 38. he had only intimated, as it were by implication;—namely, that the raised body, though in all essential points the same with the body buried, would be very different and far more excellent. Accordingly the argument is this: that as, throughout the works of the whole creation, whether earthly or heavenly, animate or inanimate, a great difference subsists between the bodies of one class, as compared with those of another class;—and even those of the same class, differing widely—such (v. 42.) will be the case here; so will be the difference, at the resurrection, between the bodies which shall arise, as compared with those that were committed to the earth. In the verses following, the nature of that difference is pointed out, and the reasons on which it is founded are intimated. It might, indeed, seem that the Apostle has enlarged more on the diversity of the various classes of bodies from each other, than was necessary for the purpose of the illustration in question. But it was done for a good reason; for (as Rosenm. justly suggests) “the Apostle means to infer from the vast variety of bodies, yet all bodies, the power of the Deity to produce from a mass of corruption a glorious and immortal body.” And surely, as Locke observes, “it is not more incomprehensible, that a glorious immortal body should arise from a mass of corruption, than that all this vast variety of splendid forms should arise from nothing.”

As to the precise nature of the difference between the earthly and the glorified body, on this much has been written, but to little purpose. Indeed, the Apostle’s words were not meant to teach us, what perhaps no human language could have made clear. It is sufficient for us to be assured, that the bodies of the righteous will be raised in a spiritualized state, and yet be, in a certain sense, the same with those that were buried.

—οὐ πάντα σὰρξ, &c.] Σὰρξ is here used for σῶμα, because, as Heydenr. observes, “cor-

Δόξα here signifies dignity and excellence. "Ἐν φθορᾷ and ἐν ἀτιμίᾳ are adjectival phrases, for the adjectives φθαρτός and ἀτίμος. It is generally agreed on by the best Expositors that ψυχικός here, as being opposed to πνευματικός (especially as the expression is used with a reference to the words of Moses respecting the body of Adam, ἐγένετο εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν) must signify animal (literally that which draws in the breath of life, necessary to the existence of all animal bodies), that which is endowed with faculties of sense, and has need of food, drink, and sleep for its support.

44. ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικόν, &c.] These words are meant to throw light on what has been said at v. 42—44; but, as there seems something awkward, Gerdes would suppose a confusion in the whole passage; in order to effectually remove which, he recommends a transposition of vv. 45, 46. This, he says, will make all plain: which is very true; but it will not justify so great a liberty being taken with the text, without any authority whatever from MSS. or ancient Versions. It is, therefore, better to regard the text as it now stands, as one among the many examples of Synchysis, found in St. Paul's writings. If, indeed, it be necessary to suppose any such perturbation of the natural order of the matter, as Gerdesius imagines. But that will not be necessary, if we suppose, with Photius ap. Œcum. and Heydenr., that the clause ἔστι σῶμα—πνευματικόν with its illustration in v. 45. is interposed between v. 44. and 46. (which verses are closely connected together), to show the meaning intended to be affixed to the words ψυχικόν and πνευματικόν. In order to complete the sense, we must supply, from the subject matter, the words "to every human being so sown in corruption."

45. οὕτω γέγραπται.] Namely, in Gen. ii. 7.; but the quotation terminates at ζῶσαν. Indeed, it is, properly speaking, not a citation, but an application of the words of Scripture; in which also, for adaptation's sake, πρῶτος and Ἀδὰμ are inserted. To this clause, thus brought forward, the Apostle subjoins an apodosis, in the words ὁ ἔσχατος. Ἀδὰμ εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοπ.; which are (as Mackn. observes) formed on our Lord's words at John v. 36. See also v. 21. vi. 23. By ζῶσαν ψυχὴν is properly meant a living sentient creature: but, in the application made of the passage by the Apostle, it must mean more; namely, a vital principle, intended for immortality, but lost by sin, and only to be restored by the last Adam, the antitype of the first, i. e. Christ, who is elsewhere so called. See Rom. v. 14. and the ample proofs and illustrations from the Rabbinical writers in Schoetgen's Hor. Heb. in loc.

46. ἀλλ' οὐ πρῶτον τὸ πνεῦμα, &c.] Supply σῶμά ἐστι. These words are to be referred, not to v. 45., which immediately precedes, but to the last words of v. 44. ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικόν, καὶ ἔστι σῶμα πνευματικόν, since that might suggest a question (or objection, here answered by anticipation) why the spiritualized body might not have preceded the animal body. To which the answer is (by a reference to the Divine decree) that the animal must precede, the spiritual follow. The reason for this procedure is suggested in the very nature of the terms themselves ψυχικός and πνευματικός, which imply that the latter is far more perfect than the former. Since it is agreeable to the usual course of God's operations, both in the physical and moral world, that the more perfect should succeed the less perfect, (and not vice versa) and from the natural to proceed to the supernatural. The Apostle, however, intimates the reason for this procedure more clearly in the verses following.

47. ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος—οὐρανοῦ.] The first and second man are here opposed to each other, as at v. 45.; the first and last Adam: and as, in the former case, the second Adam is Christ, so here the second man must be so too. The best Expositors are agreed that ἐξ οὐρανοῦ must refer to the heavenly original of Christ; this making him superhuman and Divine. See Cameron in Poole's Syn. and Bp. Bull Jud. Eccl. Cathol. v. 5.

Ὁ Κύριος is absent from almost all the uncial MSS., the Vulg. and Italic Versions, and many Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. and Tittm. It has, indeed, the appearance of coming from the margin; but there is not sufficient evidence to warrant its being cancelled. Its great antiquity is attested by its being found in the Peschito Syriac Version. Of course, the sense will remain the same.

48, 49. The full sense here may be expressed in paraphrase as follows: "As [was] the earthly [man, Adam] such also are [in origin] those that are earthly (i. e. they live in an animal and corruptible body as he did); and [on the other hand] as in the heavenly [man, CHRIST] so are also they that are [to be] heavenly," i. e. to have glorious and immortal bodies. And as we have borne, and do bear (for ἐφορ. may signify both), in our bodies the image (or characteristics) of the earthly [man, Adam; namely, in frailty, sin, sorrow, and death]; so shall we [at the resurrection] bear the stamp of the heavenly [man, Christ]; resembling him in our glorified and immortal frames." The word εἰκὼν is, as Kypke observes, used properly of statues, pictures, &c., formed after an archetype, and consequently representing it exactly.

50. Thus far the Apostle has shown the possibility that God should give us, at the resurrection, bodies very different from our present ones. He now shows the impossibility that those bodies should be, like our present ones, of flesh and blood, mortal, frail, and continually changing.

— οὐ δύνανται i. e. cannot in the nature of things. Κληρον. here signifies simply "possess and enjoy." The words οὐδὲ ἡ φθορὰ τὴν ἀφθ. κλ. are exegetical of the preceding: "It is not possible, I say, for those fleshly, corruptible, and mortal frames to enjoy a place fitted for incorruptible and immortal beings."

51—53. Here commences the third part of the Discourse, which is more especially intended for those who, while admitting the doctrine of a resurrection of the body, staggered at the manner, time, and other circumstances. The preceding verse seems to have been intended as a connecting link, to unite what is said from v. 34—50. inclusive, to what is said at v. 51—57. Or (as Calvin understands it), having 1st, shown that there will be a resurrection of the dead; and 2dly, pointed out of what kind it will be, the Apostle now enters into a more minute description of the manner [and that for the sake of those who stumbled at that only], which he calls a mystery, because it had been hitherto not unfolded in Scripture; and also for the purpose of drawing greater attention to what he is saying.

— ἰδου, μυστήριον ὑμῖν λέγω, &c.] Having sufficiently shown how the objections and cavils of the adversaries were to be removed and refuted, and the belief of the faithful fortified, the Apostle now proceeds to communicate, for their information, some new and most important mysteries of the faith; certain verities hitherto quite unknown, which could be derived from no other source but a Divine revelation; especially of the transmutation and, as it were, transfiguration of those faithful servants of Christ, who shall be found alive at the last day, and of the incorruptibility and immortality to be communicated; intermixing some intimations as to the manner and the order of events which shall usher in the last great day. The ἰδου has here great force, as calling their attention to what was both new and momentous, matter at once of wonder and of joy. Μυστήριον has here a figurative force, which is excellently pointed out by Gerdes., and, from him, more briefly and perspicuously, by Heydenr., as follows: "Nempe rem hactenus incognitam, sponte sua et sine peculiari revelatione divina a nemine cognoscendam, imo excedentem adeo captum nostrum, ut, quamvis divinitus revelatam, mens tantum mortalium et intellectus humanus eam penitus assequi nequeat." The sense may be thus expressed: "We shall not indeed all of us die: but we shall (i. e. most) all be changed (i. e. undergo a transmutation, in order to incorruptibility) before we can enter into heaven." The use of the first person (we) will not prove that the Apostle thought the day of judgment to be so near at hand, that he and his contemporaries might see it, since (as the best Expositors are agreed) it appears to be used per κοινωσιν; the Apostle here speaking in the person of those alive at the last day; or, at least, meaning thereby to designate such as should be found alive. See Gerdes. Ἀλλὰ σσεσθαι is here put for μετασχηματίζεσθαι Phil. iii. 21. or μεταμορφοῦσθαι in Matt. xvii. 2. Several various readings are here found; (see Griesb. and Scholz.), yet none that merit any attention; all of them being easily accounted for from the somewhat unusual nature of the phraseology, and a certain degree of obscurity in the sentiment; with which, it seems, some were perplexed, and others, presumptuous in their ignorance, set themselves to alter for the easier; though greatly to the prejudice of the sense intended by the Apostle, which is most evident both from the context and from the parallel passage at 1 Thess. iv. 15. compared with Acts x. 42. Rom. xiv. 9. The full meaning intended is, as Heydenr. shows: "All must undergo the change necessary to fit them for immortality, both those alive and those dead. The latter, after previous death and corruption, on being again restored to life, shall receive a glorified body; the former without having undergone death and corruption, being alive, shall be so changed, that the mortal body shall be absorbed by an immortal one (2 Cor. v. 4.); and those parts of the body which are incapable of eternal life and heavenly felicity, shall be separated and cast aside; while those, which may furnish the materials of a glorified body, shall remain and be preserved, and assume a form and fashion suited to eternity."

52. The Apostle now indicates the mode of this change, as being most sudden; for ἐν ἀτόμῳ (scil. χρόνῳ) and ἐν ῥιπῇ were common expressions to denote the shortest conceivable time. Ἐν ἐσχάτῃ σάλπιγγι. To discuss, with some, the number of trumpets to be sounded, is, I think, quite irrelevant. Though the opinion that there will be seven trumpetings, has some countenance from a passage of Rev. x. 7., where the seventh trumpet is the solemn announcement, that the mystery of God is accomplished. Nay, Dr. Tilloch supposes this passage of the Apostle to have an allusion to the last of the Apocalyptic trumpets. In which view, however, I cannot acquiesce. There is, I think, plainly an allusion to the custom both of the Jews and Greeks, by which summons to judicature, or other meetings for civil or religious purposes were signified by sound of trumpet; yet I cannot agree with Heydenr., who would resolve all into metaphor. We cannot surely venture to infer less from the plain words of the Apostle, than that the Almighty will issue his FIAT for the solemn convocation of the dead and living—if not by sound of a trumpet literally (as Calvin thinks is not to be understood), yet by some (as Gerdes. says), "signo notorio externo," but of what nature we must not presume to pronounce. If we might suppose, with Gerdes., that the κέλευσμα (or φωνή of John v. 25.) would be such as that recorded in Exod. to have accompanied the promulgation of the Law on Mount Sinai, I would venture to suggest that it may be one of those awful convulsions of nature, which the interior state of our globe permits us to suppose might be such as to make themselves heard throughout nearly the whole world. From the researches of the great naturalist, Humboldt, we know that the sound of the volcanic eruption of Copotaxi is heard throughout a radius of twelve hundred miles. But I desire to pronounce no decided opinion; sensible that, in such a case as this, where no distinct knowledge is intended to be communicated, it is our duty ἐν σοφίᾳ σωφρονεῖν.

— καὶ οἱ νεκροί, &c.] In the καὶ there is an implied notion of instantaneous performance. See Ps. xxxiii. 9. cxlviii. 5. Judith xvi. 14. Job v. 20. By the ἡμεῖς is meant ἡμεῖς οἱ τότε ζῶντες; the Apostle here, as before, speaking not in his own person, but in that of the persons then alive. Thus Doddr. justly rejects the inference so often drawn from hence (and unwarily conceded by Grot. and Rosenm.), that the Apostle expected he should live till Christ appeared for judgment. Ἀλλαγούμεθα signifies, "we shall undergo the change in question, receive incorruptible in the place of corruptible bodies." How and in what way, and to what degree, it is not for us to speculate, except by adverting, by way of comparison, to the change which takes place in the transformation of the caterpillar to a butterfly; which has ever been considered an emblem of the immortality of the soul.

53. This is certainly not (as has been generally supposed) a mere repetition for greater effect, of what was said at v. 30.; but as there we have the assertion, that this change of corruptible to incorruptible will take place, so here we are told that it must necessarily take place. I have thought proper to notice this error, chiefly because it has led to another and far more serious one; namely, that of supposing (as many have done) that there is here, in addition to what was before said, a specification of the manner of the change,—namely, by the corruptible body of those then alive having an incorruptible body (a σῶμα ἀνυοειδές), put over it as a garment; like the doctrine of the Platonic philosophers as to an ὄχημα (so Hierocl. speaks of ὄχηματα πνευματικά), learnedly treated on by Cudworth, Intell. System, iii. 3, 27. p. 1072. A notion which, though it may seem to be somewhat countenanced by 2 Cor. v. 2, 3., rests on no solid foundation, and merely took its rise from the peculiar metaphor here employed, formed on a blending of two images. For the best recent Expositors are, with reason, agreed that ἐνδύσασθαι here and at v. 54. only signifies, by a figure taken from putting off one garment and putting on another, to assume, receive, as Eph. iv. 24. Col. iii. 10.

54. The Apostle now shows the conformity of this doctrine of the resurrection of the dead with the word of prophecy. On which see the able Dissertation of Gerdesius.

— γενήσεται] "shall be [accomplished]." Ὁ λόγος, the prophecy, namely, of Isaiah xxv. 8. The words agree with the version of Theodotion; though both differ from the Sept. and the Hebrew; agreeing with it, however, in eis nikos, which is by almost all Commentators taken for eis τέλος, i. e. eis τὸν αἰῶνα; though Bp. Marsh successfully vindicates our English Translators, who render it "in victory," which, indeed, is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac. Instead of seeking for a Hebraism in νίκος, he rightly, I think, applies it to κατεπόθη, and translates the passage, "Death is overcome with triumph;" the Hebrew verb signifying, literally, absorpsit, and, figuratively, vicit.

In the next words the style rises, by a bold personification of "Αἰὼς, to the highest pitch; and is expressed in a kind of song of triumph for the victory obtained by Christ over Death and the Grave; whatever of bitterness either might heretofore have had, being then removed by Christ. The passage is from Hos. xiii. 14; and the Apostle's words differ only, by the transposition of νίκος and κέντρον, from the ancient Versions; except that for νίκος the Sept. has δική. But I suspect that to be only a gloss on νείκος, which reading is found in some of the Fathers, though evidently only an error of the scribes for νίκος. The Hebrew, indeed, differs too materially to admit of any mode of reconciliation. Yet it differs more in words than sense; so that it was not inapplicable to the Apostle's purpose. The κέντρον is by some supposed to allude to the dart which the Jewish writers, and many Classical and modern Poets, depict death as holding. The Greek Commentators, however, and, of the modern ones, Grot., Crell., Vorst., and Kraus. (more rightly, I think,) suppose an allusion to the sting of serpents, or scorpions. So Rev. ix. 10. καὶ ἔχουσιν οὐράς ὁμοίας σκορπείων, καὶ κέντρα ἢ ἐν ταῖς οὐαῖς αὐτῶν. This, indeed, is exceedingly confirmed by the next words; for, as Theophyl. remarks, "the sting of serpents constitutes their strength, and when that is taken away, they cannot hurt, if they would." Thus the sense of the next words is: "It is sin that gives death its chief power over us, and thus occasions its greatest bitterness."

56. The words ἡ δὲ δύναμις τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ νόμος may be rendered: "It is the Law which is the strength of sin;" i. e. what causes this power of sin, imparts this power to it. By ὁ νόμος seems to be meant, not the law of Moses, (as most Commentators explain,) but, as the Greek Commentators, and of the modern ones, Grot., Crell., &c., understand, law of every kind, both natural and revealed. So Rom. v. 13. ἁμαρτία δὲ οὐκ ἔλλογετο μὴ ὄντος νόμου. See also Rom. iv. 15. and vii. 9.

57. The Apostle concludes with thanksgiving to God, the Author of all good, and an exhortation (as in the parallel passage of 1 Thess. iv. 13—18.) to be steadfast in the faith of the Gospel; and especially in this important article of the resurrection of the dead. And first with respect to the former, it may, with Gerdes., be regarded as uttered in a sort of foretaste, through faith, of that period of glory, when he should join with the heavenly choir in singing ἡ σωτηρία τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν, τῷ καθηγμένῳ ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ τῷ Ἀρνίῳ! Rev. vii. 10. Of this verse the full sense is ably drawn forth in a masterly Sermon of Cudworth (on this text) appended to his Intellectual System; where he considers this victory as a three-fold victory, obtained over a three-fold enemy; 1. over Sin, as that which is the cause of death; 2. over the Law, as that which aggravates the guilt, and exasperates the power of Sin; 3. over Death, the fruit and consequence of sin; and shows that the victory over death is expressed by the resurrection of the body to life and immortality; which, as it was meritoriously procured for us by Christ's dying upon the cross, so it will be really effected at last by the same Spirit of Christ which gives the victory over sin here. See Rom. viii. 11.

58. The Apostle now concludes his appeal with a noble ἐπιφώνημα, forming, as it were, a practical corollary on the foregoing profound ratiocination on the resurrection of the dead, enjoining three duties; 1. of firmness in faith; 2. immovableness in hope; 3. proficiency in holiness and good works of every kind. That the expressions ἐδραῖοι and ἀμετακίνητοι have respectively this reference, would appear from Col. i. 23. εἶγε ἐπιμένετε τῇ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἐδραῖοι καὶ μὴ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ εὐαγγελίου οὗ ἠκούσατε. See Gerdes.

They were very properly exhorted to that firmness in the faith, demanded by the authority on which the above revelations were made; that hope, full of immortality, which must result from a firm faith; and lastly, that zealous performance of all good works, which would put to the test the firmness of their faith, and furnish the fairest fruits of its efficacy. So Gerdes. understands the passage. In ἐδραῖοι there seems to be, not (what Gerdes. imagines) an agonistic, but an architectural metaphor. Thus Simonides, cited by Grot., calls a good man χερσὶ τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νοῷ τετράγωνον, as we say upright and downright. And so Dr. Young finely expresses the same idea in his noble lines:

"On reason build resolve, that column of True majesty in man."

The last clause εἰδότες ὅτι ὁ κόπος, &c. has reference to the preceding words περισσεύοντες ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ τοῦ Κυρίου πάντοτε, with allusion to that recompense at the resurrection of the just, the hope of which would be necessary to animate them to continually abounding in every good work; for, as Dr. South truly remarks, "He who takes away the incitements to duty (in the two great mainsprings of action, Hope and Fear) not only impedes the performance of duty, but hinders its very attempt."

— εἰδότες ὅτι—Κυρίῳ.] Render: "knowing assuredly that your labour is not [i. e. will not be] vain in the sight of the Lord, or as proposed in Him as your trust."

the collection of alms destined for the relief of poor Christians. Such collections for the relief of poor Jews of Palestine, had been not unfrequent among the foreign Jews; and had now, it seems, been introduced among the Gentile Christians. The reason for which was,—that the Christians of Judæa were, by the arts of Jewish persecution, direct and indirect, brought into great distress. The Article shows that it was well known, and perhaps spoken of in the letter of the Corinthians to St. Paul. The word λογία is no where else found in the Scriptural, and very rarely in the Classical writers; and seems to have been confined to the language of common life. It properly signifies a gleaning, and then, as here, a slight gathering.

2. κατὰ μίαν σαββάτων] “on the first day of the week;” μίαν being used, by Hebraism, for πρώτην, as in Matt. xxviii. 1; and ἡμέραν understood, q. d. “on the first of the days of the week;” from which it is plain that Sunday was then set apart for Christians for religious purposes. Τιθέτω, for κατατίθ. Παρ' ἐαυτῷ, “by him.” Fr. chez lui, “at home.” Ὅ τι ἂν εὐδ. Sub. κατὰ, “according as he has prospered, or prospers.” Thus καὶ ὅτι is equivalent to καὶ ὡς. So Acts xi. 29. καὶ ὡς ἡντορεῖτο τ. εὐδοῦσαι signifies properly “to be set right on one's way,” and metaphorically “to prosper.” It is in the Classical writers almost always used of a thing, but in the N. T. (as here and Rom. i. 10. 3 John 2.) of a person. The collections in question were doubtless directed to be made weekly, because every one is more inclined to contribute by little and little, than all at once; and on the Lord's day, because a participation in the offices of religion most effectually opens the heart to charity. The propriety of our common version will be evident, and the difficulties started by many Commentators at ἵνα μὴ γίνωνται may be removed, by supposing that the Apostle only meant that there should be no private and petty gatherings, then first to be made, when he came, but only one συνεισφορά formed, containing all the sums which had been gradually laid up by each in private.

3. οὓς ἐὰν δοκ. δι' ἐπιστ. τούτ. πέμψω.] There has been some doubt as to the construction, and, as depending thereupon, the sense of the words. Δι' ἐπιστολῶν may be construed either with the preceding, or the following words.

The former method is generally adopted by the older Commentators, and by Pearce and Mackn. But it is liable to serious objections. The latter construction (supported by the Greek Commentators and the most eminent modern ones) is preferable. Thus the διά will be for ἐν or σύν, and may be rendered “charged with.” Οὐ δοκιμάσητε is to be taken as a brief expression, (“whom ye may think proper to choose,”) of which examples are found in the Classical writers. Τὴν χάριν ὑμῶν, for ἐλεημοσύνην.

4. ἐὰν δὲ ἡ ἄξιον.] Sub. τὸ χρῆμα, or προῶγα. At ἄξιον supply τῆς ἐμῆς διακονίας. Theophyl. and Œcum. have well pointed out, that the force of σὺν ἐμοὶ πορεύσονται is, “they shall have my company,” I will accompany them. Thus the full sense is this: “If the sum of money collected be considerable enough, or any other occasion require it, I will accompany them.”

5. The Apostle fixes the time when he shall visit them, viz. on the occasion of his passage through Macedonia. The words ὅταν Μακεδονίαν—διέρχομαι are well rendered by Prof. Scholef. “When I have passed through Macedonia; for I am passing through Macedonia;” the former alteration of the common Version being required by the proprietas linguæ; the latter by the geography of Greece. For from the common rendering one would (as Prof. Scholefield observes) suppose that Corinth was in Macedonia, and that St. Paul meant to visit them in his circuit through that country.

6. πρὸς ὑμᾶς δὲ, τυχόν, παραμενῶ.] “And I shall [in my way] make some stay with you.” Ἡ καὶ παραχ. “or even remain for the winter.” Τυχόν is an adverb formed from the second Aorist participle neuter, with an ellipsis of κατὰ τὸ, occurring in Xen. Anab. vi. 1, 12. It exactly corresponds to our per-haps. “Iva has here the eventual sense, denoting simply result. This sending, and, in some degree, accompanying forward the teachers of Christianity, was an established custom in the first ages; and especially when the stay was of any duration; which the Apostle here contemplates. Οὐ ἐὰν πορ., viz. into Judæa, as we find from 2 Cor. i. 16.

7. οὐ θέλω—ἰδεῖν.] This is (as Œcum. says) exegetical of the preceding. The ἄρτι is meant to be emphatical, and is not well rendered now. At least the full sense is, “now that I have delayed so long.”

8. τῆς Πεντηκοστῆς] i. e. "the time of Pentecost," with which even the Gentile converts must have been well acquainted. See Note on Acts xxvii. 9.

9. Ὑπό] i. e. an opportunity for effecting any thing; a sense in which the word was sometimes used by the Classical writers. See Acts xiv. 27. ῥΑνέωγε is for ἀνεῳχθη, which some Atticists thought a solecism, but others tolerated. It only occurs in the later writers. ῥΕνεργῆς is well explained by a Glossographer ἐτοιμία πρὸς ἐργασίαν and may be rendered "effective." So Thucyd. iii. 17. πλείστοι δὲ νῆες ἐνεργοὶ ἐγένοντο. In καὶ ἀντικείμ. πολλοὶ the καὶ may be better taken for καίπερ, although, than rendered for. But it should rather seem that the meaning is not fully evolved, but is to be supplied from what precedes; q. d. "And as there are many adversaries, there is need of my further stay."

10. ἔλθῃ] "should come [unto you]," or be come. It appears from iv. 17. that that was doubtful. Βλέπετε—ὑμᾶς. The sense is: "Take heed that he may be (i. e. abide) with you without molestation," namely, that of factious opposition. The words τὸ γὰρ ἔργον—ἐγώ seem meant to anticipate their undervaluing him on the score of his youth and inferior spiritual gifts; and their general sense is: "He discharges the office of preacher of the Gospel even as I do," i. e. he is as much a divinely commissioned minister of God as myself.

11. μῆτις—ἐξουθενήσῃ.] There was, as Theophyl. observes, reason to fear this, since he was young, alone, and had the charge of so wealthy and proud a people.

12. At πάντως οὐκ ἦν θέλ. sub. αὐτῷ. The sense is: "But it was not fully his inclination to go now."

13. γρηγορεῖτε—κραταιοῦσθε.] The words may be understood of Christian watchfulness generally; but, when taken in connection with what precedes, they must be understood of steadfastness in the faith, (στήκετε) watchfulness against the arts of false teachers, (γρηγορεῖτε) and a manly firmness in maintaining what they conscientiously believed to be the truth. On στήκ.

ἐν τῇ πίστει, see Note on xv. 58. ῥΑνδρ. and κρατ. may be agonistical metaphors: but it should rather seem that the Apostle had in mind 1 Sam. iv. 9. κραταιοῦσθε καὶ γίνεσθε εἰς ἄνδρας i. e. by Hebraism γίνεσθε ἄνδρες; with which we may compare the Homeric ἄνδρες ἐστί. Comp. Eph. vi. 10. Κρατ. is a word not occurring in the Classical writers, although frequent in the LXX., as Ps. xxx. 24. ἀνδρίζεσθε, καὶ κραταιοῦσθε ἡ καρδία ὑμῶν. It is frequently used of perseverance in opinion, or determination. The literal meaning of the word is "to gird up one's loins, or string up one's nerves for any arduous undertaking." The Apostle has especially in view perseverance in sound doctrine; the not being henceforth tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine. See Note on supra xv. 58. and Eph. iv. 14. The Asyndeton imparts peculiar vigour to the expression.

14. πάντα—ἀγάπῃ γινέσθω.] It is worthy of remark, that exhortations to constancy in doctrine are often, as here, followed up with an admonition to love, and to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

15. The construction here is somewhat involved; nor is it to be cleared either by throwing the words, with some, into a parenthesis; or with others, by supposing a transposition. The present order is very natural, and may be best adjusted by supposing an ellip. of ὅτι, omitted because of the ὅτι just after. It is expressed in the Peschito Syriac, "quia nosis quod ipsi sunt primitiæ Achaie." Render: "forasmuch as ye know," &c. — εἰς διακ. τοῖς ἀγ. ἔτ. ἔ.] The sense is: "have devoted themselves to ministering unto the saints." The word διακ. may have reference to the offices and duties of Deacons: but it should rather seem that it denotes performing the duties of hospitality and general kindness to poor Christians, especially strangers.

16. The ἵνα connects with παρακαλῶ. By τοῖς τοιούτοις is meant "to them and such like." ῥΥποτάσσ. may mean, as many Commentators ancient and modern explain, "show them all due respect and deference." Though, as there seems to be some reference to the preceding ἔταξαν ἑαυτοὺς, (which, by a military metaphor, signifies "they have ranged or set themselves") may rather mean "range yourselves under and co-operate with them in their benevolent designs."

17. ὅτι τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστ. οὗτοι ἀνεπλ.] The sense of these words is somewhat obscure, probably from the popular mode of expression. The ancient Interpreters explain it: "They have taken this long journey, to act as your representatives." This, however, seems very harsh. Mackn. renders: "they have supplied what was wanting in your letter," viz. (adds Grot.) "by informing me of your disorders." But this the Apostle could not mean. I prefer (with Beza, Rosenm., Schleus., and Iaspis) to render: "they have supplied your absence," i. e. supplied the deficiency occasioned by your absence (as in Phil. ii. 30.) or, to use the words of Doddr. in his paraphrase, "have given me, by their converse and friendly offices, that consolation which I might justly have expected from you all, had I enjoyed an opportunity of conversing with you."

18. ἀνέπαυσαν γὰρ—ὑμῶν.] The sense of these words is mistaken by most of the modern Commentators, though well explained by the ancient ones. They are by Chrys. rightly regarded as exegetical of the preceding, τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστ. ἀνεπλ. Ἀνέπαυσαν, "have solaced." A use of the word quite Hellenistic. The real sense of the clause seems to be this: "By thus supplying your absence, they have benefited us both;" for Paul gained information of the state of those absent, and they gained in the counsel afforded to them by the Apostle.

19. τῇ κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλ.] It is strange that some of the best modern Commentators should explain this of all the Christians in their family. See Grot. and Whitby. The most natural and probable sense is that adopted by the Greek Commentators, and of the modern ones, by Mede, Wells, Pearce, Iaspis, and Slade, "the congregation that was accustomed to meet, for divine worship, at their house." And this sense has the advantage of including the other. See more in the Note on Rom. xvi. 5.

20. ἀσπάζονται—φιλ. ἀγ.] On this custom, see Note on Rom. xvi. 16. Kraus. appositely cites Justin Martyr Apol. i. 85. ἀλλήλους ἀσπαζόμεθα πανσάμενοι τῶν εὐχῶν.

21. ὁ ἀσπασμὸς—Π.] Schoettg. remarks on the ellipsis, which he supplies thus: "Restat salutatio a me, quæ est adscripta a me ipso, propriâ manu." He adds, that we may suppose this was written by Paul with his own hand, though he had dictated the rest to some scribe. The Apostle was accustomed to dictate letters, and at the end add a sentence with his own hand, to prevent fraud. See Rom. xvi. 23. Gal. vi. 11. 2 Thess. iii. 17. Philem. 19. Χεῖρ is rarely used, as here, for hand writing; inasmuch that, were there not an example found in Hyperides, we might suspect this to be a Latinism.

22. ἦτω.] On this form see Win. Gr. § 10. 2. 6. On ἀνάθεμα see Note on xii. 3. Μαρὰν ἀθά is a Syro-Chaldee expression, signifying "the Lord is to come," i. e. will come, to take vengeance on the disobedient and vicious. Hence with the words Anathema Maranatha the Jews began their papers of excommunication.

Ι. ^a ΠΑΥΛΟΣ ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, διὰ θελή- 1
ματός Θεοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφός, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ

This second Epistle was written about a year after the first, and as St. Paul was on his progress through Macedonia (see 1 Cor. xvi. 5.) and probably at Philippi, as the subscription attests. This is plain from a consideration of the journeys, and the occurrences which had taken place since his writing the first, on which see Horne's Introd. From ix. 2—4, it appears to have been transmitted to the Corinthians by Titus and his colleagues, who were on the road from Macedonia to Corinth, to finish the collection of the contributions for the relief of the poor Christians in Judæa. The circumstances which led to the writing of this second Epistle were, 1. the peculiar state of the Church at Corinth; 2. the alacrity of the Corinthians in contributing to the necessities of the poor Christians in Judæa, and their kind treatment of Titus; both of which required acknowledgments from the Apostle. Having heard that his first Epistle had produced much good among the Corinthians, and considerably broken the faction against him, he wrote this, to confirm them in the doctrine he had preached, to vindicate himself against the calumnies of his enemies, and so to pave the way for the third visit to them, which he meditated. The scope of the Epistle cannot, however, be well understood without adverting to the partial failure of success which his former Epistle had experienced, at least from certain persons, for whom, therefore, a second address seemed necessary. Not a few, it should seem, of the Corinthians even yet adhered to their false teacher or teachers, and even denied the Apostleship of Paul; founding their denial of his claims even on his manner of address in his first Epistle. Because, too, he had changed his intention of visiting them (see 2 Cor. i. 15 & 16.) in his way from Ephesus to Macedonia, they charged him with fickleness and irresolution; with pride and tyranny, on account of his severity towards the incestuous person; and also with general arrogance in his ministry, and a haughtiness of demeanour little suitable to the insignificance of his personal appearance. The chief scope, therefore, of the Epistle is to rebut these charges; wherein he, 1. satisfactorily accounts for his not having come to them so soon as he had proposed. 2. He shows that his sentence against the incestuous person was not harsh or severe, but necessary, and, as it appears by the effects, salutary: accordingly he authorizes them to absolve him from that sentence, and restore him to communion with the Church. 3. He adverts to his great success in preaching the Gospel, and shows that he dwells not upon it for his own glory, but for that of the Gospel, in preaching which he used all diligence and faithfulness; notwithstanding the sore tribulations it brought upon him, and of which he gives a most affecting detail. 4. He excites them to lead a holy life; and in order thereto, to avoid all communion with idolaters. 5. He desires them to complete their contributions for the poor saints in Judæa. 6. He enters into a long defence of himself against the charge of timidity and personal insignificance. The former he effectually refutes by the severely oburgatory air of his address to the disaffected. See more in Mackn. and Horne's Introd. The most remarkable circumstance in this Epistle is the confidence of the Apostle in the goodness of his cause, and the support from above to bear him out in it, though under difficulties of the most formidable kind. See Scott, who shows at large that "a stronger internal testimony, not only to his integrity, but divine inspiration, cannot exist; for had there been any collusion, it is next to impossible but such a conduct must have occasioned a disclosure of it." On the effects produced by this Epistle, see Marsh's Michaelis iv. 74. or Horne's Introd. On the chronological difficulty connected with xii. 14. and xiii. 1, 2, see the Notes there. The genuineness of this Epistle is so manifest, from the strongest internal as well as external evidence, that it has never been doubted.

he (vv. 1—2.) blesses God for the consolations under tribulation, and the deliverances in dangers vouchsafed to him, and intended both for the comfort of others similarly circumstanced, and to himself as an earnest of future aid from above. (vv. 3—11.) He rejoices in the testimony of his conscience, and expresses his confidence in their attachment to him, which had induced him to propose again visiting them (12—16); and shows that his deferring this visit did not arise from capricious mutability (vv. 17, 18.): and, after adverting to the stability of God's promises, through Christ, assures them that he had postponed his visit from motives of lenity; that the faulty might have time to repent, and that he himself might be spared the pain of using severity, vv. 17—24.

— Παῦλος ἀπόστολος.] See note on 1 Cor. i. 1.

— ὁ ἀδελφός.] Not “a brother,” as Dodd. renders; that not being permitted by the Article, (especially as it is here used, in a very strong sense, for the possessive pronoun) i. e. either “our brother, meaning fellow Christian, or, what is more apt and suitable to the intent of the Apostle (which was to give consequence to the person whom he had sent in some degree as his legate), “my brother [minister of the Gospel.]” See Est, Wolf, Locke, and Mackn.

2. χάρις—Χριστοῦ.] See Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. and Luke xxiv. 36.

3. εὐλογ. ὁ Θεός, &c.] Dodd., Mackn., and Newc. translate, “praised be the God and Father of,” &c. But there is no sufficient reason to deviate from the common version, “blessed be God, even the Father,” &c., which is supported by the authority of the ancient Versions and ancient Commentators, and by the most eminent modern Expositors. See the Notes of Calvin and Whitby. We have here an usual form of thanksgiving, occurring, Dodd. says, in eleven out of the thirteen Epistles of St. Paul. On Πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν, Wets. remarks that the Jews much used the expressions our Father, our merciful Father, in their prayers. The expression is not, as most recent Commentators (after Grot.) regard it, a mere Hebraism, by which substantives in the Genitive are put for adjectives of like signification. A use, indeed, not confined to the Hebrew, being often resorted to as possessing more spirit than the ordinary usage. Thus the import here conveyed is, (as Chrys. and the ancient Commentators point out) “that God is the fountain of mercy, and the spring of comfort.”

4. ὁ παρακαλῶν] for παρηγορῶν or παρα-

μυθῶν, as at Acts xvi. 40. xx. 12. and elsewhere. Thus παρακαλεῖν signifies literally to “bid any one take courage,” by suggesting to him reasons for hope and confidence. By ἡμεῖς is meant (as the best Expositors are agreed) the Apostle himself, who, Theod. thinks, uses the expression δύνασθαι out of modesty. But though the word must not be pressed on, neither must it be thus explained away. For, as Calvin well remarks, “ut non sibi vivebat Apostolus, sed Ecclesie; ita quidquid gratiarum in ipsum conferebat Deus, non sibi soli datum reputabat, sed quo plus ad alios juvandos haberet facultatis.” The παρακλήσεως and παρακαλούμεθα must not be confined to any one of the sources of comfort, but be understood generally of all; especially of that spiritual support breathed into his soul by the Great Comforter, sent from God, and who is God. Now that comfort would be imparted to others, both for communicating to them the grounds of it, and by inspiring them with the same spirit, of devotedness to the Gospel, which filled his own bosom.

5. περισσεύει—εἰς ἡμᾶς] literally, “have occurred to us abundantly.” So Rom. v. 15. ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ—εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐπερίσσειεν. The τοῦ just after is added on the authority of several of the most ancient MSS., and after the example of the most eminent Editors. The ὅτι is elliptical; and the sentiment following is expressed with an obscure brevity. It is very well developed by Dr. Burton in the following paraphrase: “We are able to administer comfort to others, because, in proportion to the sufferings which the Gospel of Christ exposes us to, so does the same Gospel supply us with consolations which we are able to administer to others.” In τὰ παθ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ the Genitive may, with most ancient and earlier modern Expositors, be so taken as to denote the sufferings endured by Christ, inasmuch as the sufferings of Christ's members for his sake are styled his sufferings, as being evils inflicted on his members out of enmity to him, and by reason of their mystical union to him, and the sympathy he has with them in their sufferings; as Rom. viii. 17. It is better, however (with Glass, Est., Menoch., Vorst., and almost all the more recent Expositors), to interpret “the sufferings endured for Christ's sake and for his glory.” Of which force of the Genitive examples are not rare. So Eph. iii. 1. ἐγὼ Παῦλος ὁ δέσμιος τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. Thus the sense will be, “because, in proportion to the sufferings to which the Gospel of Christ abundantly exposes us, so does the same Gospel supply us with abundant consolation [which we may administer to others];" which last words, implied from the preceding verse, form the true vinculum between this and the next verse, on the connection of which Expositors have been perplexed. The words, then, of v. 6. are meant to further develop the above sense. Σωτηρίας ὑμῶν, "for the saving of your souls." In the next words the order varies exceedingly in different Editions and MSS. The textus receptus (derived from the later Editions of Beza and Elzevin) has: Εἴτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως, καὶ σωτηρίας, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων, ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας καὶ ἡ ἐλπίς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. Some ancient MSS., as A., C., and ten others, together with the Syr., Cop., Æth., Arm., Vulg., and some Italic Versions have: εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων, ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν (καὶ ἡ ἐλπίς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν) εἰδότες ὅτι, &c. But this, though edited by Griesb., Tittm., and Vat., is founded on slender external evidence, and is by no means strong in internal; for it savours of the alteration of the early Critics. Greatly preferable is the reading of very many other MSS., several Versions and Fathers, also the Edit. Princ. Erasm. 1, Beza 1, and other early Editions: εἴτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως, καὶ σωτηρίας, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων, ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν καὶ ἡ ἐλπίς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας. This reading was preferred by Calvin and Beza, adopted by Wets., and edited by Matth. and Lachmann: and with reason; for the evidence in its favour is exceedingly strong; while that for the common reading is exceedingly weak. The context, too, as Rinck observes, strongly countenances this reading; the general sentiment being this: "Et afflictatio et consolatio mea vobis prodest; illa, quia meo exemplo, ut spero, ad tolerantiam communium malorum incitami, hæc, quia non afflictionis solum sed etiam solationum participes estis." The transposition of the clause καὶ ἡ ἐλπίς—ὑμῶν to the end of the verse was, no doubt, made by those over-nice Critics, who thought it interrupted the antithesis between εἴτε θλιβ., &c. and εἴτε παρακ. This class of Critics were, however, far less bold than those who, besides making use of the same transposition, introduced other alterations,—partly to prevent tautology, and partly to render the interpretation the easier; though, in fact, it yields a very objectionable sense; for, adopting the trans-

position of the clause τῆς ἐνεργουμένης—πάσχομεν, it is difficult to see how their consolation could be promoted by their bearing the same sufferings as the Apostle. The sentiment cannot be admitted without great violence to the interpretation. Τῆς ἐνεργουμένης should be referred to both παρακλήσεως and σωτηρίας. The Apostle means to say, that both his affliction and his consolation is calculated to profit them; and, in expressing this sentiment, he interposes the clause τῆς ἐνεργουμένης—πάσχομεν to show how his affliction may profit them: it will, he says, be made efficacious, by their patiently bearing, after his example, the same afflictions that he suffers. To this he subjoins a parenthetical clause, expressive of his hope and trust respecting them, viz. that they will copy his example. Thus it is evident that the transposition of the clause καὶ ἡ ἐλπίς—βεβαία, according to either the textus receptus or that of Griesb., though it makes the passage read better, yet, in the latter case, injures the sense, and in the former, misrepresents the Apostle's meaning. The Apostle did not mean to show how his consolation might be effectual for their consolation; for that was too plain to need being touched on. See Scott. In fact, the most certain of all Critical canons demands the rejection of both those texts, and the preference to be given to that adopted by Wets. and Matth.; for nothing is more evident than that that, in the somewhat harsh and involved nature of the phraseology (highly, however, characteristic of St. Paul), presents a reading from which the others might spring; while the other texts, and the readings which are modifications of them, arose from various attempts to remove the difficulty. The words καὶ σωτηρίας were thrown out partly by those who wished to remove a tautology (though, in fact, tautologies of this kind, where the sense is strengthened, are frequent in St. Paul and the best writers of every language and every age), and partly by those who stumbled, not seeing how the Apostle's consolation could promote not only their consolation, but salvation. If any should yet stumble, let them read the satisfactory explanation offered by Calvin.

Ενεργ. is here used as at 2 Cor. iv. 12. Gal. iii. 5. and v. 6. 1 Thess. ii. 13. Rom. vii. 5. Gal. v. 6. See Bp. Bull's Exam. p. 9.

7. εἰδότες.] Here is an anacoluthon, such as is frequent in the best writers, especially Thucyd. and Herodotus; the participle being used for a verb and γάρ. This verse is explanatory of the preceding. They were partakers of his sufferings by sympathy; and of his consolation they could not fail to be, by being like-minded, and as firm in the faith.

8. Τῆς γὰρ has reference to παθημ. in the preceding verse; q. d. For of afflictions, I would have you to know, I have had my share. The ὑπὲρ is for περί, which is found in a few MSS. and Fathers; but is plainly a gloss, though accounted by Dr. Burton as probably the true reading.

On the circumstance here adverted to by the Apostle, the Commentators differ in opinion. Some refer it to the persecutions at Lystra, mentioned in Acts xiv. 19, 20. Others, with more probability, to what happened during the commotions at Ephesus mentioned in Acts xix. 26. seq. Καθ' ὑπερβολὴν is for ὑπερβαλλόντως, as Rom. vii. 13. With ἐβαρῆθ. I would compare Aristoph. ap. Zonare Lex. p. 1785. ἰπτούμενος ταῖς συμφοραῖς. Notwithstanding what Rosen. and others think, ὥστε ἐξαπορηθῆναι—ζῆν can only mean, “insomuch that we even despaired of life.” Ἐξαπ. signifies properly to stop short in our progress, from being at a loss to know what course to take. So iv. 8. ἀπορούμενοι ἄλλ' οὐκ ἐξαπορούμενοι.

9. ἐν ἐαυτοῖς τὸ ἀπόκριμα θανάτου ἐσχῆκαμεν.] This contains a strongly figurative mode of expressing utter despair of life; q. d. the having nought but death before one's eyes. Ἀπόκριμα signifies properly a response, and varies its sense according to the occasion. Thus, when used of judges, it denotes (as here) a verdict or sentence. So Chrys. ψήφον. The Article is employed with reference to a clause suppressed; q. d. [Nay, we had sentence recorded in our minds,] and we had this sentence, in order that we should not trust, &c. Of the bold figure in ἀπόκριμα ἐσχ. the Commentators adduce no example; and therefore the following may be acceptable. Thucyd. ii. 53., speaking of the people at Athens during the pestilence, says, that “they set all laws at defiance, from having death continually suspended over them, as a sentence of death already denounced; and which they might continually expect would be carried into execution:” πολὺ δὲ μείζω (scil. τιμωρίαν) τὴν ἥδη κατεψήφισμένην σφῶν ἐπικρεμασθῆναι.

Πειποθότες ὦμεν is not merely put for πεποίθωμεν; but the participle and verb substantive are used to express continuity of action, implying custom. By “trusting in ourselves,” is meant having regard to our own strength [alone], without reference to Divine aid. Τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκροὺς, “who raiseth the very dead, [and therefore who can preserve the living, in however great peril of death].”

10. θανάτου] “deadly peril,” “peril of life.”

The full sense in ἐρρύσατο, &c. is: “who hath delivered, now delivereth, and, we hope and trust, will deliver us.”

11. συνυπουργούντων—δεήσει.] Render: “you too co-operating in supplication on our behalf,” i. e. on your co-operating, &c.; which is spoken with characteristic modesty. There is not (as some imagine) any transposition of the Article τῇ, for it has no force: this word and προσευχῇ, taking the article as being abstract nouns. See Middl. Gr. A. Ch. v. § 1. and numerous examples in Schleus. Lex.

—ἵνα ἐκ πολλῶν—ἡμῶν.] These words are, from brevity and perplexity of construction, obscure; but the general sense (similar to that at iv. 15.) seems to be this, “that so the gracious gift [of future deliverance] being bestowed on me, by means of the intercession of many persons, may, by many persons, for me, be acknowledged with thanks;” i. e. may be acknowledged in the thanksgiving also of many for me, i. e. my deliverance; for, as Doddr. observes, nothing is more reasonable than that what is obtained by prayer should be owned in praises. This use of εὐχαριστεῖσθαι (as said of a thing) to be returned thanks for, is very rare.

With respect to the next words, ἵνα ἐκ πολλῶν—ἡμῶν, they are obscure from brevity; and I have in Rec. Syn. shown at large, that the general sense is: “that so the gracious gift [of deliverance] being bestowed on me, by means of the petition of many persons, may by many persons, on my behalf, be acknowledged with thanks.” This use of εὐχαρ. in the passive, in the sense “to be returned thanks for,” is very rare; as is also the sense of ἐκ, “on the part of,” i. e. procured by the prayers of.”

12. ἡ γὰρ καύχησις, &c.] The connection seems to be as follows: “[And we trust that God will continue to deliver us, you co-operating with us in prayer;] for our glorying,” &c. Καύχ. signifies a cause for glorying, something on which we may pride ourselves, i. e. towards men; which is implied, and is perhaps suggested, in the words ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ just after. Τὸ μαρτ. Sub. ὅν, “that which is testified by our own consciences.” On the value of this testimony of conscience, and how far alone we ought to rest in it, see Br. Sanderson, 2nd Sermon ad Magistratum, 9—30. Ἀπλότ. and εἰλικ. are nearly synonymous. On the former, see Note on Rom. i. 8. and xii. 7, 8; on the latter, Note on 1 Cor. v. 8. They both denote candour and sincerity. Θεοῦ may, as most recent Commentators say, be meant to raise the quality by proceeding to the highest pitch. But it is more agreeable to the characteristic modesty of the Apostle to interpret, with Chrys., "what is well pleasing to, or required by, God." So Theophyl. οἶαν ὁ Θεὸς ἀποδέχεται. Σοφία σαρκ. means generally carnal or secular wisdom, the selfish wisdom of this world, though probably with allusion to the arts of the Heathen Sophists and Rhetoricians. See Theophyl. By ἐν χάριτι Θεοῦ must (as all Commentators, except some recent ones, are agreed) be meant the gracious help of God, as shown in the communication of supernatural gifts and miraculous endowments imparted to the Apostle. Ἀνεστρ., "we have behaved ourselves." It has reference (like versari in the Latin) to conduct of every sort.

13. οὐ γὰρ ἄλλα—ἐπιγινώσκετε.] The sense is not very clear; but the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are generally agreed, that there is a reference to the ἀπλότης and εἰλικρίν. just before. And the real and full sense (much mistaken by Commentators) seems to be this: ["I may well say in godly sincerity:] for I write no other things [i. e. doctrines] unto you than what you read, than what you even recognize [to be true], and I trust will always continue to acknowledge." This seems to be a popular manner of speaking, of which the sense is, 'I have no other meaning in what I write, than what is open and legible; agreeably to the obvious purport of the words; I do not write one thing and intend another, express one doctrine and mean another.' For (as Mackn. observes) "it seems the Faction had affirmed that some passages of Paul's first Epistle were designedly written in ambiguous language, that he might afterwards interpret them as it suited his purpose." If this interpretation (which is supported by the opinion of almost all the recent Expositors) be thought, as it may, to rest on somewhat precarious proof, and to be little accordant with the words following, we may suppose, with Theophyl., Est., Beza, Calvin, and Menoch., that the Apostle here means to soften, what might be called arrogance in what he had said; q. d. he makes no more boasting in words than what can be proved by deeds; and that, the Corinthians themselves being witnesses, whose own previous knowledge of him would bear testimony to the truth of what they read. Thus ἀναγινώσκετε should be rendered, as it is done by Calvin, recognoscitis, recognize. And the word is used thus in Xen. Anab. v. 8. 6.

and elsewhere in the Classical writers. There is, too, a kind of climax; for ἐπιγινώσκεις, as Calvin shows, is more significant than ἀναγιν. Thus the ἀναγ. has reference to the less favourably disposed; the ἐπιγ., to those who were sincerely and firmly attached to the Apostle. This distinction seems adverted to in the next verse; where, after saying ἐπέγνωτε, he corrects the term by the limitative phrase ἀπὸ μέρους, meaning, "a part at least of you."

To briefly advert to the peculiar idiom in οὐκ ἄλλα—ἀλλ' ἢ, the explanation given of its nature by Hermann on Vig. p. 778. in his Note, is very far-fetched. And as to that proposed by Emmerling, who considers it as a blending of two modes of speaking, οὐ γὰρ ἄλλα γράφω, ἀλλὰ ταῦτα, &c., and οὐ γὰρ ἄλλα γράφω ἢ ἃ ἀναγ., that is taking too much for granted. I cannot but suspect that the ἀλλ' comes not from ἀλλά, but ἀλλὰ; and that there is here simply a repetition (perhaps taken adverbially) of the preceding ἀλλά, in order to make the comparison the clearer and stronger.

—ὅτι καύχημα—ἡμῶν.] The sense is, "[You will find and acknowledge I say] that we are your rejoicing, as also you are ours, in the day of the Lord." Chrys. and Theophyl. interpret καύχ. ἡμῶν "such as may make you proud of having me as a teacher." Καθάρπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἡμῶν, namely, as being proud of such disciples. The proper ellipsis at ὑμεῖς ἡμῶν can only be ἐσμέν; but the clause ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κ. 'I. is best referred to the ἐπιγινώσεσθε suspended by ellipsis on ὅτι.

15. ταύτῃ τῇ πεπ.] Sub. ἐπί, namely, on your being well affected to us. Πρότερον, i. e. on writing the former Epistle. See 1 Cor. xvi. 5. He means to say, that he had at first intended to have visited them before the Macedonians; and then shows that he did not change his intention without good cause. Δευτ. χάριν. Most modern Commentators explain the χάριν gift, or benefit; but the ancient Commentators, and some modern ones, as Wolf and Schleus., gratification, for χαράν. It should seem to mean benefit generally, every spiritual advantage, or gratification from his society, imparted by his presence.

17. μήτι ἄρα τῇ ἐλαφρ. ἐχρ.] "did I, forsooth, show inconstancy or fickleness," viz. by changing his design without good reason. The interrogation implies a strong negation, οὐδαμῶς. At ἃ sub. κατὰ, quod attinet ad. Κατὰ σάρκα, "according to carnal views and private passions, interest, ambition, or worldly policy."

— ἵνα ἡ παρ' ἐμοὶ—οὐ.] These words are illustrative of the above; but on their exact sense Commentators are not agreed; and no wonder, since the idiom is almost sui generis. Some would read τὸ ναὶ, καὶ τὸ οὐ, found in a few MSS. and Versions. But this authority is far too slender to warrant any change of reading; and to suppose, with Dr. Burton, that the repetition of ναὶ and οὐ makes no difference in the sense, is taking too much for granted. Considerable error has arisen from the mistaken notion, that the Apostle here has in view inconstancy; whereas (as the ancient Commentators have shown) the κατὰ σάρκα βουλ. has reference to various worldly views, and carnal dispositions (see iii. 3, 4.); and the one here adverted to by example, seems to be (as Chrys., Theophyl., Œcum., Theodoret, and Phot., suppose) a headstrong, self-willed spirit, which will either do things, or not do them, as it pleases, without giving any reasons. The force of the repeated ναὶ and οὐ may be illustrated by the usual expression of such positive persons, ὃ γέγραφα γέγραφα, or ἃ πέπραχα πέπραχα. The ἵνα ἡ τὸ ναὶ ναὶ refers to any purpose to be effected; the τὸ οὐ οὐ, to what is not to be done; as Theophyl. well observes, who also notices the address with which the Apostle turns off what was matter of accusation into a ground of praise. Thus the construction is: ἵνα τὸ ναὶ ἡ ναὶ, καὶ τὸ οὐ ἡ οὐ.

18. πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεός—οὐ.] This (as Chrys. observes) is meant to anticipate an objection; q. d. If what you say be not firm and stable (and you often say ναὶ, and it is found οὐ), may we not fear lest your word (doctrine and preaching) be found such? viz. ναὶ καὶ οὐ, i. e. unstable and wavering. To which the Apostle answers: "My purpose to come was my own, wherefore I attained it not; but my doctrine is of God, and what as such, cannot deceive. Now God is true (πιστός, verax), so that, as He is constant, neither is his word to you, which we preach, inconstant and unstable." With πιστὸς ὁ Θεός compare Heb. x. 28. x. 11. 1 John i. 9. See a fine passage in Bp. Sanderson's second Sermon ad Populum § 7., in which he shows that "we are to lay this on a firm and infallible ground, that our God is both truly unchangeable, and unchangeably true."

19. By Ἰησοῦς Χρ. is meant his doctrine.

20. ὅσαι γὰρ—ἀμὴν.] Bp. Middl. well renders: "for how many soever be the promises of God, in Him (Christ) is the Yea, and in Him the Amen;" i. e. whatever God hath promised, He will through Christ assuredly fulfil; ναὶ and ἀμὴν being strong and well known asseverations of the truth." Τῷ Θεῷ πρὸς δόξαν is, by transposition, for πρὸς δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ, to the glory of God by our preaching.

21. ὃ δὲ βεβαιῶν, &c.] God is here designated as the author both of their original conversion to the Christian faith, and of their confirmation in it. So Abp. Newc. paraphrases: "But I do not arrogate any thing to myself, when I use the expression by us. God establishes both me and you with respect to Christ, as disciples of Christ." Ὁ βεβ. εἰς Χρ. may be rendered, "who makes us firm in [the faith of] Christ." Ὁ χρίσας, i. e. who hath solemnly called me to be an Apostle, as it were by the rite of unction, such as was used to inaugurate Kings and Prophets. Ὁ σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς, "who hath given us a pledge [of his future acceptance]." Δούς τὸν ἀρράβωνα τοῦ Πν., "by giving the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." So Eph. i. 13, 14. ἐν ᾧ καὶ πιστεύσαντες ἐσφραγίσθημεν τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ἁγίῳ, ὅς ἐστιν ἀρράβων τῆς κληρονομίας ἡμῶν. Ἀρράβων and the Latin arrhabo are derived from the Heb. רבנן, a pledge or earnest; i. e. a part of any price agreed on, and paid down to ratify the engagement; Germ. hand-gift. The pledge spoken of consists (as Bp. Middl. observes) of those various gifts of the Spirit, which were an earnest of immortality to the persons on whom they were conferred.

23. ἐπὶ τὴν ἐμὴν ψυχὴν] "against my soul," i. e. if I speak not the truth. The sense life, mind, or thought, though supported by one or other of the best Commentators, is too feeble. The solemnity of the asseveration here, and in other parts of this Epistle, was justified by the unworthy imputation (of fickleness) which called it forth.

Φειδόμενος is for ὡς φείδ., i. e., ὥστε φείδεσθαι, "to spare you the pain of the severe censure, which I must have passed on your irregularities."

24. οὐχ ὅτι κυριεύομεν—ὑμῶν.] There is in οὐχ ὅτι and sub. ἐρῶ, (as Beza and Grot. remark) an ἀνθυποφορὰ, or softening. The sense being: "I do not mention this, as if domineering over your faith (i. e. your belief of the religion you profess) by wanton acts of severity; but as a fellow-worker with you, in promoting your real happiness." Of the next words (which are variously interpreted) Abp. Newc. has well expressed the sense thus: "[I use the expression 'over your faith'], for faith causes you to stand firm in your duty and in the Divine favour." Rom. xi. 20.

II. 1. In this Chapter the Apostle continues his justification of himself (intermixing a direction as to the course they should now take with the incestuous person), and contrasts his own conduct with that of the false teachers. Instead of the common reading, ἐλθεῖν ἐν λύπῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, several MSS., some Versions, and the Ed. Princ. have what I have edited, with Beng., Matth., Griesb., Tittm., and Vater. For this position has more of the character of genuineness. Ἐν λύπῃ must not be confined to Paul, or to the Corinthians, but be extended to both, and the sense is: "so as to give myself and you pain," viz. by censuring your irregularities. Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 21. ἐν ῥάβδῳ ἔλθω.

2. εἰ γὰρ ἐγὼ λυπῶ—ἐξ ἐμοῦ;] There is here some obscurity, perhaps occasioned by the refined delicacy of the remark; which was, I conceive, meant to be explanatory of the ἐν λύπῃ ἔλθω just before. Various interpretations have been propounded, which see in Recens. Synop. The true one seems to be that of Grot., Rosenm., Dodd., Mackn., Iaspis, and Emmerling. The καὶ, like the Heb. ו, increases the force of the interrogation, and may be rendered quæso: and in the interrogative τίς is implied οὐδεὶς in the answer. The τίς ἐστὶν ὁ εὐφ. is expressed populariter, the sense being: "And who then is there (i. e. would there be) to soothe my sorrows, but the grieved person," i. e. persons; for the singular is (as Rosenm. observes) put for the plural; as in collectives. Here that designation might be said, in some degree, to embrace both the sound and the unsound part of the congregation: for the former would so sympathize with the latter, as to afford the Apostle but little cordial consolation; and the latter could not be expected to do it, unless in the event of entire repentance, and thorough reformation; which the Apostle would not stay to see put to the proof. And thus his comfort with both of them could be but small.

3. ἔγραψα τοῦτο αὐτό.] Some Commentators understand this of the present letter: but most of the former one; taking τοῦτο αὐτό to refer to the order given, to excommunicate the incestuous person, and the general reproof on their moral conduct. At τοῦτο αὐτό, sub. ἐπὶ στόλιον. "Ἐδεῖ," it was proper and reasonable," as in Matt. xviii. 33; xxiii. 23. Ἐπὶ πάντας ὑμᾶς, "respecting you all." Ὅτι ἡ ἐμὴ—ἐστίν, "that whatever affords me joy would give pleasure to you all;" i. e. the sound and far greater part of them.

4. ἐκ πολλῆς—καρδίας.] The sense is: "out of much affliction, and heartfelt distress." Συνοχή properly signifies the heart so hemmed in as not to know which way to turn, and figuratively denotes great distress; as Luke xxi. 23. συνοχὴν καὶ ταλαιπωρίαν. "Ἐγραψα," I wrote [what I did]. Οὐχ ἵνα λυπ., &c. The complete sense is: "[The purpose, however, was] not that ye should be pained, but that [sensible of the motive which had urged me to so write] ye might recognize therein my love; which I bear very abundantly towards you."

5. The Apostle now adverts more directly to his purpose in writing thus; and the words may be rendered; "But if any one (meaning the incestuous person) have occasioned sorrow, he hath not so much grieved me, as, in some measure [that I may not bear too hard upon him] all of you." The true punctuation here is that which I have adopted, with Griesb., Emmerling, Vater, Gratz., and Goeschen. Ἐπιβαρῶ must, with the Syr. Version and Emmerling, be taken intransitively, in the sense "ne quid gravius dicam,"—i. e. ne dicam no solos. Of this sense of ἐπιβαρῶν τι, to bear hard upon, two examples are adduced by Wets. from Appian.

6. Reasons are now adduced for showing mercy to the penitent offender.

—ἡ ἐπιτιμία.] This word signifies in Philo and other of the later writers, the fine, or other punishment affixed to any offence; and in the earlier Fathers it denotes any Ecclesiastical punishment enjoined by the Canons of the Church. Ἀὐτῇ, [of] itself, i. e. without any more. Ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, "at the hands of the many," the general body of the Church. Comp. 1 Cor. v. 4. συναχθέντων ὑμῶν.

- 7 τοιοῦτῳ ἢ ἐπιτιμία αὕτη ἢ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων· ὥστε τοῦ-

 14 κεδονίαν. ^b Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ χάρις τῷ πάντοτε θριαμβεύοντι ^b Col. 1. 27.

7. χαρίσασθαι.] This, of course, implies that he had repented of his sin. λύπη καταποθῇ, "be overwhelmed, by the excess of his sorrow." A metaphor derived, I conceive, not from the being devoured by a beast, as is generally supposed, but from drowning. Compare Ps. cxxiv. 2, 3, & 4.

8. κυρῶσαι εἰς αὐτὸν ἀγάπην.] This is rendered, "to confirm your love to him." But the proper import of the word permits, and the context and circumstances of the case, rather require the sense, "to make him assured of your love;" namely, by some public testimony of it; i. e. the annulment of the act of excommunication, in order to confirm that reconciliation. The term, however, may also denote that the readmission was to be formal, as the excommunication had been.

9. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ἔγραψα—ἐστε.] The full sense contained in this briefly worded passage seems to be this: [Forgive him, I say:] for the chief object I had in writing [that you should punish him, is answered; and that] was, that I might know the proof of you, (i. e. that I might put you to the test) whether you be obedient in all things." Compare Phil. ii. 22. τὴν δὲ δοκιμὴν αὐτοῦ γινώσκετε.

10. ᾧ δέ τι χαρίζεσθε, καὶ ἐγώ.] Sub. χαρίζομαι. The sense intended by the Apostle is best expressed by Iaspis as follows: "in omnibus judiciis, quæ æquitatem et lenitatem animi producant, nemo liberalius vos sequitur, quàm ego." So Dr. Shuttlesworth: "where you feel disposed to show forgiveness in cases like the present, I am no less disposed to do the same."

—καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ—δι' ὑμᾶς.] The sense seems to be: For whatever I have [hereby] forgiven any one, (if I myself can be said to have forgiven) I forgave it for your sakes, and to testify my regard for you." At ᾧ κεχ., sub. κεχαρ., which was suppressed to avoid repetition. The next words ἐν προσώπῳ Χριστοῦ are by almost all Commentators joined with the words immediately preceding. And thus a good sense arises; but one, I conceive, not very agreeable to what follows, ἵνα μὴ πλεον. ὑπὸ τοῦ Σατ. I therefore agree with the Bâle Editor, that the words καὶ γὰρ—ὑμᾶς are parenthetical; and that ἐν προσώπῳ, &c. belong to καὶ ἐγώ (χαρίζομαι). See also Mr. Scott. Ἐν προσώπῳ Χρ. signifies 'acting in the name and in behalf of Christ, as it were in his person.' So Theophyl. It is well observed by Theod. that the Apostle adds the ἵνα μή τις αὐτὸν ὑπολάβῃ, τῇ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους χάριτι, τοῦ δικαίου καταμελεῖν.

—ἵνα μὴ πλεονεκτ., &c.] These words seem meant to give a reason why he and they should be always disposed to show lenity on repentance; namely, lest, by their excessive severity, Satan might obtain an advantage over them, by tempting the offender either to despair, or to apostacy; thus bringing Christianity into evil report, as a harsh religion, and deterring others from embracing it; or, by exciting divisions in the Church, preventing the success of the Gospel. See Newc. and Scott.

12, 13. The Apostle says this, to suggest a further proof of his affectionate concern for them, and his desire to visit them; namely, that after he went to Troas to preach the Gospel, and had good opportunity of success; yet, because he found not Titus there (who was to bring him account of the state of the Corinthian converts), he could not rest, but must go in search of him into Macedonia. At τῷ μὴ εὐρ. sub. ἐπὶ, at or on account of. By αὐτοῖς must be understood the Trojans.

14. Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ—Χριστῷ.] With reference to the happy turn affairs had taken at Corinth, and the good account he had received of the Corinthians from Titus (See vii. 6.) the Apostle breaks forth into thanksgiving to God, for the success with which He is pleased to bless his Evangelical labours. The θριαμβ. &c. shows the grounds of the thanksgiving; namely, because "he maketh us to triumph." The word properly signifies to triumph over; but here is used (as the best Commentators ancient and modern suppose) in a Hiphil sense; and Schleus. cites a similar use of the word in Eurip. Her. Fur. 1596., also of other verbs, as βασιλεύειν, ἐπισπεύδειν, ἀπαρκεῖν, κληρονομεῖν, ζῆν, &c. The sense is: "causeth us to triumphantly overcome all difficulties," "go from city to city, as triumphing conquerors in the cause of Christ." But the metaphor is not to be too much pressed on. So also the expressions πάντοτε and ἐν παντί τόπῳ are not to be rigidly interpreted, but understood of what, upon the whole, was the case. Indeed, when the Apostle was least successful, there was always some kind of victory obtained over the kingdom of Satan.

— καὶ τὴν ὁσμὴν—φανεροῦντι, &c.] The sense is: "And who diffuseth, by us, every where the odour of his Divine knowledge." There being an allusion to the fragrant odour of flowers and aromatics scattered around conquerors when going in triumph. Some confusion of metaphor exists; but, under a lively allusion to the wide spreading of aromatic odours, it represents the wide diffusion of the Gospel, and its salutiferous influence.

15. ὅτι Χριστοῦ εὐωδία—ἀπολλ.] Here there is a continuation of the metaphor, though with some change in the application, and the Apostle is supposed to have had in mind many similar illustrations found in the Jewish writings. Many Commentators take τῷ Θεῷ for εἰς τὸν Θεόν. But it seems better (with the ancient and some eminent moderns, as Schleus.) to interpret "by God." The general sense is: "We are those through whom God spreads and propagates this odoriferous, beneficial, and salutiferous Gospel of Christ." In ἐν τοῖς σωζομένοις and τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις is implied all. q. d. "We indeed bear the sweet odour of Christ's Gospel to all; but all who participate in it do not experience its salutiferous effects. Yet if some be saved, and others perish, the Gospel retains its own virtue, and we, the preachers of it, remain just as we are; and the Gospel retains its odoriferous and salutiferous properties, though some may disbelieve, or abuse it, and perish. Thus the general sense may be thus expressed with Mr. Holden: "To those who perish through unbelief, the fragrance of the Gospel, which we diffuse, becomes a deadly savour, ending in their death; but to the saved it becomes a vivifying savour, ending in life eternal." Τοῖς σωζομένοις (as the Greek Commentators explain) simply denotes those who believe and embrace the Gospel, and who, by faithfully fulfilling its requisitions, are saved; the ἀπολλ., those who either disbelieve and reject it, or at least neglect to fulfil its requisitions.

16. οἷς μὲν ὁσμὴ, &c.] q. d. We have done our part, whatever be the result; though to the one we are a savour, &c. Θανάτου and ζωῆς are Genitives of a substantive in the place of its cognate adjective. The words εἰς θάνατον and εἰς ζωὴν are partly exegetical, but chiefly meant to strengthen the sense.

— καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανός;] I have shown at large in Recens. Synop. that the sense must not be limited, but left general; importing that no human being is of himself sufficient for so momentous a business; by which it is implied that our sufficiency is of God. In v. 15, 16. Dr. Paley recognises one of those numerous instances of digression in St. Paul which, he thinks, may be denominated going off at a word. "It is (he says) a turning aside from the subject upon the occurrence of some particular word; forsaking the train of thought then in hand, and entering upon a parenthetical sentence, in which that word is the prevailing term. See 2 Cor. iii. 1. at the word epistle. 2 Cor. iii. 12. at the word veil. Eph. iv. 8. at the word ascended. v. 12. at the word light."

17. οὐ γὰρ ἴσμεν—τὸν λόγον.] These words are by some thought to refer to those immediately preceding. But the best Commentators are, with reason, agreed, that the reference in the γὰρ is to the words of v. 14. q. d. "[We are indeed so favoured by God, that we are caused to triumph, and are permitted to scatter the odours of the Gospel]: and we do this with zeal and alacrity; for we are not as the many," i. e. very many, &c. The use of the participle and verb substantive for the finite verb, denotes custom. Thus it connects with the verb λαλοῦμεν following. The force of the expression καπηλ. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ will be seen by bearing in mind the proper signification of καπηλεύω. Now this will depend upon that of κάπηλος· which is not derived from κακυνεῖν and πηλός (as the Etymologists say), but is cognate with the cappo- of the Latin; and both are derived from the Chappen, Koppen, and other cognate words of the Northern languages, denoting to sell by retail. Thus κάπηλος means a retail dealer, one who sells at second hand; as is plain from two passages of Plato (which have escaped all the Commentators) p. 531. C. ἔργα ἀλλότρια παραδεχόμενοι, δεύτερον πωλοῦσι πάλιν οἱ κάπηλοι. and p. 600. And so Hesych. explains καπηλεύει by μεταπωλεῖ. Æschyl. too Theb. 541. by a bold figure (formed on the foregoing sense) says ἐλθὼν δ' ἔοικεν οὐ καπηλεύσειν μάχην, "he will not fight by retail," i. e. in a peddling way. In short, the κάπηλοι were petty chapmen, (and that chiefly in eatables or drinkables) exactly corresponding to our hucksters. And as provisions are most susceptible of that adulteration, which is so likely to be practised by petty venders, so these κάπηλοι were, from a very early period, accused of this trickery. So Isaiah i. 22. οἱ κάπηλοί σοι μισγοῦσι τὸν οἶνον ὕδατι. Καπηλεύειν, therefore, came to mean "make a gain of," and also, as here, to corrupt for the purpose of gain. So Cl. Alex. 60. οὐ καπηλεύεται ἡ ἀλήθεια. The sense, then, is, corrupting the Gospel, in order to make a gain of it, by representing its doctrines and injunctions as otherwise than what they really are. What these admixtures were, may easily be conceived; though they, no doubt, differed in different teachers; sometimes consisting of Jewish superstitions, and sometimes of Philosophical notions, and the dreams of the Sophists. See Cudworth Intell. Syst.

The idea is further unfolded in the words following ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ εἰλ., which signify "with sincerity and integrity." At ὡς ἐκ Θεοῦ sub. λέγοντες, which arises from the idea of λέγειν suggested by καπηλ. τὸν λόγον. The sense is, "as persons who speak from God, and not from themselves, κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, as in the presence of God, and with a view to his approbation alone." Ἐν Χρ., "in the name of Christ, as his legates."

III. In this Chapter the Apostle obviates any charge of self-commendation, desiring to ascribe all his success to God. And adverting to the superiority of the Gospel over the Law, he especially points out plain speaking (probably to excuse his freedom) as most accordant with its nature; and concludes with describing the liberty and progressive holiness which arose from the Gospel.

1. ἀρχόμεθα—συνιστάνειν;] This is meant to anticipate an objection, that by thus mentioning his sincerity, he was recommending himself. In the interrogation is implied a strong negation, οὐδαμῶς! The next words εἰ μὴ χρῆζομεν are to be considered as having reference to something omitted for brevity's sake; q. d. "[Nor have we any occasion so to do]." Thus there will be no reason to read ἡ μὴ for εἰ μὴ, with Griesb. and others, from a few MSS., Versions, and Fathers; though contrary to the most certain of Critical canons. Ἡ μὴ is plainly an alteration (an ingenious one, it must be confessed) to remove a difficulty, which, after all, is, as we have seen, but imaginary.

—συστ. ἐπιστ.] These were letters of introduction, and, more or less, of recommendation, probably deriving their origin from the teseræ hospitalitatis of the earlier Greeks, and often mentioned in the later Classical writers. They were much employed among the Greeks and Romans, and also the Jews: from whom, it is probable, was immediately derived the frequent use of them in the primitive church. The τινες alludes to the false teachers, who, it seems, had thus introduced themselves to the Church at Corinth.

2, 3. ἡ ἐπιστ. ἡμῶν ὑμεῖς ἐστε, &c.] As if he had said (observes Theodoret), ἡμεῖς οὐ δεόμεθα γραμματῶν· αὐτὰ γὰρ ἡμῖν τὰ πράγματα μαρτυρεῖ. according to the sense expressed by Theophyl., "that which letters of introduction and recommendation would have done, this ye yourselves do, when seen and heard." Thus the meaning is, "Ye are [in fact] our recommendatory epistle, one written by Christ, through our instrumentality; not with ink, but with the Holy Spirit; not on letters of stone, but on the heart: q. d. your conversion to the Christian faith, by my preaching and miracles, is a sufficient recommendation of me as a true Apostle. Now this conversion and the reformation therein implied, must (from the extensive communication of Corinth with almost every part of the world) have been known to all, and were in that sense read by all. Moreover (what seems meant by the ἐγγεγρ. ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν) this knowledge was especially imprinted on the mind of the Apostle; and he himself was the means of bearing it about to all parts of the world. The words are well paraphrased by Prof. Dobree as follows: "Omnibus me satis commendat fama summi amoris mei, quo vos, Christo conciliante, in intimum pectus recepi." Vide vii. 3. Instead of ἡμῶν, indeed, a few MSS. and Versions have ὑμῶν, after ταῖς καρδίαις; which is preferred by Olearius, Doddr., Barrington, Wakef., and Rinck.; but without sufficient reason, since it is little suitable to the context.

—φανερούμενοι ὅτι ἐστὲ, &c.] Professor Dobree remarks, that "here there is a transition from the heart of Paul to the heart of the Corinthians, as at infra v. 13—16, from Moses veiled to the Jews veiled. Hence arises a comparison of the ministry of Paul, as compared with that of Moses." See Exod. xxxiv. 33. Φανερ. ὅτι ἐστὲ, &c., is for ὅτι φανερώς ἐστε, "it being manifest that ye are," &c. So in Thucyd. i. 93. 2. The same metaphor is here continued, but with alteration, and a different application. When it is said that they are even Christ's Epistle, the latter must be understood in a different sense to the former; and the sense may be thus traced: "Ye bear the commands of Christ on your heart, and transcribe them into your practice. This is as it were, a letter dictated by Christ to me, and by me written on your hearts." In some sense, too, it might be said that they were thus a letter commendatory of Christ and the Gospel to the heathens. By the ἐπιστ. Χρ. is meant the Gospel; and to this the term ἐπιστολὴ is very applicable, according to the sense in which it is here used, namely, mandatum. The term, indeed, is applicable to any revelation of God's will to man.

The remainder of the verse is meant further to unfold the sense of ἐπιστολὴ, and to show the superiority of the Gospel over the Law. It is thus illustrated by Theophylact; "As Moses was the minister of the Law, so are we the ministers of your faith in the Gospel. He cut the stones; we cut the hearts. The law was written with ink; the Gospel was written upon you by the Spirit. As far as the Spirit is superior to ink, and the heart to stone, so far is the new Dispensation superior to the old." It may be added, that in the Law there was a bare command; in the Gospel the injunction was rendered effectual by the ministry of the Holy Spirit, both in His ordinary and extraordinary operations. On this subject see Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. The words ἐν πλαξὶ καρδίας σαρκ. are, by transposition, put for ἐν πλαξὶ σαρκ. κ., i. e. on fleshly tablets, namely, those of the heart. Compare Jer. xvii. 1. The same figure occurs in Æschyl. Prom. 814. ἢν ἐγγράφου σὺ μνήμοισιν δελτοῖς φρενῶν. See also a passage of Theophyl. Simoc. and Plato, cited by me in Recens. Synop.

4. The connexion is here somewhat uncertain. Many early modern Expositors suppose the words to refer to those immediately preceding. And so Rosenm. A harsh sense, however, thus arises. The true view is, I think, that adopted by Chrys. and Theophyl.; who suppose the Apostle here means to deprecate the accusation of boasting of himself. Whatever his superiority might be, it rested, he says, solely on his confidence in God, through Christ, from whom alone he derived his sufficiency to spread the Gospel. The sense, then, may be expressed as follows: "We, however, have (or rest) such a cause for trust and confidence [as this superiority implies] in God alone and through Christ." Οὐχ ὅτι. Supply οὐ λέγω. Λογίσασθαι must, with the ancient and the best modern Expositors, be interpreted excogitare: a sense frequent in the later Classical writers. The meaning is: "We are of ourselves unable to devise or even conceive, the mysteries and truths of the Gospel; much less to give them the effect by which the Holy Spirit writes and imprints them on the hearts of men; but our suffering is from God. Wolf refers ὡς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν, to the will, ὡς ἀφ' ἐ. to the power. It should rather seem that ὡς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν is meant to further explain the sense; and that the meaning is what Emmerl. expresses, "ita ut ex me profectum putem." The τ. must, by the context, be limited to denote any thing relative to the peculiar doctrine of the Gospel, and the method of salvation revealed in the new covenant.

6. ὃς καὶ ἰκάνωσεν ἡμᾶς.] Sub. εἶναι. The sense is, "And it is He who fitted us to be ministers," &c. The words οὐ γράμμ. ἀλλὰ πνεῦμ. should be rendered, "not of letter, but of spirit," i. e. not of a literal, but a spiritual Covenant. By literal is meant resting on written documents, or Scripture only, like the Law of Moses. It may also denote (in a figurative sense) "consisting in outward forms and ceremonies." Thus by τὸ γράμμ. is meant "what is literal," viz. the Law; and by τὸ πνεῦμα, "what is spiritual" (viz. internal and spiritual religion), the Gospel. Such (in opposition to the Mystics, who take these words of the literal and the spiritual interpretation) Bp. Marsh, in his Lect. p. 369, has proved to be the only sense which the context admits. "The Apostle (says he) is drawing a parallel, which has no concern with interpretation, but is between the Law of Moses and the Gospel of Christ. The former 'kills,' inasmuch as it denounces death without hope on all who disobey it; nay, sometimes occasioned death, by the multiplicity and difficulty of its ceremonial rites. See Rom. iii. 20. and Gal. ii. 19. On the contrary, the πνεῦμα, the Spiritual System of the Gospel, ζωοποιεῖ, 1st, brings life and immortality to light, and affords the means of salvation; 2dly, it imparts life, a new life, by the Holy Spirit. There is also an allusion to that expiatory sacrifice by which this vivification is effected. The two Dispensations, moreover, are contrasted as to their tendency: that of the Law was punishment; that of the Gospel, reformation rather than punishment.—salvation rather than condemnation."

7, 8. The Apostle now further evinces this superiority of the Gospel, by showing, 1. that its glory is greater; inasmuch as the Law had only a corporeal and visible glory,—namely, that in the face of Moses; but the New Dispensation an intellectual and spiritual one. (Theophyl.) I have in Recens. Synop. shown that the sense of the verse is this: "If the ministry or office of promulgating a covenant which, in the letter, (when written on tables of stone) brought nothing but death with it, was glorious (namely, by the appearance of angels with the cloud of glory); and so glorious, that the children of Israel were not able to look at the face of Moses, because of the shining of his countenance, which glory was soon to vanish; how much more shall not the ministration of the Spiritual, or the Spirit-giving Dispensation (i. e. the Gospel) be glorious?" Ἐν δόξῃ is for ἐνδοξος. On this δόξα see Note on Luke ii. 9. The words of Exod. xxxiv. 29. suggest the idea of such an irradiation as that which is represented in pictures, encircling the countenance of Christ. With respect to τὴν καταργουμένην, it must not be understood, with some, of fading away with youth, and ceasing with death. The best mode of taking the words is that of the ancients and some eminent moderns; namely, to suppose that τὴν καταργουμένην (introduced to impart force to the argumentation) though it pertains in appearance to τὴν δόξαν, yet, in fact, belongs to γράμματα, meaning the Mosaic economy; and that the Apostle meant to hint that, as that glory was temporary, and would cease at death, so was the Dispensation, of whose Divine origin this was the symbol, meant, also, to be temporary.

9. εἰ γὰρ ἡ διακονία—ἐν δόξῃ.] The Apostle here (as Theophyl. says) “gives another turn to the same thought.” Indeed, διακ. τῆς κατακρ. is meant to further illustrate what was said at v. 7, ἡ διακονία τοῦ θανάτου ἐν γράμμασι. The condemnatory Law and the justificatory Gospel are contrasted; the former as a ministry of condemnation, the latter as one of justification; conferring justification on all who heartily embrace it. Δόξα is for δοξαστός; which use of a substantive for its cognate adjective is also found in the Classical writers.

10, 11. Here the sentiment is further strengthened. At τὸ δεδοχ. sub. πρᾶγμα, meaning the Mosaic Dispensation. Οὐ δεδοξασται, “was not esteemed glorious or excellent.” The δὲ is in many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found; and is probably not genuine, but originating merely from the δὲ following. It is cancelled by Matthæi, Griesb., Tittm., and Vat. In τούτῳ τῷ μέρει and ἕνεκα there is some distinction of sense; the τούτῳ τῷ μέρει signifying en cet egard (as the French say) in respect of comparison; and ἕνεκα, “on account of.” Thus ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει contains comparison, and ἕνεκα, &c. is only exegetical of the preceding. It is, however, proper to bear in mind (as Beza and Scott suggest), 1. that the Law is here not considered simply, but as connected with the ministration of Moses, and as apart and distinct from the Gospel. 2. That the Apostle’s principal aim here seems to have been to magnify his office, and to show, from the example of Moses, that the ministry (especially the Apostolical) of the New Testament was honourable in proportion to the supreme glory of that Dispensation.

11. The comparison is here continued, in another view, between the Law, as transient, and the Gospel, as permanent; which would naturally give the latter a superiority over the former.

—τὸ καταργ.] Not “which was done away,” but “which was to be done away,” i. e. intended to be only temporary. Τὸ μένον, “what was to be permanent,” μόνιμον (viz. until the end of the world), and so called, as being the last Dispensation of God, and to be succeeded by no other. Ἐν δόξῃ, sub. ἦν, “was attended with glory,” both at its delivery, and in its use.

12. ἔχοντες οὖν τ. ἐλπ.] Some eminent Commentators explain, “having such confidence in the glorious perpetuity of the Gospel ministration.” But this seems too confined a sense. It is better, with Chrys., Newc., and Macknight, to regard it as having reference to all that has been said of the superiority of the Gospel over the Law; q. d. “Having such an assured hope as this, so grounded on the infinite superiority and pre-eminent advantages of the Gospel over the Law” (and, by implication, of the same superiority of his ministry over that under the Law), “I use,” &c. And here, observes Calvin, “longius evehitur Ap. neque enim tantum de Legis naturâ tractat, de perpetua qualitate, sed etiam de abusu.” This sense of ἐλπίς examples occur in i. 7. Phil. i. 20. Tit. i. 2.

—πολλῇ παρρόρησίᾳ χρώμ.] On the sense of these words, Commentators are not agreed. Some explain, “we use great freedom and boldness of speech.” Others, “we use great plainness of speech, sine verborum involucris et ambagibus.” The former interpretation is better supported by the usus loquendi; but the latter is more agreeable to the words following; for I agree with Emmerling, that what is said at vv. 13—18 was suggested by the idea then in the Apostle’s mind, of something kept concealed. And so Dr. Paley (in his Horæ Paulinæ), observes, “that this allegory of the veil arose entirely out of the occurrence of the word; and drew the Apostle away from the proper subject of his discourse, the dignity of the office in which he was engaged. This subject he resumes at iv. 1, almost in the words he had left it.” The above use of παρρόρησία with λαλεῖν, &c. occurs in Mark viii. 32. John x. 24. xi. 14. xvi. 25, 29.

13. καὶ οὐ.] Sub. ποιοῦμεν τοῦτο, i. e. παρακαλύπτουμεν, or κάλυμμα ἐπιτίθεμεν (from the context), “we do not use a veiled and mysterious form of speaking.” On the sense of this passage the Interpreters are by no means agreed. The most correct view of the sense seems to be that adopted by Calvin, Beza, Cameron, Sclater, and Locke. I would add a few general remarks. 1. That, as Est. observes, the narrative contained in Exodus is here converted into an allegory, and the mystery concealed under it pointed out. Or, as Grot. expresses it, we are here presented with a mystical explanation of the glory or light of Moses, and the veil which he put over his countenance. The whole is, as Cameron observes, mystical and typical. A carnal people could not bear the splendour of Moses’ countenance, a type of the Gospel of Christ: and thus, agreeably to the figure, the Law was veiled until the Spirit should come, who was to take it away. In short, as Grot. and Doddr. point out, even Moses himself was, in this, a type of his own Dispensation. 2. It has been well noticed by Calvin, Beza, Vorst., Slater, and Emmerling, that πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι αὐτοὺς is not to be understood of any intention on the part of Moses; as if (what Locke and Wets. suppose) he spoke obscurely in the Law, that its ultimate import should not be discovered; μὴ γένοιτο! As Calvin has shown, Moses would doubtless have wished that the true intent should have been known, but that he had a simple duty to perform, to publish the Law; and as he could not regenerate the minds of the people, so also no blame is imputable (or is here imputed) to him, "quia non debuit plus præstare quam ferebat dispensatio sibi commissæ." In short, the πρὸς is to be taken simply to express eventum rei (namely, the blindness of the Israelites). And this Cameron proves by a reference, 1. to facts; and 2. to the antithesis at v. 14; 3. from the nature of the thing; 4. from the propriety of the thing.

The general sense contained in vv. 13, 14, 15, is well expressed by Scott as follows: "The Apostle means to say that his doctrine was not hid in obscurity, or ambiguity, or under types and shadows, as the Legal Dispensation had been; of which the veil on the face of Moses was a figure or emblem. As this covering concealed the lustre of his countenance, so the obscurity of that Dispensation concealed its real glory; and the Israelites were unable to look stedfastly to Christ, the great End, Scope, and Substance of those ceremonies which were shortly to be abolished."

The words πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι—καταργουμένου may be paraphrased thus: "So that they did not see what was adumbrated under the Law which was to be done away, even the substance—the Gospel of Christ, the end and object, and to be the complementum of the Law." So Rom. x. 4. τέλος νόμου Χριστὸς, εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι.

14. ἀλλ' ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήμ. a.] The ἀλλὰ seems to refer to a clause omitted, and the full sense to be this: "Nor has this only been in old time, but it has ever since been the case, that their understanding and perceptions have been, and are, dull and stupid." This sense of πωρ. is frequent in the N. T. See Mark vi. 52. viii. 17. John xii. 40. It is well observed by Cameron, that the Apostle here says, not "eyes," but "understandings," "loco significati rem significatam reddente." It is worthy of remark, that vv. 14, 15, 16, and 17. form a parenthetical portion, of which the matter was suggested by the mention of the blindness of the Israelites in the days of Moses, and intended to show that their disposition was then very much as it had been in the time of Moses. During these verses the construction is suspended, and then at v. 17. is resumed and completed.

—τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα—μένει μὴ ἀνακ.] The sense is: "For to this day, the same veil as that which Moses used (i. e. the obscurity of the Mosaic law, typified by the veil of Moses' face) still remains, when they read the Old Testament.—The next words μὴ ἀνακαλυπτόμενον καταργεῖται are best taken (with the Syriac Versions, Macn., Newc., and Emmerl.) in the sense "it not being discovered by them, or become known to them, that it (viz. the darkness of the Old Covenant) is done away by Christ;" i. e. that the true end of the Law is discovered by the Gospel of Christ.

15. Here there is a repetition, in somewhat plainer and more circumstantial terms, of what was said in the preceding verses. Of course, by κάλυμμα, is here meant the spiritual veil which darkened the minds of the Israelites.

16. ἥνικα δ' ἂν ἐπιστ. πρὸς Κύρ.] The use of the singular here, where the plural might have been expected, has occasioned not a little perplexity, and given rise to a difference of opinion as to the reference. Some refer it to Ἰσραὴλ, (i. e. people of Israel) at v. 13.; others, to Moses in the preceding verse, meaning the Law of Moses, i. e. the Old Testament: others, again, to καρδιά in the preceding. The view first mentioned seems to deserve the preference; yet only as involving the least harshness. It should seem that (as Cameron and Capellus point out) the singular is here put for the plural, by a sort of impersonal use, or rather by an ellipsis of τις in a collective sense (for the plural, like the French on); the Active also being used, as a reciprocal, for the Passive. This, I would observe, is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., which assigns the following sense: "When any one of them shall be converted to the Lord, the veil will be taken away from him." So also, I suspect, the Vulg. Translator took it.

17. ὁ δὲ Κύριος τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστιν.] On the sense of these words considerable difference of opinion exists. See Rec. Syn.

One thing seems plain, that (as Abp. Newc. suggests) the Apostle here takes up the Κύριον of the preceding verse, and enlarges on it, showing the advantages of the Gospel over the Law. The sense may, with Prof. Scholefield, be thus expressed: "The Lord (of whom I speak, see v. 16.) is the Spirit;" or, as Prof. Dobree admirably paraphrases, "When I speak of the Jews turning to the Lord, I mean, their turning from THE LETTER TO THE SPIRIT." So Abp. Newc. and Bp. Middl. well render: "The Lord and his

The sense may be expressed, in a general way, with Newc., "is a dispensation of freedom, and not of bondage to ceremonies." But we are also to advert to that freedom from condemnation imparted by the Gospel (Rom. viii. 34.), freedom from the bondage of corrupt passions or slavish principles, imparted by Christ, whereby the believer is enabled to find liberty in willing obedience. See Rom. viii. 1, 2, 14, 17.

18. This verse contains the completion of the contrast between the Dispensation of the Law and of the Gospel, in respect to their spiritual efficacy, commenced at v. 13., but interrupted by the intervention of a passage expressing an idea suggested by the term κάλυμμα. Accordingly, the present passage ought not to have been thought so perplexing as to occasion that very great diversity of interpretation which here exists: and the sense may be thus expressed in close paraphrase: "We, on the contrary, (ὁὐ) (meaning Christians) all of us, with unveiled face, (i. e. clearly and plainly) beholding, as in a mirror, the glory of the Lord, as shining forth in the Gospel, (and not, like the Jews, seeing the truth veiled in types and shadows, but beholding clearly and distinctly, as if reflected in a mirror, the glorious manifestation of the Lord in the Gospel), we, I say, are transformed into the same image and resemblance as that of the Lord, which we behold in the Gospel, and go on from glory to glory; even as we are supported by the Spirit of the Lord, which worketh in us, and produceth this transformation." See Scott and Holden.

To advert to particulars, τὴν δόξαν—κατοπτρ. may signify, beholding the clear and resplendent image of his doctrine, and recognizing its glory in its saving efficacy on the hearts of men, and thus having our minds enlightened by it. See Parkh. ap. Rec. Syn. On the term κατοπτρ., see Note on 1 Cor. xiii. 12. At εἰκόνα—δόξαν (which alludes to the changing of the face of Moses on beholding the Schechinah) there is an ellipsis, not of εἰς, but of κατὰ, which is expressed in a kindred passage of Col. iii. 10. τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν. The words ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν imply, that the more we behold this resplendent and glorious light, the more do we reflect back its rays; q. d. the more we contemplate the great truths of the Christian religion, the more do our minds become imbued with its spirit; we are enabled, under the influence of Divine grace, to go on from one degree of holiness to another, until, at length, the view of faith, as in a mirror, shall be changed into immediate and perfect sight, even the glorified vision of God in heaven itself.

IV. Here the Apostle skilfully resumes (almost in the same words with which he had left it at v. 12.) the subject of his discourse,—the dignity of the office he was discharging, (from which he had been drawn by the comparison with the ministration of Moses, suggested by the allegory of the veil.) In order to this, and as tending to that general purpose of apology which runs through a great part of the Epistle, he compares his own conduct with that of his adversaries, and intimates his superiority over them, in the most important characteristics of his ministerial office, fidelity, sincerity, zeal, and diligence. And, to set in a still higher point of view his merit in the last mentioned quality, he adverts to the various trials and tribulations which had broken his strength, and consequently lessened his ability to serve them. To this physical weakness he then opposes, by contrast, the power of the Lord, by which alone he was enabled to persevere, and faint not under trials.

1. ἡλεήθημεν.] This word is often used of the grace of God, shown in bringing men to salvation, as Rom. ix. 15. seqq. xi. 30, 32. 1 Cor. vii. 25. 1 Pet. ii. 10. On the sense of ἐκκακεῖν see Note on Luke xviii. 1. The word is properly a military term, signifying "to give way from cowardice."

2. ἀπειπάμεθα] "we have nothing to do with." The Aorist is here used for the Present, as denoting what is done at all times alike, and is habitual. See Alt's Gr. N. T. p. 235. Τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχ., namely, all such base practices as men, from shame, conceal; meaning all underhand and foul dealings; especially such as the false teachers, whom the Apostle is supposed to allude to, were chargeable with. Μὴ περιπ. ἐν πανουργίᾳ, "not adopting a crafty line of conduct." Δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ is synonymous with καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ at ii. 17. By συνιστῶντες &c. is meant, "acting so as to recommend ourselves to the unbiased [good] opinion of men." Of this sense of συνείδ. another example occurs at v. 11. Ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, "as in the presence of God."

here continued. An objection is here supposed, founded on the preceding πάσαν; q. d. all do not receive the Gospel, even when preached so plainly and strongly as he does. To which the answer is, that the fault is not in the Gospel, nor in any obscurity which attaches to it, but in the blindness and perversity of those who are perishing, are in a lost state, meaning that of unbelief. For that that is the sense of ἀπολλ. appears from the verse following, and from a comparison with a passage at ii. 15., which is the best comment on this verse.

4. ἐν οἷς ὁ Θεός, &c.] Put for ὧν ἀπίστων ὁ Θεός, &c. By τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου is meant the wicked and sensual part of it, mere worldlings; and by the God of it, Satan, (See John xii. 31. xiv. 30.), to whom, as being the original author and continual promoter of sin, sinners are, as it were, bound to yield obedience. See Rom. vi. 16. And it is but natural that worldlings should worship the God of this world. Satan is called, not Lord, but God, of this world, because he is worshipped and served in the place of God by the world at large. So Bp. Sanderson (in his 7th Sermon ad Populum) shows that it is by doing service to Satan that the men of the world make a God of him; service being a principal part of that honour which belongeth to God. So Matt. iv. 10. αὐτῷ μόνῳ λατρεύσεις. Εἰς τὸ μὴ αὐγάζαι, &c. The construction and sense is: "So that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ (who is the image of God) might not shine unto them," i. e. that it might not show its true purport, and its real excellence to them; so that they should neither understand the one, nor appreciate the other. The αὐτοῖς after αὐγάζαι is omitted in many MSS. and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb., Tittm., and Vater. Φωτισμὸν, "splendour and excellence," with reference (remarks Grot.) to the preaching of Christ's miracles, resurrection, and ascension to Heaven; and also of a celestial kingdom, and the sending of the Holy Spirit procured by Him.

—εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Christ is so called, either in respect of his Divine nature, by which he proceeds from the Father, as an image bearing an exact and perfect resemblance to Him; or, in respect of his office of Mediator, of which the principal part is, that he should hold forth the Father to our view. See Note on Heb. i. 3.

5. οὐ γὰρ—Κύριον.] The words, as Theophyl. said, have reference to the preceding μὴ περιπ. ἐν πανουργίᾳ μηδὲ δολ. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ; vv. 3, 4. being in some measure parenthetical; q. d. "[We do not act in a crafty manner, or adulterate the word of God,] because we do not preach ourselves, as do the false teachers." Ἐαυ-τοὺς κηρύσσει, is explained by most Commentators to mean seeking our own advantage or credit in preaching. This may be admitted as a secondary sense, and is very agreeable to the usus loquendi. So Synes. cited by Wets., τὸ κηρύττειν ἑαυτὸν, καὶ πάντα ποιεῖν ὑπὲρ ἐπιδείξεως, οὐ σοφίας, ἀλλὰ σοφιστείας ἐστὶ. But the primary one intended seems to be that propounded by Theophyl., Grot., and Emmerl., "We do not speak as principals, as if in a business of our own; we merely act as ambassadors on the part of another, namely, Jesus Christ." That this is the sense is plain from the context and connexion. See Theophyl. Of the next clause, the full import seems to be this: "So far are we from regarding ourselves as principals, that we consider ourselves as performing whatever religious service we render to you, on the part of Christ." This sense of διὰ would readily spring from the common one on account of.

6. ὅτι ὁ Θεός—ὃς ἔλαμψεν, &c.] The Apostle here returns to the allegorical mode of speaking, alluding again to the shining of Moses' face. The construction, however, is somewhat irregular; and the best mode of tracing it is to suppose an ellipsis of οὗτός ἐστι before ὃς ἔλαμψε. In Ὁ εἰπὼν ("who bade") there is an allusion to Gen. i. 3, "let there be light, and there was light." The Apostle, as Iaspis observes, means to intimate, Physicè quasi in creando mundo, et moralitèr per Christum Deus dixit, Fiat lux! et facta est lux. "Ὁς ἔλαμψεν," [he it is] who hath caused the light to shine." See Gal. i. 16. How this light, which shineth on men by the revelation of God's truth and the illumination of His Spirit, through the ear or the understanding, conveying the light of truth unto the heart, may (as in the case of those mentioned supra v. 4.) be in many ways excluded and become ineffectual, the reader is referred to a fine passage in Dr. Barrow's Sermons, vol. ii. p. 25. The Apostle has reference to the state of ignorance and prejudice to which he had formerly been so wedded; when (in a two-fold sense) the light of heaven broke in upon him. The words πρὸς φωτισμὸν, &c. denote the purpose for which the light was vouchsafed, and προς φωτ. γν. &c. is put for πρὸς τὸ φωτίζειν [ἄλλους] περὶ γν., "for enlightening others in the knowledge of the glory of God." Ἐν προσώπῳ Ἰ. Χρ., i. e. as Mr. Scott explains, as seen "in his person, miracles, character, righteousness, atonement, and mediation;" which being steadfastly beheld, as in a mirror, transformed the soul into the glorious image of God exhibited in it.

7. The Apostle now proceeds (from this verse to ch. v. 10.) to advert to a very different subject; namely, his own infirmities of body, and the trials under which he suffered; probably (as Theophyl., Schliting, and Emmerl. suppose) to preclude the idea (no doubt entertained by some) that these were inconsistent with the possession of those illustrious gifts and that Apostolical dignity which he claimed. In refutation of this, he shows that his heavy trials and tribulations are appointed by God, for his own wise and merciful purposes; that he is amply supported under them by Divine aid (a manifest attestation to the truth of his claim), that the trials are not without profit to them, and not without great benefit to himself, both here and hereafter.

—ἐχομεν] for κατέχομεν. Τὸν θησαυρὸν τ., i. e. the "light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ" just spoken of, and the important ministry which related to it. Ἐν ὀστρ. σκεύεσιν, i. e. by an allusion to a proverbial saying, of rich treasures being deposited in earthen vessels, i. e. bodies mean in substance, and fragile in form. The term σκεῦος (from σχέω, to hold) has an allusion to the body's being the depository of the soul. Ὀστροκον properly signifies a shell (of which material, probably, the primitive vessels were formed); and, 2dly, a vessel, of baked earth. And as that is proverbially brittle, ὀστροκίνοις denoted weak, fragile, both in a natural and a metaphorical sense; and therefore was very applicable to the human body, both as frail (so Artemid. Onir. i. 52. and vi. 25., cited by Wets., tells us that to dream of being an earthen vessel, or to be in an earthen vessel, was a sign of death), and as mean. So Arrian Epict. iii. 9, says that a poor savant addressed a rich booby thus: Ταῦτα (meaning his talents) ἐξω ἀντί τῶν ἀργυρωμάτων, ἀντί τῶν χρυσωμάτων. Σὺ χρυσά σκεῦη, ὀστροκίνοις δὲ λόγον, scil. ἔχεις. Indeed, there was an ancient saying, to be traced as far back as Herodotus,—that men are but earthen vessels. There may, however, be an allusion (agreeably to the Platonic doctrine) to the body, as standing in the same relation to the soul as the shell to the fish.

—ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως] "the exceeding great power [committed to me as an Apostle]." Or ὑπερβ. τῆς δυν. may be considered as referring to the mightiness of the things effected—whether miracles, or the scarcely less preternatural work of conversion effected with such strikingly insufficient means. Ἡ, for φαίνεται, might clearly appear to be of God (comp. Ps. lxiv. 9.) and not of us: the same sentiment as at i. 9.

8, ἐν παντί θλιβόμενοι, &c.] q. d. "So great is God's power and support, that although we be earthen, and beaten about by so many trials and tribulations, we are not broken down or destroyed."

The participles are, by the ellipsis of ἡμεῖς, nominati pendentes, or are put for finite verbs. Ἐν παντί (sub. χρόνῳ, or τόπῳ, or πράγματι) is for πανταχοῦθεν, as in Thucyd. iii. 37. ἀμφοτέρωθεν θορυβοῦμενοι. In θλιβ., and the other similar terms employed in this figurative passage (where antithesis and paronomasia are united) there are generally recognised agonistical metaphors. But we may rather, with Theophyl., suppose military ones; the allusion, it should seem, being to an army so hemmed in and distressed, as scarcely to know whither to turn itself; yet not utterly reduced to despair. To which view of the sense θλιβ. and στενοχ. are far more suitable; θλιβ. denoting to be pressed upon or thronged, στενοχ., to be hemmed in; of which see a graphic description in Thucyd. v. 72, 73. The two terms are similarly combined at Arrian Diss. Epict. i. 25. Ἐξαπορεῖσθαι (where the ἐκ. signifies utterly, as in ἐξασθενεῖν) is used in the same sense as at i. 8. ὥστε ἐξαπορηθῆναι ἡμᾶς τοῦ ζῆν, where see Note. There is an allusion to an army so entirely surrounded and hemmed in ἐν στενοῖς, (as the Roman army at the Caudinæ Furcæ) that there is left no hope of escape.

9. ἐγκαταλ.] "deserted [by God]," as an army by its auxiliaries. Ἀπολλ. This term is alone applicable to soldiers, since the worsted athletæ were not destroyed. And that must determine καταβαλλόμενοι to contain a military allusion; of which it is quite as susceptible as of an agonistical one.

10. πάντοτε—περιφέροντες.] Here and at v. 11. we have a strong mode of expressing the mortal peril to which he was continually exposed; (as 1 Cor. xv. 31. κατ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω) together with an indirect comparison of the sufferings endured by himself and the other Apostles, with those endured by the Lord Jesus even unto death. The Genitive τοῦ Κυρίου is (as Grot. remarks) a Genitive of likeness. The sense is, "bearing about, continually sustaining perils and sufferings, like those of the Lord Jesus."

The words following, ἵνα ἡ ζωὴ—φανερωθῇ suggest a reason why they were permitted to suffer all this; namely, that the faith of Christians in the resurrection of Jesus might be confirmed; i. e. in order that the life of Jesus, ascended into heaven, might be made manifest by their perishable bodies, so wonderfully preserved amidst deadly perils. See Whitby. Ver. 11 is explanatory and illustrative of the preceding; q. d. For so it is: we who, &c.

12. ὥστε ὁ μὲν θάνατος—ὑμῖν.] Here we have an inference introducing a contrast between their condition and that of their converts. Yet, on the exact nature of it, Expositors exceedingly differ in opinion. Much depends upon the import assigned to ἐνεργεῖται; which most Interpreters, ancient and modern, take in an active sense, “worketh, is efficacious.” Others, however, as Beza, Grot., Est., Menoch., and Bp. Bull, assign to it a passive sense, efficitur, producitur; which certainly is found in Rom. vii. 5., and is assigned by Bp. Bull, at 2 Cor. i. 6. Eph. iii. 20. Col. i. ult. 1 Thess. ii. 13. 2 Thess. ii. 17. This latter view of the sense I am inclined to prefer, since here at least and in i. 6. and Eph. iii. 20. the passive sense seems more suitable to the context; while in the others, the verb or participle seems to be of the Middle voice, with a reciprocal sense, like the Hebrew conjugation Hithpahel, of which see many examples in Kuster and Dresig, de verbo Med. And no wonder; since the leading notion of the Middle verb is reflexive.

To advert to the sense of θάνατος and ζωή, they may (with some ancient Expositors, as Chrys. and certain other modern ones, as Primasius and Calvin) be taken in their proper sense—to mean that while he is dying for Christ's sake, they are enjoying life. If so, this must be meant as an ironical reproof. Yet the sense thus arising is harsh and frigid, and does not agree with the context, which (as well as the usual profundity of thought in this great Apostle) rather seems to require ζωή to be understood in a metaphorical sense of spiritual life. Though perhaps the natural sense may be meant to be included. q. d. “Inasmuch that, while we are in peril of life for Christ, ye are not only preserved alive (in being exempted from persecution), but made partakers of spiritual and eternal life [by our ministry].”

13, 14. The general sense here is: “We encounter these perils and afflictions through the very same principle of faith [namely, in the resurrection] which David had.” (Ps. cxvi. 10.) The vinculum of the connexion here is ably traced by Theophyl. to the use of the term ζωή for salvation, which resting in hope (and what is hoped for is not seen), must be centered in Faith. Κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμ. means, “to adopt the words of Scripture.” The sense may be thus expressed: “But we, having the same Spirit of faith as David had, adopt his words; and [accordingly] we too, actuated by the same faith, speak as we do.” Παραστήσει σὺν ὑμῖν, “will introduce us together with you,” namely, into the presence of his glory in heaven, as objects of his love.

15. τὰ γὰρ πάντα δι' ὑμᾶς.] The sense here is obscure, from the uncertainty of the reference in πάντα, and consequently has been variously interpreted. But from the context, there can be little doubt that πάντα must mean all the trials and tribulations detailed at vv. 8—12. There is an ellipsis of εἰσι, eveniunt, “have [by God's providence] happened [to me].” Δι' ὑμᾶς, “for your sake,” or “on your account,” for your spiritual advantage. The true connexion with the preceding verse has been alone seen by Calvin. The Apostle intimates, that the prospect of joining them in the society of the blessed, has been to him an encouragement to suffer for their spiritual benefit. The next words ἵνα ἡ χάρις πλεονάσασα—τοῦ Θεοῦ, advert to the purpose, or result, of those sufferings—namely, in order that the abundant favour of God, displayed in his preservation, might, through the thanksgiving of many persons, redound to the glory of God. For so, I think, the words are to be understood. The Apostle intimates, that under all his afflictions he shall at least have the comfort of their sympathy, and the benefit of their prayers. Agreeably to what he says at the kindred passage supra i. 11. συνπορούντων καὶ ὑμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τῇ δέήσει, ἵνα ἐκ πολλῶν προσώπων τὸ εἰς ἡμᾶς χάρισμα διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστησῇ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, which words are the best comment on the present. The construction, indeed, is not so clear as the sense. I am of opinion that the difficulty is here, as in very many other cases, occasioned by extreme brevity; and that the sentence, if expressed fully, and in its natural order, would run as follows: ἵνα ἡ χάρις πλεονάσασα [ἐκ πλειόνων] περισσέυσῃ, διὰ τὴν εὐχαριστίαν τῶν πλειόνων, εἰς τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. This mode of considering the passage is placed beyond doubt by the parallel one at i. 11. We may remark the antithesis between πλεονάσασα and περισσέυσῃ, which latter, therefore, does not simply mean redound, i. e. conduce. Moreover, τῶν πλειόνων does not signify many, but very many; the comparative only denoting a high degree of the positive, as in Phil. i. 14. And if the force of the Article be urged, we may render “the many,” understanding it to denote all the rest of the body, composed of the Corinthians and himself and Timothy, after subtracting them. On the same principle that the Article οἱ has been explained at Rom. v. 19.

16. διὸ οὐκ ἐκκακ., &c.] These words may be paraphrased (from the ancient Commentators) as follows: “Wherefore, although we suffer evils and encounter perils of various kinds, yet, knowing the power of God,—and feeling assured that as he hath delivered us now, he will continue to deliver us, and finally raise us up at the last day,—we faint not, nor despair under our sufferings.”

Ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος, denotes the body, as ὁ ἐσωθεν ἄνθρωπος, the mind, or rather soul. See Rom. vii. 22. Διαφθείρεται, “is impaired [in its strength.]” Ἀνακαινύεται, “acquires fresh strength,” namely, the strength of faith and hope. For (as Bp. Sand. finely remarks) “the testimony of a good conscience from within, and the light of God’s countenance from above, put more true joy into the heart, than any outward thing can sorrow.”

17. τὸ γὰρ παραντικά ἐλ., &c.] This is meant, as Theophyl. observes, to be explanatory of the preceding; as showing how the inner man acquires fresh strength, even under such trials. There has, however, been some doubt entertained as to the sense of τὸ παραντικά—Σλίψεως ἡμῶν. As bearing a strong resemblance to the present, I would compare a passage of Thucyd. iii. 56. καὶ ὅταν τὸ παραντικά πον ἡμῖν ὠφέλιμον καθιστῇται, “and when, too, our own advantage for the present is consulted.” In both these passages αὐντικά means “at present;” which, indeed, is the literal sense of the word, it being formed from παρ’, at, and αὐντικά, present. Thus it would seem that the sense here is that which the Syriac Translators, and most of the recent Commentators assign, “our present [comparatively] light affliction.” But the ancients generally, and almost all the earlier moderns, took παραντικά to mean momentary; regarding the words as put for ἡ θλίψις ἡμῶν ἢ παρ. καὶ ἐλαφρά [οὔσα], “our affliction, which is but momentary, and therefore light.” And as this interpretation is the most natural, it may be the true one. The sense “for the present” readily suggests an idea of what is temporary; which, indeed, seems to be the best version of the word, and is required by the antithetical αἰώνιον. The phrase καθ’ ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὧν. is highly significant; the repetition having an intensive force (like the Heb. כָּחַל כָּחַל), and it may be rendered “infinitely exceeding.” See a fine passage illustrative of this in Dr. Barrow’s Sermons, vol. i. p. 55. and also Hooker’s Ecl. Pol. p. 13. 1st Edit.

18. μὴ σκοπούντων, &c.] These words are explanatory of the foregoing, and meant to show how it comes to pass, that the afflictions seem light. Now that is not only because they are temporary, but because we consider them as things of temporary interest only, compared with those of an eternal existence. Σκοπούντων is by the best Interpreters taken as a participle for a verb and particle, “while we look at,” or rather “keep our minds intent upon;” as in Phil. ii. 4. iii. 17. and sometimes in the O. T. and the Classical writers. By the βλεπόμενα are meant all the visible and sensible things of the world, whether pleasurable or painful, elsewhere called τὰ ἐπίγεια and τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ; by the τὰ μὴ βλεπ. the things not corporeally seen, but which are realized by faith. So Proclus (cited by Bulkly) counsels us to withdraw our souls ἀπὸ τῶν φαινομένων ἐπὶ τὰ ἀφανῆ.

V. 1. This is closely connected with the preceding Chapter; not, however (as has been thought) with the last verse, but with v. 16. Διὸ οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν, vv. 17, 18. being, in some measure, parenthetical. In it the Apostle takes occasion, from the mention of the felicity of a future state, to enlarge thereon up to v. 10; showing the strong support, which the consideration of it afforded him, under the greatest perils, afflictions, and trials of this present scene.

—οἶδαμεν] “we assuredly know:” for the knowledge is that of assured and firm faith, on the nature of which Calvin has admirably treated. The ἐὰν is by some eminent Expositors interpreted postquam, quando, as in John xii. 52. But the sense thus arising is feeble compared with the common signification if or though. Ἐὰν καταλυθῇ should be rendered, “though it be dissolved;” i. e. though it is to be dissolved. With ἡ ἐπίγειος ἡμῶν οἰκία τοῦ σκῆνους the Commentators are somewhat perplexed. Some, as Rosenm. and Wakef., regard the οἰκία as redundant; since σκῆνος, they say, of itself signifies the human body. That, however, is merely evading the difficulty. It is, indeed, true that in the Classical writers (especially the Philosophers) σκῆνος has sometimes that sense. So Plato calls the body γῆινον σκῆνος and at Wisd. ix. 15. we have τὸ γεωδὲς σκῆνος. Hence some Commentators (as Michaelis, Schleus., and Bp. Middl.) take the sense to be: “our earthly abode of the body.” See Bp. Middl.; who, however, is more successful in showing the incorrectness of our common version, than in establishing the one he adopts. It is plain that, as οἰκία must not be regarded as pleonastic, τοῦ σκῆνους must be meant to be exegetical of the ἡ ἐπίγ. ἡμῶν οἰκία. And yet, according to the sense assigned by the Bishop, the explanation would be scarcely necessary. Besides, as that signification is no where else found in St. Paul’s writings, nor, indeed, in the Scriptures either of the N. T. or O. T., it ought not to be here introduced. Why should we not translate “of the tent?” (as a Genitive of explanation, as Grot. says) which is not liable to Bp. Middleton’s censure, and yields an excellent sense; as meant to suggest that the earthly house of the soul, the body, was a mere tent, set up for a temporary purpose, and formed for speedy decay and ruin. There is a reference to the πρόσκαιρα just before, and the αἰώνιον just after. Michaelis, indeed, grants that the Apostle may have adverted to the literal meaning of the word; and may have contrasted the temporary tent, the body, with the eternal and immovable habitation, which we shall occupy hereafter. But why then must he be thought not to have so adverted?—"because," says Mich., "the house of the Tent would not be very intelligible in English or German." That, however, would only prove that the Article may sometimes have a force in one language which has nothing correspondent to it in another. Besides, it should seem that, according to the propriety of the Greek language, when a Genitive noun of explanation in the place of its cognate adjective (as here) comes after a noun which has the Article, the second noun ought to have it likewise. And here the adjective could not be used, because of the adjective ἐπίγ. just preceding. We may render, "our earthly tabernacular house." The expression ἐπίγειος is used with a reference to ἐν ὀστροκίνοις σκεύουσιν at iv. 7. Ἐκ Θεοῦ means, [supplied] at the hands of God. There is a similar ellipsis at i. 11. ἐκ πολλῶν. Ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, for οὐράνιον, as opposed to the ἐπίγειον before.

2. ἐν τούτῳ] scil. τῷ σκῆνι, this tent. Supply ὄντες. See v. 4. Some, indeed, render, "on this account," (as Acts xxiv. 16.); i. e. on account of the knowledge we have of the dwelling prepared in heaven. And this interpretation is supported by the Syriac Version; but the common one is more natural and agreeable to the context.

— τὸ οἰκητήριον—ἐπιποθοῦντες.] Here we have a change of the metaphor by which the body was compared to a habitation, into another, by which it is compared to a garment: both similes in use among the Greek Philosophers,—the former employed by the Pythagoreans,—the latter by the Platonists. We have, however, the two blended together; which has caused a misapprehension of the sense by some Expositors. Οἰκητήριον is here used, not σκῆνος, because a permanent, and not temporary building is intended. Τὸ ἐξ οὐρ. Supply διδόμενον, which is expressed in John iii. 27. Though ἐξ οὐρ. is generally taken for ἐπουράνιον. On the true import of ἐπενδ., which is simply to put on, see Note on 1 Cor. xv. 53.

3. εἴ γε καὶ ἐνδυσ. οὐ γυμνοὶ εὐρ.] Not a little obscurity here exists; to remove which, some ancient Critics read ἐκδ. This, however, rests on slender authority, and is rejected by the most certain of critical Canons. The interpretation of the ancients cannot, I conceive, be admitted; and the expositions of modern Commentators are, in general, liable to objection. The one most generally adopted is that of Bos, Hardy, and Wets. (followed by Slade, Emmerling, and Rinck), who assign the following sense: "If, indeed, it may be so, that we shall be found [when the change takes place] clothed with a body, not having put it off by death." The Platonists (Bos has shown) used the term γυμνοὶ to denote the dead, and ἐνδυσάμενοι the living. This interpretation, however, yields a very frigid sense; and I have in Recens. Syn. shown that it is wholly untenable. The sense appears to be simply thus: "Since being so clothed (i. e. having put on this dress) we shall not be found naked;" i. e. destitute of a body (whatever may become of our earthly one). See 1 Cor. xv. 33 & 54.

4. This verse contains the same sentiment as that at v. 2, but more plainly expressed. Ἐφ' ᾧ, inasmuch as, since. The ἐπειδὴ of the Erasmus and Stephanic editions, found only in three MSS., is evidently a mere gloss. On the general sense of the words ἐλόμεν—ἐπενδ. some difference of opinion exists. The best Expositors have supposed it to be: "For we desire not to put it off, but to be clothed upon it; so that our mortal state may be at once exchanged for the immortal," by an immediate entrance into an eternal state. This interpretation, however, especially the latter part, is open to many objections, which see in Rec. Syn. The true sense of the passage appears to be as follows: "For (I repeat) while we are in this tent or tabernacle, though groaning under the weight of many afflictions, yet our wish is not so much to put off this body, and thereby be rid of those evils; but rather to be clothed upon with; i. e. put on, a celestial body." At ἐπενδ. we must repeat, from the preceding context, τὸ οἰκ. τὸ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. As to the real meaning intended to be conveyed, many eminent Commentators have thought it to be, that the raised bodies of the just will be covered and encircled with another body, which shall be bright, aerial, and resplendent, and shall somehow communicate a principle of immortality to the raised mortal body. And this is supposed to be countenanced by 1 Cor. xv. 53 & 54. But see the Note there. It should seem, as Mr. Scott says, that "the Apostle did not mean to determine any thing concerning the manner, as to external circumstances, in which the body subsists after the resurrection." The next words ἵνα καταποθῇ τὸ θνητὸν ὑπὸ τῆς ζωῆς are best explained, with Chrys., Theophyl., and Theod., "that thus the mortal principle may be absorbed and annihilated by the vivifying and immortal one." Compare 1 Cor. xv. 54.

5. ὁ δὲ κατεργασάμενος—Θεός.] Here not a little difference of opinion exists as to the sense of κατεργ. The senses assigned by various Expositors, wrought, destined, created, or fitted, do not materially differ. Which of them is to be adopted, will depend upon what is understood by τούτο. Now from v. 4. it should seem to mean this change from corruption to incorruption, and from mortality to immortality, the ἀπολύτρωσις τοῦ σώματος of Rom. viii. 23, the deliverance from the bondage of corruption, and restoration to the glorious liberty of the children of God by adoption and grace. Thus the sense of κατεργ. will be, formed, adapted, destined. The words following, which strongly support this interpretation; being meant to show the certainty of the change in question; since God had given them the Holy Spirit as a pledge of future acceptance, by which they were sealed to the day of redemption (Eph. iv. 30.) On the term ἀρραβώνα see Note supra i. 22. By τοῦ Πνεύματος are meant the gifts of the Spirit, both ordinary and extraordinary.

6. Θαρρύνοντες οὖν—Κυρίου. At Θαρρ. supply ἔσμεν; or take it as a participle for verb finite. The full sense of the passage is, I conceive, as follows: "In reliance, therefore, on these gracious aids, which are the pledge of resurrection and glorification, we are courageous in encountering danger, nay, even death itself; especially since we know this," &c., which last words are meant to show the ground of that confidence, and the nature of that courage, as it respected death. Ἐνδημοῦντες is not well rendered, "while we are at home"; for although the word is susceptible of that sense, it is unsuitable to the context, and at variance with the rest of the N. T., which represents this world as not our home, but our sojourn. On the other hand, the version of Dr. Clarke and Dr. Dodd., "whilst we are sojourning," though agreeable to the tenor of Scripture, is wholly at variance with the usus loquendi, since the word never had, and never could have had such a sense. It is best rendered, residing, or living. With respect to ἐκδημεῖν, this term, when followed by ἀπὸ, always denotes separation from.

7. διὰ πίστεως—εἰδούς. This is meant to show how the Apostles could be said to be ἐκδημοῦντες ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου,—namely, as, by faith, considering heaven as their only home, and what seemed to be such, a mere sojourn; q. d. for, in our present state, we live (i. e. lead our spiritual life) by faith [only] in Christ; not in the sight of Him, as we shall when released from the thralldom of the body.

8. Θαρρύνοντες δὲ—Κυρίου. This is resumptive, and further illustrative of what was said at v. 6; q. d. "We are, I say, desirous rather to be," &c. The general sentiment is, that they wish circumstances to be quite reversed. The terms ἐκδ. and ἐνδ. are not well rendered absent and present; still less so by Mackn., from home and at home. The true sense of ἐκδ. is migrare, to depart; as it is rendered by Pagninus, Flavius, and Schleusn. And so it was taken by the Pesch. Syr. Translator: for ܢܕܝܢ should be rendered, not peregrinari (with Schaaf), but migrare, or rather "ut migremur." Thus those who have departed from this life are in the tituli, or contents, at Matt. ix. 18. x. 3, called ܢܕܝܢ; and death is, at 2 Pet. i. 14, styled ܢܕܝܢ, literally, departure. So in a kindred passage of Phil. i. 23. ἐπιθυμῶ ἔχειν εἰς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι, to depart. On the other hand, the word ἐνδημοῦναι should be rendered, not to be present with, but (agreeably to the metaphor) to be at home with, implying communion with Him in whose presence is fullness of joy. In the verse following, ἐνδὴμ. and ἐκδὴμ. must have the very same sense as in this, and may best be rendered, "whether we are at home or from home;" i. e. remain in the body or depart from it.

9. διὸ καὶ φιλοτ. The sense is: "Wherefore [since we have such exalted hopes] we strive to the uttermost." The metaphor is derived from striving for the mastery in the pursuits of ambition, as calling forth the most strenuous exertions; since the combatants must have learnt (in the words of the Grecian historian) μὴ φεύγειν τοὺς πόνοους, ἢ μηδὲ τὰς τίμας διακείν.

10. τοὺς γὰρ πάντα ἡμᾶς φαν., &c. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "[And there is need to strive to act, so as to approve ourselves in His sight], for both we and all persons must appear," &c. Φανερωθῆναι some Commentators, ancient and modern, explain, be made manifest, meaning that our inmost soul will be displayed. But though that sense be a good one, and is agreeable to what we read elsewhere in Scripture, it may be doubted whether such is here intended to be directly asserted. The expression is better rendered by Beza, Pisc., and H. Steph., comparere, appear. And I suspect that it was a forensic term, meaning, "to present oneself for trial." So the Pesch. Syr. Version, "we must all stand up [for trial]." At the same time, the other may be included, as an under sense.

— τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώμ. Sub. πεπραγμένα, (from the context) which is expressed in Ælian H. A. v. 26. τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος πραττόμενα. The διὰ is by some early moderns rendered by per; but the best Commentators have been long agreed that διὰ τοῦ σώμ. is for ἐν τῷ σώμ. And this is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version. As κομίσῃται properly signifies (by the force of the Middle voice) "to carry off as our own," so it may very well be applied to the receiving the reward of any action, whether for good or evil.

11. τὸν φόβον.] This is used, by a metonymy of the effect, for τὸ φοβερόν, to denote the awful judgment of the Lord. Ἀνθρώπους πείζω, i. e. “we use our utmost endeavours to persuade men, by pressing on them these awful considerations, to embrace the Gospel, and obey what it enjoins.”

—Θεῷ δὲ πεφ.] The perplexity found in the interpretation of these words might have been avoided, by supposing an ellipsis, to be supplied from the subject-matter, of some such words as οὕτω ποιοῦντες, “And in so doing we are made manifest to God;” implying, “our fidelity and sincerity are approved unto God.” In the words following ὑμῖν may be supplied from the context, and πεφανερ. be taken in the same double sense, and συνειδ. as at iv. 2. Render: “And I trust, too, that we are manifested and approved [to you], in your judgments and consciences.”

—ἐν ταῖς συνειδήσεσιν is not, what Emmerl. calls it, merely equivalent to ὑμῖν. As Calvin well observes, “plus est in conscientiis esse manifestum, quam experimentis notum esse: conscientia enim longius penetrat, quam carnis iudicium.”

12. οὐ γὰρ πάλιν, &c.] This is, as Calvin and Schlitting observe, meant to anticipate an objection; “Why, if your views be so manifest to us, commend yourselves to us.” The answer to which is: “Not so; for we are not commending ourselves; that is not our purpose.” Ἀλλὰ ἀφορμὴν—ἡμῶν, “but our intent in so speaking is to afford you matter for boasting of us.” At ἵνα ἔχητε sub. τι λέγειν, or καυχῆμα. The words τοὺς ἐν προσώπῳ καυχ., καὶ οὐ καρδία are meant for the false teachers, who were proud of their external advantages, which excited the admiration of the multitude; to the neglect of the virtues of the heart, and the testimony of a good conscience.

13. εἴτε γὰρ ἐξέστημεν—ὑμῖν.] On the exact import of ἐξέστ. Commentators somewhat differ in opinion. See Recens. Synop. The best, however, both ancient and modern, regard it as used, after the manner of the false teachers when speaking of St. Paul, to denote speaking boastingly, i. e. exceeding due measure in self-commendation. Consequently, σωφρονεῖν will denote the opposite to this, namely, the speaking modestly of himself. This idiom may be easily accounted for, since the phrase ἐξέστηκέναι τοῦ νοῦ was often used to denote being a fool; which frequently carries the adjunct sense of boasting of oneself. So further on, xi. 1., ἀφροσύνη is used for “folly of boasting;” and at v. 16. ἄφρων εἶναι means to be a fool, i. e. in boasting. See also 21. xi. 6, 7.

Θεῷ signifies “for the glory of God, [to whom the praise of my virtues is due], and not my own glory.” Ὑμῖν, “for your advantage,” namely, by setting you an example of humility.

14. ἡ γὰρ ἀγάπη τοῦ Χρ. συνέχει ἡμᾶς.] The connexion seems to be this; “[For your benefit, I say, and that of others;] for the love,” &c. Ἀγάπη τοῦ Χρ. may mean either “the love we bear to Christ,” as John v. 9, 10., or rather, as in Eph. iii. 19., “the love which Christ bears to us.” So ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ in Rom. v. 8. 2 Cor. xiii. 13. Συνέχει, “strongly urges, constrains,” συνωθεῖ, as Œcumen. explains. The sense of κρίναντας is best expressed by a verb and participle. Εἰ signifies “if [as in this case],” i. e. since. Εἴς, “one [even Christ].” Ὑπὲρ πάντων, i. e. as an expiatory sacrifice for the sins of all. It is scarcely necessary to observe how strongly this inculcates the doctrine of Universal Redemption, which Dr. A. Clarke remarks, no Apostolic man ever did doubt, or could doubt. (See 1 Tim. ii. 6. Heb. ii. 9.) Indeed, as observes Bp. Bull, in his Exam. Cens. “unless Christ be understood to have died for all, that foundation on which ministers of the Gospel build exhortations of this kind, will be always uncertain, and very often false. Always uncertain, because it cannot be made manifest to men who are the elect. Very frequently false—as often, namely, as it is used to the non-elect, who, on this ground of redemption, would not be held bound to live unto Christ, unless it were presupposed that Christ had really redeemed them. Finally, Christ himself could not, in right of his own death (Rom. xiv. 9.), claim supreme dominion over all and each, unless he had really died for all and every man.”

15. ἅρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον.] Almost all Translators render ἀπέθ. “were dead.” But to this version strong and well founded objections are urged by Professor Scholef. (in his Hints, p. 50.), who shows, 1. that it involves a strange confusion of terms; 2. that it is contrary to the usus loquendi of the Apostle; and 3. that ἀπέθανον cannot signify, “I was dead,” but “I am dead.” I would render “then are all dead” (as Col. iii. 3.) The full meaning is, “Then are all by nature spiritually dead,” i. e. in a state of condemnation, liable to eternal death; and, as it is implied, need to be brought into a state of salvation by the Gospel.

15. καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν.] This seems meant to show the duty of the redeemed to be co-extensive with the purpose of Christ's death; which was not only to deliver man from spiritual death, or perdition, but to restore him to the spiritual life which he had lost in Adam; meaning to intimate that it is but just that the life so preserved should be devoted to the preserver. As in the Civil Law, when any one's life, which had been forfeited, was ransomed and preserved by another, the person so preserved was considered bound to devote all his future life for the benefit of his preserver.

— οἱ ζῶντες] i. e. those who are brought to a spiritual life by Christ. Μηκ. ἑαυτοῖς ζῶσιν, i. e. should not live subserviently to their own carnal inclinations, or worldly views. Ἀλλὰ τῷ, &c., but to the glory, &c., subserviently to his plans for the salvation of men.

16. The sense in this verse is obscure. The chief difficulty is to trace the connexion. Some couple it with v. 12.; but without reason. The connexion is doubtless with the preceding verse, but it is by a very slender link; the verse being evidently (though Commentators fail to notice it) a parenthetical, or interposed reflection, not intended for general application, but confined to himself and his brother Apostles. There is, as Calvin says, an allusion to the death before mentioned. The best Commentators are agreed, that the Apostle here glances at those who, like the false teachers, prided themselves, and were esteemed by others, on account of some personal and external advantages; as having known Christ, or his relatives, or the Apostles in Judea. Of the next words εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν—γινώσκομεν (which are exceedingly obscure), the sense may be that laid down by Scott: "Even such of the Apostles as had personally known him, or had been nearly related to him, did in this respect disregard that external tie, when it came in competition with their union with him as believers, and their obedience to him as his servants and ministers." I am, however, inclined to prefer the interpretation of Chrys., Theophyl., and Calvin, "Etiam si Christus ad tempus versatus fuerit in hoc mundo, et agnitus hominibus in iis quæ spectant ad conditionem præsentis vitæ; nunc alio modo cognoscendus est, nempe spiritaliter, ut nihil mundanum de ipso cogitemus." Οἶδαμεν, we show respect to. See Note on v. 1.

17. ὥστε εἴ τις—κτίσις.] This is resumptive of what was said in the preceding ὥστε—σάρκα, forming the second inference from vv. 14, 15., and laying down a general maxim (expressed with a terse brevity), which is, as Scott says, the standard of genuine Christianity. From the very brevity, however, with which it is expressed, the passage admits of being variously interpreted. See Poole's Synopsis, Wolf, and Calvin. But if we consider the nature of the ellipsis, and the scope of the context, we shall see that the complete and true ellipsis is ἔστι, "If any one be in Christ, he is a new creature." "The alteration (as observes Mackn.) in the minds and manners of men by the faith of the Gospel was so great, that it might be called regeneration." By the expression being in Christ is not merely meant being grafted in the body of Christ by baptism (as many understand) but being really united to Him in faith and love.

Καὶ νῦν κτίσις] i. e. "he is wholly changed conformably to the new and spiritual religion of Christ," which requires a renewal of the heart. The next words τὰ ἀρχαῖα, &c., are illustrative of the preceding; and must not be taken in the limited sense assigned by many modern Commentators, but interpreted according to their full import. As regarded the Jew, it would include an abandonment of all his former prejudices, and narrow views; an undergoing that great change of principles and feelings, which may best be conceived by contrasting together the dispensations of the law and the Gospel. As it regarded the Gentile, it would denote a still greater change; implying a total abandonment of the errors of Atheism, or Polytheism, and abjuring of those demoralizing principles, which were generated by each of them. Finally, as regarded both, it implied a complete abandonment of sin and immorality, a renouncing the works of the flesh and the Devil, a ceasing to live after the flesh, and henceforth a living after the Spirit; a change which might well be called a καινὴ κτίσις. See more in Calvin and Scott.

18. τὰ δὲ πάντα] "all these things," i. e. all the means of salvation by Christ, and all its blessings. Supply εἰσι, "come." Τοῦ καταλλ. ἡμᾶς ἑαυτῷ, "who hath [thereby] reconciled us (namely, such of us as embrace it); i. e. given us the means of being reconciled to himself." Ἡμῖν, i. e. to the Apostles and their fellow-labourers. Τὴν διακ. τῆς καταλλ., "the office of administering this office of reconciliation to men."

19. ὥς ὅτι Θεός, &c.] This is further illustrative of the preceding. Some obscurity here exists, occasioned partly by the peculiar idiom in ὥς ὅτι (best rendered quippe or nempe quod, literally, that is, that) but chiefly by the harshness of the construction. For there is an Hyperbaton from ὥς το ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ; the intermediate words ὥς Θεός ἦν ἐν Χρ. &c. giving the reason of what was said at v. 29; of which inverted argumentation οὖν is the index. As to the sense, there is no difficulty, except as regards the words ἐν Χριστῷ, which may be taken, either with the preceding (and thus the meaning will be, that God reconciled the world to himself by Christ); or with the following, by which the sense will be, that God was in, i. e. united to Christ reconciling, &c. The latter mode seems the more simple and natural. According to either view, the doctrine of Christ's Divinity is strongly attested. And thus the present passage has been constantly appealed to by the Fathers.

—μὴ λογιζόμενος] “not imputing.” So Rom. iv. 8. ὃ οὐ λογίσσεται Κύριος ἁμαρτίαν. So also οὐκ ἔλλογείν in Rom. v. 13. Θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν τὸν λ. literally, “putting into our hands,” i. e. committing to our trust. Τὸν λόγον τῆς κατ., “this message of reconciliation.” Καταλλαγῆς is a Genitive of explication.

20. The οὖν is very significant, an inference being now drawn from what has been said; q. d. “In the exercise, then, of this office of reconciliation, we the Apostles of Christ are ambassadors on the part of Christ.” The words following ὡς—ἡμῖν are exegetical of ὑπὲρ Χρ. πρ., and mean, that, in delivering the message, they act on the part of God, and represent his person; and therefore GOD may be said by them to persuade, and CHRIST to entreat, when they address the exhortation, καταλλάγητε τῷ Θεῷ, “Embrace the means of reconciliation afforded to you, through Christ, by God.”

21. τὸν γὰρ μὴ γνόντα, &c.] The γὰρ refers to what follows, as suggesting an especial reason why they should hearken to the message of reconciliation; namely, that He who sent it has been so benignant and merciful as to make, &c. Τὸν μὴ γνόντα ἁμαρτίαν (expressed according to the Hebrew idiom) is a most significant designation of Christ; denoting “the perfectly holy and righteous,” or, as Theophyl. explains, αὐτοδικαιοσύνην, righteousness itself. In ἁμαρτίαν ἐποίησεν, the ἁμ. is taken by many eminent Commentators to mean “a sin offering,” or a sacrifice by which he expiated our transgressions: and, as that sense is frequent in the Sept., it is likely to be intended here. Other Interpreters, however, of not less note take ἁμαρ. for ὡς ἁμαρτάνοντα, abstr. for concrete. And thus the meaning will be, in the words of Dr. Burton, that “though Christ was free from sin, he underwent the punishment of death, which is the consequence of sin: he was accounted as a sinner.” And this is somewhat confirmed by the next clause, which signifies “that we might be accounted righteous, and justified through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus;” δικ. being for δικαιωθέντες (comp. 1 Cor. i. 30.) and Θεοῦ for παρὰ Θεοῦ. On either interpretation, the doctrine of the Atonement is abundantly evident from this passage. On which see Abp. Magee

Illustr. No. xx. viii. and Bp. Bull's Exam. Cens. p. 39—43. and especially p. 39.

VI. This Chapter consists of two parts, vv. 1—10. (or 1—13.) and v. 11. ult. with the first verse of the following Chapter. 1. The Apostle, continuing his vindication of his ministry, shows with what faithfulness, zeal, charity, and patience he has discharged it, amidst all the afflictions and disgraces to which he has been subjected. Then at vv. 11, 12, he desires, as a return for his ardent affection for them, a similar affection from them; and that evinced in abstaining from a certain practice, which was contrary to Christian principles, and must be destructive of their happiness here, as well as endanger their salvation hereafter—namely, intermarrying with idolaters or unbelievers. In short, v. 14. ult. seem to properly connect with the exhortation at v. 1, “not to receive the grace of God in vain.” For vv. 3—10 seem to be parenthetical, and meant to strengthen the force of the exhortation, by adverting to the character of those who gave it. After desiring a proper return for such devotedness, the Apostle proceeds to notice the practice in question.

1. συνεργοῦντες δὲ καὶ παρακ. Render: “As fellow-workers, too, with [Him, i. e. God], we also beseech you,” &c. For Commentators are in general agreed, that at συνεργ. must be supplied Θεῷ. The Apostle means to represent them not only as ambassadors from God, but as fellow-workers with God and Christ. So in 1 Cor. iii. 9. the Apostles and teachers are called συνεργοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ. By μὴ εἰς κενόν, sub. ἔργον, &c. is meant, “not so to act as that the grace of God, i. e. the gracious offer of reconciliation in the Gospel, shall have been given in vain.” Εἰς κενόν, for κενῶς.

2. λέγει γάρ] “for He (i. e. God) saith;” namely, in Is. xlix. 8. Θεὸς must be supplied (as in Rom. xv. 10.) from Θεοῦ in the preceding verse; not ἡ γραφή, or προφήτης, as many recent Commentators suppose; for such an ellip. would be intolerably harsh. Whereas, the other is regular, and confirmed by the context of the passage of Isaiah; for there God is (as even the best Jewish Interpreters admit) represented as saying to Messiah, that he had heard his intercession, in behalf of the Gentiles, in an acceptable or favourable time, and at the day of salvation (that destined for salvation) had resolved to succour him. This scripture the Apostle in the next words applies; q. d. ‘And mind—now is an acceptable time, now is the day of salvation; the time is now come when God will fulfil his promise respecting the salvation of the Gentiles through Christ; and that salvation is now offered by those whose Divine mission is confirmed by signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds; and is regarded as the accepted time, or day of salvation, to all who seek an interest in the Redeemer's kingdom.

Ἐπήκουσα should be translated, "I have hearkened, or listened to thee;" as in Gen. xvi. 2. The notion of listening is contained in the ἐπι, which denotes that the person not only hears, but turns his ears ἐπὶ towards the speaker, and thus, as we say, lends an ear; implying a disposition to grant the request.

3. μηδεμίαν—διδόντες προσκ.] This closely connects with the παρακαλοῦμεν at v. 1. "We beseech you, we, I say, who," &c. The Apostle proceeds, very earnestly, to remind them of his most meritorious conduct, and unsparing sacrifices for their spiritual benefit, as an additional reason why they should not receive the grace of God in vain. The sense is: "putting no stumbling-block (πρόσκομμα, Rom. xiv. 13.) in the way of Christians, by which any one might be shaken in his religious faith, or turned from it; or by which our ministry might incur censure, and be made less efficient." Ἡ διακονία signifies the ministry of reconciliation, the office of preaching the Gospel mentioned supr. v. 18. The Article has the force of the Pronoun.

4. συνιστῶντες ἑαυτοὺς] "manifesting, approving ourselves as." This signification (occurring, also, in a kindred passage of vii. 11.) arises out of the primitive one of placing together; and imports the juxta-position of two things, for the purpose of showing their comparative size. Ὡς Θεοῦ διάκονοι, sub. ὄντες; q. d. evincing ourselves to really be persons entrusted with a Divine legation. The general import of this and the verses following is: "We approve ourselves as God's ministers both by a patient endurance of the various tribulations (vv. 4 & 5.) to which the exercise of our office exposes us, and by our cultivation of the various virtues (vv. 6 & 7.) suitable to our sacred character."

The words ἐν ὑπομονῇ πολλῇ must be connected with the following clauses up to ἐν νηστείαις, and denote patient endurance of the various afflictions specified in the words following, which are not to be treated (with Rosenm.) as merely synonymes denoting evils in general, but considered specially, and (as I conceive the Apostle meant) in groups.

In the first, we have ἐν θλίψεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, in afflictions, in necessities, in pinching distresses; where there seems to be a climax. Comp. supra v. 8. infra xii. 10. Rom. viii. 35. And as these were, more or less, the results of indirect persecution, so the next group, ἐν πληγαῖς, ἐν φυλά, represents the effects of direct persecution. Ἐν ἀκαταστασίαις, ἐν κόποις, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις, ἐν νηστείαις form another group, and denote such of his troubles as did not arise from any persecution, direct or indirect, but solely from his situation and office, and his cares and labours therein as Apostle of the Gentiles. Thus ἀκαταστασ. is wrongly explained by Grot. and Mackn. tumults. Nor does exile, as Casaub., Beza, Schmid. and Rosenm. interpret, represent the sense. I agree with Theophyl., Schleus., and Leun., that the term refers to that unsettled and wandering kind of life which, that the Apostle thought very miserable, is plain from his connecting it at 1 Cor. iv. 11, with endurance of hunger, thirst, and nakedness: πεινῶμεν καὶ διψῶμεν, καὶ γυμνητεύομεν, καὶ ἀστατοῦμεν, which passage, indeed, is the best comment on the present, and shows that κόποις must be chiefly understood of his labours at his trade, and νηστ., of that insufficient support, which labours so interrupted by his ministerial duties, could alone be expected to supply. Ἀγρυπνίαις seems to refer to the abridgment of his rest by night, to make up for the time expended by day on his ministerial labours.

6. Now follows a statement of the virtues cultivated. Ἀγρότητι, "by purity and sanctity of life." Ὅν ἐν γνώσει the sense is disputed and uncertain. As the Apostle is generally admitted to be here speaking of the practical virtues, there is much to countenance the opinion of most recent Commentators, that γνώσις denotes a practical knowledge of religion, such as shows itself in actions. That, however, is an interpretation not a little harsh: and as the Apostle intermixes with practical virtues some particulars which cannot be referred to that head, (as ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ and ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ,) it may be better to understand γνώσει of the cultivation of Divine knowledge; that wisdom from above which St. James iii. 17. associates with purity and the other Christian virtues here specified.

Ἐν μακροθυμίᾳ and ἐν χρηστότητι seem to have reference to the mode of exercising the ministry in question,—namely, by patience and forbearance towards those who oppose themselves, and by a benignity of disposition, as contrasted with starchy austerity. Ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ must be understood of the influence of the Holy Spirit. Thus the sense will be, "by evincing those dispositions produced under the influence and aids of the Holy Spirit." See Bp. Middl., Est., Menoch., and Dodd. It may facilitate the understanding of this and the following clauses, to suppose (as I think we are permitted to do) that the Apostle intended, in the words ἐν Πνεύμ. ἁγίῳ—ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ, to further illustrate what he had before said in ἐν γνώσει, ἐν μακροθ., ἐν χρηστ.; meaning to say, that the knowledge to be cultivated is

Divine and inspired knowledge, and therefore emphatically the Word of truth: also that the forbearance and benignity practised is genuine undisssembled love to man for the sake of God; not like the hypocritical and self-interested love of false teachers. Comp. Rom. xii. 9. 2 Tim. i. 5. 1 Pet. i. 22. 'Εν δυνάμει Θεοῦ is variously interpreted. It may (with the ancients and the earlier moderns) be understood of the mighty supernatural Gifts enjoyed by the Apostles and others; and thus seem intended to complete the idea before represented by ἐν ἀγίῳ Πνεύμ. But it should rather seem to have been subjoined to suggest under whose Gracious Aid the struggle with the world, the flesh, and the devil was carried on. So in Eph. vi. 10. ἐνδυναμούσθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ ἐν τῷ κράτει τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ. See also vv. 11, 12. In short, that passage affords the best illustration of the words following, διὰ τῶν ὅπλων, &c., which are meant to suggest the means by which the power of God in their defence is made effectual. Now these are in Ephesians called the panoply of God; and there the military figure is expanded into a fine allegory. Here the spiritual arms are not particularized; yet the terms τῶν δεξιῶν καὶ ἀριστ. are very comprehensive, referring to the complete armour and arms, on both sides, with which the ὁπλίτης, or completely-armed soldier was furnished, who was thus said to be ἀμφιδέξιος. Thus the general sense is: "We employ no other arms than the panoply of righteousness."

8—10. διὰ δόξης—εὐφημίας.] Here the reference to the circumstances, under which they employed the armour of righteousness, is converted into a sort of description of the situations in which they did all this; and that by way of contrasting their real character with that which their calumniators ascribed to them; and showing, in some other respects, their real as compared with their fancied situation; by which, indeed, it might appear that their life was made up of seeming, though not real, contradictions. Διὰ here denotes not the means, but the manner; and may be rendered through,—i. e. amidst; q. d. "Such is our conduct, under all circumstances and situations, whether good or evil." In the next words some obscurity has been occasioned by the irregularity of the construction; to adjust which, we must, after πλάνοι, supply ὄντες, to suit with the participles in the clauses following, where the καὶ is for καίτοι, or ὅμως, (as John iii. 11.) corresponding to the δὲ καίροντες and πλουτίζοντες: q. d. our adversaries represent us as impostors; but we are really ambassadors from God.

Πλάνοι is, no doubt, the term which had been applied to Paul and the other Apostles by their adversaries, the Pagan priests and the Jewish rabbies; as it had formerly been done by the Scribes and Pharisees to Jesus, Matt. xxvii. 63. Athenæus, p. 20, gives a list of the most notorious πλάνοι. It is well observed by Chrys., that ὡς πλάνοι καὶ ἀληθεῖς refer to the preceding διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας, as also ὡς ἀγν. καὶ ἐπιγ. τοῦ δυσφ. καὶ εὐφ. By ἀγνοούμενοι is meant obscure nobodies. By ἐπιγινωσκόμενοι is meant "well known as the dispensers of spiritual good." In ὡς ἀποθνήσκοντες, &c. there is a sort of Ozymoron, and the sense is, "near to death, devoted to death by our enemies." See 1 Cor. xv. 31. Καὶ ἰδοὺ ζῶμεν, "and yet, strange to say, we live." Καὶ ζῶντες would, indeed, have had more of regularity, but less of spirit. Here Grot. compares the Latin saying "Semper casurus similes, nunquamque cadentes." Παιδευόμενοι is by many eminent Commentators explained punished, or corrected by the magistrates; as in Luke xxiii. 16 & 22. But that sense is somewhat frigid; and the word is better interpreted (with all the ancient and most modern Commentators, as Eras., Pisc., Calvin, Whitby, Dodd., Schleus., Wahl., and Vat.) "chastened," viz. by the Lord, in his fatherly correction; there being an allusion, it should seem, to Ps. cxviii. 18. παιδεύων ἐπαίδευσέ με ὁ Κύριος· τῷ δὲ θανάτῳ οὐ παρέδωκέ με. And so 1 Cor. xi. 32. κρινόμενοι δὲ ὑπὸ Κυρίου, παιδευόμεθα, where see Note. Thus the sense is: "We are permitted to fall into these tribulations, as chastenings for our good in the end." See Heb. xii. 6.

The reflection in the words following, ὡς λυπούμενοι, &c., naturally arises out of the preceding; q. d. Under these afflictions and corrections we seem to be suffering grief, and are thought the most unhappy of men; yet, in fact, we are rejoicing in the testimony of a good conscience, and in the consolations of Divine grace. Πλουτίζοντες, "making them [spiritually] rich." Μηδὲν ἔχοντες; i. e. having nothing that we can call our own, no property. Καὶ πάντα κατέχοντες; i. e. "and yet possessing all things [essential to our real happiness]; and, in the promises of the Gospel, what must infinitely outweigh all that the world can give." See Whitby.

11—13. The difficulty complained of in these verses has partly arisen from not well attending to their scope, and partly from inattention to the nature of the metaphor in πεπλάτνυνται and στενοχ. With respect to the former, the Apostle's intent is,—1st, to apologize for language, which might seem to savour of egotism, and involve somewhat of reproach to the persons addressed. 2. Under the language of tender affection, to convey a delicate reproof to them for the want of a due return. He tells them, that he has spoken thus frankly from his strong affection for them, and his desire to promote their spiritual good. It is the warmth of his affection that has caused him to speak out, as he has, and to pour forth all the feelings of his heart so unreservedly. At v. 13. he shows how this ardent desire to serve them might by them be made most effectual; namely, by making a due return, and following his example: and as his heart was expanded in affection towards them, so should theirs be to him, by opening themselves to his salutary counsels; which he proceeds to give them in the remaining verses of this Chapter and the first of the next. To advert to the nature of the metaphors here employed, we may observe an even Philosophic exactness; the effect of joy, affection, and unreserved confidence, being to unloose the tongue (see Ps. xl. 3, and cxxvi. 2. Acts ii. 26,) and expand the heart, which, therefore, feels as it were enlarged, “quodammodo (as Sceler says) propere se cupiens ad rem amatam.” While, under the contrary feeling, the tongue seems chained, and the heart contracted. The Apostle had here, very probably, in mind the words of the prayer of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 1. ἐπλατύνθη τὸ σῶμα μου· εὐφράνθη ἐν σωτηρίᾳ σου, scil. Θεοῦ. Thus the sense of v. 12. is: “Our affections for you are not contracted, but your affections for us are contracted.” The term σπλάγχν. denotes the tender affections, as being supposed to be seated in the heart. A use which has been thought Hebraistic: but it is of frequent occurrence in the Greek tragedians, as Euripides.

13. τὴν δὲ αὐτὴν ἀντιμισθ.] Sub. κατὰ. The sense is: “Be ye also thus enlarged in your affections for us, according to (i. e. by making) that equal return of affection, which is due to us.” Ὡς τέκνοις λέγω (with which may be compared Rom. vii. 1. 1 Cor. vi. 5. 2 Cor. xi. 23,) suggests the ground of the claim,—namely, on the score of spiritual paternity. By this pathetic appeal to their hearts, the Apostle endeavours to draw their attention to some serious admonitions which he had to address to them.

14. μὴ γίνεσθε ἑτεροζ. ἀπίστοις.] The difference of opinion which exists as to the sense of this injunction, has chiefly arisen from inattention to the nature of the metaphor under which it is couched. Now ζύγος denotes a beam of a balance, or steelyard: and σταθμὸς ἑτεροζύγος was applied to a steelyard that draws one way, when it should draw equal. The sense, however, thence deduced is harsh and unsuitable, and it is better, with most ancient and modern Commentators, to derive the word from ἑτερος and ζυγός, a yoke. Thus ἑτεροζυγός will denote to draw on the other side of a yoke with another, to be a yoke-fellow. And the sense will be: “Do not maintain any close connection, or intimate society with unbelievers.” So 1 Macc. i. 15. ἐξεύχθησαν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. The Apostle did not intend hereby to forbid all communication with them; which would be impossible. See 1 Cor. v. 10 & 11. Some, indeed, suppose the chief purpose of this injunction to be to forbid marriage with heathens. But that view does not well suit with what follows; which rather alludes to close society and intimacy. See Theophyl. At the same time, marriage may be thus said to be, a fortiori, virtually forbidden: and considering that the marriage bond was, in the idioms of all languages, represented under the metaphor of a yoke, or pole, to which draught cattle are harnessed together, there can be little doubt that while he dissuaded from intimate society, he meant also to condemn marriage with heathens.

14—16. The Apostle here adverts to the reason why they should abstain from intimacy with heathens; and that in a popular way; q. d. There is not the idem velle atque idem nolle, no affinity of sentiment or feeling; as being opposites, they can no more unite than things the most dissimilar. One cannot but admire the δεινότης displayed in the disposition of the clauses of this sentence, and the rich variety of expression in the words which point the sense, as μετοχὴ, κοινωνία, συμφώνησις, συγκατάθεσις. Δικαιοσύνην καὶ ἀνομία are for δικαίους καὶ ἀνόμους, just as φωτὶ καὶ σκότῳ denote respectively, those enlightened by the Gospel, and those involved in the darkness of heathenism.

By Χριστῷ καὶ Βελίαρ the systems of virtue and of vice, are, as it were, personified. Βελίαρ is from the Syriac בִּלְיָ, and that from Heb. בִּלְיָ, wickedness (derived from בָּל not, and לָ, use, weal, literally signifying that which profits not, but injures) which word occurs in 1 Sam. xxv. 25., and is applied (abstract for concrete) to denote κατ' ἐξοχὴν the Evil Spirit, Satan, as the Peschito-Syriac renders it. See Job xxxiv. 18. There is here a slight variation in reading. The Edit. Princ. and the textus receptus have Βελιάλ. The Erasmus, Stephanic, and other early Edd. have Βελίαρ, which has been restored by Bengelius, Matth., Griesb., and Tittm.; and justly; for both external and internal evidence are in its favour; it being found in the majority of the MSS., in many early Ecclesiastical writers, and Greek Fathers: and, considering its derivation, and that the Vulgate has Belial, it is more likely that Βελίαρ should have been changed to Βελιάλ than the contrary.

signifies properly a putting together. It should be here rendered, not concord, or agreement, but community, or connexion. q. d. "what has a [not the] temple to do with idols?"

The words following, ὑμεῖς γὰρ—ζῶντος, are illustrative of the preceding; the image of a temple being transferred to Christians. q. d. "For ye [Christians] are [each of you] a temple;" as 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. vi. 19. The ὑμεῖς may, however, be understood of the whole Christian Church, considered as a temple; as in Eph. ii. 20, 21. The epithet ζῶντος is applied to JEHOVAH, as denoting a real and existing Being, in opposition to the pretended gods of the heathens, which were but stocks and stones. The words καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ Θεός are a formula of application. The Apostle means to argue, that the ancient promises of God, to dwell among his people Israel, and to be their God, were now, by the Gospel covenant, renewed to believers, and belonged peculiarly to them. In this quotation there is some alteration in the words, but no change of sense. Ver. xvi. is taken from Levit. xxvi. 11, 12.; and the alteration is, in fact, no more than a change of the person. Ver. 17. is taken from Is. lii. 11, 12., and the general meaning of the prophet is correctly represented; i. e. according to the mystical sense, which some of the best Jewish Commentators admit. See Bp. Lowth in loc. Λέγει Κύριος is an insertion of the Apostle. Ver. 18. is supposed by Mr. Scott and Dr. Burton, not to be taken exactly from any passage of the O. T., but to have reference to the general declarations made by Jehovah concerning Israel in various parts of Scripture, namely, Exod. iv. 22, 23. Jer. xxxi. 1—9. Hos. i. 9, 10. But surely the words bear as strong a resemblance to 2 Sam. vii. 14. (to which passage they are usually referred) as those of the preceding verse do to Is. lii. 11, 12. There is no more than the same change of person, for application's sake; and the words λέγει Κύριος and παντοκράτωρ are taken from ver. 8. of the same Chapter, which surely fixes the reference of the foregoing words.

17. Here (as Emmerl. observes) ἐξέλθετε ἐκ μέσου, and ἀφορίσθητε, and ἀκαθάρτου μὴ ἄπτεσθε form one and the same sentiment, expressed by three enunciations, first, directly, then by implication. The two first, however, are so closely connected as to form, in fact, but one,

q. d. ἐξελθόντες ἀφορ.; and it may be doubted whether μὴ ἄπτ. ἀκαθ. should be taken figuratively, of intercourse with Pagans, or literally, of abstaining from the use of any thing impure, as idol-meats. The latter view is preferable: but the former may be admitted as a secondary sense, for (as Grot. observes) "the wiser Jews supposed the prohibition not to touch unclean animals meant of abstinence from society with idolaters." Εἰσδέξομαι ὑ. signifies "I will receive you [into my especial favour]."

VII. After having adduced the words of Scripture to inculcate this important truth, and comforted them with the promise therein attached to its observance, the Apostle proceeds to subjoin an earnest exhortation, and that in the way of inference from what has been before said of the privileges of those "who are accepted in the Beloved." With respect to the scope of the argument, the Apostle here means to intimate (as Calvin remarks) that "promises are not only encouragements to serve God, but contain an implied condition." "Hæc igitur (subjoins he) promissionum natura, ut nos ad sanctificationem vocent, quasi tacitâ pactione a Deo interpositâ."

1. ἀπὸ παντὸς μολ.] i. e. not only from the defilements of idol-meats, and idolatrous society, but from every sort of defilement. By μολ. σαρκὸς are denoted the pollutions of the sensual appetites, as exhibiting the outward expression of sin by the body, in word or deed; by μολ. πνεύμ. the pollutions of the passions, as shown in the inward workings of sin in the imagination and affections, a precept (as Newc. remarks, well suited to the dissolute manners of Corinth.) The latter point is, indeed, little adverted to by Commentators and Theologians (excepting, however, Calvin and Scott). Yet it is of no small importance; and has been by no writer so ably treated, as by the celebrated Robert Hall, in one of the Sermons included in the last volume of his Works.

— ἐπιτελοῦντες ἀγιωσ.] "striving to bring our holiness eis τέλος, seeking entire conformity to the law of God." Ἐν φόβῳ Κυρίου, i. e. from reverence to His authority and fear of his displeasure.

2. The Apostle now makes a transition from what is doctrinal to what is personal and particular to himself, and resumes what he was saying at vi. 13., in nearly the same words; χωρήσατε ἡμᾶς being equivalent to πλατύνετε. Thus the sense is: "Give us, I say, an enlarged place in your affections." The next words suggest that there is no reason why they should not do so; since he deserves to hold that place in their affections, not having been guilty of any such conduct as alienates the affections of a people from their minister. Ἦδικ. is a general term, and ἐφθείραμεν and ἐπλεον. are special ones, usually explained of corrupting any one's religious principles, and coveting his property. But the latter interpretation cannot well be maintained; and the former is scarcely tenable. Yet see Calv. I am inclined to agree with many of the best Commentators of the last century, that οὐκ ἐφθ. means, "we have not wasted your substance," and οὐκ ἐπλεον. "we have not made a gain of, or overreached you." So xii. 17. δι' αὐτοῦ ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς; and 18. μή τι ἐπλεονέκτησεν ὑμᾶς Τίτος; This language may be compared with that of the prophet Samuel, 1 Sam. xii. 3. seq.; and, no doubt, there is reference to what was done by the false teachers; who not only received a stipend for their office, but in other ways fleeced their devotees. So xi. 20. ἀνέχεσθε—εἰ τις κατασθίει, namely, by, as we say, eating them up, by living upon them, and taking from them if not money, yet money's worth, or otherwise making a gain of them by the many cunning arts of overreaching, in which sense the word occurs in Thucyd. iv. 86.

3. οὐ πρὸς κατάκρισιν λέγω.] Of this briefly worded passage the full sense seems to be: "I say not this to hint any reproach of unkindness to me; [but I speak merely to show my claim to a large place in your affections [as ye have in mine]; for, [as I have before said], ye are in our hearts," &c. Προεῖρ. is not to be interpreted of the very words, but of words to that effect.

Ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις, &c., is for ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν [οὐτω] ἐστε ὥστε [ὑμῶν] συναποθανεῖν καὶ συζῆν [ἡμᾶς]. The ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις εἶναι is ἔχειν ἐν καρδίᾳ. Εἰς τὸ is for ὥστε. The sentiment is of the same kind as that in Athen. p. 249. (cited by Wets.) τούτους δ' οἱ βασιλεῖς ἔχουσι συζῶντας καὶ συναποθνέσκοντας, and that of Horace: "Tecum vivere amem, tecum obeam libens." And so Mark xiv. 31. ἐάν με δὲ συναποθανεῖν σοι, &c.

4. πολλή—ὑμᾶς.] This is supposed to be meant to soften the harshness of the preceding expostulations; and is interpreted by the generality of Commentators, "I venture to use this freedom with you, which I know you will take in good part." That sense, however, involves so much harshness, that it is better with most recent Commentators (as Schleus., Rosenm., Parkh., Wahl, Leun., and Emmerl.) to render παρρησία reliance, or confidence, "I have great reliance or confidence in you," q. d. "optima quævis de vobis spero;" a signification of the word frequent in the N. T. And this is supported by the authority of the Syriac Version.

—πεπλήρωμαι—ἡμῶν.] The sense is, "[Inasmuch that] I am full of comfort; nay, I superabound with joy," "amidst all my tribulation." This verb ὑπεπερ. occurs also at Rom. v. 20.; but no where else. We may, however, compare ὑπερπερισσῶς at Mark vii. 37. Of these tribulations the nature and origin is then pointed out.

5. οὐδεμίαν ἔσχηκεν ἄνεσιν.] The scope of the Apostle is well pointed out by Calvin as follows: "Magnitudo tristitiæ argumento est, quantum efficaciæ habuerit consolatio. Ego, inquit, undique premebar, tam intestinis quam externis afflictionibus: non tamen obstitit hoc totum, quo minus gaudium quod mihi contulisti, prævaluerit, adeoque exundaverit." Ἡ σὰρξ ἡμῶν. The best recent Commentators are of opinion that σὰρξ is here (as often in the N. T.) used for the person; meaning simply, "We had no rest," namely, from the persecutions of our unrelenting foes, the Jewish and Heathen zealots. But I would rather, (with Beza, Sclater, Calvin, and Scott), take σὰρξ of the outer man,—i. e. as regarded outward circumstances: for the Apostle, doubtless, suffered both in body and mind from the effects of his extreme anxiety, and was without any support save that of spiritual consolations. The next words are exegetical; of which ἐν παντὶ θλιβ. is a general expression (see supra i. 6. iv. 8.) and ἔξωθεν—φόβοι a particular one. The sense is: externally (i. e. in our body) we were exposed to opposition and violence, internally (in our mind) to anxieties and fears; namely, for the safety of the Church at Corinth, lest it should be destroyed by heresies and dissensions. See Gal. v. 15. And as the mind presses on the body, the latter could have no ἄνεσιν, or respite.

6. τοὺς ταπεινοὺς] "those that are cast down and afflicted." God is frequently in the O. T. described as the comforter of those in trouble. See Ps. cxlvi. 8.

7. ἐν τῇ παρ.] "by his coming, or presence," meaning his society. The next words are obscure, and, in tracing their sense, many eminent Commentators take παρακλ. to denote the narration of the comfort. This, however, is harsh; and it is better to take the sense simply as it stands, and render, "but also by the comfort and encouragement with which he was comforted, or encouraged, with respect to you." The Apostle means that he rejoiced in what was related; both as it had given such pleasure to Titus, and as it was in itself a matter of rejoicing to himself. So v. 13. ἐχάρημεν ἐπὶ τῇ χαρᾷ Τίτου.

Τὴν ἐπιπ. ὑμῶν is best interpreted, "your longing [to see me];" as Rom. xv. 23. ἐπιπ. δὲ ἔχων τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. Ὀδυρμ. may be explained "heartfelt sorrow for what had been amiss." Τὸν ὑ. ζῆλον ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, "your attachment towards me," implying a readiness to perform his injunctions. ὥστε με μάλλον χαρ., "so that I rejoiced the more," i. e. in addition to that I felt at his coming, by what I heard of you; or, as Scott explains, "So that my present joy was rendered the more abundant by reason of the sorrow that preceded it." But though such might be the case, yet whether the Apostle meant this, may be doubted.

8. εἰ καὶ ἐλύπησα—μετεμ. The best Commentators are agreed that the sense is: "Wherefore, if I even did pain your feelings in the Epistle [which I wrote to you], I do not [now] repent; though I did repent, was sorry (see ii. 4.); i. e. after I had sent it off, and before I saw Titus. This mode of taking the words removes all ambiguity. It cannot be hence inferred, that the Apostle had written with undue severity; still less need we stumble at the idea of repentance for what was done under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; for by this μεταμ. we are only to understand that misgiving which a good man feels, not from the consciousness of having done wrong, but from tenderness for the feelings of others, and an apprehension lest his well-meant reproofs may have been too severe. In short (as Calvin well points out) μεταμέλεισθαι is here to be taken improprie et populariter, simply for dolorem capere. Thus the sense is well explained by Calvin as follows: "Tametsi invitus vos pugi, ac mihi doluit, quod vobis durus esse coger, nunc dolere ob hanc causam desino, dum video utile vobis fuisse." And such is the view taken by Grot.

—βλέπω γὰρ, &c.] The sense of these words is thus laid down by most recent Commentators: "For I perceive that the letter grieved you only for a short space." Such, however, cannot be proved to be, nor is it likely to be the sense, which rather seems to be as follows: "For I perceive that that letter did pain you, though it was but for a season." Now as the οὐ μεταμέλομαι preceding almost implied "I am glad;" the Apostle, to soften what might seem harsh, and to explain his meaning, adds νῦν χαίρω, &c. The εἰ πρὸς ὥραν is meant to suggest that the pain was temporary, the benefit permanent.

9. νῦν χαίρω, &c.] The sense is: "Now the satisfaction I speak of is, not that ye were pained, but that ye were [so] pained, as to be brought to repentance and reformation." The next words are explanatory of the foregoing sense. Γὰρ, scilicet. Κατὰ Θεόν, "in such a way as God requires," "with reference to his will and glory." i. e., as Rosenm. explains, "arising from causes out of which he would have it arise, and producing effects such as he would approve." In ἵνα ἐν μηδενὶ ζημ. ε. ἡ. τοῦ ἵνα may, with the best Commentators, be supposed to denote result. Render: "So that in no respect were ye aggrieved or injured at our hands."

10. The Apostle here means to show that, so far from having been injured by him, they have been benefited: and this he does by showing the salutary nature of the λύπη κατὰ Θεόν, with which he then contrasts that κατ' ἀνθρώπων; the worldly with the religious sorrow. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, q. d. [Ye were in no respect injured] for, &c.

—κατεργ.] produces, as Rom. iv. 15. Μετάνοια here signifies such a change of mind as produces reformation in conduct. See Bp. Taylor's Works, viii. 312. So Hierocl. in his Aur. Carm. p. 124. Needh. says: "Ἡ δὲ μετάνοια αὐτῇ φιλοσοφίας ἀρχὴ γίνεται καὶ τῶν ἀνοήτων ἔργων τε καὶ λόγων φυγὴ, καὶ τῆς ἀμεταμέλητον ζωῆς ἡ πρώτη παρασκευή." With respect to ἀμεταμέλητον, it is not agreed whether we ought to refer it to σωτηρίαν, or to μετάνοιαν. In the former case, it will mean certain and unchangeable. Yet this interpretation involves no little harshness, and the sense arising is somewhat jejune. It is therefore better to suppose a slight transposition, and a sort of paronomasia; which, if ἀμετάγνωστον had been written, would have been complete. There is also a meiosis, the sense being, "never to be regretted, but rather to be rejoiced in." Since no one will ever have cause to repent of godly sorrow for sin, that being necessary to produce reformation, and therefore indispensable to salvation. So Antisthenes says τὴν πόνον ἀγαθόν εἶναι φάσκον, προσέθηκε τὴν ἀμεταμέλητον. By the τοῦ κόσμου λύπη is meant a sorrow about worldly objects, which, when separated from the fear of God, tends to death, temporal and eternal, and will produce the latter, but for the preventing grace of God.

11. ἰδὸν γάρ] “for see, now, [in your own case].” Αὐτὸ τοῦτο τὸ, &c. Render, with Professor Scholefield, “this very circumstance of your having sorrowed,” &c. Σπουδὴν (properly denoting bustle) here marks the arduous, diligence, and earnestness with which they strove to clear themselves of the charges made, and remove the abuses censured by the Apostle. This general term is then followed up by particular ones, of which Emmerl. observes that some, as ἀπολογ., φοβ., ἐπιπόθ., and ζῆλος, pertain to the Apostle, to whom the Corinthians were anxious to clear themselves. They therefore earnestly desired to appease him, and to testify to him their prompt obedience. The other terms, ἀγαν. and ἐκδίκησιν, belong to the incestuous person. The words may, however, refer to others, who had been in a less degree guilty, as those who attended at or encouraged attendance at the idol-feasts. Ἐπιπόθ. and ζῆλος are to be taken as at v. 7. Ἐκδ. should be rendered punishment, as in Rom. xii. 19. and elsewhere. Συνεστ. ἑαυτοῦς, “ye have approved yourselves,” i. e. (as Sclater, Dodd., and Scott explain) as a Church or Society; which removes all scruples about the applicability of the term ἀγνοοῦς. Ἐν τῷ πράγματι, “in the affair, namely, of the incestuous person.” “The Apostle (observes Emmerl.) is accustomed thus to speak of any thing disgraceful; as 1 Thess. iv. 6.”

12. Here the Apostle explains his purpose in writing as he had, which was not for any particular person's sake, neither of the injurer (or offender) nor of the injured; not from any desire to punish the former and procure justice for the latter: but chiefly, that his anxious care for them might be manifest to them in the sight of God. Such seems to be the true sense, which has been needlessly perplexed by Commentators; inasmuch that some (as Newc. and Wakef.) would read, from several MSS. and Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, including that of R. Steph., τὴν σπουδὴν ὑμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν. But though that produces a sense, yet it is one far-fetched and jejune, which does not arise naturally from the subject, and is not so agreeable to the context. The external authority for the reading in question is but slender; the Ed. Princ. and the great bulk of the MSS. having ἡμῶν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. And though it may seem strong in internal evidence, as being the more difficult reading; yet that Canon, it must be observed, does not apply to words so nearly alike as to be perpetually interchanged; which is the case with ἡμῶν and ὑμῶν. And there that word which is most suitable to the context must be preferred. The words πρὸς ὑμᾶς were doubtless cancelled by those Critics who did not understand the passage, and supposed the words to be necessary. Finally, ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ is simply for ὄντως, Judice Deo, revera, as Luke i. 6; and that (Schleusner says) “quia Deus rerum intima visu suo penetrat, nec ejus judicium ullo modo falli potest.”

13. διὰ τοῦτο—ὑμῶν.] The sense (rendered obscure by brevity) seems to be thus: “Wherefore [from the love we bore you] we were comforted in the exhilarating news of you, which Titus brought.” Comp. v. 7. By the next words the Apostle means, that his own joy was exceedingly increased at the joy which Titus manifested at his reception among them. The words ὅτι ἀνεπέπνυται—ὑμῶν are illustrative of the χαρὰ. Comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 18. Ἀναπ. thus signifies “to be set at rest, made happy.”

14. εἴ τι] for ὅ τι, “whatever.” In οὐ κατησχύν. we have the effect for the cause; and there is a meiosis. Ἐπὶ Τίτου is by some explained as put for περὶ Τίτου; but by most it is better interpreted “apud Titum,” as the context requires. And this is confirmed by the ancient Versions.

15. μετὰ φόβον καὶ τρ.] “with deep reverence and respect,” implying an anxiety not to offend him, and a disposition to carefully follow his injunctions.

16. χαίρω—ὑμῖν.] The sense seems to be: “I rejoice that, from the experience I have had of you, I may in every thing feel confidence in your ready obedience to all my admonitions or suggestions."

VIII. The mention the Apostle had made of his confidence in the Corinthians gives him an opportunity of again introducing the subject of the collection then making for the relief of the poor Christians at Jerusalem, which occupies this and the following Chap.; and, after informing them of what had been done elsewhere, of exhorting them to follow so good an example. They would thus, he says, testify their firm faith, by imitating their Saviour; they would justify the Apostle's boasting of them; and whatever they bestowed, the Divine blessing would amply compensate; besides that, they would have the prayers and intercessions to God on their behalf, of those whom they had relieved.

1. τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν δέδ.] There has here been some doubt as to the sense of these words. It is, however, generally agreed, that τὴν χάριν here means (as often in this Chapter and elsewhere) gift, or liberality. But on τοῦ Θεοῦ difference of opinion exists. Some (as Hamm., Knatchb., Pyle, Newc., and Wakef.) take it as used, by Hebraism, to denote great. That idiom, however, is of very limited application, and cannot have place here. The word must have its usual sense. And we may suppose the χάρις so termed, either, as it is generally understood, to suggest that it was God, who had by his grace put into their hearts to bestow this charity; or rather (as that would involve some confusion of ideas) we may suppose the alms to be called God's, as being given for his sake, and in a certain sense given to Him when given to his distressed servants. According to the gracious assurance, Matt. xxv. 40. ἐφ' ὅσον ἐποιήσατε ἐν τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου τῶν ἐλαχίστων, ἐμοὶ ἐποιήσατε. and Prov. xix. 17. Δανεῖζει Θεὸς ὁ ἐλεῶν πτωχόν. Thus we may render, "the God-alms," and suppose that the collection was so termed, both to suggest the duty and reward of the giver, and to spare the feelings of the receiver.

2. The Apostle now, in order to enhance the merit of the gift, shows it was done under the most unfavourable circumstances. Ἐν πολλῇ δοκ. θλίψι., for ἐν θλίψει πολλῇ, ἥ ἐστι δοκιμή, "in affliction most trying." So Rom. v. 4. ἡ ὑπομονὴ δοκιμὴν κατεργάζεται. and supra ii. 9. Ἡ περισσεία τῆς χαρᾶς a. is usually rendered "their abundant joy;" i. e. joy from the doctrines, promises, and consolations of the Gospel. Since, however, this is a sense not very apposite, the recent Commentators take χαρὰ for χάρις; which, however, is quite unauthorized. Why should we not take χαρὰς in the sense alacrity, viz. to give. As giving is the subject of the context, there can be no objection to assigning such a sense; by which all difficulty is removed. Κατὰ βάθους is a phrase for an adjective: and, as βαθὺς is often applied to riches, so it may to poverty. Πλοῦτ. τῆς ἀπλ. is another idiom to denote rich liberality, or free-heartedness; for that is the literal sense of ἀπλ., like simplicitas in Latin. Ἐπερίσσ. εἰς may be rendered "redounded," or "conducted greatly." Thus the sense may be expressed as follows: "their abundant alacrity, and [yet] deep poverty have redounded greatly to their rich liberality;" i. e. their great alacrity to give, even amidst deep poverty, has abundantly shown their rich and free-hearted liberality. So ἀπλοτ. is used infra ix. 11 & 13. Rom. xii. 8.

3. αὐθαίρετοι.] Sub. ἦσαν, and ἐδόσαν before.

4. τὴν χάριν καὶ τὴν κοινων. τῆς διακ.] In the interpretation of this passage much depends upon whether the words δέξασθαι ἡμᾶς after τοὺς ἁγίους be genuine, or not. They are not found in 34 MSS., many Versions, Fathers, and Greek Commentators, were rejected by Mill, Beng., and Wets., and cancelled by Matth., Griesb., and Vater. They are, however, ably defended by Rinck, who has very satisfactorily accounted for their omission, from the carelessness of the scribes. Without the words, it is, I think, difficult to make out any construction. Those who expunge the words suppose χάριν and κοινων. to be governed of ἔδωκαν in the next verse: and δεόμενοι they render, "entreating us [to permit it]." Thus the construction and sense will be, as Dr. Burton lays it down, as follows: "For even above their means, voluntarily, and most earnestly entreating us [to permit it], they gave this charitable collection of their's, and not merely this, which was what we hoped they would do, but they gave themselves before every thing else to the Lord and to us." Yet thus a great feebleness and jejuneness will attach to the δεόμενοι. It should seem that the words, if not omitted by accident, were originally thrown out, and have been since cancelled, from misconception of the real meaning of the Apostle. This some recent Commentators, as Rosenm., Leun, and Emmerling (who retain the words) suppose to be, "enixe precabantur, ut reciperemus in nos negotium eorum coactum distribuendi." But, as the Bâle Editor justly observes, (Pref. p. 7.) "that was a request rather suitable to the elders of the Church at Jerusalem, than to the Macedonians, and was, indeed, what the former had enjoined on Paul." Indeed, this runs counter to the scope of the Apostle, which is well pointed out by Calvin. Moreover, as the Bâle Editor suggests, so extreme was the poverty into which the Macedonians had, from various misfortunes and persecutions, fallen, that St. Paul would have a scruple at taking at their hands even so little. The Macedonians, therefore, had to earnestly entreat him that he would receive from them the alms they had collected. We may suppose the words τὴν κοινωνίαν τῆς διακονίας to be exegetical of τὴν χάριν. And so κοινωνία is used infra ix. 13. Rom. xv. 26. Heb. xiii. 16.

5 διακονίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους, [δέξασθαι ἡμᾶς]· καὶ οὐ, καθὼς ἠλπίσαμεν· ἀλλ' ἐαυτοὺς ἔδωκαν πρῶτον τῷ Κυρίῳ, καὶ ἡμῖν διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ· εἰς τὸ παρακαλέσαι ἡμᾶς Τίτον, ἵνα, καθὼς προενῆρξατο, οὕτω καὶ ἐπιτελέσῃ εἰς ὑμᾶς καὶ 7 τὴν χάριν ταύτην. ^h Ἀλλ', ὥσπερ ἐν παντὶ περισσέετε, ^h 1 Cor. 1. 5. Οὐ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν λέγω, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς ἐτέρων σπουδῆς, καὶ τὸ τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀγάπης γνήσιον δοκιμάζων· (ⁱ γινώσκετε γὰρ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ⁱ Luke 9. 58. ὅτι δι' ὑμᾶς ἐπτόχουσε, πλουσίως ὦν, ἵνα ὑμεῖς τῇ ἐκείνου

5. καὶ οὐ, καθὼς ἠλπ., &c.] Sub. ἐποίουν and μόνον; both frequent ellipses. The sense may be thus expressed: "And not only this—which was what we had hoped, or expected they would do—but they gave themselves first to the Lord [to do his will,] and [then] to us;" i. e. to observe our directions. Giving themselves to the Lord is a strong expression to denote the devoting themselves, and whatever they possessed, to his service. Πρῶτον—καὶ is put for πρῶτον μὲν, ἔπειτα δέ. The ancient Versions, however, express the ἔπειτα, which may be said to be understood. In the second clause, ἐαυτοὺς ἔδωκαν ἡμῖν must mean, "yielded themselves to our direction." The construction of the particles πρῶτον—καὶ is meant to illustrate the difference in the kind of devotion to the Lord, and to Paul. And that is more plainly indicated in the phrase διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, which is but imperfectly represented by modern Expositors; though its force is well pointed out by Calvin, who, after comparing Exod. xiv. 31. ("The people believed the Lord and Moses his servant"), observes that the words are meant to intimate, that when they were obedient to Paul, they conceived that they were obeying God, since they regard him as speaking by the mouth of God.

6. εἰς τὸ] for ὥστε, "inasmuch that." The complete sense is this: "The consequence of this unexpected liberality of the Macedonians was this, that [fearing lest you should be outstripped by them] I exhorted Titus," &c. Προενῆρξατο, "had already begun;" i. e. when he delivered the first letter of Paul to the Corinthians, and exhorted them to make a contribution. Εἰς ὑμᾶς, "apud vos;" for ἐν ὑμῖν. Τὴν χάριν ταύτην: this work of liberality,—namely, the collection. See supra v. 1, and Note. The καὶ may be emphatic, and refer to the other good works to which they were excited by Titus. See vii. 13.

7. ἀλλ'.] This particle has here the hortative sense, Now then, as in Mark ix. 22. This hortative sense is the more necessary to be adverted to, since from that alone can we account for the omission of a verbum hortandi before ἵνα περ. Ἐν παντί. Supply χάριτι from what follows,

"all spiritual gifts and graces." The next words πίστει καὶ λόγῳ καὶ γνώσει are meant to emphatize these gifts and graces, of which πίστει must have the same sense as at 1 Cor. xii. 9. The γνώσει seems to be equivalent to the λόγος γνώσεως at 1 Cor. xii. 8. The λόγῳ seems to have reference to the προφητεία, or power of instructing others, either by preaching, or explaining Divine truths. So Eph. vi. 19. ἵνα μοι δοθῇ λόγος—γνώρισαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Compare John xvii. 20. Acts vi. 2. To the gifts of the Spirit are now subjoined the graces of the Spirit. Πᾶσιν σπουδῇ; i. e. earnestness in the discharge of every religious duty; as Rom. xii. 11. Heb. vi. 11. 1 Pet. i. 5. Τῇ ἐξ ὑμῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀγ., "and in the affection borne by you to us." Ἐν ἡμῖν is for εἰς ἡμᾶς. At ἵνα περισσ. sub. ὁρᾶτε: or, (as the best recent Commentators propose,) we may take the ἵνα with a Subjunctive as put for an Imperative. And this is supported by the Peschito Syriac Version. Ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι, "this grace,"—namely, that of liberality in relieving your Christian brethren.

8. οὐ κατ' ἐπιτ. λέγω.] The best Commentators are agreed that the sense is: "I do not say this by way of command, or injunction, as if I would dispose of your property authoritatively; [for works of charity should be voluntary];" but "because of the alacrity of others," viz. the Macedonians; q. d. "lest ye should be outstripped by them." At ἀλλ' repeat λέγω. The words καὶ τὸ τῆς—δοκιμάζων contain the other reason for enjoining the duty on them; namely, that he might put to the test the genuineness of their love to God and man,—namely, by setting it in comparison with the zeal and liberality of the Macedonians. The construction is: καὶ [οὕτως λέγω, ὡς] δοκιμάζων, i. e. ἵνα δοκιμάσω.

9. This verse is parenthetical, and the argument is the same as at 1 John iv. 19. They are exhorted to give liberally, as bestowing some portion of the riches conferred on them by the Lord of the universe; who, for their sakes, left his own exalted state in the bosom of his Father (see John xvii. 5.); and, divesting himself of those glories (Compare Phil. ii. 7.), assumed the condition of lowliness and poverty, that they might become spiritually rich; rich in the blessings of his religion, in the means of grace afforded them here, and in the hopes of glory hereafter. It is obviously how irrefragable a proof is here supplied of the pre-existence and divinity of Christ. See

1 Pet. 4. 10.

Abp. Magee on the Atonement, vol. ii. p. 621, who shows, that in all the passages of the Sept. or Classical writers where πτωχεύω occurs, it signifies to become poor, or be made poor; implying a change of state, or transition from opulence to poverty, from possession to privation. See also Slade in loco, and Mr. Rose on Parkh., p. 752. Πλούσιος ὢν is well rendered by the Syr. and Vulg. "cum esset dives," and by almost all our Versions "though he was rich." Ἐν being here, as not unfrequently, the participle Imperfect.

10. καὶ γνώμην ἐν τούτῳ δίδ.] Put for the more Classical γνώμην ποιούμεναι. The Apostle means that he does not issue orders, but merely gives his advice, showing them what is expedient for them. Τοῦτο γὰρ, namely, τὸ σπουδάζειν περισσεύειν ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι. The γὰρ refers to v. 7. q. d. [I bid you abound in this good work], for, &c. Συμφέρει, denotes "it is suitable to your profession" or character. So the Schol. ἀρμόζει, συνάδει. It was also necessary to their reputation, that what they had begun they should finish. Such seems to be the sense intended in the words following. In the words themselves, however, there is something perplexing. One would have expected οὐ μόνον τὸ θέλειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ποιῆσαι as, indeed, some Versions arrange the words, and certain Critics would read and explain; supposing a Hysteron Proteron, or a genus loquendi inversum, where, in the comparison of things unequal, that precedes, which naturally would follow. The MSS., however, give no countenance to the former method; nor do the true principles of philology afford any to the latter. Indeed, there is no reason to resort to any such precarious method; since we may remove the difficulty by taking θέλειν (with all the ancient Commentators and the best modern ones) to denote a willing mind; "which (remarks Archbishop Newcome) God approves of; and not the mere deed, which may be done grudgingly." See ix. 7. (It should seem, that not only is θέλειν meant (as the above Commentators say) to denote more than ποιῆσαι; but that this is the case because after θέλειν must be repeated ποιῆσαι, from the preceding. Ἀπὸ πέρυσι is an adverbial phrase, in which the πέ- ρυσι is properly a Dative from the obsolete noun περὺς, time past, from πείρω, transseo. Now this, by usage came to mean the year past. The ἀπὸ answers to our back, or ago (i. e. agone). The Classical writers never use the ἀπὸ; though the later ones do ἐκ and πρό. It was, it seems, about a year before, since they had begun to make the collection; which they had done of their own accord; and without any suggestion on the part of St. Paul.

11. νυνὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ ποιῆσαι ἐπ.] The sense is: "But now bring to an end the doing," or what has been doing; finish what was begun. Ἡ προθ. τοῦ θέλ. may be rendered "the promptitude of wishing [to do good]," alacrity of wish to do good. Sub. ἡ. Τὸ ἐπιτελέσαι, "the accomplishing [of what ye have begun]." Sub. ἡ from the subject matter. Ἐκ τοῦ ἔχειν, (sub. ὑμᾶς, and τὸν βίον) literally, "out of the means which ye have."

12. This verse is exegetical of the preceding. Εἰ γὰρ ἡ προθυμία πρόκ. may be rendered, "For if this readiness of mind be but forthcoming," παράκειται, as Hesych. explains. Εὐ- πρόσδεκτος scil. τῷ Θεῷ. On this text I would refer to a masterly sermon of Dr. South, vol. i. p. 421. With the sentiment I would compare Aristot. Eth. x. 8. p. 493. καὶ γὰρ ἀπὸ μετρίαν δύναται ἂν τις εὖ πράττειν κατὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν, which passage may serve to defend the τις against Griesb. and other recent Critics, who are strongly inclined to cancel it, from some 14 MSS. and a few Versions and Fathers. Though the latter evidence is here inadmissible; and the former very weak, since, in so comparatively small a number of MSS., we might account for the omission from transposition; the τις being in some MSS. found before ἔχη. But I suspect it was cancelled by certain over nice Critics, who knew that it was often omitted in the Classical writers. Thus in a kindred passage of Soph. Œd. T. 314. ἄνδρα δ' ὠφέλειν ἀφ' ὧν ἔχει τε καὶ δύναιτο, κάλλιστος πόνοιν, where the ὧν ἔχει scil. τις is explained by the subsequent words καὶ δύναιτο. On the suppression of the subject of a proposition, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 294. Ἐάν (for ἂν) ἔχη should be rendered "may have."

13. οὐ γὰρ, ἵνα, &c.] There is an ellipsis of τοῦτο βούλομαι: and the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "[according to his ability I say, that all without distinction may bear a part]; for I would not," &c. The words ἵνα ἄλλοις ἄνεσις are wrongly rendered in most of our English Versions, and the Commentators have quite mistaken their sense. Ἄνεσις, by a metaphor taken from loosening a string or cord, signifies abatement of pain, or of distress. That the latter is the sense here, is plain from the antithetical term θλίψις. Compare 2 Thess. i. 2. Render: "My meaning is not that they should be relieved by you from distress, so as to occasion distress to yourselves [but that you should give what you can spare]." The words following are illustrative of the foregoing.

— ἀλλά.] Repeat τοῦτο βούλομαι. This and the next verse may be rendered: "But [my meaning is] that by an equalization, your superfluity, at the present time, may be a supply of their want; so that, in like manner, their superfluity [at another time] may serve to relieve your want; that there may be [as I said] an equalization, or an equal reciprocity of giving and of receiving good offices between you. The sense contained in "at another time," though not expressed, is implied in γέννηται.

15. καθὼς γέγραπ.] "agreeably to what is written [of the manna]," q. d. (as Abp. Newc. explains) "So that there may be a general resemblance to the case of the Israelites in Exod. xvi. 18. And that the rich may, considering his station and circumstances, have no superfluity." It is well observed by Theodoret, that the Lord intimated this equality by the manner in which the manna was collected: Οὐδὲν γὰρ ὥνησεν ὁ τὸ πλεόν συλλέξας· τὸ γὰρ μέτρον ὁ μεγαλόδωρος τῷ δώρῳ συνέβησε. At τὸ πολὺ and τὸ ὀλίγον supply, not (as is usually done) ἔχων, but συλλεξάμενος, from the preceding συνέλεξαν. The citation varies from the Sept., but faithfully represents the Hebrew.

16. The Apostle now returns to the subject of Titus, which had been dropt at v. 6.; and in order, as Calvin observes, to leave them no excuse, he reminds them of two zealous advocates in the business, who had it much at heart. Adverting first to Titus, he commences with giving thanks to God for having put it into his heart to hearken to his request. Διδόντι ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ is for ἐντιθέντι τῇ καρδ. Σπουδὴ is to be taken as at v. 7, 8., "the same earnest care for you [which I feel]." Ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, "for your welfare and benefit."

17. τὴν μὲν παράκλη. ἐδέξατο.] Here, correcting himself, he intimates that Titus's promptitude for that service was so great, as not to need solicitation, he readily acceding to his request. In σπουδαιότερος δὲ ὑπ. I apprehend that no comparison is intended; and Abp. Newc. has, I think, rightly rendered "being very earnest." If any be meant, it must, I think, be, not what the Commentators suppose, but this: "being readier to engage in this service than I to put him upon it." Of this I have given several examples in a note on Thucyd. ii. 11, 10. There may seem some inconsistency between the former and the latter part of the verse; but this merely arises from brevity of expression; and will disappear when the sentiment is fully expressed as follows: "He truly complied with my exhortation; and [not only that] but being," &c.

18. τὸν ἀδελφόν, οὗ &c.] It is not agreed, nor is it possible to exactly determine, who it is that is here meant. The best founded opinion, (as being that most supported by the testimony of antiquity) is that St. Luke is meant. Be that as it may, the best Commentators are agreed, that the words ἐν τῷ εὐαγγ. do not mean, "for writing the Gospel," but, "for preaching it;" as x. xiv. Phil. iv. 3. 15. Compare 1 Cor. ix. 14, 18.

19. οὐ μόνον δέ.] The sense is: "And he not only deserves that praise, but also," &c. Χειροτ., "being constituted or appointed," as Acts xiv. 23. Τῇ χάριτι τ., i. e. the God's gift mentioned at v. 1. At προθυμίαν ὑμῶν, repeat the πρὸς, "for the manifestation of," &c. The verse is well rendered by Abp. Newcome, as follows: "And not that only, but who was appointed also by the churches our fellow-traveller with this liberal gift, which is to be administered by us to the glory of the Lord himself, and to the declaration of our ready mind."

20. στελλόμενοι τοῦτο.] This depends upon συνεπέμφαμεν at v. 18. (v. 19. being parenthetical); for the sense is: "We have sent the brother," &c., we guarding against (i. e. in order to guard against) any blame to us, as to the distribution of your abundant liberality. This rare sense of στελλ. arises thus. Στέλλεσθαι, in and, generally, to go off, retire, keep off. Hence the middle voice, signifies to go on an expedition, it came to signify keep off from any person, or thing, beware of, guard against him or it.

— μή τις ἡμᾶς μωμ.] The sense is: "Lest any one should have a handle for slander or calumny, as if I appropriated any part of the large sum collected by me to my private use."

21. προνοούμενοι—ἀνθρώπ. The same sentiment, and in nearly the same words, occurs at Rom. xii. 17., where see Note.

22. τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν.] Who is the person here meant, is as uncertain, as it is unimportant to know. "Ὁν ἐδοκίμ., &c. The sense is, "whom we have, by much experience, found to be diligent." It is strange that so many modern Translators and Commentators should understand this, "the great confidence which we have in you." For surely, according to every principle of correct Philology, the sense must rather be, "the great confidence which he hath in you;" the reference in πεποιθήσει and τῇ being evidently to ὃν—σπουδ. the brother. And indeed the sense thus arising is far more suitable and direct to the purpose; the meaning being, "by the reliance which he places on you," i. e. on your good dispositions in general, and your liberality on the present occasion. So Schlting explains: "Vestra virtus experta fecit illum multo alacriorem." The above view is, I find, supported by the authority of Theophyl. and Œcumen., Grot., Leun, Mackn., and Emmerl.

23. εἴτε ὑπὲρ Τ.] There is here an ellip. which most supply by λέγοι τις. But the δεῖ εἰπεῖν of the Greek Commentators seems better. The mildest ellip. is that of Grot., who supplies "agitur." So the Peschito Syr. Translator has "Sive igitur Titus [consideretur]." Εἰς ὑμᾶς, "apud vos." Ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλ., "messengers, or legates of the Churches," persons sent to despatch their business; according to the primitive sense of the word, as Phil. ii. 25. These are called the δόξα Χρ., by metonymy, as instruments for diffusing the glory of Christ and his Gospel.

24. τὴν οὖν ἐνδείξιν—ἐκκλ.] The best Editors have been long agreed that the καὶ before πρόσωπον is of no authority (being, indeed, a mere insertion of Erasmus from the Greek Commentators, and not to be found in the Ed. Princ. and other ancient Eds., nor in any of the best ancient Versions); and, accordingly, it has been cancelled by Wets., Griesb., Matth., Tittm., Vat., and Emmerl. Agreeably to the true construction, we may render, "Give therefore to them, in the presence of the churches, this evident testimony of your love to them, and of [the truth of] our boasting concerning you." Now whatever they did in this matter, might truly be said to be done "in the presence of the churches." not only because Titus would proclaim it wherever he went; but because Corinth was, in all respects placed in excelso; and, from its perpetual communication with all parts of the civilized world, the tidings would soon spread to all the Gentile Churches planted by Paul.

IX. In this Chapter the Apostle continues to urge their liberal contribution. And (observes Emmerl.) "to the reasons before deduced ab honestate, are now subjoined those ab utilitate." He first assigns his reasons for sending "the brethren before-hand," to make up the collections, notwithstanding his confidence in them." Then, after encouraging their cheerful liberality, he, in the full expectation of its fruits, affectionately recommends them to the Divine blessing.

1. περὶ μὲν γὰρ τῆς διακ. The γὰρ serves to connect this with the last verse of the preceding Chapter. Though, indeed, that connection is not, at first sight, obvious; nay, the Apostle seems to be passing to a new subject. Yet there is no transition, properly speaking; or only, at most, that kind of quasi transition, when a writer stops short in treating on any subject, in order to again advert to something that has been before said, so as to make that the means of introducing some new topic. In this case, ἀλλὰ γὰρ is not unusual in the Classical writers. And there is always an ellipsis of some words to be supplied from the context, or the subject-matter. So here we may paraphrase, with Newcome: "[However, I need say no more, nor insist on the foregoing topics, viii. 24]; for as to the propriety and reasonableness that you should contribute to the wants of the Jewish converts, I have no need to insist on them." If this be thought too precarious a principle, as depending on the supply of a whole sentence to which it is to be referred, we may suppose that the μὲν corresponds to the ὅτι at v. 3; and so the cause denoted in the γὰρ may, after being suspended in vv. 1 & 2, be brought out at v. 3. So περὶ δὲ is used at 1 Cor. vii. 1; viii. 1; xii. 1. This is much confirmed by the able statement of the connection and sense by Calvin as follows: "I do not tell you that you must minister unto the necessities of the saints: for that were needless; since you well know it, and have practically declared that you would not be wanting to them: but because by my every where boasting of your liberality, I have engaged at once my own credit and your's, this will not suffer me to remain inactive."

2. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν is not, as some say, pleonastic, but λαλῶν, "when speaking of you," may be supplied. Καυχῶμαι, prædicere soleo. Ἀτ ὅτι sub. λέγοντες from the subject-matter. By Ἀχαΐα is here denoted that Province of the two into which Augustus distributed Greece, consisting of Greece proper; namely, that tract of country to the South of Thessaly, Epirus, and Illyricum; which, with Macedonia, constituted the other province. Παρασκευάσται need not, with some, be interpreted of intention only and will, as opposed to deeds; nor, with others, of complete preparation: for (as I have shown in Recens. Syn.) it may denote "has been preparing itself;" viz. by contributions for the general collection to be made when St. Paul should go. See 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Thus ἀπὸ πέρουσι will (as at viii. 10.) mean "for a year back; i. e. during the course of that year."

—ὁ ἐξ ὑμῶν ζήλος] i. e. "the zeal evinced on your part;" for the ἐξ is not, as Grot. and Rosenm. suppose, pleonastic.

3. μὴ—κενωθῇ] i. e., as Theophyl. explains, κενὸν ἔλεγχθῇ, "should be found vain." Ἐν τῷ μέρει τ., "in this respect;" i. e. your readiness to contribute, as iii. 10. "ἵνα παρεσκ. ᾗτε, i. e. "that there may be no collections requiring to be made when I come," as the Apostle says, 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

4. μὴ πως, ἐὰν ἔλθ. M.] "lest, if any Macedonians should accompany me." He does not say they would accompany him; but it was not unlikely that they should, considering the constant intercourse of Macedonia with this empire of Greece, and the custom of setting forward the Apostles on their way, and sometimes accompanying them, so as to bring them safe to the next Christian congregation. In ἵνα μὴ λέγ. ὑμεῖς there is a most delicate turn.

4. ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει τ. τῆς καυχ.] The sense is: "on account of this confidence of boasting;" i. e. confident boasting. Ὑποστ. may well bear this sense, since it properly denotes a foundation, or support for any thing; and then easily comes to mean any fiducia or πεισθῆναι, as resting on hope or persuasion. Τῆς καυχ. is exegetical of ὑποστ. It is, indeed, not found in some MSS. and Versions, is rejected by Mill and Beng., and is cancelled by Griesb., Tittm., and Emmerl. But there is no sufficient evidence to cancel it; though there is great reason for suspecting it to have been interpolated from the parallel passage of xi. 17.

5. τὴν προκατηγεγελμένην.] Some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have προεπηγεγελμένην, which is preferred by Beng.; but without reason: since it is manifestly a gloss. The common reading must be retained; though the sense seems not to be that expressed in our common Version, but this, "which had been [so much] spoken of before [by you] and announced [to me and the public]." With respect to τὴν εὐλογίαν, it is by most recent Commentators simply taken to denote a gift: but they do not satisfactorily show how such a sense can arise from the primitive signification of the word, i. e. "an expression of good will to any one." Abp. Newcome's solution is the best; namely, that it is so called from a metonymy of the effect for the cause; i. e. because it produces blessing. The true mode, however, of viewing the idiom seems to be (as I suggested in Recens. Syn.) to suppose it used from delicacy. The Apostle often employs such terms to denote alms, as are calculated at once to spare the feelings of the receiver, and remind the giver that he is exercising a duty towards God. Thus we may compare this use of εὐλογία with that of χάρις at viii. 1., and εὐχαριστία elsewhere. Hence it may be rendered "a thanks-gift," or gift bestowed on man in gratitude to God for his goodness. The same principle may be applied to its use at Gen. xxxiii. 11. 2 Kings v. 5. Sept.

At ταύτην ἐτοίμην εἶναι sub. ὥστε. The words οὕτως ὡς εὐλογ., &c. are illustrative of the foregoing sense of εὐλογία. The sense is: 'that it may be [as it is] a thanks-gift, and not as it were a grudging alms, wrung from unwilling givers by importunity.' The force of πλεονεξίαν is well illustrated by Theophylact, who observes that "he who gives alms unwillingly, gives it as if he were overreached, or cheated out of it." Πλεονεκτεῖσθαι, as Thucyd. says i. 77., where it is opposed to καταναγκάζεσθαι. And so Doddr. shrewdly defines the πλεονεξία "a kind of extortion, by which money is, as it were, wrung from covetousness, by such obstinacy as covetous people themselves use where their own gain is concerned."

6. τοῦτο δέ.] Sub. φημί or γνωστὸν ἔστω. This seems meant to encounter an argument for giving at least sparingly; the answer to which is: [The gift must, indeed, be voluntary, and only in proportion to what can be spared] but mind this—he who soweth sparingly, shall reap sparingly. The Apostle does not prescribe the amount which any one is to give; but merely reminds them that they must expect to reap only in proportion to what they have sown. This metaphorical use of σπείρω, in the use to bestow, is founded on the language of the O. T. (See Is. xxxii. 20. Hos. x. 12. Prov. xi. 18 & 25. xix. 17.) And it is (as Mr. Scott says) here adopted to suggest an obvious, but most important lesson. Indeed the sentiment appears, from the parallel passages adduced by Wets. and others, to have been a proverbial one. Ἐπ' εὐλογίαις is a phrase for an adverb, like ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, securely, in Acts ii. 26. And the plural has an intensive force. Thus the sense is "most abundantly." So Ezek. xxxiv. 26. (Sept.) ὑπερὸς εὐλογίας, abundant rain; and Prov. xi. 25. ψυχὴ εὐλογουμένη, "the liberal person."

7. προαίρεται τῇ καρδίᾳ] literally, "as he preposeth in his heart;" or rather, i. e. "as he is disposed, or chooseth in his heart;" for the Apostle is speaking not so much of determination, or purpose, as will. Thus in the antithesis we have ἐξ ἀνάγκης. And although the former sense is most frequent in the Classical writers; yet the latter prevails in the Sept., and is found in both the later and the middle Greek writers, and is indeed most agreeable to the primary import of the word. The above view of the sense is supported not only by the most considerable modern Commentators, from Grot. to Emmerl., but also by some eminent ancient ones. After τῇ καρδίᾳ sub. διδόντω from the subject-matter. Ἐκ λύπης. The English Versions vary; but not one expresses the sense so accurately as our common version grudgingly.

— ἱλαρόν—Θεός.] Taken from Prov. xxii. 8. and also found in Eccles. So Rom. xii. 8. ὁ ἐλεῶν ἐν ἱλαρότητι. With the sentiment I would compare Pind. Pyth. 18. κέρδος δὲ φίλτατόν γ', ἐκόντος εἰ τις ἐκ δόμων φέροι. and Thucyd. ii. 40. ult. where Pericles says of the Athenians: καὶ τὰ ἐς ἀρετὴν ἡναντιώμεθα τοῖς πολλοῖς—μόνοι οὐ τοῦ ζυμφέροντος μάλλον προσιμῶ, ἢ τῆς ἐλευθερίας τῷ πιστῷ ἀδεῶς τινα ὀφελούμεν.

8. δυνατὸς δὲ—περισσ. εἰς ὑμᾶς] This (as Chrys. and Theophyl. observe) seems meant to anticipate an objection: "But if I give, I shall impoverish myself." To which the answer is: God is able to [and, as he sees fit, will] make every sort of beneficence, i. e. the ability to practise it, abound unto you. So some of the best Commentators, ancient and modern, interpret, taking χάριν for ἐλεημοσύνην. And this is confirmed by the Syriac Version. Others, however, as Grot. and Rosenm., understand it of the gifts of God. The accumulation of παντὶ, πάντοτε, and πᾶσαν much strengthens the sense. Περισσεύητε, "you may have to spare [to bestow] on every kind of beneficence."

9. καθὼς γέγραπ.] "Thus the saying of Scripture will be made good." From Psalm cxii. 9. Σκορπίζω signifies to scatter, as in sowing, agreeably to the metaphor at v. 7. Ἡ δικαιοσύνη is for ἐλεημοσύνη. Μένει, viz. in its consequences. There is a note of Oxymoron, similar to that at Prov. xi. 24, which the Apostle probably had in mind: εἰσὶν, οἱ τὰ ἴδια σπείροντες—πλείονα ποιούσιν· εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ, οἱ συνάγοντες ἑλαττονοῦνται.

10. ὁ δὲ ἐπιχορηγῶν—ὑμῶν.] The connection here is ably traced by Chrys. and the Greek Commentators, whom see in Recens. Syn. The words ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν—βρῶσιν are a periphrasis of God (i. e. the Good Being), "who giveth us all things richly to enjoy." It is formed on Is. lv. 10. Ἰν χορηγ. καὶ πληθ. ("may he supply and multiply") there is a Hendiadys for "may he abundantly supply." Τὸν σπόρον ὑμῶν, "the seed you sow;" by which is denoted the money or goods bestowed in alms, and thus "sown unto the Lord." Γεννήματα τῆς δικ. (borrowed from Hos. x. 12) signifies "the effect or produce of your liberality." The sentiment, according to some, is, "may he richly reward your liberality;" though others make it otherwise. But the true view seems to be that of the ancient Commentators, and Emmerl., who take γεν. τῆς δικ. to denote "the benefit arising from their charity." Thus the sentiment is, "may their charitable spirit find more scope for doing good!" i. e. may they have more to do good withal.

11. ἐν παντὶ πλουτιζόμενοι—ἀπλότ.] This is exegetical of the preceding καὶ αὐξήσαι—ὑμῶν. The construction is irregular, in tracing which it is best to regard πλουτ. as a nomin. pendens, ye abounding, for Gen. absol., and that for ἵνα πλουτιζήσθε scil. ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— ἥτις κατεργάζεται—Θεῷ.] The sense is: "which being ministered by us, produces, through our instrumentality, thanksgiving to God;" namely, both from the indigent Christians, who received the bounty, and from the Apostle who procured and administered it.

12. This verse is explanatory of the foregoing,

13 σεύουσα διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστιῶν τῷ Θεῷ, (διὰ τῆς δοκιμῆς
τῆς διακονίας ταύτης δοξάζοντες τὸν Θεόν, ἐπὶ τῇ ὑποταγῇ

πραότητος καὶ ἐπικείας τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὃς κατὰ πρόσωπον
2 μὲν ταπεινὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, ἀπὼν δὲ θαρρῶ εἰς ὑμᾶς. Δέομαι δὲ, τὸ μὴ παρὼν θαρρήσαι τῇ πεποιθήσει ἣ λογίζομαι τολ-μῆσαι ἐπὶ τινὰς τοὺς λογιζομένους ἡμᾶς ὡς κατὰ σάρκα

and may be freely rendered, "For the ministering of this supply [to the wants of the poor] not only relieves their necessities, but is abundant to the glory of God, by [producing] many thanksgivings" to God; viz. both from the poor thus relieved, and from all true Christians. Comp. supra iv. 15.

13, 14. These verses are further illustrative of the preceding. Δοξ. is a nomín. pendens, like πλουτ. at v. 11. Emmerl. shows that the words of v. 13. are put for δοξάζοντες τ. Θε. διὰ τῆς διακονίας ταύτης, ὅτι ἀπλότης τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτοὺς κ. εἰς πάντας δοκιμάζεται τὴν ὑποταγὴν ὑμῶν εἰς τ. εὐαγγ. τ. Χρ. τὸ δὲ ἡμῶν ὁμολογούμενον. The force, however, of τῆς ὁμολογ. is disputed. It seems best to suppose it (with Beza, Sclater, Rosenm., and most recent Commentators) as put for τῇ ὁμολογουμένῃ, "their professed or avowed obedience." Καὶ ἀπλότῃ τῆς κοιν. ε. α. κ. ε. π. may be rendered "by the liberality of this your ministering to the necessities both of them, and of all [who are in need.]" It is, I think, plain that the whole of this verse is parenthetical; and that the καὶ αὐτῶν δεήσει, &c. of the next verse connects with v. 12. To clear the construction, we must take δεήσει as put for εἰς δεήσειν. For as the Apostle has before said, that this supplying of the necessities of the saints would redound to the praise and glory of God;—so here he adverts to another effect which would thence result. "It will also (he says) tend to [excite] their prayers for you." Ἐπιποθ. ὑμᾶς is to be referred to αὐτῶν. The expression ἐπιποθ. ὑμᾶς may be best rendered, agreeably to the Syr. Version, "having a great affection for you," as in Phil. i. 8. Thus the words following will yield a very suitable sense; where the χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ signifies the grace of God in them, as evinced by their obedience to the requisitions of the Gospel in the exercise of this charity.

15. τῇ ἀνεκδ. δωρεᾷ.] This may, with many Commentators, be understood of the gift of the Gospel of Christ, or of Christ himself. But it rather means "the gift of salvation by Christ." So, besides many other passages which might be cited, Rom. vi. 23. τὸ δὲ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ζωὴ αἰώνιος ἐν Χριστῷ. I. Also Ephes. iv. 7. τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ Χριστοῦ, and John iv. 10. ἐλπίεις τὴν δωρεάν τοῦ Θεοῦ. Rom. v. 15.

X. Now commences the third part of the Epistle.

Emmerl. the epilogus; in which the Apostle speaks more directly against the false teachers, and vindicates himself from their calumnies. In this portion of the Epistle some difference of style is observable; there being here more of connection and finish than in the preceding Chapters; which were probably written on the spur of the occasion, and in the course of journeying from place to place; these, probably, at some fixed situation, and with more of previous thought and deliberation. A yet greater difference exists in the spirit and manner. In the former part of the Epistle it is mild and conciliatory; here severe, oburgatory, and sarcastic. There is, however, no such inconsistency as some have recognised; and therefore we may dispense with the hypothesis by which Emmerl. has endeavoured to account for it. In truth, the persons here glanced at are not the same. In the preceding Chapters the Apostle merely encounters those who were not well affected to him, or insubordinate; and hence he only there acts on the defensive. Here he seems to encounter the false teachers, and their partizans his enemies, and therefore he acts on the offensive.

He commences with entreating them, by the meekness of Christ, as pointing to an example which might justify his previous forbearance, and his delay in punishing those who had offended. For the faction had, it seems (as Calvin remarks) called him a φρασδοεῖλιας.

1. αὐτὸς δὲ ἐγὼ Π.] The ancient Commentators notice the dignity inherent in this mode of expression. Mackn. has here, at least, improved on our common version, by rendering: "Now I, the same Paul who," &c. In fact, there seems to be here a blending of two modes of expression, αὐτὸς ὅς, that same person who παρακαλεῖ, and ἐγὼ Π. παρὰ. The sense seems to be, "by the exercise of, i. e. exercising that mildness, of which we have both the precept and the example in Jesus Christ." At κατὰ πρός. sub. ὧν, "when personally present." Θαρρῶ εἰς ὑ. "use bold confidence towards you," i. e. by letter.

2. The δὲ is resumptive: and δέομαι δὲ may be rendered "I entreat you, I say." The sense is: "I entreat, I say, that I may not have to be bold when I am present, with that confidence, wherewith I intend to be bold against certain, who regard me as walking after the flesh," i. e. guided by worldly principles. There seems to be a paronomasia in λογίζομαι and λογιζομένους, which, if introduced into English, may perhaps be best expressed by reckon.

3. ἐν σαρκί—στρ.] We may remark the difference between ἐν σαρκὶ and κατὰ σάρκα, and the use of περιπατεῖν in the sense to be or live, as John v. 7. The former imports to live in a human body, have a frail human nature; the latter, “upon merely human views.” The sense and the force of the allusion in στρατ. are disputed. The ancient and some modern Commentators suppose an allusion to Paul’s office and commission, as Apostle; as 1 Tim. i. 18: and the recent Commentators think the expression has reference to his strong supports therein. The former view is far preferable; but there seems to be also an allusion to the strong contest which the Apostle had to maintain against sin and wickedness, and its upholders, which is admirably illustrated by Bp. Sand. in his 3rd Sermon ad Populum, p. 145. The expression σὰρξ here, like κατὰ σάρκα at v. 2, refers to the maxims of human policy. See Note on John viii. 15. So Newc. paraphrases: “There is no fraud, self-interest, or corrupting of the word of God, imputable to me.” Comp. iv. 2.

4. τὰ γὰρ ὅπλα, &c.] Here the figure is continued, in order to suggest the mighty supports from above, which the Apostle had in the exercise of this warfare; and that in order to establish his Divine commission. The general sense is this: “Our supports in this struggle [literally campaign] are not merely human [and therefore weak]; but are strong, through and by God, to the pulling down of strong holds.” Τῷ Θεῷ is by many supposed to communicate a superlative force to δυνατός, i. e. exceedingly powerful. But the interpretation above adopted, from the ancient and best modern Commentators, seems to be the best founded. In πρὸς καθ. ὄχυρ. the metaphor is continued, and the purpose of this warfare adverted to, namely, the removal of all impediments, however formidable, to the propagation of the Gospel; which are represented as the strong holds of sin and Satan, whereby he maintained his empire of darkness, idolatry, and vice. See Scott.

5. λογισμοὺς καθ., &c.] This is further explanatory of the καθαίρεσιν preceding. Καθαίροντες is a Nom. pendens, and put for ὥστε καθαερεῖν ἡμᾶς. Λογισμοὺς has reference to the dialectic syllogisms, rhetorical strophæ, and vain sophisms, by which the heathen philosophers assailed the Gospel. See Tittm. de Synon. p. 176. In ὕψωμα there is the same metaphor as in ὄχυρῳα before. And as λογισμ. is a particular term referring to the heathen philosophers, and partly the false teachers, so ὕψωμα (as appears from the πᾶν) is a general term applicable alike to the heathen philosophers, the false teachers, and the Jewish doctors. That the Apostle should have employed the terms ὄχυρῳα and ὕψωμα, is not surprising,—since military metaphors run throughout the whole passage, as στρατευόμεθα, στρατείας, καθαίρεσις, and (besides ὄχυρωμάτων and λογισμῶν) αἰχμαλωτίζοντες. In like manner Philo (cited by Loesn.) calls false wisdom ὄχυρῳα; and, similarly to the ὕψωμα ἐπαιρόμενον κατὰ, &c., he speaks of τὸν ἐπιτειχισμὸν τῶν ἐναντίων δοξῶν καθαερεῖν. By τῆς γνώσ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is meant κατ’ ἐξοχὴν the Gospel. Νόημα should, I think, be rendered, not thought, but cogitation, i. e. intellectual ratiocination, as supra ii. 11. So the Syr. “ratiocinationes.” The false teachers (against whom this is, I conceive, chiefly directed) found it more difficult to subject their reason to the obedience of Christ than their actions. Against this the pride of human reason has ever rebelled. Thus of those who now reject the Gospel, few are indisposed to admit the excellence of its moral precepts; but against any subjection of the reason of men they loudly protest.

Εἰς τὴν ὑπακοὴν τοῦ Χρ. may best be rendered “into obedience to Christ,” i. e. his Gospel, the γνώσ. τοῦ Θεοῦ. The Genit. is used because ὑπακοεῖν takes a Genit., and verbals follow the case of their verbs. Thus it is for εἰς τὸ ὑπακοεῖν τῷ Χριστῷ.

6. ἐν ἐτοίμῳ ἔχοντες] for ἐτοίμως ἔχ., “being ready.” Ὅταν πληρ. ὡ. ἡ ὑπ. i. e. when you are generally and completely brought to the obedience of Christ. By ὡμῶν ἡ ὑπ. is meant the obedience of the sounder part of them. We are not, however, with many recent Commentators, to suppose that the Apostle waited till the greater and sounder part were reduced to obedience, in order, by their aid, to punish the disobedient. Since for the ἐκδίκησις mentioned he needed not their aid. It should seem that he deferred exercising the supernatural power of inflicting judgments, intrusted to him by God, until, by giving time for repentance, he should have brought back as many as possible to obedience, who would help to keep the rest so; and thereby render it the less necessary to resort to severer measures.

7. The Apostle now turns (says Theophyl.) from the deceivers to the deceived. The sense of τὰ κατὰ πρ. βλ. is: “Do you form your estimation of things [concerning a Teacher] according to external circumstances?" such as person, manners, learning, or eloquence, wealth, birth, rank, or, lastly, the adventitious advantage of conversion under Christ himself. Compare 1 Cor. ix. 1. In the τῷ there is an allusion to the false teachers, and it should seem one, who took the lead. Πέποιθεν ἐαυτῷ should be rendered "is confident in himself," viz. by placing reliance on some personal merit of his own. Χριστοῦ εἶναι, scil. δούλος; implying, by the context, one especially approved by Him. Τοῦτο λογίζεσθω π. ἃ. ἑ. may be rendered, "let him, in turn, consider this with himself," or, reason thus of himself; meaning, that whereby he will find by all those arguments he concludes himself to be Christ's minister, that he may conclude the same of me also.

8. Here St. Paul shows that he may justly claim far more than the being a minister of Christ; which was all that the false teachers pretended to. So 1 Cor. xv. 10. περισσότερο αὐτῶν πάντων ἐκοίτασα. Τῆς ἐξουσίας ἡμῶν, "the authority given to me," namely, by Jesus Christ personally. The words ἡς ἐδωκεν ὁ Κ. ἡμῖν refer to that personal commission which Paul had received from Christ. And the next words εἰς οἰκοδομὴν—ἡμῶν are levelled against the false teachers, whose measures tended not εἰς οἰκ., but εἰς καθ., viz. by throwing impediments in the way of salvation, by the dissemination of heresy and false doctrine. Οὐκ αἰσχυνθήσομαι, i. e. I should have no reason to be ashamed, as if I spoke falsehood; nay the truth of facts would justify me.

9. ἵνα μὴ ὀόξω—ἐπιστολῶν.] There is here an air of abruptness, and an obscurity, which most Interpreters, ancient and modern (regarding the ἵνα μὴ ὀόξω, as a præcisa oratio), endeavour to remove by supplying some clause introductory of the words. The most probable supplementum is, ἀλλ' οὐ κανηήσομαι, q. d. [if I were, I say, to boast. But this I will not do], in order that, &c. Since, however, this seems too arbitrary an ellipsis, it is better, with some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators (as Griesbach, Tittm., Vater, Leun., Emmerl., and the Bâle Editor) to regard v. 9. as forming a protasis, to which there is at v. 11. the apodosis; v. 10. being parenthetical.

'Ως ἄν is often, as here, put for ὡσεὶ, as it were; of which many examples might be adduced from Thucyd. and others of the best writers. H. Stephens in his Thes. seems justified in saying that in such a case we should write ὡσάν.

10. αἱ μὲν ἐπιστολαί.] This will not prove that they had previously received more than one; for, as Bp. Middl. suggests, ἐπιστολαί might (as is the case in all languages) be used generically, as denoting the character of them; though only one letter had been received. Φησί, Snb. τισ. (See Win. Gr. § 41. 2.) This seems to be meant of the person supposed to make the observation, and probably the leading person among the false teachers. Βαρύται καὶ ἰσχύ., "authoritative and severe." Ἡ δὲ παρ. τοῦ σώμ. is for παρὼν δὲ κατὰ τὸ σώμα; as in Thucyd. vi. 86. πόλει μείζονι τῇς ἡμετέρας παρουσίας.

ο. — ἀσθενής] “mean.” This is supposed to have reference to the very diminutive and crooked form, and the ungraceful deportment of the Apostle; including other personal defects which the evidence of antiquity records of the Apostle. See Note on 1 Cor. ii. 3. Ὁ λόγος ἐξουθ. This is supposed to have reference to the weak and shrill voice, and the defect in his enunciation, under which the Apostle is said to have laboured. But the λόγος may also refer to his elocution, including his phraseology; which was, we may suppose, not refined enough for the fastidious critics of Græcism at Corinth.

11. λογιζέσθω "let him suppose [as he may]." Theophyl. explains by γινωσκέτω.

12. οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν, &c.] The γὰρ is transitive, q. d. [But we will say no more]; for, &c. Οὐ τολμ., "non sustinemus," we cannot bring ourselves; as Rom. v. 7. and 1 Cor. vi. 1. Ἐγκ. and συγκρίναι are well explained by Theophyl. συναριθμῆσαι and ἀντιπαθεῖναι. By τισι the Apostle means the false teachers, against whom he directs the pointed sarcasm following.

— ἀλλὰ αὐτοὶ—συνιοῦσιν.] These words have been thought obscure, and for that reason were tampered with by the early Critics. But the sentiment is sufficiently obvious, and may be thus expressed: "While they thus measure themselves by themselves only, and not with the true Apostles, they perceive not what they are doing, and the self-delusion into which they are fallen;" which is the greatest mark of folly. This absolute use of συν. is also found in Mark vi. 52; vii. 14; viii. 17 & 21. Numerous parallels sentiments are here adduced by the Commentators from the Classical writers, the most apposite of which may be seen in Recens. Syn. It must here suffice to advert to the Horatian "Suo se pede metiri."

13. ἡμεῖς δέ.] The ἡμεῖς is emphatical, and meant in opposition to the false teachers. At ἄμετρα sub. μέρη. The same metaphor is here continued, and the sense is: "I will not boast or seek glory in respect to any parts further than the limits God hath assigned to my evangelical labours." At ἐφικέσθαι must be supplied ῶστε. The sense is: "And those limits extend so as to reach even unto you. [Of you, therefore, I may be permitted to boast.]"

14. This verse is explanatory of v. 13; and the ὑπερεκτ. ἑαυτούς (with which the Commentators compare ὑπερπλεῖν τὸν ὅρον) is equivalent to the εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχᾶσθαι. The sense is: "as if our boundaries did not extend so far as to reach to you." Ἀχρι γὰρ—Χριστοῦ, "for I have advanced as far as you also, in preaching the Gospel of Christ." Ἐφθ. signifies properly to arrive first; and the right of pre-occupancy is alluded to.

15. οὐκ εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχ.] The Apostle here resumes the sentiment at v. 13, in order to engraft another upon it illustrative thereof, "We (alluding to the false teachers) do not boast beyond our limits, over other men's labours." Comp. Rom. xv. 20. I would compare Joseph. Ant. xiv. 11. 2. κατασκευάζειν εὐνοίαν ἐκ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων πόγων. The Apostle then hints at a result from his labours far more precious than acceptance and honour. We have, he says, a hope, αὐξανομένης τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν ἐν ὑμῖν μεγαλυνθῆναι; that, as your faith increases, (i. e. as the profession of the Gospel extends further among you,) (i. e. at the further perfecting of the faith in some, and the extension of it to others, at his next visit to Corinth). Ἐν ὑμῖν μεγαλυνθῆναι, "to gain fame and glory by you,"—namely, as a teacher justly may, by the reputation of his pupils.

16. εἰς τὰ ὑπερέκεινα—εὐαγγ.] Sub. ῶστε, i. e. εἰς τό. The sense seems to be: "The result which I hope for, from this abundant success of my labours among you, is εὐαγγελίσασθαι (scil. με) εἰς τὰ ὑπερέκεινα ὑμῶν, "that I may spread the Gospel to the parts beyond you." Οὐκ ἐν ἀλλοτρίῳ—καυχ. Render, "So, however, as not to aim at boasting over that which is ready obtained, and in another's bounds." Εἰς τὰ ἔτοιμα is for ἐν τοῖς ἐτοίμοις. The general sense of the passage is well expressed by Mr. Holden thus: "St. Paul would not boast of any thing out of the province which God had assigned him, a province extending to Corinth, vv. 13, 14, but though he would not boast of other men's labours, he hoped that, when the Corinthians were confirmed in the faith, his province would be enlarged, so that he might preach the Gospel in countries beyond Corinth."

17. The Apostle concludes with a most weighty sentiment, occurring also at 1 Cor. i. 31. (and supposed by some to be derived from Jerem. ix. 23. sq.) but here levelled against the false teachers. The construction is ably adjusted by Emmerl. thus: "Equidem puto, cum verbis, οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν—συνιστανόντων v. 12. cohaerere, iis, quæ interjacent, tanquam pro parenthesi habendis, quippe quorum unum traxit alterum (ἐγκρίνειν—συγκρίνειν, hoc συγκρίνειν ἑαυτὸν, hoc μετροῦν, hoc μέτρον, hoc κακόν et deinceps ὑπερεκτείνειν, ἀλλότριοι κόποι, &c.)"

18. συνίστησι] i. e. shows to be δόκιμος; and that not so much by imparting spiritual gifts, (as many Commentators suppose,) but rather by giving a blessing, and prospering his evangelical labours.

XI. 1. As v. 17 of the preceding Chapter was intended to deprecate the disgust and displeasure which arises at hearing self-praise, so is the present verse thus meant. The words may be rendered: "Would that ye could bear with me a little in my folly [of boasting]! Now do even bear with me!" Ὁν ὄφελλον, utinam, see Matth. Gr. τῇ ἀφρ., "folly of boasting;" i. e. what his opposers called such; though it was not so, but arose from necessity, and was employed solely to rescue his converts from the arts of false teachers.

Here there is some variety of reading. The common text, supported by several MSS., has ἡνείχεσθε μ. μ. τ. τῆς ἀφροσύνης. But the reading which I have adopted (with Wets., Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Vat., and Emmerl.) is supported by almost all the early Edd. and Versions, and is as strong in internal evidence as in external authority. ^γ Ἀνείχ. is required by the usus loquendi of the N. T.; and the Article τῇ, by the proprietas linguae, the sense being “my folly.” The τὸ arose from the margin.

2. ζηλῶ γὰρ, &c.] The general sense of this dark passage seems to be simply this: “I bear the greatest affection, and feel the most lively concern for you.” The metaphor, however, was adopted in conformity with that just after introduced, of representing the Church as the bride of Christ. In ἡρμ. the Apostle is thought to have had allusion to the ἀρμостаί, or persons who negotiated marriages for their friends. (See Prov. xix. 14, and Rom. vii. 4.) The allusion, however, is not to be pressed on, and the general import only to be attended to; by which is simply denoted the close affinity between Christ and his Church.

3. φοβοῦμαι δὲ—Χριστόν.] The Apostle (Rosenm. remarks) proposes the example of the woman being deceived by the serpent, because he had just compared the Church to a virgin. It has been hence justly inferred by the best Commentators and Theologians, that the history of the fall is here recognised as a real transaction, not, as some represent it, an allegorical narrative.

^α Ἀπλοτ. denotes the simple and unadulterated truth as it is in Jesus. Νοήματα, “habits of thinking.”

— φθαρῇ ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπλότ. τῆς ε. τ. Χ.] “be corrupted and perverted from the simplicity,” &c. Yet by ἀπλότ. εἰς τ. Χρ. is, I conceive, meant, not (as many recent Commentators suppose) “true and sincere love and obedience to Christ,” but “simplicity of faith and doctrine as regards Christ and the Gospel.” So Theophyl. μὴ μετενεχθῆτε ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπλῆς πίστεως εἰς τὴν ἕξω δεινότητα. This, it seems, had been, more or less, corrupted with admixtures of Jewish or Heathen superstition. Εἰς Χρ. erga Christum.

4. ὁ ἐρχόμενος.] This is by many Commentators supposed to designate the false teacher. But it seems to simply mean “any one coming to you [as I do; i. e. as a teacher of religion].” Now the Apostle supposes a case, which does not exist: and by ἄλλον is meant, by implication, “another and a better.” Ἰησοῦς here simply means, according to its etymology, Saviour. The sense of the passage may be thus expressed: “If any one coming to you, were to preach another and better Saviour than Him whom we preached; or ye were to receive from him other and better spiritual gifts than those which we imparted; or another and better gospel [than that] which ye had accepted; ye might have been right in bearing with him, and admitting his claims: [But this is not the case.] for I account myself,” &c. The above clause, though not expressed, is necessary to be supplied to complete the sense, and there is an evident allusion to it in the γὰρ. Its omission may perhaps be attributable to modesty. “The ground of censure (Phot. observes) is this: that when the false teachers preached only the same Saviour, Spirit, and Gospel, as the Apostle, yet they abandoned him, and held with them, though they had not to plead the attraction of novelty and variety.”

In καλῶς ἠνείχ. there is not, as the Commentators imagine, irony, but sarcasm. Compare vv. 19, 20. For ἠνείχ., however, many of the best MSS. and the Ed. Princ. have ἀνείχ., which was, with reason, adopted by Wets. and edited by Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Vater, and Emmerl.

5. τῶν ὑπὲρ λίαν ἀποστόλων.] The best Commentators are agreed in supposing Peter, James, and John, here meant, who are in Gal. ii. 9. called “pillars of the Church.” What St. Paul says was probably meant against those followers of Peter, or Cephas, who (as we find from 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 12.) formed a party at Corinth. ὑπερλίαν (in which we have adverb for adjective) may be compared with the words ὑπερεῦ, and ὑπερπερισσῶς. Indeed compounds with ὑπὲρ are frequent in the Apostle. As the Commentators adduce no Classical illustration, the following may be not unacceptable. Thucyd. vii. 70. τὸν κτύπον μέγαν λίαν.

6. The Apostle here adverts to one of the principal objections made to him by his opponents. Εἰ δὲ καὶ, “but though I be even” ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ; On the true sense of which see Notes on Acts iv. 13. 1 Cor. xiv. 16. It may here denote rude and unpolished; and λόγῳ be meant to complete the sense, and to correspond to γνώσει just after. Thus the sense will be: “My language and address is plain and unpolished.” So the Apostle describes himself at 1 Cor. ii. 1. And So Josephus Antiq. ii. 12, 2. calls Moses an ιδιώτης, inasmuch as he had not the gift of eloquence. And Xenoph. de Venat. xiii. 4. cited by Wets. Ἐγὼ δὲ ιδιώτης μὲν εἰμι ἵσως οὖν τοῖς ὀνόμασιν οὐ σεσοφισμένοις λέγω.

Origen (cited by Elsner), with reference to this passage, says: Θαυμάσεται τὸν νοῦν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς ἐν ιδιωτικῇ τῇ λέξει μεγάλα περιουσίους. By τῇ γνώσει is meant true and Divine knowledge, that of the great truths of the Gospel.

— ἀλλ' ἐν παντί—ὑμᾶς.] The sense seems to be, “Nay, I have at all times, and in every way, become fully manifest to you [as having such knowledge].”

7. ἡ ἁμαρτίαν—ὑμῖν;] There is here an abruptness of transition, which may be removed by supplying a link in the chain of reasoning, as follows: “If then the matters of objection above adverted to, are of no force in showing my unfitness for the Apostolical office, what other ground of complaint have you to allege against me? Have I done wrong in humbling myself?” &c. namely, in abasing himself by labouring with his hands, and exposing himself to all the humiliating circumstances attendant on poverty, (true, says the Satirist: “Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se, Quàm quod ridiculos homines fecit), when he might have claimed the maintenance due to him as an Apostle. See also 1 Cor. ix. 7—14. That he had not claimed his right was (some think) alleged by the false teachers as a proof that he did not regard himself as an Apostle. This he answers by giving the true reason for his conduct. There were two other misconstructions of his conduct in this respect; 1. that he would receive nothing from them, because he had no affection for them. This is answered by his doing what he does for their spiritual advancement. 2. That this was only a crafty device to catch them. This he notices, and replies to at xii. 16. “Ἴνα ὑ. ὑψωθῆτε, “that ye might be exalted in spiritual knowledge and the favour of God.” The words following are explanatory of the preceding, q. d. ‘because, or inasmuch as, I have preached to you the Gospel cost-free.’ The reasons why he did so are stated in vv. 9—12.

8. ἄλλας ἐκκλ. ἐσύλησα.] This is meant to carry the allegation still further; q. d. “I not only preached the Gospel among you cost-free,—but, that I might be enabled to do this, I, in the case of other Churches, even abandoned my rule of taking nothing;” thus, as it were, spoiling them; for ἐσύλησα must be taken comparatè. It is probable (as Emmerl. supposes) that the expression had been used by his adversaries, with reference to his conduct in receiving money from those Churches. This the Apostle was compelled to do, since his ministerial labours at Corinth had been so great, as not to allow sufficient time to support himself by his trade. We may observe that, he says, not λαβὼν, but λαβὼν ὀψώνιον, to show that he had earned the money he received from them, by previous services.

— ὑστερηθεὶς [“when I was in straits.” Thus in Phil. iv. 12. ὑστερεῖσθαι is opposed to περισσεύειν. Οὐ κατενάρκ. οὐδ., “I was no encumbrance to you;” literally, I did not lie a dead weight upon you, from κατὰ, down, and νάρκη, torpor; so called from a fish of that name, possessing the power of affecting any one with torpor by the touch. Jerome says this is a Cilicium for κατεβάρησα. And as he testifies that καταν. was in use in Cilicia, it might be such. But as ἀποναρκία occurs in Plutarch, so it is probable that both that and καταν. were provincialisms, or words of the vulgar Greek. On the thing itself see Phil. iv. 15.

9. ἀβαρῇ] “unburthensome.” The word is of rare occurrence; but three examples are adduced by Wets. from later Greek writers. Καὶ τηρ. q. d. I say not this in order that I may henceforth receive of you. Compare 1 Cor. ix. 15.

10. This the Apostle confirms with a strong asseveration (like that at Rom. ix. 1.) bearing affinity to an oath; since it appeals to Christ for the truth of what is said. The sense may be thus expressed: “The truth of it is, i. e. (Let the truth in Christ be thought to be) in me, as I shall do what I protest, when I say this,” &c. The Commentators have failed to discover the true nature of the idiom, because they did not see that ὅτι has here the very force as when, in the Sept. it follows formulæ jurandi,—such as ζῇ Κύριος, thus corresponding to the Heb. כִּי. Ἡ καύχ. αὕτη signifies “this cause of boasting,” as καύχημα in a kindred passage at 1 Cor. ix. 16. Οὐ φραγ., “shall not be silenced,” or made void; i. e. by being shown to be groundless. There is an allusion to the use of φράσσω as said of the mouth; as in Rom. iii. 19. ἵνα πᾶν στόμα φραγῇ.

The εἰς ἐμὲ (‘in my case’) is not (as the Commentators imagine) simply put for μου, but is more significant; the expression being, I conceive, emphatic, and meant with allusion to the false teachers; who were, as appears from v. 20., very burdensome to the Corinthians.

As to the reading σφραγήσεται (or σφραγίσσεται of the Stephanic Editions), it was, I suspect, a mere error of the press, arising from a mistaking of the φ of the Ed. Princ. and Erasm. l. for a σφ. The true reading was adopted from the Ed. Complut. first by Beza, 1565, and then by H. Steph. 1567, and thus was introduced into the Elzevir Edition, and so came into the textus receptus.

11. διατί;] “Why is it that I do so?” The answer in the interrogative implies a strong negation, “No! I take God to witness it is not so!” The Apostle does not tell them what was his reason for so doing, but leaves that to be inferred from what follows.

12. There has been some doubt as to the sense of this briefly worded, and therefore obscure, passage. It may (with Mackn. and other Commentators) be best expressed thus: “But what I do I will also continue to do, that I may thereby cut off an occasion (namely, of taking maintenance from you) from those who wish for it; in order that wherein they boast themselves, they may be found to be even as we; i. e. to really take nothing.” Some eminent Commentators supply εἰς ἐμὲ after ἵνα ἐκκ. τὴν ἀφ. But that is not agreeable to the context. The foregoing interpretation is confirmed by Gal. v. 13. εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκί.

13. οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι ψευδ.] scil. εἰσι. The γὰρ has reference to that is implied in the preceding clause, that they are in reality different from what they pretend to be: q. d. “really, I say, and not pretentially; for such are not what they seem, they are false Apostles.” Ἐργάται should be rendered, not, workers, but workmen, i. e. ministers, as Newc., Mackn., Leun., and Emmerl. render. And so the Syr. Vers. The word is used in this sense at Matt. ix. 37. Phil. iii. 2. 2 Tim. ii. 15. They are called δόλιοι, as pretending to that disinterestedness, which they did not possess.

14. μετασχημ. εἰς ἄγγ. φ.] As when he tempted Eve, and also our Lord in the wilderness. It should seem, however, not to refer to any single instance, but to be a general description of the customary devices of Satan; who assumes an appearance of the purest virtue to bring about his designs. See a masterly Sermon on this text by Dr. South.

For θανμαστὸν eight MSS. have θαῦμα, which should seem to be an emendation of the Western Critics; unless, indeed, it be a marginal gloss, intended to supply the ellipsis at μέγα in the next verse, but afterwards adopted by the scribes or framers of the text of those MSS. as a var. lect. of θαυμαστὸν. The word θαῦμα with μέγα and μείσσω often occurs in the best writers, especially Herodotus.

15. μετασχ.] There is here a significatio prænans, “are changed and become.” Δικ., truth and virtue, as opposed to deceit, falsehood, and iniquity in general. Τέλος, “final punishment,” as in Rom. vi. 21.

16. Having stated broadly the true character of his opponents, the Apostle returns to his subject by the formula πάλιν λέγω; which does not import that he is going to say no more than he had before said; but only that he returns to the same subject, which had been interrupted by what had been said of the false teachers. The expression, however, which he employs is also, like the former one, of a softening kind, depreciating censure for venturing on self-praise. Thus the sense is, “Let no one account me a fool, or vain-glorious person, for this self-praise.” Why, the Apostle does not here say; but he adverts to it at v. 11. of the next Chapter. He is induced to thus boast, since the importance of the occasion demands it of him, and because, as he alleges at xii. 6, he says no more than the truth.

—εἰ δὲ μή γε] “But if ye will not [acquit me of this charge].” Κὰν ὡς ἀφ. δέξ. με, “why, then, even bear with me as a vain-glorious person;” i. e. suffer me to be such. The expression δέξ. ὡς ἀφ. is synonymous with ἀνέχουσθαι ἀφρ. at vv. 1 & 19; of which Elsn. adduces an example from Plutarch. The κὰν, Emmerl. remarks, is elliptical for δέχεσθαι με, καὶ ἐὰν δέχῃσθε ὡς ἀφρ. The next words, ἵνα καγὼ μικ. τι καυχ. should be rendered, “in order that I, too, [as well as the false teachers] may boast myself a little.”

17. ὁ λαλῶ—καυχήσεως.] I am still of opinion (as in Rec. Syn.) that the various endeavours which have been made to extract a satisfactory sense from this passage are fruitless; and that the only way of removing the difficulty is to suppose the Apostle to be speaking (as in the verse preceding, and that following) not seriously. It is said, as Sc Slater, Beza, Vorst., and Newc. agree, per concessionem. This is confirmed by the ὡς at ὡς ἐν ἀφρ. The sense may be thus expressed. “Be it so, if you please, that what I am going to speak, I speak not [as I profess to do] according to the Lord (i. e. by inspiration, or suitably to the purposes of his religion), but speak it, as it were, in folly, in the confidence of boasting.” “The Apostle first asserts (remarks Abp. Newc.) v. 16, that his glorying was justifiable; and then he modestly grants that such glorying

20. γὰρ] exempli gratiā. The words following are intended to place the faults of the false teachers in the strongest point of view. They must not, however, be too much pressed on; nor explained with reference to any hypothesis respecting the kind of persons who were then false teachers. The words may be freely rendered, with Newc., "if a man subject you to his imperious will, exact a large stipend, receive private gifts besides, proudly exalt himself over you, treat you contumeliously in the highest degree." Καταδ. denotes a domineering spirit, shown, we may suppose, chiefly in the imposition of external forms. See Gal. ii. 4. Is. xliii. 23. Aq. & Symm. Εἰς πρόσωπον δέρει is plainly a figurative phrase, to denote insulting by contumelious treatment. Κατεσθίει and λαμβάνει are variously interpreted. See Rec. Syn. Many eminent Commentators understand the former term of receiving a large stipend; and the latter, of taking private gifts. It should rather seem that λαμβ. is to be taken of receiving a stipend, and κατεσθ. of exacting presents of money or goods, and also living at their tables. See Note supra vii. 2. Perhaps, however, the two expressions are meant to be taken together, as descriptive of the rapacious spirit by which those teachers miserably burthened their devotees, and devoured their substance. Ἀνέχεσθαι here signifies to put up with, as in Joseph. p. 1172. 12. (Huds.) ἀπαζόμενοι ἀνέχεσθε. See Note on Acts xx. 29.

21. κατὰ ἀτιμίαν λέγω—ἡσθεν.] The sense of these words is obscure, and variously traced. See Rec. Syn. It should seem to be this: "I say what I am saying, according to the reproachful language used of me, and to my own disparagement." Ὡς ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἡσθ., "as if I were really the weak person they pronounce me to be." Ὡς ὅτι, "as if," as supra v. 19, and 2 Thess. ii. 2. Ἐν ᾧ δ' ἂν τις τολμᾷ, supply καυχᾶσθαι, to be taken from the preceding καυχῆσομαι. Or render, "wherein any one may be proud of aught," Simil. Phil. iii. 4. This is softened by the qualifying insertion ἐν ἀφρ. λέγω, which is equivalent to παραφρονῶν λαλῶ at v. 23.

22. Ἑβραῖοι—Ἰσραηλιταί.] Carpz. and Rosenn. remark on the distinction here preserved between Hebrews and Israelites; the former being properly a religious, the latter a national designation. His enemies, perhaps, had represented Paul as a mere Jewish proselyte. So he says in Phil. iii. 5. that he is Ἑβρ. ἐξ Ἑβραίων, i. e. a Hebrew by both parents, and consequently a genuine one. On Ἰσρ. compare Rom. ix. 4.

23. παραφρονῶν λαλῶ.] Here παραφ. signifies more than ἀφρ., and should be rendered "I speak as a very fool," i. e. an absolute boaster. Thus, Emmerl. remarks, the Greeks used the term of excessive boasting. So Aristoph. Plut. v. 2. uses παραφρονεῖν. Ὑπὲρ, like some other prepositions (see Kypke) is used as an adverb for πλείον. Θανάτοις, "extreme perils." See supra i. 9, 10. These are exemplified in the next two verses.

24. τεσσ. παρὰ μίαν.] Those were all that they could inflict. See Deut. xxv. 3. And as the whip was formed of three cords, and every stroke was allowed to count for three stripes, the number of strokes never exceeded thirteen, which made 39 stripes.

25. τρίς ἑρραβδ.] viz. by the Gentiles; for it was a Roman punishment. One instance only is recorded, that at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22. Ἀπαξ ἐλιθ. viz. at Lystra, Acts xiv. 19.

— τρίς ἐνανάγ.] None of these shipwrecks are recorded in the Acts; for that at Acts xxvii. took place later, and must have been the fourth. Νυχθήμερον, i. e. about 24 hours. This word is very rare; but some examples are adduced.

— τῷ βυθῷ] "the sea," as we say the deep. A signification occurring in Is. xlv. 27, and Ælian 26 πεποίηκα·) ὁδοιπορίαις πολλάκις· κινδύνοις ποταμῶν, κινδύνοις ληστῶν· κινδύνοις ἐκ γένους, κινδύνοις ἐξ ἐθνῶν· κινδύνοις ἐν πόλει, κινδύνοις ἐν ἐρημίᾳ, κινδύνοις ἐν θαλάσῃ, κινδύνοις ἐν ψευδαδέλφοις· ἐν κόπῳ καὶ μόχθῳ, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις πολλάκις, ἐν λιμῷ καὶ δίψει, ἐν νηστείαις πολλάκις, ἐν ψύχει καὶ γυμνότητι. ^s χωρὶς τῶν παρεκτὸς, ἡ ἐπισύστα- s Acts 20. 18, &c.

H. An. viii. 8, 7. ἀθέατον νήχεσθαι ἐν βυθῷ. I would compare a similar passage in Lycoph. 753. Πόντου δ' αὔπνος ἐναρούμενος μυχοῖς. The other senses assigned by some Commentators to βυθῷ, namely, a well, or a prison, are (as Bp. Middl. observes) inconsistent with the Article. There is evidently a reference to some shipwreck not recorded in the Acts of the Apostles; for only one out of the three here mentioned is there recorded.

— πεποίηκα] “I have passed,” as in Acts xx. 3. And so the Heb. הָיָה and Latin fuco. On the mode in which this took place the Commentators variously speculate. One thing is certain, that it cannot be (as some suppose) that Paul merely passed the time on a rock; for that is inconsistent with the ἐν βυθῷ which requires some such sense as ἔχοντες (i. e. ὄντες) κυμάτων ἐν ἀγκάλας in Aristoph. Ran. 704. Now there would be no difficulty in supposing him to have been miraculously supported; but as the Almighty usually works by second causes, it is better to suppose, with the best Commentators, that he was supported on some fragment of the wreck; which is very consistent with his being ἐν βυθῷ. This is confirmed by Theodor., who takes it to mean, τοῦ σκάφους διαλυθέντος πᾶσαν τὴν τε νύκτα καὶ τὴν ἡμέραν διετέλεσα τῆδε κάκεισε ὑπὸ τῶν κυμάτων φερόμενος.

26. ὁδοιπ. πολλάκις—ληστῶν.] The Apostle, I conceive, added the second and third terms, to exemplify what is expressed in the first. For to the great hardships which he would have to undergo in his long journeyings, were to be added the dangers to which he was thereby exposed, both in crossing, and sometimes making his passage along, broad and deep rivers, in petty boats; and also the perils from robbers; with whom, at that time, even the most thickly inhabited and civilized parts of the world swarmed. The Genit. here is dependent upon ἀπὸ understood. Ἐκ γένους scil. ἐμοῦ (see Gal. i. 14.) Their blind bigotry every where persecuted him with unrelenting malice. Ἐν πόλει is to be taken generically for ἐν πόλεσι. It is meant that dangers met him wherever he turned himself—whether in the busy haunts of men—or in the solitudes of the desert—or in the bosom of the mighty deep. Those in the cities would be from the bigots, both Jewish and Gentile. By those in the deserts, may be understood those from the excessive heat or drought (which sometimes has destroyed great multitudes at once), wild beasts, or the ambushes of the bigots, or from the attacks of robbers. And as κινδ. ἐν θαλάσῃ comes immediately after the words denoting the attacks of assassins or robbers, we may suppose it to advert to the dangers there of assassins (so Acts xx. 3. γενομένης αὐτῷ ἐπιβουλῆς ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, μέλλοντι ἀνάγεσθαι εἰς τὴν Συρίαν) or of pirates. By ψευδαδ. are chiefly meant pretended Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles; generally, perhaps, the former, who feigned to be converted, in order to act as spies: but partly Judaizing Christians may be meant. See Gal. ii. 4.

27. ἐν κόπῳ, &c.] To perils of life, and plots against his personal safety, the Apostle now adds those less formidable, but scarcely more tolerable, because continual, inflictions to be endured in the course of his almost perpetual and most wearisome journeyings, and even his more settled sojournings. Comp. supra vi. 4, 5.

28. χωρὶς τῶν παρ.] Some Commentators ancient and modern (as Chrys., Theophyl., Casaub., Wolf, Rosenm., Emm., and Wahl) take this to mean “besides other things, which I have omitted;” which interpretation is supported by the Syr. Version. Others (as Calvin, Beza, Erasm., Pisc., Schleus., and Schmid) explain, “things not of the regular routine of my office and labours.” Others, again, (as E. V., Wakef., Abp. Newc.), understand it of “the external troubles already mentioned;” q. d. ‘besides such external inconveniences as I have recounted.’ This Wets. supports from a passage of an anonymous Philosopher: but not successfully, since the expression there is not παρεκτὸς, but ἐκτὸς. As to the first-mentioned interpretation,—it is open to the objection, that there is scarcely any thing that might not be supposed to be included in the foregoing particulars. And, indeed, the sense arising is frigid, and little agreeable to the context. Not to say that this signification of παρεκτὸς is destitute of proof. Moreover, it would require the words to be taken, with the preceding, thus: καὶ γυμνότητι, χωρὶς τῶν παρεκτὸς: which would make it very difficult to assign to the words following any tolerable sense. The second interpretation is, on all accounts, entitled to the preference; it being founded on the usual sense of παρεκτὸς, and enabling us to assign a satisfactory meaning to the words following, ἡ ἐπιστάσις, &c. The complete sense of the verse is excellently expressed by Calvin, as follows: “Præter ea quæ superveniunt hinc inde, et quasi sunt extraordinaria, quanti æstimanda est moles ordinaria, quæ assidue me urget; nempe quod omnium ecclesiarum sollicitudinem gero.”

There is at ἡ ἐπισ. an ellip. of ἐστι; and the ἡ μέριμνα πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλ. is in apposition with, and explanatory of the preceding: q. d. “There is that crowd of labours and anxieties which perpetually beset me—the care of all the Churches. These various cares, one after another, in concourse, must have pressed heavily on the Apostle, so that to him may be applied the words of the Greek tragedian (Eumen. 129.)

μερίμναν οὐποτ' ἐκλιπὼν πόνον. By πασῶν ἐκκλ. are meant all the churches he had planted; and, indeed, all the churches among the Gentiles, of which, as Apostle of the Gentiles, he might be said to have the care. See Col. ii. 1.

29. τίς ἀσθενεῖ, &c.] This is, I conceive, meant to illustrate the μέριμνα preceding, and show the interest he took in all the Churches. Ἀσθ. may, with most Commentators, be understood of weakness in the faith; and πυρ., of anxiety to recover a sinning brother. Thus the sense will be: "Who among my converts is weak in faith, and I am not also weak?" i. e. as compliant to his weakness, as if I were weak (see Rom. xii. 15, and 1 Cor. ix. 22.); "who is perverted in his Christian principles, or erring in Christian practice, and I burn not with grief and zeal to recover him?" Some, however, as Noeselt and Emmerl., assign the following as the sense: "quem afflictum dicas, si me non dicas? quem calamitates oppetere, si me non iis premi, quin uri, memores?" But σκανδάλ. will not admit of such a sense; which, it is plain, is meant to designate the effect of the preceding ἀσθενεῖ, to which it corresponds. Thus the two terms are united in Rom. xiv. 21. μηδὲ ἐν ᾧ ὁ ἀδελφός σου προσκόπτει ἢ σκανδαλίζεται ἢ ἀσθενεῖ.

30. εἰ καυχ. δεῖ, &c.] "If, then, I must needs boast, (see v. 18.) [as I am compelled so to do] I will boast of" τὰ τῆς ἀσθ. (for τὰς ἀσθενείας), "my sufferings and tribulations." So Rom. viii. 26. 2 Cor. xii. 5, et al.

31. ὁ Θεὸς—ὅτι οὐ ψεύδ. This must not, I conceive, be referred (with the ancients and some moderns) to what follows; but (as the best modern Commentators have seen) to what precedes; namely, the affecting detail of his various sufferings for the Gospel's sake, the truth of which he avers by the present solemn asseveration.

32, 33. This circumstance (which, as Dodd. thinks, took place not when he was first converted, but when he had preached about three years in Arabia) is subjoined to the foregoing, quasi κατ' ἐπίμετρον. It is related in Acts ix. 20—25. With respect to the word σαργάνη, it may be observed that it is derived, not from σάπτω, but from the Chald. שרג, from שר, to twist. The Etym. explains σαργάναι by πλέγματα γυρογαθῶδη. See more in Rec. Syn., from which it appears that it is uncertain whether the word here signifies a large hamper of wicker work, or a large stiff fishing-net of braided cords. Considering the σπυρίδι of St. Luke, the former is most probably what is meant.

But to advert to a seeming discrepancy in the accounts of St. Luke and St. Paul, as to the escape in question; in the former it is said that the Apostle was let down διὰ τοῦ τείχους, "by the wall,"—i. e., as Dodd. explains, by the side of it. Which seems not to agree with the account of St. Paul. Yet there is no discrepancy in the original; for διὰ may mean through the wall; i. e. through an aperture of the wall, a loop-hole, embrasure, or window. See the Note on Acts xx. 9. Such is the sense of διὰ τείχους in St. Luke; but St. Paul makes the thing clearer by using both διὰ τοῦ τείχους, and διὰ θυρίδος.

XII. The Apostle now proceeds to treat of other matters whereof he might boast, but which he kept apart from the former, as things of another and very superior nature;—namely, the exalted Supernatural Gifts he enjoyed, and the Revelations from Heaven which had been vouchsafed to him; such as were proper to be mentioned on this occasion, as fully establishing his claim to a high superiority above his opponents and depreciators, the false Apostles. Yet, with the same prudence as elsewhere, St. Paul introduces this fresh cause for boasting with an expression meant to deprecate censure.

As to the var. lect. δὲ, for δὴ, and the omission of the γὰρ. (approved by Griesb.) I have, in Rec. Syn. shown that they are mere emendations of the ancient Critics of the Alexandrian School, and that the real and complete sense is as follows: "I know, indeed, that it is unbecoming in me to boast; i. e. κατὰ σάρκα, (see xi. 18.) [but I am compelled to do so, and I have causes enow to justify me] for, to proceed, as I shall now do, to visions and revelations from the Lord," &c. Equally remarkable omissions of clauses occur elsewhere in St. Paul's writings. The terms ὅπτ. and ἀποκαλύψεις are not, as some imagine, synonymous. The latter is a stronger term than the former. And Emmerl. observes, that the ὄραμα at Acts xvi. 9. unites the senses included in both these terms. Ὀπτασία, says Abp. Newc., "is an appearance presented to the mind of a person sleeping or waking; ἀποκάλυψ. is a suggestion of a truth, or fact, by the Spirit of God." Surely, however, the use of ὅπτ. in the N. T. requires the above definition to have added "supernaturally presented." As far as it was presented, to one awake, it might be called a trance; for though awake, the external senses of the person were bound up. See Slade, and Bp. Lowth, on Is. i. 1. Macknight, however, is of opinion, that by visions of the Lord must be understood his seeing the Lord Jesus on many occasions after his ascension, Acts ix. 27; xviii. 9; xxii. 18; xxiii. 11. And, above all, those visions of Christ, which he saw when he was caught up into the third heaven. The plural in ὅπτ. is by most recent Commentators supposed to be taken generically. See Win. Gr. § 21. 3. Note 1. But St. Paul had probably many visions.

2. ἄνθρωπον ἐν Χρ.] scil. ὄντα. The best Commentators are agreed that this expression signifies a disciple or servant of Christ; the Apostle thus speaking of himself in the third person through modesty; as John, in his Gospel, xviii. 15; xix. 35. That the Apostle here means himself, appears from vv. 6 & 7.

— πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκ.] On the year meant by the Apostle, the Commentators are not agreed. It will depend on the date assigned to this Epistle, which itself depends on that of the first Epistle. See the Introduction to it.

— εἶτε ἐν—οὐκ οἶδα.] The Commentators explain this to mean, that, during the rapture in question, he lost all consciousness of any thing around him (as in the case of Peter's trance, Acts x. 9.); and that his outward senses were so entirely closed, (the whole perception being by the powers of the mind,) that he could not say whether his soul was then in the body, or removed from it. It is, however, remarked by Dodd., that, "what the presence of an immaterial soul in a body can be, distinct from the capacity of perceiving by it and acting upon it, we have yet to learn." But whatever may be the difficulty, it must by no means be removed in the summary way adopted by some recent Commentators; i. e. by supposing the Apostle only to mean, that "the things were represented in so lively a manner, as to leave it doubtful whether they had not been really seen and heard; that he was quasi raptus extra se," &c. By retaining the natural sense, though confessing the difficulty, we, at least, are enabled (with Whitby) to "regard this as a proof of St. Paul's belief that the soul may have perception when out of the body, and consequently have an independent existence."

— ἀρπαγέντα—ἕως τρίτου οὐρ.] This is accommodated to the language of the Jews of that age; who held that there were three heavens; 1. the region of the atmosphere; 2. the sidereal, or place of the stars; 3. the heaven properly so called, the abode of God and the angels. The Philological Commentators have failed to remark, that this passage of the Apostle was had in view by the author of the Philopatris, in Lucian iii. 5:7. fin., where it is said of Paul: Γαλιλαῖος ἀναφαλαντίας ἐπὶ ῥίρρυνος, ἐς τρίτον οὐρανὸν ἀεροβατήσας καὶ τὰ κάλλιστα ἐκμεμαθήκως. The writer seems to have had in mind Aristoph. Nub. 225, where Socrates says: ἀεροβατῶ καὶ περιφρονῶ τὸν ἥλιον.

4. ἠρπάγη εἰς τὸν παρ.] It is debated whether this rapture, or vision, be the same as the last, or another. Most of the best modern Commentators are of the former opinion: while the ancients and several moderns (as Grot., Bp. Bull, Whitby, Dodd., and Rosenm.) are of the latter; understanding by the παράδ. the place of departed souls. See Note on Luke xxiii. 43. Either may, in a certain sense, be true.

— ἄρρητα ῥήματα.] Ἀρρήτα may signify either what cannot be uttered, or what ought not to be uttered. If the latter sense be the true one, the words following ἃ οὐκ ἐξόν, &c. are explanatory of the preceding; and yet ἄρρητα, in that sense, required no explanation, since it was the common signification of the word; as, for instance, when applied to the πνεύμα, or the Tetragrammaton, called the ἄρρητον ὄνομα. The former signification, therefore, deserves the preference, viz. ineffably, inexpressibly sublime, such as no human intellect could comprehend, "verba (to use the words of Horace) sacro digna silentio."

The words following ἃ οὐκ ἐξόν ἀνθρώπῳ λαλῆσαι signify, "and which, [if they were capable of being expressed.] it would not be lawful for me to communicate;" and that (Schoettg. observes) "because the Apostle had not the authority to declare the mysteries revealed unto him, these having been not so much for the sake of the Church, as for himself, for the strengthening of his own faith, and the alleviation of his affliction."

5. καυχ.] The sense is, 'I may and will boast.' Ἀσθεν., afflictions, as in xi. 30.

6. The sense is here only to be completely seen by tracing the connexion with the preceding words. Taking ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ—μου from what precedes, we may express the full sense as follows: "As to myself, I will boast of nothing but my weaknesses and afflictions, [though I could boast of far more. Of these I will not speak in my own name, though I might do so;] for if I should choose to boast of them, I should not be foolish, (i. e. it would not be foolish boasting) since I should tell the truth: but I forbear to do it, lest any one should think of me beyond what he seeth me to be, or heareth of me;” namely (as Abp. Newc. expresses it), “desiring no other opinion of me than what is suggested by my miracles which you have seen, and my inspired doctrines which you have heard.” To have claimed merit for what had not, and could not fall under the observation of men, would have been too much like the false Apostles.

7. It is well remarked by Calvin, that “here we see a man who had conquered infinite dangers, torments, and other evils; had triumphed over all the enemies of Christ, had shaken off the fear of death, and renounced the world; yet had not wholly subdued his propensity to pride. Nay, he was still engaged in so dreadful a conflict with it, that he could not conquer without being himself beaten and buffeted.”

—ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τῇ σ.] This is mentioned, in some measure, to lessen the invidia, which the above disclosure of his high privileges might excite. Ἐδόθη signifies (by a popular idiom) “was inflicted.” As to the σκόλ. τῇ σ., it is one of the most disputed expressions in the N. T. The best Commentators, however, are, with reason, agreed that the word must be taken in the natural sense,—as denoting some very painful disorder, or mortifying infirmity; grievous afflictions being, in all languages, expressed by metaphors taken from the piercing of the flesh by thorns or splinters. Various acute disorders have been supposed to be meant; as the head-ache, the ear-ache, the stone-and-gravel. But it should rather seem that some chronical distemper or infirmity is meant, and probably such was exceedingly mortifying (by exposing him to the ridicule of the multitude) as well as painful; otherwise the Apostle would scarcely have felt such anxiety to have it removed. No radical or natural infirmity can be meant, since such could not be imputed to the instrumentality of Satan: not to say that to have prayed for the removal of such, might have savoured of presumption. The most probable conjecture (for we can rise no higher) is that of Bps. Bull and Sherlock, Whitby, Lord Barrington, Benson, Dodd., Mackn., and Rosenm., that it was a paralytic and hypochondriac affection, which occasioned a distortion of countenance, and many other distressing effects, which would much tend to impede his usefulness. This disorder might be called ἄγγελος τοῦ Σατ., as being partly inflicted by Satan. And, indeed, there seems an allusion to the Heb. שָׂדֶה, which is properly a past Participle of the obsolete verb

(at least not occurring in the O. T.) שָׂדֶה, to send; like legatus in Latin.

8. τὸν Κύρ.] i. e. Christ, as appears from the next verse. See Whitby and Macknight, who rightly adduce this as an example of prayer to Christ, and consequently a proof of Christ's Divinity. Tris is considered by the Commentators as a certain for an uncertain, but large, number (i. e. often-times.) To the passages cited by them, I add Eurip. Hippol. 46. Μηδὲις μάταιον εἰς τρίς εὐξασθαι Θεῷ, and Job xxxiii. 29., which I would render, “So all these things doth God work with man unto three times,” namely, by divinely sent disorders, by nocturnal visions, and by divine messengers. See supra from v. 15. In the Version of Symmachus, for dis τρίς read eis τρίς. Our common translation oftentimes is rather an interpretation, and that an erroneous one. See Rosenm. in loc.

9. εἴρηκέ μοι.] Namely, either by vision, or by the Bath kol mentioned in 1 Kings xix. 12. Ἀρκεῖ σοι signifies “is sufficient for thy help,” implying a promise of support, as supra ix. 8. “God is able to make all grace abound to you.” Thus ἡ χάρις μου signifies the gracious support of God, both internally and externally. Τελειοῦται, “plenius sese exserit.” Ἐν ἀσθ., i. e. in the weakness of the instruments I employ.

—ἡδιστα οὖν—ἀσθ. μου.] There is some appearance of incongruity between ἡδιστα and καυχ.; ἡδιστα rather requiring ὑποίσωμεν, as in 2 Macc. ii. 28. (which St. Paul seems to have had in mind) ἡδεως τὴν κακοπάθειαν ὑποίσωμεν. This, however, may be removed by supposing in καυχ. a significatio prægnans, thus: “Most willingly therefore will I bear with, nay, rather rejoice in, and boast over my infirmities, [than be discouraged under them].” ἵνα ἐπισκηνώσῃ—Χρ., “that the power of Christ may rest upon me [to strengthen and support me].”

10. εὐδοκῶ.] I am well pleased, complacoe mihi. By ἀσθενείαις, ὕβρεσιν, ἀνάγκαις, διωγμοῖς, and στενοχωρίαις, are meant distresses of various kinds; the sense being first expressed by a general term (ἀσθένεια), then followed up by particular ones, by way of example. Ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ belongs to all of these. In ὅταν ἀσθενῶ, τότε δυνατός εἰμι we have a beautiful turn (like that of Philo, cited by Wets., μὴ ἀναπίπτει, τὸ ἀσθενὲς ὡς οὐκ ἐν δυνάμει ἐστι.) q. d. ‘The more I am brought down by tribulation, the more do I experience the supports of Divine strength.’ See Phil. iv. 13.

began this detail of his merits and spiritual endowments with the deprecatory softening ἀνεχέσθαι μου τῆς ἀφρο. &c. and ὡς ἀφρονα δέξασθε, so he ends it with an apology introductory of the reason for it; q. d. "Ye see, then, that I have made myself a fool in boasting. But ye have compelled me so to do, viz. by rendering it necessary to do justice to myself, and also for your good, by disabusing you of your prejudices." It is truly, though quaintly, observed by Fuller, in his Holy State, that "self-praising comes most naturally from a man where it comes most violently from him in his own defence. For though modesty binds a man's tongue to the peace in this point, yet, being assaulted in his credit, he may stand upon his guard; and then he doth not so much praise as purge himself." And Bishop Sanderson, in his Sermon on Job xxix. 14—17., remarks, that "when men do us manifest wrong, it is not vanity, but charity, to do ourselves right; and whatever appearance of folly, or vain boasting, there may be in so doing, those are chargeable with all, who compel us thereunto, and not we."

Κανχώμενος after ἀφρων is omitted in many ancient MSS., Versions and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. It may, indeed, be suspected of being an interpolation.

The next words show how he was compelled; namely, by the want of that commendation from them which was his due, since he was nothing inferior to the chiefest Apostles. His merits and endowments ought to have been summed up by them, and then it would not have been necessary to praise himself.

The words εἰ καὶ οὐδὲν εἰμι may, with most Commentators, be taken as said seriously (as in John viii. 54.), and as expressive of genuine humility; his own weaknesses being considered apart from the strength of his Lord. Many eminent Commentators, however, with good reason, regard them as said sarcastically, and ex opinione Pseudopostolorum; q. d. though I am, it seems, a nobody. This may be confirmed from Soph. Trach. 1109. κἂν τὸ μηδὲν ὦ. & Aj. 767. κἂν ὁ μηδὲν ὦν.

12. τὰ μὲν σημεῖα.] The μὲν is for μέντοι, saltem. Τοῦ ἀπ. is rightly rendered by Wahl, "of the Apostle;" for the Article is not without its force, but has the hypothetical use. See Middl. Gr. A. Ch. III. § 2. So we say, "he gave proofs of the general, or the hero." Κατεργ., "have been effected," scil. ὑπ' ἐμοῦ. Here by σημεῖα are denoted documenta, proofs, as in Matt. xvi. 3. Rom. iv. 11. 1 Cor. xiv. 22. and Thucyd. i. 10. Ἐν πάσῃ ὑπομονῇ is taken as supra vi. 4. ἐν παντὶ συνιστάντες ἑαυτοὺς ὡς Θεοῦ διάκονοι· ἐν ὑπομονῇ πολλῇ. Or ἐν ὑπομ. may be taken for ὑπομενόντως, perseveringly, as in Luke viii. 15. Rom. viii. 25. Heb. xii. 1. Here συμ., τέρ., and δυν. are associated, like δυν., τέρ., and συμ. at Acts ii. 2., where see Note, and Tittm. de Syn. Compare Rom. xv. 19.

13. Having shown that no signs of an Apostle were wanting in him, he inquires whether there be any other deficiency, which should leave them inferior to other churches. q. d. "[What have you to complain of?] for in what," &c. At δ suppl. κατὰ. Ἦττ. here signifies to be in an inferior condition; of which sense some examples are cited from the Classical writers. Ὑπὲρ is for μάλλον ἢ. Τὴ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ is, I think, emphatic, q. d. "I myself have not, whatever others may have." Χαρίσασθε—ταύτην contains one of the most cutting things ever said.

14. This and the next verse are, as Emmerl. observes, parenthetical, v. 16. being closely connected with v. 13. The scope of the passage is to exclude any misrepresentation of the false teachers,—that he was only urging his past moderation, to pave the way for future demands upon them. Thus the sense is: "I have not been burdensome to you [heretofore]; and when I come to you again [as I am now for the third time purposing in mind to do] I will not be burdensome to you." So xi. 12. δ δὲ ποιῶ καὶ ποιήσω. The best Commentators are agreed that the τρίτον is to be referred to ἐτοίμως ἔχω; since it appears from i. 15. that his last visit could only be the second.

—οὐ γὰρ ζητῶ—ὕμᾶς] q. d. I seek not your substance, but only desire the salvation of your souls. Οὐ γὰρ ὀφείλει—τέκνοις. An adagial sentence (perhaps formed on Ezek. xxxiv. 2.) expressed populariter, and referring to what is natural, and in the regular order of things. Grot. here cites the law dictum "Ratio naturalis, quasi lex quædam tacita, liberis parentum hereditatem adducit."

15. δαπανήσω καὶ ἐκδαπ.] q. d. "I am ready to spend my time, substance, health, strength—nay, my very life for your sake." Ἐκδαπ. signifies to be utterly exhausted by labours, &c. Thus the expression is similar to that at Acts xx. 24.

ἀλλ' οὐδενὸς λόγον ποιῶμαι, οὐδὲ ἔχω τὴν ψυχὴν μου τιμίαν ἐμμανῶ. The next words, εἰ καὶ—ἀγαπῶμαι are well rendered by Emmerl.: "Si vel amorem vestri, qui in me summus est, vester erga me amor parum aequet." It is a fine remark of Theodoret and Theophyl., that what is here said is at once accusatory, and yet conciliatory. He heals the pain he might inflict by charging them with want of affection to him, by intimating his great affection for them.

16. ἔστω δέ—ἔλαβον.] The Apostle here speaks in the person of his calumniators, making their words his own. Δόλω ὑμᾶς ἔλαβον is supposed by almost all Commentators to mean,
"I took you in, made a gain of you, by artifice and stratagem." The sense, however, seems simply to be: "I practised, it seems, upon you a piece of refined artifice, and sought to accomplish my selfish purpose by the instrumentality of another person."

17. Here τινα—δι' αὐτοῦ is put (as Emmerl. observes) by a popular mode of expression, for διὰ τινὰ ἐκείνων, οὗς, &c.

18. παρεκάλ. Τίτον, &c.] This has reference to what was said supra viii. 6. 18. The Apostle appeals to facts, which they themselves could not deny. And the interrogation at μήτι ἐπλεον.
implies a strong negation. The sentence, arranged according to the regularity of Western composition, would run thus: "Did Titus, whom I requested to go to you, or the brother whom I sent with him, make a gain of you?" This the Apostle follows up with a sentence in which the consequence is put for the antecedent. He does not say, "No, they walked in my steps," but delicately substitutes, "Have we not walked in the same spirit,—pursued the same disinterested course?" Τὸν ἀδ. should be rendered "the brother," i. e. the one whom ye well know. See Note supra viii. 18—21.

19. πάλιν δοκεῖτε—ἀπολ.] This is said in order to prevent the anxiety which he shows to justify himself in all respects, from being ascribed to improper motives,—whether timidity or selfishness. The πάλιν refers to iii. 1. & v. 12. Now the Apostle does not reply to this by a strong negation, οὐχί; but leaves that to be implied,— by stating, with a solemn protestation (in attesta-tion of the truth of what he says), that his views, in acting and writing as he has done, have been solely their edification and spiritual benefit.

20. This verse is meant further to apologize for his refutation of the calumny circulated against himself, and for the language of reprobation above addressed to them. Οἴους θέλω, i. e. re- formed. In οἶον οὐ θέλ. there is, as at x. 2, punishment hinted at, which is more fully expressed at xiii. 2. οὐ φείσομαι. Δι' ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, &c. repeat φοβ. μήπως and ὥσι, "lest there be found." The change of construction may be attributed to delicacy; since, if the Apostle had finished the sentence as he had begun it, he must have used instead of nouns denoting vices, nouns denoting the persons guilty of those vices; q. d.
lest, namely, I should find you zealots, quarrelsome, back-biters, &c.; as Rom. i. 30. The terms ἔρεις, ζῆλ. θυμ. denote the more violent forms, and καταλαλαί and ψιθ., the milder modifications, of anger and ill-will. Φυσιώσεις denotes a party spirit: and ἀκαταστασ. refers to that confusion which must thence arise. Comp. Jam.
iii. 16.

21. Here the Apostle hints at something worse, immorality. The πάλιν may be taken either with ἐλθόντα, or with ταπεινώσῃ. But the former seems preferable. Μὴ με ταπειν. ὁ Θεός μου π. ὑ., lest my God should humble me in respect of you; i. e. lest I should be mortified, and grieved to find, in some of you, so little profit of my labours. Πενθ. πολλ., &c. The sense is, "[lest] I may have to bewail many who have not repented, and forsaken their sins."

XIII. In this Chapter the Apostle proceeds to intimate his purpose to inflict punishments super-naturally on those who persisted in resisting his authority. And after exhorting them to self-examination, and to anticipate his correction by timely reformation, he concludes with exhortations, salutations, and benedictions.

not a little debated. By many the meaning is supposed to be, "When I come, every matter or complaint respecting impenitent offenders shall be decided according to the rule laid down in the Law (Numb. xxxv. 30. Deut. xvii. 6. xix. 13.), and sanctioned by the Gospel (see Matt. xviii. 16.), that by the testimony of two or three witnesses," &c. Some ancient and several modern Commentators, however (as Grot., Hamm., and Locke), understand by these witnesses the Apostle's admonitions in his two Epistles. The sense, however, seems to be that assigned (and I think rightly) by Mr. Scott: "When at length he should come, he would proceed against them according to that Law, or to the rule laid down by Christ for his disciples." (Matt. xviii. 15—18.) "In the former Epistle (continues Mr. S.) he had before told them of his purpose; in the preceding part of this Epistle he had again warned them, as if present with them; and here, again, at the conclusion, being yet 'absent,' and giving them a little longer space to repent, he now wrote, to assure those who had before sinned and continued untractable, and all others who might countenance them, that when he came again, he would 'not spare' the offenders, nor appear so timid and weak as they before had concluded him to be (x. 1—11. xii. 17—21. 1 Cor. iv. 18—21. v. 1—5.); especially as some of them boldly demanded 'proof' of Christ's speaking 'in him' as his Apostle; though this had already been confirmed by no feeble evidence, but by his 'mighty power working in and among them, in various ways.'"

2. προεῖρηκα καὶ προλέγω.] The sense is, "I have just told and warned you, and I now say it before-hand." This is, Emmert, says, put for πολλὰκις ἔλεγον, νῦν λέγω at Phil. iii. 19, and προλέγω ὑμῖν καθὼς καὶ προεῖπον Gal. v. 21. With respect to ὡς παρὼν νῦν, the best Commentators are agreed that the sense is, "as if I were present the second time, though now, as yet, absent." Εἰς τὸ δεύτ. is for εἰς τὸ πάλιν, like εἰς τὸ ἔπειτα. The construction is cleared by the parenthesis. Γράφω is wanting in several MSS. of the Western recension, and is cancelled by Griesb., Tittm., and Vat.: rightly; as we can better account for the insertion, than the omission of the word.

ficial and far-fetched; nor is the Apostle accustomed so accurately to complete a sentence, interrupted by so long a parenthesis. The common mode of pointing and taking the words seems to be more natural, and yields full as good a sense. The sense of v. 3. may be thus expressed: "Especially since some of you boldly demand a proof of Christ's speaking in me, as his Apostle; though this hath been already confirmed by evidence of the strongest kind, namely, by His mighty power working in and through me, in various ways." By δοκ. is meant, as Newc. observes, "a proof to be evidenced by the exercise of my authority." Δυνατεῖ, viz. in the working of miracles, either to cure, or to inflict disorders, and by the communication of the spiritual gifts. This δύναμις, exerted through the instrumentality of Paul, attested his Divine legation as Apostle. Nay, his very success in converting them to the Gospel, so that they had received the Spiritual Gifts, was also another testimony that God worked with Paul. See Whitby.

The sense of v. 4. is well expressed by Whitby in the following paraphrase: "For though he was crucified through [the] weakness [of that human nature which he took upon him, and in that appeared to others as weak], yet he liveth [and discovereth efficaciously that he doth so] by the power of God [so gloriously attending the invocation of his name, and faith in him]: we also [Gr. and so we also] are [as yet in your apprehension] weak in him, but we shall [appear to] live by the power of God [exerting itself by us] towards you." The scope of the argument is well pointed out by Mr. Scott as follows: "For though Jesus was crucified, as if he had been only a weak helpless man; and was despised as unable to 'save himself,' yet he was raised from the dead, and lived in glory, 'by the power of God,' to 'put all enemies under his feet.' In like manner, the Apostle and his brethren appeared weak and despicable, as being made like the Saviour; and the power, which they spake of, seemed to be dead, because they did not exercise it: yet they were assured that it would revive, and that they should be evidently quickened, and endued with the power of God, exerted in their behalf towards the disobedient Corinthians, by inflicting miraculous judgments upon them."

5. ἑαυτοὺς πειρ., &c.] Instead of presumptuously demanding proofs, where none ought to be required, he bids them try and examine themselves; and if they be but in the faith, they will find sufficient proofs of his Divine legation, in the Spiritual Gifts and general reformation produced through his preaching, as well as to prove

Christ to be in them, by His power. But that would prove his own Divine mission.

— ἢ οὐκ ἐπιγ., &c.] The sense seems to be: “Do ye not know concerning yourselves, and find that Jesus Christ is in you?—unless, indeed, ye be not genuine Christians, but deserving rejection, and therefore destitute of proof that Christ is in you.” It should seem that the Apostle here uses ἀδόκ. in a double sense per paronomasiam. In the latter of the two, the word is used in the next verse. It is here remarked by Mr. Valpy, “that the proof of Christ’s presence in any Church, was the existence of miraculous powers and spiritual gifts in that Church.” Which is true as far as it goes; but the Apostle had, I apprehend, a reference to something besides that, namely, the dwelling of Christ in their hearts by faith, producing its genuine fruits in good works. See Mr. Scott.

6. γνῶσεσθε—ἀδόκιμοι.] The sense (somewhat dubious) seems to be this: “But I trust that we find and know that we, at least, are not ἀδόκιμοι, i. e. destitute of the proof of Divine power in us.”

7. The sense of the verse seems to be this: “However, I pray that ye may do nothing evil, and deserving of punishment; [for it is my wish and purpose] not that our divine commission be by that means approved; but [rather] that ye may do what is right and good, and that we may thereby be, as it were, without that proof, by not having to exercise the power,” viz. of punishing offenders.

8. οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθα—ἀληθείας.] The sense here is disputed. But there is good reason to deviate from the common interpretation, by which the sense is: “[Ye need fear no injustice or partiality]; for our decisions must be agreeable to the truth which is in Jesus, being preserved from error by the same Being who intrusted us with this mighty power.” Ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀλ. is, as Emmerl. observes, for ἀλλ' ὀφείλομεν πάντα ποιεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀλ. See 1 Tim. iv. 3. Ἡ ἀλήθ. must here mean true religion; a signification frequent in the N. T.

9. χαίρομεν γὰρ—δυν. ᾗτε.] This has reference to the preceding ἵνα ὑμεῖς, &c. The sense seems to be: “Nay, so far are we from wishing to give proof of our power, by having to punish your irregularities, that we rather rejoice when we are [thus] weak (i. e. seem weak, by not having our power shown by the proof) and ye are strong [in faith and good works].”

— τοῦτο δὲ—κατάρτ.] “This [it is that] we not only wish, but even pray for; [namely] your reformation and perfection, that we may have no cause to exercise severity towards you.” Κατάρτισις signifies properly the setting of a broken bone, or curing a distorted limb. Here it denotes “your restoration to a sound and perfect state.”

10. διὰ τοῦτο, &c.] This is, as Theoph. observes, meant to apologize for the oburgatory and minatory language he had employed;—namely, as wishing that it would have to be extended no farther than words, and not shown in deeds. The next words are a repetition of what was said at x. 8.

11. καταρτίζεσθε.] See Note on v. 9. The meaning seems to be: “strive after reformation and perfection.” Thus our Lord says, Matt. v. 48. ἐσεσθε οὖν τέλειοι by which can only be meant, “aim at, strive after being perfect.” That God hath His part in this work, as well as man, is clear from Heb. xiii. 21. καταρτίσαι (scil. ὁ Θεός) ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ.

— παρακαλ.] “take comfort;” or, as some explain, “comfort each other.” Τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖτε, “aim at concord in your religious sentiments, avoiding dissensions and factions.” The Apostle then fortifies his exhortation, by proposing a strong motive to the practice of this unanimity and concord;—namely, that the God of all love, the Giver of peace and all other blessings, will be with them, namely, for their protection against all who seek to interrupt that peace and concord.

& 4. 10. & 10. 40. & 13. 30, 34. & 17. 31. Rom. 4. 24. & 8. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 14. & 15. 15. 2 Cor. 4. 14. Eph. 1. 20. Col. 2. 12. 1 Thess. 1. 10. Heb. 13. 20.

This was among the earliest of the Epistles of St. Paul; being written about A. D. 52 or 53: some say 48 or 49. The Galatians had been converted to Christianity six or seven years before, chiefly or entirely by St. Paul. But after his departure, Judaizing teachers had crept in, who maintained the necessity of circumcision, and the observance of the precepts of the Mosaic Law; and, in order the more effectually to work their purposes, had depreciated the authority of St. Paul; representing that he was no Apostle, having only a deputed commission from the Apostles and elders at Jerusalem; who had always, they said, required or encouraged an adherence to the Mosaic Law. To counteract these errors, St. Paul, in the present Epistle, first proves his Apostleship,—by showing that he had received it directly from God, appealing to the history of his conversion, and his subsequent conduct. He then proceeds to refute the notion of the necessity of an observance of the Jewish Law to salvation; showing not only that those who embrace the Gospel are freed from its observance, but also, that whoever depends on it for acceptance with God, will lose all the benefits to be expected from the Gospel. Further, he vindicates the doctrine he taught, on the important subject of justification by faith without the works of the Law, and shows the folly of the Galatians in going about to subject themselves to the Law, whereby they would forfeit the benefits of the Covenant of Grace. Lastly, after giving them various instructions and exhortations to walk worthy of their high calling, and especially to make a right use of their Christian freedom, he concludes with a brief summary of the topics above discussed, terminating in an Apostolical benediction.

Hence it is plain that the present Epistle relates to the same subject as that to the Romans, justification by faith only; though a difference is perceptible in the manner of treating the subject, arising, Paley thinks, “from the difference in St. Paul’s situation. In this Epistle to the Galatians, whose Church he had founded, he rests much upon authority: in that to the Romans, where he was not personally known, nor his authority established, he rests entirely on argument.” Besides this, however, there are other, and more material points of difference, which are well stated by Dr. Mackn. in his preface to this Epistle. The Epistle to the Galatians (he shows) “was intended to prove, against the Jews or Judaizers, that men are justified by faith, without the works of the Law of Moses. Whereas the Epistle to the Romans treats of justification on a more enlarged plan; being meant to prove, both against Jews and Gentiles, that neither the one nor the other can be justified meritoriously by performing works of Law, or any law of works; but that all must be justified gratuitously by faith, through the obedience of Christ. Accordingly the two Epistles supply a complete proof that justification is not to be obtained meritoriously, either by rites and ceremonies (though of Divine appointment) or by works of morality; but that it is entirely a free gift, proceeding alone from the mercy of God in Christ.”

To proceed from the subject and scope to the manner, here, too, there is a considerable difference between the two Epistles. For while in the Epistle to the Romans, the matter far excels the manner, and, from extreme brevity, a considerable obscurity prevails throughout; in the present, though there is much of conciseness, and, from a similar boldness of expression and peculiarity of treating a subject, much of difficulty often exists; yet here far more of plan and regularity, and a sort of consummateness is found. In short, to use the words of Winer in his Prolegomena: “Nihil facile addiderit quispiam, quod argumentorum incredibilem vim augeat; nihil demserit, quod absonum aut debile; nihil trajecerit, quod alieno loco positum videatur. Bene omnia composita absoluteque sunt, æquabiliter fluunt, et his, qui legant, assensum pene extorquent.”

C. I. 1—5. In these vv. is contained the inscription and the salutation. In treating of the former, there is, I think, much clearness imparted to a somewhat involved sentence, by placing the words οὐκ ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων—ἐκ νεκρῶν (as I have done, after the example of Prof. Schott, in his learned edition of this Epistle) between marks of parenthesis. The scope of this parenthetical portion is to show the grounds of Paul’s claim to Apos-tleship, which, it seems, had been called in question. Instead, therefore of merely saying (as in the Epistles to the Corinthians and those to the Colossians and Ephesians), διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, he enters more at large into the thing, showing what he is not, as well as what he is. In this parenthesis, ἀπόστολος (or rather ἀποστελλόμενος), must be supplied from the preceding. See Note on 2 Cor. xii. 7. ἄγγελος Σατᾶν. The ἀπ' ἀνθρ., and δι' ἀνθρ., are not, as Koppe and Borger suppose, synonymous. The ἀπὸ signifies "on the part of;" and the διὰ "by the agency or mediation of." Thus the sense is "not commissioned from men, meaning the Apostles and Elders at Jerusalem, but from GOD, not by the agency of man, but by Jesus Christ." It is plain that ἀνθρώπου (which signifies any mere man) points to the Divine origin of Christ. Hence the passage was justly regarded, by Origen and the other Fathers, as one among those which prove the divinity of our Lord.

— διὰ Ἰ. Χρ. καὶ Θεοῦ Π.] i. e. of Divine appointment. So Abp. Newc. explains: "by the ministrations of Christ who appeared to me; and ultimately by the act of God." Τοῦ ἐγείρ. αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν. The reason for adding this was, doubtless, as Calvin, Koppe, Borger, and Winer point out, to show the grounds which approved Jesus as Son of God, and supreme Ruler of the Church: especially as on this rested St. Paul's claims to a Divine legation.

2. ἀδελφοί.] I have in Recens. Synop. proved that this cannot mean, as some modern Commentators (even Borger and Schott) suppose, "brother Christians," but (as all the ancients, and almost all the moderns, Beza, Hamm., Whitby, Dodd., Koppe, Rosenm., Michael., Iaspis, and Winer explain) "brother ministers." Compare 1 Cor. i. 1. 1 Thess. i. 1. Phil. iv. 21. Πάντες, on which the other interpretation is chiefly grounded, is often applied to a small number, as three or four. Ταῖς ἐκκλ., i. e. all of them in the province.

3. χάρις ὑμῖν, &c.] See Note on Rom. i. 7. τοῦ δόντος ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμ.] The sense is, "who gave himself up to death for our sins," i. e. as a sacrifice for their expiation. Several MSS., some Fathers, and the Ed. Princ. have for ὑπὲρ, περὶ, which was preferred by Mill, and has been edited by Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Winer, and Schott. It is difficult to say which reading deserves the preference; since ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν and περὶ ἁμ. in this sense are both of them found in the N. T., and one is as frequent as the other. Not to say that ὑπὲρ and περὶ are often confounded in the MSS. of the Classical writers. Here, however, while internal evidence is perhaps equal for each; external evidence is in favour of ὑπὲρ. Of περὶ the sense is nearly the same; for, as the Commentators remark, περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, according to the language of Scripture, is used of a sin-offering, as implying an atonement for the sin committed.

This circumstance, Chrys. observes, is mentioned, to show the vast superiority of the Gospel over the Law, in respect to the expiation for sin. Compare 1 Macc. vi. 44. Tit. ii. 14.

— ὅπως ἐξέλθαι—πονηροῦ] "in order that he might [thereby] deliver us from this present evil age;" by which is meant, might deliver us from conformity to its corrupt manners, and the condemnation consequent thereon. Ἐξαιρεῖσθαι signifies to rescue any one from evil, and by implication, bring him to good. Τοῦ αἰῶνος, i. e. the present state of things in the world (marked by sin and misery) this world, as compared with the future and heavenly one; where sin and sorrow shall be done away; or, as it here seems to mean, the corrupt men of the world, the ἡ γενεὰ ἡ σκολία, Acts ii. 40. See also Rom. xii. 2. The deliverance, however, may be both from the fate attending the evil men of this world, and from the evil customs, examples, and practices of the world; just as, in the Lord's prayer, we pray to be delivered from evil, or from the Evil One.

— κατὰ τὸ θέλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ κ. Π. ἡ.] "agreeably to the will of God, even our Father." See 1 Cor. xv. 24. 2 Cor. i. 3. Col. iii. 17. A formula, Winer observes, frequent in St. Paul's writings. And he refers to 1 Cor. xv. 24. 2 Cor. i. 3. xi. 31. Eph. i. 3.

5. ἡ δόξα.] This is rendered by Wakef., "the glory of this deliverance and salvation." So Rom. xi. 36. xvi. 27. Eph. iii. 21. Phil. iv. 20. 2 Tim. iv. 18. 1 Pet. iv. 11. The common version, however, is defended by Acts vii. 2. ὁ Θεὸς τῆς δόξης, from which it seems that δόξα is one of those nouns, which, when used in their most abstract sense, take the Article. See Middl. Gr. A. Ch. v. § 1.

Besides, as Winer and Scott have seen, the Article is used, when the subject of the discourse is God. On the substance of the doctrine taught in these introductory six verses, see an able summary by Whitby.

6. The Apostle now passes at once, and somewhat abruptly, to an attack on the gross errors in doctrine, into which the Galatians had fallen;—errors so serious and fundamental, that they might be said to form another Gospel. Accordingly he opens his subject in the language of astonishment at their conduct.

— Θαυμάζω, ὅτι οὕτω ταχ. μετατ.] Astonished he might justly be, because they had all

the means of being better informed. Μετατίθεσθαι signifies, in the middle voice, properly to change one's place; and figuratively, to change one's side, and go over to another. Thus we may render, "that ye are gone over, or going over from him." Τοῦ καλ. may, with several Commentators, be referred to Christ: though as the office of calling is elsewhere ascribed to God, the ancient and most modern Expositors are right in so applying it here. But in fact, there is (as Michaelis, Borger, and Scott remark) a breuiloquentia (as ἐν ἁγιασμῶ in 1 Thess. iv. 7.) of which the full sense is: "who hath called you, that you should be and continue in the state of grace by Christ." Here Theodoret points out the strength of the reproach; which is, not that they are turned from this doctrine to that, but altogether from Him who called them to the grace of Christ; not from Christ only, but from God himself: implying that the observance of the Law must be a denial of the authority of the Lawgiver; for the Father himself who gave the Law, hath called them to the Gospel. Consequently an abandonment of this, and a return to the Law, must be a defection from Him who had called them.

Ἐν χάριτι is by most modern Commentators taken for εἰς χάριν. But the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors, as Koppe and Win., render, "by or through the grace of Christ," i. e. unto salvation; as Rom. v. 15. 2 Cor. i. 12. 2 Thess. ii. 16. Which latter mode is preferable. Εἰς ἕτ. εὐαγγ.; i. e. as it were another, being so corrupted by the admixture of the dogmas of another religion, Judaism.

7. ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο, εἰ μή, &c.] There is some difficulty in tracing the construction, and consequently uncertainty as to the exact sense of the words. The ancient and most modern Commentators, supposing the ὃ to refer to εὐαγγ., take the εἰ μή as put for ἄλλο, attamen. And they lay down the sense eüher as follows: "Which, however, is not another Gospel; but there are some," &c.; or thus: "Which, however, is not another Gospel, not worthy of that name, nor indeed the Gospel at all; but, notwithstanding, there are some," &c. Others, as Grot., Calvin, Crell., Locke, Bornemann, and Win., take the ὃ to refer to the whole matter in question, (πράγμα) and suppose that the Apostle is giving a reason for their defection, and excusing it by throwing the blame on others; q. d. "Quæ res nihil in se habet aliud, quàm quod," i. e. Cujus rei nulla alia est causa, quàm quod quidam sunt qui, &c.

This latter mode of taking the passage, however, would suppose the Apostle to have expressed his meaning very imperfectly. For, as Scott observes, "thus he ought to have written: ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο, ἢ ὅτι τινές." And indeed there would thus be something not a little forced and far-fetched in the sentence. As to the former interpretation, it is rejected by Prof. Schott, on the ground that εἰ μή is no where put for ἄλλο, nor used in any other sense than nisi. Yet it has been said by Professor Scholefield (in the Preface to his Sermon entitled St. Paul and St. James reconciled) and Professor Turton, in his Text of the English Bible, p. 74, that this idiom occurs not unfrequently in the N. T. That it is so used, seems decided by 1 Cor. vii. 17. and Rom. xiv. 14. How the idiom arises has been before explained. Yet it does not follow, because it may be so taken, where requisite, that it should be so taken here. Understanding ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο in the first-mentioned sense (which is the most natural, and agreeable to the context), I should prefer, with Schott, to regard it as a parenthetical clause, corrective of the foregoing assertion. So Abp. Newc. paraphrases: "But I recall the word different. The Gospel is not sometimes one thing, and sometimes another, but always the same." (Heb. xiii. 8.) Thus the εἰ μή will, as Schott remarks, refer to θανυμάζω; and though the correct use of the moods and tenses would require θανυμάζοιμι, ὅτι, &c. εἰ μή τινες ἦσαν οἱ, &c.; yet the Apostle probably preferred the use of the Indicative and the Present, because it was more suited to his purpose, (of reprehension) and the certainty of his persuasion as to their lapsed state.

—ταράσσ. ὑμᾶς, &c.] Ταράσσειν is here used, as at Acts xv. 24, in the sense to perturb the mind, and pervert the understanding, by throwing in perplexing doubts, and inculcating errors. Μεταστρέφαι has here its primitive sense; i. e. "to change the nature of any thing, by the introduction of something else with which it will not amalgamate;" alluding to the mixture of the Law of Moses with the Gospel. So Aristot. cited by Wets.: τὰ τοῦ Ξεν. μεταστρ.

8. ἀλλὰ] quinimo; as in Luke xii. 7. and sometimes in the Classical writers. There is infinite spirit in this sentence. So Theodoret: θερμανθεῖς ἐκ τῆς μνήμης τῶν ἐναντιῶν, καὶ τῷ δικαίῳ ζήσας θυμῷ, βοᾷ, &c. "Ἡ ἀγγ. ἐξ οὐρ. Here there is supposed, what is next to an impossibility, for illustration's sake. See Newc. and Scott. Chrys. has shown that the words have reference to the other Apostles, especially Peter and James; whose authority was, no doubt, often pleaded (though falsely) for retaining the rites of the Mosaic Law. Παρ' ὃ, contrary to what. So Rom. xii. 3. xvi. 17. Acts xviii. 13.

—ἀνάθεμα ἔστω.] Ἀνάθεμα does not properly differ from ἀνάθημα, but was only a later form. The earlier and purer writers use ἀνάθημα, and almost always in a good sense, to denote any thing set apart, or consecrated. The new form, too, was sometimes used in a good sense; though, in the Hellenistic writers, generally in a bad one, to denote a thing or person devoted to curses. Literally, separated from use. So the Otaheitan taboo: "interdicted from society, forbidden to be associated with." See more in the Note on 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

9. Here there is a repetition, arising from earnestness, and used in order to show his settled judgment. Παρελάβετε, "received or learnt [of us.]" See Phil. iv. 9.

10. ἄρτι γὰρ—Θεόν;] There is here an abruptness, and a brevity, which has occasioned some obscurity, and led to variety of interpretation. But the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed in regarding the passage either as an apology for the foregoing language, which might be thought to savour of vanity; or as an appeal to themselves, whether what the false teachers affirmed of him (namely, that he suited his doctrine to the humours of men), was not a mere calumny. Both views may be admitted. The ἄρτι refers (as Crell. and Win. have shown) to the whole time which had passed since his conversion to Christianity; q. d. 'now that I have so long preached the Gospel, and suffered so much for its sake.' Πείθω is to be taken of endeavour, by an idiom very frequent, and especially in this verb. Render: "am I now endeavouring to sway the assent of men to my own private notions?" Or, as Koppe, Borger, Winer, and Schott take it to mean, "hominesne enim mihi conciliare volo (institutione mea Evang.), an Deum?" The interrogation involves a strong negation.

—εἰ γὰρ ἔτι—ἡμῖν] "For if I were yet, or still, pleasing men, I should not be a servant of God." See the Notes of Scott and Locke. The γὰρ refers to the negation implied in the preceding interrogation; q. d. 'No; for,' &c.

11. The connection here has been thought very doubtful: nay, some are of opinion that there is none, but that a new subject is commenced, namely, the proof of his Apostleship. See Theodoret and Borger. I am, however, induced to think, with Schott, that it is connected with the preceding verse; and also with v. 7.; what is there said being here more fully treated of; and what is said up to this verse serving to pave the way for introducing the grand point which is treated on at Ch. I. & II. his Apostolical dignity and authority. This connection is well pointed out by Calvin, who remarks: "Hoc est validissimum argumentum, et quasi præcipuus cardo, in quo causa vertitur, non ab hominibus acceptum se evangelium habere, sed divinitus sibi fuisse revelatum." The var. lect. γὰρ (inadvertently adopted by Winer and Dr. Burton) doubtless arose (as Schott points out) from a gloss of those who perceived the connection in question, and wished to make it more prominent. But it is well remarked by Schott: "Minime sollicitanda vulg. δέ. Recte enim sic ponitur ubi oratio ad sententiam transit, quæ, quamvis arcte cohæreat proximæ antecedentibus, singulari tamen studio separatim consideranda est ac distinguenda." The δέ should be rendered autem, now. The idiom by which there is a transposition of ὅτι is frequent; and may here, Schott thinks, have been made use of, in order to place a most important topic in the most prominent point of view.

Γνωρίζω seems here to signify commonefacio, as in a kindred passage at 1 Cor. xv. 1, or significo. Οὐκ ἔστι κατὰ ἄνθρ. is for ἀνθρώπων, i. e. (as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed), "is not of human origin, nor composed of human precepts received from men, or taught by men;" as the words following explain. So Plutarch, cited by Borger: ἐκεῖνο δὲ οὐκ ἔστι καθ' Ἡσίοδον, οὐδὲ ἀνθρωπίνης ἐργον σοφίας, ἀλλὰ Θεοῦ.

12. δι' ἀποκαλ.] scil. παρέλαβον καὶ ἐδιδάχθην; meaning (as Markl. shows) that he had derived it immediately from Jesus Christ himself, and therefore had no need of instruction from the other Apostles. There is also, no doubt, a reference to the mysterious nature of certain things revealed,—namely, the peculiar doctrines of the Gospel. The chief of these revelations are supposed to have been communicated to Paul when in Arabia.

13. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "[It is scarcely necessary to show this by reference to the well-known events of my early life;] for ye have heard," &c. Or the γὰρ may be exegetical; what is subjoined being a proof of the foregoing assertion, from a brief narrative of his course of life previous to his conversion, and of the circumstances which attended it. Ἀναστροφή here is synonymous with the βίωσις of Acts xxvi. 4, and signifies manner of life, character, and conduct; as often in the Old and New Testaments, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. The ποτὲ is for πρωτέρων, which occurs in Eph. iv. 22. "The argument (Rosenm. observes) is, that from his former life, it is plain that he must have received his doctrine by Divine revelation. For since he was such a persecutor of the Christian religion, how could he have been so suddenly changed, had not a Divine revelation influenced him?"

—καθ' ὑπερβ.] for σφόδρα, or rather it is a stronger term. The expression ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is used, as Winer remarks, to set in a strong point of view the criminality of his conduct, and also that of the Jewish persecutors of that time.

προέκοπτον ἐν τῷ Ἰουδαϊσμῷ ὑπὲρ πολλοὺς συνηλικιώτας ἐν τῷ γένει μου, περισσοτέρως ζηλωτῆς ὑπάρχων τῶν πατρικῶν μου παραδόσεων. ¹ Ὅτε δὲ εὐδόκησεν [ὁ Θεός,] ὁ ἀφορίσας με ἐκ κοιλίας μητρός μου, καὶ καλέσας διὰ τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ² ἀποκαλύψαι τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐν ἐμοί, ἵνα εὐαγγελίζωμαι αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν· εὐθέως οὐ προσανέθε-

Ἐπόρουν is a more forcible term than ἐδίωκον, and should be rendered, "laid it waste," namely, by dragging its professors to execution. See Acts ix. 21.

14. προέκοπτον ἐν τῷ Ἰουδ.] "made proficiency in a knowledge of the rites and forms of the Jewish religion." Πολλοὺς συνηλ., "many of my age," and, by implication, fellow-students. Ἐν τῷ γένει μου, "among those of my own nation." Ζηλ. ὑπ. τ. π. μ. π. Verbals like ζηλ. have the force of adjectives (taking their regimen, whatever that be), and consequently admit an adverb. Ζηλωτῆς νόμου and νόμου is an expression frequently occurring in the Apocrypha. The τῶν πατρ. παραδ. serves to show what was especially meant by Ἰουδαϊσμῷ. This expression, well designated the Judaism of the Pharisees, as a religion handed down from their fathers, and containing, together with what was of Divine institution, much of tradition merely, and what pretended to no more than human authority, that of their forefathers. Comp. Matt. xv. 2. Mark vii. 3. Acts xxvi. 4. Here Wets. aptly cites Joseph. Antiq. xii. 6. 2. εἴ τις ζηλωτῆς ἐστὶ τῶν πατρίων ἑθῶν, καὶ τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ᾠρησκείας, ἐπέστω μοι. Πατρ. here, like the πατρ. in Joseph., is for πατροπαράδοτος.

15. ὁ ἀφορ. με.] The full sense seems to be, "who separated [and, by implication, destined] me to preach the Gospel." See Acts xiii. 2. xxii. 14. sq. Rom. i. 1. Ὁ Θεός is wanting in four MSS., the Syr. Version, and some Fathers, and is by Griesb. and Schott thought to be probably an interpolation; but it is more likely that it was accidentally omitted because of the ὁ—ὁ.

Ἄφορ. must be referred (with the best Commentators, ancient and modern) to the foreknowledge of God. See Hamm., who shows that the term cannot with good reason be understood of any irrelative decree of his person to heaven and bliss. "It was (says Slade) foreseen by God that he would be a fit instrument for the propagation of the Christian religion. And therefore He decreed, even with the foreknowledge of his bitter enmity against the Church, to set him apart for the Apostleship: just as the Gentiles were chosen, though in a state of actual idolatry." On the expression καλ. see Theophyl. in Rec. Syn.

16. ἀποκαλύψαι—ἐν ἐμοί.] Some interpret, "[was pleased] to propagate the religion of His Son by me." This, however, is liable to several objections, which I have stated in Recens. Synop. And to sink the meaning of ἐν (with Koppe, Calvin, and Borger) would be uncritical. The ancient Commentators, and of the moderns, Winer, Schott, and Scott, seem right in regarding this as a strong expression for "in my mind and heart." The ἀποκ. has reference to what was said at

v. 12; and, indeed vv. 13 & 14 are, in some measure, parenthetical. The words following state the purpose of this revelation, that he should propagate the religion of His Son to the Gentiles, not confining it to Jews, and consequently rejecting Judaism, as a religion for the world at large.

The εὐθέως (as Koppe and Win. remark) properly belongs to ἀπῆλθον in the next verse; though, in consequence of the long clause interposed, a change of construction is introduced by the ἀλλά: "scil. (observes Win.) Paulus, quæ fuit ejus alacritas, interponit negativam sententiam, quæ ipsi in mentem venit." Προσανατίθεσθαι signifies properly to commit any thing to another, and in a special sense, to deposit any secret, or communicate any information to another, lay one's cause open to him, refer it to him, confer with, and consult him upon any matter. So Diodorus, cited by Wets. τοῖς μάντεσι προσαναθέμενος περὶ τοῦ σημείου. Σαρκὶ καὶ αἵμ. may mean any man (by a tacit opposition to God and Christ before named) not even the Apostles, who are just after particularly mentioned. But Koppe, Schulz, and others are, not without some reason, of opinion that it signifies "in consilium non adhibui sensus et affectus humanos." Yet I rather agree with Prof. Schott and Scott, that both should be included; q. d. "I neither consulted with men, nor conferred with the dictates of my own mind and feelings, so as to consult my own interest or comfort." A view of the sense supported by the authority of Œcumen. By τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἀποστ. it is shown that at the time of the revelation in question, he received such information as placed him on a footing with the Apostles,—even those who had been invested with that office by Christ himself; nay, even above them,—since he had received the illumination in a more extraordinary manner than they had.

17—19. On the circumstances here adverted to, see Acts ix. 25—28. and Notes, and especially my Note in Recens. Syn. on the present passage. The discrepancies which occur in the two accounts may, in a great measure, be attributed to the difference of the circumstances in which the general historian is placed, as compared with the writer of a personal narrative. The former necessarily speaks in general terms; the latter descends to particularities of time, place, and persons. See Paley. As to the journey into Arabia not being mentioned by St. Luke, it may very well be accounted for on that principle. See Recens. Synop. So little, indeed, is here said, that to adjust the chronology of the Apostle's life is difficult. As to the reconciliation of the diversity, which seems to subsist between the Apostles, in order to settle the chronology, no method I have yet seen proposed, appears, quite satisfactory. I may, therefore, be permitted to suggest, that there seems to be nothing in the words of St. Paul, to lead us to suppose that his stay in Arabia was otherwise than short; nor need we suppose that the journey was a very long one. It was probably taken, in a great measure, for the purpose of restoring his health,—since it is said at Acts ix. 19. he ἐνίσχυσεν, which implies that he was then only in a state of convalescence. And at this very period (when, according to the words of St. Luke, we find the Apostle had remained at Damascus some days) I would fix the first journey into Arabia, which, as having occupied but a very short time, and affording no circumstances of moment, St. Luke omits, continuing his narration with εὐθέως ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς ἐκήρυσσε. And surely the propriety of the εὐθέως will scarcely be affected by this short interposed journey. Certain it is that the words καὶ εὐθέως—Χριστὸς must refer to another narrative. For I cannot acquiesce in the opinion of Kuinoel, that with the ἱκαναὶ ἡμέραι may be numbered the ἡμέραι τινὲς mentioned at v. 19. The state of the Apostle's health would not admit of his immediately resuming his evangelical labours at Damascus; and that, as we see, is not at variance with St. Paul's account. Finally, I would understand the words of St. Luke ὡς δὲ ἐπληροῦντο ἡμέραι ἱκαναὶ of the whole time of St. Paul's second sojourn at Damascus; which, by his own account here, must have extended to not much less than three years. Or we may suppose the narrative of what took place in his second stay at Damascus, to commence at v. 22. Σαῦλος δὲ, &c. And though that may seem scarcely warranted by the words, yet it must be remembered, that the expression ἡμέραι, by an Hebraism, has often only the general signification of time; and ἱκανὸς is a term of extensive application, and is often used of a somewhat long period. Upon the whole, there can be little difficulty in understanding St. Luke's words of as considerable a time as St. Paul's words require.

18. ἱστορῆσαι II.] Ἱστορεῖν τινα signifies to visit for the purpose of becoming better acquainted with any one by personal communication; which usually implies an expectation of seeing something more than ordinary. So Joseph. Bell, vi, 1, 8. (cited by Kypke) ὄν (scil. Julianum) ἱστορήσα, "whom I became acquainted with." The word rarely occurs in the Classical writers. See Acts ix. 26, 27.

19. Ἰάκωβον.] To which of the three Jameses this is to be referred, the Commentators are not agreed. I have considered the subject at large in Recens. Synop., and have, with Borger, adopted the opinion of most Commentators, ancient and modern, that this James was not brother, but cousin or kinsman, of our Lord, and a son of Alphaeus. This opinion was also maintained formerly by Winer, who, however, is not disinclined to think that ἀδελφ. should here be taken in its usual sense brother. And this, he supposes, was James the Bishop of Jerusalem.

20. Here we have a solemn asseveration by oath of the truth of what had been said, similar to those at Rom. ix. 1. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Cor. xi. 31. Ἰδοὺ, mind! Before ὅτι sub. ὁμνυμι. The argument, as Whitty observes, is this: "Having, therefore, preached the Gospel so long before I saw them, and staying so little while with them, and going then only to see, not to learn of them, it cannot be conceived I should receive my instructions how to preach the Gospel from them."

21. Συρίας.] "By Syria (Winer observes) is here to be understood (as appears from Acts ix. 30.) that part of Syria which is elsewhere called Phœnice."

22. Ἰουδαίας, i. e. (as Koppe and Win. remark) the country of Judæa, exclusive of Jerusalem, where he was well known.

24. ἐν ἐμοί] "on my account," "on account of my conversion," &c.

II. 1. διὰ δεκ. ἐτῶν] "after the lapse or intervention of 14 years." This use of διὰ for διαγενομένων occurs also in Mark ii. 1. and Acts xxiv. 17. On the chronological difficulty involved in the words, see Recens. Synop., Paley, Borger, Winer, Schott and Emmerl. Prol. to 2 Cor. p. 25. sqq. They read τεσσαρῶν; rightly, I think. The interpretation of the πάλιν depends upon the view adopted of the preceding.

2. ἀνέβην κατὰ ἀποκάλ.] Koppe and Borger show that this is not inconsistent with the account at Acts xv. 2.; for though he went up, as appointed by the Antiochians, yet his determination to comply with their request (which he had many reasons to decline) might be, and, it appears, was a Divine order.

— ἀνεθέμην αὐτοῖς τὸ εὐ.] “set forth, or laid before them the Gospel;” by which seems to be meant setting forth those peculiarities, as to the disuse of the rites of the Mosaic law, the free admission of the Gentiles without binding them thereto (and perhaps some of the more humbling and peculiar doctrines of the Gospel), which seem to have been especially treated on by St. Paul; on all which accounts he might well style it his Gospel. At τοῖς δοκοῦσι we may supply εἶναι τι, which is expressed at v. 6. See Note supra v. 3. In the Classical writers, however, this is generally omitted. So Porphyry cited by De Rhoer opposes τὰ πλῆθῃ το τοῖς δοκοῦσι. The expression is well explained by Theodoret, ἐν- σιμοι, “persons of” mark, the Apostles and Presbyters. See v. 9. This was done “privately,” because (as Abp. Newc. observes) “many could not bear the doctrine, that the Gentiles had a right to admission into the Christian Church, and that all converts were exempted from Jewish observances.”

— μήπως—ἔδραμον.] The meaning is by most modern Commentators supposed to be, “lest, by not making this communication, I might be misrepresented by my calumniators, and misunderstood by the Apostles, through whose dis- countenance the good effects both past and future of my labours would be diminished.” I do not, however, see how such a sense can be extracted from the words, and I prefer the interpretation of Chrys., Theophyl., Œcum., Hyper, Camer., and Borger, “lest I should be really thought to labour, or have laboured in vain;” i. e. erroneously, and under mistake; which was what his calumniators pretended.

3. ἀλλ' οὐδὲ Τ., &c.] The connexion is well laid down by Win. as follows: “So far were they from setting me right, that they did not even order Titus, though a Greek, to be circum- cised,” an irrefragable proof that they did not believe in the necessity of circumcision, but thought with Paul on that subject. Ἀναγκά- ζεσθαι is often used, as here, of the moral com- pulsion of strong persuasion or urgent remon- strance.

4. διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρ. ψευδ., &c.] There is here a difficulty, arising from a seeming want of a construction: and the sentiment has been thought by some to be liable to the objection,—that “if Titus remained uncircumcised on account of the false brethren, it may be inferred, that if there had been no false brethren, he would have been circumcised; which runs counter to the Apostle’s argument. To remove this difficulty, several of the more recent Commentators main- tain the sense to be, that Titus was actually cir- cumcised. They lay a strong emphasis on the ἀναγκ., as denoting that the circumcision, though not compelled, was judged expedient. As to the words οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν, which seem adverse to such a sense, the contrariety is endeavoured to be removed by a subtle distinction. Thus the sense will be: “We consented for a short time, thus more effectually consulting the permanent interest of the Gospel.” This mode of inter- pretation, however, is liable to insuperable objec- tions, several of which are stated by Borger, Winer, and myself, in Recens. Synop., and others will occur to every Critical inquirer. Above all, there is not the least reason to suppose οἷς οὐδὲ interpolated; the evidence, both external and in- ternal, for the words, being almost as great as can be imagined. See Borger. Indeed, there is no necessity to resort to so violent a method as the foregoing; since the chief objection may be re- moved by connecting διὰ δὲ παρ., not with the preceding, but with the following words. It is true that then some verb seems to be wanting; and Stroth., Rosenm., Borger, and Iaspis, would repeat ἀνέβην or ἀνεθέμην. But this is too arbitrary and factitious a mode to be depended upon; and the same may be said of that adopted by Winer, who would interpret the διὰ δὲ, “quod autem pertinet ad,” and take the οἷς for τοῦτοις. It should rather seem that there is an anacoluthon, occasioned by the introduction of the parenthetical clause οἵτινες—καταδουλ. Or rather, that thereby not only the thread of the construction is abandoned, but some word, which St. Paul would otherwise have used, is altogether lost, though easy to be supplied from the con- text; namely, οὕτως ἐποίουν, with reference to his whole conduct on that occasion, both in going up to Jerusalem, and in the measures he adopted when there. I have pointed accord- ingly.

Παρεισ., “who had been introduced,” or had introduced themselves into the society. So παρα is used in παραδῶν, παρεισέρχονται, &c. By the ἡμᾶς must be understood not only Paul and Titus, but the congregation at large in Antioch. Οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν is a popular phrase, denoting “not for an instant,” or not at all. The “not yielding to them” is to be understood of the mat- ter in dispute, the necessity of the Law to salvation. Τῇ ὑποτ. is for πρὸς ὑποταγῇ; i. e. ὥστε ὑπο- τάσσο. for ὑποτάσσο.; which is a much stronger term than εἰκεν. The Apostle was inclined, it seems, to yield, as far as was allowable, in ten- derness to weak consciences; but not to abandon the important matter in dispute. This firmness was adopted ἵνα ἡ ἀλήθεια—ὑμᾶς; i. e. “that the pure and unadulterated Gospel might re- main with the Gentiles, and not be perverted or destroyed by Judaizing teachers.” By ὑμᾶς are to be understood not the Galatians only, but the Gentile Christians in general; q. d. "you Gentiles."

6. In this verse again (as the best Commentators are agreed) there is an anacoluthon; the Apostle intending to write ἀπὸ τῶν δοκούντων—οὐδέν μοι προσανέειχεν, οὐδὲν προσελαβόμην; though, by reason of a somewhat long parenthesis, he drops the thread of the construction, and thus changes the Genit. into a Nominative; as it were resuming what was said before the parenthesis. For the γὰρ is resumptive. This view I find supported by the opinion of Prof. Scholefield (Hints, p. 56), who remarks that this is an irregular sentence, the writer having begun with one form and concluded with another (for we should have expected, on the part of, &c. nothing new was communicated to me). 2. That the insertion of the parenthesis was the occasion of this variation, and that there οἱ δοκ. is the repetition of ἀπὸ τῶν δοκούντων in accordance with the altered form of the sentence. "The object (continues he) of this parenthesis is, to preclude the idea of his having bowed to the authority even of the Apostles. He had received his Gospel from God independently of them (Chap. i. 12.); and when he compared it with theirs, the identity resulting was a striking proof of its truth and Divine origin." The sentence is well rendered by Prof. Scholefield: "But of those who were high in reputation, (whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person,) those, I say, who were high in reputation communicated nothing new to me."

— τῶν δοκούντων εἶναι τι.] Render "those who were of repute," or thought to be of consequence. Ὅποιοί ποτε, qualescunque. The Apostle means to say, that let their dignity or reputation be as great as it might, it was not so great, as to render it necessary for him to be taught by them. Οὐδέν μοι διαφέρει means, "it does not affect my authority as an Apostle." On πρόσωπον—λαμβ. see Acts x. 34. In οἱ δοκοῦντες—προσαν. there is a paronomasia; q. d. "those who were thought something [great], added nothing to me;" i. e. to my knowledge of the Gospel. Or rather, with Prof. Scholefield, render, "communicated nothing new to me." For (observes he) as in v. 2. ἀνεξέμνην is properly rendered communicated; so here προσανέειχεντο is, communicated in addition. Paul communicated his Gospel to them, that they might be satisfied of its being the true and full Gospel; but they communicated nothing new: they set to it the seal of their testimony that it was the Gospel, which they themselves preached.

7. ἀλλὰ τὸυν.] q. d. "nay, so far from teaching me any thing, or supposing that they had any thing to teach me, they acknowledged my Divine commission, and, seeing that I was instructed," &c.—"they gave the right hand of fellowship [as Apostles] to me and Barnabas." At πεπίστ. supply ὑπὸ Θεοῦ; for a divine communication is implied. See 1 Cor. ix. 17. Rom. iii. 2. and Notes. Τὸ εὐαγγ. τῆς ἀκροβυστίας signifies the preaching of the Gospel to the uncircumcised. The nouns ἀκροβυστία and περιτομή are frequently, as here, put for the participles οἱ περιτετμημένοι, &c. St. Peter was chiefly but not entirely occupied by the Jews, and St. Paul chiefly, but not wholly with the Gentiles; the former had for his assistants principally James and John; the latter, Barnabas, himself divinely appointed to this office; whom the Greeks have, therefore, not ill styled the fourteenth Apostle.

8. This verse is parenthetical; and the γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; [And this is very true:] for He who, &c. Ἐνεργεῖν properly signifies "to work an effect in, or on any thing or person;" and (as Win. observes) is often used de efficaciâ Dei, quæ ad rem Christianam pertinet; as iii. 9. Eph. i. 11. Phil. ii. 13. 1 Cor. xii. 6. He aptly compares a similar construction in Prov. xxxi. (xxix.) 12. γυνὴ ἐνεργεῖ τῷ ἀνδρὶ εἰς ἀγαθόν· and assigns the following sense: "qui in Petro hoc effecit, ut provinciam instituendi Judæos capesseret ac tueretur, qui Petrum admovit muneris apost. in usum Judæorum suscipiendo." The ἐν, however, has reference to the immediate and extraordinary mode in which each of the two Apostles was appointed to his peculiar charge. Εἰς ἀπ. τῆς περ. is for εἰς τὸ ἀπιστόν με εἶναι τοῖς περιτετμημένοις. And εἰς τὰ ἔθνη is for εἰς ἀποστολὴν τῶν ἐθνῶν, as the Syr. translates it.

9. γνόντες.] This and ἰδόντες at v. 7. are in apposition with the Nomin. cases to the verb ἔδωκαν, which are Ἰάκωβος καὶ Κηφᾶς καὶ Ἰωάννης. Τὴν χάριν scil. τῆς ἀποστολῆς, as χάριν καὶ ἀποστολὴν (said by Hendiad.) in Rom. i. 5. The χάρις may have reference to the supernatural charismata necessary to the discharge of the office. Or we may, with Borger, render, "the favour bestowed upon me in conferring the Apostleship."

Οἱ δοκοῦντες στύλοι εἶναι is incorrectly rendered, "who seemed or appeared," &c.; for there is (as Chrys. observes) nothing of doubt intended; to exclude which, many eminent Commentators take δοκ. for οἱ ὄντες. That, however, is too arbitrary a method. The sense is, "those who were accounted" or reputed to be. So the Peschito Syr. and Winer. Στύλοι εἶναι scil. ἐκκλησίας, or τῆς πίστεως: an architectural metaphor, wherein the Christian society is compared to an edifice, such as the Temple at Jerusalem, of which the main pillars are the Apostles. See 1 Cor. iii. 16. 2 Tim. iii. 15. Eph. ii. 21 & 22. 1 Pet. ii. 5. So Maimon. cited by Wets. calls the Prophets "columnæ generis humani in recta fide." Eurip. ap. Wets. calls male offspring στυλοὶ οἴκων; and Philo, cited by Borger, says that good men κίονες εἰσὶ, δῆμον ὅλον ὑπερείδοντες. Pindar, I add, in his Olymp. ii. 145. ὅς Ἐκτορῷ ἔσφαλε, Τροίτας Ἀμαχον ἀσπράβῃ κίονα.

9. ὁ ἐξ ἐμῶν—κοινωνίας.] By this is not (as Rosenm. and Koppe imagine) indicated merely friendship, and consent in doctrine, but chiefly, acknowledgment of his Apostleship in common with themselves; which it seems to have been a principal purpose of St. Paul to bring them to acknowledge. The giving the right hand is to be regarded as a symbolical action, denoting union, whether of fellowship in any office, or of compact, or accord generally. So (among the passages adduced in illustration by the Commentators) Virgil Æn. vii. 266. Pars mihi pacis erit dextram tetigisse tyranni. Here, it should seem, both fellowship and agreement, or compact are meant, the former principally, the latter secondarily. And, indeed, such seems adverted to in the ἵνα, &c. following. The full sense, then, is: "They formally acknowledged us as fellow-Apostles, and it was agreed that," &c. At ἡμεῖς and αὐτοὶ must (as Winer observes) be supplied ἐναγγελισθέντες and ἐναγγελισθέντες, from τὸ ἐναγγ. at v. 7.

10. μόνον τῶν πτωχῶν ἵνα μνημ.] Sub. αἰτούντες or παρακαλοῦντες. An ellip., Koppe observes, frequent after μόνον or πλὴν, and before ἵνα, in St. Paul's writings; as 2 Cor. viii. 7. Eph. v. 33. Compare v. 13. 1 Cor. vii. 39. The complete sense is: "[They did not wish to impede or circumscribe my liberty of action as an Apostle by any rules or directions of theirs; but] they only desired that we would be mindful of the poor." In μνημ. (as in רמי, Ps. viii. 5.) there is, as often, an ellip. of some verb of relieving or helping, from delicacy omitted. By τῶν πτ. the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, must be understood not the poor generally (for that would have been needless to urge on Paul) but those of Judæa in particular. So Chrys., Theophyl., Grot., Est., Schleting, Hamm., Borger, and Winer. See Rec. Syn., where is pointed out the reason for this injunction, and the expediency, and even justice, of the relief of the Poor Christians in Judæa by the Gentiles.

—ὃ καὶ ἐσπούδασα—ποιῆσαι.] Koppe and other Commentators here recognise a pleonasm in αὐτὸ τοῦτο, which they compare with a similar use of the Hebrew demonstrative הוּ after the relative שֶׁ. But we may better (with Win., Bornemann, and Schott) suppose an anacolu- thon, the ὃ being suspended on ποιεῖν, and the αὐτὸ brought in to explain the pronoun relative; on which idiom see Herm. on Soph. Phil. 315. cited by Bornem. Yet I should prefer regarding this as an instance of a blending of two constructions, (viz. ὃ ποιῆσαι ἐσπ. and καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐσπ. ποιῆσαι) which has usually an intensive force. Render: "Which very thing I was myself even studious to do;" "forward to effect."

11. ὅτε δὲ ἦλθε Π. εἰς Ἀ.] On the time of this visit (not mentioned in the Acts) the learned are not agreed. It was, no doubt, after Paul's return from Jerusalem to Antioch. And it is, with most probability, supposed by Koppe (who refers to Acts xiii. 37.) to have taken place a short time after that period; and been made for the purpose of personally inspecting the state of the Antiochian Church, and by his authority and influence, composing the yet remaining differences in it. Schott, however, is of opinion, that what is said from the beginning of this Chapter is to be referred to what took place at the council at Jerusalem, and not, as Koppe and Borger suppose, after the council. Κατὰ πρόσωπον has the same sense as ἐμπροσθεν πάντων at v. 14. The phrase ἀνίστημι κατὰ πρὸς, occurs also at 2 Chron. xiii. 7 & 8, and Deut. vii. 24; and ἀντιλέγειν κατὰ πρ. at Job xvi. 8. Ἀντίσθιεν seems to carry with it the double sense of with-standing and confuting.

—ὅτι κατεγνωσμένος ἦν.] Calvin, Beza, Kop., and Borger, regard this as an example of the participle passive for the Latin past participle in dus, and as put for καταγνωστέος; i. e. καταγνωστέος ἄξιος, "erat reprehendendus," as Borger renders. Others, however, as Luther Winer, and Schott, take it to mean, "he had incurred blame;" and that, by implication, and from what follows, justly. Thus there will be no occasion to suppose the metonymy in question: and the more simple interpretation is, ceteris paribus, entitled to the preference. This view is, I find, supported by the ancient Interpreters almost universally. On the degree of blame to which Peter was liable, and on this whole question of the dispute between Peter and Paul, see Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, Borger, Schott, and Scott.

12. ἔλθειν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰ.] The persons were no doubt, Jewish converts and Judaizers. The words do not necessarily imply that they were sent by James; though we cannot infer less than that they had his consent for their journey; and probably they had some letters from him to Peter and to Paul. They seem to have been some of the persons characterized at v. 4. By ἐθνῶν the best Expositors understand, not Pagans, but Gentile Christians. Συνήσθ. must here chiefly denote eating with; though it may include the sense of associating with.

ὑπέστελλε καὶ ἀφώριζεν ἑαυτὸν, φοβούμενος τοὺς ἐκ περιτομῆς. καὶ συνυπεκρίθησαν αὐτῷ καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ Ἰουδαῖοι 13 ὥστε καὶ Βαρνάβας συναπήχθη αὐτῶν τῇ ὑποκρίσει. Ἄλλ' 14 ὅτε εἶδον, ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθοδοδοῦσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, εἶπον τῷ Πέτρῳ ἔμπροσθεν πάντων· “Εἰ σὺ, Ἰουδαῖος ὑπάρχων, ἐθνικῶς ζῇς καὶ οὐκ Ἰουδαϊκῶς, † τί τὰ ἔθνη ἀναγκάζεις Ἰουδαΐζειν; ἡμεῖς, φύσει Ἰουδαῖοι καὶ οὐκ 15

12. ὑπέστελλε.] There is no occasion to supply ἑαυτῷ, since the ἑαυτὸν just after seems to be meant for both ὑπ. and ἀφ., the latter of which terms is the stronger. Τοὺς ἐκ περιτ., i. e. the Jews, or the Jewish converts, as Acts x. 45. It is well observed by Dr. Burton, that “we are not to suppose that the persons who came from James again raised the question, which had been settled at the council, or wished to bind the Gentiles by the Law of Moses. They only declined eating with them; which they need not have done, because the decree of the council had provided against the Gentiles offending the Jews at their meals.”

13. συνυπεκρίθη.] “dissembled with him,” “practised the same dissimulation with him.” The word occurs only in the later Greek writers. It is properly an Histrionic term. Borger recognises in συναπ. a metaphor taken from a torrent, which hurries any one away with it. But it seems to be rather from a crowd. So 2 Pet. iii. 17. ἵνα μὴ τῇ τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπαχθέντες. See also Note on Rom. xii. 16. Schoettg. here appositely cites the following very curious passage of Arrian in Epict. ii. 9. Τί ἐξαπατᾷς τοὺς πολλοὺς; τί ὑποκρίνη, Ἰουδαῖος ὢν, Ἕλληνα; οὐχ ὄρας, πῶς ἕκαστος λέγεται Ἰουδαῖος; πῶς Σῦρος; πῶς Αἰγύπτιος; καὶ ὅταν τινα ἐπαμφοτερίζοντα ἰδωμεν, εἰώθαμεν λέγειν· οὐκ ἔστιν Ἰουδαῖος, ἀλλ’ ὑποκρίνεται. “Ὅταν δὲ ἀναλάβῃ τὸ πάθος τὸ τοῦ βεβαμμένου καὶ ῥημένου, τότε καὶ ἔστι τῷ ὄντι, καὶ καλεῖται Ἰουδαῖος. Οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς παραβαπτισταί, λόγῳ μὲν Ἰουδαῖοι, ἔργῳ δὲ ἄλλο τι.

14. οὐκ ὀρθοδοδοῦσι πρὸς, &c.] The sense is, that they did not act uprightly, and agreeably to the true spirit of the Gospel; viz. by thus compromising the truth contained in it. Ὀρθοδοξία properly signifies to direct one's footsteps aright.

—ἐθνικῶς ζῇς] “livest like the Gentiles,” i. e. in non-observance of the Mosaic Law. Ἰουδαΐζειν is for Ἰουδαίως ζῇν, “to observe the Jewish Law.” Ἀναγκ. denotes the compulsion of strong influence; for Peter seemed to employ his influence, at least by example, to induce the Gentile converts to submit to circumcision, and put themselves under the Jewish Law.

For τί several MSS. (almost entirely of the Western recension) and some Versions and Latin Fathers have πῶς, which is edited by Griesb., Tittm., Vat., and Winer: but perhaps on insufficient grounds. Versions are, in such a case, not good evidence; and the MSS. in question are not many in number, and being of the Western recension, might be corrupted from the Vulgate “quomodo.” It is true that πῶς is the more difficult reading; and as it is very unusual in this expostulatory sense, τί might seem to be a gloss;

yet had πῶς been originally written, it is impossible to suppose it should have been so generally altered to τί.

15. It is not agreed, among Editors and Commentators, whether the Apostle's address to Peter terminates at v. 14, or is carried forward; and if so, where it terminates. Many think it is continued to the end of the Chapter; while some suppose it to terminate at v. 17; others, at v. 16; others, again, at νόμον in v. 16; and others at v. 14. Weighty reasons are alleged in support of almost all the above opinions, especially the first and last. The question is, I apprehend, one that cannot be brought to any absolute decision. For, as observes Schott, “in ipsa quidem serie et indole sententiarum hujus sectionis, nihil apparet, quo alterutrum certo comprobetur.” The scope will, in either case, be precisely the same—to maintain the doctrine that a man is not justified by the works of the Law, but by the faith of Christ. In the one, it will be part of the address from Paul to Peter; in the other, it will be a general statement of the reasons on which Paul acted in thus addressing Peter. But it should seem that if we suppose the address to extend beyond v. 14. (and the nature of the construction obliges us to do so; for otherwise, as Winer observes, the Apostle would certainly have added some word, to indicate that he was addressing the Galatians, as ἡμεῖς οὖν, ἀδελφοί, &c.), we cannot suppose it to terminate at least until v. 17. Though, whether it terminates there, or at the end of the Chapter, I would not positively affirm. In the former case, vv. 18—21 may be regarded as meant to be a further illustration of what the Apostle then said on the subject of justification by faith alone. And thus there will be, as Est. remarks, “latens recessus à Petro, et ingressus ad materiam principalem,” i. e. a paving the way to the direct address to the Galatians, at iii. 1. A view, it may be observed, confirmed by the transition from the use of the plural to the singular number. Upon the whole, while, on the one hand, it should seem most simple and natural to suppose, with almost all the ancient and most modern Expositors, (including Paræus, Pisc., Rosenm., Tittman, Knapp, Winer, and Schott), that at v. 15. seqq. the speech of Paul is concluded; so, on the other hand, it should seem to be more suitable to the manner of the Apostle to suppose that 18—21 contain a transition, as above.

The ἡμεῖς should (though the Commentators notice it not) be constructed with εἰδότες, forming nominatives absolute, put for a verb and particle. And at Ἰουδαῖοι must be supplied ὄντες, like Ἰουδ. ὑπάρχων in the preceding verse. The sense is, “Since we, who are Jews by nature or birth; a sense of φύσει sometimes occurring in the Classical writers. After εἰδότες, Griesbach inserts δὲ, from several MSS., the Vulg., and some Latin Fathers. The authority, however, is too weak; and it arose, I suspect, from ignorance of the construction, or was perhaps meant rather to come in after ἡμεῖς. Ἐξ ἔθνων ἂμ. is a periphrasis for ἑθνικοὶ ἂμ. being a customary appellation of the Gentiles, with reference chiefly to their idolatry, and alienation from the knowledge and worship of the true God.

16. On the doctrine here inculcated, see Rom. iii. 20. 28. and the Notes. The ἐὰν μὴ is supposed to be put for ἀλλά; which Winer accounts for by supposing a blending of two sentences.

17. [ζητ. δικ. ἐν Χρ.] The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that the sense is: "while we seek to attain justification from Christ, resting all our hopes of it on Him." Εὐρέθημεν—ἁμαρτ., "we be found sinners," i.e. it be discovered that we are sinners; namely, by having rejected the Jewish Law. Winer and Schott rightly reject the criticism of most recent Commentators that εὐρ. is for εἶναι. Strictly speaking, εὐρ. is never put for εἶναι (though in use they may seem interchanged), nor is it ever a mere synonyme thereof. It has almost always a much stronger sense, though it may sometimes include that of εἶναι. See Schott, who points out at large the peculiar propriety and force of εὐρ. here. Thus εἰ εὐρ. ἁμαρτ. signifies, "if we are discovered to be still in our sins," i.e. by clinging to the Law, and having recourse to its expiations. After this, regularity would have required to be written ἄρα Χρ. ἂμ. διάκονος: "then it will follow that Christ is the author of sin;" a sort of reductio ad absurdum. And this is edited by Borger, Vater and Winer. But as μὴ γένοιτο follows, which is every where else in St. Paul's writings preceded by an interrogation (see Schleus. Lex.) that cannot be safely admitted; and it is better to suppose that the Apostle stops short in the conclusion, which he was going to draw, and changes it into the more spirited form of an interrogation, employing ἄρα, nonne? not ἄρα; which enabled him to subjoin the strongest exception to such a conclusion, by μὴ γένοιτο! This view I find supported by Schott, who refers for examples of this sense of ἄρα to Matthæi's Gr. Gr. T. π. p. 1241, and remarks that the interrogation thus understood affirms the truth of the consequence.

18. εἰ γὰρ ἂ κατέλυσα—συνίστημι.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted, which is thus supplied by Newc.: "[It will follow, I say, that Christ leads us to sin, and we shall be found yet under sin:] for," &c. The first person singular is (Rosenm. and Borger observe) used through delicacy; though the first person plural would be more suitable, a general assertion being meant. It may, however, be used on account of the transition above adverted to. In κατέλ. and οἰκοδ. there is (as often in St. Paul's writings) an architectural metaphor. By οἰκοδ. is meant 'I observe, or enjoin or countenance its observance, as necessary to justification;' by κατέλ., "I pronounce ineffectual for justification." Παραβ. ἐμ. συνίστ., "I set forth or declare myself a transgressor [of the Law];" i.e. (as Whitby explains) by not trusting in it for justification; or (as Newc.) "by resting my acceptance with God on a Law, which places me in the class of transgressors." This sense of συνίστημι occurs also in Rom. iii. 5. v. 8. 2 Cor. vi. 4, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. The connection is well traced, and the sense laid down, by Schott, agreeably to the view taken by the Greek Commentators, Whitby, Kop., Flatt, and Winer. Perhaps the import of the passage has been with most simplicity and truth stated by Pyle as follows: "For if, after having taken upon me the Christian profession, as the means of this justification, I run back again for it to the Jewish law, I am but where I was, an unjustified sinner, and act just like a foolish man, who pulls down his house to make it better, and then builds it up again with the very same materials, just as it was, upon its old foundation."

19. ἐγὼ γὰρ—ζήσω.] There is no little difference of opinion, as to the sense of these words. That by νόμῳ is meant the law of Moses is generally admitted: but on the purport of νόμου the Expositors are not agreed. Some ancient and modern ones, as Theophyl., Rosenm., Koppe, and Borger, take it to mean "the Christian religion," called in Rom. iii. 28. νόμος πίστεως, and ix. 31. νόμος δικαιοσύνης, and vi. 2. νόμος Χριστοῦ. This makes, indeed, a good sense in itself; yet one by no means suitable to the context; and it would indispensably require the Article, and also some substantive added. There can be little doubt that both νόμῳ and νόμον refer to one and the same thing. By which, as Schott observes, we obtain a weightier sentiment, namely, "per ipsam legem mortuus sum (renuntiare didici) lege." Διὰ νόμου, however, even by those who take νόμῳ and νόμον of the same thing, is explained in more than one way.

Many ancient and modern Expositors (as Chrys., Theophyl., and Abp. Newc.) explain it "by the tenour of the law itself, which foretels that better covenant which Christ has introduced, I am wholly freed from observing the law." I would rather interpret it with Calvin, Beza, Pareus, Semler, Winer and Schott, "by the very nature of the law," with allusion to its extreme strictness, and the extent and minuteness of the law, which left no hope of fulfilling what it required. The sense is well unfolded by Crell.; who after observing that διὰ νόμου is said, “ad minuendam dicti invidiam,” assigns the sense thus, q. d.: “Ipsa lex mihi causa fuit, ut eam desererem—quia nimis rigide mecum egit, ita ut per eam non possem justificationem adipisci, quin potius sua voce me damnavit; adegit igitur me, ut alio me conferrem, et eam disciplinam amplecterer, per quam et longe melior, quam eram sub lege, et longe felicior evaderem, hoc est, justificationem consequer.”

It is strange that Bp. Middl. should so strenuously contend for νόμῳ and νόμου being rendered “law” (i. e. law of every kind) merely because there is no Article. For as the Mosaic Law is, in a great measure, the subject of the whole context, the Article might very well be omitted as unnecessary. And consistency requires the same thing to be meant throughout, as the Apostle is arguing in continuity. It is true, indeed, that the Apostle does frequently inculcate that the defect of all law is its inevitable condemnation of imperfect obedience; but that could not well have been introduced here.

—ἵνα Θεῷ ζήσω.] These words are added in order (as Crell. observes) to suggest that his purpose in dying to the Law, was not to lead a more lawless and careless life, but to live unto God; i. e. to serve, honour, and obey him, by the profession of the Law of grace, and the performance of all those good works which are required by Him. Thus the expression is nearly equivalent to that at v. 20. ζῆν ἐν πίστει τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ. Borger compares Dionys. Hal. iii. 17. εὐσεβὲς ποιεῖτε, τῷ πατρὶ (to me, your father) ζῶντες, καὶ οὐδὲν ἀνευ τῆς ἐμῆς γνώμης διαπραττόμενοι.

20. In this ver. the Apostle more fully dilates on the sentiment of the preceding one. Χριστῷ συνεστ. may be rendered, “I have been crucified with Christ,” i. e., as Abp. Newc. explains, “I have been crucified, as it were, together with Christ, to a law of works and therefore of transgressions.” The Apostle, as Borger observes, comparing the death just mentioned with that of Christ on the cross. The best comment here supplied is the kindred passage of Rom. vi. 4. 6. vii. 4. Col. ii. 12. where see Notes. And the full meaning intended by the Apostle is well expressed by Schott in the following paraphrase: “Illa sentiendi agendique ratio tota, quam olim tenui, tanquam Judæus legi Mos. addictus de salute cogitans per legem impetranda, prorsus jam desit, ex quo Jesum Christum cognovi, nostra causa in cruce mortuum, quo pignore sancto gratiæ divinæ homini respicienti propitiæ nos certiores redderet veniæ peccatorum, abrogata illa quæ putabatur victimarum ad Deum placandum necessitate, et indefesso virtutis studio sancte obstringeret homines sibi addictos.” So (Winer remarks) we have συνεσταύρωται τῷ Χριστῷ in Rom. vi. 4. Col. ii. 12. And similar is the passage at Rom. vi. 6. ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος συνεσταυρώθη. Thus the sense, he adds, is as follows: “Omnis vita, quam ego antehac tanquam Judæus egi, adeoque omnia studia et officia, quibus ista vita regebatur (τὸ ζῆν τῷ νόμῳ, τῇ ἀμαρτίᾳ, τῇ σαρκί) nulla amplius sunt: novam nunc, ut homo Christianus, ingressus sum vitam (τὸ ζῆν τῷ Θεῷ, τῷ Χριστῷ, τῇ πίστει).” This interpretation is supported by the authority of Chrys., Theophyl., Ecumen., and of the moderns, Est., who, closely following them, well explains, “per baptismum, qui symbolum est mortis et sepulture Christi; Christo commortuus sum, et consepultus sum.” By Grot., Par., and Menoch., a modified view is adopted.

—ζῶ δὲ—Χριστός.] The sense may be, as it is usually, explained, “Yet I live; [or rather] not live, but Christ liveth in me.” If this view be correct, there is in οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ a sort of epanorthosis as at 1 Cor. xv. 10. ἐκοπίασα, οὐκ ἐγὼ, ἀλλ’ ἡ χάρις. Yet here we have, not οὐκ, but οὐκ ἔτι: and it is therefore better, with several eminent Translators and Expositors, to suppose it to mean, “Vivo autem non amplius ego.” A view of the sense supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., “et deinceps nequaquam ego vivo.” The sentiment may, with Winer, be thus expressed: “I do live by myself and by my own powers, but Christ wholly rules me [by the influences of His Spirit and grace—Ed.], as the principle of a new life; so that I live unto God and Christian piety.” See Theophyl.

The next words are exegetical of the preceding clause, and the sense may be thus expressed, with Schott: “Quod autem nunc vivo (i. e. vita qualem nunc habeo et ago) carne præditus (hæc vita mea terrestris quæ in oculis cadit oppos. invisib. et æterna) id vivo in fide habita Filii Dei, i. e. hæc vita quæ mea dici possit tota versatur in fiducia lætissima in Filio Dei collocata.” Or, “This life in the flesh I lead not on carnal principles, but subserviently to faith in the Son of God, depending solely upon Him, and the atonement made by the sacrifice of himself for me unto salvation, and abandoning all legal justification.” See Borger and Tittm. in Rec. Syn. The expression ζῆν ἐν τῷ is well explained by Rosenm., Borger, and Winer, se totum componere ad, &c. In τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντός με—ἐμοῦ there is (as Koppe and Borger observe) an Hendiadys for “who so loved me, as to yield himself up to death for me.”

21. οὐκ ἀθετῶ τὴν χ. τ. Θ., &c.] The sense of the passage is, from brevity, somewhat obscure; and it may best be represented in a paraphrase, as follows: “By thus arguing, I do not frustrate the grace of God in the Gospel [which I should do, if I were to aim at obtaining justification by the Law]; for if justification in the sight of God, so as to be admitted into covenant with him, and consequently to become heirs of future glory (v. 5.), can arise from observing the Law, then there was another way to the divine favour on earth and in heaven than by the death of Christ; then the old covenant of the law superseded the necessity of the new covenant by Christ." Of ὡρεᾶν the full sense is well expressed by Schott thus, "causâ idoneâ, cur miseretur (si δικαιοσύνη per legem impetrari posset), non prægressâ."

III. Having previously vindicated his Apostleship and doctrine by a statement of facts, the Apostle now proceeds to speak more authoritatively, and comes closer home to the point; entering more fully into the subject of the abrogation of the law. He argues 1. with reference to the case of the Galatians; 2. from that of Abraham; showing the Law to have been only preparatory to the Gospel. Then, further to excite the attention of those whom he is addressing, he apostrophises them; employing an epithet, which need not be pressed upon, even could it be proved (which I have in Recens. Syn. shown, it has not) that the Galatians were a stupid people; for insult we cannot suppose to have been intended. See Note on Acts xvii. 22. In short, they are called ἀνόητοι simply with reference to the levity and inconstancy whereby they had deserted the doctrines of the Apostle, which they had professed and engaged to follow; being so foolish as to suffer themselves to be deceived by the arts of false teachers. Thus Themistius ascribes to them the same characteristics as those of their ancestors the Galli (and transmitted to their posterity the modern French), namely, a quickness of apprehension, but united with levity and inconstancy.

1. τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε.] Render, "Who hath fascinated you." Hyperius ap. Borger remarks: "Fascinare propriè dicuntur, qui sic imponunt humanis sensibus, et præcipuè oculis, ut aliâ formâ res appareant, quàm re verâ se habeant." And Borger thinks this is alluded to in the κατ' ὄφθ. just after. There may, rather, be an allusion to the power popularly ascribed to the evil eye. Be that as it may, the force of ἐβάσκ. may best be seen by considering its derivation, which (notwithstanding what has been alleged) is doubtless from the old verb βάσκω, to talk: and as the form—αἰνώ is (like the Hebrew Conj. Pihel) intensive; thus it means to chatter, or mutter: and magic incantations were usually gabbled over. So Milton, Com. 817.—

"Without his rod reversed,

And backward mutters of dissembling power."

At all events, the charm was supposed to be, partly at least, worked by the muttering over a certain form of words (usually in a rude kind of poetry; and adapted to be either said or sung). So Hor. Ep. i. l. 34. Sunt verba et voces, &c., where see Doering. Ἐβάσκανε seems to be an Hellenistic form, for the purer Greek ἐβάσκημε, which is, indeed, found in some of the more recent MSS. and the Ed. Princ. and Erasm.; but is doubtless a correction. Τῇ ἀλ. μὴ πείθ. is dependent on ὥστε understood. By μὴ πείθ. τῇ ἀλ. is meant, as Grot. observes, not retaining the true doctrine once delivered to them, namely, justification through Christ alone. This clause is, however, omitted in several ancient MSS. of the Western recension, some Versions, and many Fathers; and is, perhaps with reason, rejected by most Critics, and cancelled by Griesb., as introduced from v. 7.

—οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς—ἐστ.] Προγράφειν is a pictorial term, used with reference to paintings being publicly (προ) exhibited. But it is here used metaphorically; and the best Expositors are agreed that the sense is, "You, to whom the great doctrine of the crucifixion of Christ [and the atonement by his blood, and not the rites of the Mosaic law] has been so plainly set forth [and fully expounded both in its causes and effects]:" which had been done partly by preaching (see 1 Cor. i. 23. and ii. 2.) and partly in the lively representation of Christ crucified, in the Eucharist. In οἷς—ἐν ὑμῖν there may be, as is usually supposed, a pleonasm (such, indeed, as is common to the popular phraseology in most languages:) or rather, perhaps, according to the opinion of Schott, as "verba priora figurate enunciaverant (οἷς—προεγράφη) explicatur deinde ac definitur sermone proprio, ἐν ὑμῖν, in animis quippe vestris."

2. τοῦτο μόνον θέλω μαθεῖν, &c.] From the examples adduced by Wets., this appears to have been a common formula, resorted to in order to bring any argument to a speedy decision, as being of itself sufficient to determine it. I have in Rec. Syn. shown that by τὸ Πν. must (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) be understood the gifts of the Spirit, both ordinary and extraordinary; though, of course, the latter, namely, the supernatural gifts, must be chiefly intended. And this is confirmed by the use of the Article, which Bp. Middl. justly supposes to denote notoriety, q. d. the well-known gifts. As to the gloss of some recent Commentators (as Mor., Koppe, and Rosenm.), "animum Christianum," it is refuted, and the common interpretation placed beyond doubt by the words of v. 5. ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα, καὶ ἐνεργῶν δυνάμεις ἐν ὑμῖν. where ἐν δυν. is plainly exegetical of the preceding.

Ἀκοῆς is not, as many Commentators imagine, put for ὑπακοῆς; but denotes the hearing, or being instructed in: and πίστ. signifies the Gospel, as being opposed to νόμον. So in 1 Thess. ii. 13. λόγον ἀκοῆς is equivalent to λόγον ἀκούμενον. The ἔργων is prefixed to νόμον, as in a kindred passage of Rom. ix. 32, in order to hint at the nature of the Law, as one of works; and ἀκοῆς, to πίστ., because, as the Apostle says, Rom. x. 17, "faith cometh by hearing [the word of God preached]."

3. ἐναρξάμενοι—ἐπιτελεῖσθε:] "After having begun in the Spirit, do ye finish with the flesh?" i. e. having begun with a spiritual and moral, are ye finishing with a carnal and ceremonial religion? do ye take up with those external reli-nances of the Law which were mere forms, and only typical of the internal and spiritual gifts of the Gospel?

4. τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῇ;] We have here another argument, the exact force of which depends upon the sense assigned to ἐπάθ., which is a word used not only of evil, but of good. Almost all the more recent Commentators have taken ἐπάθ. in a good sense,—of the favours and benefits before mentioned; i. e. Have ye received so many spiritual benefits, tokens of Divine favour, to no purpose? A sense very agreeable to the context, but, as Crell. shows, not required by it. He, with Bos and Wolf, has ably maintained the interpretation of the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, “have ye suffered so many evils?” i. e. persecutions. The great objection to the other is, that, although some few instances have been adduced from the Classical writers of πάσχω used, without the addition of εὔ or such like, in a good sense; yet not one has been produced from either the N. T. or the Sept. Whereas examples of πάσχειν in a bad sense, without any addition, are common in both the Scriptural and Classical writers. Besides, the εὔγε and εἰκῇ (scil. πεπ.) have more point according to the common interpretation; by which, too, the argument of the Apostle is more diversified. The phrase εἴ γε καὶ εἰκῇ must not be regarded (with many) as having the force of amplification (as if involving a sort of threat), but of mitigation (as is pointed out by Chrys., Theod., Theophyl., Œcum., Calvin, Est., Crell., and others); q. d. “If, indeed, [it should be proved by the event that] they have been suffered in vain [which I will not suppose].” Thus it is expressive of hope in them, that they would see their errors and amend them.

5. οὖν.] This particle is here resumptive, and may be rendered nou. Ἐπιχορ. is by most recent Commentators (even Koppe and Borger) regarded as a participle put for a finite verb, by an ellip. of ἦν. But it seems better to regard the sentence, with the ancients and most moderns, as highly elliptical; something in the latter member ἐξ ἔργων—πίστεως being to be supplied from the former one,—namely, ἐπιχωρήγησε from ἐπιχορηγῶν, and ἐνέργησε from ἐνεργῶν. The full sense is well expressed by Schott as follows: “Num qui (et universe) Spiritum vobis suppetitat et facultatem facta edendi insignia in vobis efficacem reddit (suppl. hæc vobis contingere jubet) ex operibus legi Mos. accommodatis, an ex auditione doctrinæ fidem (Christo hab.) postulantis?”

6—9. The Apostle here (as in Rom. iv. 1. seqq.) supports the doctrine of justification by faith, by a reference to the example of Abraham, the Father of the faithful, and illustrious for the many signal proofs he gave of faith in God. See the Note on the passage of Romans. Καθὼς must not be rendered, with Mackn., “seeing.” The word has here its usual illustrative and comparative force, and may be rendered quemadmodum. It also involves an οὕτως, with reference to the thing compared; q. d. “Even as Abraham had faith in God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness; so it is in your case.” You must have entire confidence in God: wherein the correspondence of the two cases especially consists.

7. οἱ ἐκ πίστεως.] This is supposed to be a phrase like οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς for οἱ περιτετμημένοι, and equivalent to οἱ πιστεύοντες. It seems, however, to be a stronger expression; meaning, “those who rest on faith,” genuine faith, as Abraham’s was, and rest on that only, as he did, and seek to be justified alone by it; they are alone the true [spiritual] children of Abraham. On the force of οἱ see Note on Romans iv. 1, and Rom. ix. 7.

8. Quod in genere docuerat Apostolus, homines nimirum justificari ex fide, non secus atque Abrahamus; id nunc nominatim etiam de gentibus scripture testimonio docet: ne quis forte putet, justificationem ex fide, quæ Abrahamo contigerit, et ejus semini promissa fuerit, ad gentes nihil pertinere. (Crell.) By ἡ γραφή must be understood, per prosopopœiam, the Holy Spirit, who inspired the words; as Rom. iv. 3. John vii. 38. Προϊδούσα, having foreseen and foreknown. Δικαιοῖ, “is to justify;” i. e. would justify. A not uncommon sense of the present tense. Προεηγγ. τῷ Ἀ. The sense is, “announced before [the giving of the Law, nay, even before the birth of Isaac] the glad tidings.” Προεηγγ. is a very rare term; but it is found in Philo.

—ἐνευλογηθήσονται—ἔθνη.] The citation is founded neither on the Hebrew nor the Sept.; and indeed is, Borger thinks, formed from two different passages, ἐνευλογ. ἐν σοὶ from Gen. xii. 3, and πάντα τὰ ἔθνη from Gen. xxii. 18. where τῆς γῆς is added. Instead of εὐλ., ἐνευλογ. is rightly edited by Wets, Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Vat., and Winer, from many MSS. and all the early Editions. Ἐν σοὶ, ἡ; i. e., as Newc. explains, by the birth of Christ among thy descendants.

9. ὥστε οἱ ἐκ πίστεως—Ἀβρ.] The Apostle here simply repeats the general conclusion at v. 7. Render: “So then those [only] who have a like genuine faith with the believing Abraham are to be blessed [with him];” viz. by having their faith counted for righteousness. “The Apostle (observes Warburton, Works vi. 14) is here convincing the Galatians, that the Gospel of Christ is founded on the same principle with that which justified Abraham,—namely, Faith."

10—14. Here the Apostle urges other arguments in proof of the doctrine of justification by faith. And first he shows, that those who sought to be justified by their observance of the law, so far from obtaining the blessedness of Abraham, abode under the curse of the law, and were liable to divine punishment. There is, as Borger says, this enthymeme implied: "Those who trust to the law for salvation must completely observe it; for vengeance is denounced against the transgressors of it. But all have transgressed it; therefore all are liable to its punishment." Or we may, with Schott, suppose the γὰρ to refer to some clause left understood, and thus to be filled up: ["Nec alia esse potest ratio impetrandæ conditionis hominum Deo probatorum.] Lex enim cujus observatione Judæi confidunt, nonnisi pænæ divinæ obnoxios reddidit homines." Ἐξ ἔργων νόμου must, from the force of the context, mean "those who depend upon the works of the law for salvation." There is an allusion to the οἱ ἐκ πίστεως at v. 7 & 9. Ὑπὸ κατάραν ε., "are under curse," namely, that of the broken law; are ἐπικατάρατοι, as in the passage of the O. T. then quoted, to show the reason of the thing. The citation does not quite correspond with either the Hebr. or Sept.; but the sense is the same. Ἐμμένειν is used both in the Scriptural and Classical writers with a Dative of some noun expressing, or implying, engagement, or obligation, and may be rendered "to abide by an engagement, continue in its observance." Τοῦ ποιῆσαι is equivalent to εἰς τὸ, or ὥστε π.

11. ὅτι δὲ—δῆλον.] Here is added another argument to prove that no man is justified by the law. The δὲ may be rendered autem, or porro. Ἐν νόμῳ, "by the observance of the law as a condition." Δικ. is nearly equivalent to the εὐλογεῖσθαι at v. 9. Δῆλον scil. ἐστὶ, (viz. as Abp. Newc. explains) "from the tenuous of the Christian covenant." This the Apostle fortifies from the words of the Prophet. At ὅτι sub. γέγραπται. The passage is also cited at Rom. i. 17. and Hebr. x. 38. Some (as Macknight and Knapp) would construe: ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζῇς. But it is well observed by Bp. Middleton, that "that would require ὁ δικ. ὁ ἐκ. π. or else ὁ ἐκ πίστεως δικ., and would then yield a weak and inappropriate sense. Whereas to affirm that the good man, he whose obedience, though imperfect, is sincere, shall reap life everlasting from faith (as opposed to a law of works) and from faith alone, is a most important declaration; and it agrees exactly with the context." Bp. Warburton (Works Vol. v. p. 400.), ably states the argument in the following words: "That no one can obtain eternal life by virtue of the Law is evident from one of your own Prophets [Hab.] who expressly holds, that the just shall live by faith. Now, by the Law, no rewards are promised to faith, but to works only. The man that doeth them (says the Law in Levit.) shall live in them." "The Apostle (continues he) is showing that justification, or eternal life, is by faith. This he does even on the concession of a Jew, the Prophet Habakkuk, who expressly owns it to be by faith. But the Law, says the Apostle, attributes nothing to faith; but to deeds only; which if a man do, he shall live in them."

12. οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ πίστεως.] This means, "the law depends not upon faith," i. e. has nothing to do with faith. In οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως (where the π. is emphatic) is implied ἀλλ' ἐξ ἔργων. Though that is suggested in the following ἀλλὰ, which belongs, I conceive, both to the clauses omitted, and to the one to which it is affixed, where it may be rendered imo.

"Ἀνθρ. is wanting in several MSS. of the Western recension, and not a few Versions and Fathers, and is probably from the margin, being introduced either from the Sept. or from Rom. x. 5.

13. Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς—κατάρα.] Here we have a further argument, derived from the intent and object of Christ's death; q. d. "we are justified by faith, and not by the works of the law, because Christ has redeemed us;" literally, "hath bought us off from the curse of the law;" there being an allusion to the price paid. Ἐξαγοράζειν often signifies "to liberate a captive by the payment of his ransom;" where the ἐξ denotes the liberation. It is not agreed whether the ἡμᾶς has reference to the Jews only, and by "the law" be meant the law of Moses; or to both the Jews and the Gentiles, and by the law, the law of nature as well as the law of Moses, is to be understood. The latter opinion is ably maintained by Grot., Whitby, and Mackn., and is greatly preferable. Γενόμενος, "by becoming." Κατάρα is for κατάρματος, (abstr. for concrete), obnoxious to punishment. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv. well paraphrases thus: "Christ hath redeemed us from that general curse which lay upon all men for the breach of any part of the Law, by taking upon himself that particular curse laid only upon them who underwent a certain punishment of the Law to which was affixed a crime." Deut. xxi. 23.

14. ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, &c.] These words are closely connected with the ἐξηγόρασεν, &c. a little before; and the sense is, "with the intent that the blessing [promised to the posterity] of Abraham [of justification by faith] might come, by (or through) Jesus Christ, unto the Gentiles [also]." ἵνα τὴν—πίστεως. Render, "that so we (both Jews and Gentiles) might receive the promise of the Spirit (i. e. the promised Spirit) through faith," i. e. (as Abp. Newc. explains) on the sole condition of faith. See Rom. iv. 9, 16. The ἵνα denotes result.

15—18. Here the Apostle further illustrates the argument from the nature of the Abrahamic covenant. "He means (says Borger) to show, that this covenant, or promise, was in no respect made void; and that the law subsequently promulgated has by no means taken away its force."

—κατὰ ἄνθρ. λέγω.] An idiom also occurring in Rom. iii. 5. vi. 19. 1 Cor. ix. 8. and frequent in the Rabbinical writers, signifying "to make use of an example drawn from the common practice of men." The Commentators need not so many of them have stumbled at the ὅμως, or wished to read ὁμῶς. See Note on 1 Cor. xiv. 7. It is rightly rendered by Borg., Win., and Schott, quamvis, and in our common version though: a signification often found in the Classical writers. In such cases, the difficulty arises from two clauses being blended together, and the true force of the word is best seen by dividing them. Thus here: No one disannuls or alters a covenant, though it be that of a man's covenant. Ἀθετεῖ, for ἄκυροί at v. 17. Ἐπιδιатάσσεται is rightly explained by Schleus. and Borg., "adds new and contrary conditions or stipulations." So Joseph. Bell. ii. 3. uses ἐπιδιатήκη. Here διαθήκη is by most explained fœdus; by some, testamentum. The former interpretation is preferable. But Win. seems to best express the sense by the general term dispositionem, which will include both fœdus and testamentum. Κεκυρ., "when established by attestation."

16. τῷ δὲ Ἀβρ.] The example is now applied to the promise or covenant of God with Abraham. The plural in ἐπαγγ. may be supposed to regard the repetition of the original engagement. To the Apostle's interpretation of τῷ σπέρματι, and to the mode of taking σπέρμασι, adopted by him, several recent Commentators have the presumption to take exception; maintaining that σπέρμα in the promise to Abraham is not meant, as Paul takes it, of the Messiah, but of Christians in general. But the former view (which was adopted by almost all the ancient Expositors) is ably vindicated by Beza, Whitby, and especially Koppe, Borger, and Schott; who have shown that the interpretation is found in the Rabbinical writers, and that the mode of argumentation here adopted is quite Jewish, and therefore suitable to the occasion; and, moreover, that this does not at all affect the general argument,—since the Apostle only asks this postulate, that the promises made to Abraham had all of them a reference to the Messiah. As to the assertion made by recent Commentators, that σπρ and σπέρμα were never used in the plural, except to denote the seeds of vegetables, is untenable. The use of the O. T. will not prove that σπρ was never used to denote sons, or families. And as to σπέρμα, it is used elsewhere in the plural for sons in Soph. Ed. C. 599, and occasionally, in the sense races or families. The sense is well stated by Mr. Scott as follows: "Neither did the Lord include all the descendants of Abraham in those promises, as so many distinct kinds of seed: but they were limited to him, and his Seed, in the singular number, which implied that Christ was principally meant, and others only as related to him, and regarded as one with him." "Ὁς has reference to σπέρματι, with which it agrees in sense."

17. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω] q. d. "I mean by that example to show," &c. It is a formula occurring in 1 Cor. i. 12. and elsewhere. The προ in προκ. means "before the existence of the Mosaic Law." Εἰς Χρ., "with respect to Christ and his salvation." As to the chronological question connected with the number 430, it is of no consequence to the Apostle's argument; but it is, I think, sufficiently settled by supposing (with most Expositors) that the Apostle is computing not from the ratification, but from the original making of the promise, mentioned at Gen. xii. 3.

—οὐκ ἄκυροί] literally, "does not annul," i. e. cannot annul. Εἰς τὸ, for ὥστε. Καταργεῖν is thought by some a Cilicicism. But it may be rather regarded as a provincialism in general.

18. This contains the ground of the foregoing assertion,—namely, that God cannot be supposed to have altered his own sayings; so that, after having first held out a promise to Abraham, with a condition annexed, he should then have caused the obtaining of it to be conjoined with the very difficult observance of the Law. By ἡ κληρονομία is meant the blessing mentioned at v. 14, salvation secured, as by inheritance, on Abraham, and believers in general. At ἐκ νόμου sub. ἐστὶ, "does not come by the observance of the Law [or by our own works and merits.]"

—οὐκέτι ἐξ ἐπαγγ., &c.] i.e. (as Mr. Holden explains) "it is not obtained by the promise of God to Abraham, that it should come through Jesus Christ." "The reason (says Abp. Newc.) is, because obedience to law makes reward a matter of debt; whereas, in fact, the inheritance, or Abraham's reward, was a free gift by promise." The sense of the verse is admirably illustrated by Bp. Bull in his Harm. Apost. p. 46. He shows why the Apostle here places the Law in opposition to the Promise, and points out the real scope; which (as Beza saw) was to tacitly meet an objection on the part of the Jews, as to what had been said in the verse preceding; q. d. "the Law and the promise cannot stand together, nempe ut hæreditas ex Lege simul et promissione detur; cum justitia Legis (loquitur κατ' ἀνθρώπου, v. 15) meritum inducat et gratiam excludat, adeoque gratuita promissioni repugnet, nempe si Lex justificandi causâ data fuisset." Κεχάρι. is used, and not ἐδίδου, either to suggest the gracious kindness of God, or that it was made gratis, and without merit; or both. See Bp. Bull, ubi supra. Δι' ἐπαγγ., by virtue of a positive promise, or engagement.

19. Here an objection is anticipated, and the answer given. Τί οὖν ὁ νόμος; "What purpose, then, did the Law answer?" and why promulgated, if justification be not of works, but of faith? The answer is: τῶν παραβ. χάριν προσετέθη, where by παραβάσεων χάριν, according to the best Expositors, is meant, either that the Jews might be preserved from idolatry and its concomitant vices, and the worship of God be preserved till the coming of Christ; or, that they might be convicted of sin in committing those vices (the heinous nature of sin being by the Law set in the strongest point of view, and the power of conscience roused. See Rom. iii. 20.); and that thus they might be taught to seek after a more effectual method of obtaining pardon; meaning, says Calvin, "Legem latam fuisse, ut transgressionibus palam faceret, eoque modo homines cogeret ad cognitionem sui reatus." Thus the Law (as St. Paul to the Romans says) was given "to detect transgressions," to "make them abound," v. 20; so that sin "should appear to be sin." Schott well annotates thus: "Maluit παραβάσεις scribere quæ ἀμαρτία, propterea quod ἀμαρτία lege accurate cognita, cui jam resisteret cupiditas humana in vetitum nitendi, majori evidētia naturam suam perversam et prorsus damnandam declarabant, quæ habent tanquam violationes voluntatis divinæ lege declarata." In short, to use the words of Mr. Scott, "the moral law was useful to convince men of sin, to show them their need of repentance, of mercy, and of a Saviour;

the Ceremonial Law shadowed forth the way of acceptance and holiness; and believers were thus enabled to maintain communion with God by faith in the promised Messiah." The words ἄχρισ οὐ ἔλθῃ (where supply ὥστε διαμένειν) suggest that the Law was only intended to be temporary, and preparatory to the Gospel (as in many respects shadowing it forth, and showing its necessity), to be ushered in when the Seed, i. e. the Messiah (see supra v. 16.) should come, unto whom both Jews and Gentiles being engrafted by faith, should become the spiritual seed of Abraham. Instead of προσετέθη, 5 MSS. of the Western recension, the Vulg., and other Latin Versions, and some Fathers, chiefly Latin, have ἐτέθη, which is preferred by Mill, Beng., and Borger, and edited by Griesb., Knapp, and Winer. But the authority adduced is far too weak; and the reading is plainly an alteration of those who did not perceive the force of the προσ., which, as is well pointed out by Bp. Warburton, Works, vol. v. p. 5, is this: "it was superadded to the Abrahamic covenant, and introduced between that and the Christian dispensation." So Rom. v. 20. νόμος παρεσλήσθη, where see Note. Some, however, of the correctors and critics, above alluded to, seem to have rejected the προσ., as thinking that προστιθῆμι is no where else used of a law. That, however, would be no good reason for cancelling it. But, in fact, the phrase προστιθέναι νόμον occurs at least twice, as far as my own knowledge extends (and probably in more cases), namely, Herodot. ii. 136. and Thucyd. ii. 35. Ἐπήγγελλται may be taken impersonally, or ἐπαγγελία supplied from ἐπαγγελίας just before. The words διαταγείς δι' ἀγγέλων are closely connected with προσετέθη. Render, "promulgated by or through the intervention of the angels;" the meaning of which will appear from the Note on Acts vii. 53. ἐλάβετε τὸν νόμον εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγέλων. Ἐν χ. μεσίτου, "by the intervention of a mediator or intermedium, namely (as Theodoret and the best modern Expositors have seen), Moses." It has been fully shown by Schoettg. in loc., that μεσίτης, the Mediator, was the common appellation given to Moses in the Rabbinical writers; by whom the Law is often said to have been given "by his hand as mediator."

20. ὁ δὲ μεσίτης—εἰς ἐστίν.] This is confessedly one of the most obscure passages in the N. T., and perhaps above all others "vexatus ab interpretibus;" for Winer affirms that there are no less than 250 modes of explanation, which are stated and reviewed by Koppe, Borger, Keil, Bonitz, Weigand, and Schott.

Some, by ὁ μεσ., understand a mediator, or umpire, generally: others, some one in particular,—as Moses, or Christ. There is plainly an ellipsis at ἐνός; which some supply by μέρους, others by γένους, ἔθνους, νόμου, or πράγματος, according to the peculiar view taken of the scope of the Apostle. Again, the εἰς is by some taken μεσίτης ἑνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν· ὁ δὲ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν. Ὁ οὖν νόμος 21

κατὰ τῶν ἐπαγγελιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ; Μὴ γένοιτο! εἰ γὰρ

of number,—one, i. e. one only; by others, for ὁ αὐτός, “one and the same,” i. e. immutable. Under these circumstances, it is impossible, in a work of this nature, to do more than advert to the grounds on which any interpretation may be founded, and point out that which seems to bid the fairest to be the true one. Previously to doing this, I shall beg to lay before the reader seven Rules of interpretation, which are laid down by Prof. Schott, and which may serve as a clue through the labyrinth of jarring interpretations, and, by showing what is not the true one, may guide the inquirer to what is so.

1. “The words ὁ δὲ μεσίτης here express the universal notion of any mediator, as the expressions John x. 3. ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλός; and Rom. i. 17. ὁ δὲ δίκαιος, [on which use of the Article, whereby it is subservient to hypothesis, see Bp. Middl. Ch. iii. § 2. and Winer’s Gr. Gr. p. 91. Ed. 3.] and therefore do not suggest the idea of any one in particular; certainly not Christ, but rather Moses. For although what is said merely concerns any mediator, yet the Apostle doubtless meant what is here affirmed to be applied to what had been just said of the Mosaic Law promulgated by a mediator. 2. That connection of the words which, at the first glance, spontaneously presents itself, namely, ὁ μεσίτης (subject) ἑνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν (predicate) is to be adhered to by expositors, and not to be changed for any other, when there is no urgent necessity. 3. The Genitive ἑνὸς must necessarily be referred to the Genitive of some substantive to be supplied in thought. Care, however, must be taken not to supply what neither the nature and disposition of the thing spoken of, nor the series orationis, may seem to spontaneously bring in. 4. The connection of each member of the sentence, and the nature of the Apostle’s style of argumentation, requires that in each member of the sentence the signification of εἷς should be the same. 5. The one member in like manner as the other either contains an universal sentiment to be transferred to the present case, or contains an enunciation pertaining to certain times. 6. Even if it should be granted, that the former contains an universal sentiment, which, agreeably to the meaning of the Apostle, ought to be transferred to the question concerning the Law of Moses, yet the Apostle is by no means to be supposed to have said in the latter member what was only to be applied to the question as to the promise given to Abraham. Nay, by the words ὁ δὲ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν he meant to affirm something universal; which either, in like manner as the former enunciation, ought to be transferred to the Mosaic Law only; or must be transferred at once to the Law and the promise. Otherwise, the argumentation which is intimated at v. 20 would be neither sufficiently perspicuous, nor would it well cohere. 7. The first words of the verse following (21) ὁ οὖν νόμος κατὰ τῶν ἐπαγγελιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ (an interrogation succeeded by a form of serious denial, μὴ γένοιτο!) certainly require that the whole of v. 20 should be supposed to contain a primary sentiment, of that kind which gave occasion to the interrogation proposed and refuted in the subsequent verse. Moreover, the negation μὴ γένοιτο so takes up the interrogation before propounded, that it is plain that this interrogation has by no means the force of denial, but is a mere doubt, proceeding from some one who, using such a kind of argument as is contained in v. 20, would be justified in collecting that the promise given to Abraham might be taken away by the Law subsequently given.”

Having applied the severe test of these seven rules of interpretation, to almost all the expositions which have any claim to attention in themselves, or from the celebrity of the scholars who have proposed them, the learned Professor concludes with rejecting them all, as almost universally unfounded. To these my limits forbid me to advert, except to notice that one which seems to be least objectionable, and was supported by Paræus, Crell., Capell., Locke, Whitby, and others since their time, as Noesselt and A. Clarke, and which may be expressed in the following paraphrase: “Now a mediator is not [cannot in the nature of things be] a mediator of one [party only in any covenant], but of two [at least]. But God, who gave the promises to Abraham, is one party only [belonging to the Abrahamic covenant]; q. d. the other party (consisting of believers of all nations, Gentiles as well as Israelites) was not concerned in the promulgation of the law; and therefore the original covenant, not having been dissolved by both the contracting parties, remains in full force.” Even this, however, will, I apprehend, not quite stand the test above adverted to. Upon the whole, the most satisfactory view of the sense seems to be that propounded by the very learned framer of the above rules, in the following Note: “The intent of the Apostle is, I conceive, to affirm the superior authority and dignity of the Sinaitical Dispensation above any human covenant, from a consideration of the nature (not, indeed, of the Lawgiver, Moses, but) of God, the Author of the Law. And though the expression εἷς, viewed by itself alone, would not signify any thing or person unchangeable, yet this idea of one is all-consistent, and who ever remains the same, may very well, in a context like the present, be united with the proper and usual signification of the word. Compare Rom. iii. 30. Philipp. i. 27. In vv. 15, 17, seqq. mention had been made of the alteration, or abrogation of a Dispensation or Covenant. These things considered, there is surely no objection to assigning to the word εἷς in both members of v. 20, the sense of immutability or perfect consistency. With respect to the expression εἶναι τινος, it is here, I conceive, used in the same signification as at 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 4. a partibus alicujus stare, ei addictus esse, to be of any one’s party. Thus the sense will be: “A mediator indeed belongs not to one person or party only (and that unchangeable);” q. d. “in human concerns, where a mediator is wanting, there are of course two parties between whom a mediator may act, whether the transaction be between two persons only, or there be a large number of persons constituting either or both parties. Hence, from the Sinaitical Law being promulgated ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου (v. 19) it does not follow that it is of perpetual authority. And yet God is one,—he remains ever a God unchangeable; the covenant of the Sinaitical Dispensation was not of human, but Divine authority; nor did it depend on the will of man, but of God, who is unchangeable."

21. A doubt is now brought forward, arising from what the Apostle had said at v. 20 respecting the authority of the Sinaitical law, as evinced from the nature of God; namely, whether the Sinaitical law, being of divine authority and command, was meant to so limit (or change) the promise given to Abraham, that that should no longer be a promise, of which the fulfilment belonged only to the free grace of God. This doubt the Apostle removes, by giving them to understand, that although each Dispensation of God (the Law and the Promise) is different in its own nature and efficacy from the other, yet that there is no such inconsistency between them as that the Law should take away the promise; nay, that each coheres with the other, by a connection divinely ordained, whereby the Law served to pave the way for the Christian Dispensation; that the Law does not interfere with the promise, but tends to confirm it. (Schott.) Winer has shown that εἰ γὰρ ἔδοξεν, "if it had been given," implies at the end of the sentence a clause expressing, that that was not the case (see Note on Rom. vii. 9, 10. and iii. 23.): so far from being contrary thereto, it was promotive of it; it was good in itself, and suitable to the ends proposed; but was only an inferior covenant, which was not intended to give salvation to sinners, as all men are.

22. ἄλλὰ συνέκλεισεν—ἁμαρτίαν.] The sense is, "Nay [so far from that] the Scriptures declare all men [of all nations, both Jews and Gentiles] to be sinners [and therefore amenable to wrath and punishment]." Συνέκλεισε is by many explained, "has included." This, however, appears too feeble a sense. It is better interpreted, by Borger and Winer, "has shown or declared all to be subject to the dominion of sin, brought under it;" just as in Rom. vii. sin is compared to a tyrant, who holds men captive, and to whose dominion all are subject. So Demosth. uses κατακλείειν τῷ νόμῳ. See more in the Note on Rom. xi. 32. Τὰ πάντα, the Commentators say, is for τοὺς πάντας. But perhaps the Apostle had in mind the ἔθνη, and accommodated the gender thereto. In ἐκ πίστεως there is no pleonasm of πίστεως, but ἐκ πίστ. is for ἡ ἐκ πίστ. οὐσα. Render, "in order that the promised blessing, which depends on faith in Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe in him."

23. Having refuted the foregoing objections, the Apostle proceeds to show the use and intent of the law. Πρὸ τοῦ ἔλθ. τὴν πίστιν, "before the faith (i. e. the dispensation which requires faith in Christ as indispensable, or the Gospel covenant) was introduced." See Rom. iii. 27. xi. 6. The words following ἐφρουρούμεθα συγκεκ. are illustrative of the metaphor in the preceding, the comparison being "persons shut up in a place from which they cannot get out." "The words (Winer says) may be interpreted in two ways; φρουρ. συγκ. is either 'lege Mos. obstricti tenebamur, tanquam præsidiō, usque ad,' &c., or, 'lege obstricti custodi-ebamur, asservabamur in,' &c.; as 1 Pet. i. 4. τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους εἰς σωτηρίαν. The latter sense is preferable, especially as it may, in some measure, include the former. Εἰς τὴν μέλλ. πίστ. ἀποκ. signifies 'until the promulgation of the faith, which was afterwards to be revealed.'"

24. ὥστε ὁ νόμος—Χριστόν.] As the law was before compared to a school, so it is here likened to a παιδαγωγός, by which term, the best Expositors have been long agreed, is not meant a schoolmaster (for that would have been διδάσκαλος), but the pedagogue or person (usually a freedman, or slave) who conducted children to and from school (whence their appellation), attended them out of school hours, formed their manners, superintended their moral conduct, and in various respects prepared them for the διδάσκαλος. See Chrys. cited by Borger. The leading idea here intended, is that of bringing unto, and preparing for (as the Law did in respect of the Gospel, namely, by its doctrines, moral precepts, types and prophecies, all leading men to the Gospel, by showing the imperfection, and the impracticability of performing a law of works. See Note on Matt. v. 17.); hinting also at the restraint and discipline under which boys were held till they reached manhood, and at the necessarily defective knowledge until then communicated to them; as if those under the law were νήπιοι compared to the τέλειοι of the Gospel.

25. οὐκέτι ὑπὸ παιδ.] i. e. because it is no longer necessary to us, and therefore no longer obligatory upon us; as in the case of boys when grown up. The better covenant being established, the introductory one ceases.

26. πάντες] i. e. all of every nation, both Jews and Gentiles. By υἱοὶ ἐστε is meant, "are admitted to a sort of sonship by adoption," with the adjunct notion of liberty from unnecessary restraint.

27. ὅσοι γὰρ—ἐνεδ.] The sense is: "For as many of you as, having received baptism, profess the Christian doctrine [whether circumcised or uncircumcised], are united with Christ by the closest bond." See Calvin, Koppe, and Borg. On the phrase ἐνδύσασθαι Χρ. see Note on Rom. xiii. 14.

28. οὐκ ἐνι, &c.] The general sense is, "there is under the Gospel no discrimination in privileges, no distinction of nation, nor of condition or sex, but ye are all one family, by the religion of Christ Jesus—all alike entitled to the same benefits, those of sincere believers."

29. εἰ ὑμεῖς Χρ.] scil. υἱοί. Τοῦ Ἀ. σπέρμα, i. e. the true spiritual seed. Καὶ κατ' ἐπαγγ. κληρ., "and heirs by Divine promise [of the blessings attached thereto]," without any need of legal performances.

IV. 1. Λέγω δέ.] This formula (on which see Note at iii. 17.) serves to introduce a continuation of the argument, and an illustration of the reasoning in the preceding Chapter; first, comparing the state of God's Church under the law to that of a minor, whose father is dead; and who, though he be, by legal right, the owner of the whole inheritance,—yet, while in his minority, is in a situation little differing, in respect of restraint, from that of a servant; and so continues, until the period appointed by his father for putting him into possession of his inheritance. Νῆπιος is used in the sense minor, in the Classical writers (from Homer to Dionys. Ital.) as well as in the Scriptural ones. Ἐπιτρόπους καὶ οἰκον. should, I think, be rendered not tutors and governors, but guardians and managers. It is true that some difference of opinion exists. Many Expositors take ἐπιτρ. to signify tutors; while most are agreed that by οἰκ. are meant stewards. It is not, however, necessary to suppose (as many recent Commentators do), that because the minor is said to be under them, such οἰκονόμοι were care-takers of the minor, as well as stewards; for of that no sufficient proof is adduced. We may suppose the ὑπὸ to refer to the minor having no control over their management. Of both the ἐπιτρ. and οἰκον. we have mention in Gen. xxiv. 2. Compare xv. 2. At τῆς προθ. supply ἡμέρας, "the period previously fixed." The word often occurs in the later Classical writers. Τοῦ πατρὸς, for ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς; which is the better accounted for since προθ. being, in some measure, an adjective, may stand for a participle, and thus take a genitive.

3. ἡμεῖς] i. e. both Jewish and Gentile Christians. Νῆπιοι, i. e. children in the knowledge of God, unable to attain that accurate and complete knowledge of Divine things which pertains to the ἀνδρες τέλειοι mentioned in a kindred passage of Eph. iv. 14.

—στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου.] Στοιχεῖα denotes figuratively "the elements, or rudiments, of any branch of knowledge;" consequently what is superficial, and only suited to the less informed; not intended to be permanent, but to give way to the more complete knowledge of a further advanced period of study. See Col. ii. 8. Here it designates, in conjunction with the qualifying term τοῦ κόσμου, that state of religious knowledge, which subsisted both among Jews and heathens before Christ; and which was, from its rude and ceremonial nature (dealing chiefly in external and carnal institutions), suited indeed to the capacities of the recipients, but was only calculated to be temporary. How δεδουλ. is to be understood, will appear from the Note on iii. 26. The Apostle means to suggest the inference,—that, however useful might be the Law of Moses, or the law of nature (each as introductory dispensations, more or less perfect), the obligation to both must cease, when the more perfect religion of the Gospel was promulgated, by which both were alike superseded.

4, 5. Here St. Paul carries on the illustration drawn from the ἐπιτρ. and οἰκον., q. d. "For as the son is, for a time, subject to the governance of masters; but when the προθεσμία is accomplished, is, as it were, liberated, and becomes his own master; so we, so long attached τοῖς στοιχείοις τοῦ κόσμου, are liberated from them, by the Son of God being sent into the world for the purpose of delivering us." (Borger.)

—πλήρ. τοῦ χρόνου.] The phrase occurs also in Gen. xxv. 24. xxix. 21., and denotes the end of an appointed time. So πλήρ. τῶν καιρῶν, Eph. i. 10. Thus ὅτε πλήρ. τ. χρ. ἦλθε is equivalent to ὅτε ἐληρῶντο ὁ χρόνος. An expression occurring in the Classical as well as Scriptural writers. It here denotes the time appointed by the Father for delivering all nations from the bondage mentioned at v. 3. Ἐξαπ. is not synonymous with ἀπῆστ.; but is more significant. Γενόμενον, "born;" a signification found in Rom. i. 3; Gen iv. 25. and also in the Classical writers. Γενόμενος ἐκ γυν. is a Hebrew phrase formed on פָּנָה יָיִן in Job xiv. 1. and elsewhere. It here intimates that Christ was endued with the whole of the human nature. See Phil. ii. 7. Ὑπὸ νόμον some render "subjectum legi;" others, "sub lege;" i. e. for Ἰουδαίων. Both senses, however, may be included; the latter primarily, the former secondarily. Τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον, supply ὄντας, or δεδουλωμένους, from the preceding, "under the tyranny and condemnation of the Law;" whether of Moses or of nature. See Rom. iii. 20. Τὴν υἱοθ. See Note on iii. 26. and on Rom. viii. 15. 23.

6. ὅτι δὲ ἐστε υἱοί.] Wakef. and Borger explain, "And to show that ye are sons." The ellipsis, however, is not used by St. Paul. It is true that the Apostle seems to mean to assert their having received the Spirit as an evidence of their Sonship. But that may be implied as follows: "And since ye are sons, God has [in token thereof] sent" &c. Or we may, with Schott, regard this as a brief mode of expression, of which the full sense is, "That ye are sons, God hath himself shown, by sending to you his Holy Spirit." "The same argument (observes Mr. Locke) from their having the Spirit, St. Paul uses to the Romans, Rom. viii. 16. And on reading 2 Cor. v. 5, and Eph. i. 11—14. it will be found that the Spirit is looked upon as the seal and assurance of the inheritance of life to those who have received the adoption of sons." This will sufficiently defend the usual interpretation of τὸ Πνεῦμα against those recent Commentators, who lower it to "animus Christianus." Here the best ancient and modern Expositors alike recognise the express mention of the three persons of the Trinity, with the due distinction. "The Son (as Bp. Pearson observes) is distinguished from the Father, as first sent by Him; and the Spirit of the Son is distinguished both from the Father, and from the Son, as sent by the Father, after He had sent the Son. And this our Saviour hath taught us several times, John xiv. 26. xv. 26. Hence we conclude that the Holy Ghost, although He be truly and properly God, is neither God the Father, nor God the Son."

Κρᾶζον here signifies, "teaching and enabling us to cry out [in prayer]" with filial confidence, Ἀββᾶ! addressing God as a Father. See Rom. viii. 15. Perhaps there is an allusion to the distinction between Slaves and Sons, or others of the family,—that the former were not allowed to use the title of Abba in addressing the master of the family, while the latter enjoyed that privilege. Why the Chaldee term Ἀββᾶ should have been used as well as the Greek, Expositors are not agreed. The opinion of Winer seems most probable,—that the Chaldee term was used because the Jewish prayers ordinarily commenced with Ἀββᾶ; and that the Greek was meant for those who did not understand the Chaldee term.

7. Here we have the conclusion. See v. 1. Compare Rom. viii. 17. iii. 29. where see the Notes. The εἰ is supposed to be for ἔστε. But it should rather seem that the singular is adopted to make the application, by its individuality, more forcible. There is a similar transposition in Rom. xii. 19. 20. 1 Cor. iv. 6. sq. In the ὥστε it is implied, that the person in question has received the Holy Spirit given through the Son, to seal them as the children of God. Κληρ. Θ. signifies heir (i. e. a partaker) of the blessings bestowed by God on men through Christ, viz. justification and redemption;—which are very often denominated an inheritance, to denote certainty of possession.

8—10. Considering the dignity and excellence of this condition as sons of God, obtained for them by Christ, how highly, the Apostle now shows, is to be reprobated the temerity of those who again inclined to the former servile state; with reference, chiefly, to that part of the Galatian congregation which had formerly been Pagan. (Schott.)

There is here (as is indicated by the ἀλλά) a conversio sermonis; the Gentile Christians being especially addressed. In vv. 8. 9. there is a fine contrast drawn between the pristine state of the persons in question (when involved in gross idolatry, through ignorance of the nature of God), and their present condition, when knowing and being known of God. This is done to place in a strong point of view their folly in wishing to return to their former state of servitude to the Law.

—ἀλλά.] Of this particle no satisfactory account is given by the Commentators. It seems to belong to ἐδουλεύσατε taken a second time; the full sense being, "Ye did, indeed, then worship those who were no Gods; but however ye did it through ignorance of God; which ye have not now to plead." By the τότε is meant the time when they were ὑπὸ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου δεδουλ. v. 3. By τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὐσι Θεοῖς the ancient and many modern Expositors suppose are meant, "those who have no existence in nature," but are mere stocks and stones. The best modern ones, however, as Winer, render "iis, qui non naturā [sed ex hominum tantum opinione] Dei sunt," the λεγόμενοι Θεοὶ of 1 Cor. vii. 5. The latter interpretation is more agreeable to the words unless we read from some MSS., τοῖς φύσει μὴ οὐσι. But some eminent Critics are agreed that that is an altered reading; probably introduced from the Scholiasts. It is, however, not impossible that the Apostle intended both senses.

The μὲν of this verse and the δὲ of the next are adopted, in order the more forcibly to contrast their former with their present state. Μᾶλλον δὲ, ("or rather") is a formula corrigendi occurring also in Rom. viii. 34. and often in the Classical writers. Γνωσθέντες ὑπὸ Θεοῦ is rightly explained by Luther, Grot., Newc., and Winer, "recognised by God as his sons, and approved to be such by the Spiritual gifts imparted to them." See supra iii. 5. 1 Cor. viii. 3. 2 Tim. ii. 19. Wisd. iv. 1.

9. πῶς ἐπιστρέφ. &c.] "how is it that ye are turning back," &c. The Apostle expresses his wonder that they, who have been set free from the bondage of atheism, or polytheism, should return to bondage; even to a dispensation, which however of Divine institution, was not of sufficient efficacy to procure them salvation; for that is all that is meant by the ἀσθενῆ καὶ πτωχὰ, of which the latter is a further illustration under another metaphor, of the idea contained in the former. See Grot., Crell., Doddr., and Theophyl. How the Law of Moses was weak, appears from Heb. vii. 18. 19. x. i.; and how the law of nature was such, appears from the Epistle to the Romans, passim. For that the Apostle has both in view, is the opinion of the best Expositors. In πάλιν ἄνωθεν I would not, with Koppe and others, recognise a pleonasm for the simple πάλιν; though the forms πάλιν ἐκ δευτέρου and πάλιν αὖ might seem to countenance it. Here there is no necessity to resort to any such principle; for the context very well admits of the full sense, namely, "again, as at the first." Compare Wisd. xix. 6. We have here a kind of blending of two modes of expression; and on that principle, the complete sense of the passage is well expressed by Rambach and Schott thus: "Quicunque rudimentis illis egenis, quibus ante suam ad Christum conversionem addicti fuerant, iterum (πάλιν) servire volebant, hoc ita faciebant, ut redirent ad initia, elementa prima (ἄνωθεν), quæ elementa parum accommodata essent cognitioni emendatæ et dignitati Christianorum."

10. Here the Apostle illustrates by examples this δουλεῖν στοιχείοις πτωχοῖς.

— ἡμέρας—ἐνιαυτούς.] Render, "So then ye observe days and months, and times and years!" Ἡμ. refers to the Sabbaths; μῆνας, to the novilunial festivals; and ἐν. to the Sabbatical and Jubilee years, Passover, &c. By καιροὺς are supposed to be designated the stated festivals. Παρατηρεῖν here signifies, "to superstitiously observe, by scrupulously distinguishing certain days from other days." It properly signifies to keep the eye fixed upon (παρα) any person or thing, so as to watch the former, or attend to and observe the latter.

11. In φοβοῦμαι, &c. Borger and Winer think there is a kind of attraction; ὑμᾶς, which belongs to the clause following, being thrown back to the preceding one. Thus, by a very common Grecism, it may mean, "I am afraid I have bestowed on you labour in vain." Here, however, it is better not to resort to any such idiom, since it tends to lower the sense, which is far stronger according to the usual manner of rendering. The Apostle first expresses that he is in fear of them, and then subjoins the nature and extent of that fear. The force of μήπως with the Indicative is (as Win. observes) to show that the writer or speaker supposes the thing feared to have already taken place. So Thucyd. iii. 53. νῦν δὲ φοβοῦμεθα, μὴ ἀμφοτέρων ἅμα ἡμαρτήκαμεν. Εἰς ὑμᾶς, "upon you," as in a kindred passage of Rom. xvi. 6.

12—16. Having thus justly reprov'd the inconstancy of the Galatians, the Apostle now subjoins an exhortation, in which he most affectionately adjures them to return to the right path, and imitate his example; reminding them of the time past, when they had most reverently and thankfully received the doctrine preached to them by the Apostle. (Schott).

12. γίνεσθε ὡς ἐγὼ, &c.] There has been some doubt as to the sense of these words. Some (as Grot., Mor., Wolf, Whitby, and Mackn.) take it to be, "love me with the same affection as I do you." But, as Winer observes, thus the ὅτι καὶ γὰρ ὡς ὑμεῖς will have no suitable sense. The most natural interpretation is that of the ancient Expositors and Translators, and, of the modern ones, Hamm., Doddr., West, Rosenm., Semler, Koppe, Iaspis, Schleus., Scott, Winer, and Schott, who at καὶ γὰρ ὡς ὑμεῖς supply ἐγενόμην, and assign this sense: "Follow my example, in renouncing the law for the Gospel. I was once as zealous for the law as you now are; but now I live as do the Gentiles, and not as do the Jews. Do you, who are not Jews, but Gentiles, live in like manner, as men released from the law." Thus Schott renders: "Estote mei similes (decutiendo iugo legis Mosaicæ) siquidem ego quoque factus sum, quales vos [facti estis]." This ellipsis of ἐγενόμην is indeed somewhat harsh; but it is far from unexpressed. It is, in fact, agreeable to that idiom, treated of in Winer's Gr. Gr. p. 467. Ed. 3, by which "from a preceding verb another tense (or even another mood) and person is supplied, in some following member of the sentence." In the above way the passage must have been taken by Justin Martyr, who introduces it in his Admonit. ad Græcos, Chap. ii.

— οὐδὲν με ἡδικήσατε.] The sense of these words will depend upon the view taken of the preceding ones. According to that above adopted, it will be this: "I have no grievous injuries to complain of at your hands, and therefore in speaking so plainly as I must do, I am not induced by resentment." The true connection is skilfully pointed out by Schott in the following paraphrase. "Brethren, praying I admonish you

- 14 σαρκὸς εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν τὸ πρότερον· ^e καὶ τὸν πει- ^e Mal. 2. 7.
 ρασμὸν μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου οὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε οὐδὲ

13. οἶδατε δέ, &c.] The connection (which is disputed) seems to be as follows: "[I harbour no resentment against you, but rather affection for you, from a remembrance of your kind treatment of me:] for when I was labouring under much bodily infirmity, ye did not despise me [on that account] but," &c. Δι' ἀσθενείας τῆς σαρκ., "under weakness of body," for ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ. On which idiom see Wahl's Clavis, i. 276. Ed. 2, and Winer's Gr. Gr. p. 339. It is, however, of more importance to advert to what may be supposed meant by ἀσθενείᾳ τῆς σαρκός, the import of which expression has been not a little disputed. See Borger, Winer, and Schott. The most general interpretation adopted seems the best: and thus I would take it, with Neander and Schott, of great infirmity and sickness of body, even such (see Calvin) as to make his personal appearance mean and contemptible to the multitude. This is in the next verse called πειρασμός ἐν τῇ σαρκί.

14. τὸν πειρ. μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σ.] Most Expositors, ancient and modern, take this expression to refer to the persecutions and afflictions which Paul underwent. But to that interpretation insuperable objections have been urged by Whitby, Doddr., Mackn., Slade, Scott, and Borger; with whom, and also Newc. and Iaspis, I would understand it to denote the same with the corporeal trial called "the thorn in the flesh" at 2 Cor. xii. 7. Compare 2 Cor. x. 10. Πειρ. μου—ἐξουθ. οὐδὲ ἐξεπτ. means, by a common hypallage, "to set at nought and scorn me on account of my trial." Ἐξεπτ. is a stronger term than ἐξουθ. So Æschyl. δυσχεραίνει καὶ καταπτύει δωροδοκίας. The words ὡς ἄγγελον Θεοῦ ἐδέξ. do not (as most recent Commentators suppose) denote merely great personal respect; but also, and perhaps chiefly, such obedient admission of his doctrine, as if they were promulgated by an angel of God,—nay, even Jesus Christ himself in person, and not by deputy.

15. τίς—ὑμῶν.] (Ecum., Locke, Wolf, Doddr., Koppe, Borg., Iaspis, Winer, and Schleus., rightly regard this as not meant to be interrogatory, but exclamatory; i. e. "How great was your felicitation," or mutual congratulation of yourselves, how happy did you think yourselves and others, [in having such a teacher]! See iv. 6. The τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξ. ἂν ἐδώκ. contain a proverbial expression, frequent in the Classical writers, denoting the strongest affection. Indeed the eye is, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, taken to denote what is dearest to us.

16. The Apostle now deprecates any offence being taken at his free-spoken expostulations, and hints that that would be unjust: q. d. "Faithful admonition is the part of a friend, not an enemy." Compare 2 Thess. iii. 15. The only difficulty here is respecting the ὥστε, which the best modern Expositors (following the Vulg.) render, ergone? as if it were written ἄρ' οὖν ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν γέγονα; But of such a sense not the slightest evidence has ever been adduced. For as to passages where ὥστε means therefore, at the beginning of sentences not interrogatory, but declarative, they are not to the purpose. And that the sentence is interrogative, is plain. It would be preferable to render, with the Syr., Piscator, and others, numquid? Yet this interrogation is only inherent in the context, and cannot be extracted from the ὥστε. Upon the whole, I am persuaded that the Commentators are quite in error with regard to this word; and that it has neither the force of conclusion, nor of interrogation, but rather of mitigation, or softening. For it seems to be used, as occasionally in the Classical writers, for ἄτε or ὥσπερ, as it were; q. d. "Am I become, as it were, your enemy, by speaking to you the truth?" The force of the Asyndeton, in such an appeal as this, it is needless to point out to any person of taste. Otherwise I should have supposed St. Paul wrote ὥσγε, scilicet, &c.? And Hoogev. (de Partic.) has shown that γε inseruit interrogationi et indignationi, and consequently expostulationi.

With respect to the words ἐχθ. ὑμῶν, Expositors are not agreed whether the sense be vobis inuisus, the object of your hatred; or, vobis infestus, one who hates you. The former seems preferable; but both senses may be included. Ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν (for εἰς ὑμᾶς) "by speaking the truth." The Apostle may have had in mind some such saying as that of Terence: "Obsequium amicos, veritas odium parit."

17. There is an obscurity in this and the next verse, arising partly from extreme brevity, arising out of that delicacy of the Apostle, on a subject so personal to himself, which made him rather hint his meaning than speak it fully out; and partly from that union of point and antithesis, which sometimes tends to darken the sense. The persons meant by ζηλοῦσιν are the false teachers; who endeavoured to draw the Galatians to the observance of the Mosaic Law, and superadd that to Christianity. These persons, it is said, ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς which is by some supposed to mean, "imitate your zeal for the Gospel." But it seems best rendered, with Erasmus, Beza, Crell., Calvin., Rosenm., and Schott, ambulant, or affectant. And so also Win. interprets; observing that the words mean generally "acri studio in aliquem ferri;" i. e. expetere: q. d. "The persons in question do this, but οὐ καλῶς, not with an honourable or praiseworthy intent, or on proper principles; i. e. (as I would understand it) not from a real desire to promote your salvation, but from selfish motives and party feelings. This explanation is strongly confirmed by the next words, which seem intended to be illustrative. And, viewed in that light, they need not have so perplexed the Expositors. The embarrassment, indeed, partly arose from the reading ὑμᾶς, introduced, on conjecture, by Beza, and transmitted into the Elzevir Edition and the textus receptus. Though for this reading there is not any direct evidence; MSS., Versions, and Fathers, all uniting in ὑμᾶς, which was, with great judgment, retained by the authors of our common version; and has been very properly restored by Bengel, Wets., Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Vat., and Winer. It was, in fact, discarded by Beza because he did not perceive the sense of the ἐκκλῆσαι ὑμᾶς θελ. just after; which is not, as many interpret, "they desire to exclude you from the Church and salvation;" but must be (as Wahl, Bretschn., and Winer explain) "they wish to separate you [from following me, or from connection with me, or (as Schott explains) from all others (i. e. who have abandoned the Mosaic Law), in order to, as it were, monopolize you to themselves." The words ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλ. plainly mean, by the force of the antithesis, "that you may attach yourselves to them and their party."

18. καλὸν δὲ, &c.] This sentiment (which has also been wrongly interpreted) was suggested by the οὐ καλῶς just before. The difficulty complained of will vanish, if the words be considered as consisting of two sentences blended into one. Thus the full sense will be: "Zeal and attachment in a good cause [such as you formerly bore to me] is laudable: but it should be felt and shown always; and not merely when I am with you, [but when, as now, absent from you]." It is scarcely possible to conceive a more delicate mode of censuring than what the Apostle here employed. Real love (he means to say) exists in absence as well as presence.

19. τεκνία μου—ὑμῖν!] These words are by most recent Editors and Commentators, as Seml., Newc., Borger, Vat., Winer, and Schott, connected with the preceding; a comma being placed after ὑμᾶς. While the ancient and most modern Commentators suppose τεκν. to commence a new period; i. e. "quasi (as Crell. says) amore erga Galatos, et summo solutus eorum studio animi dolore abreptus, ita eos alloquitur." The former mode seems to weaken the pathos of the expression (on which see Theophyl., Beza, and Mac-knight): and, considering the nature of the preceding sentence, the propriety of a vocative here is questionable. While, on the other hand, the vocative τεκνία is very suitable to ἤθελον. Yet the δὲ (found in every MS.) joined with ἤθελον seems to reject the τεκνία. And to pass it over (with Prof. Scholef.) as redundant, would only be avoiding the difficulty. Upon the whole, it seems best to regard the clause τεκνία—ὑμῖν as a parenthetical exclamation (called forth by the recollection of the endeavour made to draw away their affections from him, v. 17.) and left unfinished, from pathos. The ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι (which may be rendered with Mackn. and Newc., "Now I could wish." See Acts xxv. 22, and Note on Rom. ix. 3.) was suggested by what had been said at v. 18, and the δὲ is resumptive; i. e. I could wish, I say, to be present with you. The metaphor in τεκν. ὠδίνω is frequent in St. Paul, and scarcely less so in the Rabbinical writers. The term ὠδίνω. refers to the whole process of gestation and formation in the womb, to which the words following ἄχρισ οὐ μορφ. Χρ. ἐν ὑμῖν are skillfully accommodated; there being, as Pisc. and Calvin observe, a metaphor derived from an imperfect fœtus. See Theodoret. The sense, when divested of the metaphor, is: "The same anxiety, which I formerly felt in converting you, I again feel, till the Christian doctrine and disposition be thoroughly formed and perfected in your minds."

The sense of the words following καὶ ἀλλάξαι τὴν φωνήν μου is not very clear. Some, as Pisc., Wolf, Wets., Doddr., Rosenm., Schott, and Newc., take it to mean "change my tone, [to praise instead of censure; which I cannot do] for I am in doubt about you;" while others, (as Theodoret, Ecumen., Est., Menoch., Grot., Hamm., Whitby, Locke, Wells, Schleus., Iaspis, Vat., Borger, and Winer) suppose it to mean, "to alter and vary my tone,"—namely, "by accommodating my addresses, either for reproof or condemnation, according to circumstances; for while absent I am quite at a loss with respect to you, what to think of you (see John xiii. 22.), whether you have been truly converted or not, and how to adapt my language to your real degree of merit or demerit." See 1 Cor. iv. 21. The former interpretation is the most agreeable to what precedes, the latter to what follows. And perhaps, considering how pregnant in meaning every portion of the Apostle's writings is, we shall not be wrong in supposing that both these senses might be intended.

21. The Apostle now turns to the Judaizers, and resuming the refutation of their error, which formed the principal purpose of his Epistle, proceeds to prove, by an allegorical interpretation of a passage of the O. T., respecting the two sons of Abraham, that Christians, whom he compares to Isaac (not Ishmael, whom he likens to the Jews in bondage to the law) are liberated from the dominion of the law; nor has the law any power to obtain justification; q. d. "the former inherit by promise, the latter are in bondage." The λέγέτέ μοι is not an Epanalepsis, or ανακοινωνσις, as some Commentators suppose; but a formula of affectionate, yet authoritative, remonstrance, as εἶπε in Luke vii. 42. and δεῦτε in 1s. i. 18. Ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον εἶναι is an expression often used by St. Paul, as here, of being subject to the ceremonial law.

— τὸν νόμον οὐκ ἀκ.] The sense seems to be, “do ye not hear and know what is written in the law, and what ye have heard read continually in your ears.” (See Rom. ii. 13.) So Newc. and Winer. Some recent Commentators, however, explain, “do not you attend to, nor understand the law [you profess to receive].” Perhaps the latter may be admitted in conjunction with the former. As the error of the persons in question arose from a misapprehension of the scope and true intent of the Law, the Apostle now endeavours to remove their mistake by a reference to the Law, q. d. (in the words of Abp. Newc.) “Let me engage your attention, by accommodating the language of the O. T. to my present purpose. Let me illustrate my argument by borrowing thence an apt example for comparison.”

22. γέγραπται γάρ, &c.] The γάρ may be rendered scilicet, or exempli gratiā, q. d. The History of Abraham will illustrate what I mean to say, since it contains an apt emblem of the two covenants between which you are hesitating.

23. κατὰ σάρκα] “after the regular course of nature.” In the antithetical words διὰ τῆς ἐπαγγ., something is left to be supplied, and the full sense is: “[out of the common course of nature, and] by virtue of the promise made to Abraham.”

24. ἀτινά ἐστιν ἀλληγορούμενα.] There has been no little difference of opinion as to the exact sense of these words. The ancient Expositors in general, and most of the earlier modern ones, take the sense to be (as it is represented in the Vulg.), “quæ sunt per allegoriam dicta,” or “quæ per allegoriam dicuntur,” meaning, as Koppe expresses it, “that when these things concerning Sarah and Hagar were written by Moses, God intended the religion of Christ, and the accession thereto of the Jews and Heathens, to be obscurely prefigured.” Or, in the words of Mr. Holden, that “the events referred to were so ordered by Providence as to be an apt representation of the different conditions of Jews and Christians, and that the literal history contains a spiritual and mystical meaning.” But some eminent modern Translators and Expositors, and almost all the recent ones, take the sense in general to be, “quæ sunt allegorizata:” an interpretation ably maintained by Chandler, Sykes, Dodd, Pearce, and especially Koppe, Dr. A. Clarke, Borger, and Bp. Marsh, Lect. p. 355. seqq. They differ, however, in their modes of rendering: some translating, “these things have been allegorized,” viz. by Is. liv. 1.; others, “have been,” i. e. may be allegorized; others, again, “are to be allegorized.” Thus, Koppe observes, “it is supposed, that the narration in question was merely historical, but seemed to the Apostle worthy of being accommodated to the case of Christians, which bore some resemblance thereto.” One thing is certain, that our common Version, retained by Mackn., “are an allegory,” does not properly represent the sense. “It is one thing (observes Bp. Marsh) to say that a history is allegorized; it is another thing to say that it is allegory itself. If we only allegorize an historical narrative, we do not of necessity convert it into allegory.” Be that as it may, it has (I think) been fully shown by Koppe, Borger, and Bp. Marsh, that the interpretation first mentioned is untenable. The second must therefore be adopted. It, however, contains two or three modifications, between which we may hesitate. The version “are to be allegorized,” can, I think, no more be defended than our common one. And to say “are allegorized,” meaning by others, would be forced and frigid. I should prefer to render, with Abp. Newc., “are here allegorized [by me],” or, “are [and may be thus] allegorized,” i. e. accommodated to the case of the Law and the Gospel. In this sense, ἀλληγορεῖν is often used by Philo. The author of the Life of Homer, too, speaking of the marriage of Jupiter and Juno in that poet, says: δοκεῖ ταῦτα ἀλληγορεῖσθαι (“are to be understood allegorically”) ὅτι Ἥρα μὲν νοεῖται ὁ ἀήρ, Ζεὺς δὲ ὁ αἰθήρ. But after all, the coincidence of circumstances in the two cases is so exact, and the manner of the Apostle's words is such, as to convey far more than the sense of accommodation. So that we cannot, I think, suppose the Apostle meant to express less than what Winer assigns as the sense, “quæ habent hunc sensum sublimiorem.” So Schott: “Hæc (de utroque Abrahami filio narrata) aliud verbis dicunt, aliud innuunt, sed sensum habent sublimiorem.” It is meant that they may be considered as emblematical and typical, namely, by the correspondence of type and antitype. The same view of the sense is adopted by Chrys. and Theophyl. So Bp. Marsh also well observes, that “when St. Paul allegorized the history of the two sons of Abraham, and compared them with the two covenants, he did nothing more than represent the first as types, the latter as their antitypes. But though he treated that portion of the Mosaic history in the same manner as we treat an allegory, he did not thereby convert it into allegory.” And after censuring Mackn. for confounding the terms allegory and type, the learned Prelate continues: “An allegory is a fictitious narrative; a type is something real. An allegory is a picture of the imagination; a type is an historic fact. It is true, that typical interpretation may in one sense be considered as a species of allegorical interpretation; that they are so far alike, as being equally an interpretation of things; that they are equally founded on resemblance; that the type corresponds to its antitype, as the immediate representation in an allegory corresponds to its ultimate representation. Yet the quality of the things compared, as well as the purport of the comparison, is very different in the two cases.” This is very true; but it does not thence follow that the literal and proper sense of the two terms in Greek, Latin, and English, may not have been occasionally so confounded, as that allegory may have been used for type. Thus Calvin remarks that ἀλληγ. is here used catachresticè. And it is plain that the Syriac Translator, in rendering "these events are allegories of the two covenants," must have meant types. Nay J. Capell., Gomar, and others, render, "sunt typica, vel figurata." Finally, when Crell. translates "quæ sunt allegorica," he, as is clear from the words following, takes allegorica in the sense typica. With the excess to which it has been shown the Jews carried their allegorical interpretation of the O. T., we are here not concerned. And be it observed (with Chandler and Doddg.), that this portion is here introduced, not as a direct argument, but as an illustration of the subject. Or, to speak yet more exactly (with Schott), the Apostle only meant to bring forward a secondary argument, for the use of those who were convinced by the preceding argumentation, that bondage was inherent in the Mosaic Law.

— αὐται these, i. e. these persons, Sarah and Hagar. Εἰσιν, "signify," "represent" (as Matt. xiii. 38. Eph. iv. 9. and often in the N. T.) were emblems of the covenants, the Mosaic and Christian. Αἱ is not found in the early Editions (except the Complut.), nor in the best MSS., and is with reason rejected by every Editor of eminence from Mill downwards. Bp. Middl. has shown that it is not necessary. Ἀπὸ ὄρους Σ., "that which came from Mount Sinai, [brought by Moses]." Γεννώσα scil. τεκνία. The literal sense is, "a covenant which brings forth [children] unto bondage [to the law and to sin]." the verbal being, more Heb., included in the verb. Γενν., however, is only used suitably to the metaphor, by which the covenant is considered under the image of a mother bringing forth children. The real sense is well expressed by Bp. Bull, Exam. p. 101., where he remarks that "the Sinaitical Covenant is said ad servitutem generare, quia aptum natum erat per se, vi promissionum et comminationum suarum, tale hominibus ingenium indere."

25. τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ—Ἀραβία.] The difficulty which the earlier modern Commentators found in these words, and in consequence of which, Bentley, Kuster, and Valckn., proposed to cancel them, as a gloss, is much lessened by throwing them, with Capell. and Wolf, into a parenthesis. To advert to a great source of perplexity: the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that τὸ Ἄγαρ signifies "this word Agar." Thus we may render: "Now this word Agar is [the name given to] Mount Sinai in Arabia." That this was an appellation of Sinai among the people of the surrounding country, we have the testimony of Chrys. and the ancient Commentators, which is confirmed by the accounts of modern travellers. And it might well have it, since راس in Arabic signifies a rock, or rocky mountain; and as Sinai is remarkably such, it might be κατ' ἐξοχήν called τὸ Ἄγαρ. After all, however, it is not improbable that this clause is, as Bentley thought, a marginal gloss, or scholium.

— συστοιχεῖ δὲ] (scil. ἡ Ἄγαρ.) "corresponds to Jerusalem." Τῇ νῦν, "which now is," i. e. in its present state, antequam solemniter instauretur regnum Messianum, dum manet res Judaica. See Win.

26. ἡ δὲ ἄνω Ἱερ.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed, that this must signify the Christian Church, the Gospel Dispensation (as is plain from its being opposed to the Mosaic economy), understood figuratively of the Christian Church, in that new and perfect state, which it will assume at the coming of the Messiah.

Ἐλευθέρα, free, viz. from spiritual bondage. Μήτηρ πάντων ἡμῶν; i. e. of all true believers. Τὰ πάντων, however, is wanting in several MSS., Versions, and Fathers; and is rejected by Mill and Beng., and cancelled by Griesb. and others. It may be an interpolation; but the Apostle (as Winer observes) is accustomed to join πάντες with ἡμεῖς or ὑμεῖς; as Gal. iii. 28. 2 Cor. ii. 3; vii. 15. Phil. i. 4. Though as that is not very agreeable to the usage of the best writers, it might therefore be removed by the early Critics.

27. εὐφράνθητι—ἄνδρα.] This is quoted exactly from the Sept. Version of Is. liv. 1. And the passage represents the Jewish state, though then labouring under great distress, as to be hereafter restored to its pristine glory. But it is, we find by the Apostle's application, to be referred, at least in a sublimer sense, to the Christian Jerusalem, the Church. With respect to the correspondence, the στεῖρα ἡ οὐ τίκτ. is to be understood of the Christian Church, in a great measure composed of Gentiles; and the τῆς ἐχούσης τὸν ἄνδρα, of the Jewish Church. See Chrys., Theophyl., and Whitby. Στεῖρα is brought in with reference to the barrenness of the antitype Sarah. At ῥῆξον sub. φωνήν.

— πολλὰ—ἄνδρα.] Render: "many more are the children of the deserted and neglected, than of her who had a husband." In ἐχ. τὸν ἄνδρα there is an allusion to the fecundity which may be expected to result from the circumstances described. Ἐρήμου has reference to the desertion of Sarah by Abraham, to cohabit with

Hagar, who is therefore meant by τῆς ἐχ. ἄνδρα. "The Gentile world (says Chandler) is here represented as a forsaken unmarried woman [rather as a neglected unmarried, or a forsaken married woman. Ed.] because the Gentiles were not constituted the Church of God, nor taken into a special covenant with him, but were generally abandoned to idolatry and vice. And she is ordered to shout for joy for that happy alteration which God intended to make in her circumstances, by espousing her to himself, and giving her at length a more numerous posterity than the married wife, viz. than the church of the Jews could ever boast of, who are represented as betrothed to God, because they were under his peculiar protection, and brought into a special covenant with him."

28. Here the Apostle adverts to the promise itself of offspring held out to the heavenly Jerusalem; i. e. the Christian Church: q. d. "If you would know who are meant by the prophet, it is we Christians; we are the ἐπαγγελίας τέκνα, for τὰ τέκνα τὰ ἐπαγγελούμενα, children divinely promised, not κατὰ σάρκα, like the Jews, Rom. ix. 8. See also supra iii. 14. Κατὰ Ἰσ., "after the similitude or example of Isaac." So κατὰ is used in Eph. iv. 24, and often. The words may be thus paraphrased with Mr. Holden: "We believers after the similitude of Isaac, are children to Abraham and Sarah, not as being born after the flesh, v. 23, but by virtue of the promise to make him the father, and her the mother, of many nations," Gen. xvii. 15, 16. supra iii. 8.

29. "Here (observes Koppe and Borger) the Apostle, dwelling on the same similitude, adds, that as Ishmael vexed Isaac, so do the Jews persecute the Christians." It was not, however, done merely to trace another point of coincidence, but to suggest (as Chrysost. and Theophyl. remark) that Christians are not to be surprised at similar persecution, from a similar cause,—envy; but may comfort themselves with reflecting, that the persecution of Ishmael did not prevent Isaac from being the free born son of Abraham, and the persecutor's superior. "As (observes Chandler) being born after the flesh, and after the Spirit, are here opposed; the being born after the Spirit must mean, Isaac's being born in a peculiar manner, by the extraordinary influence of the Spirit and power of God." Διῶκω will here denote injurious treatment of every kind, both in deeds and words. And although the Mosaic history records only one instance of insulting treatment,—namely, on Ishmael mocking Sarah, when she weaned Isaac (see Gen. xxi. 9 & 10.); yet when we consider the disappointment which both Hagar and Ishmael must have felt on the birth of Isaac, it was not unnatural for them to feel ill-will, and show it on every occasion to the real heir of the promise. And many such are recorded from tradition in the Rabbinical writers. See Mackn. and Paley's Horæ Paulinæ.

30. ἀλλὰ τί λέγει ἡ γραφή; Ἐκβ.] This is meant to indicate that the consequence of unbelief and disobedience, in the case of the Jewish Church, will be correspondent to that in the case of the antitype Hagar; viz. the being cast out from the presence and favour of God, and excluded from salvation. A solemn warning this to the Judaizing false teachers.

31. ἄρα, ἀδελφοί, &c.] The Apostle here, through delicacy, does not fully express, but only hints at the conclusion to be made (which is indicated at large by Chandler and Borger) simply expressing what may serve to suggest it; q. d. "We believers, then, whether Jews or Gentiles, are not in the state I have represented by Hagar, but in that which I have represented by Sarah; consequently, we are not under bondage to sin and death, but are free from them by Christ, being alone heirs of the promises."

V. Having set forth their Christian liberty, the Apostle subjoins, by way of inference, that they should stedfastly continue in, and maintain the exercise of that liberty from the yoke of the law, which Christ had bestowed on them.

Here there are two remarkable varr. lectt., but manifestly inferior to the common one. The origin of both readings (one of which is with singular rashness edited by Griesb.) has been evinced by Rinck to have been mere error, or the emendandi audacia of the early Biblical Critics, some of whom appear to have been displeased with the position of the οὖν, and changed it, though (as in many other cases) for the worse. From this change of position, Griesbach irrationally concluded that it ought to have place no where! and he cut it out; though without any authority, and notwithstanding that the sentence is thus deprived of what shows its scope.

1. There is here an inference from the preceding; and, therefore, this verse ought not to have commenced a new chapter. Στήκ. ἐν is equivalent to the Classical ἐμμένειν. Ἐνέχεσθε is generally explained by κρατεῖσθε. The word is used properly of being held by ropes, nets, &c.; but is often metaphorically employed; as ἐνέχουσθαι ἐν νόμοις, to be held in obedience to the laws.

2. ἐγὼ Π. λέγω, &c.] This mention of his name may be meant (as at Eph. iii. 1, and 2 Cor.

x. 1.), to give weight and authority to what is about to be said. But it seems also intended to contrast his doctrine with that of the false teachers; nay, as some think, what he really teaches with what he is by certain persons represented as teaching. The ἰδέ, mind! hints at the great importance of what he is going to say.

— ἐὰν περιτέμ.] i. e. if ye undertake the ritual law,—namely, as necessary to justification. Χρ. ὑμᾶς οὐδὲν ὠφ.; i. e. “the Christian religion will be of no avail to your salvation.” Koppe and Winer observe “that this is said in opposition to the false teachers, and, as occasionally elsewhere, with harshness; though sometimes the Apostle uses more indulgence. See Acts xvi. 3. 1 Cor. ix. 20. Rom. ix. 14. seqq.” The remark, however, is founded in error, and proceeds upon a very objectionable principle. The indulgence spoken of was only to weak brethren, and not extended to violent partizans. Besides, the indulgence was to Jews, who still continued in the observance of the Mosaic law, not, as here, to Gentiles. Nor is there any inconsistency; for though the Apostle does say, that circumcision would exclude a man from the benefit of Christ, it is not at variance with his position at iii. 28, and vi. 15, that circumcision is a thing indifferent; since, though circumcision, of itself, could do neither harm nor good, yet when considered in conjunction with all the other rites of the law which it drew after it, and accompanied with a trust in it as necessary to justification, it could not but do harm, nay exclude from salvation by grace, since the two modes of salvation in the Law and the Gospel are inconsistent with each other. “The Jews (Grot. and Michaelis observe) might adopt circumcision as a national rite; but the Gentiles, having no such political reason, could only use it as necessary to justification; which would make void faith and grace, and is therefore strictly forbidden.”

3. μαρτύρ. π.] “And moreover I solemnly declare;” as in Acts xx. 26. Ὀφειλέτης ἐστὶ is used as in Rom. viii. 12, where see Note. St. Paul means to say, that circumcision, like baptism, binds the person who undergoes it, to the other rites of the religion undertaken; and that thus the undergoing circumcision is a virtual abandonment of Christianity. The verse, then, serves to further illustrate the former, and gives the reason for what might have appeared a rigid restriction.

4—6. Here the Apostle shows why circumcision so undertaken must exclude from Christ. Κατηργ. ἀπὸ τ. Χ. The sense is, “are separated from Christ,” “are cut off from Christ,” as Œcum. explains; or, “have fallen off from him,” as the Pesch. Syr.; or, as Theophyl., “hold no communication with him.” The ἀπὸ is here used after κατηργ. agreeably to common usage after verbs of loosing and separating. The primary idea is not altogether lost, but is alluded to in the grace heretofore given having lost its effect by becoming useless, and having been given in vain. So Rom. vii. 2. 6. καταργ. ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου. Δικαιοῦσθε means (as Œcum. observes) δικαιοῦσθαι ζητεῖτε. The next words τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπ. are exegetical of κατηργ.; q. d. “ye are fallen from, and have forfeited the hope of salvation by, grace in the Gospel.” So 2 Pet. iii. 17. ἵνα μὴ ἐκπίσσητε τοῦ ἰδίου στηριγμοῦ. See Thucyd. viii. 81.

5. In this verse the Apostle shows that those are aiming at an absurdity, who think that both religions may be conjoined; and wish to be accounted Christians, even though they seek to attain justification by an obedience to the law. This he does by tacitly contrasting the carnal with the spiritual faith. The γὰρ has a very elliptical use. In translating, we may render it “whereas.” On the sense of the Πνεύματι Expositors are not agreed. The ancient and earlier modern ones understand it of the influence of the Holy Spirit. Others, as Grot., Par., and Ros. interpret, “by the internal feelings.” This, however, is too vague. It were better, with Wolfe, Koppe, and Borger, to take it of the doctrine of the Gospel, which is spiritual, as opposed to the carnality of the Law; or, as Newc. explains, the Gospel covenant, which the Spirit attests, and which communicates the Spirit. Yet, after all, there is, no good reason to abandon the ancient and common interpretation, according to which, Schott renders: “nos enim, pro indole mentis emendata per Spiritum Divinum, effecta,” &c. Ἀπεκδ. ἐλπίδα is not, I conceive, a pleonasm (as some recent Commentators imagine), but a very strong mode of expression, denoting anxious longing and full expectation of any thing. The word ἀπεκδέχομαι, like ἀποκαταδοκέω, signifies properly to thrust forward the head and neck, as in anxious expectation of hearing or seeing something. See Rom. viii. 19. 1 Cor. i. 7. and compare Deut. xxviii. 32. The full sense may be thus expressed: “We look anxiously forward to the hope of (in the expected) justification by faith.”

6. ἐν γὰρ Χρ.] q. d. [I say in faith, and faith only;] for, &c. This is (as Chandler observes) “the winding up of the whole argument, or the conclusion to be drawn from it.” Compare 1 Cor. vii. 19. and Gal. vi. 15. and see Note on Rom. ii. 28. 29. To preclude, however, the supposition, that a bare faith was meant, the Apostle cautiously subjoins the limitation δὲ ἀγάπης ἐνεργ., meaning, what shows itself, exerts its efficacy in action, as opposed to mere speculation; what is operative, as opposed to what produces no fruits. See 1 Thess. ii. 13. Ἀγάπης some understand of love to Christ, or to God: others, of love to man, as shown in charity or benevolence. The latter interpretation is preferable; but it rather denotes love to God, and to man for God’s sake (as in 1 Cor. xiii. 1. seqq.); implying universal obedience to God's commandments. See Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. p. 40.

7. Having opened out the true nature of the Christian religion, and shown that it cannot stand with the Law, he now takes occasion to express his wonder that the Galatians should in any degree have deserted it; and inveighs against the false teachers, by whose evil persuasions the Galatians had been induced to swerve from the right course of Evangelical liberty, to which, however, he expresses a hope that they will return. (Crell. & Schott.)

—ἐτρέχετε κ.] “ye were running well,” going on successfully in your Christian course. An agonistical metaphor (see Note on ver. 22. and 1 Cor. ix. 24.), suggested by the ἐξεπέσατε at v. 4.

—τίς ὑμᾶς ἐνέκοψε.] The common reading is ἀνέκοψε, “hath checked you in your course,” “hindered you,” of which examples are adduced by Elsn., Krebs, and Loesn. Thus we should explain it “hath retarded, hindered.” And this reading might be very well admitted; but as all the best MSS., all the early Editions, except the Erasmus and Stephanic ones, and many Versions and Fathers have ἐνέκοψε, which yields quite as good a sense, and one more agreeable to the foregoing agonistic metaphor, it is preferable, and has been with reason adopted by Beng. Matth., Griesb., Tittm., Vat., and Schott. Ἐγκ. signifies to cut off any one's course, by digging trenches in his way, and thus stopping his progress. It occurs in Rom. xv. 22. 1 Thess. ii. 18. 1 Pet. iii. 7.

At πείθεσθαι sub. ὥστε ἢ ἐνεκα τοῦ. The μὴ is used with πείθ. (though our language would reject it) according to that Greek idiom, by which verbs containing or implying denial admit a μὴ to be added to the Infinitive following. Of this I have, in various Notes on Thucyd. (Edit.), as vol. i. pp. 17, 47, 102, 110, 118, 144, 278. vol. ii. p. 4. vol. iii. pp. 5, 84, 117, 168, shown the true nature, and proved that there is no pleonasm. Ἀληθεῖα here means the true religion, as it is in Jesus, the true doctrine of Christ. The τίς is not simply interrogative, but implies grief and indignation, as at iii. 1. τίς ὑμᾶς ἰβάσκανε; So Newc. paraphrases, “Who? what Judaizers, what perverters?”

8. ἡ πεισμονή.] The sense of the word is disputed. By the ancient and most modern Expositors (as Grot., Schleus., and Winer) it is explained, “this facility of belief, credulity, εὐπειθεία, whereby ye take up the notion of the necessity of mixing Judaism with Christianity.” Others, however (as Koppe, Borger, Platt, and Schott), understand by it power or skill of persuasion, of course referring it to the false teachers. Either of the above interpretations will yield a good sense; but the former is the more natural and agreeable to the context, and to the parono-masia subsisting between πείθεσθαι and πεισμονή. The word πεισμονή is so rare, that it has only been found elsewhere in Eustath. and Hesych.

9. μικρὰ ζύμη—ζυμοί.] A proverbial saying, also occurring at 1 Cor. v. 6. With respect to the application here, many refer it to the false teachers; q. d. a few false teachers may corrupt the whole congregation. See 2 Tim. ii. 17. While others refer it to the false doctrine which maintained the necessity of circumcision, and such partial observance of the Law as those Judaizers might then be content to enjoin. This is preferable; for the Apostle means, that the yielding on those points would entirely corrupt their Christian principles. So that this is parallel to what was said at v. 3.

10. ἐγὼ πέποιθα—Κυρίῳ.] This is intended to soften the harshness of the preceding expressions, by an assurance of some remaining confidence in them. The asyndeton (destroyed by some tasteless Critics) has here great force; and the ἐγὼ is emphatic. Render: “I, for my part,” &c. Πέποιθα—Κυρίῳ may mean, either “I have confidence in you, through the goodness and assistance of the Lord;” or rather, “I trust in the Lord concerning you.” Perhaps both senses are intended; q. d. “I trust in the Lord [relying on his help], and I place confidence in you.”

—οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρον.] Here there is something left to be supplied, as often, from modesty. It is not agreed among Expositors whether the words mean, “that you will be of the same opinion as myself,” namely, on the subject of this Epistle; or, “that you will entertain no principles contrary to the doctrine I taught you.” The former is preferable, especially as the latter sense merges into the former.

—ὁ δὲ ταρασσὼν ὑ.] “However, he that troubleth you,” or rather, perplexes and unsettles you;” as if that was all he could do,—not teach them. So Galen, cited by Wets: ταραττοντες μόνον τοὺς μανθάνοντας, διδάσκοντες δὲ οὐδὲν. The use of the singular will not prove that there was no more than one false teacher; since it may be used collectively. Yet the Apostle seems to glance at one, the principal of them: and by the ὅστις ἂν ᾖ we may infer that he was a person of some consequence. Βαστ. τὸ κρ. I would render, “shall or will bear (i. e. receive) the punishment [suitable to his offence],” whether excommunication, or the infliction of bodily disease. See Matt. xxiii. 24. Rom. xiii. 2.

11. ἐγὼ δὲ—ἔτι κρ.] The Apostle here glances at one of the grossest calumnies respecting him, disseminated by the ὁ ταρασσὼν and his partizans; namely, that he had, on some occasions, and when it suited his interest, preached the necessity of circumcision (or, at least, had allowed it to some other Churches); while to the Galatians he interdicted it. Ἐτι, “even yet,” i. e. after having become a Christian, and Apostle of the Gentiles. "If I yet, as they say, preach [the necessity of] circumcision [to justification], τί ἐτι διώκ., "how is it that I am yet persecuted?" viz. by the Jews and Judaizers. This sense of τί occurs in Luke i. 62. and elsewhere, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. The Apostle means to argue, that his being yet under such furious persecution from the Jews, was a decided proof that he did not preach circumcision and the Law. If that were the case (ἄρα), then κατήργ. τὸ σκάνδαλον τ. σ., "the chief matter at which offence is taken [by the persons in question, Jews and Judaizers] (namely, that salvation was only to be obtained by believing in the Messiahship of one who was crucified) is done away," q. d. "then persecution would have ceased; but it has not." By σταυροῦ is meant the doctrine of the sacrifice of Christ on the cross, and the necessity of that sacrifice for the salvation of men. And as by this death not only eternal salvation was procured, but deliverance from the burdensome ceremonies of the Mosaic Law was effected (thus making void the Law), it is no wonder that such a doctrine should have been a stumbling-block to the Jews.

12. ὄφελον καὶ ἀποκόψ. οἱ ἀναστατ. ὅ.] There are few passages that have more perplexed Expositors than this. The ancient ones almost universally, and some of the most eminent moderns (as Beza, Grot., Selden, Raphel, Kypke, Wets., Mor., Rosenm., Semler, Cramer, Koppe, Borger, De Witt, Schleus., Wahl., Brets., Winer, and Schott) recognise a sarcastic paronomasia between περιτέμνεσθαι and ἀποκόψεσθαι q. d. "Would that they, who are so fond of circumcising, would not only circumcise, but even cut off the parts usually circumcised." But although this is supposed to be voluntarily performed (and therefore is not liable to the objection of Dodd., that "it were inconsistent with the Apostolic character to wish any bodily evil were inflicted by human violence") yet I am inclined to agree with Erasm., Crell., Le Clerc, Elsn., Whitby, and others, that this sentiment has too much of bitterness and levity (not to say indecorum), to be supposed likely to have come from St. Paul (even with all the allowance which Koppe, Borger, and Schott, justly claim for the change of manners, and difference of ideas between ages so distant as St. Paul's and our own); especially as we find no approach to a coarse joke in other parts of his writings, though penned under equally great "commotion of mind." For in the passage of Phil. iii. 2., we have only a paronomasia between κατατομήν and περιτομήν. Of the other interpretations, that have been proposed, only two seem to merit attention, 1. that of Elsn., Koppe, Newc., and others, who take the sense to be, "may they be cut off by some disease, or even suffer perdition from God!" But that yields a sentiment even less suited to the character of the Apostle, and, as Schott remarks, had this been the sense, the Apostle would have used another expression, not ἀποκ. See 1 Cor. xvi. 22. v. 5. 2dly. That of Pisc., Menoch., Par., Est., Crell., Whitby, Chandler, Dodd., Jortin, Dre-

sig., Michael., Iaspis, and others, who assign the following sense: "I would that they were even cut off from your society by excommunication, or would cut themselves off, by leaving it; and thus were prevented from giving you any further trouble." The ellipsis of ἀφ' ὑμῶν is very mild, and like that at iv. 17. 30. And the use of the fut. middle for fut. passive, is by no means uncommon. The construction with a fut. Indic. for Infinit. is indeed rare; but examples are adduced from Arrian and Aristænetus. The uncommonness of the word in this sense, may be tolerated from the paronomasia; for, as Winer observes, "ubi paronomasiæ efficiendæ studio ducuntur, optimi quique scriptores verba rariora ponere haud dubitant." See Note supra v. 8. I cannot, however, think, with Dr. Burton, that the allusion is to ἐνέκοψε at v. 7.; but rather to the thing in question, περιτομήν, which at Phil. iii. 2. the Apostle contemptuously calls κατατομήν. This last interpretation is confirmed by the Apostle having alluded to excommunication at i. 8. 9., and by a similar passage of 1 Cor. v. 6, 7. adduced by Whitby and Chandel., where having said, as here, a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, he adds "Purge out therefore the old leaven, and put away from you the wicked person." The Apostle wishes that they would do it, rather than itself disposed himself to order it to be done (as in 1 Cor. v. 1—5. ix. 13.), because (to use the words of Mr. Scott) "the infection had spread so wide in the churches of Galatia, the persons to be censured possessed so great influence, and so very many were concerned in some degree, that there was little prospect, except by the intervention of miracles, that such a command would be obeyed." Besides, the Apostle could not well command the Corinthians to excommunicate the false teachers, their conduct not being of the scandalous nature of that of the incestuous person.

The ἀναστατοῦντες here, is like the ἀναστατώσαντες τὴν οἰκουμένην at Acts xvii. 6., and is equivalent to the ταράσαν at v. 10.

13. ὑμεῖς γὰρ, &c.] The recent Commentators in general suppose that there is here a connexion with the words immediately preceding. The γὰρ, however, thus requires too much to be supplied; and it may rather refer to the words πέποιθα ἐς ὑμᾶς—ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρονήσετε; the intermediate ones being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. "[Do so then] for," &c.

—ἐπ' ἐλευθ.] The ἐπὶ is rendered by Rosenm., Borger, and Schott, "hac lege et conditione ut libertatem usurparetis." So Thucyd. vii. 82. εἰ τις βούλεται ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ, ὡς σφᾶς ἀπιέναι. But the sense rather seems to be, "to the intent that ye should be free [from the law of Moses]." So 1 Thess. iv. 7. οὐκ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ ἀκαθαρσία.

On the mention of Christian liberty, the Apostle gives a seasonable admonition as to its right use; warning them against a carnal, and urging them to a spiritual life, and contrasting the one with the other.

—μόνον μὴ, &c.] Here there is an ellip. (as Win. says, of τρέψητε.) Of which two examples have been adduced from Arrian. Ἀφορμὴν, an occasion or handle. So Demosth. p. 16. ἀφορμὴ τοῦ κακῶς φρονεῖν. The word is generally used of what is bad in itself, or may become cause of abuse. Τῇ σαρκί is for εἰς τὴν σάρκα, well explained by Ecum. εἰς τὸ δουλεύειν ταῖς τῆς σαρκὸς ἐπιθυμίαις. Compare 1 Pet. ii. 16.

— διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης δουλ. ἀλλ.] The expression δουλεύειν δι' ἀγ. is not (as Koppe regards it) put for ἀγαπᾶν, but is more significant, denoting inservire commodis mutuis. So Schott well renders: “Immo servitium mutuum vobis præstare per amorem Christianum.” See 1 Cor. ix. 19. The δουλεύετε marks, as Chrys. observes, the extreme of love. And here, though the Apostle takes away the yoke of the law, he lays upon them another, which, though light to affection, is yet stronger than the other; “veluti (says Schott) servitium honestissimum, quod per amorem efficitur, conjunctissimum voluntati firmæ libertatem veram moralem usurpanti.” It is well observed by the ancient Commentators (and, of the modern ones, Rosenm. and Schott), that the Apostle here glances at the φιλαρχία of the deceivers, and the disputes and enmities of the rest.

14. The Apostle now, with great address, turns the discourse from doctrinal to practical subjects; subjoining a most important moral maxim, the primary precept of the Law, called by James ii. 8. ὁ νόμος βασιλικός, “the Prince of Laws.”

— ὁ γὰρ πᾶς νόμος—πληρ.] Meaning the whole law, whether Jewish or Christian, as it respects our fellow-creatures. Πληρ. may signify, as many understand, “is fulfilled.” But the best Expositors are, with reason, of opinion that πληρ. is equivalent to ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται, “is comprehended,” as in a similar passage of Rom. xiii. 9., where see Note. The sense, then, is: “it may be reduced to this maxim;” in which the ὡς, Koppe observes, refers to the kind, not the degree of life. We are to love others (τὸν πλησίον being for ἑαυτὸν) in the same manner as we love ourselves; though, from the principle of self-love, which the Creator hath wisely implanted in us, to love them to the same degree is impossible, and therefore could not have been enjoined. In short, the love here meant is the ἀγάπη, so finely described by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiii.

15. Here the Apostle urges the practice of this duty from human motives; i. e. with reference to the evils which would result from the breach of

it. In δάκν. and κατεσθ. (of which the latter is the stronger term, and denotes the accomplishment of the evil meant by the former), we have a metaphor, taken from wild beasts, finely expressive of backbiting, disputes, and bitter quarrels. To the Classical passages cited by the Philological Commentators, I would add Philodem. ap. Brunck. Anact. 11. 88. γινώσκω φιλεῖν πάντων τὸν φιλέοντα, καὶ τὸν με δακόντα δακύνει.

In βλέπετε—ἀναλ. the ἀναλ. is accommodated to the foregoing metaphor; and the full sense is, “Take care lest ye be made instruments of mutual destruction as individuals, and of ruin as a society.”

16. ἡ γὰρ δέ.] A form of earnest exhortation. This verse (as Borger observes) contains the sum of St. Paul's injunctions to the Galatians; and the verses following are explanatory and illustrative of it. Περιπ., “live;” “act;” referring to the habitual manner of life. Πνεύματι “by the spirit,” i. e. conformably to its guidance. See Rom. viii. 4. By πνεῦμ. most of the older Commentators understand the Holy Spirit. But as there is no Article, that cannot be admitted. Besides, it is plain, from the words following, and from the opposition between σὰρξ and πνεῦμα at vv. 17, 18., that the sense is what some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors suppose (as Beza, Rambach, Mor., Flatt, and Schott), the spiritual part of man, or the spiritual principle in man, their reason and conscience, enlightened by the Gospel, and sustained by the Holy Spirit.

— καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν—τελέσ.] “And thus ye will by no means fulfil any longer the lusts of the flesh.” The phrase τελεῖν τὴν ἐπιθ. is cited from Ach. Tat. p. 91. Salmon.

17. ἡ γὰρ σὰρξ, &c.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. “[And need have ye to strive to walk after the spirit], for the flesh,” &c. Ἐπιθυμεῖ is for ἐπιθυμίας ἔχει. By σὰρξ is meant the animal principle of man's nature, which impels him to gratify his sensual appetites. These principles, it is said, ἀντίκειται ἀλλ., “are mutually opposite to each other.” Simil. Porphy. de Abst. i. 56. τοῖς νόμοις τοῦ σώματος ἐπessθαι, βιαίους οὖσι, καὶ ἀντικειμένοις τοῖς τοῦ νοῦ νόμοις. See the Dissertation of Schoettg. (annexed to his Hor. Hebr.) de Luctu carnis et spiritus ad mentem priscorum Hebræorum.

— ἵνα μὴ ἂν θέλ., τ. π.] The sense is by some explained, “So that ye cannot do the things that ye would;” understanding this, however, not of what is always, but often the case. See

Chrys., Berger, Koppe, and Winer. Others, as Hamm., Locke, Dodd., Newc., Scott, and Vater, explain, "so that ye do not the things that ye would;" "meaning (says Chandler) they act sometimes by one of these principles, and sometimes by the other; in either of which cases they do not what they would, or what that principle, which they oppose, would lead them to do." See Scott. And compare Rom. vii. 13.

18. εἰ δὲ πνεύμ. ἄγ.] See Note on v. 16. By ὑπὸ νόμον the Apostle must chiefly have meant the law of Moses; but the same applies also to the law of nature, which likewise requires what man cannot perform. And that the Apostle had this also in mind, would appear from v. 23. κατὰ τῶν τ. οὐκ ἐστὶ νόμος.

19—21. From the enumeration of the works of the flesh now subjoined it should seem, that the Apostle in the foregoing words, οὐκ ἐστὲ ὑπὸ νόμον, meant to intimate, that they were not thereby at all freed from the obligation of the moral law, which forms the essence of every law, especially the law of nature; indeed, that those who perform the works of the flesh are, as it were, outlaws. That those only who obey the spiritual principle in man can subdue the lusts of the flesh. With this enumeration of vices and sins compare other similar ones in Matt. xv. 19. Mark vii. 21. Rom. i. 29. 1 Cor. vi. 9 & 10. 2 Cor. xii. 20. Eph. v. 3—5. James iii. 14. See Notes. The order, indeed, of the vices varies: but reasons may usually be given for each particular distribution. St. Paul (as I have before pointed out) generally digests them into regular order, and throws them into groups. At the same time, it is plain from the concluding words, καὶ τὰ ὅμοια τούτοις (meaning, as Bp. Bull observes, Exam. p. 82, omnia quæ istis sunt analoga, i. e. quæ a simili voluntatis malitiâ proficiscuntur) that the list was not meant to be complete; which was, indeed, unnecessary; they being, as the Apostle says, manifest; viz. (as Mr. Scott adds) "to every one who considered the conduct of unconverted men, and the state of the world in general."

The ἔργα must be taken with some latitude; since some of the particulars are, as Whitby remarks, errors of the mind; others, evils dispositions of the heart. Σάρξ denotes, as Theodoret explains, τὸ σαρκικὸν φρόνημα, our corrupt nature, of τῆς ψυχῆς τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ χεῖρω ῥόσπην, extending, as Dodd. says, to the powers of the mind as well as the appetites of the body, and opposed to the new nature communicated by the renewing of the Holy Spirit. See Tit. i. 15.

Of the groups into which the vices now specified seem thrown, there are four: 1. Those of lust, μοιχ., πορν., ἀκαθ., ἀσέλγ. 2. Those of superstition, or impiety, εἰδωλ. and φαρμ. 3. Those of anger, discord, enmity, reviling, and contention, ἔχθραι, ἔροι, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, ἐριδ., διχοστ., αἶρ., φθόν., φόνος. 4. Those of drunkenness and debauchery, μέθ. κῶμοι. As to the first group, the terms μοιχ. and πορν. are often coupled, both in the Old and New Testament.

Μοιχ. is, indeed, wanting in six MSS., some Versions, and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. and others; but rashly; since the external evidence for this is very insufficient, and the internal not strong. The omission arose, I suspect, from homeoteleuton in MSS. which had πορν. μοιχ. The recently collated MSS. have almost all of them the common reading. By ἀκαθ. and ἀσέλγ. are denoted the unnatural lusts adverted to in Rom. i.

20. εἰδωλ., φαρμ.] I cannot agree with Koppe, Borg., and Win., that εἰδ. is placed after fornication as being spiritual fornication. It has, I conceive, no connexion with the preceding, (hence it is separated in all the ancient Commentators, and forms the commencement of a fresh verse,) but is coupled with φαρμ., as bearing an affinity thereto. Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say, εἰδ. must be taken in the usual signification of the word; being rightly numbered among the works of the flesh (or those things to which human nature is especially prone), since it originates in a grovelling and sensual mind, which cannot worship God in spirit, nor have any conception of his perfect holiness; but brings Him down to the senses, and represents him to corporeal eyes by images.

Φαρμακεία is by many of the most eminent Commentators supposed to mean poisoning, a crime dreadfully prevalent in the then corrupt state of society, both among the Heathens and the Jews. This, however, cannot, I think, be admitted as the true sense; not, indeed, for the reason assigned by Slade and Scott, "because it is included in φόβος" (for, as I shall show, homicide rather than murder is meant there), but because the vices and evil dispositions contained in this enumeration are, as Chrys. and Theophyl. have pointed out, such as our corrupt nature is prone to. Now it cannot be meant, that man is by nature prone to poisoning. In fact, the works in question are, almost all of them, such as were by the Heathens regarded as but slight delinquencies; and scarcely any of them punishable by law. It was therefore not unnatural for the Christian converts to treat them in general as venial offences, not inconsistent with their salvation. To remove this misconception, the Apostle solemnly assures them that they will (i. e. if persisted in, and unrepented of) exclude from the kingdom of heaven. On the contrary, to the enumeration of vices which closes the first Chapter of Romans, is subjoined not the present declaration, but that "the perpetrators of such things are deservedly adjudged to spiritual death." Moreover, the sense in question of φαρμ. is inconsistent with the word following; and the true interpretation seems to be that adopted by the ancient Expositors in general, and most modern ones; i. e. sorcery of every kind, including charms, divinations, incantations, fortune-telling, and attempted intercourse with evil spirits, real or pretended; together with other arts, employed sometimes by the heathen priests for the support of their superstition, but oftener by impostors, similar to our conjurers, for the purpose of gain.

In all such cases there can be no doubt that there was a mixture of sorcery and legerdemain; of which the former, in all its branches, was closely connected with the making up of powerful medicaments, to produce deception of the senses, and otherwise effect what might be in vain attempted by incantations or such like. How feasible this was, as well as other illusions, by methods now familiar to all who are versed in natural philosophy (by phantasmagoria), is fully proved by Dr. Hibbert on Apparitions. Nor was this all; for such impostors also eked out the force of charms, spells, and medicaments, by the use of actual poisons, as in the case of Sir T. Overbury in modern times. Not to say that idolatry is in Scripture frequently mentioned in conjunction with sorcery. See Deut. xviii. 9, 10, xi. 15. Exod. xx. 17. Also Levit. xix., xx., and 2 Chron. xxxviii. Indeed, Sir W. Scott on Demonology, Letter II., has fully shown, that “the sorcery, or witchcraft, of the Old Testament resolves itself into trafficking with idols, and asking counsel of false deities; in other words, into idolatry.” Finally, it should seem that the Apostle has in view not so much the persons who practised the arts of sorcery or divination, but rather those who resorted to them. This would exclude from salvation, as being inconsistent with any true dependence on God, and in fact (as Mr. Scott says) “worshipping the Devil,” since in 1 Cor. x. 20. the gods of the heathens are by implication called devils, i. e. when real, and not mere stocks and stones.

The terms of the next class are such as we find frequently united both in the N. T. (as Phil. i. 15. 2 Cor. xii. 20.) and the Classical writers. The plural being used for greater force. It should seem that the terms ἐχθραί, ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, are meant of private enmities, bickering, emulations, and angry disputes; and ἐριθείαι, διχοστασίαι and φθόνοι, of public and party strife, and its results in uncharitable divisions or separations, and heresy or sectarism in general. See Whitby, Chandl., Doddridge, Newc., and Mackn. By φθόνοι may be designated the temper which, as the Poet says, “inly pines” at the happiness of others. Or it may be meant to be conjoined with the preceding. So Soph. Œd. Col. 1228. (cited by Wets.) φόνοι, στάσεις, ἔρεις, μάχαι, καὶ φθόνοι. Several eminent Editors and Commentators would cancel the φόνου, on the authority of some six MSS. and a few Latin Fathers. This, however, is very uncritical, since it appears to have been omitted by the scribes from homeoteleuton, and by the ancient Critics from the same vain notion that induced their modern brethren to cancel it; thinking it strange that murder should be inserted in the list, as being punishable rather by the civil magistrate. But not to say that adultery was also punishable by the civil magistrate, and yet is found in the list; (compare also Eph. iv. 28. 1 Cor. v. 11. vi. 10. Rom. ii. 22. seq.) that objection may be fully removed by supposing, that the Apostle here does not mean murder, but homicide; which was among the ancients often committed in the excitement of anger and strife. This is confirmed by Rom. i. 29.

The last group is μέθαι, κῶμοι, joined also in Rom. xiii. 13. and often in the Classical writers. By the latter are denoted those nocturnal revelings, usually attendant on an evening of debauchery, consisting of licentious singing, dancing, and parading the streets with drunken riotings.

22. καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος.] The best modern Commentators take καρπ. as put for ἔργα, to correspond to the ἔργα τῆς σαρκὸς before; referring to Matth. vii. 16. and Eph. v. 9. But the truth meant seems to be, what is excellently expressed by Chrys. and Theophyl., as follows: “Evil works come from ourselves alone; therefore they are called the works of the flesh; but virtuous ones require not our own exertions alone, but the aid of Divine grace; therefore the Apostle calls them the fruits of the Spirit; the seed (namely, the intention) being from ourselves, but the fruit resting with God.”

Ἀγάπη is placed first, as being the germ of all virtues, and a general virtue comprehending many particular ones; being the love of God, and of man, for God's sake. Χαρὰ may denote joy of the spirit, as 1 Thess. i. 6.; or rather (as the context suggests, and the best Expositors understand) a rejoicing in the happiness of others, opposed to envy and malevolence, which are works of the flesh. Εἰρήνη denotes a peaceable temper of mind, opposed to ἔρις, θυμὸς, διχοστασίαι, αἰρέσεις; as μακροθ. seems to be to ζῆλος, which may be paralleled with the τὸ ἐμπλήκτως ὀζὺν of Thucyd. iii. 82. So also 2 Tim. iii. 4. προπετεῖς. To proceed, χρηστ. and ἀγαθ. are modifications of the same virtue, springing partly from that constitutional good temper with which some are blessed. The terms are often, as here, combined, (as Rom. xv. 14. Eph. v. 9. 2 Thess. ii. 11.); the former denoting benignity, affability, and good humour; the latter, kind-heartedness, which delights in doing good. Πίστις is variously interpreted. It may denote (as most recent Commentators suppose) fidelity and integrity; which is not an unfrequent sense of the word. From the context, however, it should seem to mean that modification of fidelity which consists in sincerity, and does not, in the words of Homer, “think one thing, ἄλλο δὲ βάζει.” Ἐγκράτεια denotes not only temperance in the gratification of the appetites (as opposed to sensuality) but in the indulgence of the passions; in short, a general moderation about earthly things.

23. The sense of the verse is: “Against such dispositions as those above mentioned, no law, whether the law of Moses, or that of nature, is directed; and to these neither can have reference, being not promulgated against virtue, but vice." For the law was not made for the righteous, but for sinners, &c. 1 Tim. i. 9. See Bp. Bull's Exam. p. 82. Col. 2.

24. οἱ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ—ἐπιθ.] There is much diversity of opinion as to the connection of this sentiment. See Recens. Syn. It should seem that the Apostle means to still further enforce what he had said at v. 21: "they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God," q. d. "No! I repeat, they shall not inherit the kingdom of God. For those only are Christ's, and can possess the inheritance, who have crucified and do crucify and mortify those carnal lusts." This obedience to the Law, and earnest striving after conformity to it, is represented as the test whether persons really belong to Christ or not. Σταυρ. is used as at supra v. 16: and παῖς, and ἐπιπ. are nearly synonymous, but may be rendered "passions and appetites;" for by crucifying the former as well as the latter, we cleanse the fountain. On the present subject, see Rom. viii. 13. and vi. 4.

25. εἰ ζῶμεν—στοιχ.] There is here an abrupt transition, and the connection is not very obvious. The εἰ is by some rendered since, which, however, cannot be admitted. The connection is certainly with the preceding verse; and if that had been fully understood, there would have been no difficulty in discerning the sense. Now as there St. Paul says they only are really Christ's who thus crucify the flesh [whether they profess to have the Spirit or not], so here he means to say, If, then, ye profess to be living by the Spirit, show it, by acting conformably to it, evincing the fruits of the Spirit. "A caution (observes Bp. Middl.) against trusting to the all-sufficiency of faith." On the force of the term στοιχ., see Rom. iv. 12. Phil. iii. 16. and Notes. It is not a mere Hebraism, since examples of the sense are adduced by Wets. from Philo, Polyb., and Sext. Emp., as C. Eth. 59. στοιχεῖν τοῖς φιλοσόφοις. The Apostle here adopts the first person through delicacy.

26. μὴ γιν. κενόδ.] q. d. "And as a proof that we are living by it, let us," &c. The Apostle means to caution them against giving way to pride, conceit, and envy, to which he knew they were prone. The expressions seem to have a reference chiefly to their conduct in spiritual matters, and religious communication. The term προκαλεῖσθαι signifies to call forth any one to a trial of skill or courage, and may here allude to the competition of those who exhibited their spiritual gifts. Hence the injunction following is closely connected with what is here said.

VI. 1. Contemplating the probability that there would yet be breaches of the foregoing rules (as is clear from the καὶ, even), the Apostle subjoins an admonition to certain persons who, however spiritually minded, had not yet mortified the desire of vain-glory; indulging their vanity, by censoriousness and spiritual pride.

—ἐὰν καὶ προληφθῇ, &c.] "If any person be overtaken in and hurried into a fault," (i. e. before he is aware, and not with deliberation, or habituality) do you οἱ πνευματικοὶ (i. e. who possess the spiritual gifts mentioned at iii. 5. and consequently advanced in Christian knowledge), and who are (agreeably to the above admonition) walking by the Spirit. These may have been, as some say, the persons who held Ecclesiastical offices in the Galatian Church; but the first mentioned sense is probably what the Apostle chiefly intended. See Scott. Καταρτίζ. is for διορθοῦσθε, ἐπανορθοῦσθε. On the nature of the term I have treated at 1 Cor. i. 10. and elsewhere. The metaphor is derived from setting right a dislocated limb, there being an allusion to the erring member of Christ's body, the Church. Now this is directed to be done ἐν πνεύμ. πραότ., which (notwithstanding that many Expositors refer it to the Holy Spirit, the bestower of it) must mean "with a spirit and temper of mildness."

1. σκοπῶν—πειρασθῆς.] The sense is, "each of you considering thyself, lest thou also be [so] tempted [as to fall in like manner]." If this be thought too harsh, we may take the πειρ. for ληψθῆς, with Wakefield, who aptly cites from Plutarch: Γέρον γέροντι γλώσσαν ἡδίστην ἔχει· | Παῖς παῖδι, καὶ γυναῖκι πρόσφορον γυνή. | Νοσῶν τ' ἀνὴρ νοσοῦντι, καὶ δυσπραξία | Ληψθεῖς ἐπαρδός ἐστι (chimes in with) τῷ πειρωμένῳ.

2. ἀλλήλων τὰ βάρη βαστ.] The sense is, "Bear with each other's infirmities and faults;" called βάρη, as being burdensome not only to the person himself (see Ps. xxxviii. 4.) but to others his followers. Comp. Rom. xv. 1. and Note, 1 Thess. v. 14. and infra v. 6.

—καὶ οὕτως ἀναπλ., &c.] The sense is, "And thus fulfil [as ye will do] the precept of Christ, which enjoins us to love one another;" (as in John xiii. 34. xv. 12.) thus also following his example. So Ignat. (cited by Borger) Πάντας βαστάζε, ὡς καὶ σε ὁ Κύριος, πάντων ἀνέχου ἐν ἀγάπῃ.

3. εἰ δοκεῖ, &c.] The argument is, that this self-conceit is useless; for it does not really make any one the greater: he only deceives himself,

[not others, much less God]. Μηδὲν ὧν must be taken populariter, to denote "nothing comparable to what he thinks himself, or claims to be thought," and, in one sense, nothing at all; as not having learnt the fundamental duties of humility and charity. Φρεναπ. A word not found, except in St. Paul's writings, and probably provincial. The sense is that of ἀπατῶν καρδίαν αὐτοῦ in a kindred passage of James i. 26.

4, 5. To prevent this fatal mistake, and effectually dissipate the delusion, the Apostle bids them, instead of censuring the failings of others, to examine and try their own actions by the test of God's laws. The words καὶ τότε εἰς ἑαυτὸν—τὸν ἕτερον are variously interpreted, and, indeed, admit of more than one sense. See Rec. Syn. Several recent Expositors (as Schleus., Koppe, and Borg.) take it to be, "let him keep his boasting to himself alone, and not extend it to others." But the common interpretation, with some modification, is more natural and agreeable to the words, "Thus he will have matter of glorying, or rejoicing, in reference to himself, and not to others;" i. e. by comparing himself with others.

5. ἕκαστος—βαστάσει.] This passage admits of two senses, corresponding to the two interpretations of the latter part of the preceding verse. By the one it will denote (as Koppe, Borg., and Win. explain) "Every one will find frailties enow of his own to wrestle with;" by the other (which is supported by the ancient and most modern Expositors), "Every man will bear his own burden;" i. e. his own burden only, not another's; his own burden of faults and sins, and give his account of them at the last day. Consequently we are not to busy ourselves about the burdens of others, nor try to lighten our own burden by making that of our neighbour heavier; but mind solely our own, or at least rather try to lighten our neighbour's burden. Thus φορτ. ἔχειν is for αἰτίαν ἔχειν, as Thucyd. iv. 114.

6. κοιν. "let him give part." See Note on Rom. xii. 13. Τῷ κατ. τ. λ., "to him who instructs him in the Gospel." Ἐν πᾶσιν ἀγ. for πάντων ἀγαθῶν, which is the usual syntax. See Note on Rom. xv. 27. The meaning is, "in all things necessary to the attainment of the purpose in view," the dissemination of sound religion. Κατηχ. is a term properly applicable only to instruction vivâ voce; and it is frequently used of religious instruction.

7. μὴ πλανᾶσθε.] A formula generally introductory to some verbal admonition on a subject which the person addressed would be likely to neglect. Θεὸς οὐ μυκτ. The sense is, "is not to be mocked or offended [with impunity]." Both expressions seem to refer to the various subterfuges, by which it is usual to seek to evade this duty; q. d. Deceive not yourselves, nor hope to escape the punishment of God, who will not suffer himself to be insulted with impunity. The words following contain properly a sententia generalis; which, however, is here meant first to be applied to the preceding subject, i. e. the support of the teachers (as at 2 Cor. ix. 6.); and then, in the next verses, has a general application. There is here a metaphor in which the flesh and the spirit are compared to fields, in which the seed of each is sown, and yields crops according to its nature; q. d. that he who neglects the duty in question, and charity to the poor, aiming only at his own gratification, and seeking only his own interest, will reap the fruits of such a selfish and sensual life, in corruption both temporal and spiritual,—namely, perdition. But he who soweth to the spirit, (i. e. what is spiritual generally) by living according to it (see Note on v. 16—25.) shall reap [not only the present fruits, in inward consolation, but] everlasting life.

9. τὸ δὲ καλὸν, &c.] The Apostle here shows that what he has said is meant to be applied particularly to works of piety and benevolence, such as the support of the teachers of the Gospel and the relief of the poor. The same agricultural metaphor is continued. Ἐκκακεῖν signifies "to give up, from being tired out," as in the more complete phrase ἐκλύεσθαι ταῖς ψυχαῖς in Heb. xii. 9. Ἐκλύεσθαι signifies to be quite wearied, and is often used, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, as applied to τρερίζειν; of which examples are adduced by Kypke and Borg. It refers to that tiring of charity which the frequent calls on their benevolence and the ungrateful returns they might meet with, would be likely to produce. With this elegant use of ἐκκακεῖν and ἐκλύεσθαι as applied to benevolence, I would compare a similar use of κἀμνειν in Eurip. Bell. frag. 28. 2. ξένοις τ' ἐπηρκεῖς, οὐδὲ κἀμνεεῖς εἰς φίλους, and Athen. 276. C. οὐκ ἂν ἐκοπίασε τὰ αὐτὰ παρασκευάζουσα. See also 1 Cor. xv. 58. 2 Thess. iii. 13.

10. ἄρα—πίστεως.] The ἄρα is used like ὥστε at 2 Cor. v. 16., and the sense is: "Having, therefore, these strong motives to sow unto the Spirit, by making pious and charitable contributions, let us do good," &c. It seems to have been the especial care of the Apostle, in this concluding admonition, to show that the duty was to be performed, not only towards the minis- try, but towards Christians in general, and not towards Christians only, but towards all their fellow-creatures. Ὡς καιρὸν ἔχ., "whilst we have the opportunity of this life, and as occasions present themselves." Ἐργάζεσθαι is a more significant term than ποιεῖν, and implies diligence, in short, "labour of love." The phrase ἐργ. ἀγαθὸν occurs also in Herodotus. Οἰκείος signifies, "one who belongs to any family," who is connected with it, either by consanguinity or affinity; and also one who is closely connected with another, as an acquaintance; of which sense examples are adduced by Wets. from Herodian and other authors. One cannot but remark the high superiority of the Gospel, in liberality of spirit, over the law. Nor was the admonition here of the Apostle given in vain. Thus even Julian (cited by Wets.) bears this testimony (the more valuable, as coming from an apostate and bitter enemy) τρέφουσιν οἱ δυσσεβεῖς Γαλιλαῖοι πρὸς τοῖς ἐναντῶν καὶ τοὺς ἡμετέρους. It may be observed, that though the Apostate has mentioned the Christians by his usual opprobrious term οἱ δυσσεβεῖς, yet he was not ashamed to steal from their Scriptures, and appropriate one of their most sublime precepts. Thus in his Frag. ap. Op. p. 290, 291. edit. Spanh. he says: Κοινωνητέον—Ἀπασιν ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν ἐπιείκεσιν ἐλευθεριώτερον.

11. πηλικοίς ὑμῖν γράμμ. ἔγγρ.] These words have not a little perplexed Expositors; some of whom (both ancient and modern ones) take the sense to be, "See with what great kind of letters" (i. e. how mis-shapen), &c. This, however, would be frigid, and does not comport with Apostolic gravity, or the reserve manifest through the whole Epistle. The difficulty may be removed by taking πηλ. (with the best Expositors) to denote "how long," instead of the customary sense of the word "how great;" γράμμ. being used, like the Latin epistola, for a letter, as in Acts xxviii. 21. It is well observed by Win., that the letter is called long, considering that it was written with his own hand. The Apostle meant thereby both to attest its genuineness, and to point to that circumstance, as indicating his affection for them, and anxiety for their welfare and salvation. St. Paul, it is well known, generally dictated his letters to a scribe, (as was indeed much the custom in ancient times, especially in the East, where it continues to this day) probably because the infirmity of body alluded to in "the thorn in the flesh," made it irksome for him to form the characters with any accuracy. See Note on Rom. xvi. 22.

12. Ὅσοι θέλουσιν, &c.] q. d. "It is not I who impel you to the observance of the Mosaic Law, but those who court the gale of popular applause, —they instigate you to it." Εὐπροσωπ. is by many explained "endeavour to please others." That sense, however, cannot fairly be extracted; and the word is best interpreted "to make a fair appearance of piety, commend themselves as very religious." So Chrys. explains by εὐδοκμεῖν. The word εὐπροσωπείω is not found in the Classical writers; though φανοπροσωπεῖν and σεμνοπροσ. there occur. And plausible arguments are by the Rhetoricians called εὐπρόσωπα. The ἐν σαρκί is not well explained ἐν ἀνθρώποις. The true sense seems to be that pointed out by Winer. "As (says he) the term σὰρξ comprehends every thing that is not of the Spirit, nor belongs to it, εὐπροσωποῦντες ἐν σαρκί are those who endeavour, not by that disposition of mind which proceeds from the Spirit, but in another way, by outward appearances [rather by carnal compliances, Ep.], to recommend themselves (viz. to the Judaizers)." Ἀναγκάζειν must here, as elsewhere, be understood of the moral compulsion of earnest persuasion, which will take no denial.

Τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χρ. is explained by almost all the recent Commentators (as it was by Luther and Calvin) of "punishments such as Christ suffered." But it is better, with the ancient and most modern Expositors, from Piscator to Borger, to take the ἐπὶ in the sense proper (of which many examples are adduced by Borger); and σταυρῷ to denote "the doctrine of the cross," Christianity being so called by opposition to the Law; and since the death of Christ abrogated the Mosaic Law, and the doctrine of the atonement thereby made for the sins of men, effectually excluded the use of circumcision. See Note at v. 11. as also the excellent annotation of Dodd.

13. οἱ περιτεμν.] Many Commentators refer this to the persons who had thus submitted to undergo circumcision. Others, however, with more propriety, refer it to the Judaizers. The var. lect. περιτετμημένοι, (found in many ancient and excellent MSS. of all recensions, and several Fathers and early Editions,) is approved by Matth. and Griesb., and preferred by Rinck. I have not ventured to edit it, since the reading seems to me to have arisen from a gloss; though it strongly confirms the interpretation which I have adopted, as showing its high antiquity. The persons in question, did not, indeed, intend to impose the whole law; and they acted as they did, to keep fair with the Jews, and have to boast of their influence in procuring the reception of the rite of circumcision; for that is (as Borger and Win. have shown) the sense of the ἵνα ἐν τῇ ὑμ. σαρκὶ καυχ., where τετμημένη is to be supplied from the περιτ. preceding, "Your circumcised flesh," being equivalent to "your being circumcised," "your circumcision."

14. The ἐμοὶ is emphatical, there being an implied comparison with the Judaizers. The sense may be expressed by the following paraphrase: "But, for my part, I leave them to glory in an antiquated rite; such is not my course; God forbid that I should feel proud of the inculcation of any doctrine [and least of all circumcision] except the plain unmixed doctrine of justification, not by my own merits, but by the atonement of a crucified Redeemer." See the excellent Note of Calvin. Δι' οὗ, "by which scil. σταυροῦ, doctrine of the cross."

— ἐμοὶ κόσμος—κόσμῳ.] By ἐσταύρ. is meant "is crucified and dead," i. e. is nothing to me. Κόσμος should not be interpreted "the Jewish nation," or the "Jewish economy," or non-Christians, with many recent Commentators. It must mean, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, understand, the things of the world, i. e. its riches, honours, and pleasures. Bp. Middl., indeed, stumbling at the omission of the Article, and having remarked that whenever in the N. T. κόσμος, the world, occurs in its common acceptation, it has the Article, except here and in 2 Cor. v. 19. (of course, not reckoning passages like Rom. ii. 12, 15, where the omission may be accounted for by the rules) thinks that, in both these passages, the word has somewhat of the nature of a proper name, and can therefore dispense with the Article. He instances Plutarch, p. 470. ὁ δὲ Ζεὺς καὶ Κόσμος, "Jupiter and World." And he might have added Shakspeare, "O World, thy slippery turns!" Since, however, it seems impossible to adopt that view of κόσμος at 2 Cor. v. 19., both on account of its harshness (supposing a sort of conceit such as we should not expect in the Apostle) and because αὐτοῖς καὶ αὐτῶν immediately follow; so it should seem unsafe to adopt it here; which is also forbidden by the τῷ with κόσμῳ just after; for though the Article is not found there in seven or eight MSS., yet it has never been cancelled by any Editor. Indeed, it was more likely to be omitted (on account of the omission before) than inserted. The interpretation, in short, may be considered as a learned and ingenious, but unfounded fancy. And the common mode of taking the word must certainly be preferred; especially as it is supported by Acts xvii. 24. ὁ κόσμος καὶ πάντα τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ.

The Dative here is for the Accusative with εἰς. Winer supposes that we have here one sentiment expressed reciprocally by two formulas; as in

John. vi. 36. 2 Thess. i. 12. 1 Cor. vi. 13. 2 Cor. xi. 35. This, however, is a precarious principle. See the Notes on the passages adduced. We have here two formulas, because there is, as Chrys. and Theophyl. point out, a two-fold death indicated, οὔτε γὰρ ἐκεῖνα ἐλεῖν με δύναται· νεκρὸς γάρ· οὐδὲ αὐτὸς προσδραμεῖν ἐκείνοις· νεκρὸς γὰρ εἰμι.

15. τι ἐστίν.] This reading (found in all the most ancient MSS., as also many Versions and Fathers) was approved by Mill and Beng., and has been edited by Griesb., Koppe, Tittm., Vat., and Win.; rightly, I think, since the common reading is plainly a gloss, probably from v. 6. Nay, ισχύει, Rinck says, would involve a petitio principii; whereas, with ἐστίν the γὰρ has its force, denoting the reason why he did not boast of circumcision, as did his adversaries; "for circumcision is nothing." Ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις. The full sense is: "But the being a new creature, moral regeneration, is every thing, all in all, the substance of the Gospel." See Note on 2 Cor. v. 17.

16. τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχ.] On the force of στοιχ. see Note supra v. 25. and on καν. see Note on 2 Cor. x. 13. By "this rule," the Apostle means the doctrine just mentioned, of salvation by grace, and the necessity of moral regeneration. By τὸν Ἰσρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is meant the true spiritual Israel. See Note on Rom. ix. 6. In εἰρήνῃ ἐπ' αὐτοὺς we have not an assertory, but a precatory form, nearly allied to that of benediction, by bidding adieu. The Epistle probably was meant to terminate here, just as the Epistle to the Ephesians concludes with εἰρήνῃ τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, and v. 17. was added afterwards.

17. τοῦ λοιποῦ.] This is by some rendered "quod reliqui est." But it seems rightly taken by Koppe, Beng., and Winer, for λοιπὸν in 2 Cor. xiii. 11. 1 Thess. iv. 1. henceforward. Κόπους παρ. is for the more Classical πράγματα παρ. The sense seems to be, "let me have no more trouble, by either my doctrine, or sincerity and integrity being questioned; for [of the latter] I bear strong attestation in the στίγματα or wounds of former scourgings, beating, and stoning of the Jews and others for the sake of Christ and his Gospel." Βαστάζω is here used for περιφέρειω, and only means that this is, wherever he goes, an evidence of his sincerity.

18. μετὰ τοῦ πν. ὑ.] The best Expositors are agreed that πνεύματος means mind and heart.

C. I. This has been pronounced the richest and noblest of the Epistles. And, certainly, in fulness of matter, depth of doctrine, sublimity of metaphor, animated fervour of style (occasionally rising to what has been called rapture), and Apostolic earnestness of exhortation, it so interests the heart, that (to apply the words of Dr. Johnson, with respect to Law's Serious Call) "if the reader have a spark of regard for the Gospel, it will blow it into a flame." Or, to use the metaphor of Dr. Macknight, "he will feel impressed and roused with it, as by the sound of a trumpet." The reason for its peculiar character of pious exaltation, and affectionate admonition, seems to be that assigned by Mr. Scott,—namely, that "the Apostle's heart was much enlarged in writing to those, whom he had no occasion to rebuke, and with whom he was not under the necessity of engaging in controversy; so that entire confidence of affection took place of the caution, reserve, or sharpness, which were requisite in the three preceding Epistles." Accordingly, none of the re-proofs, that are so frequent in the preceding Epistles, are found in the present; which was written, it should seem, to confirm the Ephesian and other Asiatic Churches in the true faith and practice of the Gospel; of which the Apostle first (i. 1. 2.) shows the great end,—that it was meant for all mankind, and that he himself was appointed the preacher of it to the Gentiles. Then, after expatiating on the love of God, the dignity of Christ, and the excellence of the Gospel, he warns his converts against the evil practices, in which they had formerly lived; and which, as Christians, they had renounced. And while he guards them against errors, he establishes them in the great doctrines of the Gospel, fortifies their minds to contend for, and persevere in the faith of Christ, and animates them in their Christian warfare. Finally, he earnestly exhorts them to a zealous discharge of the relative duties, and all others becoming their Christian profession. The Epistle is universally admitted to be from St. Paul; for which indeed there is the strongest evidence, external and internal (see Horne's Int.);

and, as appears from various allusions, was written during his imprisonment at Rome. Commentators are neither agreed on the date (varying from A.D. 57 or 58 to 62), nor even on the Church, to whom it was addressed. Some think it was to the Christians at Laodicea, and is the Epistle to the Laodiceans referred to by the Apostle in Col. iv. 16. While others, to reconcile conflicting testimonies, suppose it to have been a circular letter, intended for all the churches of Asia Minor. Be that as it may, there is not a shadow of external proof that it was not addressed to the Ephesians (see the Notes of Bp. Middl. and Rinck); though doubtless intended for the use also of the other churches of Asia Minor. As to the alleged internal evidence, that it was not written to the Ephesians, it is quite inconclusive, being merely founded on a misconception of certain words and expressions that occur in the Epistle; and which, when properly interpreted, rather confirm the common opinion,—supported by all the MSS., and the almost unvaried evidence of antiquity. As to the difficulty occasioned by the seeming mention of an Epistle to the Laodiceans, it admits of an easy solution. The Apostle is, with much probability, supposed to have directed the Ephesians, through Tychicus, the bearer of the Epistle, to send a copy of it to the Laodiceans; which should also be afterwards transmitted to the Colossians.

1. διὰ θελ. Θεοῦ.] See 1 Cor. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1. Gal. i. and Notes. Τοῖς ἀγίοις. See Note on Rom. i. 7. Καὶ πιστοῖς. This term seems to be exegetical of the preceding, q. d. "even to all true believers in Jesus Christ."

3. "The twelve verses, from 3—14. inclusive, properly speaking, form one sentence. The Apostle's mind was so full of his subject, that he was not very exact about his style. Reflecting on the great things which God had done for him, and by him, especially among the Gentiles, the Apostle breaks out into rapturous thanksgivings unto God on that account." (Scott.)

is, as at Rom. xv. 6., where see Note. With respect to the accumulation of cognate terms here in εὐλογ., εὐλογήσας, and εὐλογία, that was by the ancients rather sought after as a beauty, than avoided as a blemish.

— ὁ εὐλογήσας—πνευμ. “who hath blessed us with (i. e. hath liberally bestowed upon us) every spiritual blessing.” The Commentators in general are not agreed whether this is to be understood of the supernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit, or the sanctifying graces of the Spirit; including all the ordinary, though invaluable blessings of salvation: whatever may conduce to the consolation of our souls here, or prepare them for glory hereafter. It should seem best (with Chrys., Theodoret, Whitby, Wells, Chandler, and others) to unite both senses.

Much diversity of opinion exists as to the sense of the remarkable phrase ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, which is either interpreted “in heavenly places,” or “in heavenly things,” according as the ellipsis is supplied by τόποις, or πράγμασι. The former mode is adopted by the earlier modern Expositors (as Beza, Pisc., and Grot., and, of the later ones, by Wolf, Wells, Chandler, Wakef., Koppe, Schleus., and Wahl), and is confirmed by the Syriac Version. Thus the sense they assign is “not only on earth, but in heaven.” This they establish from the same expression at v. 20; ii. 6; iii. 10, where, they say, it means “in heavenly places.” Even there, however, Dr. Burton explains it, “in heavenly or spiritual things.” So at John iii. 12. τὰ ἐπουράνια are opposed to τὰ ἐπίγεια. And this is probably the case at vi. 12. Indeed, the above ellip. is so harsh, and the sense yielded so unsuitable, that it is better, with almost all the ancient and most modern Expositors (as Vorst., Casaub., Crell., Schlit., Whitby, Schoettg., Dodd., Rosen., Iaspis, and Bretchn.) to take it in the latter sense, understanding by heavenly things (as Dodd. explains) things relating to heaven, and tending to fit us for it. Thus ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ. is, as Schliting observes, in apposition with, and exegetical of, ἐν πνευμ. εὐλ.: or rather there is a kind of climax, ἐπουρ. denoting more than πνευμ.

4. The Apostle now adverts to the nature of these πνευμ. and ἐπουρ. Καθὼς is variously translated; but by none, I think, accurately represented. It seems to mean siquidem, inasmuch as, (as at John xvii. 2. Rom. i. 28. 1 Cor. i. 6.), with a reference to εὐλογητός, &c.; the words ὁ εὐλογ. — Χριστῷ being in some degree parenthetical. I have pointed accordingly, with R. Stephens 1, and Vater. Ἐξελ. ἡμᾶς ἐν α., “hath selected us, or shown us marks of peculiar favour by and through Him;” i. e. “Christ;” as 1 Cor. i. 27 & 28. (where see Note) and James ii. 5. Πρὸ κατ. κόσμ., i. e. from all eternity, see Note on Matt. xiii. 35. At εἶναι ἡμᾶς sub. εἰς τὸ, “to the end that.” See Win. Gr. Gr. § 38.

3. No. 1. In ἁγίους καὶ ἁμώμους the former term seems to regard the duties of piety, the latter those of morality. The words ἐν ἀγάπῃ are variously construed. In several MSS., Fathers, and the Greek Commentators (and also by some moderns) they are taken, as Koppe and Griesb., with προορίσας in the next verse. I have, however, preferred, with Tittm. and the Bâle Editor, to retain the common punctuation, since the words are more naturally connected with the preceding than the following. This is confirmed by the circumstance, that v. 5. is exegetical of v. 4; and therefore it was likely that, as the portion to be explained commenced with the principal word ἐξελέξατο, so the explanatory one would with προορίσας. Ἐν ἀγάπῃ may, with some, be referred to ἐξελέξατο, and signify “out of His love to us;” but it more naturally connects with ἁμώμους, and signifies “by or in the exercise of charity,” as Pisc., Erasm., Beza, Crell., Schlit., and Dodd., and Chandl. take it. Κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ suggests the idea of truth and reality.

5. προορίσας, &c.] The election of the foregoing verse is here further represented by predestination to sonship. Προορ. ἡμᾶς εἰς υἱοθ. εἰς αὐτὸν is said by Koppe to be put for προορ. εἰσποῦσασθαι ἡμᾶς τέκνα αὐτοῦ. But it is rather for προορ. νοθετεῖν ἡμᾶς αὐτῷ and that for εἰς αὐτόν. This υἱοθεσία had formerly appertained to the Jews only, (Rom. ix. 4. comp. v. 8.) but was now extended, through Christ, to all believers; as denoting that relation in which Christians especially stand to God. Thus the sense is: “And this election consists in having from eternity decreed for us the privilege of being his sons.” Κατὰ τὴν εὐδ. θ. θελ., “according to his own mere good pleasure,—because sic visum est.” See Grot. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that the election and predestination in question solely relate to God’s eternal purpose, of bestowing the privilege of adoption (on which see Note on Rom. viii. 15.) upon the Ephesians and other sincere believers in Christ. This is confirmatory of what was said at v. 3. of spiritual blessings of the highest kind having been imparted to them. Indeed, even candid Calvinistic Commentators (see Dodd.) admit that the Apostle has here no reference to the personal election of individuals, but to the election of whole communities and nations,—even all the Gentiles, whom God was pleased to admit to the benefits of the Gospel. See more in Chandl.

6. Having assured them of God’s eternal purpose to call them to the knowledge of the Gospel and the privileges of the Church of God, he proceeds to show them how great an instance this was of the mercy and goodness of God. (Chandl.)

— εἰς ἔπαινον—αὐτοῦ.] The sense is: “to the praise of his glorious grace;” i. e. that his glorious grace might be admired and adored.

Ἐχαρ., "hath made us accepted," or "favoured us with his grace." See Luke i. 28. and Note.

Ἐν τῷ ἡγαπ. Render, "by or through the Beloved;" so the Peschito Syr. Version, "per Dilectum." Thus τῷ ἡγαπ. is a title of Jesus, like ὁ Χριστός (as in Luke ii. 26. πρὶν ἢ ἰδεῖν τὸν Χριστὸν Κύριον), or what Aquila substitutes for it in the O. T., ὁ ἡλειμμένος. It appears, then, to have been not a mere appellation, but (like Χριστός) to have denoted office or dignity, with allusion to the words of the voice from heaven, Matt. iii. 17. "This is my Beloved Son." Thus it may be compared with the ὁ μονογενὴς of John i. 14 & 18; iii. 18. 1 John iv. 9. where the full sense is, "only and most dearly beloved." So the Hebr. נִיחָם, which properly denotes only, as said of a child, is by the LXX. rendered ἀγαπώμενος at Ps. xxii. 21. and xxxv. 17. and at Prov. iv. 3. it is rendered ἀγαπώμενος by the LXX., but μονογενὴς by the other Greek Translators. Both ideas, however, seem intended; and the term is not ill rendered in our common Version "only beloved." The same rendering should, I think, be adopted in the passages of St. John. Both ideas were meant, as Schleus. says, "ad indicandam sublimiorem ejus naturam, quæ nulli creature competit."

7. ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν—αἵματος.] I would render, "through whom we possess (i. e. to whom we owe) the redemption [procured] by his blood." So Rom. iii. 24. διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χρ. Ἰ. (where see Note) and also Heb. xi. 35. οὐ προσδεχόμενος τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν. where Wakef. and Bp. Middl. have alone seen the force of the Article. I am not, indeed, aware of a single instance in the N. T. where the Article, when used with this word, has not its full force. Τὴν ἄφεσιν τ. παραπ., "the forgiveness of our sins." Παραπ. properly denotes a slip or slight transgression, but is also used, especially in the N. T., of sins of every kind.

8. ἧς for ᾗ, (by a common Grecism, in which the relative is attracted by the antecedent,) if ἐπερίσσο. be taken, with many modern Expositors, in a neuter sense, "in which He hath renewed his abundant goodness to us:" but if, with the ancient and some modern ones, in an active one, "to make to abound" (as in 2 Cor. iv. 15; ix. 8.) the ἧς will be for ἣν. The sense is: "which he has bountifully bestowed upon us." Ἐν σοφ. καὶ φρον. may be construed with γνῶριςας which follows; but it is better taken (as it is done by the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors) with ἐπερίσσο. which precedes. If the words be referred to God, the sense will be, "in the exercise of the deepest wisdom [of plan] and prudence [of execution]." If to the Ephesians, it will be, "in imparting to us the wisdom and prudence necessary to understand the Gospel." Either method is agreeable to the context; but the latter seems preferable on account of the parallel passage of Colossians i. 9, and because the words seem meant to further explain this sense.

9. γνῶριςας] "by having made known to us [in the Gospel]." Τὸ μυστ. τοῦ θελ. α., "his will or purpose long hidden in the mind of God;" namely, for the salvation of all men, Gentiles as well as Jews. Compare Rom. xi. 25, and Note. And on μυστ. see Note on Rom. xvi. 25.

10. εἰς οἰκονομίαν—ἐν τῷ Χρ.] The obscurity here (which has occasioned some diversity of interpretation) may be removed in the manner suggested by me in Rec. Syn.—namely, by taking the εἰς to denote purpose. The sense will thus be: "[And this was done] for the purpose of displaying the plan of (or respecting) the fulness of time;" i. e. the plan to be put in execution at the fulness of time; namely, that of bringing all things together in Christ, at the fulness of time. Of this sense of οἰκονομία the Commentators adduce examples from Polyb. and Ignat. On πληρ. τοῦ Χρ. see Note on Gal. iv. 4. Ἀνακεφ. is in apposition with οἰκον. and the sense is, "namely, that of bringing together into one body, and uniting all beings under one Head, CHRIST." See Col. i. 20. Τὰ πάντα is for τοὺς πάντας; i. e. (by a common idiom) all intelligent beings, meaning both Jews and Gentiles. By τὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς are denoted the angels, elsewhere called God's family in heaven, from which his family on earth had been long dis severed, but was now to be united with it into one society. Compare Col. i. 16, and see Chrys., Doddr., and especially Ernesti's Dissert. on this passage, and Col. i. 20. in his Opusc. Theolog. p. 440. seqq.

11. ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἐκληρ.] There is here, I conceive, a resumption of the construction at v. 7. ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν, &c.; vv. 10 & 11 being, in some degree, parenthetical. The epianalepsis may be thus expressed, "By him (I say) through whom also we have allotted to us this possession." By we, are meant the believing Jews. In προορ. κ. πρόθ., as also in κατὰ βουλὴν τ. θελ. there is no pleonasm, but a stronger mode of expression; and the sense of the passage may be represented as follows: "having been predestinated [by this adoption of sons] by the deliberate counsel of Him, who accomplishes all His purposes and plans according to His own unfettered will and pleasure." We have here a description of the omnipotence of the Deity. How the terms προορ. and ἐνεργ. are reconcileable with man's free-will see Doddr. and Chandler.

12. εἰς τὸ εἶναι—Χριστῷ. Render, "In order that we, who first hoped and trusted in Christ, should be to the praise of his glory," i. e. an occasion for his praise and glorification. Locke and many recent Commentators understand ἡμεῖς of the Gentiles. But though a plausible case is made out, the προ must thus be sunk, or have assigned to it a frigid sense. It is better to suppose (with the ancient and most modern Expositors), that it refers to the Jewish Christians. See Chandl. and Mackn. The προ may mean, with Chandl. and Mackn., "before he came into the world;" or rather, with others (as Chrys., Theophyl., Koppe, and Wahl), "already and before the Gentiles:" which is most agreeable to the context. Τῆς before δόξης is omitted in several MSS. of all recensions, some Fathers, and the Ed. Princ., and is cancelled by Matth., with the approbation of Rinck.

13. ἐν ᾧ καὶ—τῷ ἁγίῳ. There is here a seeming irregularity; which several Commentators seek to remove by supplying something after ὑμεῖς: either ἠλπίκατε from κατηλπ., or ἐκληρώθη from ἐκληρώθημεν at v. 11. This, however, is harsh: and it is better (with the ancient Expositors, and, of the modern ones, Grot., Rosenm., and Newc.), to suppose a parenthesis, and then a resumption, after the manner of St. Paul. The sense being: "In whom ye also (i. e. the Gentile Christians) believed after ye heard the word of truth, the glad tidings of your salvation; in whom [I say] ye also [having believed] have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise (which is the earnest of our inheritance) unto the redemption, &c. The τὸ εὐαγγ. τῆς σωτηρίας (the Gospel by which ye are saved) is explanatory of τὸν λόγον τ. ἀλ. Of ἐσφραγίσθητε τῷ Πνεύμ. τῆς ἐπαγγ. the sense seems to be, "in which ye have been confirmed and attested as true believers, by the promised gift of the Holy Spirit;" τῆς ἐπαγγ. being, by Hebraism, for τῷ ἐπηγγελμένῳ, "promised," namely, by the Prophets, and by Christ himself before his ascension. On the force of the metaphor in ἐσφρ., and the nature of this sealing, see Notes on John vi. 27. and 2 Cor. i. 22. and compare infra iv. 30. Considering the persons of whom this is said, we are, I think, bound to understand the extraordinary and supernatural gifts of the Spirit, as well as his ordinary influences and graces; though most recent Commentators take it of the latter only.

14. ὅς for δ, say the Commentators, who enlarge much on this trite idiom, but without inquiring into the reason why it should have been here employed. The Apostle, I conceive, wrote ὅς for δ, from considering the Holy Spirit as one of the persons of the Godhead; and therefore, by association of ideas, accommodated the gender accordingly. This, then, affords a strong though undesigned proof of the personality of the Holy Spirit. On ἀρράβ. see Note on 2 Cor. v. 5. Εἰς ἀπολύτ. τῆς περιπ. μαγ. with some, be referred to ἀρράβ.; q. d. "a pledge that the redemption, which has been procured for us [by Christ] shall actually be ours;" τῆς περιπ. being for περιποιηθεῖσαν, scil. ἡμῶν, and that for ἡν περιποιώμεθα. See Koppe and Wahl, and compare 1 Thess. v. 9. 2 Thess. ii. 4. 1 Pet. ii. 9. λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν. Or it may, with others, be referred to ἐσφρ., i. e., as Abp. New. explains, "unto," or, as Dr. Burton, "with reference to the purchased possession," i. e. redemption of those whom Christ purchased with his blood. Compare Acts xx. 28.

15. διὰ τοῦτο "for this reason," namely (as Theophyl. explains) "that ye were sealed with the promised Spirit."

—ἀκούσας τὴν κ. ὑ. πίστιν, &c. It is well observed by Locke, Doddr., Mackn., Rosenm., and Holden, that "this language will not prove that the Apostle had never visited those whom he is addressing (since he speaks in the same manner to the Thessalonians, Colossians, and Philipians), but only imports that he had received good accounts of them during his absence from them of five or six years." Ἀγάπην, affection and kindness, the φιλὰδελφία at 1 Thess. iv. 9.

17. ὁ Θεός—Χριστοῦ. The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that our Lord is here spoken of only in his human nature; as when he speaks of his God, John xx. 17. 1 Cor. xi. 3. iii. 23. where see Notes. So that the Unitarians have here no argument at all against the Deity of Jesus Christ, since this passage will only prove that he had a human nature as well as a Divine one; which we readily admit. Ὁ Πατήρ

τῆς δόξ. is by some interpreted "the glorious Father of Jesus Christ," understanding the δόξα of the eternal and unchangeable glory of the Deity. It is better, however, with others, to take Πατ. to denote author, cause, and source: a frequent sense, of which many examples are supplied by Schleus. and Wahl. And this is more agreeable to what follows.

Τὸ πνεῦμα σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως may be interpreted (with Crell., Schlitt., Chandl., and Bp. Middl.) "a spirit of wisdom and revelation;" there being no Article to authorize us to take πνεῦμα of the Holy Spirit, as most Commentators explain. The πνεῦμα, however, in that sense would be scarcely suitable to ἀποκαλύψεως, which word, from its perpetual use in the N. T., suggests the idea of Divine teaching. It should seem that the Apostle adopted the term to show that he chiefly meant such influences of the Spirit, sent from the Father of all light, as should render them wise unto salvation. See 1 Cor. xiv. 6. Ἐν ἐπιγνώσει αὐτοῦ is for εἰς ἐπιγνώσιν i. e. "that ye may more and more know him, i. e. attain to a more and more perfect knowledge of his religion."

18. πεφωτισμένους—ὑμῶν.] This is explanatory of the ἀποκ., as denoting the effect of it. Instead of πεφ. τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς, strict propriety would require τοὺς πεφωτισμένους. Instead of the common reading διανοίας, many of the best MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions have καρδίας, which was preferred by Mill., and received by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Tittm., and Vat.; and justly; for the common reading (introduced from the Erasmus Editions) is, no doubt, a gloss. Wets. compares the Ovidian "oculi pectoris," and quotes from Achmet Onir. ὀφθαλμὸν ἔχει ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ. Koppe, too, cites from Plato: ἡ τε τῆς διανοίας ὁψις ἀρχεται ὀφθ. βλέπειν, ὅταν ἡ τῶν ὁμμάτων ἀκμὴ λήγειν ἐπιχειρή. And I have noticed something similar in Theistm. L. ii. p. 29. Διαγρεστέρα γίνεταί ἡ ψυχὴ, καὶ τὰ ὄμματα ὀφύτερα τῆς διανοίας. The reading is also confirmed by its Hebraic character; the Heb. וְ denoting not only the seat of the will and affections, but also of the understanding. The τίς is for πόση, "how precious!" Ἐλπίς τῆς κλ. α., for ἐλπ. εἰς ἣν ἐκάλεσεν ὑμᾶς.

The next words καὶ τίς—ἀγίοις are exegetical of the preceding; and the sense is: "And how gloriously rich is the inheritance which he has prepared [for true Christians]." See Scott. Ταῦτα καλεῖ ἄφατον δόξαν καὶ ὑπερβολικὴν (says Theophyl.), "ineffable and incomprehensible!"

19. The sense of this verse depends on the construction of the words κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν αὐτοῦ, which many Expositors, ancient and modern, construe with τοὺς πιστ. But the sentiment thus arising is so little agreeable to the context, that the best Commentators have been long of opinion, that those words must be referred to τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος, and the κατὰ signify "according to," i. e. similarly to; ἡμᾶς τοὺς πιστ. meaning "us believers." They are not, however, agreed on the nature of this comparison; namely, whether it is of Christ's resurrection, by the use of a figure (namely, as understood of God's power exerted in their conversion, and subsequent support by Divine grace), or, in the natural sense, as understood of the power to be exerted in the resurrection of believers; meaning (as Chandl. says) that "the future resurrection of believers shall be accomplished, according to the working of that mighty power which he exerted in Christ, when he raised him from the dead." This last mode of understanding the words (which is supported by Theodoret, of the ancient, and by the most eminent modern Commentators), seems most natural and agreeable to the context. For, as Chandl. observes, "as this is the hope of our Christian calling, and the peculiar promise of the Gospel, so it is one of the noblest instances to which even Almighty power itself can reach." Perhaps, however, both comparisons may have been intended; as, I find, thought Hamm. and Mackn.

Ἐν κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος, the Genit. ἰσχ. has the force of the adjective ἰσχυρός.

20. καὶ ἐκάθισεν] for καὶ καθίσας, the recent Commentators say, considering it as an anacoluthon. It arose, however, probably not from inadvertence, but purposely adopted; for the verbs have a far stronger effect in expressing the important truth, couched in the next two verses, than would participles. Thus here, as on other occasions, the Apostle sacrifices the minuter accuracies, and delicate proprieties of style, in order to more forcibly inculcate weighty sentiments, and important truths. Ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ., "in the heavenly abodes." A more dignified expression than ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

21. The substantives ἀρχή, ἐξουσία, &c. are abstracts for concretes, namely, the persons who fill those dignities, and such like. However, ἀρχή and ἐξ. seem to denote the superior, and

δυν. and κυρ. those next in dignity. See Note on Matt. xxviii. 18. 'Ονόματος, "title of authority." In ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τ. and ἐν τῷ μέλλ. the general sense is, that the power of Christ is infinitely above all created power, whether human or angelic.

22. In πάντα—αὐτοῦ (on which compare Matt. xxviii. 18. and see Note) there is intimated the subjection to which his very enemies must be reduced, and its results in their punishment. On the contrary, to his friends that power will be exerted for their support. Thus, then, it is suggested, that in his capacity of supreme Head over the Church Catholic (those of every age and nation, compare Heb. xii. 23.) he will exert his power,—not in the way that earthly supreme Potentates usually do, but exercise it for the benefit alone of his people; as the head exerts itself for the benefit and support of the other members of the body, of which it is chief, and with which it is indissolubly united. "Ἐδωκε, for τέθεικε or ἔστησε, by an idiom formed from the use of the Hebr. יָרַב. "Ὑπὲρ πάντα, "over all persons and things." (Koppe.)

23. τὸ πλήρωμα—πληρουμένου.] These words are in apposition with σῶμα. And the Church is called his body and fulness, as consisting of many members; being an exceedingly numerous society, under the government of Him who filleth all with all [things]; for so τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρ. should be rendered; by which is meant, "fillesh all his members each with their peculiar spiritual gifts and graces." See John i. 16. and 1 Cor. xii. 6. On πλήρωμα, see Note on Rom. xi. 12. Πληρουμένου is to be regarded as a deponent, of course with an active sense; of which I have noticed an example in Æsch. Agam. 304. ἄλλος παρ' ἄλλου διαδοχαῖς πληρούμενοι.

II. 1. καὶ ὑμᾶς ὄντας—ἁμαρτίαις.] There has been some doubt respecting the connection of these words with the context; namely, as to their construction, and the verbs to be supplied. Many ancient and most modern Expositors connect them with v. 5, supplying ἐξωποίησε from συνεζωποίησε before, where there is thought to be a repetition per epanalepsin. Thus, what follows, up to v. 4, and καὶ at v. 5, must be taken as pleonastic (after the manner of the Hebrews, who often so use their vav, which signifies δὲ and καὶ), or the δὲ is to be rendered inquam, and the καὶ, etiam. The words are, however, by the recent Commentators, generally connected with πληρουμένου in the last v. of the preceding Chap.; both being so united together, that only a comma is placed after πληρουμένου, with the following sense: "He who filleth all [his members] with all [spiritual gifts and graces] hath also filled you, who were dead in," &c. But the former method (supported by many similar instances of anacoluthon, and also by the parallel passage at Col. ii. 13.) is more natural and probable. Some, indeed, connect the words with the 19th verse of the preceding Chapter; and Mr. Locke thinks they take their train and connection from v. 18—20, which, he says, are formed by καὶ joining ἐκάτισσε v. 20, and συνεζωποίησε v. 5. together; ὑμᾶς v. 1. and ἡμᾶς v. 5. being governed by συνεζωποίησε; and he ably traces the connection of thought in the Apostle's mind thus: "God by his mighty power raised Christ from the dead; by the like mighty power, you Gentiles of Ephesus being dead in trespasses and sins; what do I say, you of Ephesus, say, us, all converts of the Gentiles being dead in trespasses and sins, hath he quickened and raised from the dead, and seated together with Christ in his heavenly kingdom."

Τοῖς παραπτ. (for ἐν τοῖς παρ.) may be rendered "by or on account of trespasses." By νεκρὸς εἶναι ἐν ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις is meant, "to be entirely enslaved, to sin, as a dead body is to the power of death, and to be as incapable of rising from it to spiritual life, as a corpse is of being restored to natural life." This use of the word νεκρός is also found in the Philosophers, who called backsliders from philosophy and virtue to vice and sensuality, dead.

2. κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τ.] "according to the seculum," as Tacitus calls it, the way or course of the world; i. e. in conformity to its corrupt principles and evil practices.

—κατὰ τὸν ἄρχ. τῆς ἐξ. τοῦ αἵρος.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed, that ἐξουσίας is here put for ἀρχῆς, "power" (says Chandel.) for those who exercise the power, or rule, throughout the various degrees of subordinate agency." So Theophyl. explains, ἄρχοντα τῶν ἐναερίων δυνάμεων, the leader of those powerful spirits who hold their residence in the air. See Jude 6. Mede, Whitby, and Wets. have shown at large, that both the Jews and the Gentiles (especially of the Pythagorean Sect) believed the air to be peopled with genii or spirits, under the governance of a chief, who there held his seat of empire. So Philo, p. 31. 28. ἐστι δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὸν αἶρα ψυχῶν ἀσωμάτων ιερῶτατος χορός. and Diog. Laert. viii. 32. εἶναι τε πάντα τὸν αἶρα ψυχῶν ἔμπλεον. These spirits were supposed to be powerful, but malignant, and exciting men to evil. That the Jews held the opinion in question, is plain from the Rabbinical writers. So in Pirke Aboth. fol. 83. p. 2. (cited by Wets.) they are represented as filling the whole air, arranged in troops and under regular subordination; which illustrates the ἐξουσίας of the Apostle. This belief was transmitted to the early Fathers (so Ignat. and Ephes. § 13. ἐν ᾧ πᾶς πόλεμος καταργεῖται ἀερίων καὶ ἐπιγείων πνευμάτων.) and came down even to modern times, as appears from Sir W. Scott's Letters on Demonology.

We are, however, neither, on the one hand, to ascribe to St. Paul all the dreams of the Rabbins; nor, on the other, to suppose that he disbelieved this notion, and yet countenanced it for a temporary purpose. If the reader should think this view unsatisfactory (as did the able Reviewer of the first Edition of this Work in the Eclectic), he may perhaps be induced to adopt the interpretation of the phrase proposed by the learned Critic himself, who considers the expression τὸν ἀρχ. τῆς ἐξουσίας καὶ τοῦ ἀέρος as equivalent to τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους at Col. i. 13, implying "the Prince of the dominion of darkness." But it is so difficult to imagine how ἀρχ can ever of itself be equivalent to σκότος, that nothing but authority of the most undeniable kind (which I am not aware can be adduced) would be sufficient to establish it.

Τοῦ πνεύματος is said to be put for πνεῦμα, by a slight anomaly in construction. Which may be true; but the reason for it seems to have been this,—that the κατὰ just before signifies according to the will of. Now as a Genit. is, in thought, implied, so we have the case of πν. accommodated rather to that, than to the grammatical construction. Newc., Mackn., and Scott, endeavour to do away the difficulty by inserting a καὶ before πν., and interpreting ἀρχ. πν. "author (i. e. cause) or ruler of the evil disposition," &c. But this is, in every view, objectionable. Ἐνεργ. is wrongly rendered by Mackn. "inwardly works." It means, literally, "exerts his energies and manifests his influence." So Matt. xiv. 2. αἱ δυνάμεις ἐνεργοῦσιν ἐν αὐτῷ. viz. because he had risen from the dead. Hence, Doddr. observes, ἐνεργοῦμενοι denoted Demoniacs. The meaning is, that "the Evil Spirit powerfully and manifestly, by their actions, operates in the disobedient;" referring to the Gentiles, who are called υἱοὶ τῆς ἀπειθείας; which expression is not synonymous with ἀπειθεῖς, but a stronger term, to denote "devotedly and habitually disobedient." So Luke xvi. 8. υἱοὶ τοῦ αἵματος τούτου, "devoted to this world," and Matt. xxiii. 15. υἱοὶ τῆς γαστρὸς, like υἱοὶ θανάτου in the O. T.

3. ἐν οἷς καὶ ἡμεῖς.] The Apostle here applies what has been said, to the Jews also; and shows (as in the Epistle to the Romans), that they, as well as the rest of the world, had been under the dominion of sin. Thus the best comment on this whole passage is the 2d Chapter of Romans.

With respect to the οἷς, expositors are not agreed whether it is to be referred to υἱοῖς τ. ἀπ., or to παραπτώμασι at v. 1. The latter (which is supported by the Peschito Syr.) has much to countenance it. See Rec. Syn. More, however, may be urged against it: and the objection, as to the construction of ἀναστρέφεισθαι with a dative of person not thing, will not hold, because it is here construed with ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμ. τ. σ. (which words, according to the other view, would be useless); and as here we have ἀναστρ. ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμ., so at 2 Cor. i. 12. we have ἐν ἀπλότῃ καὶ εὐκρινείᾳ Θεοῦ ἀνεστράφημεν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. Nor need we strictly interpret the ἐν by inter; but we may suppose it taken in a laxer sense, for σὺν (meaning "as well as they"), of which Schl. Lex. will supply examples. This is confirmed by the καὶ joined with ἡμεῖς. See Note on v. 5.

—Θελήματα.] The plural of this word (occurring also in Acts xiii. 22.) is not found in the Classical writers, though it occurs in the Sept. Θελ. τῶν διανοιῶν is not well rendered "the mind." It denotes the passions, as σαρκὸς does the appetites, of our corrupt nature. This natural corruption is implied in Θελ. (which should be rendered propensities), and is expressed in the next words, which seem added for that very purpose. For though the φύσει there is tortured by many learned Commentators to yield some such sense as shall exclude the doctrine of the natural corruption of the human heart, (namely, either custom, or acquired habit,) yet in vain, for in all the passages cited, the sense natural disposition always peeps forth. My own experience of the Classical writers enables me to confirm the remark of Mr. Scott, that "the word was never used of any other customs than such as resulted from innate propensities." In short, a far greater portion of learning and ingenuity, than have been employed in the cause in question, would be insufficient to set aside the common interpretation, and establish a sense unsupported by the norma loquendi, and at variance with the context. And all merely to get rid of a doctrine plainly revealed in Scripture, and confirmed by the experience and attested by the confessions even of the most virtuous and pious persons. Indeed, the very heathens themselves acknowledged the truth of the doctrine; as might be shown by many examples, one of which must suffice. Eurip. Beller. frag. Ὡς ἔμφυτος μὲν πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις κακία.

The expression τέκνα ὀργῆς signifies persons worthy of wrath and punishment. So the Heb.

בְּנֵי חַוְּלָה in Deut. xxv. 2. (where the Sept. has ἄγιος πληγῶν) 2 Pet. ii. 14. κατὰρας τέκνα. Is. lvii. 4. τέκνα ἀπωλείας. The same idiom has place in υἱός· but sometimes the substantive following is found not in a passive sense, as here, but in an active one, as v. 2. υἱοὶ ἀπειθείας. Finally, οἱ λοιποὶ should be rendered, not others, but "the rest [of mankind]," the other nations.

4—6. The Apostle now returns to the subject he was treating of at i. 19; and what is there only indirectly hinted at, he here distinctly propounds; namely, that as God raised Christ from the dead, so he will raise us up.

5. καὶ for καίπερ. The σὺν ἐν συνεζωστ. signifies as well as, i. e. both you Gentiles and us

Jews. Some, however, take the expression here and at Col. ii. 12. figuratively, of the raising up those dead in sin to a life of righteousness. And this may be the sense. See Note on v. 3. On χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμ. see Note on Rom. iii. 24. and on v. 8.

6. συνεκάθ. ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ.] This intimates the great dignity of our Christian profession,—the participating with Christ in the society of God and the angels; and that by a right of citizenship obtained by Christ, so that we are entitled to all the privileges of the Church and family of God.

7. ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τ. ἐπερχ.] “in all future ages (i. e. all futurity) both of this world and the next.” Τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ ἐν χρηστ. ἐφ' ἡμᾶς. There is a participle understood, and the sense is, “his richly abundant grace and mercy shown towards us” in the blessings conferred, through Christ and his atoning merits, by the Gospel.

8—10. These verses are closely connected together, and contain the same sentiment, only repeated in other words. (Koppe.)

8. ἐστε σεσωσμ.] The best Expositors have been long agreed that this must, as restricted by the subject of the context, signify “are put into a state of salvation,” brought to the knowledge and profession of true religion. See Note on Matt. i. 21. Διὰ τῆς πίστεως. This, of which the sense has been disputed, seems simply to mean (as Koppe points out) “by [your reception of] the faith or Gospel of Christ,” a signification of πίστις not unfrequent. See Schleusn., Wahl, and Rose's Parkh.

— καὶ τοῦτο οὐκ ἐξ ὑ. It has been not a little debated among both ancient and modern Commentators, to what the τοῦτο should be referred. Some say, to πίστεως; others, to χάριτι: though on the sense of πίστις they differ in their views. See Hamm., Whitby, Bp. Bull's Harm. Ev. p. 83, and Koppe. Yet, in fact, the reference seems to be neither to one nor the other, but to the subject of the foregoing clause,—salvation by grace, through faith in the Gospel. A view, I find, adopted by Dr. Chandler, Dean Tucker, Dr. Mackn., and Dr. A. Clarke. To show that this interpretation is not a mere novelty, I need only to refer to Theophyl., who thus explains: Οὐ τὴν πίστιν λέγει δῶρον Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὸ διὰ πίστεως σωθῆναι· τοῦτο δῶρον ἐστὶ Θεοῦ. So also Chrys. and Theodor. The ὑμῶν is emphatic, and therefore may be rendered yourselves, i. e. not derived by any work of yourselves.

9. οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων—καυχ.] i. e. non ex operibus quæ proprio Marte, sine gratiâ Dei edidistis. Sic enim (alias nequaquam) materia aliqua gloriandi in vobis ipsis superesse videretur. (Bp. Bull.) ἵνα (the best Commentators are in general agreed) has here, as often, the eventual sense. “So that no man may boast [as if he had done any thing to deserve salvation].” See Rom. iii. 26, 28. iv. 1—5.

10. αὐτοῦ γὰρ ἐ. ποίημα.] The γὰρ serves for confirmation and explication; that being, as Bp. Bull points out, the scope of the verse. And (regarding the ἐσμεν as said per κοινῶσιν, though intended for the Ephesians only) he thus ably paraphrases: “Tantum abest ut propriis vestris operibus absque gratia Dei servati sitis, ut e contra non sine admiranda planè gratiæ divinæ vi atque efficacia denuo quasi a Deo formati sitis, atque ex rudi ista mole, in qua ignorantiae ac peccati tenebris olim obsiti jacuistis, veluti creati in id, ut opera jam verè bona, quibus ad justificationem atque aeternam salutem pervenitur, proferre valeatis.” On this sense of κτισθ. compare Deut. xxxii. 6. Is. xliii. 21. xlv. 21. The next words, ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς seem (as Theophyl. and Phot. suggest) added to prevent any misapprehension of the foregoing words, as if they could be saved by faith only.

The next words are meant to further enforce the sense intended in κτισθ. ἐπὶ ἔργ. ἀγαθοῖς. And (resolving the οἷς—ἐν αὐτοῖς into its proper equivalent) the sense may be thus expressed: “since in them God hath before prepared us to live;” i. e. (to use the words of Mr. Holden) “to the performance of which [good works] God hath before prepared us [by the calling of the Gospel, and the influences of the Spirit], that we should live in the practice of them.” This mode of interpretation is the general one, and is ably supported by Grot., Chandl., and others; though some recent Commentators (as Koppe, Newc., Ros., and Wahl) suppose the meaning to be, “for which God has long destined us,” i. e. in which he has determined we should walk.

11—13. Having spoken to them of the general state of fallen man, and the salvation of all believers by the rich grace and mercy of God, the Apostle next proceeds to show the Gentile converts the peculiarities of their case, which had placed them much further out of the way of mercy than the Jews had been. (Scott.) He illustrates the mercy of God in their conversion, by showing them that God was under no previous obligation, by virtue of any special covenant he had entered into with them, to confer so great a happiness upon them; since they were wholly unacquainted with, and strangers to the only peculiar covenant he had entered into with any part of mankind, and who consequently could have no interest in the peculiar benefits of it. (Chandl.) The full sense is, "Wherefore [that ye may understand the magnitude of the benefits ye have received, and the obligation ye lie under to the performance of good works] remember," &c. Ἐν σαρκί, "by natural descent, or carnal origin." The words οἱ λεγόμενοι—χειροπ. are exegetic and parenthetical: thus at ὅτι ἦτε there is a resumption of the construction. Οἱ λεγόμενοι ἀκροβ., i. e. who are contemptuously styled the uncircumcised; for ἀκρόβυστοι, abstr. for concrete; as περιτομή just after for οἱ περιεπιτημένοι. So, Schleus. observes, the Heb. בשרי was a name of contempt applied to the Gentiles by the Jews. See Judg. xiv. 3. xv. 18. Is. lii. 1. Περιτ. ἐν σαρκὶ χειρ. signifies, per hypallagen, "made by hand on the flesh." This, Grot. observes, is an emphatical expression; there being another circumcision of the heart, and spiritual, ἀχειροπ. See Col. ii. 11.

12. χωρὶς Χρ.] for χωρισθέντες τοῦ Χρ., "without communion with Christ." The sense is further developed in the next words ἀπηλλοτρι. τῆς πολ. τ. Ἰ., "aliens from the citizenship of Israel." Ἀπαλλ. (which is found only in the later writers) is a stronger term than ἀλλοτρίοι; though that word is by Aristotle opposed to συμπολιταί. Πολιτεία is a word used, as here, of ecclesiastical as well as civil polity; especially since, in the case of the Jews, the one was closely united with the other. Ξένοι is used for ἀπεξενωμένοι (to correspond with the ἀπηλ.) and consequently carries the regimen of a participle.

— διαθηκῶν τῆς ἐπαγγ.] Here the Genit. of the noun has the force of an adjective. By these διαθ. are meant the Patriarchal and the Mosaic covenants. See Note on Rom. ix. 4. Ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχ., "having [therefore] no [assured] hope of eternal life and salvation." See Chandl. and Dodd. Καὶ ἄθεοι ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ, "and [thus] without God," i. e., as Chandl. explains, either by knowing him not, or not worshipping him as God. See Dodd. The words ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ are added to magnify their offence, as living in a world created and preserved for blessing by God, and yet not knowing him or worshipping him as its Creator and Preserver.

13. ἐν Χρ. Ἰ. Ἰ.] "by Christ and his religion." Or we may, with Koppe, supply ὄντες (compare Rom. viii. 1.) "having been united to Christ," "become Christians." Μακρὰν εἶναι and ἐγγὺς εἶναι were figurative expressions, denoting respectively the pious worshippers of God, and therefore favoured with admittance to His presence; and those who neglected it (i. e. the Gentiles) and were consequently far removed from his presence and favour. See Is. lvii. 19. and Notes on Acts ii. 39. and Luke xv. 13.

14. ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν.] Put, by metonymy, for ὁ ποιῶν εἰρήνην ("the author of our peace [and reconciliation with God]") in the next verse; just as the Jews call the Messiah their משיח, i. e. Peace.

— τὰ ἀμώφ.] The force of the Article may be expressed by rendering, as the sense requires, "both of the parties." Sub. μέρη or γένη. The words following are illustrative of the sense of the foregoing, by an allusion to the partition wall of the Temple, which separated the Court of the Gentiles from that of the Jews. The word μεσότ. is very rare in the Classical writers; though an example is cited by Wets. from Athen. p. 281. τὸν τῆς ἡδονῆς καὶ ἀρετῆς μεσότοιχον διουρτέων. Τοῦ φραγμοῦ is a Genit. of explication, for διαφράσσον ἡμᾶς ἐξ ἄλλων ἐθνῶν. It here alludes to the ritual law of Moses, which was intended only to keep the Jews apart from the Gentiles, but which produced that mutual enmity to which the Apostle proceeds to advert.

15. τὴν ἔχθραν may be taken either with the preceding, or the following words; for the same sense will arise. But it seems more naturally to connect them with the following. Τὸν νόμον is in apposition with ἔχθραν, denoting the cause of enmity: which the Law was, since it generated in one party an antisocial and supercilious spirit, and in the other a deadly hatred. Ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ α., i. e. by the sacrifice of his body on the cross, namely, to bring in that everlasting righteousness, of which Daniel prophesied. The ἐντ. and δόγμ., refer to the ceremonial part of the law; and are specified, as being the cause of the disunion. On καταργ., see Rom. iii. 31. Gal. iii. 17. and Notes.

— ἵνα τοὺς—ἄνθ.] literally, "in order that [thereby] he might, by himself, form the two classes of men into one new mankind." At τοὺς δύο sub. ἀνθρώπους, from ἀνθρώπων following. The two classes should be one man, by being one in friendship, and having a common spirit of affection; as a man is inseparable from himself: and "one new man," since each party would be brought to a new and reformed religion, with new and infinitely better principles. See Chandl. 'Εν ἐαυτῷ, i. e. "through his means, i. e. by his death on the cross." Ποιῶν "[so] making."

16. ἀποκαταλλ.] This is more significant than καταλλ., and refers to the enmity previously existing. 'Εν ἐνὶ σώματι, "by composing one body," i. e. Christ's mystical body, the Church. Ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθρ. is not synonymous with καταργήσας τὴν ἔχθραν just before, but a stronger expression, denoting that it is annulled for ever. There may, however, be (as Koppe thinks) an allusion to the metaphor by which laws, when abrogated, are said to be dead.

17. εὐηγγ. εἰρήνην, &c.] As Christ did not himself preach this peace to the Gentiles, we must understand it as done through the medium of his ambassadors, the Apostles. Εὐαγγελίζεσθαι εἰρήνην (i. e. a mode of obtaining peace and reconciliation with God) is a phrase occurring also at Acts x. 36.

18. τὴν προσαγωγὴν] i. e. (to express the force of the Article) "the access which we have." In προσαγ. there is an allusion to introduction to a king or great man. 'Εν ἐνὶ πνεύματι, i. e. by the intervention of one and the same Holy Spirit, in his office of Paraclete. See Rom. v. 2. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

19. ἄρα οὖν, &c.] Here we have the inference drawn from what has been said at v. 15—18. "So, or now, then," &c. The terms ξένοι and πάροικοι differ,—the former being applied to a city, or country, the latter to a family; thus corresponding respectively to the Latin terms peregrinus and hospes. In the words following (which are exegetical) the συμπ. refers to the ξένοι, and the οἰκέοι to the πάρ. Compare v. 12. The meaning is, that they all have now every privilege, which the Jews had, of being the people and family of God.

20. On the οἶκος, implied in οἰκέοι just before, the Apostle engrafs a figurative comparison of the Church to a House or Temple of God; having in mind, it is supposed, the Temple of Ephesus. The present passage is one of great beauty, and especially worthy of admiration, from the skill with which the architectural figures are applied to the subject. By προφητῶν, most ancient and early modern Expositors understand the prophets of the Old Testament, as being the heralds of the Gospel. Since, however, the term is put after ἀποστόλων, and the Old Testament prophets could hardly be said to form part of the Christian edifice with the Apostles, the most eminent modern Commentators, from Grot. downwards, seem right in understanding it (as indeed the 5th v. of the next Chap. requires) of the προφῆται, or inspired teachers of the New Covenant, so called in various parts of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. See also iv. 11. Acts. xi. 27.

20. ὄντος ἀκρογωνιαίου.] Called in the ancient prophecy (See Matt. xxi. 42.), κεφαλὴ γωνίας. In order to understand this expression properly, we must bear in mind, as Chandl. observes, that "the strength of buildings lies in their angles; and that the corner-stone is that which unites and compacts the different sides of them; and that the chief corner-stone is that which is laid at the foundation, upon which the whole angle or quoin of the building rests, and which therefore is the principal support and tie of the whole edifice. Now Christ is the chief corner-stone; the main stress of this spiritual building lies and rests upon him, who by his death hath united Jews and Gentiles, the two different constituent parts of it, into one compact, regular building, and temple." This view is confirmed by the ancient Commentators, and is required by the expression συναρμ. in the verse following. Compare also v. 14—18.

21. The ἡ is not found in several MSS. of Griesb. and Rinck, as also in some Fathers and the Ed. Princ.; and it is cancelled by Beng., Matth., and Knapp, and is marked as probably to be cancelled by Griesb. But without reason, the external testimony being not against, and the internal all in favour of the Article; since, though required by the propriety of the language (for, as Bp. Middl. and Vater observe, πᾶσα would signify every, whereas the sense whole is required, which demands the Article to the substantive following. See Middl. Gr. A. i. 7.), yet this propriety was not so commonly known, as to induce us to suppose the Article to have come from the early Critics, much less the scribes. Whereas that the scribes should omit the Article was very likely, and might be confirmed by several examples from the best writers.

'Εν ᾧ should be rendered "by," i. e. by means of. Συναρμ. signifies "framed together," so that the stones shall fit in (λογέω); according to the ancient manner of building, in which the stones were not squared, but laid λογάδην. See my Note on Thucyd. iv. 4. So Anthol. iii. 32. 4. (cited by Wets.) ἡρμολόγησε τάφον. In the ἀρμ. there is an allusion to carpenters' work, and in the λογέω to masonry. Εἰς ναὸν ἁγίων ἐν Κυρίῳ may be rendered "into a holy temple through the Lord," or rather, "into a temple holy to the Lord."

22. ἐν ᾧ.] This may, with some, be referred to Κυρίῳ just before: but it is better referred by others to ναόν, which is confirmed by a similar use of the rare word συνοικοδ. in Thucyd. i. 93. (of the walls of Athens) ξυνωκοδομημένοι μεγάλοι λίθοι καὶ ἐντομῇ ἐγγώνιοι. Dr. Burton well paraphrases: "Into which temple ye also are built, together with the Jews, so as to make a building in which God dwells by his Spirit." Or εἰς κατοικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, see Rom. viii. 9. 1 Cor. iii. 16. 1 John iv. 13. and Notes. Ἐν πνεύματι is by most recent Commentators taken for πνευματικόν. But the one assigned by the ancient and most modern Expositors ("by the Holy Spirit"), is far more agreeable to the context and the general tenor of the Apostle's reasoning.

III. The Apostle having now fully declared, that it was the eternal purpose of God, to call the Gentiles to be partakers of the privileges of his church, proceeds to speak of the dignity of his own Apostolical character and office, and of the extraordinary manner by which he was called to, and fitted for it; that hereby he might not only give them a fuller assurance of the truth of the doctrine he had laid down, but prevent their being offended and prejudiced against him, upon account of those persecutions and sufferings to which he was exposed. (Chandl.)

1. ἐγὼ Παῦλος—ἐξ ἑθνῶν.] There is here a seeming deficiency, which the Translators variously supply. Most suppose an ellip. of εἰμι, which, however, is shown by Bp. Middl. to be inadmissible. It is better, with many eminent Expositors (as Abp. Newc., Bp. Middl., and others), to regard vv. 2—13. inclusive as parenthetical; the thread of the reasoning being resumed by a repetition of the τοῦτου χάριν ("on account of this equal admission of both Jews and Gentiles"). The argument is well stated by Bp. Middl., in the following paraphrase: "For this cause, I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ; for, or since indeed ye cannot but have heard both of my divine commission, and of the nature of the doctrine which I am commanded to teach (v. 12, 13.), for this cause (τούτου χάριν repeated vv. 14—19.) I pray to God, who has been thus merciful in calling you, that ye may be strengthened with might by his Spirit (v. 16.), that so Christ may dwell in your hearts." After this prayer is subjoined a doxology (20, 21.), with the concluding Amen.

2. Εἰγε is used affirmatively for since. Τὴν οἰκον. τῆς χάριτος does not simply signify Apostleship, as some suppose; but, as the best Expositors are agreed, office of Apostle, or herald of the grace of God. Τῆς δοθείσης, though grammatically belonging to χάριν, yet seems (by an idiom found in Thucydides and others of the best writers) to be meant for οἰκον. Thus, in the parallel passage of Col. i. 25., it is united. In εἰς ὑμᾶς the εἰς denotes the end or purpose, q. d. "for your benefit."

3. ὅτι.] "[also] that." Κατὰ ἀποκάλ. is for ἐν ἀποκαλύψει. Compare Gal. i. 12. Τὸ μυστήριον, i. e. of the calling of the Gentiles. Καθὼς, for καθ' ἃ προέγρ. ἐν ὀλίγῳ, "I have before briefly glanced at," namely, i. 9 & 10. ii. 11. sq.

4. πρὸς ὃ.] This may be taken, with Koppe, for ἐν ᾧ, or resolved into ὃ ἀναγινώσκοντες δύνασθε νοῆσαι πρὸς αὐτῷ, i. e. ἐν αὐτῷ. Σύνεσις denotes intelligence and sagacity (whether natural or acquired), as evinced in a complete and accurate knowledge of any thing.

5. ὡς] "in the same manner as," i. e. with the same extent and clearness as.

6. Συγκληρ., σύσσω., and συμμ., are all rare words. Ἐπαγγελίας belongs to all of them except σύσσω., which is inserted to denote close union. Σύσσωμος answers to the Latin incorpor., and denotes "many members of the same body," the Church. Συμμέτοχα τῆς ἐπ., "joint partakers of his promise [of salvation] by Christ."

7. ἐγεν. διάκονος] i. e. had committed to me the διακονία mentioned at v. 2. The same expression occurs at Col. i. 23. Ἐνέργειαν τῆς δυν., "by the great [and supernatural] efficacy of his power." See supra i. 19, 20.

8. ἐμοὶ—ἀγίων.] The sense is, "To me [I say] who am beyond comparison the least of all saints." Τῶν before ἀγίων is cancelled by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., and Tittm., being absent in many MSS., Fathers, and early Edd. Ἐλαχ. is a comparative formed on a superlative (ἐλάχιστος) as πρώτιστος. Ἐλαχίστατος is used by Sext. Emp. The Apostle means to say, that of all persons now Christians, he was, by reason of his former bigoted adherence to Judaism, and persecution of the Gospel, humanly speaking, the least worthy of the supernatural call, and Divine illumination which had been vouchsafed to him. Ἀνεξιχν., "unsearchable and inconceivable." So Orat. Manass. v. 6. ἀνεξ. τὸ ἔλεος.

9. φωτίσαι.] This term is more significant than διδάσκειν, and is very suitable to the light of God's revelation. So Ignat. cited by Grot. πε- φωτισμένων ἐν θελήματι Θεοῦ. Instead of the common reading know, a great number of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers, together with the Ed. Pr. &c., have οἰκονομία, which has been rightly adopted by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Tittman, and Vater. On the sense of the expression, see Note supra v. 2. The common reading might arise either from an error of the scribes, or from a gloss, or correction of the early Critics. Ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων signifies "from the ages [of eternity]." Κτίσαντι is by many of the best Commentators taken figuratively of the new creation of the Gospel; but by the ancient and most modern ones in its natural sense. I would, with Wells, Dodd., and Chandl., unite both; which, as the last mentioned Commentator observes, adds to the dignity of the sentence. See Hammond.

Διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which is not found in some ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, was rejected by Mill and Beng., and cancelled by Griesb.; justly; for it may be suspected, with Rinck, to have been an alteration of the same early Critics who, as we find from Tertullian, cancelled the ἐν just before.

10. ἵνα γνωρισθῇ—Θεοῦ] "to the end that," &c. By ταῖς ἀρχ. καὶ ἐξ. are denoted the various orders of angels. See Note on i. 3, 10, 20. Ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ., "in the heavenly mansions." See i. 20, and ii. 6. Γνωρ. implies the communication of more light and knowledge, even to Beings of such great wisdom. (See Chandler.) Πολυπόικλος signifies "in various regards conspicuously excellent." Διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, i. e.

by the founding, propagating, and governing of the Church.

11. κατὰ πρόθεσιν—ἐποίησεν ἐν Χ. Ἰ.] The words mean, as Chandler explains, "that the angels understood the manifold wisdom of God, by the gathering the Christian Church, in that disposition of the ages, which he formed or settled by Jesus Christ; all which had a reference to him, and led on to the accomplishment of the divine purposes of mercy and favour towards mankind, in and by him." See also Whitby and Locke. Προθ. signifies the disposition which any one makes of any thing, whether in act, or in intention. See Acts xi. 23. and Note. Some, however, are of opinion that αἰών. means dispensations, viz. the Patriarchal, the Mosaic, and the Christian. But that is not so apt a sense.

12. παρρησίαν καὶ προσαγ.] This is, by hendiad., for "a free access [viz. in prayer,] (See Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6.) and also an admission to all the privileges of the Church of God, implied in that access." The ἐν πεποιθ. is added in order to explain and strengthen the preceding. Διὰ τῆς πίστ. a. Render "through the faith we have in him, and confidence in his merits." See Theophyl. So πίστ. Χριστοῦ Phil. iii. 9. Col. ii. 12.

13. διὸ] i. e., as Chandl. explains, "since ye are made partakers of these invaluable privileges, by the Gospel which I have preached to you." In αἰτούμαι μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, &c. there is an obscurity arising from extreme brevity. There is a want of some pronoun at αἰτ. Several recent Commentators supply με, and take αἰτ. in the sense "I pray God that I may not faint," &c. That, however, cannot be admitted. The context requires αἰτ. to be taken in the sense "I earnestly intreat," which necessarily implies ὑμᾶς. The difficulty chiefly turns on the words ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσί μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, ἧτις ἐστὶ δόξα ὑμῶν. But it will vanish, if we regard the words as consisting of three clauses compressed into one; and which, when dilated in a paraphrase, will yield a very plain sense, as follows: "I intreat you not to be discouraged in your Christian profession, at the evils I suffer; (which, however, I suffer for your sake and in your cause, by preaching the equality of the Gentiles with the Jews;) since those afflictions are so far from being a reproach to me or you—that they are rather matter of glory to you, in behalf of whom I suffer, when you consider the firmness with which I endure them, as an attestation of my sincerity in the Gospel I preached to you; so that ye may be proud of being converted by me." By the ὑμῶν must, I think, be understood not the Ephesians only, but the Gentile Christians generally. "Ἦτις is for αἰτίαι;" an idiom common to the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin; by which the relative is accommodated in gender either to the former or to the latter of two substantives. So Cicero: "ignibus quæ sidera vocatis."

14. τούτον χάριν.] See Note on v. 1. Πατέρα Κυρ. ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χρ. is (Rosenm. remarks) "used instead of Θεόν, to intimate that it is on account of this mysterious connection that salvation redounds to Christians. From the mention of this connection subsisting between God the Father and the Son, the Apostle was led to introduce that which subsists, though of a very different kind, between all created beings and the Father."

15. Ἐξ οὗ "may (as Mr. Holden remarks) refer to the Father, from whom both men and angels are named, i.e. are denominated the family and sons of God, ii. 19. Luke xx. 36. John i. 12.; or to Christ, by whom saints and angels are incorporated into one family or society, of which he is the head." The expression πατριὰ is supposed to be adopted from the Jewish manner of speaking, by which the angels were called God's family above, and the chosen people on earth his family below. The πᾶσα shows the universality of that incorporation; q. d. that it extends to both earth and heaven; and, as respects the earthly family, it implies the admission of the Gentiles, together with the Jews, to the benefits of the Gospel; meaning that all such distinction is done away; God being the Head of every family or nation of men.

From there being no Article with πατριὰ, Bp. Middl. strenuously maintains that the sense must be, not "the whole family," but "every family." This sense, however, runs, I apprehend, counter to the argument carried on in the context. And as to the support, which he seeks to derive to this view, from the ancient Commentators, it is rather fancied than real, being merely founded on an incomplete quotation in Suicer. Indeed, the words immediately following seem to show that the Apostle recognized but two such families; the ἐν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς being for ἡ ἐν οὐρ. καὶ ἡ ἐπὶ γῆς, as the Peschito Syriac Translator evidently took them. Nor is it likely that the Apostle should have been aware of a nicety, respecting the use of the Article, which is, I believe, not uniformly observed, even by the Classical writers. Besides, it must be borne in mind, that the error (if such it may be called) consists not in the improper use of the Article, but in the omission of it as unnecessary, or, at least, where it may very well be understood. And the Bp. himself admits, on more than one occasion, that it is difficult to fix limits to the licence respecting the omission of the Article.

16—19. This portion contains the substance of the prayer, and may be compared with a parallel passage of Col. ii. 1—10.

—κατὰ τὸν πλ. τ. δ. α.] The sense seems to be, "according to his abundant beneficence and mercy, which is his glory." Δυνάμει being for δυνατῶς. This is not to be understood, with Chandel., merely of firmness of resolution and courage in professing the Gospel amidst persecution; but must comprehend (as Mr. Scott suggests) all the holy dispositions of their renewed souls, in faith, reverential fear, love, gratitude, hatred of sin, hope, patience; that thus they might be steadfast amidst temptations and persecutions, enjoy comfort, and glorify God in every situation. On the expression ἔσω ἄνθρ., see Notes on Rom. vii. 22. 2 Cor. iv. 16. So Plato (cited by Koppe) says τοῦ ἔξω ἄνθρῶπου ὁ ἐντὸς ἄνθρῶπος ἔσται ἐγκρατέστατος.

17. κατοικῆσαι—ὑμῶν.] Sub. ὥστε. for εἰς τὸ, denoting result. In κατοικ. the heart of the Christian believer is compared to a temple fit for the abode of God; and, from the verse following, it should seem that the Apostle had here in mind the celebrated temple of Diana at Ephesus. See Chandel. and compare 1 Cor. iii. 16, 18, 19; also John xiv. 23. At the same time, this in-dwelling of Christ in the heart of the true Christian must chiefly be understood of fervent love to Christ and his religion; as, indeed, is plain from the ἐν ἀγάπῃ, &c. of the next verse, which is meant to explain the preceding.

18. In ἐρρ. and τεζεμ., which keeps up the architectural metaphor, it is meant that the love should be deep and sincere. And though ἐρρῖζ. be properly applicable to trees, yet it was sometimes (see Wets. and Rec. Syn.) used of the foundations of massy edifices. In which case, however, it is almost always accompanied with some word which has reference to building. Πλάτος, μήκος, βάθος, and ὕψος are terms here used to denote immense extent; viz., as some explain, of his spiritual temple, the Church; or, as others, of the love of Christ. If the former view be adopted (as it is by Beng., Wolf, and Koppe), we should, I think, point ὑψος. But the former is the more natural and simple; according to which we have here a beautiful and sublime expression, to denote the vast extent of the love of Christ, "which passeth knowledge;" what the Apostle at v. 8. calls "the unsearchable riches of the love of Christ." And here the slight irregularity of the construction adds not a little to the sublime character of the sentence; being suspended, together with the mind of the writer, by the greatness of the thought, on which he knows not how sufficiently to expatiate.

19. γινώσκειν—τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] This has been thought to involve a contradiction, and has given rise to some discussion. See Dr. A. Clarke. The difficulty, however, may be effectually removed by considering this as a brief mode of expression; of which the sense, conveyed in a few more words, is as follows: "And [in short] to know the immense love of Christ" (i. e. the immensity of redeeming love); though, indeed, to completely know it surpasses the powers of all finite beings.

—ἵνα πληρωθῆτε—Θεοῦ.] The sense here is disputed; but the one assigned by Grot., Crell., Whitby, and Mackn., as being the simplest, most natural, and of most extensive application, deserves the preference. The Apostle means to say that, by thus attaining the Holy Spirit, and having suitable conceptions of the great mystery of redeeming love, they may be filled with all the spiritual gifts and graces of every kind, both ordinary and extraordinary, which God imparts to his faithful worshippers. It is not without reason that Dr. A. Clarke says, that "of all the grand sayings in this passage, this is the grandest." On the whole of this sublime portion, see the admirable Commentary of Calvin. On the expression πληρωθῆτε he here excellently remarks: "Uno verbo jam declarat, quid per varias dimensiones intelligit: nempe qui Christum habet, eum omnia habere quæ requiruntur ad nostram in Deo perfectionem."

20, 21. The general sense of this noble doxology is clear, and therefore no petty exceptions are to be taken at the phraseology; as, for instance, ὑπὲρ πάντα and ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ; since this accumulation of the same or similar phrases, like the repetition of words, serves to strengthen the sense. But, in fact, the irregularity (if such it may be called) arose from blending two clauses into one. When separated, the sense will run thus: "Now unto Him, who is able to do for us all things that we can ask—nay, who is able to do all things infinitely beyond what we can ask, or even conceive." Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 9.

—κατὰ τὴν δυν. τὴν ἐνεργ. ἐν ἡ.] The sense is, "agreeably to that powerful influence of the Spirit, which now worketh in us." See i. 19, 20. "This power (explains Chandl.) was exerted, in their being quickened when dead in trespasses and sins, in recovering from the dominion of the power of darkness, and in building them up to himself a church and people, that they might be to the praise of his glorious grace; now the same power which they had already experienced in producing this wonderful change (a change which they neither asked nor thought of) was abundantly sufficient to confer on them as real and valuable blessings for the future, suitable to all their wants, far exceeding all their thoughts, and even greater than they themselves could ever directly ask for."

—εἰς πάσας—αἰώνων.] An exceedingly strong and animated expression, signifying, "through the succession of all generations, unto the latest period of eternity."

IV. Having concluded the doctrinal and argumentative part of the Epistle,—showing God's gracious design in the Gospel dispensation, and the benefits and privileges that appertain to all the faithful in Christ Jesus; as also the manner of his calling the Gentiles into his Church, and how precious was the blessing,—the Apostle now subjoins (agreeably to his custom) various practical directions, and, with affectionate earnestness, exhorts them to walk worthy of their high calling. And first he presses upon them the duties of unity and concord, from the consideration of their being all alike members of the same body, of which Christ is the head.

1. οὖν] "therefore," i. e. such being your high privileges and hopes. Ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίῳ, "the prisoner in the Lord;" or, "the person who is a prisoner;" which expresses the force of the Article, the use being here κατ' ἐξοχήν. Ἐν Κυρίῳ is for διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, "in the Lord's cause." Κλήσεως, i. e. the state to which they were called and admitted by the grace of God.

2. ταπ. καὶ πραότ.] The terms are not synonymous; but the latter virtue is connected with the former, as usually resulting from it. In ἀνεχόμενοι, for ἀνεχομένους, there is a slight anacoluthon. Ἀνεχ. ἀλλ., "bearing with each other's provocations." Ἐν ἀγάπῃ, in the exercise of charity. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 7.

3. τὴν ἐνότητα τοῦ πνεύμ.] Πνεῦμα must not here be lowered (with many recent Commentators) to the sense "mind;" neither need we, with Mr. Valpy, suppose it to be put for πνευματικόν. The sense seems to be this: "the unity so suitable and agreeable to the dictates of the Holy Spirit," whose influence they possessed. Ἐν τῷ συνδ. τῆς εἰρήνης, i. e. by the cultivation of that peaceable spirit, which binds all together.

So Ovid, cited by Wets.: "Dissociata locis concordia pace ligavit."

4. ἐν σῶμα κ. ἐν π.] The sense is, "There is one body [of you all, namely, the Church] and one Spirit [by whose gifts and graces (as by one life or soul) it is animated; even the Holy Spirit]." See 1 Cor. xii. 11, 13.

—καθὼς καὶ—ὑμῶν.] Render, "even as also ye were called [by one Spirit] unto one hope of your calling," i. e. to one hope of the blessings resulting from that calling. Ἐν μᾶ ἐλπ. is for εἰς μίαν ἐλπίδα. The εἰς, throughout this whole passage, means "one and the same." The Apostle enumerates every thing in the religion in which there is an ἐνότης. The argument to unity here employed may be compared with the following in Aristid. adduced by me in Rec. Syn.: ὑμεῖς τοιούτῳ, ὥσπερ ἐλέγχους ταύτας κατὰ τῆς στασεως τὰς ἐπωνυμίας ποιούμενοι, κοινὰ μὲν τὰ βουλευτήρια, κοινοὺς δὲ νεὼς καὶ τοὺς ἀγῶνας, κοινὰ δὲ πάνθ', ὡς εἰπεῖν, τὰ μέγιστα προσεωρήκατε. The same argument is used by Malachi, ii. 10, to induce the Jews to cultivate unanimity.

6. ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων.] "We deny not that God the Father is one God over all, or that there is one who is both one God and the Father: only we add, that there is also one, who is one God of the same essence, and the Son; and hath his principality in all things; and so also say we of the Holy Spirit: and that as the one Lord and one Spirit here do not exclude the Father from being both Lord and Spirit, so neither doth the one God and Father exclude the Son or Holy Spirit from being God, but only from being God the Father." (Whitby.) Διὰ πάντων, i. e. "filling all things with His presence, and overruling them by his Providence." (Chandl.)

7. ἐνὶ δὲ—δωρ. τοῦ Χρ.] This is intended to encounter an objection,—namely, that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are different in different persons; which might occasion envy, and be unfavourable to unity. The sense is: "[It is true that these gifts are not the same in all;] but then to each one of us is given the gracious aid of the Spirit according to the measure [not of faith or natural endowments, but] of the gift of Christ; i. e. in such measure and proportion as Christ thinks fit to bestow. Being, therefore, a free-gift, they ought to excite, not conceit and arrogance, but thankfulness to God for his "unspeakable gift."

8. The Apostle now proceeds to prove the gift of the Spirit to be from Christ, by an appeal to Ps. lxxviii. 18. The argument is this: "In the Scriptures some one is said to have ascended up into heaven, and from thence to have distributed gifts unto men. But since God himself cannot be said to have ascended unto heaven, inasmuch as He always is in heaven, and never descended from it, the Prophet must necessarily have had in mind some other person, who, after he had descended from heaven to earth, ascended from thence unto heaven. And he can be no other than Jesus the Messiah, whom we know to have descended from, and again ascended up to heaven." At λέγει supply ἡ γραφή; a frequent ellipsis. The λέγει, however, does not necessarily imply a regular quotation: and the passage following is not intended to be such; as appears from the change of the second person into the third. The only variation is, that, for ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, the Sept. has ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ. The ἀνθρώπῳ, however, agrees, neither with the Hebrew nor the Greek of the Apostle, and yields no tolerable sense; and, in short, is corrupt. Some MSS. have ἀνθρώποις, which is doubtless the right reading. But the error rests chiefly in the ἐν, for which I would read ἐπ', answering to the for of our English Version. Now ἐν and ἐπ' are perpetually interchanged. Thus the only variation will be in the use of ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις for ἔλαβες δ. τοῖς ἀνθρώποις (for so, I apprehend, the Apostle read in the Sept.); and that is no discrepancy, the meaning being the very same; for the sense of the Hebr. דָּתָא מִן הַשָּׁמַיִם וְלָאֵבָשׁ ד. ἐπ' ἀνθ. can be no other than "thou hast received gifts on account of men;" i. e. to give to men. And the Apostle only says ἔδωκε to make the sense plainer; as also does the Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Syriac and Arabic Translators.

The application made of this passage by the Apostle to the Messiah was, no doubt, according to the mystical interpretation of the Jews themselves; and not, as many suppose, by a mere accommodation.

—ἀναβάς.] Render, "having ascended up on high;" i. e., as applied to Christ, into heaven. In ἡχμ. αἰχμαλ. we have a bold expression, probably signifying (as appears from Judg. v. 12.) "he led captive those who had led others captive;" i. e., obtained a glorious triumph over his enemies. Comp. Col. ii. 15. The enemies of Christ, meant in the Apostle's application, must be all the enemies of the Gospel, both men and demons, who had so zealously striven to put it down; including also (as many expositors suppose) all things adverse to its progress,—as sin, the world, and death, which are often personified.

9. τί ἐστίν] "what does it infer or imply?" The Apostle's argument is,—that, if Christ ascended into heaven, he must have first descended and been on earth. For the original abode in heaven of the Messiah was not doubted even by the Jews themselves. The expression τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς was by many of the old Expositors taken of Hell. That interpretation, however, has been overturned by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 229, and some other of our great Divines. Many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, understand it of the grave, agreeably to the frequent use of the expression in the O. T. Since, however, that sense is not very suitable to the Apostle's argument, the best Expositors are now generally agreed, that τὰ κατ. μέρος τῆς γῆς means "the lower regions,"—namely, of the earth: τῆς γῆς being a Genitive of explanation. Thus the expression καταβάς εἰς τὰ κατώτ. τῆς γῆς will refer, not to the descent into the grave, but to his descent to earth, and incarnation on earth, terminating with his descent into the grave.

The πρῶτον is in many of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found; and may be an interpolation.

10. ὁ καταβάς—ἀναβάς.] The sense is: "Now he who thus descended, is the same as he who [at his resurrection] ascended far above all the heavens;" i. e. to the highest heaven. Comp. Heb. vii. 26. Ps. viii. 1; cviii. 4 & 5. In ἵνα πληρ. τὰ π. the neuter is for the masculine; and the sense is: "that thus he might fill all persons (i. e. all believers) with gifts and graces necessary for them." See i. 23. and iii. 19. The reason why the neuter was employed in preference to the masculine seems to have been, that the Apostle regarded the persons in question as members (μέρη) of the same mystical body of Christ, the Church. So at v. 12. εἰς οἰκοδομὴν τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χ. Also v. 16. τὸ σῶμα—ἐν μέτρῳ ἐνὸς ἐκάστου μέρους.

11. The Apostle now illustrates and exemplifies this πλήρωμα, in its various degrees; and shows that in all cases the gifts were given [not to excite self-conceit, but] εἰς τὸν καθαρισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων. Now as we have here only an exemplification of the variety of spiritual gifts, we must not expect any such exact detail, as that in 1 Cor. xii. 8—11. & 28—30. The οἱ πνευματικοί, however, are evidently placed in the order of dignity, as in 1 Cor. xii. 29 & 30, to which last passage this bears a strong affinity. And the προφ. and διδασκαλοὶ here seem exactly to correspond to the προφ. and διδ. there. With respect to the εὐαγγ., however, much difference of opinion exists. In the only two other passages where the word occurs in the N. T. (Acts xxi. 8. and 2 Tim. iv. 5.) it simply denotes a preacher of the Gospel. But here some more special sense is evidently meant. Now we learn from Euseb. Hist. Eccl. v. 9, and other writers cited by Suicer, that, in the Apostolic Church, εὐαγγ. was the appellation given to those preachers who aided the labours of the Apostles, (and we may suppose, also the προφῆται or principal Teachers of 1 Cor. xii.) not by taking charge of any particular Church, but by acting as itinerant preachers and teachers, wherever their labours might be needed, and thus building on a foundation previously laid by the Apostles or prophets. This is the account which the ancients give of the duties of the εὐαγγελισταί. But when we consider what were the duties of the Seven εὐαγγελισταί only a few years before, of whom Philip formed one (Acts xxi. 8.), we can scarcely doubt, that to those above mentioned may be added that of evangelizing the heathen,—in fact, discharging the kind of duty performed by the Missionaries of modern times. To these εὐαγγελισταί there is, I apprehend, nothing corresponding in the enumeration at 1 Cor. xii. Or perhaps the διδασκαλοὶ there may include the εὐαγγ.; for it should seem that the διδασκαλοὶ here are not the same with those in 1 Cor., and that the term is here closely conjoined with ποιμένες, to show that it was not, properly speaking, a separate order; though the ποιμένες appear to have been superior in dignity to the διδασκαλοὶ, and are supposed to have been the same with the κυβερνήσεις at 1 Cor. xii. 28., (See, however, the Note there,) or the οἱ προϊστάμενοι at Rom. xii. 8. and the ἐπίσκοποι of Acts xx. 28. It is thought that the ποιμένες were those who had the more important pastoral charges in cities and large towns; the διδασκαλοὶ, the smaller ones. See Theodoret. Thus it would happen, that the city ποιμένες would have first an influence with, and then an authority over, the country Pastors. Hence gradually their offices would vary and become distinct; the ποιμ. at first discharging all the ordinary pastoral duties; and afterwards, when they became regarded as superintendents,—and were then styled ἐπίσκοποι,—they either discharged them, or not, according to circumstances.

The ἔδωκε here corresponds to the ἔδετο of 1 Cor. xii. 28.; but the former is here used with reference to the ἔδωκε δόματα at v. 8.

12. The Apostle now points out the sole intent of God in bestowing these gifts, and to which they, therefore, ought to be made subservient.

—πρὸς τὸν καθαρισμὸν τ. ἀ.] "for the complete edification and perfection of Christians, by fully instructing them in the Gospel." So καθαριζέσθαι is used at 2 Cor. xiii. 11: on which term see Gal. vi. 1. Grot. and Koppe remark, that in πρὸς τὸν καθαρισμὸν—διακονίας there is a transposition, for εἰς ἔργον διακ. πρὸς τὸν κατ. τῶν ἁγ. (as in the Æthiopic Version), and that for εἰς τὸ διακονεῖν τοῖς ἁγίοις πρὸς τὸν καθαριζέω [αὐτοὺς], "to instruct in all the knowledge they themselves possessed." So Luke vi. 40. καθαριζόμενος δὲ πᾶς (scil. διδασκαλὸς) ἔσται ὡς διδασκαλός. And so καθαριζέσθαι is used elsewhere. The next words εἰς οἶκόν τ. σώμ. τοῦ Χ. are another mode of expressing the same sense; namely, "for completing the build-

13. μέχρι καταντ. οἱ πάντες, &c.] Οἱ πάντες, "we all," viz. who form the body of the Church. On the sense of καταντ. see Note on Acts vi. 1. At μέχρι καταντ. we may supply, from the preceding, καταρτίζοντες καὶ οἰκοδομοῦντες. At τὴν τῆς ἐπιγν. τ. Υ. τ. Θ. repeat τὴν ἐνότη. The sense of ἐνότη. τῆς ἐπιγν. seems to be, "agreement in doctrine and views respecting salvation by the Son of God." The words following, εἰς μέτρον—τοῦ Χρ., are further explanatory of what was expressed in τὸν καταρτισμόν just before. Εἰς ἄνδρα τέλ., "unto a complete man;" i. e. unto complete manhood. So τέλειος occurs in this sense at Heb. v. 14. 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Phil. iii. 15. The words εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας are, I conceive, of the same sense with ἄνδρα τέλ., and are only used to introduce the τοῦ πληρ. τοῦ Χρ.; for ἡλικ. here does not signify stature, but full age, as John ix. 21. See Koppe, Schleus., and Wahl. That ἡλικ. may mean manhood, is proved by the various examples adduced by the Commentators. Μέτρον is here used as in Philostr. cited by Wets. τὸ μέτρον τῆς ἡλικίας—γῆρος ἀρχή. as also in Lucian cited by Raphael. To which I add Bion. Od. ii. 13. ἦν δ' ἀνέρος ἐς μέτρον ἔλξης. and Theocr. Idyll. xiii. 15. Τοῦ πληρ. τ. Χρ. signifies, "of that wisdom and holiness which becomes the fulness of Christ," meaning his Church, as at i. 23. or his doctrine, as v. 20.

14. The connexion is well traced by Chrys. and Koppe as follows: "All this was done, these various orders were instituted by Christ, for the perfecting of the saints (v. 11—25.), in order that thereby we should be no more tossed," &c. In νήπιοι the above metaphor is continued. Μηκέτι shows that they, whom he is addressing, had been, or were so tossed. In κλυδ., περιφ., and the words following there is a metaphor ēre nauticā. So also James i. 6. (on the same subject) and περιφ. in Heb. xiii. 9. Of κλυδ. in a metaphorical sense examples occur in the later writers. The ἀνέμῳ here does not refer to the steady winds of some seas and latitudes, but to the changeable, yet violent, gusts of wind prevalent in the Mediterranean, and well known to Paul, called Levancers. See Acts xxvii. 14. In κυβείᾳ there is a metaphor taken from playing at dice. The word, however, had not only that sense, but also that of cogging the dice; and, in a general way, denoted the trickery of gamesters, and those who practised legerdemain. 'Εν πανουργίᾳ is added by way of explanation. Πρὸς τὴν μεθ. τ. πλ. signifies, "with concerted or deliberate planning of deceit."

15. ἀληθ. ἐν ἀγάπῃ.] This is variously interpreted. See Recens. Synop., where I have fully shown that, as this is manifestly meant of Christians in general, not of ministers, the sense usually ascribed is inadmissible. The meaning seems to be, "maintaining the truths of the Gospel in the spirit of charity" (so fully described in 1 Cor. xiii.), so as to let no love of truth militate against it. Εἰς αὐτόν, "in respect to him;" as Rom. xi. 36. Eph. i. 5. Col. i. 20. At τὰ πάντα supply κατά.

16. ἐξ οὗ πᾶν, &c.] The Apostle here returns to the figurative representation at v. 12, 13. (interrupted by the hortatory matter in v. 13. 15.); and, agreeably to the proper sense of καταρτ., employs the same image, derived from the human body, which he had before done at ii. 21. Compare the parallel passage at Col. ii. 19. The words may be thus construed: πᾶν τὸ σῶμα τὴν αὐξήσιν τοῦ σώματος ποιεῖται, equivalent to τὸ σῶμα τὴν αὐξ. αὐτοῦ π., by an idiom derived, it is said, from the Hebrew, but, in reality, common to the inartificial style in all languages. Κατ' ἐνέργειαν, "by the operation or working of each individual part or member, according to the measure [of its power]." The whole body (i. e. the Church), is said to be connected together, by each joint, or member, contributing in common, its own peculiar advantage. The general sense is,—that as the body is compacted, and, by the common assistance rendered by each of the various joints, ligaments, tendons, and arteries, the whole thrives, and gradually grows up to maturity; so the body of Christ (his Church), being held together by each member doing his utmost for the good of the whole, grows into a complete spiritual body fit for the service of Christ; and thus is upheld by the mutual support and love of the members, being preserved by the authority and care of the Head, Christ.

The above view of the sense I have satisfaction in finding supported by the opinion of Prof. Scholefield, Hints, p. 60., where he explains, διὰ τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας πάσης ἀφῆς, "compacted through every joint of supply," i. e. "every joint being the instrument of sending forward the supply to the next part or member." And he renders the whole passage thus: "compacted through

17. Having exhorted them to walk worthy of their vocation, and especially to cultivate unity among themselves, as being all members of one body, the Church of Christ, the Apostle proceeds to caution them against the corruptions of the Gentiles, and to inculcate other duties and virtues suitable to their Christian profession.

— τοῦτο λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι.] A very energetic expression, denoting "This I charge and earnestly entreat." Ἐν Κυρίῳ, "by the Lord," i. e. by the love you bear and the duty you owe to him. Τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη, "the rest of, (i. e. the unconverted) Gentiles."

— ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοῦς αὐτῶν.] Render, "in vanity of mind," i. e. modes of thinking and feeling. So Rom. i. 28. παρέδωκε αὐτοὺς εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν, where see Note. On the exact sense, however, of ματ. Expositors are not agreed; some explaining it folly, or error of opinion and reasoning; others, error in practice, improbability; others, again, idolatry. The first interpretation seems to deserve the preference; but the one last mentioned may be included. This passage περιπατεῖ ἐν ματ. τ. νοῦς α., ἔσκοτ. τῇ διανοίᾳ is altogether a kindred one with Rom. i. 21., where, speaking of the ματαιότης of idolatry, St. Paul says the heathens ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἔσκοτίσθη ἡ ἀσύνετος αὐτῶν καρδιά, i. e. νοῦς. Folly of imagination and reasoning led to idolatry and immorality; as, on the other hand, immorality darkened the understanding and perverted the judgment.

18. In this verse the Apostle illustrates the nature, and intimates the cause of this mental folly. The expression ἔσκοτισμένοι signifies literally, befooled. See Note on Rom. i. 21. I would here compare a similar expression in Joseph. p. 400. 14. Huds. τὴν διάνοιαν ἐπεσκοτισμένοι, and 1238. 25.

— ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι.] This is considered as if it were an adjective, (so the Syr. has "alieni") and may be rendered "alienate from;" as Milton, Paradise Lost, "O alienate from God!" Τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ is for τῆς κατὰ Θεὸν ζωῆς, "such a life as is according to the will of God." And as the will of God is our sanctification (1 Thess. iv. 3.) so it denotes, as Theodoret explains, τὴν ἐν ἀρετῇ ζωὴν. This use of the Genit., for the Accus. with κατὰ, is formed from the Hebrew. See Ps. li. 18. The next words suggest the cause of their blindness and aversion to religion. They are so, it is said, διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν—καρδίας αὐτῶν, where διὰ τὴν πώρ. must not be regarded (with Koppe and others) as merely synonymous with διὰ τὴν ἄγν.; nor ought it to be separated from it, (as almost all Editors have supposed) but closely connected with it, as tracing the origin thereof. Render: "because of the ignorance that is in them owing to the callousness of their hearts or consciences, [and that produced by immorality]." If this be thought not admissible, we may, with Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit. p. 191., here recognize an example of the Alternata quatrains, in which, by a peculiar artifice of construction, the third line forms a continuous sense with the first; and the fourth with the second, as in Mark xii. 12. Thus, adjusting the parallelism, the verse will run as follows:

ἔσκ. τῇ διανοίᾳ ὄντες
 διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν τὴν οὐσαν ἐν αὐτοῖς ἀπηλλοτ. τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ διὰ τὴν πώρωσιν τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν.

Yet this is surely too artificial to suit the style and manner of St. Paul; and we may rather suppose that there is here, as often, from pathos, a slight confusion of the regular order, in which the sentiment was meant to be understood. On πώρ. see Note on Rom. xi. 7.

19. ἀπηλγνότες.] This term has been variously interpreted, (as indeed its extent of signification will admit) but generally in too limited a sense. The notion implied in it is very complex, and may admit of all that sense which Chandl. expresses; but as the term seems to have been meant to be explanatory of the πώρωσις just mentioned, it may chiefly denote a being past all feeling of remorse or shame, insensible to the stings of conscience, callous to all sense of right and wrong. On this sense of ἀπό in composition (by which it denotes ceasing from the action expressed by the verb) see my Note on the same use of ἀπαλγήσαντες in Thucyd. ii. 61. fin. (Transl. and Ed.) and ἀπολοφυράμενοι ii. 46. Ἐαυτοὺς παρέδ. τῇ ἀσελγ., "abandoned themselves to all sorts of lasciviousness and corruption," as described in Rom. i. 29. seqq. Ἐν πλεον. is meant to further develop the idea in παρέδ. ἑαυτοῦς q. d. "not only gave themselves up to the perpetration of all vice, but with a greediness of sensuality never to be satiated."

20. οὐχ οὕτως ἐμάθ. τὸν Χρ.] The sense is "Ye have not so [imperfectly] learned the doctrine of Christ [as to practise such things]."

21. εἶγε.] Most Commentators, and especially the older ones, take εἶγε in the sense si modo, which is very agreeable to what follows in this verse. But then there will be a considerable difficulty, as to the construction of ἀποθέσθαι at the beginning of the next verse; which cannot, without great harshness, be supposed to depend upon λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι at v. 17. It is better to take the εἵγε (as it has been done by the best Commentators for the last century) in the sense inasmuch as; which is supported by the ancient Greek Commentators, and occurs also at iii. 12. By the αὐτὸν and αὐτῷ must be understood the doctrine of Christ, as corresponding to Χρ. in the preceding verse. Though the Apostle does not express that they had been taught by him, yet he suggests it in the words following καὶ ὥς ἐστιν ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰ., being very suitable to the instruction of one who was taught by personal revelation from Jesus Christ (see Gal. i. 12. and the Note), and who therefore must be supposed to fully know the pure doctrine of the Gospel.

22. ἀποθέσθαι ὑμᾶς.] q. d. “[You have been [I say] taught] that you should put off.”

—κατὰ τὴν προ. ἄν.] These words yield no suitable sense, as they are taken by almost all Expositors, and expressed in almost all Versions; namely, as if they formed an independent clause. It is rightly observed by Grot. and Vorst. that they are closely connected with the words following, and are further explanatory of the τὸν παλ. ἄνθρ.; i. e. him who is in his former sinful lusts. So also Koppe, who takes the construction to be: τὸν παλ. ἄνθρ. τὸν κατὰ τὴν προτ. ἀναστ., “the old man, or disposition and manner in which we formerly lived,” “the old man of your former life,” as Wakef. renders. Τὸν φθειρ. is added, because ἀναστ. is a vox mediæ significationis. It may be rendered, “which was corrupt,” i. e. become corrupt. Thus κατὰ τὰς ἐπ. will be for διὰ τῶν ἐπ., “through the influence of deceitful lusts;” τῆς ἀπάτης being for ἀπατήλαις. The ἀπάτ. must (notwithstanding what some Commentators say) be understood of that deceit, which the sensual appetites (the most deceptive guides imaginable) practise upon the understanding, by the gratification of those lusts which delude men by vain appearances and fallacious hopes, always ending in disappointment and shame; and pervert them into the belief that they are harmless, notwithstanding they will be their ruin in this world, and their perdition in the next. On the ὁ παλαιός and the ὁ καινός ἄνθρ., see Notes on Rom. xii. 2. vi. 4.

23. τῷ πν. τ. ν. ὡ.] I must now accede to the opinion of most eminent modern Expositors, that τῷ πν. τοῦ νοὸς is for τῷ πνεύματι καὶ νοί. I cannot, however, approve of its being rendered “mente animoque,” as if the mind or understanding alone were to be renewed. That, indeed, is necessary; but the chief renewal must be in the heart or soul, affections, disposition; and that by the influences of the Holy Spirit. So Hooker Eccl. Pol. L. i. § 7. interprets, “through the divine power of the soul.” And the present passage excellently confirms and illustrates Bp. Middleton’s remark, that “in this class are implied, not the influences of the Holy Spirit, but the effects of them.”

24. κατὰ Θεόν.] This may be rendered, with Koppe, “in conformity to the will of God.” On κτισθέντα see Note on ii. 10, 15.

25. The Apostle now proceeds to give some examples, first of the old, and then of the new man, accompanied with suitable warnings and exhortations. Under ψεῦδος is comprehended deceit of every kind; as is clear from the reason subjoined, “for we are mutually members [of one and the same body],” and, as such, are bound to help each other. Whereas deceit of every kind promotes the contrary; and, by destroying confidence, tends to unloose the bands of society.

26. ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε.] Many take this interrogatively; q. d. “Are ye angry, and sin not? [impossible]. However (καὶ) let not,” &c. This, however, is doing great violence to the construction. Nor is it necessary for the laudable purpose in view; since from the air of the sentence, and that of the context (which is all prohibitory) this cannot be taken as a command to be angry, but is only an implied concession, accompanied with a caution to beware of sinning by that concession. The sense may be expressed in the following paraphrase: “Be angry [if so it must be, and there be a reasonable cause]; but beware [even then] lest you run into sin, by intemperance in yielding to its impulses.”

In fact, the words are equivalent to οὕτως ὀργ. ὥστε μὴ ἁμαρτάνειν (ἐν αὐτῷ). And here we have an instance of the sense of a word being qualified by some words following, with which it is closely connected; as in Eurp. Suppl. 557. γρόντας οὖν χρεὼν τὰδε, Ἰδικοῦμενος τε μετρία, μὴ θυμῷ φέρειν, Ἄδικειν τε τοιαῦθ’, οἷα μὴ βλάψαι πόλιν where Markland annotates thus: “Non autem putandum est Poetam permittere, nedum jubere, ut injurias quis faciat: sed vult, Si quis alteri injuriam faciat (quod vix evitari potest, prout est vita hominum) caveat tamen ne ea sit injuria quæ Rempublicam sive Patriam suam lædat.” The καὶ is put for ἀλλά; which is supposed to be an Hebraism; though it occurs in Thucyd. iv. 101. med. καὶ προν. πάσης, &c. Here, however, the use must have been derived from the former, since the words in question are taken from Ps. iv. 4. Yet there is no little difficulty connected with them in that place. The word וַיִּרָא is rendered “contremiscite,” “stand in awe” in both our Versions. How, then, are we to account for the ὀργίζεσθε? It is not true that ὀργίζω never has the signification of ὀργίζεσθαι; for it has it in Prov. xxix. 9. Is. xxviii. 21. Ezek. xvi. 43. Such a signification, however, is scarcely applicable here. Schleus., indeed, would have the term here taken for metu percelli, perterreri, as the word is used generally of any vehement commotion of the mind. And he refers to 2 Kings xix. 7. (Symmachus.) But that is a very insufficient proof; nor is the credit of the Sept. Translators to be saved by so harsh a mode of interpretation. It should seem that they mistook the force of the word in this passage, and assigned a sense which they had often done elsewhere, though it has no place here. It is plain that the credit of the Apostle is not at all concerned; for he only applies the words to his own purpose, which does not necessarily imply approbation. Besides, the sense in question, though not a good one, is not absurd. Whereas, if we adopt the sense of ὀργ. proposed by Schleus., it will follow that the Apostle mistook the true sense of the Sept.; and some might pretend that he did that of the Hebrew.

The Apostle, knowing that to eradicate all anger was no more possible than to suppress all injury, as at Tit. i. 7, he admonishes us not to be soon angry, so here he exhorts to let it be soon over; for the admonition ὁ ἥλιος—ὑμῶν is an adage which must bear that sense. Thus Plutarch tells us it was a maxim of the Pythagoreans, when hurried into anger and abuse, to shake hands and make up the difference before sunset. St. Paul's mode of expression, however, is Hebraic in its air; viz. in μὴ ἐπιδ. ἐπὶ, &c. So Deut. xxiv. 15. "Thou shalt give him (i. e. the labourer) his hire; neither shall the sun go down upon it (viz. unpaid)."

27, μηδὲ δίδ. τόπ. τ. δ.] Many recent Commentators take τῷ διαβ. to mean "the adversary." That sense, however, is at once frigid and unsuitable; and the only true interpretation is that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, "the Devil;" a use of the word found (and always with the Article) in 2 Tim. ii. 26. Heb. ii. 14. It is also (as Koppe admits) supported by the constant tenour of Scripture, which inculcates the existence of a Being, who, by himself and his agents, tempts men to sin; and especially makes his attacks when any of the violent passions are in motion.

28, ὁ κλέπτων.] Theft was then very prevalent among the heathens, and in some countries is said to have been tolerated by the law. See, however, Rec. Syn. At least here the Apostle means only such sort of pilfering as was practised by necessitous and idle persons. Thus the Apostle enjoins industry as the best preservative from this sin, since then there will be no temptation to commit it. The construction and exact sense of κοπιᾷτω—χερσίν should seem to be as follows: κοπ. ταῖς χερσίν ἐργ. τὸ ἀγαθόν, "let him labour with his hands [if need be], working at what is good," i. e. some honest occupation. Some, indeed, take ἀγαθόν to mean "a livelihood." But of this signification there is no proof, and little probability. Whereas the former one (supported by Pisc., Erasmus, Menoch., Est., Zanch., Vorst, and Grot.) is liable to no objection; for ἐργον may be supplied. Τὸ ἀγαθόν is equivalent to ἀγαθόν τι ἐργον, i. e. (as Theod. explains) ἀγαθὴν ἐργασίαν, as opposed to the evil industry and pernicious activity of the thief, so graphically described by Cowper in his Task, B. iv. The above sense is also very suitable to the context; for, to use the words of Wolf, "in eo erat Apostolus, ut ad virtutis studium cohortaretur;" and it is well observed by Grot., "Bene hoc addit, ne quis putet quemvis quæstum probari." This, too, is confirmed by what is said in the next verse, where the discourse is enjoined to be "what is good," as here the occupation is to be what is honest and creditable.

29, πᾶς—μὴ] for μηδεῖς, by a Hebraism, as also πᾶς—οὐ common in the N. T. See Note on Matt. x. 29. Σαπρὸς (like putidus in Latin) may mean obscene, as it is taken by most Commentators; but, from its own proper signification, and the λόγος ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν, to which it is here opposed, it must be also meant of any kind of bad and unprofitable discourses; as brawling, slandering, and the foolish talking and jesting mentioned at v. 4. In fact, there is no great difference between the λόγος σαπρὸς here, and the ῥήμα ἀργόν of Matt. xii. 36, where see Note. Εἴ τις is, as often, for ἥ τις. And here Doddr. and Mackn., by aiming at great literality, as often, pervert the sense. Ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἶκ. may be interpreted, with the Syr., "good, and adapted for edification." With the τῆς χρείας Expositors are much perplexed. In some of the ancient Versions and MSS. it is omitted. Others have τῆς πίστεως; a manifest change to get rid of a difficulty; though that, and even the omission of the word, is supported by eminent Critics; but in vain. Both external and internal evidence are strongly in favour of the common reading; which might be explained, with some, as put, per hypallagen, for πρὸς χρεῖαν τῆς οἰκοδομῆς, if we could conceive why the sense should have been so expressed in preference. Indeed, the χρείας would thus be almost needless. It is better, with Grot. & Wahl, to take τῆς χρ. as a Genit. subst. put for its cognate adjective. Of which many examples are given by Win. Gr. § 26. 2. 6. So Erasmus and Vat. well render "quâ sit opus," and Casaub. "quoties opus est." It must not only be edifying in itself, but suitable to the occasion and person. So Plutarch, cited by Wets., says that Pericles prayed to the Gods, that no expression might fall from him πρὸς τὴν παρακειμένην χρεῖαν ἀνάμυστον.

The words ἵνα δῶ χάριν τοῖς ἀκ. must not be understood, with many recent Commentators, of giving pleasure to the hearers, or gaining their favour (see Recens. Syn.); but (with the Syr.,

30. μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τ. ᾧ.] This injunction is given with a reference to the preceding vices and all similar ones. Ἐν ᾧ. Render, "by or through whom," not whereby, as in our common Version, which was wrongly altered from the by whom of all the old English Versions, though confirmed by the Peschito Syr., the Vulg., and other Versions. And this (as Bp. Middl. has shown) is required by the use of the Article. Of course, this will prove the personality of the Holy Spirit. Many eminent Commentators, however, for the last century, take the τὸ Πν. τ. ᾧ. τ. Θε. as put for τὸ Θεῖον, i. e. τὸν Θεόν. But why it should have been so written they do not tell us. It should seem that this is an expression (perhaps occurring no where else) compounded of two forms of speaking, each very frequent, viz. τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, and τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. Thus the τοῦ Θεοῦ is omitted in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, (as Chrys. and Athanasius) which at least shows the sense they put on the passage. That Πνεῦμα must be taken in the personal sense, is clear from the kindred passages of 2 Cor. i. 22. ὁ καὶ σφραγ. ἡμᾶς, καὶ δὸς τὸν ἀρράβωνα τοῦ Πνεύματος. and Eph. i. 13. ἐν ᾧ (scil. Χριστῷ) πιστεύσαντες, ἔσφραγίσθητε τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ᾧ. Of course, the passion of being grieved (which implies personality) is to be understood, as Whitby says, per anthropopatheiam. On the sense of ἀπολ., see Note on Rom. viii. 23. and Eph. i. 14.

31. πικρία.] See Note on Rom. iii. 14. In the placing of this and the following words, the Apostle intended, I conceive, a sort of climax, proceeding from acerbity of spirit and manner to bravling and gross abuse. And to pluck up by the roots every similar vice, he adds σὺν πάσῃ κακίᾳ, together with all other vices of the same class; i. e. violations of the principle suggested in the next verse (of being kind, gentle, and forgiving), and especially secret calumny. See Œcumen.

32. Χρηστοὶ, εὖσπλαγχνοι, and χαριζ. are not (as Koppe supposes) synonymous, but the latter is the stronger term. (See Note on 2 Cor. vi. 6. and Gal. v. 22.) Render: "gentle (or kind) compassionate, mutually forgiving." The words following suggest the reason for this, where they are enjoined to be as forgiving to others as God had been to them, by graciously placing them, through the atoning merits of Christ, in a state of salvation. Compare Matt. xviii. 21—35.

V. 1. This is closely connected with the last verse of the preceding Chapter; q. d. "Be ye, therefore, [as being thus mercifully accepted] imitators, in this respect, of that God, who hath set you an example, which, as children beloved and favoured, you are bound to follow." Children, it is presumed, will follow the example of their parents (compare Matt. v. 44—48.); and children beloved are doubly bound to attend to their injunctions. In τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ, there is, I think, an allusion to the υἱοθεσία and its benefits, on which see Rom. viii. 15, and compare 19 & 21. and ix. 11. Gal. iv. 5. Eph. i. 5.

2. περιπατ. ἐν ἀγάπῃ.] This is more significant than ἀγαπάτε ἀλλήλους would have been, since it denotes the whole tenour of life. Καθὼς is used as at iv. 32, and carries with it οὕτως καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀλλήλους ἀγαπάτε. In the sacrificial terms, προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν, (as in θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν at Heb. x. 5.) we need not make the distinction between bloody and unbloody sacrifices, or sin-offerings and peace-offerings, which some eminent Commentators do; but the two terms may be regarded as both expressed, in order to denote the completeness of the sacrifice. So in Ps. xxxix. 5. Sept. (xl. 6. Hebr.) which passage the Apostle, I apprehend, had in mind, θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν οὐκ ἠθέλησας. Agreeably to these sacrificial terms we have εἰς ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας, an expression derived from the Jewish sacrifices, and denoting such as God would receive with approbation and pleasure. See Gen. viii. 21. The εὐωδ. is a Genitive of substantive put for its cognate adjective. See 2 Cor. ii. 14.

3. πορνεία δὲ, &c.] The Apostle reverts to the immoralities which they had formerly been addicted to, and into which, by the evil communication of their heathen neighbours, they still were likely to fall. On the sense of πλεονεξία here the Commentators are by no means agreed. Most understand it, in the common acceptation, of covetousness. As, however, that does not comport with the πορνεία καὶ πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία, many recent expositors take it to mean prostitution for lucre's sake, or getting money by acting as panders to the lust of others. But of such a signification no proof is adduced; and, indeed, the sense is forced and frigid. Some ancient and many eminent modern Commentators, from Estius and Hammond downwards, explain it, "greediness in the indulgence of the lewdness just mentioned." That interpretation, however, is liable to insuperable objections, stated by Salmasius, Wolf, and Scott. Nevertheless, the above expositors (especially Hamm., Heins., and Locke) have, I think, fully shown that the common interpretation is inadmissible. Why covetousness should not even be named among Christians, cannot be imagined. I am still of opinion, as in Rec. Syn., that the term signifies an insatiable desire of or intemperance, in even lawful carnal gratifications. So supra iv. 19. ἐαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν τῇ ἀσέλγείᾳ εἰς ἔργ. ἀκαθαρσίας πάσας ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ. Nor is what is said at v. 5. at all at variance with this. For excessive sensuality is as much idolatry as covetousness. See Col. iii. 5. It may, indeed, be said, that thus the sense is not plainly developed. But nothing is more frequent than this in the writings of St. Paul. And here, it may (as Mr. Locke observes) be imputed to the characteristic modesty of the Apostle. In the above manner, I find, the term was also understood by Doddr. and Dr. A. Clarke. And that St. Basil so interpreted, is pretty certain. See Matthæi.

With respect to the μηδὲ ὄνομ., it is interpreted by Expositors according to their view of the sense of πλεονεξία. Many are of opinion that it is equivalent to ἀκονέσθω, "be heard of." But as that does not account for the μηδὲ, where μη would have been thus more suitable, the sense would seem to be, "let not such vices and excesses be even named [much less practised] among you." For, as Theophyl. observes, λόγοι ὁδοὶ πρὸς τὰ πράγματα. Yet see Note on 1 Cor. v. 1.

4. αἰσχρ. καὶ μωρολ. ἢ εὐτρ.] These are meant, I conceive, to exemplify the λόγος σαπρός a little before, iv. 29. Αἰσχρ. denotes obscenity of speech: and μωρ. and εὐτρ. mean literally "foolish trifling, talking, and jesting," but here are used, per ὑποκορισμὸν, a figure very frequent in the phraseology of antiquity. See my Note on Thucyd. iii. 82. 4. Transl. and Ed. And they denote, the former, the same with the Hebr. כְּחִלּוּ, "the naughtiness of the mouth," the stultiloquium of Plautus; the latter, βωμολοχία, scurrile joking, (so Aristot. Eth. defines εὐτραπελία by πεπαιδευμένη ὕβρις.) or rather the double entendre, in which (as Chandl. says) "indecenty is couched in a witty turn, and is, by being thought ingenious, the more dangerously corrupting." With these words we must repeat ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, with a slight accommodation of sense; i. e. "let none of these be heard of among you." So 1 Cor. v. 1. πορνεία—ἥτις οὐδὲ ἐν ἔθνεσιν ὀνομαζεται. Τα τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκ. may be rendered, "things which are not suitable [viz. to our holy calling, as children of God, members of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost]." Ἀλλὰ μάλλουν εὐχαρ. Sub. ἔστω, "let εὐχ. be practised among you [in society]." On the sense of the term εὐχαρ. there is some doubt. Many learned Expositors suppose it to be, "polite and innocent pleasantries," as opposed to scurrility. But (as Koppe admits) this sense of the word is not found in the N. T.; and, indeed, the sentiment itself would not be sufficiently weighty for an Apostle. Most Expositors adopt the usual sense of the word, "giving of thanks." This, however, yields a forced and frigid sense, and quite destroys the paronomasia between εὐτραπελία and εὐχαριστία; which had the Commentators perceived, they would have seen that the true interpretation is that of Hamm., "edifying and instructive discourse," such as may (in the words of the Apostle) δῶ χάριν (spiritual edification) τοῖς ἀκούουσιν. And so Col. iv. 6. ὁ λόγος ὑμῶν (scil. ἔστω) πάντοτε ἐν χάριτι. Now the paronomasia is sufficient to justify this use of the word; for in that figure, the usus loquendi is not strictly observed. There is a very similar paronomasia at v. 17. μη γίνεσθε ἀφρονες ἀλλὰ συνιέντες.

5. τοῦτο γὰρ ἐστὲ γινώσκ.] For ἐστὲ several Versions and Fathers have ἴστε, which is preferred by the recent Commentators and edited by Griesb.; but rashly; for in external evidence it is inferior to the common reading, Versions in such a case being of no weight, and Fathers but slender authority. Internal evidence, too, is quite against it; for the words are frequently confounded by the scribes, and ἴστε is just such an emendation as would occur to the early Critics. The common reading, then, must, as being the more difficult one, be preferred. And, moreover, γινώσκ. would, according to the other reading, be worse than useless. Ἐστὲ γινώσκ. must not be taken (with most Expositors, and, it should seem, the ancient Translators) as put for the Imperative γινώσκετε; but it is merely a stronger way of expressing the Indic.; q. d. "Ye are knowing;" i. e. "ye are [yourselves] sensible," &c. So Thucyd. vii. 64. αὐτοὶ ἴστε. "The Apostle (as Scott observes) supposes his readers to know it: as he justly might, since in his former Epistle (doubtless in great circulation among the Gentile Christians) he had often expressed this; as, for instance, 1 Cor. v. 11 & 12; vi. 9, 10, & 11. It may be added, that in both of those passages πλεονέκτης does not mean a covetous person, but an extortioner, as Grot., Est., and most eminent Commentators for the last century are agreed. And if there could be a doubt in the former passage, it is quite removed by the position of the word in the latter. This, indeed, is a sense of the word frequent in the Classical writers. So Thucyd. i. 40. οἵδε βίαιοι καὶ πλεονέκται εἰσι. It should seem that the term there denotes such a kind of extortion and cheating, as borders on robbery; while the ἀρπ. signifies what we commonly understand by rapacity, a taking any advantage of others in bargaining. Here, by the context, πλεονέκτης must mean one who is wholly devoted to sensuality, and who is thus, as the Apostle says, an idolater, or, as he elsewhere expresses it, Phil. iii. 19. (an Epistle written nearly at the same time with Ephesians) "whose God is his belly." See also Rom. xvi. 18. With ἐν τῇ βασ. τοῦ Χρ. καὶ Θεοῦ may be compared 1 Cor. vi. 10. βασιλ. Θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσι. Though here the phrase is somewhat different; and Bp. Middl. has fully shown that the words ought to be translated, "of him who is the Christ and God;" which is therefore a decided declaration of Christ as God.

6. κενοὶς λόγους.] In this the Apostle seems to allude to the empty reasonings of the heathen sophists, or those led away by them; who pleaded that the vices in question were τὰ ἀδιάφορα, things indifferent, or at least venial offences. It should seem, too, from the next words, (where ἔρχεται is, I conceive, emphatical) that some even urged that the denunciation was not so formidable,—since God would not put his threats into execution against these comparatively light offences. The μηδ. ἀπατάτω—λόγους κενοὶς is well illustrated by Col. ii. 4. μὴ τίς παραλογίζηται ἐν πιθανολογίᾳ and 8. βλέπετε μὴ τις ὑμᾶς ἔσται ὁ συλαγωγῶν διὰ τῆς φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενῆς ἀπάτης. On υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπ., see Note on ii. 2.

7. συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν] for συμμ. αὐτοῖς; but the adjective is treated as a subst., "partakers with them [in the punishment which must fall upon them]."

8. ἦτε γὰρ ποτὲ—Κυρίῳ.] The Apostle now shows the inconsistency of this conduct (compare supra v. 4.); q. d. "For ye are not, as formerly, in a state of moral darkness [which might extenuate your vices], but are now enlightened in the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ." And he exhorts them to remove it, by living suitably to the high calling. Σκότος is for ἐν σκότει, or ἐσκοτισμένοι in Rom. ii. 19. 1 John i. 6. ἐν τῷ σκότει περιπατῶμεν. Light and darkness, from the earliest ages, figuratively denoted good and evil. Thus the ancient Magians, or worshippers of the Deity by fire, made fire the symbol of the good principle, as darkness, that of the evil principle.

9. πνεύματος.] About 12 MSS., several Versions, and some Fathers, read φωτὸς, which is approved by most Critics, and edited by Griesb., Koppe, Tittm., and Valpy. I have not ventured to follow them, since, from the character of the MSS., it seems to me more probable that φωτὸς is an emendation—proceeding from those Critics who wished to reduce the expressions of the passage to strict logical accuracy—than (as those Commentators suppose) that πνεῦμ. was an alteration of those who would make the expression the same as at Gal. v. 22. The Critics who formed the text of those MSS., dealt much in the former kind of alteration, but little in the latter. Besides, that the Apostle here uses πν. to show, that that light must be expected alone from the influence of the Holy Spirit. Since, too, this verse is parenthetical, such an irregularity might the better be tolerated. Καρπὸς denotes the practical effect. On ἀγαθ., see Note on Gal. v. 22.

10. δοκιμάζοντες, &c.] This is closely connected with v. 8. ὡς τέκνα φωτὸς περιπ. The sense of δοκιμ. is disputed; but it seems to be, "proving by trial or search [in order to know and practise]."

11. μὴ συγκοινωνεῖτε—σκότους.] This is meant as a supplement to the exhortation at v. 8. ὡς τέκνα φωτ. περιπ. The expression συγκ. ἔργοις, &c. (like κοιν. τοῖς ἔργοις πονηροῖς at 2 John 11. and κοιν. ἀμαρτίας at 1 Tim. v. 22.), signifies "to partake in evil deeds, either by practising, or by approving and countenancing them." See Rom. i. 32. Ἀκάροι, by a libelles, signifies that which is pernicious and mischievous. Such adjectives, chiefly with the a privative, are frequent. See Note on Rom. iii. 12. and my Note on Thucyd. i. 91. ἀζύμφορον.

—ἐλέγχετε.] Most Expositors supply αὐτοὺς, meaning the doers of the works: and they render ἐλέγχ. reprove, viz. by wholesome correction. This, however, is so harsh that it is better (with Theodoret, the Pesch. Syr., Wakef., Schleus., Phot., and Wahl) to supply αὐτά, (i. e. the ἔργα τοῦ σκότους) and to interpret ἐλ. "bring to the light, and evince their evil nature," namely, by showing in contrast the opposite virtues. So Photius ap. Œcum., ἐλέγχετε τῇ παραδείσει τοῦ οἰκείου βίου σπουδαίου. This sense is required by v. 13., with which the present closely connects. And so ἐλέγχω is used both in the Scriptural and Classical writers.

12. τὰ γὰρ κρυφῇ—λέγειν.] This is meant to place in a strong point of view the abominable vices of those persons, with whom he has just exhorted them to have no society. The αὐτῶν, of course, refers to those persons. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted q. d. "For [as censuring their actions in words], it were a shame," &c. The sentiment contains one of the most cutting reproofs ever uttered, and is pointed

by the emphasis on γιν. and λέγειν, of which many similar examples are adduced by Wets. There is supposed to be here an allusion to the abominations of the nocturnal mysteries, on which see Whitby.

13. τὰ δὲ πάντα—φανεροῦνται.] The sense is here disputed; and, indeed, is not very clear. I have in Recens. Synop. shown, that the interpretations of the recent Commentators cannot be admitted, and that the most natural and simple one is that of the ancient and most modern Expositors. By τὰ πάντα must be meant all the evil deeds just mentioned; and, in fact, v. 13. is closely connected with the μᾶλλον δὲ ἐλέγχ. at v. 11. Rosenm. and Koppe are of opinion that a reason is here meant to be given why Christians should study to correct the bad morals of the heathens. But it should rather seem that as at v. 12., the Apostle mentions how those deeds of darkness could not well be reprov'd and made to appear what they are,—so, in v. 13., he shows how they might be most effectually made to appear in their true character; viz. by being brought into contrast with the deeds of light from the children of light, or true Christians. The sense, then, may be thus expressed: "Now all these [deeds of darkness and vice] being made to appear what they are, by the light [of the Gospel, as evinced in the children of light] are made manifest or exposed; (i. e. their moral turpitude is discovered)."

With respect to the words πᾶν γὰρ—ἐστι, they are variously interpreted. The preference has generally been given to the sense assigned by Grot., adopted by Newc., Slade, and Holden: "For it is the light [of severe truth] which makes every thing manifest and in its true colour." But though the sense thus arising, is a good and suitable one, it cannot, I think, be extracted from the words without great violence. Πᾶν is plainly in the Nomin., not the Accus. Nor can φανερ. be taken for φανερούν. The Apostle would thus have written φῶς γὰρ ἐστι τὸ φανεροῦν τὸ πᾶν. And the common interpretation (as concerns φανερ.) lies open to the same objection; though the sense yielded is suitable. The true interpretation seems to be that of the ancient Expositors almost universally, by whom φανερ. is taken in a passive, or a reflected sense; q. d. "Whatsoever sheweth itself [to the world and doth not seek concealment], as the life of true Christians may do (so Matt. v. 14. 'ye are the light of the world: a city set on a hill cannot be hid,') that is light, [and adapted to discover darkness, i. e. by the contrast]."

14. διὸ λέγει, &c.] There has been no little controversy as to these words; (wherein the heathens are apostrophized) which, while they seem to be introduced as a quotation from Scripture (for wherever else the form διὸ λέγει occurs in St. Paul, it serves to introduce a citation) are nowhere found in Scripture. The ancient and many modern Expositors regard the words ἐγείραι—Χριστός as a quotation, from Is. xli. 1, 2. Others, again, suppose them taken from a lost canonical, or, as some say, apocryphal book. But that a canonical book should be lost, is of all improbable suppositions the most improbable. And that the Apostle should speak of an apocryphal book in the same manner as of a canonical, is not for a moment to be supposed. Many recent Commentators take λέγει for λέγεται, and suppose that the words form part of a spiritual song, then sung or recited in the Churches. This, however, rests on mere conjecture. The words may, I think, best be regarded as formed upon Scripture (especially Is. lx. 1—3.) τὸ Πνεῦμα being understood. It is well observed by Zanch. that "what is here said contains the sense of what the Prophets teach, and consist, 1. of an exhortation to repentance; 2. of a prediction of the light of salvation by the Messiah." Hooker, Eccl. Pol. i. 7. ably traces the cause of that sluggishness in human nature, which rendered this expostulation of the Apostle necessary,—namely, "the weariness of the flesh, which is a heavy clog to the will." See Wisd. ix. 15. "Hence (continues he) the Apostle striketh mightily upon this key: 'Awake, thou that sleepest,' cast off all that which presseth down, watch, labour, strive to go forward, and to grow in knowledge." Eph. v. 14. Heb. xii. 1, 2. 1 Cor. xvi. 15. Ἐπιφ. σοί seems formed on Is. lx. 1—3. which passage, Wets. remarks, the Jews have always interpreted of the Messiah. And he well illustrates the ἐπιφαύσει from Orph. Hymn. οἷς ἐθέλεις Ξηνοῖς ἢ Ἀθανάτοις ἐπιφάσκων. On this metaphorical sense of καὶ, see Rom. xiii. 11. and Note; on νεκρ., ii. 1.; and on the figurative sense of light, see John i. 4. and Note.

15. βλέπετε—περιπ.] This is not, I conceive, (as it is by many Commentators regarded) a new admonition,—namely, to Christian prudence; but, as others have well pointed out, a resumption or continuation of the precept at v. 3. 8. Ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν signifies "to conduct oneself carefully and circumspectly, cautiously minding one's steps." The πῶς is said to be for οὔτι; to account for which, we may suppose that this is a blending of two modes of expression, βλέπετε πῶς περιπ., and βλέπετε ὅτι ἀκριβῶς περιπ. In μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί there is a parallelismus antitheticus (such as is found in the Classical as well as the Scriptural writers), where, for emphasis sake, a proposition is expressed both affirmatively and negatively; as in John i. 20. ὁμολόγησε καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσατο.

16. ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, &c.] This is acknowledged to be one of the most difficult passages in Scripture; and hence it is variously interpreted. See Rec. Syn. Some eminent Commentators, as Grot., Hamm., Whitby, Locke,

f Prov. 20. 1.
& 23. 29, &c.
Isa. 5. 11, 22.
Luke 21. 34.

ἡμέραι πονηραὶ εἰσι. ° Διὰ τοῦτο μὴ γίνεσθε ἄφρονες, ἀλλὰ 17
συνιέντες τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Κυρίου. † καὶ μὴ μεθύσκεσθε 18

and Mackn., explain it of the caution to be observed in avoiding persecution; viz. that they might draw out their time as long as they could, by not provoking their enemies to cut them off. This view, however, is agreeable neither to the context, nor to the parallel passage of Colossians iv. 5, adduced in illustration; and yields a sense not in the manner of the Apostle. The common interpretation is, "endeavouring to recover and buy back the time that has been lost, by diligently making use of what remains, and improving it to the most valuable purposes." But this also has no support from the context, and is not agreeable to the parallel passage of Colossians. It should seem that, in order to ascertain the sense, we must first carefully trace the connection; according to which ἔξαγορ. τ. κ. must, I think, have reference to ἀκριβῶς περίπ. in the preceding verse. And that expression must also refer to ἐλέγχετε, and the whole of v. 14. The Apostle, I apprehend, means to teach them how that ἐλεγχῆς and φανέρωσις might be brought about; namely, by the ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν. And the words μὴ ὡς ἄσσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοὶ and ἔξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν are, I think, meant to further urge this circumspection, by showing that thereby they will act like truly wise men; (so Liban. Epist. 627. σαφρονοῦντων δὲ οἶμαι καρπούσθαι τὸν καιρὸν ἵνα μὴ παρελθόντα τὸν καιρὸν ζητῶμεν.) namely, by diligently making use of the opportunity for presenting in their conduct such a contrast, as may rouse those who are in the deep sleep of pagan ignorance and vice; so that, standing reproved thereby, they may be brought to Christ, who will give them the light of the Gospel and the Holy Spirit.

The remaining words ὅτι αἱ ἡμέραι πονηραὶ εἰσι are obscure, and admit of more than one suitable sense. If they be referred to ἔξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν, the sense will be, "because the times are dangerous, the season of their usefulness is precarious, and the opportunity ought to be carefully made use of." They are, however, by some referred to ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε; and thus the sense will be, not that the times are dangerous to their safety, but to their virtue; being full of temptations, trials, and various hindrances to religion: so that they will have need of all their circumspection and care to walk aright. But this is not agreeable to the context, and the parallel passage of Colossians.

The above view of the sense is greatly recommended by its being equally suitable to the parallel passage of Colossians, where the ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖν is equivalent to the ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν of the present Epistle; and though πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω is not here expressed, yet it is understood in πρὸς αὐτοὺς, which may be supplied, with reference to the αὐτῶν at v. 12, which relates to the νιοὶς τῆς ἀπειθείας at v. 6; and that cannot but refer to the heathens, who are unquestionably meant at v. 14. The admonition, then, clearly is, that they should adopt a discreet and circumspect conduct towards their heathen neighbours; thereby making use of the opportunity afforded, of bringing them to the light of the Gospel. A view of the sense, I would observe, much confirmed by a masterly disquisition on the import of this verse by my late friend, the very learned Dr. S. Parr, in his Sermon, vol. ii. p. 704. He commences by observing, that "the use of the phrase here, ἔξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν is acknowledged to be founded on Daniel ii. 8, where the sense is: 'I know of a certainty that you would, by all means, obtain a more favourable opportunity for avoiding explanation altogether, or attempting it with better effect, because ye see that the thing is gone from me,' namely, the particulars of the dream; for it seems the king had only a confused recollection of what he had dreamed. The expression ἔξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν became, it should seem, proverbial among the Hellenistic Jews. It acquired the signification of gaining favourable opportunities, and the specific use to which those opportunities was to be applied, may sometimes have been expressly stated, in speaking or writing, though we are left to collect it from the context, in the passages of the N. T. as well as of Daniel." The learned writer is of opinion that both here and in the passage of Colossians, the same duty is inculcated, of circumspection and prudence; the same ground existing for it, in the immoral habits and malicious dispositions of the adversaries to Christianity. The Ephesians were to walk circumspectly, and ἔξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν, because the days were evil. The Colossians were to walk in wisdom to those without, and ἔξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν, because, in the reign of Nero, St. Paul was thrown into bonds for speaking the mystery of Christ, and because the dangers which had already overtaken St. Paul impeded over the Colossians. Now the opportunity for gaining a more serious hearing to the preachers of the Gospel would be the result of the wisdom with which they and their followers walked towards those that were without; and the want of such wisdom would have occasioned the loss of such opportunity—would have created additional obstacles to the propagation of the Gospel, and additional difficulties to those who were already converted to it. The τὸν signifies the opportunity. As to ἔξαγ., it specifically signifies to recover, by purchase, that which has become the property of another. And in Galat. iii. 13. iv. 5. it is metaphorically transferred to the redemption of mankind from their captivity to sin by the blood of Christ. With a greater latitude of metaphor it is used here and at Coloss. iv. 5. for obtaining some object with the same earnestness, solicitude, and intense application of the whole mind, which persons engaged in bargains employ for pecuniary advantages, Luke xvi. 8. By a reference to the passages of the Classical writers here adduced by the Commentators, we may see how terms such as ἔξαγορ. and ἔξωνεῖσθαι, which originally denoted the act of purchasing, came to be figuratively applied to the act of securing any future object with the cautious and vigilant attention of purchasers. The specific object in the view of the Apostle, when he wrote to the Ephesians, is well expressed in the words of Schleusner: "quærite opportunitatem sancte vivendi et alios emendandi, hoc enim, quo vivimus, tempore multa sunt virtutis impedimenta." Nearly the same object was in the mind of the Apostle when he instructed the Colossians to walk in wisdom to those without. They were so to walk, as to avoid the dangers to which they were exposed from the malice and obstinacy of their enemies. Their spirit was always to be mild and courteous, both as became the teachers and professors of a benevolent religion; both for the credit of their religion, and for their own preservation in evil times. The Colossians are not called upon to recover any part of time which had been misspent, but to attend to the present difficulties and perils by which they were surrounded; and to avail themselves of any future occasion for discharging the Christian duties, and propagating the Christian faith, with safety to themselves and usefulness to the sacred cause in which they were engaged.

17. μη γίνεσθε ἄφρονες, ἀλλὰ, &c.] This is very similar to the μη ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί at v. 15. Here, however, the sense is carried still further; ἄφρ. being a stronger term than ἄσοφοι; there being, it is supposed, an allusion to the feasts of Bacchus, or rather, I should think, to the Bacchanalian orgies of the heathens: which enables the Apostle to introduce the admonition against drunkenness. Thus the sense is: "Wherefore [such being your obligations as children of light, live accordingly, and] act not like persons out of their mind [but play a wise and sober part], understanding what the will of the Lord is, [even your sanctification.]"

18. μη μεθύσκ. οἶνω.] Drunkenness was a vice to which the Greeks were proverbially prone: indeed the exquisite wines of Ionia, and the nature of the climate, strongly tempted the Asiatic Greeks to excess. Ἀσωτία is not well rendered excess, since that is implied in μεθύσκ. It is a very comprehensive term, and denotes the life of a person abandoned to vice. Render, "in which [drunkenness] there is a [tendency to] dissoluteness or profligacy." See Prov. xx. iii. 30. The Apostle, however, may have played on the etymology of the word, and meant to represent ἀσωτία as the state of a person whom (to use the Classical saying) "even the Goddess of Salvation herself could not save." And of whose reformation do we so much despair as the drunkard's? There is an antithetical paronomasia between μεθ. and πληρ. πν., i. e. Be not filled with wine, but [rather endeavour to] be filled with the Spirit. The Apostle means to admonish them not to imitate the revels of the heathens, nor seek exhilaration from intemperate drinking (which would lead to the ruin of both body and soul), but rather to endeavour to be filled with the Spirit, and seek for the abundantly satisfying consolations of his holy influences.

19. λαλοῦντες ἑαυτοῖς ψαλμοῖς, &c.] These words are, I think, intended to illustrate and exemplify the preceding verse: the meaning seems to be that, when in their families, or in society, they felt elevated beyond ordinary conversation, and sought for hilarity, they should not express this feeling, as did the heathens, in singing or reciting dissolute songs (called scolia) but in the use of "psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs;"

either by recitation, to each other, or by singing them, singly or in chorus. On the discrimination of sense in ψαλμ., ὑμν., and ᾠδ. πν. I have fully treated in Rec. Syn. It should seem that by ψαλμ. we are not to understand the Psalms of David only; but also the compositions of those persons who had the spiritual gifts (so 1 Cor. xiv. 26. εἴτε ψαλμὸν ἔχει. where see the Note); which are in Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. L. v. 28.) distinctly adverted to: ψαλμοὶ καὶ ᾠδαὶ ἀδελφῶν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ πιστῶν γραφεῖσθαι; which compositions, he says, τὸν Λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὸν Χριστὸν, ὑμνοῦσι, θεολογούντες, i. e. "speaking of him as a God." Accordingly such ψαλμοὶ differed in no material respect from ὑμνοὶ. See Rec. Syn. How far the ᾠδαὶ πνευμ. differed from both, is not clear. The difference should seem to have been,—that the two former celebrated the praises of God in strains adapted to be sung in chorus; while the ᾠδαὶ were poems on some religious subject, and it is probable were usually only recited; or, if sung, sung as our solo anthems. I would add, that though we find they used, in singing of psalms or hymns, the ἰσχυρία, yet it appears, from Justin's Resp. ad Orthod. p. 107, that they sang only with the voice, ἄνευ ὀργάνων.

This the Apostle directs to be done ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ i. e. so that the affections of their hearts should go with the outward expressions of their voices; meaning that this was not to be done in a formal manner, or be regarded as always to be done, but only when they felt so inclined. Thus we shall fully comprehend the force of the admonition at James v. 13, at which so many have stumbled: εὐθυμῆι τις; ψαλλέτω. The meaning is not that our cheerfulness must always be shown in singing of Psalms; but that if any one be elevated, more than ordinarily, let him express it, not in the use of dissolute songs, but rather in hymns of praise. And as that passage cannot be supposed to refer to public worship, so neither, I apprehend, does the present. I need scarcely add, that in neither passage is there an injunction to sing psalms and hymns in all seasons of joyfulness. The terms ψαλλ. and ᾄδ. are synonymous, but both terms are used; the former to correspond to the ψαλμοὶ, the latter to the ὑμνοὶ.

20. εὐχαριστ., &c.] This forms another head of admonition as to their private conduct, and is illustrative of the ἀκριβὺς περιπατεῖν. It must relate solely to the expression of thankfulness "to God even the Father" in private devotions, or in family prayer, and that under all circumstances, whether prosperous or adverse. See Whitby in Recens. Synop., and two admirable Discourses of Dr. Isaac Barrow, on this text, vol. i. 91. 121., entitled, "On the Duty of Thanksgiving," where, after observing that the words may without violence or prejudice on either hand, be separated from the context, and considered distinctly by themselves, he remarks that "every single word of the sentence carries with it a notable emphasis and especial significance. The first expresses the substance of the duty to which we are exhorted. The next (namely, in order of construction) denotes the object to which it is directed (God). The following “always” determines the main circumstances of this and all other duties, the time of performance. The last “for all things” declares the adequate matter of the duty, and how far it should extend.

21. ὑποτασσ. ἀλλ.] This forms another head of admonition,—namely, to that subordination, the violation of which was, there is reason to think, not unfrequent among Christians; and more than any thing else tended to bring Christianity into discredit with Governors and magistrates. They are, therefore, exhorted “to submit themselves to every ordinance of man, for the Lord’s sake.” And the Apostle, from this verse to ch. vi. 10. (following up the general injunction ὑποτασσ. ἀλλ. with particular ones) adverts to various kinds of subordination,—both natural and social, each in order, and exhorts to the discharge of the relative duties. See Dodd., and compare 1 Cor. vii. 10—19. 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2. to Ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ, “from reference to the authority of God.” See Rom. xii. 11. and Note.

22. ἰδίους.] This is not to be pressed on, but is put for ὑπετέροις (as Col. iii. 18.); a use not found in the Classical writers. Ὡς τῷ Κ., “as a duty rendered to the Lord,” and therefore to be discharged with alacrity.

23. ἐστὶ κεφ. τῆς γυν.] See 1 Cor. xi. 3. 7. and Notes. Κεφ. τῆς ἐκκλ., “Head of the body of the Church.” See Rom. xii. 5. and Note.

24. This is illustrative of the preceding verse. Ἐν παντί, i. e. in every thing lawful.

25. The Apostle here points to the reciprocal duty, by which the submission before enjoined would be rendered more easy and effectual; namely, by kindness and affection, as a liberal indulgence to the frailty of the weaker sex; protection being implied in the authority vested in the husband. Καὶ ἑαυτ. παρ. See Gal. i. 3. and Note.

26. ἵνα αὐτὴν ἀγιάσῃ—ῥήματι] i. e. that he might [by his Spirit] consecrate it to his service, having cleansed it by the washing of water (i. e. by that baptism which is the laver of regeneration. See Tit. iii. 5.) and through the word, i. e. the Gospel as the means of their conversion and sanctification. See Whitby and Scott.

27. ἵνα παραστήσῃ—ἄμωμος.] There is here some variety of interpretation, occasioned probably by a misconception of the metaphor. Koppe takes it simply for περιποιεῖσθαι or κτᾶσθαι, “make her his own.” But that is merely avoiding the difficulty. Others, as Dodd., and Valpy, render, “that he may present to himself,” in his own immediate presence; namely, at the resurrection. Yet that would surely suppose an almost unprecedented harshness, and indeed confusion of metaphor. Considering the words of the foregoing verse, in conjunction with Oriental marriage customs (among which was this, that the bride should be carefully washed, and in every way purified previously to the marriage), there is here doubtless a matrimonial allusion. And viewing the present passage in conjunction with 2 Cor. xi. 2. παρθένον ἀγνὴν παραστήσαι τῷ Χριστῷ, we may well suppose that there is such here. The words μὴ ἔχουσιν σπῖλον ἢ ῥυτίδα allude to the Oriental methods (by cosmetics or otherwise) of making the skin clear and smooth, removing all freckles, wrinkles, or other blemishes, as to be ἄμωμος, from the Heb. כּוּמָץ, a blemish. So Solomon, Song iv. 7. καλὴ καὶ μώμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν σοί. Παραστήναι (observes Bos, Obs. p. 187.) is either used of the father-in-law’s introducing the bride to the bridegroom, or of the bridegroom’s taking her home when espoused.” See also Elsn. Obs. 8. Vol. ii. 156., and Alberti’s Opusc. Phil. p. 314. It should seem, however, that the expression has reference to the Paranymph, ὁ φίλος τοῦ νυμφίου, John iii. 29.; who originally selected the bride for the bridegroom, and afterwards formally introduced her to him, first for his approbation (See John iii. 29. and Note), and finally when formally brought home to his house, on the wedding night. So Ps. xlv. 14. (which was, perhaps in the mind of the Apostle) “She shall be brought unto the king (rather, introduced or conducted to) in raiment of needlework.” And as in John iii. 29. the Baptist compares himself to the paranymph, and Christ to the bridegroom; so here, it should seem from ἑαυτῷ, that Christ is considered as paranymph to himself, as regards his spouse the Church.

is edited by Griesb. The common reading, however, has been retained by Knapp, Tittm., and Vater; and, I think, upon just grounds; for though the other reading be specious, it should seem to be only a correction of those who stumbled at the irregularity of the expression in this sense; which is not to be removed by supposing, with Grotius, a trajectio for ἵνα παρ. ἑαυτῷ αὐτήν ἐκκλ., "the church before mentioned;" for that surely yields a very frigid sense, and involves a violation of the linguæ proprietates. The truth is, the irregularity (which would be, as the ancient Critics saw, removed either by cancelling αὐτήν or by reading αὐτὸς) was occasioned by τὴν ἐκκλησίαν being thrown in to make what is meant by αὐτήν, which is personified, more plain. I have pointed accordingly. The passage may be literally rendered: "That he might present her, [namely] the Church, unto himself glorious," &c. This is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr., which construes ἐκκλ. immediately after αὐτήν. The rendering her, as above, is required by the imagery, and supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., Vulg., and Mackn.

28. The argument in this and the three following verses is founded on the nature of the conjugal union, whereby the husband and wife become as it were, "one flesh." Thus the wife is regarded as the husband's second self. Τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα is for ἑαυτοῦς, conformably, Koppe says, to the preceding figure: but rather, it should seem, in order to make the application in the next verse the stronger, by the use of σάρκα. The argumentation is popular, and, therefore, must not to be too much pressed on. Thus Aristot. Eth. p. 233, says any one's son is ὡσπερ μέρος αὐτοῦ, and then adds: αὐτὸν δὲ προαιρεῖται βλέπειν οὐδέεις. Comp. Hom. Il. i. 340.

30. ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν—αὐτοῦ.] The sense is probably to be completed from the preceding verse, as follows: "[The Lord so nourishes and supports us who are his Church] because we are [in that view] members of his body." The next words press the comparison more closely, by an allusion to what Adam said of Eve, Gen. ii. 23; thus representing the relation as being equally close as that of Eve to Adam. And then, to place what is said in a stronger point of view, the Apostle introduces the very words spoken of the woman.

32. τὸ μυστήριον—ἐστίν.] Literally, "This mystery is a great one;" q. d. "in this is [contained] a great mystery, representing a most important truth, [though long unknown]." The Apostle recognises an allegorical sense in that passage, involving an image of the intimate union between Christ and his Church.

—λέγω εἰς—ἐκκλ.] The sense seems to be, "But in saying this, I especially advert to [the union between] Christ and his Church, [that you may apply it to yourselves]." "The mystery (observes Abp. Newc.) was that Christ should leave the glory which he had with his Father, and should join himself to his spouse the Church; purchasing this Church by his blood."

33. πλὴν] "however [not to enlarge on this truth respecting Christ] let," &c. [Newc.] The πλὴν, however, seems to be transitive, resuming what was said at v. 29; and may be rendered enimvero,—a sense occurring in the later Classical writers. Οἱ καθ' ἓνα. This mode of expression is very rare, and not found in the Classical writers. "ἵνα φοβῇ. sub. βλέπω, expressed supra v. 15.

VI. 1. τὰ τέκνα.] The Article may be thus expressed: "The children of you;" i. e. those of you who are children. Ἐν Κυρίῳ; i. e. in deference to the authority of the Lord, ἐν φόβῳ Κ., v. 21. Τοῦτο γὰρ ἐ. δ. It is meant, that this is right and just, both by the law of nature and that of revelation.

2. τίμα τ. πατ.] Τιμᾶν properly signifies "to perform one's duty to any one;" and here reverence must comprehend the cognate offices of affection, care, and support, suitable thereto. There is the same complexity of sense in the Classical τιμᾶν τὸν ἱατρόν. In ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντ. πρ. ἐν ἐπ. some limitation is intended. Most eminent modern Commentators understand by πρώτη "the first with a special and appropriate promise annexed to it;" that in the second commandment being only a general declaration of God's mercy to all who keep the commandments. If this be thought unsatisfactory, we may, with the ancient and some eminent modern Commentators, (as Hamm., Wets., Koppe, Rosenm., Iasp., Schleus., and Wahl,) take πρώτη ἐν to mean ‘a principal commandment,’—as, from its peculiar importance, it may very well be termed. Of which indefinite sense of πρ., Schleus. and Wahl will furnish examples. Thus the ἐν ἐπαγγ. will mean, “and that, too, with a promise annexed.” This latter mode, however, is not necessary; for as to the objection that some have made, that the former sense would require the Article, that has been refuted by Bp. Middl., who has shown that πρώτη may very well be taken for ἡ πρώτη.

3. ἵνα εὖ—τῆς γῆς.] Rosenm. and many recent Expositors, represent the import of the promise to be, that ‘the Jewish state should be flourishing and permanent, if the children were educated.’ Now that the education of children is of great consequence both to the welfare of families, and of benefit to the community at large, cannot be denied: but there is nothing said here of education; nor was the commandment meant for children in age, but offspring, whether children or adults. There is no reason to abandon the view taken by the ancient and early modern Expositors, that the promise was meant for individuals. Though it would, of course, apply to whole societies, as composed of individuals. Besides, the promise was especially adapted to individuals,—and, like other promises to the Jews, was temporal. We are not, however, hence to infer, that the same temporal blessing may now be with certainty expected to attend the performance of this duty. For the promise is only mentioned as a proof of the high importance of the commandment. Still it seems to be implied, that what was attended with so marked a blessing under the Mosaic Law, (even the performance of a precept which constituted part of the Moral law engrafted into Christianity) would experience a corresponding portion of blessing under the Gospel of Christ; though the reward might be not so much of this world, as of the next.

4. παροργίζετε] i. e. “irritate by undue austerity, or unnecessary severity.” At the parallel passage of Col. iii. 21, is added ἵνα μὴ ἄδυσμ.; i. e. lest they fall into that discouragement, and despair of doing their duty, which unmerited harshness occasions. The words following seem meant to suggest the mode, by which the duty and obedience of children might be most effectually secured,—namely, by giving them (in the words of Dodd.) “such a course of discipline and instruction as properly belongs to a religious education; which ought to be employed in forming them for the Lord, by laying a restraint upon the first appearances of every vicious passion, and nourishing them up in the words of faith and of good doctrine.” See 1 Tim. iv. 6. Παιδεία καὶ νοῦς should be rendered “education and discipline;” the former term seeming to regard the instructory part of education; and the latter the corrective part, by forming their morals. Κυρίου is added to suggest that the whole of this education, and moral instruction (and training) should be suitable to their Christian profession.

5. κατὰ σάρκα] (earthly); said in allusion to their Master in heaven. Thus the Apostle does not interfere with any established relations, however (as in the case of slaves) morally and politically wrong; but only enjoins the discharge of duties, which the very persons themselves recognized. Μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου. See Note on 2 Cor. vii. 15. “Ἐν ἀπλότ. τ. κ.,” “with hearty sincerity and good-will.” Ὡς τῷ Χρ., “as if the service were unto Christ, the heavenly Master, who is, in a more eminent sense, the Lord of the Christian.”

6. μὴ κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλίαν, &c.] This is further illustrative of the preceding verse. They are first told how the service is not to be rendered, and then how and on what principle it is to be rendered. The terms ὀφθ. and ἀνθρώπ. are both of rare occurrence, and denote a service and obedience rendered only when the master is present, and to gain the praise of men. Ἐκ ψυχῆς is equivalent to ἐν ἀπλότ. τῆς καρδίας in the foregoing verse. Μετ' εὐνοίας, “with good will.”

9. τὰ αὐτὰ ποιεῖτε πρὸς αὐτοὺς] i. e. “discharge your duties to them as conscientiously and religiously, as they are required to do it to you.”

—ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπειλήν.] The sense (not a little disputed) must depend upon that assigned to ἀπειλήν, which word is often in the Sept. used of anger and angry oburgation; and we might here take it to mean “a threatening oburgatory demeanour.” Ἀνιέντες will then signify forbearing (as in Ps. xxxvii. 8. “leave off wrath, let go displeasure"), or moderating it, as the Margin has it. Thus, however, the Article will have no force; and, after a careful examination of all the passages of the Classics, where I could meet with the word, I find no instance of the Article being used without some reference. Now, as ἀνιέναι often in the Scriptural writers signifies to remit, but scarcely ever to leave off, I am inclined to think that the sense is, "remitting the severity of punishment you had threatened," or intended, or which is denounced by the Law. So in Æn. Mag. Eq. i. 14. ἡ ἀπειλή signifies the punishment awarded by Law. Also Plutarch Alex. cited by Wets.: ὡς δὲ ἔωρα τὸν ἵππον ἀφεικότα τὴν ἀπειλήν, "had shaken off all fear of the punishment denounced." This interpretation is placed beyond doubt by the words following; the argument being, "Show a forgiving spirit towards your bond-servants, knowing that you stand in great need of forgiveness from that common Master in heaven, in whose sight you are equally servants, and who will make no distinction of persons."

10—17. The Apostle here draws his practical exhortations to a close, by an admonition expressed in a figure derived from military affairs. As the soldiers of Christ, the Ephesians are called upon to stand firm against their various spiritual enemies, in the exercise of all the Christian virtues and graces; (see 2 Cor. vi. 6. and Notes) aptly designated by the panoply, or complete suit of armour provided for every true believer; clothed in which they were to fight under the banners of the great Captain of their salvation against Sin, the world, the flesh, and the Devil. Without this they would have been unequal to the contest; and they can only be strong in the Lord by seeking his strength, as communicated by his Holy Spirit, and to be obtained by the "prayers of faith" to the throne of Grace.

Εὐδυναμούσθε ἐν Κυρ., &c. has the same sense as κραταιοῦσθε in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xvi. 13. Κρατ. τ. ισχ. may be rendered "through the force (i. e. efficacy) of his strength." The Apostle first compares generally the strong motives to steadfastness in the profession of the Gospel, supplied by the consolation and aid it imparts here, and the glorious hopes it reveals hereafter. He then follows up this military metaphor, evolving it into a kind of spiritual allegory, in which he compares the spiritual arms with which the Christian ought to be furnished with the panoply of the Greeks.

11. τοῦ Θεοῦ] i. e. as it were supplied by God, just as the πανοπλία of the ancients (on which see Montfauc. Antiq. Expl. vol. iv. p. 21.) was by the monarch, or the state. Στήναι (to withstand, oppose) is properly applied to persons, but metaphorically to things, when closely connected with persons. Μεθοδ. must, in this context, be regarded as a military term, denoting manœuvres; especially as in some passages cited by the Commentators μέθοδοι and τέχναι are used as synonymous. See supra iv. 14. and Note.

— τοῦ Διαβόλου.] I have in Rec. Syn. shown that it is in vain many recent Commentators endeavour to exclude all notion of Diabolical agency, by explaining Διαβ. to mean an adversary; since, when taken in conjunction with what follows, and what we find in other parts of Scripture, we cannot but recognise a reference to the great Author of Evil, and consequently a proof of his personality and power. There may, however, be a reference, though only a subordinate one, to the arts of malicious adversaries; not only Jews and heathens, but also those of the false Judaizing teachers.

12. ὅτι—ἡ πάλη.] Literally, "for to us the contest is not with," &c. Πάλη is properly a gymnastic term; but the Apostle often unites military with agonistic metaphors; and here the agonistic is not less suitable than the military. Though the Philological Commentators have failed to exemplify this, I can refer to a similar passage of Max. Tyr. Diss. v. 9. vol. i. 79. Ed. Reisk. where we have mention of Socrates wrestling with Melitus, with bonds, and poison: next the philosopher Plato, wrestling with a tyrant's anger, a rough sea, and the greatest dangers; then Xenophon, struggling with the prejudices of Tisaphernes, the snares of Ariæus, the treachery of Meno, and royal machinations: and, lastly, Diogenes, struggling with adversaries even more formidable, namely, poverty, infamy, hunger, and cold. Also Ælian V. H. ix. 41. says of Pausanias, who was stoned to death in the temple of Minerva, διεπάλασε τῷ Ἰλμῳ.

At αἷμα καὶ σάρκα sub. μόνον, "merely human enemies," ἀνθρώπων ὁμοιοπαθεῖς ἡμῖν καὶ ἰσοδυνάμους, as Theophyl. explains; namely, as opposed to Dæmoniacal foes. See Matt. xvi. 17. and Gal. i. 16. So Heb. ii. 14. πάλη πρὸς σάρκα. That Dæmoniacal opponents are adverted to is clear by the force of the antithesis, as also from the τὰ βέλη τοῦ πονηροῦ at v. 16. By τὰς ἀρχάς—τὰς ἐξουσίας, the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, must be meant (by an anthropopathia frequent in the case of good angels) the various orders of evil angels (as is plain from the τοῦ Διαβόλου in the preceding verse) who had long revolted from, and been in opposition to, God and his kingdom. See Rom. viii. 38. and Note. The words πρὸς τοὺς κοσμ. τ. σκ. τ. αἰ. τ. are by some recent Commentators supposed to refer to the Jewish rulers. See, however, Rec. Syn. It should seem that they are merely meant to designate more particularly the fore-mentioned evil angels; and show how they are connected with this world, and are enabled to oppose the supporters of the truth; namely, as being the Rulers and directors of the spiritual darkness of this world; namely, of those who uphold ignorance and vice in this world. Κοσμοκ. is a strong term, properly used of the Emperors of Rome, the Kings of Persia, and other powerful monarchs. So Satan is in John xii. 31. called ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, and examples of this use are adduced by Wets. from the Rabbinical writers. Irenæus, too, says, Διάβολον, ὃν καὶ κοσμοκράτορα καλοῦσιν, plainly alluding to the present passage, and consequently confirming the common interpretation.

The next words πρὸς τὰ πνευμ., &c. must be regarded in the same light as the preceding clause, and are, I think, explanatory of what was there said; τῆς πονηρ. being exegetical of τοῦ σκότους. Thus τὰ πνευμ. is rightly explained as equivalent to τὰ πνεύματα; which is confirmed by the Syr. Version. There is, I conceive, an ellipsis of τάγματα, suggested by the foregoing imagery. Τῆς πονηρίας is, by Hebraism, for πονηρὰ.

— ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ.] Of these words the sense is disputed. See Recens. Synop. Some would supply πράγμασι, i. e. in things relating to heaven and the Gospel; which sense is ably maintained by Chandl. Perhaps, however, there is no sufficient reason to abandon the common interpretation, by which the ellipsis is supposed to be μέρεσι, designating (according to the opinions of the Jews) the abode of those spirits in the aerial regions, and before mentioned supra ii. 2, where see Note.

13. τῇ ἡμ. τῇ πον.] i. e. the day of persecution and temptation. See v. 16. The concluding στῆναι, as antithetically opposed to the ἀντιστ. before, must denote "to stand triumphant over, survive the contest." So Thucyd. v. 102. καὶ ὕμιν τὸ μὲν εἶξαι εὖθὺς ἀνέλπιστον, μετὰ δὲ τοῦ δρωμένου ἐτι καὶ στῆναι ἐλπίς ὀρθῶς, where see my Note, and Note on 2 Cor. iv. 8. Perhaps the Apostle had in view Ps. 20. 8. (Heb.) "Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God. They are brought down, and fallen; but we are risen, and stand upright." Where the Sept. has ἀνέστημεν καὶ ἀνορθώθημεν. But the true sense of στῆναι, I think, that expressed by Pisc. and Gigeus, stitimus (or stamus) immoti et victores. See Josh. 7, 12. Dan. 7. 4. The next word ὑμῶν is exegetical of the preceding, and it is well rendered by Tirin. constitimus. It would have been better rendered, in the Greek, by ὁρθοὶ ἱστάμεθα. Κατεργ. is not well rendered "having done, effected, or accomplished [all things]." It is well explained by Beza, Zanch., Kypke, Wets., Koppe, Schleus., and Wahl, "having conquered all our enemies," (neut. for masc.) namely, those above adverted to.

14. The Apostle repeats for the third time this exhortation, and that in order to develop the nature of the duty, by tracing its various parts. In the accommodation of the figure we may observe admirable skill and address. Στήτε signifies "stand to your arms!" the first thing soldiers learn. Περιζωσάμενοι, for περιζ. τ. ὁ. ὑ. ἐ. ἀ. ὡς ζωστήρι, or περιζώματα. There is an allusion to the belts, with which the flowing vests of the Orientals required to be girded up for any active employment.

— ἐν ἀληθείᾳ] "truth and sincerity," true and sincere belief, the bracer up and support of religious constancy. Similar metaphors occur in Philo Jud. and Josephus. By δικ. must here be meant the constant practice of the moral and Christian virtues, which would be the surest safeguard against the calumnies of Pagan adversaries; and it would also be the best internal support, and far more potent than the nil conscire sibi of the heathen Poets.

15. καὶ ὑποδησάμενοι—εἰρήνης.] Of this difficult passage the most probable interpretations are detailed in Rec. Syn., where, I think, it has been fully shown that the following is the true sense of the passage: "And [like as soldiers have their feet shod with sandals armed with iron, as a preparation, or defence, against the roughness, and a security against the slipperiness, or miriness of the roads,] so do ye arm yourselves against the slippery temptations of your Christian course, by being, as it were, shod with the preparation and defence supplied by the Gospel of peace (i. e. which alone gives peace), even the strong motives to constancy in religion and a holy life, supplied by the Gospel."

16. ἐπὶ πᾶσιν] "above all," or rather upon or over all. At ἐν ᾧ δυνήσεσθε—σβέσαι there is no incongruity, as some suppose, in the metaphor. The βέλη πεπυρ. (more properly termed βέλη πυρφόρα, or οἷστοι πυρφόροι; though πεπυρωμένα βέλη occurs in Apollodorus) were slender arrows of cane, to which ignited combustible matter was attached, which when shot would set on fire wood-work, tents, &c. Now it was the aim of the persons so assailed to intercept and quench these burning arrows. And that could by nothing be so effectually done as by the use of their shields; which would extinguish them,—since they were easily put out by a sudden jerk, and required only some soft substance on which to fix themselves. Of course, the term will here denote sharp trials, and strong temptations. With the ὑποδὸν τῆς πίστεως I would compare Ps. xviii. 35. ὑπερασπισμοὶ σωτηρίας and Æschyl. Ag. 1412. ἀσπίς ὄρατος.

17. τοῦ σωτηρίου.] for τῆς σωτηρίας, as in Is. xxxviii. 11. Ps. lxxxiv. 7. Luke ii. 30; iii. 6. Acts xxviii. 28. Here it must mean the hope of salvation, as in 1 Thess. v. 8. ἐνδυσάμενοι περικεφαλαίαν ἐλπίδα σωτηρίας. Τοῦ Πνεύμ. must (notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say) denote the Holy Spirit: and ῥῆμα Θεοῦ, denote both the revelation of the Holy Spirit to man in the Scriptures of the O. T., and also in the promulgation of the Gospel of Christ with such glorious power in that age. Now this would supply the best offensive weapon against all the attacks of adversaries, as supplying abundant matter to refute every objection.

18. By engrafting this on what immediately preceded, the Apostle intends to suggest the mode by which the sword of the Spirit can be made effectual. The prayer must, however, be real prayer; supplicatory, if need be, but always hearty and fervent, and persevered in to the utmost (which is meant by ἐν πάσῃ προσκ.), at all seasons, early and late. To earnest application for spiritual aid under various trials, they are to add prayers for the support and welfare of Christians in general.

19. The λόγος is interpreted by some of a power of speaking; by others of permission to speak; by others of opportunity to speak. The second sense seems preferable, especially as the third is, in some measure, contained in it. And it is confirmed by the parallel passage of Col. iv. 3. ἵνα Θεὸς ἀνοίξῃ ἡμῖν θύραν τοῦ λόγου. The ἐν ἀνοίξει—παρρησία should, I think, be rendered “by opening my mouth with freedom.” Probably St. Paul expected soon to be brought to a public hearing, and then to be permitted to vindicate both himself and the Gospel. On μυστ. τοῦ εὐαγγ., see Note on 1 Cor. ii. 7, Abp.

Whately's Essay on the difficulties of St. Paul's writings, p. 209, and Hooker's Ecl. Pol. p. 11.

20. πρεσβεύω] i. e. “I act the part of πρεσβεὺς, or ambassador.” So ὑπὲρ Χρ. πρεσβεύομεν at 2 Cor. v. 20. In ἐν ἀλύσει there is thought to be an allusion to the custom of all nations, to hold inviolate the person of an Ambassador. Whenever ἀλ. is used with ἐν, it has a generic sense, to denote chains, or, figuratively imprisonment. So here the Peschito Syr. renders, “in catenis.” And even Wakefield, who so often errs by inserting an a where no Article is expressed in the Greek, here renders “in chains.” The word is often in the Versions of the O. T. by Sym., Aquila, and Theod., used in the singular to express the Hebrew terms in the plural.

21. τί πράσσω.] This is exegetical of the τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ scil. πράγματα before. It is a popular phrase occurring also in 1 Sam. xvii. 18. Ὁ ἀγαπητὸς should not be rendered “a beloved,” as in almost all our Versions; for that is neglecting the Article; nor “the beloved,” with Wakef.; though the common Version so renders at Rom. xvi. 12. Περσίδα τὴν ἀγαπητήν, and 3 John i. Γαῖω τῷ ἀγαπητῷ. It is clear from Rom. xvi. 12. that the Article cannot be meant to mark notoriety, or celebrity, and therefore the cannot be tolerated. It is, I conceive, used for the possessive pronoun. Thus in Philem. 1 & 2 our common Version rightly renders Φιλ. τῷ ἀγαπητῷ and Ἀπ. τῷ ἀγ. by “our beloved Philemon, and our beloved Appia.” In fact, there is in these cases an ellipsis of ἐμοῦ or ἡμῶν, which is supplied in Acts xv. 25. Rom. xvi. 5, 8 & 9. 2 Pet. iii. 15. The pronoun belongs to the subst. ἀδελφός or ἀδελφὴ omitted, which is expressed at 2 Pet. iii. 15, and the present passage. Thus at Rom. xvi. 12. and 3 John 1 & 2. the pronoun should be supplied, as is done in the Peschito Syr.

23. ἀγάπῃ μετὰ πίστι.] i. e. faith united with love and charity; in which, it seems, they had been deficient. See Gal. v. 6, and comp. 2 Pet. i. 5.

24. ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ.] With sincerity and truth.

This is evidently one of the later Epistles of St. Paul; though on its precise date no little difference of opinion exists. Some fix it to A. D. 58; others as late as 65. The most probable date seems to be that of 62; since it was evidently written during St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. The church of Philippi was founded by St. Paul, A. D. 50 (Acts xvi. 9—14); and that he again visited them in 57, we learn from Acts xx. 6. They had been all along very liberal in imparting to him of their substance; and had, on various occasions, aided him with money, (though but a poor community) that he might be enabled to carry on his great designs for the evangelization of the principal cities of Greece and Asia Minor, without incurring the imputation of interested motives, by becoming chargeable to his converts. Accordingly, when they heard of his imprisonment at Rome, they evinced the same good dispositions towards him as formerly; and sent Epaphroditus, one of their Presbyters, with a present for the relief of his necessities, which, it appears from the Epistle, were great. The more immediate purpose of this Epistle (sent on the return of Epaphroditus) was to return thanks to the Philippians for their kindness. That it was written during his imprisonment at Rome, is plain from i. 7. 13. iv. 22.; and from various intimations in it, (i. 12. ii. 26.) it appears to have been written towards the end of his first imprisonment, and consequently at the close of 62, or the early part of 63. Of this Epistle the genuineness has never been doubted. The purpose of it was to express to the Philippians his feelings of gratitude for their bounty, and his esteem and affection for their zeal and Christian virtue: and at the same time to confirm them in the pure faith of Christ, to caution against Judaizing teachers, and encourage them to continue to walk worthy of their high calling. The general character of the Epistle is that of unqualified commendation, in a style singularly animated and affectionate.

C. I. 1. ἐπισκόποις.] On this word see the Note on Acts xx. 17. 28. and especially the elaborate Note of Whitby, who (inter alia) observes: "The Greek and Latin Fathers with one consent declare that the Apostle here calls their Presbyters their Bishops." So Chrys., Theodoret, Œcum., and Theophyl., among the Greeks, and, among the Latins, St. Jerome, Pseudo-Ambrosius, Pelagius, and Primasius; and that not only for the above-mentioned reasons, that "there could be but one Bishop, properly so called, in one city;" but for another, alleged by them all, viz. that τῶς ἐκωνάουσι τοῖς ὀνόμασι, "then the names were common to both orders," the Bishops being called Presbyters, and the Presbyters Bishops. "And this (Theodoret says) is manifest in this place, because he adds here Deacons to the Bishops, making no mention of their Presbyters." (Whitby.) Notwithstanding what has been so confidently asserted, that there was no distinction between Presbyters and Bishops until some time after the Apostolical age; the profoundly learned Bingham, in his Eccl. Antiq. L. ii. 1. seems to have satisfactorily proved the existence of a power in the Apostolical age itself, equivalent to that of Bishops; and, in the next age to the Apostolical, both the exercise of the power, and the assumption of the title of Bishop. The term, it may be observed, was at length appropriated to denote, what we understand by Bishop, and was probably so employed with reference to Is. lx. 17. Sept. δώσω τοὺς ἀρχοντας σου ἐν εἰρήνῃ, καὶ τοὺς ἐπισκόπους σου ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ. See more in Note on Acts xx. 17. 28.

intercession. Τὴν δέξιν may be rendered "the, or my supplication." The meaning is, that whenever he offers up supplication for them, he offers it up for them always with joy. This is confirmed by the Syr. Version.

5. ἐπὶ τῇ κοιν. ὑ. ε. τὸ εὐαγγ.] On the sense of these words no little difference of opinion exists. The ancient, and some eminent modern Expositors (as Eder, Michael, Wells, Pyle, Hardy, Storr, and Wakef.), assign the following as the sense, "for your liberality in contributing to the furtherance of the Gospel;" citing in proof of this signification of κοιν. several passages, the most apposite of which is 2 Cor. ix. 13. ἀπλότης τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτούς. That, however, will only justify the use as applied to persons, not things. In fact, such a sense would be (I agree with Mr. Scott) neither sufficiently important, nor in the Apostle's manner. It is better, with most eminent modern Expositors (as Crell, Sclater, Whitby, Grot., Menoch., Heins., Macknight, Valckn., Rosenm., Scott, and Vater, supported by the authority of the Syr. Vulg., and other ancient Versions, and also nearly all our English Translators), to suppose the sense to be "for your participation in [the blessings of] the Gospel." This signification of κοινωνία is far more frequent than the other, and needs no proof. It is, indeed, urged that thus εἰς will here be used for ἐν; which would be rather harsh. Yet many examples of that use may be seen in Schleus. and Wahl. In the present case, however (and in most of the examples adduced), there is not so much a use of εἰς for ἐν, as a blending of two modes of expression. Thus the sense will be, "that you have been converted to the Gospel, and are become partakers of its blessings;" implying that they had been constant in the profession of the faith; which Schleus. and others wrongly make the only sense, though it can only be a secondary one. "Ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμ. (scil. τῆς κοινωνίας ὑμῶν), refer to and are exegetical of πάντοτε μετὰ χαρὰς τὴν δέξιν π., q. d. "And this I have done, from," &c.

6. πεποιθὼς, &c.] This states the grounds of his gladness in praying for them. "Ἔργον ἀγαθόν, may be understood either of faith in embracing the Gospel; or, of reformation and sanctification by the Gospel; which is supported by the absence of the Article at ἀγαθόν, and is more agreeable to the next words. In ἐπιτελέσει there is a significatio prægians: the full sense being, "will go on with it unto, and finish it at," &c., i. e. "will carry it forwards till it," &c. See the Note on a kindred passage of 1 Cor. i. 8. ὅς βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς ἕως τέλους, &c., where the end of our mortal course and the coming of Jesus Christ are considered as the same; the period of death and that of judgment being, to all practical purposes, the same.

7. καθὼς ἐστὶ—ὑμᾶς.] Of this verse, which involves no little obscurity, Abp. Newc. offers the following version: "As it is right for me to think this of you all, because I have you in mine heart, and because both in my bonds, and in my defence of myself, and my confirmation of the Gospel, I have you all joint-partakers of the favour bestowed on me." But, according to this interpretation, no tolerable sense can be assigned to συγκοιν. μου τῆς χάριτος; for to explain it, as he does, of participation, by sympathy, in the favour extended towards him, is not a little frigid. And this repetition ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινου of ἔχω ὑμᾶς is exceedingly harsh. As to the common version here, it cannot be justified, since it compels us to adopt a most harsh explanation of συγκ. μου τῆς χάριτος. In short, much of the perplexity in this passage has been occasioned by connecting ἐν τε δεσμοῖς—εὐαγγ. with the words following, when, in fact, they belong to those preceding; though they are in some measure parenthetical. And so they were taken by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, and, in modern times, by Mackn. and Heinrichs. In the words following, συγκοινωνοὺς μου τῆς χάριτος πάντας ὑμᾶς ὄντας there is, as it were, a resumption of the construction, interrupted by the ἐν τε τοῖς δεσμοῖς—εὐαγγ., q. d. διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμᾶς ὄντας συγκοινωνοὺς μου τῆς χάριτος, which must be repeated, with a slight change of sense in καρδιά. The Apostle means to say, that it was but natural and proper (Acts iv. 19.), that he should be thus affected towards them (with reference to πάντοτε—τὴν δέξιν ποιούμενος at v. 4.) making continual and joyful remembrance of them in his prayers, because he had them in his mind at all times, in the most trying situations, "sive (to use the words of Heinrichs) sit in carceris solitudine, sive extra carcerem, sit coram iudicibus;" and because he had them in his heart (bore a heartfelt affection for them; see 2 Cor. vii. 3. and Note), "inasmuch as they were all co-partakers with him of the grace bestowed on him, and acting on the same principles; which constituted the strongest of all bonds of affection." "The Apostle (says Wolf) felt a peculiar affection for the Philippians from seeing them partakers of the same benefits from God, which he himself gratefully acknowledged." And this is especially to be numbered among the several arguments to φιλαδελφία or brotherly love, as appears from Eph. iv. 4. seqq.

8. γάρ.] This refers to the διὰ τὸ ἔχειν ὑμᾶς in the preceding verse, q. d. "[I say I have you in my mind, and bear you in my heart]; for," &c. On μάρτ. see Rom. i. 9. and Note. Ἐπιπ. is a stronger term than ἔχειν ἐν καρδίᾳ.

9—11. Here there is a sort of compendium, by specimen, of the prayers which he is accustomed to address to God on their behalf. By ἀγάπη is meant, not "love to himself," as some Expositors, ancient and modern, suppose; but, in its most extensive sense, love of God, his religion, commands, &c., and of man for God's sake; in fact, the principle of love so finely described in 1 Cor. xiii. Ἐπιγν. denotes knowledge generally, but especially of divine things. So the Syr. adds spirituali. Διστ. signifies that quick perception of truth or falsehood, right or wrong, which corresponds to what we call judgment. The Apostle here prays that their knowledge and understanding may keep pace with increase of love and affection; since, by that means, Christian love produces better fruits. They had, it seems, been from the first docile, well-disposed, and kind-hearted. But, as would appear from the words following, their simplicity had been somewhat abused by crafty false teachers, chiefly Judaizers, &c.; for to these there seems an allusion. So Theophyl.: ἵνα μὴ ἀπλῶς πάντας ἀγαπᾶτε, ἀλλὰ μετὰ δοκιμασίας, καὶ γνώσεως, καὶ κρίσεως. And Theodoret: Εὐχομαι δὲ καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην ὑμῶν ἐπιδόσειν λαμβάνειν αἰεὶ, καὶ γνώσεως ὑμᾶς ἐμφορεῖσθαι, καὶ διακρίσεως· ἐνταῦθα δὲ τοὺς ἀπατεῶνας ἐκείνους ἠνέχματο, καὶ διὰ τῆς εὐχῆς τὸ πρακτεῖν αὐτοὺς διδάσκει, ὥστε γινώσκειν τίς μὲν ἀληθῆς διδασκαλία· τίς δὲ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐστερημένη. The above view I find supported by the opinion of the learned and acute Pierce in loco.

10, 11. δοκιμάζειν.] This refers to the result or effect of knowledge and discernment, in that experience, which often enables us to decide at once on the comparative excellence of things:

"Which (says Milton) doth attain

To something like prophetic strain."

The expression δοκίμ. τὰ διαφέροντα may signify, as some explain, to approve (i. e. to put to proof and ascertain by trial) the things which excel, i. e. the excellence of any thing. But, from what goes before, it seems rather to mean (as the best Expositors are agreed) "to distinguish between, and, after examination, decide upon things which differ;" a signification of δοκίμ. occurring in Rom. ii. 18. 1 Cor. iii. 13. and confirmed by Theodoret. St. Paul seems to have especial reference (as many eminent Commentators suppose), to the genuine Gospel, as compared with the adulterated one, preached by the false teachers, Judaizers, and others. Εἰλικ. has reference to purity of faith and doctrine; ἀπρόσκ. to integrity and rectitude of conduct. So Acts xxiv. 16. ἀπρόσκοπον συνειδήσιν ἔχειν. Thus it is nearly equivalent to ἀμεμπτοι at ii. 15. Εἰς ἡμέραν Χρ. must denote the end of their Christian course. See Note supra v. 6. The words πεπληρ. κ. δ. are a further development of the idea contained in the preceding clause, and represent the good works as being abundant as well as excellent; and thereby evincing the purity of the tree of faith which produced them. By διὰ Ἰ. Χ. it is hinted that these works are, however, only the effects of his grace, and accepted through his mediation. Εἰς δόξ. κ. ἔ. Θ., "would redound to the glory of Christ and the recommendation of his religion."

For καρπῶν—τῶν several MSS. of the Western recension and some Versions have καρπὸν—τόν, which was preferred by Beng., Storr, and Heins., and has been received into the text by Griesb. and Knapp: but without sufficient reason; since the use of the singular seems to have arisen from an inattention to the idiom of the Latin language, by which the word fructus rarely occurs in the plural in a metaphorical sense. As to the other Versions, they are chiefly such as usually follow the Vulgate; and the MSS. are such as Latinize. Not to mention that ω and ο are perpetually confounded. The common reading, too, is more agreeable to the style of the N. T. (see James iii. 17.) and is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version. And although καρπὸν—τόν be the more difficult reading, and on that account has been adopted,—yet even that rule is not applicable, where a manifest violation of propriety is involved.

12—14. So far from his imprisonment, and other trials and afflictions, proving (as they might apprehend) obstructions to the progress of the Gospel, he declares that they have conducted rather to its promotion. Ἐλήλ., for ἀπέβησεν, "cessit in," "have tended to;" as Mark v. 26. The words ὥστε τοὺς δεσμούς, &c. are, I think, meant to intimate the manner in which this furtherance to the Gospel had arisen; ὥστε—γενέσθαι being put for εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι, and that equivalent to ἐν τῷ γενέσθαι; namely, by his imprisonment being publicly known, together with the cause of it—even the preaching of a religion so full of hope and consolation to men. Besides that persecution naturally *further*s the cause it is intended to suppress, and courageous endurance of persecution for religion's sake re-

— ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ.] Πρ. is by some supposed to mean the camp or quarters of the Prætorians; by others, the Palace called Prætorium, being the residence of the military Governor of Rome, the commander of the Prætorian bands, the body guards of the Emperor. The sense seems to be: “to those of the Prætorian bands, and to all other persons.” Yet see Pierce, who ably defends the common version, and the other interpretation.

16, 17. These verses are explanatory of the preceding: v. 16. of the τινὲς μὲν, &c., and v. 17. of the τινὲς δὲ, &c. Though in several MSS. of the Western recension, Versions, and Fathers, the verses are transposed; which method has been approved by most Critics, and adopted by Griesb., Knapp, Vater, and Heinrichs. But without sufficient reason; for though the transposed order is more agreeable to Classical usage (by which μὲν is referred to the nearer, and δὲ to the more remote, and is found in 2 Cor. iii. 16.), yet the other is more agreeable to Scriptural usage. And, indeed, the usual position is the more likely to have been adopted by St. Paul, as being the more popular and natural one; by which the placing of the two kinds of preachers would correspond to that in v. 15. This is much confirmed by 2 Tim. ii. 20. (adduced by Rinck), where ἄ μὲν has reference to what precedes, ἄ δὲ to what follows. Such, too, I find is the view entertained by Pierce, who thinks the common order is supported by the context; “for (adds he) both in the verse before and in the verse after these, i. e. vv. 15, 18, he speaks of these two sorts; and as he in both places mentions those who acted out of envy first, it seems very probable he observed the same order in the 16th and 17th verses that come between the other.”

15. This and the ensuing verses indicate the existence of a party at Rome (like that at most other places where Paul preached the Gospel) hostile to him. These are supposed to have been Judaizers, who (to use the words of Scott) “concealed part of their sentiments, and preached the substance of the Gospel, in order to form a party under their influence, and in opposition to the Apostle and his friends; that so they might gradually impose the Mosaic law on the Gentile converts.” They were, in fact, worldly-minded persons,—to whom the humbling doctrines of the Gospel preached by Paul would be unacceptable. Nay, they must have been, in some measure, insincere in their profession of the Gospel. Thus there were (we find by the Apostle's words) two parties of those who preached the word; one party actuated, in what they did, by envy of Paul's popularity, and by contentiousness, δι' ἔριν (for ἐξ ἐρίδος or ἐξ ἐριθείας of the next verse: like the οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας at Rom. ii. 8.; others δι' εὐδοκίαν, out of good-will and love to man (especially Paul) for God's sake, as opposed to a party spirit.

— οὐχ ἄγνῳς] “not from pure motives, but those of selfishness and contention;” implying, more or less, a want of sincerity in the profession of the Gospel, as is plain from the ἐν προφάσει at v. 18. The words οἰόμενοι—μὲν are usually supposed to mean, “They are desirous to add yet more affliction to that of my confinement, by strengthening the hands of my adversaries.” But the ancient and many modern Expositors take the sense to be, “They are desirous to bring upon me severity of treatment, in addition to confinement.” Both senses were probably intended, since either motive may have actuated different persons, or even the same persons at different times. Peirce here recognises an opposition between οἰόμενοι and εἰδότες. Ἐξ ἀγάπης, out of love [to me and to the Gospel]. For those who really loved the Gospel could not but love Paul, as being appointed for its defence. Κείμεαι means, “am placed where I am;” q. d. “appointed to this post,” or “am ordained to this ministry.” So 1 Thess. iii. 3. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ κείμεθα.

18—19. τί γάρ; scil. διαφέρει; q. d. “not to enlarge on the motives of either class of persons.” The πλὴν is not well rendered “nevertheless,” or “notwithstanding.” It is, I conceive, put for πλὴν ὅτι, which is found in several MS. and Fathers, but doubtless from a gloss. The sense (as Grot. points out) is “Suffice it to say.” Προφάσει, “with a pretended zeal;” corresponding to the οὐχ ἄγνῳς at v. 16. See also, 1 Cor. v. 8.

— χαίρω καὶ χαρ.] There is no occasion to stumble, as some do, at the Apostle's rejoicing in the spread of error; since we are not told that the avowed doctrines of the persons in question were erroneous, but only that their motives were not pure. At all events, there would be in any case reason to rejoice at the Gospel being made known to the Heathens. Σωτηρ., though generally understood of salvation, may, with Chrys., Theodoret, Menoch, Zanch., Peirce, Newc., and almost all the recent Commentators, confirmed by the Syriac Version, be interpreted of temporal deliverance or welfare. So 2 Cor. i. 6. ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας. Yet the words [διὰ] ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύμ. Ἰ. Χρ. are more in favour of the other interpretation. To remove this difficulty, the best course will be to take σωτηρ. in the most general sense of the word, of benefit, welfare (as in Acts xxvii. 34. and often), which may then be understood in the two senses of temporal and of spiritual benefit; the former as adverted to in διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δέσεως (comp. 2 Cor. i. 11. and Acts xii. 5.), the latter in ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἰ. Χρ., which must (notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say) mean, “by the supply of the Holy Spirit of Christ [procured by our prayers].” See Chrys. and Theophyl. and Gal. iii. 5. ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα. Comp. also 2 Cor. ix. 10. The Spirit is said to be of Christ, as being procured by him. See John xvi. 7. And that Christ is considered as the bestower of the Spirit, is plain from 2 Cor. iii. 17, 18. (see also John i. 16.), though, as he proceeds from the Father and the Son (see Matt. iii. 16. John xv. 26.), he is often called Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ.

20. ἀποκαρὰ.] “anxious expectation,” as in Rom. viii. 19. “Ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχ., i. e. “that in no respect shall I have reason to be ashamed [by being frustrated in my endeavours], but shall rise superior to all my difficulties.” See Theod. and Schleusn. The word is so used in 1 Cor. x. 8, and 1 John ii. 28. To show that he seeks not his own glory, in any success, he adds, μεγαλυνθ. ὁ Χρ. Ἐν τῷ σώματι is more energetic than ἐν ἐμοὶ would have been, since martyrs and saints are said to glorify God “in their bodies.” See John xxi. 19. 1 Cor. vi. 20.

21. ἐμοὶ γὰρ—κέρδος.] The γὰρ has reference, I conceive, to a clause omitted; q. d. “[And whether one or the other shall befall, is alike to me] for,” &c. On the sense of the words following, difference of opinion exists. The interpretation most generally adopted is that originally propounded by Airay, and afterwards recommended by Gataker, and adopted by Peirce, and, after him, by most Interpreters down to Valpy; who maintain that the meaning is (the same as in the latter clause of the preceding verse) that “both in life and death Christ is his gain;” i. e. that his death and life are alike consecrated to Christ, as in Gal. ii. 2, Χριστὸς being considered as the subject of both members, and κέρδος the predicate of both, and the construction being as in Heb. vii. 4. Yet, after all, it may be doubted whether there was any sufficient reason to forsake the interpretation of the antient and most modern Expositors, well expressed in the common version. Nor is it any sufficient objection to it to urge (with Pierce) that “thus the Apostle only clears away one part of his assertion, and says nothing of the other;” for in an acute dictum like the present, it were injudicious to demand a strict logical correspondence of the second member to the first. And, indeed, as Heinrichs observes, “Paulus non ad accuratorem dirigere solet sententias.” Not to say, with Dodd., that “the proposed interpretation would destroy the antithesis, which, in so antithetical a writer as St. Paul, would be very uncritical.” In laying down the sense, we must allow something for the sacrifice of strictness of expression to point. The sense is undoubtedly as follows: “For my life [if I live] will be devoted to the service of Christ, and [if I die] death will be a gain to me, [since I shall be released from the miseries of this wicked world.]” According to this interpretation, τὸ ζῆν is for ἡ ζωὴ μου; a view of the sense supported by the Pesch. Syr. Translator. Render literally: “For my life is Christ: and if I die, a gain is it to me.” See also Chrys., Theophyl., and Theodoret. On the sentiment, several passages are here quoted from the ancient authors, where death is spoken of as gain; and many others are adduced by me in Recens. Syn. from Ælian, Plato, Soph., and Joseph. One must here suffice, Joseph. p. 676. 31. Huds. κέρδος δ’ εἰ θνήσκειν, τὴν συμφορὰν τὸ ζῆν ποιοῦνμενοι.

22. εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν—γνωρίζω.] Here, again, is an obscurity (arising, as often, from extreme brevity) which has occasioned variety of interpretation. Mr. Valpy thinks that γνωρίζω is to be referred to both parts of the sentence; and that τί is here used for πότερον, utrum: rendering, “Whether to live in the flesh is profitable to me, and whether of the two I should choose, I know not.” But this, I apprehend, is doing violence to the construction. The ancient, and the best modern Expositors are, with reason, agreed that the εἰ δὲ means quod si. But if; and the sense is well laid down by Chrys. as follows: “I said that to die would be gain to me; but if my living in the flesh be profitable [for the work of the ministry], verily which to choose I know not.” And so Theodoret, and, of the moderns, Luther, Zanch., Pisc., Wolf, Rosenm., Reichar, and Heinrichs. The term ἔργον is often used of the office of a Christian teacher, as 1 Thess. v. 13., and καρπὸς signifies fruit, utility. Thus Heinr. well renders καρπὸς ἔργου by fructus ex munere Apost. ad augendum religionem Christ. redundans. With respect to the καὶ, it is certainly not, as Heinr. imagines, pleonastic; but as the sentence is very elliptical, so, from pathos, there is an aposiopesis after ἔργον; and the καὶ signifies yea, or verily. Render, “But if my life in the flesh be useful for the ministry of the Gospel [what can I say]; verily, what I should choose, I know not.” Αἶψ. is for αἰρήσωμαι; on which see Win. Gr. Gr. § 25. 3. for γινώσκω is rare, but sometimes found in the later writers.

23. συνέχομαι δὲ ἐκ τῶν δύο.] The sense is, "for I am held in suspense between the two [motives following.]" Συνέχω, properly signifies "to be hemmed in." (See Note on Acts vii. 7, 58.) The ἐκ is for ὑπό. In ἀναλῦσαι there is a nautical metaphor; the word properly signifying to loose cable. Supply ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς from the antithetical ἐν τῇ σαρκί. See Note at Luke xii. 36, and compare 2 Cor. v. 8. See also Paley's remarks, in Hor. Paul, where, among other examples of the use of ἡττον and μᾶλλον as qualifying adjectives in the Comparative, he cites, what is most apposite to the present purpose, Isocr. p. 138. πολὺ μᾶλλον κρεῖττον, which I would observe will serve to defend the correctness of frag. xiv. of the Œdipus of Euripides from the unseasonable emendation of Heath and Musgrave; for the common reading and punctuation are as correct as can be desired.

Ἐκ τῶν ἀέλπτων ἡ χάρις μεῖζον βροτοῖς φανεῖσα μᾶλλον, ἢ τὸ προσδοκώμενον. The construction (which escaped the notice of those Critics) is: ἡ χάρις ἐξ ἀέλπτων φανεῖσα βροτοῖς, μεῖζον μᾶλλον (ἐστὶ) ἢ τὸ προσδοκώμενον. Thus we may dispense with the supplementum, brought in by Musgrave (within brackets) as the commencement of the next line. The above construction of ἐξ ἀέλπτων with φαν. is required by the context, and is confirmed by Herodo. i. 111. 3. ἐπεὶ τε δὲ ἀπονοστήσας ἐπέστη, οἳα ἐξ ἀέλπτων ἰδοῦσα ἡ γυνή, εἴρετο, &c. and Livii Hist. xxx. 10. 20. inter assiduas lacrimas unum quantumcunque ex insperato gaudium adfulserat. Μᾶλλον κρεῖσσον is called a pleonasm: but it is, in fact, a stronger mode of expression. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 457. 2. 458.

For γάρ, δὲ is rightly edited by Wets., Matth., Griesb., Knapp, Vat., and Tittm., from all the best MSS. and early Editions.

24. ἀναγκ. Supply ἐστὶ, "is more needful." "A strong expression (says Loesner) for præstat." And he adduces a passage of Philo, where it is followed by ὠφέλιμος, as if by way of explication. To which I would add another still more to the purpose, from Apollonii Epist. 55. οὐχ οἷός τε ἐγενόμην πλείονα γράψαι· καὶ οὐδὲ (I conj. οὐδὲν) εἶχον ἀναγκαιότερα τοῦτων. for χρησιμ. τοῦτων, "more absolutely expedient for you to know." So Thucyd. vii. 14. τοῦτων ἡδῶ μὲν ἂν εἶχον ὑμῖν ἕτερα ἐπιστέλλειν, οὐ μὲν-τοι χρησιμώτερα. As respects the sentiment, it is finely said by Seneca (cited by Wets.) "Bono viro vivendum est, non quamdiu juvat, sed quantum oportet. Ingentis animi est, alienâ causâ, ad vitam reverti," i. e. as it were to return back to life, and interest himself in its concerns; there being an allusion to the phrase reverti (i. e. redire) in gratiam, to be reconciled to. So reverti in Ovid Trist. iii. 7, 9. Et tamen ad Musas, quamvis nocuere, reverti.

25. καὶ τοῦτο πεποιθὼς, &c.] The sense seems to be, "And this I assuredly know, or feel assured of;" for τοῦτο and πεπ. must (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) be connected. "Ὅτι μενῶ καὶ συμπ. π. ὑ." The sense is: "that I shall remain [in this life], and continue with you all in the enjoyment of your society."

— εἰς τὴν ὑμῶν—πίστεως.] Of these words there have been various translations (see Pool and Wolf); most of which, I agree with Bp. Middl., are liable to the objection, that they disjoin προκοπὴν and χαρὰν, as if πιστ. did not depend on the former, as well as the latter; as may be inferred from the omission of the Article before χαρὰν. So supra v. 7. ἐν τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Accordingly, the learned Prelate well renders, "to promote your advancement and joy in the faith," i. e. for your religious improvement and your religious comfort. And so Zanch, Calvin, and Beausobre.

26. ἵνα τὸ καύχημα—ὑμᾶς.] The sense is, that your rejoicing, on account of Christ [and his Gospel], may be increased in me, by my return again to you."

27. Having said thus much of himself, the Apostle now adroitly turns the discourse to exhortation, showing how alone they can have this joy in the Lord. Of this elliptical use of μόνον, see Note on Gal. ii. 10.

— πολιτ. "conduct yourselves." See Note on Acts xxiii. 1. "Ἵνα εἴτε ἐλθὼν—στήκετε. Render, "So that, whether coming and visiting you [I may see], or being absent from you, and hearing of you, I may learn that ye stand fast," &c. Στήκ. ἐν ἐνὶ πν. is supposed to contain an agonistic metaphor, further developed in the next clause. The simple sense, however, is: "striving together strenuously for the furtherance of the Gospel;" to which the living worthy of it would not a little contribute.

28. καὶ μὴ πυτρόμενοι—ἀντικειμένων.] Expositors are here not agreed whether the πυτρ. is to be understood of terror at the cruel persecutions of the opponents of the Gospel (which is the common interpretation), or to be explained "being startled, and shaken from the faith by the sophisms and calumnies of your opponents, the Judaizers." See Zanch, Est., Locke, and Pierce. The latter sense, however, is too far-fetched to be admitted. The former is far more simple and natural. It is, besides, more agreeable to the ratio significationis of πύρεσθαι, which word is properly used of horses who take fright, and then is applied to men who are (to use the old English terms) afraid or scared. The above Expositors, indeed, rest much on the connection with the preceding words. But that, it may be observed, is not so close as they choose to represent it, by passing over the καὶ, which, according to their interpretation, ought not to be there; and instead of μή, ought to have been written οὐ. As it is, the syntax seems to be the very common one in St. Paul, of the Participle for the Verb. And, on account of the μή prohibitive, the verb must be in the Imperative. A view of the passage supported by the authority of the ancient Versions almost universally, and by the ancient Commentators.

With respect to the sense to be ascribed to the next words ἥτις αὐτοῖς—σωτηρίας, if the interpretation of Locke and Peirce be adopted, it may, with Mr. Valpy, be thus expressed: "which belief in Christianity, and perseverance in the faith, is to them an undoubted proof of your ruin, for they consider it as obstinacy in error; but to you it is an evidence of your salvation." See Pierce. This, however, I cannot but regard as a sense very frigid and jejune. It is better, with Rosen., Beza, and Heinr., to suppose that ἥτις is, by a grammatical enallage (frequent in the best Greek writers, as Thucydides), made to agree in gender with the predicate ἐνδειξις, when it ought, more accurately, to have agreed with the subject contained in the words preceding, i. e. which [freedom from terror.] Upon the whole, the true sense of this and the next verse seems to be that expressed by Abp. Newc. in the following paraphrase: "Which constancy, as it shows the truth of that Gospel which ye believe, is to your adversaries a proof that they deserve destruction for rejecting it, and for persisting in their vices; and is to you a proof that the God who now supports you will hereafter reward you."

II. 1. The Apostle now resuming his admonition at i. 27, proceeds to earnestly and affectionately exhort them to the performance of various duties,—as Christian humility, diligence in working out their salvation, and adorning the Gospel by their lives and example. There is great energy in the sentence; chiefly from its being composed of clauses commencing with εἰ, which particle (as Rosenm. remarks) does not imply doubt, but is strongly affirmative. It indeed obtains that force from a clause omitted; q. d. "If [as is certain] there be," &c. Παράκλησις, i. e. consolation under the sufferings endured for his sake; as supra i. 29; or, as others explain, "if I am to have any comfort in Christ respecting you." Παραμύθιον ἀγάπης denotes either the comfort arising from that love to God and man which is the sum and substance of the Gospel (see 1 Cor. xiii.), or the comfort arising from the pardon of our sins by Christ's love. See Scott. Κοινωνία πνεύμ. must be explained according to the preceding. It may (as the ancient and most modern Expositors suppose) mean "fellowship of the Spirit." See Note on Rom. xv. 30, and on 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Though, as there is no Article, almost all the recent Commentators, perhaps rightly, render it consensio or conjunctio animorum.

2. πληρ. μ. τ. χαρὰν ["fulfil ye my joy," i. e. give me full cause for rejoicing, or complete the joy I felt in converting you, and have since felt; namely, by cultivating the mutual agreement in doctrine, and concord of mind before enjoined. With respect to τὸ αὐτὸ φρον., and τὸ ἐν φρον., they are by Phot., Heinr., and Schleusn. supposed to be synonymous. And so they are conjoined in Polyb. 441. (cited by Wets.) λέγοντες ἐν καὶ ταὐτὸ πάντες. and Aristid. p. 569. ἐν καὶ ταὐτὸ φρονοῦντες. On the other hand, Grot., Kypke, Mich., Storr., and Rosenm., suppose that the former denotes consent in doctrine, the latter, social concord. Bp. Middleton, however, thinks that the Article before ἐν cannot be explained without supposing some kind of reference. This reference, he maintains, is to what immediately follows, μηδὲν κατ' ἐριθείαν ἢ κενοδοξίαν, as if the Apostle had said, "minding the one thing, viz. &c." "An interpretation (says he) favoured by the Vulg. id ipsum sentientes, Nihil per contentionem neque per inanem gloriam." But what principally, he thinks, confirms this opinion, is the construction of the sentence following, μηδὲν κατ' ἐριθείαν, which in having no verb assumes the form of a proverbial admonition, such as might be made a subject of reference. All this, however, seems not a little far-fetched, and straining a point to support a theory; which, after all, may be as well maintained in another way. What the Bp. calls "the principal confirmation of his opinion," is, I conceive, no confirmation at all; since the true ellip. in the next sentence is not ποιεῖτε, but ποιούντες, as was seen by the Peschito Syr. Translator, and many of the best Expositors. In fact, the clauses which follow, πληρώσατέ μου τὴν χαρὰν are all of them dependent upon it, being meant to show how they might complete his joy. And as to his interpretation being “confirmed by the Latin Vulgate,” that is not the case; since the Translators plainly read, not τὸ ἐν, but τὸ αὐτὸ, as also do several MSS., though doubtless from an emendation of those Critics who, like the learned Prelate, stumbled at the ἐν. The emendation, however, was a very ill-judged one; since thus not merely tautology would arise, but such a mode of expression as would be intolerable. As it is, we have a form of speaking not very usual, indeed, but capable of being accounted for. It should seem that the admonition to concord or unanimity is first propounded generally, in ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ φρον., and then especially, as resolved into its parts, i. e. τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγ. ἐχ. and σὺν ψυχῇ σκλ. ὄντες. With respect to τὸ ἐν φρον., the τὸ ἐν is, I conceive, for ἐν καὶ τὸ αὐτό; and thus the Article has a reference, though to a word omitted. It is plain that ἐν καὶ τὸ αὐτό is a stronger expression, and there is a climax.

3. μὴδὲν κατὰ ἐριθ. ἢ κενοδ.] This chiefly has reference to the former of the two sorts of agreement above mentioned, and alludes perhaps to the waywardness and vanity sometimes attendant on the possession of the higher Spiritual Gifts. See Gal. v. 26. 1 Cor. xii. xiii. xiv. The next words τῇ ταπειν., &c. suggest the best cure for these dispositions,—namely, a spirit of unaffected modesty, evinced in a disposition to “think others better than ourselves,” i. e. (with the limitation implied at 1 Cor. xiii. 7.) as far as plain facts will permit: and thus far τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλ. προηγούμενοι, Rom. xii. 10.

4. μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν—ἕκαστος.] This is commonly understood as an admonition against selfishness, and inculcating a disinterested spirit. And many similar moral maxims are adduced by Wets. The interpretation might also have been supported from Thucyd. vi. 12. τὸ ἑαυτῶν μόνον σκοπεῖν. Appian i. 380. τὸ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον σκόπει. Soph. Elect. 1114. τοῦμόν δ', οὐχὶ τοῦκείνου, σκοπῶ. But, considering what precedes and follows, it should seem that the words contain, not an injunction to a fresh duty, but an admonition (which might enable them better to perform what had been just enjoined) to modesty. It was for want of attending to the gifts and endowments of others, as well as their own, that so many gave way to vanity and spiritual pride. It is plain that μόνον is to be understood. The above view of the sense is not only adopted by many of the best modern Expositors (as Raphael, Michaelis, Kraus, Rosenm., Keil, and Heinr.) but by the ancient ones almost universally, as the very emendation σκοποῦντες, for σκοπεῖτε (for an emendation it is, though edited by Griesb., Knapp, Heinr., and Tittm.) attests. So Theodoret (after Chrys.) says that in these verses,

2, 3, 4, the Apostle inculcates moderation, and follows up his precept by placing before them the greatest example of humility, in Christ Jesus.

5. τοῦτο γὰρ—X. I.] Φρονεῖσθω is by recent Expositors regarded as used impersonally: but, in fact, it may be said to be put for φρόνημα ἔστω, understanding by φρόνημα disposition, way of thinking and acting. The expression must, of course, be especially meant of the disposition here especially adverted to, humility.

6. ὃς ἐν μορφῇ—Ἰσα Θεῷ.] “This passage is (says Doddr.) remarkable for the contrary uses that have been made of it in the controversy respecting our blessed Redeemer.” A full detail of the various interpretations may be seen in Rec. Syn. The ancient Expositors almost universally, and by far the greater part of the modern ones, are of opinion that ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχ. signifies “being in the form and nature of God,” i. e. being really God; μορφῇ being taken to denote, by metonymy, the φύσις and οὐσία, the nature and essence. And, indeed, when applied to God, the term can have no other meaning,—since the Deity has properly no form nor shape. Of this signification of μορφῇ several examples have been adduced both from the Classical writers and Josephus. So Plato says that God μένει ἀεὶ ἀπλῶς ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ μορφῇ. And Joseph. says that the heathens deified the worst passions εἰς Θεοῦ φύσιν καὶ μορφὴν ἀναπλάσαντες. That the Fathers took the word in this sense, appears from Suic. Thes. ii. 377, and Bp. Bull’s Defens. Fid. Nic. p. 37. seqq. Thus the sense will be, “subsisting in the real form of God, one with and equal to the Father,” as is ably evinced by the most eminent of the earlier modern Expositors, especially Bps. Pearson, Bull, and Burnet, and recently by Abp. Magee (on the Atonement, i. p. 71, and ii. 479.) Bp. Burgess, and others. Some considerable Commentators, however, (as Whitby, Ellis, Wolf, Carpz., and Mackn.) think the above view cannot be admitted,—since Christ, when he became man, could not divest himself of the nature of God. And with respect to the government of the world, we are, they say, led by what the Apostle tells us, Heb. i. 3, “to believe that he did not part even with that”; but in his divested state still upheld all things by the word of his power.” By the μορφῇ Θεοῦ, therefore, they understand that glorious form, “the visible glorious light in which the Deity is said to dwell, 1 Tim. vi. 16, and by which he manifested himself to the Patriarchs of old, Deut. v. 22, 24, which was commonly accompanied with a numerous retinue of angels, Ps. lxix. 17, and which is called the similitude of the Lord, Num. xii. 8, the face, Ps. xxxi. 16, the presence, Exod. xxxiii. 15, and the shape, John v. 37. This interpretation is, they think, supported by the term μορφῇ, here used, which signifies a person’s external shape, or appearance, and not his nature, or essence. But the learned Commentators seem here to confound the signification with the sense of a word. That μορφὴ has not properly the signification in question, essence, may be admitted; but that it was sometimes so used by the writers on philosophy and theism, is attested by the examples adduced by Elsn. and others. And its use here in the above sense is confirmed by what is elsewhere said in Scripture. Thus Heb. i. 3. the Son is similarly called χαράκτηρ τοῦ ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, "the express image of God's person;" evidently with reference to His nature and essence.

— οὐχ ἄρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ i. e. as the ancient Expositors generally, and most modern ones explain, "did not think it a robbing God of his glory to be," &c. Several Interpreters, indeed, ancient and modern, (as Theodoret, Rufin, Wolf, Wets., Abp. Newc., and Bp. Middl.) take the sense to be literally, "He did not esteem it a prey, a thing to be caught at, a great prize," meaning (as Abp. Newc. explains) "did not eagerly covet to be equal with God." But that interpretation presents a sense quite at variance with the context, and every way objectionable. And as to what the above Expositors say, that ἄρπαγμός is here put for ἄρπαγμα, that they merely take for granted. Abp. Newc., indeed, thinks this has been evinced by Wakefield from the genius of the Greek language. But unless the genius of the language be something different from the usus lingua, I must deny this. For after carefully examining all the words in — γμος (about a hundred) I find scarcely any instance of words in γμος being for the cognate form in γμα, when that form has a passive sense. Of a neuter there are some examples. But in at least four-fifths of the whole, an active sense in the — γμος is assigned by the Lexicons, of course agreeably to the usage of the best writers: and there is almost always a cognate form in — γμα, which has as regularly a passive sense. Now if such an extensive usage does not show the genius of the language, what does? In vain, too, does Abp. Newc. allege the rapina of the Vulg. in defence of his view. since that word, as it is well known, has an active as well as a passive force. And the Peschito Syr. translator evidently took it in the active sense; for ܠܡܫܠܡܐ, though rendered in the Latin Version rapina, yet signifies direptio, the act of usurpation, as it is explained in Schaaf's Lexicon. And the sense is found in three other passages of the N. T.

Thus the ancient and general interpretation, as above stated, may justly be regarded as the true one. I would render: "who being in the form of God (i. e. of the nature of God) thought it [as he justly might] no robbery to claim equality with God; and yet, nevertheless, emptied himself of," &c. In οὐχ ἡγήσατο we may recognise that sort of concessive sense, which not unfrequently belongs to such words as think, judge, &c., as used of what is thoroughly admitted and acknowledged, and of which no doubt can be entertained. So of the Jews our Lord says, John v. 39. "Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think [as ye justly may] that in them ye have everlasting life." The use of the word, in such cases, is subservient to argument, and may be especially observed in a train of reasoning, wherein the person arguing is sensible that he has the advantage. Thus it appears that the clause οὐχ ἄρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ is not a principal, but a secondary part of the sentence; the proposition mainly resting on the ὅς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων and ἐαυτὸν ἐκένωσε, and this clause serving to point the argument. And so Bp. Hall seems to have considered it, paraphrasing: "who being very God, and knowing it to be no presumption in him to equalize Himself to God the Father, yet voluntarily humbled and abased Himself."

By εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ is meant the being possessed of the same Divine attributes and perfections. "To which (remarks Scott) he was conscious of having a full right, without at all interfering with the honour due to the eternal Father." Thus the expression ἴσος here signifies "the same in nature;" and the ἴσα, though not, strictly speaking, put for ἴσων, is equivalent to it in sense. And no wonder; since ἴσα εἶναι τινι is for (κατ') ἴσα [μέρῃ] εἶναι, "to be at equal shares with, to be on an equal footing with, to be on an equality with." That ἴσα has sometimes this use, has been proved by many examples adduced by the Commentators. And if it be explained, with some, as Doddr. and Slade, "to be even as, like as God," equality is implied; for, as Mr. Holden observes, "since infinite attributes admit of no increase or diminution, he who is as God, or like as God, must be possessed of these attributes, and consequently possessed of every perfection entering into the very idea of God."

The scope of the whole passage is well expressed by Chrys., Theophyl., and Æcum. as follows: "When any one usurps any dignity, he is afraid to lay it down, lest he should lose it, as being not his own; but when any one has it by nature, he can very well disregard it, knowing that he has something which he cannot lose; and if he chooses to lay it down, he can take it up again." The general meaning, therefore, is: "The Son of God was not afraid to descend from his own dignity, since he had not this (namely, the being equal with God the Father) by usurpation, but knew it was his natural rank."

7. ἐκένωσεν "seipsum inanivit," as the Vulg. renders, emptied himself, divested himself [of his Divine natural glory] as the Pesch. Syr.; and, by implication, "se ipsum ad statum teneum depressit," and was content to be as the sun in eclipse, shorn of his beams. Μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, by taking the form of a servant, and by appearing on earth as one of no dignity or reputation, but of lowly condition." The words following should be rendered, "after having become like unto man," i. e. by assuming a human body; and they suggest (as the Greek Commentators remark) the Divinity of Jesus Christ, being meant to show the difference between Christ's former glorious and his present humble state. The ὁμοίωμ. however, imports not resemblance only, but real nature. See Note on Rom. viii. 3. ἐν ὁμοίωμ. σαρκὸς αἰ. and compare Heb. ii. 14.

8. σχῆμ. εὐρ. ὡς ἄνθρ.] i. e. Remaining what he was, he took what he was not; his nature was not changed, but he was changed, ἐν σχήματι, i. e. ἐν σαρκί. (Theophyl.) The ὡς is, I conceive, not put for tanquam (as many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, suppose), but is used with allusion to the wide difference between the σχῆμα which our Lord assumed, as compared to the μορφὴ Θεοῦ. Nay, the term εὐρεθεῖς may be thought to have some allusion thereto; though it is by the recent Commentators in general considered as merely equivalent to ὦν. The scope of the verse seems to be to represent the humiliation and condescension of our Lord, as the preceding verse does his emptying himself of his glory. And as there the μορφ. δοῦλ. λαβὼν and the ἐν ὁμοίωμ. ἄνθρ. γεν. show how that took place; so here the σχῆμ. εὐρ. ὡς ἄνθρ. and the γεϊόμ. ὑπὴκ. θαν. show the nature and extent of the condescension; namely, in his taking upon him the human nature, and in submitting to death. This view is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version.

9. ὑπερύψ.] "has exceedingly exalted him." "Since (observes Theodoret) one who is God cannot properly be said to be exalted, the exaltation in question must be understood of his human nature." See John xvii. 1—5. Acts ii. 33. Heb. ii. 9. ὄνομα is by the best Expositors interpreted dignity (as in Rom. ix. 17. And so Achmet cited by Schleus., εὐρῃσεν ὕψος καὶ ὄνομα πλεον τῶν ἄλλων βασιλείων), namely, the dignity of our Lord in his quality of Mediator. See Eph. i. 20. Dr. Tilloch, ap. Valpy; however, would render ὄνομα the name, viz. the name JEHOVAH, which, he thinks, is the proper rendering of Κύριος at v. 11, attempting to justify this in a long Note. But though much that is true is contained therein, it is truth not in point here. The interpretation proposed would require the Article, the omission of which here were a greater irregularity than can any where be found in the writings of St. Paul. Besides, ἐχαρίσατο (which is well rendered by Mackn. "bestowed") would not thus be the proper term.

10, 11. These verses show the nature and extent of the dignity; namely, by having paid to him an act of the lowest obedience (which must here imply religious adoration, see Eph. iii. 14.), and receiving a title of dignity correspondent,—namely, that of Κύριος. In this noble passage the Apostle is justly supposed to have had in view Is. xlv. 23. Ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ most recent Commentators regard as simply equivalent to τῷ Ἰησοῦ: while the Romanists convert the bowing at the name of Jesus to a mere ceremony. In which case, as often, a middle course will be found nearest the truth. The Apostle may have meant to represent the supreme dignity of Jesus by such a form of expression as would designate that of a man in the highest dignity; namely, in not only the bowing of the knee to him when present, but even at the pronouncing of his name; which is, I believe, an Oriental custom. At all events, the words designate the profound subjection of all created beings to the supreme dignity of Jesus. But they by no means authorize any such empty ceremony as that of the Romanists, "quasi (in the words of Calvin) vox esset magica, quæ totam in sono vim haberet inclusam. Atqui de honore loquitur Paulus, qui Filio Dei, non syllabis, exhibendus erat." The expressions ἐπουρ., ἐπιγ., and καταχθ., refer, not to things (as our common Version, adopting an error of Tyndal, renders), but persons, i. e. beings, as it is translated by Dodd. and Newc. And so the Pesch. Syr. Translator evidently took it; as also Chrys., Theophyl., and Theodoret. Καταχθ. is best explained by Theodoret and many eminent modern Expositors, to denote the souls of the departed (over whom Jesus Christ is alike Lord; see Rom. xiv. 9.); a use of the word as early as the time of the Greek Classical writers. It is injudicious, however, to refine upon the expression; since it may, as Chrys. points out, only have been added to complete the idea of all persons in the universe. Ἐξομολ. is a stronger term than ὁμολογ., and denotes public profession in religious adoration, as seems implied in the ἐξ. By Κύριος understand "Lord supreme over all persons and things [in his Mediatorial kingdom]." Εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, "which redounds to the glory of God the Father."

12, 13. On the doctrine of the humiliation and obedience of Christ to God the Father, and the reward thence resulting, the Apostle engrafs exhortations to obedience, in a more general acceptation, to his injunctions, and the commands of God. See Theophyl. cited in Recens. Synop. Ὑπηκούσατε, "have been obedient [to my injunctions]." The words μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ—ἀπουσίᾳ are by the generality of Expositors referred to the ὑπὲρ, preceding; but by a few of the more eminent, to the words following, τὴν ἐαυτῶν σωτηρίαν κατεργ.; which is the preferable view. For it may be doubted whether they had been much more obedient during his absence than before, in his presence. And, moreover, according to the other method, the νῦν would be little suitable. Besides, as the καὶ ὥς requires an elliptical οὕτως to correspond to it, so it must be supplied at μή ὥς ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ—ἀπουσίᾳ μου. The words may be regarded as a blending of two clauses into one. And thus the sentence, if written at length, would stand as follows: καὶ ὥς πάντοτε ὑπηρετοῦσατε, μή ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου· ἀλλὰ νῦν, πολλῶ μᾶλλον, ὥς ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου ὑπακούετε, καὶ κατεργ., &c. The πολλῶ μᾶλλον is by the Pesch. Syr. Translator rightly united with μᾶλλον. In ἀλλὰ νῦν there is an hortative force. By this it is not necessary to understand, that they had been more obedient in his presence than in his absence; but that circumstances had occurred, which enabled them to especially evince that obedience. They are exhorted to be especially obedient, inasmuch as he is absent from them. "Nam si adesset (to use the words of Calvin) coram, assiduis monitionibus stimulare ipsos et urgere posset; nunc opus est, dum procul abest monitor, ut ipsi sibi insistant."

The words following μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου must certainly be construed, not (as they are done by Pierce and Mackn.) with ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου, but with κατεργ.; and the best Expositors understand the sense to be, "labour with all diligence, earnestness, and anxiety, to effect your salvation;" where the κατα is intensive; and this use of φόβος καὶ τρόμος is frequent in the Scriptural and the Classical writers. See Eph. vi. 5. and my Note on Thucyd. ii. 37, 3. διὰ δέος ὅς παρανομοῦμεν, "we are fearfully cautious of doing any wrong." Calvin, indeed, explains as if the expression were merely meant to inculcate humility; whereas it, I think, plainly marks anxiety, with reference to the arduousness of the work, and the awful consequences of failure in it. At the same time there seems no objection to engrafting that idea; and thus the full sense seems to be, "with anxious diligence, and yet humble diffidence." See Hamm., Dodd., and Scott. In κατεργ. there is a metaphor taken from agriculture, or other hand-labour. So S. Barnabas, Epist. p. 251. (Edit. Wess.) says (in imitation of this) διὰ τῶν χειρῶν σου ἐργ. εἰς λύτρωσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν σου. The ἐαυτῶν is justly supposed to advert to the part taken by the persons themselves in working out their salvation.

The next words ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ—εὐδοκίας assign a reason why they may do this with the more alacrity: and the sense should, I think, be thus expressed, "for there is God, of his good pleasure, producing in you both to will, and to carry into effect [that will];" i. e. both the will and the faculty to perform. So the Pesch. Syr.: "Deus enim efficit in vobis, tum velle tum agere id quod vultis." Ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδ. signifies, "according to his own gratuitous benevolence," as Eph. i. 5. κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ Θελήματος αὐτοῦ. Thus the sovereign freedom of God in these operations, as apart from all claims of human merit, is here inculcated, in order to promote humility and diffidence as well as diligence. And when it is said, "there is God working," &c., the Apostle, I apprehend, refers to the ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου of the preceding verse; q. d. "though I be absent, yet you have the continual aid of God, not only to stimulate your wills, but both in will and deed." "To work in us (says Hamm.) the τὸ θέλειν and the τὸ ἐνεργεῖν, is the giving us that strength, working in us those abilities which are required for our willing or working, as necessary to prepare, and assist us to do, either." Of course this working of God on the disposition and will of man must be so understood as not to be inconsistent with the foregoing exhortation to labour earnestly and diligently to work out their own salvation. We are not to understand that God over-rules our wills; for that would be working in our stead, and thus we could not be said to "work out our salvation." See the annotations of Beza, Hamm., and Whitby, and two able discourses on this text by Bp. Sherlock, vol. ii. So Dr. Cudworth, in his admirable Sermon on 1 Cor. xv. 10. shows that we must not fancy that our own active co-operation in this work is not necessarily required thereto. For as there is a spirit of God in nature, which produceth vegetables and minerals, which human art and industry could never be able to effect (namely, that spiritus intus alens, which the Poet speaks of), which yet notwithstanding doth not work absolutely, unconditionally, and omnipotently, but requireth certain preparations, conditions, and dispositions in the matter, which it works upon (for unless the husbandman plough the ground and sow the seed, the spirit of God in nature will not give any increase); in like manner the Scripture tells us, that the Divine Spirit of grace doth not work absolutely, unconditionally, and irresistibly in the souls of men, but requireth certain preparations, conditions, and co-operations in us." Thus we are to suppose (as Chrys., Theophyl., and Theodoret suggest), that when God finds a disposition to do good, He augments it by the co-operating energy of His grace; and the ἐνεργεῖν, as regards our actions, must (as Chrys. remarks) denote the carrying them into effect (ἐνεργεῖν being here for ἐπὶ τέλος ἄγειν, as in Eph. i. 11.), of course in some such way as is consistent with man's free agency. Much to the purpose, I would observe, of the present passage is that of 1 Cor. xv. 10., "and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." In short, to sum up the doctrine contained in this most important passage, it is said of God, that, of his good pleasure He worketh in us both to will and to do; and it is said of man, that he is to work out his salvation, i. e. to do his part, whatever that be, in effecting it. Nothing can be more marked than the distinction which is here made between the agency of God, and the agency of man. Nothing is more certain, on the one hand, than that, without the assistance of God, man cannot be saved at all; nothing can be more certain, on the other hand, than that by his own voluntary co-operation, with such aid from above, man ultimately is saved. How far, indeed, our faculty to work extends, is, I am ready to admit, with Calvin, a question which the Apostle does not here mean to discuss; but simply to teach us that God so acts in us, as, nevertheless, not to suffer us to be idle; but by his secret impulses, excites us to strenuous exertion. In short, to use the words of Mr. Scott (whose annotation has much of good sense and moderation), "He worketh in us effectually, that we may effectually work."

14. πάντα ποιείτε—διαλ.] Having given this earnest exhortation to Christian diligence, the Apostle now reverts to the subject of concord and unanimity, modesty and humility, treated of at vv. 2, 3, 4. By the words γογγυ. and διαλ. seem designated the effects of the ἐριθεία and κενοδοξία, against which he had there cautioned them; the former of the two terms denoting a murmuring and insubordinate spirit, and the latter a disposition which seeks to excuse itself from performing what is enjoined, by raising doubts, based on some flimsy reasonings, and by magnifying difficulties. The πάντα ποιείτε must, of course, be understood of the direction of their spiritual pastors and masters.

15. ἵνα γίν. ἄμ.] Ἀκέραιος is derived from a privative and κέραν, to mix; and is equivalent to the integer vitæ scelerisque purus of Horace. On διεστρ. see Note on Matt. xvii. 17. Acts ii. 40. There is the same metaphor in the Heb. שָׁו, wicked, which comes, I suspect, from an old root שָׁו, "to make hooked, or crooked, to distort," &c. In fact, not only שָׁו, but שָׁו, שָׁו, שָׁו, &c. In fact, I think, only variations of one general idea; and, though regarded as separate roots, are, in fact, derivatives from the primitive biliteral שָׁו, which, it is strange the Lexicographers should not have seen, signifies, literally, "to hook." Indeed, our hook is evidently derived from it. It may also be observed that our wicked (which has so perplexed the Etymologists) seems to have come from the Heb. שָׁו, through the medium of the Northern vicka, or wickan, which literally signifies, "to turn from a straight line, at an angle (שָׁו), and figuratively to err, to sin," &c.

—ὡς φωστῆρες ἐν κόσμῳ.] In this there may be an allusion, as Saurin and Dodd. suppose, to light-houses; but rather, I think, to the heavenly luminaries, which give light to the world, and are so called in Gen. i. 14. 16. and elsewhere. The metaphor is frequent both in the Scriptural (as Matt. v. 11. 16. Eph. v. 8. 1 Thess. xv. 5.) and the Classical writers. By "ye" is, I think, meant ye Christians, not ye Philippians, as most Expositors suppose; which occasioned others to take φαίν, as an Imperative. But their duty to be such is rather implied than expressed.

16. ἐπέχ.] "holding forth," as persons do a lantern to light others, or rather, as the heavenly luminaries give light to the world; i. e. "the light of Divine knowledge and good example to others." There is, as Grot. observes, an intermixture of the comparison with the thing compared. In εἰς κἀνχ., &c., the εἰς denotes end, or result, and is for ὥστε κἀνχῆμά μοι ὑμᾶς γενέσθαι "so that your conversion to the faith, and your constancy therein, may be a matter for my rejoicing in the day of Christ;" i. e. the day of judgment. On κἀνχ., in this sense, see Note on 1 Cor. xv. 31. "Ὅτι," namely, that, "as a proof that." In εἰς κενὸν—ἐκοπίασα there is an agonistic allusion, as at 1 Cor. ix. 26. and Gal. ii. 2. The ἐκοπ. is well illustrated by the ἐν κόποις, &c. of 1 Cor. vi. 5. There is here an elegant litotes, with which I would compare Solon, v. 29. ἅμα γὰρ ἅλπτα σὺν ῥεοῖσιν ἦννσα, ἅμα δ' οὐ μάτην ἔρδον.

17. ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι—καὶ λειτ.] Here there is a fine sacrificial allusion, probably suggested by the association of ideas with the preceding notice of the labours and sacrifices he had made for the Gospel's sake; and it is meant, that for the same glorious cause he is ready to sacrifice life itself. The nature of the metaphorical allusions is fully discussed in Rec. Syn. Suffice it here to observe, that the faith of the Philippians is supposed to be a sacrifice offered to God; and that his own life is compared to a drink-offering of oil and wine poured upon the sacrifice (Exod. xxix. 40. sq.). Thus the meaning is, that "if his very life's blood should be poured forth, by martyrdom, in promoting so acceptable an offering to God as their faith, he should rejoice, as they would have reason to do, in the consolations of the Gospel."

19. ἐν Κυρ. Ἰ.] to whom St. Paul refers his hopes, as well as every thing else. The κἀγὼ is used elliptically, and the full sense of the words Τιμόθεον—περὶ ὑμῶν is, "to send Timothy; that not only you may be fully assured of my fate, but I also, being assured of your condition, may be easy in my mind."

20. ἰσοψυχον] as it were, "one endued with the same soul and disposition," a second self. The word is very rare, but occurs in Ps. lv. 14. Γνησίως seems to signify 'with the same sincerely faithful feelings as he did.' Compare 1 Tim. i. 2. So, in a funeral Inscription cited by Wets. on iv. 3. Μάριος Πούδης τῇ ἰδίᾳ συμβίῳ ἀρετῇ ζησάση γνησίως καὶ σωφρόνως μετ' αὐτοῦ, faithfully and virtuously.

21. οἱ πάντες] for οἱ πολλοί, the great bulk, supposed to be those of the Judaizing party. And the οὐ may be taken with limitation, for non tam—quam.

22. τὴν δοκ. αὐτοῦ γιν.] The sense is, "the proof of him (i. e. his fidelity and constancy) ye have had and known." So 2 Cor. ii. 9. ἵνα γινῶ τὴν δοκιμὴν ὑμῶν, and ix. 22.

23. μὲν οὖν.] The force of this particle is resumptive: "Him, then," &c. Ὡς ἂν, "as soon as." So 1 Cor. xi. 34. ὡς ἂν ἐλθῶ. The sense is, "as soon as I shall have seen the state of my affairs [so as to be enabled to say something positively]."

25. συστρατ.] "colleague," literally, "comrade [in the warfare of the Gospel]." It is not agreed whether ἀπόστ. signifies messenger, or Bishop, or teacher, i. e. minister. The first mentioned sense (occurring in John xiii. 16.) which is adopted by Theodoret and some eminent modern Expositors, seems to deserve the preference, for of the other significations there is very slender proof. Λειτουργ. τῆς χρ. is, I conceive, intended to complete the designation of Epaphroditus's office;—namely, that of legate from the Philippians to Paul on the affairs of the Church, and bearer of the contribution which they had sent for his relief and support. See 2 Cor. ix. 12.

26. ἐπιποθῶν ἦν] "he has been longing [to see] you all." See Note at i. 8. Καὶ ἀδῆμ., &c. Render, "and was much troubled on [learning that] ye had heard he had been sick." So Hippocr. cited by Wets. ἀλύνον καὶ ἀδημονέων ὁ θυμός.

27. παραπλ. θαν.] Heinrichs thinks that propriety of language would require ἕως θανάτου, as in Isaiah xxxviii. 1. This, however, is hypercritical. The Greek Versions and MSS. there differ; and, probably in the time of St. Paul, some Copies might have παραπλ. τῷ θανάτῳ. That St. Paul had that passage in view, is very probable, since he has no where else used the word. To the adverbial use of παραπλήσιον for παραπλησίως, no reasonable objection can be made, since it occurs in Thucyd., Herodot., Polyb., and Lucian; and sometimes with a Dative, as Polyb. iii. 33, 17. That it should be used with θανάτῳ is not strange, since Xen. Cyrop. v. 1, 11. (Ed. Thiem.) has παραπλησίως διακεῖσθαι and Aristotel. ap. Steph. Thes. speaks of a disorder μανία παραπλήσιον. But what decides this point is, that Hippocr. Epid. I. (cited by Wets.) has καὶ οὗτος γε πλησίον ἦκε τοῦ θανάτου κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν—πλησίον ἀφίκετο θανάτου, where πλησίον is, in like manner, an adverb. Ἠλέησεν α. is used agreeably to the Scriptural doctrine, that recovery from dangerous diseases is to be regarded as proceeding from the interposition of the Deity, and as a mark of his mercy. The words οὐκ αὐτὸν—ἐμὲ contain a delicate turn, and attest the affectionate tenderness of the Apostle's heart; as the words ἀδημονῶν—ἦσθ. in the verse preceding do that of Epaphroditus.

28. σπουδ.] This is well rendered by the Vulg. festinanti, and by Theophyl. ἀνυπερθετός, "more hastily [than I otherwise should]," namely, for the reason mentioned at v. 25. The words ἵνα ἰδόντες—ὦ contain another instance like those noticed at the preceding verse. Καὶ γὰρ ἀλυτ. ὦ, viz. by knowing that the person so much beloved by us all is restored to health again.

30. παραβουλ. τῇ ψυχῇ "not regarding his life," literally, "consulting ill for his life;" if, at least, παραβουλ. be the true reading: but some of the most ancient MSS., a few Versions, and some Fathers have παραβολ., which is preferred by Salmas., Scaliger, Casaub., Grot., Newc., Wakef., Winer, Wahl., and most Critics; and has been edited by Griesb. and Tittm. The common reading has, however, been ably defended by Hamm., Wolf, Heum., Beng., Elsn., Matth., Mich., Knapp, Schleusn., Storr., Heinr., Nolan, and Rinck; who urge, that though παραβουλεύεσθαι does not elsewhere occur, yet no authority is required for so ordinary a compound. I would add, that as to the authority of MSS. and Versions for the other reading, the MSS. are but six in number; and though very ancient, are such as have been every where altered by the early Critics; who changed the popular expressions into Classical ones. And with respect to the Versions, they are worded so ambiguously, that it cannot be pronounced with certainty what the Translators read; though the sense "not regarding his life," or "despising his life," seems more to favour the old than the new reading. As to the authority of celebrated Greek Scholars, it cannot decide a question of this kind; for we may account for their predilection, in the same way as for the correction of those Critics who emended the MS. A. B., &c.; namely, from the perpetual occurrence of παράβολος and παραβαλέσθαι in a sense not unsuitable to the present passage; and the very great rarity of παραβουλεύεσθαι, which has been found no where else, except in the Greek Fathers. But that is no valid argument against the existence of it, since it is formed analogically. Thus it seems derived from παράβολος, synonymous with κακόβουλος; and, though that word be rare, it is found in Du Cange's Gloss. Græc. accompanied with two authorities, and δυσπαράβολος in the sense here required occurs in Æschyl. Suppl. 113. Also κακοβουλεύεσθαι in Eurip. Ion. 877. ψυχὰ δ' ἀλγεῖ κακοβουλευθεῖσ' ἑ. ἀ. Finally, the new reading is weak in that very point where the old one is strong, being, it should seem, contrary to analogy; for compound verbs have frequently the termination —λεω, but never —λευω.

From the nature of the expressions following, the best Commentators are inclined to think that the danger of life above adverted to was brought on by Epaphroditus's hastening forward to reach Rome, in order to fulfil his commission from the Philippians, in spite of a severe fit of illness which seized him; and with which he struggled so as to reach his destination, and fulfil his commission, though almost at the expense of his life; since the disorder was so aggravated, as to become nearly fatal.

III. 1. τὸ λοιπὸν.] This may be rendered henceforth, or as to what remains; but the sense (as also that of χαίρετε), depends upon whether this verse be connected with the preceding, or with the following; on which see Recens. Syn. Χαίρ. denotes such a cordial profession of the Gospel, as results from an adequate conception of the love of Christ. By τὰ αὐτὰ are meant the same things which we have urged to you before; viz. by word of mouth; for it is not necessary to take γράφειν as here put for λέγειν, as some do. 'Ασφαλές ὅ, "makes you safe;" since, in the words of the adage, "littera scripta manet."

2. The Apostle now subjoins an exhortation to depend on the Gospel alone for salvation, without regarding the Law; and warns them of the evil arts of deceivers. Βλέπ., "look to," i. e. beware of. The more usual syntax is with ἀπὸ and a Genit., as in Mark viii. 15. and elsewhere. The persons designated by the term dogs (a word of reproach common to both the East and the West, and expressive of impudence and rapacity) are supposed to have been Jews and Judaizers, who had privily crept in, and were sowing the seeds of Judaism. As the persons in question had probably called the Gentile Christians of Philippi by this name, Paul retorts it on them. Τοὺς κύνας should be rendered "the (i. e. these) dogs;" and τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργ., "the evil workers;" i. e. those who are performing an evil work, viz. the introducing of the law. Indeed it might mean "evil teachers" (for that sense of the word is required in the N. T.) like ἐργάται δόλιοι at 2 Cor. xi. 13. So Theodoret, who explains: οἱ γὰρ οἰκοδομοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν οἰκοδομίαν κατασκάπτειν ἐπιχειροῦσι.

To the reproachful appellation τοὺς κύνας the Apostle subjoins a sarcastic one in τὴν κατατομήν, which the recent Expositors in general regard as denoting the action itself, and as opposed to περιτομή; q. d. "beware of this mangling of the flesh, [for it is no more] which they call circumcision." But that would perhaps require τὰ ὑπὲρ τὴν κατ. At any rate, on account of τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργ. preceding, to which this corresponds, τὴν κατ. must refer to persons, as indeed is plain from the next verse ἡμεῖς γὰρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτομή. The expression seems rightly regarded by Vorst., Gatak., Grot., Rosenm., and Wahl as abstract for concrete, to denote those who maintained the necessity of circumcision; which is styled concision (or mangling) by way of contempt.

we are the Circumcision; i. e. we Christians are alone the professors of true circumcision. "It was, Heinr. observes, then customary with Christians to claim to themselves those appellations on which the Jews prided themselves." Οἱ πνεύμ. Θεῷ λατρ. Render, [we are those] who worship God spiritually," i. e. pay that spiritual service enjoined by Christ, John iv. 23, or the reasonable service mentioned in Rom. xii. 1, and which (observes Bp. Middl.) "made the essence, as distinguished from the barren ceremonial observances, on which principally the Jewish opponents of Christianity appeared to set a value." Compare Rom. ii. 25. to the end of the Chapter. Instead of Θεῷ, very many MSS., early Editions, and Fathers, have Θεοῦ, which is adopted by Wets., Matth. and Griesb., but without sufficient reason; since (as Bp. Middl. has shown) "the propriety of the Article, as well as the context, exclude Θεοῦ, and require Θεῷ." Καὶ καυχ. ἐν Χ. '1., "and who make our boast [not in Jewish rites and privileges, but] in Christ Jesus [only]." Σαρκί, i. e. carnal and external, as opposed to internal and spiritual religion.

4. καίπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων, &c.] Supply εἰμι, and render: "Although I am one having (i. e. one who has) confidence." The Apostle does not mean that he feels this confidence, but that he has or should have this ground of confidence, if such existed; and that he does not recognise such grounds, appears by the δοκεῖ of the following sentence; which, therefore, is not, as it is by some Commentators supposed, pleonastic. He means to hint, that he does not depreciate such grounds of confidence because he possesses them not. Nay he goes still further,—declaring that he has more grounds of such confidence than any other: for that is undoubtedly the sense of the words εἴτις—μᾶλλον, which are considered by most Commentators as a mere Hebraism. Yet I have remarked something similar in a passage bearing strong resemblance to the present in Diog. Laert. iii. 43, where he gives us the Inscription on the tomb of Plato: Εἰ δέ τις ἐκ πάντων σοφίης μέγαν ἔσχειν ἔπαινον, τούτου (scil. τὸν ἔπαινον) ἔχει πλείστον. The brevity at ἐγὼ μᾶλλον appears to have arisen from the writer's wish to avoid seeming to recognise such grounds.

5. In proof of the assertion in ἐγὼ μᾶλλον, the Apostle here states the principal grounds of confidence on which the Jews trusted.

—περιτ. ὀκταήμε.] The sense of this idiomatic clause is, as Bp. Middl. remarks, "being, in respect of circumcision, [circumcised] on the eighth day." On the reading here, however, there has been some doubt. The Edit. Princ. has περιτομῇ; while the Editions of Erasmi., Steph., Beza, and Elz. have περιτομή. Yet περιτομή was afterwards introduced into the textus receptus; and the MSS. would seem to be decidedly in favour of it. It is moreover preferable; since (as Bp. Middl. observes) περιτομή would require the Article, ("my circumcision was an eighth-day one") and thus the usus loquendi, by which adjectives of time in —ημερος and —αιος are applied to persons, not things, would be violated. The Jews regarded circumcision before the eighth day as no circumcision, and after that time as of little avail.

—ἐκ γέν. Ἰσρ. φυλ. Βενιαμίν.] Render; "by nature an Israelite, by tribe a Benjaminite." I would compare what Josephus says of himself in his Preface to Bell. Jud. § 1. γένει Ἑβραῖος. This he mentions in order to show the genuineness of his Judaism, viz. as being a Jew by birth (not one become so by proselytism); and that birth of a tribe not contaminated by foreign admixture. Ἑβρ. ἐξ Ἑβρ., scil. πεφυκώς, "a Hebrew descended from parents who were both Hebrews." The idiom is found also in the Classical writers. Carpz. observes, that the appellation is not properly synonymous with Ἰσραηλῆτης, which is a religious, as that is a political designation. By νόμον must (as the best Commentators are agreed) mean the ἔθρ peculiar to Pharisæism; a very rare signification, but of which I have myself adduced two examples in Rec. Syn., Aristoph. Av. 1343, and Thucyd. vi. 16.

6. Κατὰ ζήλον διώκων τὴν ἐκκλ.] The sense is: "As to zeal, that was attested by persecution of Christians." Κατὰ δικαιοσύνην—ἀμεμπτος. It is commonly supposed that δικ. here denotes a diligent observance of the law; q. d. "as far as regards an exact observance of the law, I was irreprehensible." But the sense seems to be: "As far as regards the justification to be obtained by the Law, I was irreprehensible."

7. ἅτινα i. e. the things just mentioned and such like. ἡγῆμαι—ζημίαν, "regarded them as no more than occasions of loss;" i. e. not only as useless, but injurious. So, in the next verse, he says he accounts them as not merely valueless, but contemptible.

8. ἀλλὰ μενοῦνγε—Κυρίου μου.] This is partly explanatory of the preceding, and partly said per epanorthosin. The full force of the words (where much meaning is contained in the elliptical form ἀλλὰ μενούμεναι) is, "And not these things only,—but all other things of the flesh, which are thought honourable and profitable, did I despise. Nay, to the present time I continue to think all things but loss," &c. The διὰ signifies "on account of," which implies comparison with. Τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γν. is for τὴν γνῶσιν τὴν ὑπερέχουσαν. It was the excellency of that knowledge, (meaning the Gospel of Christ,) which induced the Apostle to make the sacrifice of whatever came in competition with it. This may be popularly meant to imply, that he wholly relinquished his means of livelihood. Σκύβαλα is by some eminent Commentators interpreted, not dung, but dross, dregs, refuse. But of that signification there is no good proof. Χριστὸν κερδ., "obtain the benefits purchased by the sacrifice of Christ."

9. καὶ εὗρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ, &c.] This is explanatory of the nature of the benefit from Christ, and has an allusion to the mode by which it is effected. Εὗρ. is not (as most recent Commentators suppose) put for εἶ, but there seems to be an allusion to the judgment of the great day. Thus the sense is; "and be [at the last] found united to him in faith and obedience." The ἐν αὐτῷ denotes the spiritual union mentioned by our Lord in John vi. 56. ἐν ἐμοὶ μένει καὶ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ. The next words hint at the means by which this union is to be effected. Μὴ ἔχων, &c.; i. e. not having as a dependence the righteousness obtainable by the law. See Rom. iii. 20. Ἀλλὰ τὴν διὰ πίστεως Χρ., "but the justification [obtained through faith in Christ]." The next words τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικ. ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, are exhortations of the preceding; where at ἐκ Θεοῦ sub. διδόμεν. The ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει signifies "on condition of faith." See Whitby.

10. τοῦ γινῶναι αὐτόν.] Sub. ἔνεκα. It is put for ἵνα γνῶ, "so that I may but know Him," &c. This must be connected with the first clause of v. 8, the words δὲ ὧν—ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει being in some measure parenthetical. The knowing Christ denotes the knowledge of the Gospel, by which salvation is offered. See John xvii. 3. Τὴν δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ, "and its efficacy in confirming my faith in Him, and hope of salvation through Him." See 1 Pet. i. 3 & 4. Τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν παθ. α. is expressed popularly for τοῦ κοινωνεῖν, &c.; i. e. ἵνα κοινωνῶ, &c. The next clause is explanatory of the preceding, and the sense is, "being conformed or likened unto Him in his death."

or rather, "in order that by any means, by any sacrifice;" as it is taken by Theodoret. The whole passage is well explained by Mr. Scott. That no doubt is intended, was long ago ably proved by Crell. Indeed, it is strange that any doubt of the resurrection should ever have been thought to be imported; for by ἐξανάστ. is denoted not simply resurrection, but the resurrection of the just, in order to be received into celestial glory. At the same time, in this and many similar expressions we are to bear in mind the characteristic modesty of the Apostle; who often, as in the next verse, speaks per κοινωνίαν. See 1 Cor. ix. 27.

12. οὐχ ὅτι ἤδη ἔλαβον.] The full sense of this elliptical expression is, "Not that I mean to say that I have already attained [the certainty of salvation]." See 1 Cor. ix. 27. Τετέλ. is usually rendered, "were made perfect." But the best Expositors are agreed that in this (as well as in διώκω, καταλάβω, and other terms occurring in this and the next verse), there is an agonistic metaphor, as in Luke xiii. 32. Loesner aptly compares Philo p. 74. ὅταν τελειωθῇς καὶ βραβεῖον καὶ στεφάνων ἀξιοῖς. From which, and other passages, it is clear that this was a word denoting to reach the goal as victor, and receive the prize. At εἰ καὶ καταλ. there is (as at Acts viii. 22, and often) the ellipsis of some verb of striving; i. e. "striving that I may reach;" for εἰ is equivalent to ὅτι, intimating, however, a modest doubt of success.

The words εἰ καὶ κατελ. are obscure, and variously interpreted. The ancient Commentators and Grot. were, I think, right in recognising an allusion to the extraordinary manner in which Paul was, as it were, pressed into the Christian stadium. Thus the sense appears to be, "in order that I might obtain which, I was laid hold of by Christ [at my conversion]." So the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg. well render comprehensus sum. There seems to be an allusion to the impressment of soldiers, sailors, or labourers, for the public service; of which we occasionally read in the Classical writers. Thus Thucyd. vi. 22. ἀγχι σιτοποιοὺς ἐκ τῶν μυλωνῶν ἠναγκασμένους ἐμίστους, where see my Note. The word is wrongly rendered by our English Translators "am," or, "have been apprehended."

14. ἐν δέ.] Supply σκοπῶ, or διώκω from what follows. Ἐπιλανθανόμενος, "unheeded of," as in Heb. vi. 16, and elsewhere. Τὰ ὀπίσω must at least include all his past attainments and services for the Gospel. The term ἑπεκτεινόμενος is highly appropriate to the racer,—whether on foot, or on horseback, or in the chariot; since the racer stretches his head and hands forward in anxiety to reach the goal. So, in the passage of Horace cited by the Commentators: “Instat equis auriga suos vincentibus, illum Præteritum temmens extremos inter euntem.” In this and other passages here cited, the racer is graphically described as thinking not of the space already run (“nil credens actum, cum quid superesset agendum”) but looking solely to what remains; and, regardless of the progress made, stretching forward to traverse that which separates him from the goal. I would compare a similarly metaphorical passage in Diog. Laert. v. 20. ἑρωτηθεὶς πῶς ἂν προκόπτοιεν οἱ μαθηταί; ἔφη, ἂν τοὺς προέχοντας διώκοντες, τοὺς δὲ ὑστεροῦντας μὴ ἀναμένονσι.

— βραβεῖον and ἄνω κλ. have allusion to the βραβεῦνται or ἀγωνοθέται, who sat on an elevated seat, and called forward the candidates for the βραβεῖον or prize.

15. One cannot but observe the address and delicacy with which the Apostle passes from the indirect admonition of the preceding verses 8—11. inclusive, to the direct exhortation contained in the present; and that first introduced, per κόινωσιν, with “we,” but immediately changed to “ye.” Τέλειοι the best Commentators, rightly, interpret of “full growth in Divine knowledge,” “fully instructed in the Christian religion,” as in 1 Cor. ii. 6. So also φρεσὶ τέλειοι γίνεσθε, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Τοῦτο φρ., “let us aim at being thus disposed” as I have already mentioned; namely, to press forward for the prize, &c. The next words καὶ εἴ τι—ἀποκαλ. are obscure; but the best Commentators are agreed, that there is an allusion to the prejudices of weak, but sincere, Jewish converts, and the misconceptions, or inadequate notions, entertained by others. Thus the sense will be, “And if there be aught, wherein ye are of different sentiments or feelings—this prejudice or error, God will, I trust, even remove; and thus open to your minds the truth.” We are not to understand by ἀποκαλ. any supernatural revelation, but such an enlightening as would result from the exercise of the understanding, under the ordinary influences of the Spirit. See John i. 17. Ps. xxv. 12.

16. πλὴν εἰς ὃ—φρονεῖν. Of this passage both the reading and interpretation have been controverted. Some ancient MSS. and Versions omit κανόνι—φρονεῖν; others κανόνι only; others, again, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν; and in some the words are transposed. Griesb. has cancelled all the words. Vater has bracketed them. Tittm. brackets only the τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν. The first-mentioned Editor seems to have been induced to cancel them all, from a rule in criticism,—that a passage which is variously read in the MSS., is probably spurious. That rule, however, has many exceptions; and, among others, when a passage is obscure, and there are many alterations, whether by omission, alteration, or transposition, all tending to remove the difficulty. Now to cancel such a passage would be as uncritical as cancelling a passage merely because it is difficult. Of this kind is the passage before us; and therefore I agree with Wolf, Wets., Matth., and Rinck, that the words must not be cancelled; nor even altered, since the transposition arose from certain words being first omitted, ob homœoteleuton, and then introduced in the wrong place. Besides, the cancelling would compel us to take τῷ αὐτῷ for τοῦτῳ; which cannot be allowed: not to say that ἐν τούτῳ or ἐν αὐτῷ would have been required, as in Col. ii. 6. And the sense, “that they should use the knowledge they had attained unto, and apply it to practice,” though good, seems not to be the whole of what was meant. The Apostle intended, I conceive, to engraft on that admonition another, viz. to preserve unity of doctrine, and concord in general. The Apostle, I apprehend, intended to include both the above mentioned senses, the latter engrafted on the former; τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, which is equivalent to τὸ ἐν φρονεῖν, being added, to engraft the one upon the other; as in Rom. xii. 16. xv. 5. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. Indeed, as in many other passages of St. Paul, two clauses are here blended into one, and consequently there is a peculiarity of phraseology as well as a brevity. If written at length, the passage would have run thus: Πλὴν εἰς ὃ ἐφθ., τοῦτῳ [δεῦρ] στοιχεῖν τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι. The πλὴν is very elliptical, and may mean, “But [be that progress what it may].” So in a kindred passage of Rev. ii. 25. πλὴν ὃ ἔχετε, κρατήσατε ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἤζω. The expression τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι is parallel to that at Gal. vi. 16. ὅσοι τῷ κανόνι τοῦτῳ στοιχήσουσι.

17. συμμι. μον γίνεσθε. [Be joint-imitators of me,” i. e. unite in following my example. Σκοπεῖτε—ἡμᾶς. The sense is, “And observe [for imitation] those who so act, as you see us acting, and have us for an example [therein].” On τύπον see Note on Acts vii. 44.

18, 19. These verses are in some measure parenthetical. After περιπ. the Commentators suppose an ellipsis of κακῶς, or ἐτέρως. But there seems rather to be an aposiopesis, for deli-cacy's sake. In the place of a term to characterize their conduct, the Apostle chooses to describe the persons,—first generally, as enemies of the cross of Christ; then under their principal characteristics. First, then, they are designated generally as the enemies of the cross of Christ; i. e. inimical to the doctrine of a crucified Redeemer, through the sacrifice of whose death circumcision was become unnecessary; (see Notes on Gal. v. 11. vi. 12. 14.) and in general utterly averse to the humbling and spiritual doctrines of the Gospel. They are then characterized by their principal traits,—sensuality, a shameless impudence in glorying in their false doctrines and licentious practices, and a general worldly-mindedness. Of these the first is expressed by a comparison used in Rom. xvi. 18. and elsewhere. Several parallel passages are adduced by Grot., Wolf, Alberti, and Wets., the most apposite of which are the following. Eurip. Cyclop. 335. ἄ γὰρ τινι θύω, πλὴν ἔμοι (Θεοῖσι δ' οὐ), Καὶ τῇ μεγίστῃ γαστρὶ τῆδε δαιμόνων· Ὡς τοῦ πτεῖν γε καὶ φαγεῖν τοῦφ' ἡμέραν Ζεὺς οὗτος ἀνθρώποις τοῖσι σὴφροσι. and Fragm. incert. 149. Νικᾷ με χρεῖα καὶ κακὸς δλονυμένη Γαστήρ, ἀφ' ἧς τὰ πάντα γίνεται κακά. The trait καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ αἰσχ. a. denotes a hardened insensibility to shame. The οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια φρονούντες should be rendered, “whose mind is devoted to earthly things,” of course to the neglect of heavenly ones. See Col. iii. 2. Wets. compares Hom. Od. xxi. 85. ἐφημέρια φρονεοῦντες. To which may be added Æschyl. ap. Stob. p. 98. ὅ τι γὰρ βροτεῖον σπέρμ' ἐφημέρια φρονεῖ.

Of these it is said ὧν τὸ τέλος—ἀπώλ., the sense of which is not (as Wakef. and Heinr. suppose), “whose aim is the ruin of others;” for that would require ὧν σκοπός; nay, perhaps that was more than could be said of many, or at least all. Nor need τέλος be rendered, with some eminent Commentators, pæna. The sense is, “who must come to a bad end,” “whose conduct must terminate in their perdition.” See Jude 13. This interpretation is confirmed by several passages of the Rabbinical writers. So Targum. Hieros., “quorum finis est in destructionem.”

20. This verse connects with v. 17., to which the γὰρ refers. Πολύτ. may denote either conduct, manner of living, ἀναστροφή, as it is commonly interpreted; or citizenship, as many modern Commentators explain; or community, political society, as Parkh. and Wahl. The two last-mentioned senses are most suitable to the context and the doctrine of the N. T., and, indeed, they merge into each other.

21. In touching on the redemption to be bestowed on all who make good their title to the heavenly citizenship, the Apostle, with admirable address, adverts to that which is (as we learn from 1 Cor. xv.) to be the commencement of the rewards he will bestow, and, as it were, a pledge for the rest. On this point he has, with great judgment, taken his stand; since it suggests a strong motive to resist temptations to sensuality, selfishness, and worldly-mindedness; namely, Why should I take so much thought for this wretched and perishable body—this paltry self—when by resisting temptations, I may expect that this very body will by my Saviour be changed into a body similar to his glorious body, and be made capable of pleasures, “such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive.” Ἀπεκδ. denotes anxious expectation. Μετασχημ. signifies to change the σχῆμα or form of any thing, as 2 Cor. xi. 13. 15. 1 Cor. iv. 6. On τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπ., see Note on Eph. iv. 13. The words εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτό are not found in some MSS., are rejected by most Critics, and are cancelled by Griesb. They are probably an interpolation.

—κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν—πάντα.] “An argument (says Heinr.), a majori ad minus,” and, as Theophyl. observes, “adapted to silence all unbelief; the power he hath to subdue all things having subdued even death.” See 1 Cor. xv. John xi. 25. Τοῦ δυνάσθαι is for τῆς δυνάμεως: but the verb is used in order to suspend upon it [ὥστε] ὑποτάξαι.

IV. 1. This verse forms the conclusion of the exhortation, (as at 1 Cor. xv. ult.) and should not have been separated from it. The ὥστε is conclusive, and may be rendered So then. Ἐπιπόθ. is not synonymous with ἀγαπ., but a stronger term, also denoting his anxious desire to see them again. See i. 27—30. Χαρὰ καὶ στέφανος; i. e. a cause of rejoicing and of glorying to me. On the expression στ. ἐν Κυρίῳ, see 1 Cor. xv. 1. xvi. 13. Gal. v. 1.

2. τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν Κυρίῳ.] This expression may denote both unanimity in doctrine, and concord in views and plans. The persons in question were probably deaconesses of the Church.

3. ναὶ ἐρωτῶ.] For καὶ most of the best MSS.,

Versions, and many Fathers, and all the early Editions have ναί, which is approved by almost all the Critics, and adopted by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Tittm., and Vater. It is on all accounts greatly preferable, being so suitable to ἐρωτῶ, q. d. "Now, I beseech you." Indeed, there is reason to think that the καί was a mere misprint in the 3d Edition of Stephens. Ναί, probably from the Heb. נָא, has this sense of quæso also in Philem. 20. Ναί, ἀδελφέ, and Rev. xxii. 2. ναὶ ἔρχου, Κύριε.

— σύζυγε.] On the sense of this word Commentators are not agreed. It seems rightly taken by Heinr. to denote a closer connection than συνεργοί, supra ii. 25. Otherwise it might be supposed to designate Epaphroditus. It should, therefore, seem to mean colleague, and to be meant for the Bishop, or principal presbyter, of Philippi (vide supra i. 1.), who was, in some sense, Paul's colleague. And this is confirmed by the use of γυνήσις, supra ii. 20. Συνήθλ. denotes co-operation in the furtherance of the Gospel (so at Rom. xvi. 13. he calls Priscilla his συνεργός), but in what precise way is uncertain. See Rec. Syn.

— Κλήμεντος.] This is said by the ancients to have been Clemens Romanus, one of the Apostolical Fathers: but the tradition has been generally rejected by the moderns.

— ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς.] This expression may, I think, with Heinr., be supposed to be employed in accommodation to the image by which the future life is represented a little before (iii. 20.) as a πολίτευμα; which supposes a list of the citizens' names, from which the names of the unworthy are erased. See Rev. iii. 5. Thus the names of the virtuous are often represented as registered in heaven. See Matt. iii. 5. and especially Rev. xiii. 8. So also in the Rabbinical writers we read of a book of eternal life in which the names of the just are inscribed. Nay, it is found in Mal. iii. 16.

5. τὸ ἐπικεκς] for ἡ ἐπικεικία. It should be rendered, not moderation (a version derived from the Vulg. modestia), but meekness, gentleness, implying lenity and a forgiving spirit. So the Pesch. Syr. lenitas. This signification is frequent both in the N. T. and the Sept. See Note at 2 Cor. x. 1.

— ὁ Κύριος ἐγγύς.] Most recent Expositors take the sense to be, "The Lord, or God, is at hand [for help];" comparing Ps. xxxiv. 19. But it is better taken, with the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, of Christ; not, however, so as to understand, with many, the day of judgment. Nor need we, with others, interpret it of the second advent of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem; though the opinion is ably maintained by Whitby. I agree with Scott in understanding the expression of that advent of our Lord which takes place at death, and is to every man the same as the final advent of Christ to judgment. And as death cannot be far from any man, and the final consummation of all things is, when measured with eternity, as it were at hand; so the judgment may be said to be near, even at the door.

6. μηδὲν μεριμν.] Render, "be not anxiously solicitous about any thing." See Matt. vi. 25. Ἄλλ' ἐν παντί, scil. πράγματι. See Notes at Rom. xii. 12. and Eph. vi. 18. Μετὰ εὐχαρ., "with thanksgiving," viz. for what God shall be pleased to grant; implying acquiescence in what he may see fit to withhold.

7. καὶ] "and [then]," viz. by so doing; denoting the high advantages of such a practice, namely, as procuring that peace which God, by the Gospel and the influences of his Spirit bestows. See Isa. xxvi. 3.

— φρουρ. τὰς καρδίας—Ἰησοῦ.] This is by many eminent Expositors supposed to mean, "will support and preserve you in the faith of Christ," i. e. guard you against all temptations to desert the faith. That sense, however, is frigid, and not agreeable to the context. The interpretation of many good Commentators, "will preserve you in a Christian frame of mind" might be admitted, were it not certain that φρουρ. must be referred to μηδὲν μεριμνᾶτε a little before. The sense seems to be, "will fortify your hearts and minds by Christ and his religion [against such over-anxiety]." Truly, the experience of that peace which God imparts by the Gospel is the mind's best safeguard against such a disposition. We feel fulfilled in us the words of the Prophet (Isa. xxvi. 3.) "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." By the words of the preceding clause ἐν παντί—τὸν Θεόν the Apostle meant to show how that peace could be most surely procured in the time of need, and for the time of need; namely, by prayer and supplication in the Spirit.

8. 9. τὸ λοιπὸν, &c.] The Apostle here briefly sums up the foregoing practical exhortations, and in a manner the most impressive; giving them to understand that Christian faithfulness cannot rest on the discharge of any one virtue, but on the consistent and uniform observance of the whole of what is enjoined in the Gospel, and hath been urged upon them by himself: and that then "the God of peace would be continually with them." Ἀληθῆ signifies "truly virtuous," ἐνάρετα, as Theodoret explains. Σεμνὰ, honourable, or respectable. Προσφιλῇ, amiable, meaning that quality which conciliates love and respect. So Ecclesiasticus xx. 12. ὁ σοφὸς ἐν λόγῳ προσφιλῇ ποιήσει. By this the Apostle seems to advert to that in which religious persons are sometimes deficient; who, by an austere and ascetic demeanor, prejudice the cause of religion. Εἴ τις—ἐπαινος, &c. The sense seems to be, "Whatever else there is of what is virtuous and praiseworthy—think of and study to practise them." See Dr. Barrow's Sermons, vol. i. p. 46. med.

9. Here the Apostle refers them to his own doctrines, precepts, and example, which as they follow, so will they attain the peace of God.

10. ἀνεβάλετε τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμ. φρ.] Some eminent Commentators take ἀνέθ. in a Hipphil sense, "have made your cause to flourish." But for that there is no authority: and it is better, with others, to suppose at τὸ φρον. an ellip. of κατὰ or εἰς. As τὸ ἀνέθ., I have in Rec. Syn. shown at large that there is no reason to abandon the common interpretation, "that ye are revived in your care of me," which, by hypallage, may mean "that your care of me hath revived." Comp. Ezek. xvii. 24. Φρονεῖν is here for φρον-τιζεῖν. The next words ἐφ' ᾧ—ἡκαιρεῖσθε are, like the last, rendered obscure by the delicacy and modesty of the writer. He means to suggest the best excuse for them, by presuming that they had not before had an opportunity of sending, or were destitute of the means. Ἡκαιρ. may be understood of either. See Note on Acts xxviii. 14—16.

11. οὐχ ὅτι—εἶναι.] These deeply affecting words show that he had been suffering under a decrease of his usual means of subsistence; yet that he had been endeavouring to reduce his desires to a level with his means, so as to be content. The sense is, "I do not say this with reference to any necessity to which I have been reduced; for I have learnt, in whatever circumstances I am, therein to acquiesce, and accommodate myself thereto." At οἷς supply πράγμασι. Αὐτάρκης is used both of a thing sufficient for the purpose intended; and of a person who feels sufficiency, and is therefore content. See Eccles. xi. 18.

12. The δὲ is absent from several Versions and Fathers, and is cancelled by most Editors; perhaps rightly. Internal evidence is certainly against it. Moreover, the Asyndeton here has great strength, and is much in the Apostle's manner.

—ταπεινούσθαι.] This signifies to be in lowly and necessitous circumstances (see Levit. xxv. 29), as the antithetical term περισσ. signifies to have a superfluity. The sense is rendered plainer by the following καὶ χορτ. καὶ πεινᾶν. Περισσ. καὶ ὑστ. is a more significant expression than ταπ. καὶ περισσ., ὑστ. signifying "to be in utter want of the necessities of life." In the expression μεμύημαι ("I am initiated"), there may be, as many Commentators suppose, an allusion to initiation in the Heathen mysteries. At all events, it is a very energetic term, signifying thorough knowledge by long experience.

13. πάντα] i. e. all things connected with my Christian duties. He then shows the source of his ability, even the aids afforded to him by Christ, through the Holy Spirit.

14. πλὴν—θλίψει.] This is added to preclude the idea of his depreciating the gift, or misconceiving the intentions of the donors. Though he had learnt to endure poverty without murmuring, he was not the less entitled to assistance. And they had done a good work, in communicating aid to him in his distress; for that is the sense of the words συγκ. μ. τ. θ., which are for συγκ. μοι ἐν τῇ θλ. μου. The ἐν is supplied in Revel. i. 9. συγκ. ἐν τῇ θλίψει.

15. ἐν ἀρχῇ τ. εὐαγγ.] "at the beginning of the Gospel's being preached among them." In εἰς λόγον δόσ. καὶ λήψ. there is an allusion to the ratio acceptorum et datorum among the Romans, to intimate a regular reciprocation of giving and of receiving. If any other Church gave, it was something not worth noting down.

16. καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δις.] This is by many Commentators supposed to signify "pretty frequently."
But the plural must here be taken literally, as is shown by Doddr., and especially by Paley in his Hor. Paul., where he has illustrated vv. 15 & 16.

17. οὐχ ὅτι ἐπιζητῶ.] Sub. λέγω, "I do not and glorious omnipotence whereby, as Lord of Cæsaris often occurs in the Inscriptions, and the

Colossæ was a large, populous, and wealthy city of Phrygia (whose site has been at length determined beyond all doubt to be the present Khonæ), at which there was a flourishing Christian Church; but by whom planted we have no certain information. From some passages in the Epistle, (as i. 21. 25. ii. 5, 6.) and from the probability of the thing (as he had twice visited Phrygia), there are some reasons to think that it was St. Paul. While from other parts of the Epistle (as, for instance, ii. 1.) the contrary would appear. And as there seems to be something like positive proof that he was not the founder; while there are only arguments of probability that he was, we seem authorized to decide rather in the negative. Yet, though not literally the founder he might, in a qualified sense, be termed such; since the Gospel dispensed to the Colossians (i. 21—25.) came mediately, though not immediately from him. Who was the actual founder, the learned are not agreed. Some say, Epaphras; others, Timothy. The latter supposition has most probability in its favour. Be that as it may, it seems that the Church at Colossæ had been planted and watered, and brought to a flourishing state by both those two active fellow-labourers with Paul in the Gospel. With respect to the date of the Epistle, the internal evidence supplied by the Epistle itself, shows that it must have been written at nearly the same time as that to the Ephesians. The two are, in fact (as Paley says), "twin Epistles, being both written together, insomuch that many expressions in the one were made use of in writing the other." The strong similarity, however, arose, not merely from the train of ideas being still in the writer's mind, but also from the circumstances, in which both the writer and those whom he addresses were placed, being almost the very same. Thus, as in the former case, nothing of expostulation and reproof occurs; but the Apostle, in like manner, commences with expressing his joy at the accounts he had received of their constancy in the faith, and the fervency of their love. The immediate occasion of its being written was, that some differences had arisen among the Colossians, in consequence of which they sent Epaphras to Rome, to acquaint Paul with the state of things at their city, and to ask his counsel for their direction. Accordingly, the Apostle replies to them in the present Epistle; which is mainly directed against the tenets and practices of certain false teachers, who had crept in, and disseminated erroneous and superstitious notions respecting the worship of angels, self-mortification, and the observance of the Jewish Festivals; and indeed of the Mosaic ritual Law in general, as necessary to salvation. Who these persons were is not agreed. See Scott's Intr. and Boehmer's Isagoge. The truth seems to be, that, though the notions of the Essenes were most in accordance with the errors here condemned, yet that the false teachers were not of one particular class, but were composed of fanatics and ascetics of various classes, chiefly Judaizers, and for the most part such as had taken up the dogmas of the Essenes,—but also Platonizers, Gentile converts, who blended Platonic notions with the doctrines of the Gospel. Nor probably were there wanting some who had been professors of what is called the Oriental Philosophy (for asceticism had been ever prevalent in the East), and had, on becoming Christians, retained several of their superstitious and ascetical notions. Hence the scope of the Epistle is 1. to lay down the great design of the Gospel, and to show how far it surpasses the law of Moses both in glory, greatness, and comprehension; and especially to point out, that all hope of man's redemption is founded on CHRIST, our Redeemer, in whom alone all fullness, perfection, and sufficiency are contained. 2. To caution the Colossians against the insinuations of the Judaizing or philosophizing teachers, as inconsistent with the grand doctrines of the Gospel; after which follows an interesting description of believers acting uniformly under the influences of the Gospel, and an earnest exhortation to walk in their steps. Having finished which, the Apostle concludes with general admonitions, and affectionate salutations.

From a comparison of this with the Epistle to the Ephesians, it will be obvious that the substance of the former is found in the latter. The two consequently reflect great light upon each other, especially the former upon the latter, of which it is indeed often the best comment. Insomuch that it will, in many instances, be only necessary for the reader to refer to the parallel passage in the Ephesians, and consult the full explanations given in the Notes thereon. In order to facilitate such reference by the reader, even when not indicated in the Notes, I have carefully indicated in the margin the corresponding passages of the Epistle to the Ephesians, as in that Epistle I have done to the Colossians.

1. Κολοσσαῖς.] Many MSS. and early Editions, and several Versions and Fathers, read Κολασσ., which is preferred by most Critics, and adopted by Wets. and Matth. Yet there can be little doubt that the common reading is correct, at least according to the orthography of the inhabitants themselves; as we find from the coins, of every age, which may be seen in Eckhel Doctr. Num. Vet. vol. iii. p. 147. sq. And as the o is found in all writers down to the time of Polyenus (in whom we first find the a), there is little doubt that, after the time of St. Paul, the spelling was corrupted, from provincial pronunciation; and it seems probable that the alteration was introduced by those who lived distant from the place.

4. ἀκούσαντες τὴν πίστιν] since we have heard of your faithfulness, or constancy in the faith. (Compare v. 2.) A sense of πίστις, as is shown by Locke and Pierce, required by the context.

5. διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα, &c.] Some doubt exists as to the construction of these words. By most modern Translators and Expositors, they are connected with εὐχαριστοῦμεν, &c. at v. 3.; v. 4. being regarded as parenthetical. Yet this cannot, I think, well be admitted; not indeed, for the reason assigned, that no example is to be found of εὐχαριστεῖν followed by διὰ with an Accusative (for that were insufficient to prove the point), but because the method in question involves a considerable harshness of construction, and yields a sense somewhat jejune. Hence I prefer (with some of the best Expositors, ancient and modern) to refer the words to the verse immediately preceding, especially as the most simple and natural construction is always, cæteris paribus, the more probable and likely to be the true one. Yet the reference is, I apprehend, not to ἀγάπην, &c., only, as some Expositors (especially the Roman Catholic ones) suppose, but to the πίστιν also; the latter springing out of the former; love being ever the fruit of a true faith, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. Gal. v. 6. And this hope (meaning the thing hoped for, the object of this hope), is by the διὰ represented as the impulsive cause of their faith and love; q. d. “which faith and charity ye have exercised in consequence of,” &c. For, as Dr. South well observes, “Hope and fear are the great handles by which the will of man is to be taken hold of, when we would either draw it to duty, or draw it from sin.” In the expression there is (by way of expressing the certainty of the thing) an allusion to money or rewards laid up in a treasury, to be distributed to conquerors in the games; and of which they are so certain, that each one’s share may be said to be laid up ready for him. So Plut. cited by Heinr. τοῖς εὐ βεβιωκόσιν ἀπόκειται γέρας ἐν ἄδου. Compare 2 Tim. ix. 8. Ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθ. τοῦ εὐαγγ., i. e. in the true doctrine preached to you of the Gospel. See 2 Cor. vi. 7. Eph. i. 13.

6. τοῦ παρ.] for ὅς παρέστι, “which is come or brought [by preaching] to you.” παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ may be regarded as a popular hyperbole (see Note on Matt. xxiv. 14.); though indeed there were very few countries of the civilized world, to which the Gospel had not been carried; thus going far to make good the words of Ps. xix. 4. Καὶ ἔστι καρποφ., “and is bringing forth fruit [everywhere] as also among you.” By καρπ. is meant the fruit of reforming and blessing men here, and giving them eternal salvation hereafter. After καρποφ., several MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have καὶ αὐξανόμενον, which is adopted by Griesb. and other Editors; but injudiciously, since it is evidently a marginal gloss, suggested by the αὐξ. at v. 10. See Matth.

7. καθὼς ἐμάθ.] The full sense seems to be, “which [wide spreading and success of the Gospel] ye have [no doubt] learnt from,” &c.

8. ἐν πνεύμῳ.] i. e. either, as Whitby explains, “wrought in you by that Spirit whose fruit is love,” or, rather (as Chrys.. Theophyl., Beza, Calvin, Casaub., Wolf, and almost all recent Expositors understand) “spiritual;” not meaning, however (as most of them explain), merely heartfelt and sincere. The love is, I am inclined to agree with Calvin, called spiritual,—inasmuch as “non respicit mundum, sed pietatis auspiciis est consecrata; et interiorem habet radicem:

- 9 ὑμῶν ἀγάπην ἐν πνεύματι. ^x Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀφ' ἧς ἡμέρας ἠκούσαμεν, οὐ πανόμεθα ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, καὶ αἰτούμενοι ἵνα πληρωθῇτε τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ θελήματος

9. ἀφ' ἧς ἡμέρας—προσευχ.] Compare Eph. i. 15, 16. iii. 16. The substance of his prayer is, that they may have such an increase of knowledge in Divine things, as shall be accompanied with a conduct worthy of their high calling. Τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ θεοῦ αὐτοῦ. But the expression may be simply regarded as denoting a knowledge of what God would have men to believe and to do in order to be saved. Compare Acts xvi. 30. xxii. 10. Ὁν ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ συν. πν. Compare Eph. i. 8, 9, and Notes. Πνευματ., i. e. not any wisdom, but πνευμ., that suggested by, or proceeding from, the inspiration of the Holy Ghost; as 1 Cor. ii. 13. Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16.

10. At περιπ. supply [ἐνεκα] τοῦ for εἰς τό. q. d. "the end of knowledge is practice." Εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρ. Sub. αὐτοῦ, for ὥστε πάντως ἀρεσκεσθαι αὐτῷ. Ἀρεσκεῖν is generally used in a bad sense, but sometimes, in the later writers, in a good one. So Polyb. cited by Raphael: ἡ τοῦ βασιλέως ἀρεσκεία. and Philo cited by Loesn. (of Adam) εἰς ἀρεσκεῖαν τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ βασιλέως. Ἐν παντὶ ἔργ. ἀγ. καρποφ., &c. Render, "by being fruitful in [the performance of] every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God," i. e. of his will, v. 9.; one being closely connected with the other. There is the same allusion to a fruit-tree as in v. 6. In αὐξαν. εἰς we have a blending of two modes of expression. So Eph. iv. 15. αὐξ. εἰς αὐτόν.

11. ἐν πάσῃ δυν. δυναμ.] This adverts to something more than knowledge, namely, that power and mighty energy of the Spirit, whereby they might be enabled not only to know God's will, and act according to it, but to suffer; and that not only with fortitude, but cheerfulness. That the strength in question is the strength of the Holy Spirit, is clear from the parallel passage of Eph. iii. 16.

12. εὐχαριστ., &c.] This is meant to show the grounds of that joy, and how it should find expression; namely, by thankfully acknowledging in prayer the mercy of God, in enabling them, though Gentiles, to obtain the glorious inheritance destined for all true Christians. In ἱκαν. there is a conjoint notion of enabling and fitting, as in 2 Cor. iii. 6. ὃς ἱκανώσεν ἡμᾶς διακόνους καινῆς διαθήκης. And the construction in εἰς μερίδα, &c., is adapted to the latter sense. Μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου signifies, "the allotted portion." In the use of this figure (frequent in the N. T.) there is, as Heinr. observes, an allusion to a state whose citizens have assigned to each of them a meris, portion, or possession (see Gen. xiv. 24.); and all these are supposed to be assigned by lot, κλήρω. See also Theophyl. in Recens. Synop. By φωτ. is meant either the light of heaven, where God is represented as dwelling in light; or, as Theophylact explains, the light of Divine knowledge, as respects both the present and a future state; when the light of the Gospel will be exchanged for a still clearer manifestation of the glory of God. This latter view is strongly confirmed by 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

13. τῆς ἐξουσίας τ. σκ.] i. e. the dominion of ignorance and idolatry, and the tyranny of sin and its author; a sense of ἐξ. occurring in Rom. xiii. 1. Heinr. remarks on the aptness of the term μετέστησε, "since it is not only used of transferring persons from one country to another, but of changing the form of government under which they live, as from despotism to freedom. So here those who had been under the tyranny of ignorance and Satan are represented as being transferred to the kingdom of knowledge, virtue, and Christ."

14. ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολ. διὰ τοῦ αἵμ. α.] This has been explained at Eph. i. 7. The words placed in brackets are in very many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found, and have been cancelled by almost every Editor; and, I think, rightly: for we may better suppose them to have been brought in (from the margin) from the parallel passage of Ephesians, than to have been omitted by accident.

15. ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν—κτίσεως.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, that the sense is, "who (i. e. Christ) is [in his human nature] the visible image of the invisible God."

In refutation of the Socinian gloss (according to which Christ is here called the image of the invisible God by his having, through his Gospel, made known to us the will of God), see Theoph. and Theodor. cited in Rec. Syn., and Abp. Magee, vol. i. p. 72. ii. 487, 707. "Christ (says Whitby) is the image of God, as making him who is invisible in his essence, conspicuous to us by the Divine works he wrought, they being such as plainly showed, that in him dwelt the fullness of the Godhead bodily; for an invisible God can only be seen by his effects of power, wisdom, and goodness. He, therefore, who, in the works both of the Old and New Creation, has given us such clear declarations of the Divine power, wisdom, and goodness, is upon this account as much an image of God as any thing can be; to which sense the image of God here seems necessarily restrained by the connective particle ὅτι, he is the image of God, for by him all things were created." The present passage is manifestly parallel to that of Hebrews i. 3. ὅς ὢν ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης καὶ χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, i. e. a true copy, similitude, or delineation of the Father; as fully representing his substance, essence, and attributes, as the impression answers to the seal. Also perhaps (according to Whitby) as having appeared to the Patriarchs, and representing that God who lives in light inaccessible, to which no mortal eye can approach.

On the interpretation of πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως the opinions of Expositors are very various. But the most natural and best founded view is that of almost all the ancient, and most eminent modern Commentators, who take πρωτότοκος for πρῶτος (as in John i. 15, 30.), and assign as the sense, "begotten before every creature," i. e. before any created being had existence. So also Bp. Pearson on the Creed explains it to mean "begotten by God" (as the Son of his love) antecedently to all other emanations: before any thing proceeded from Him, or was framed and created by Him. "Christ may be so styled (says Dr. Wells) as, in respect of his Divine nature, he was begotten of the Father before all creatures, and as to his human nature, he was the first that was raised from the dead, never to die again." On which subject see the passages from the Fathers adduced in Suicer's Thes. vol. ii. p. 379. and Dr. Burton's Testimonies of the Antinice Fathers, pp. 12, 106, 130, 262, 269, 277, sq. 296—8, 312. seq. 334. 390. Thus also Michaelis observes, that, in the language of the Rabbins, God is called the first-born of the world. How far the words are from proving (what the Socinians maintain) that Christ was a created being, is obvious; since, as Bp. Horsley observes, we have not πρωτόκτιστος (i. e. πρῶτος κτισ-τεῖς), but πρωτότοκος. And, moreover (as Dr. Clarke remarks) "had he been so called, those who hold such opinions would have gained little, because, according to what they contend, the Apostle is speaking, not of a natural, but a moral or evangelical Creation." For a refutation of this shallow gloss, see the Note on v. 16. Πρωτότ.

ing Schleusn.) in a figurative sense, to denote "Lord of all things," as κληρονόμος πάντων, since (as Mr. Slade observes) the word is never so used, except in reference to primogeniture. See Gen. xxvii. 29, 37. 2 Chron. xxx. 3. Jerem. xxxi. 9. And though in Rom. viii. 29. we have τὸν πρ. ἐν πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, yet these his followers are represented not as his creatures, but as his brethren. On which, and other accounts, the interpretation first mentioned (according to which, we have here a strong testimony to the eternal filiation of our Saviour) is greatly preferable; and it is clear that vv. 15 and 18 are illustrative of the nature, as vv. 16 and 17 are an evidence of the pre-existence and Divinity of Christ.

16. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτ. τὰ πάντα.] This, I have shown at large in Rec. Syn., must not be taken (as it is done by most of the recent Expositors), after Grot., of a new and moral, i. e. evangelical, creation, but of the natural creation of all things by Christ. This has been fully evinced, especially by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, and Dr. Whitby; of whom the former shows that these words supply a proof of the precedency asserted in the foregoing, namely, "that all other emanations or productions come from Him, and whatsoever received its being by creation was by him created." "Which assertion (continues he) is delivered in the most pregnant expressions imaginable: 1. in the plain language of Moses, as most consonant to his description; 2. by a division, which Moses never used, as describing the production of corporeal substances only. Lest, therefore, those immaterial beings might seem exempted from the Son's creation, because omitted in Moses's description, he adds 'visible and invisible;' and lest, in that invisible world, among the many degrees of the celestial hierarchy, any order might seem exempted from an essential dependence on him, he names those which are of greatest eminence, 'whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers;' and under them comprehends all the rest. Nor does it yet suffice thus to extend the object of his power by asserting all things to be made by him, except it be so understood as to acknowledge the sovereignty of his person, and the authority of his action. For, lest we should conceive the Son of God framing the world as a mere instrumental cause which worketh by and for another, he shows him as well the final as the efficient cause; for 'all things were created by him and for him.' Lastly, whereas all things first receive their being by creation, and when they have received it, continue in the same by virtue of God's conservation, 'in whom we live, and move, and have our being;' lest in any thing we should be thought not to depend immediately upon the Son of God, he is described as the conservator, as well as the creator; for 'he is before all things, and by him all things consist.'"

Finally, the contrary exposition is ably refuted by Dr. Whitby as follows: "Not one example can be shown, where the creation of all things in heaven and earth is ever used in a moral sense,

λα, εἴτε ἰερούσαι, τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν
 17 ἔκτισται· καὶ αὐτός ἐστι πρὸ πάντων, καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν 18 αὐτῷ συνεστήκε· καὶ αὐτός ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῦ σώματος, τῆς ἐκκλησίας· ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχή, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, 19 ἵνα γένηται ἐν πάσιν αὐτὸς πρωτεύων. Ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ εὐδό-20 κησε πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα κατοικῆσαι, καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλάξαι τὰ πάντα εἰς αὐτὸν, εἰρηνοποιήσας διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ σταυροῦ αὐτοῦ, δι' αὐτοῦ, εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, εἴτε 21 τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· καὶ ὑμᾶς ποτὲ ὄντας ἀπηλλοτριωμένους καὶ ἐχθροὺς τῇ διανοίᾳ ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς πονηροῖς· 22 νυνὶ δὲ ἀποκατήλλαξεν ἐν τῷ σώματι τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, διὰ τοῦ θανάτου, παραστήσαι ὑμᾶς ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώμους καὶ or concerning any other than the natural. Moreover, in the first place, 'all things in earth' and 'things visible' must comprise things without life, the inanimate parts of nature, concerning which it is absurd to speak of a moral creation. 2dly, under 'things in heaven, invisible,' &c. must be comprehended the whole celestial hierarchy; ii. 15. Ephes. i. 20. vi. 12. But good angels cannot require a spiritual renovation, and Christ came not to convert fallen angels, but to destroy their empire. Indeed the words in this sense were far from being true when the Apostle spoke them. He afterwards enters upon the moral creation at vv. 18, 19, 20." In fact, he engrafs it upon the other.

16. δι' αὐτοῦ.] By Him, as the efficient cause. Εἰς αὐτόν, "for Him, as the final Cause, for the manifestation of his power and wisdom in preserving and governing what he had created." See Phil. ii. 10. sq.

17. πρὸ πάντων.] This evidently denotes, not mere supereminence, but pre-existence; as is plain from the words preceding; this being a further development of the thought there. And as little can the words following, καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνεστήκε, be taken of the moral preservation and governance of Christ; for of such a sense there is no example. Whereas of synst. in the physical sense, consist or subsist, many examples are adduced from Plato, Philo, Josephus, Diog. Laert., and Aristotle. So Aristotle in a kindred passage; ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ τὰ πάντα, καὶ διὰ Θεοῦ ἡμῖν συνεστήκε. It is manifest that the first clause of this proves the Deity, the second the omnipotence of Christ.

18. From the natural the Apostle now passes to the moral or evangelical creation. The sense is, "He is, moreover, the head of the body, namely, the Church." (See Rom. xii. 5. Eph. i. 22. sq.) "[He it is] who is the beginning (or author of first cause) of all things." So Rev. iii. 14. he is called ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ. Christ is then said to be πρωτότ. ἐκ νεκρῶν, as at 1 Cor. xv. 20. he is called ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων, the first who was raised from the dead, never to die again. See Note on 1 Cor. xv. 20. Ἐν πᾶσι may be referred to both persons and things, and denote "in all points of comparison." See Eph. i. 10, 22, 23.

19. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ—κατοικ.] There is here thought to be an uncertainty, as to the nominative to εὐδόκ.; which some suppose to be Χριστός. But that is neither agreeable to the context, nor to the tenour of Scripture. See Pierce. Others imagine it to be τὸ πλήρωμα; q. d. "in Him all the fullness [of the Godhead] was pleased to dwell;" comparing ii. 9. ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς. Such a sense, however, of εὐδόκ. would be very harsh, and the sentiment unsuitable to what follows. It should seem that the true nominative is ὁ Πατήρ, taken from vv. 12, 13. And indeed vv. 14—18. inclusive, are in some measure parenthetical. The above is, moreover, required by the construction in the next verse.

It is not so certain what is meant by τὸ πλήρωμα. It may denote either "fulness of the godhead;" or "fulness of power and authority," i. e. to create and redeem the Church. See the long and able Note of Whitby; of which an abstract may be found in Recens. Synop. See Eph. i. 23. The latter sense is more agreeable to what follows. But it may include the plenitude of Divine perfections. See Scott.

20. ὅτι ἀποκατ. τὰ πάντα see Note at Eph. i. 10. Εἰρην. is a modification of the sense of ἀποκαταλλάξαι, i. e. "having effected mutual peace." Διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ στ., "by his bloody death on the cross." See Eph. ii. 14. Εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τ. γῆς—τοῖς οὐρ. must be construed with τὰ πάντα, and denote all intelligent creatures on earth and in heaven, men and angels. We are not, however, by εἰρηνοπ., to understand any reconciliation of the angels to God; but only the restoring that amity between angels and men, which had been interrupted by the fall of man; and which could only be restored by the reconciliation of man to his offended Maker; so that both angels and men might, in virtue of that peace (purchased by the sacrifice of Christ on the cross), worship God as one society under one head. See Eph. i. 10. Heb. xii. 22.

21. ἀπηλλ.] aliens from God, and consequently alienated, or separated from, deprived of, the Divine promises and benefits. Τῇ διανοίᾳ, "in your hearts and minds," denoting that the evil is deeply seated in the will and affections.

22. ἐν τῷ σώματι—θανάτου] i. e. by his fleshy body given up to death; so said as opposed to his mystical body. At παραστ. supply ὥστε. Compare ii. 13—18. Eph. v. 27.

q Phil. 1. 30.

1 Thess. 2. 2.

23. εἶγε, &c.] There is here an ellipsis, thus to be supplied: "[And so it will be with you], if at least," &c. On the next words ἐπιμένετε τῇ πίστει τεθ. καὶ ἑδραῖοι, see Note on Eph. iii. 21. 1 Cor. vii. 37. Μετακινεῖσθαι signifies to make a change of sentiment, &c. by taking up some other. So in 1 Sam. ii. 30. it is used of being drawn this way or that by persuasion. By πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει are meant all intelligent creatures, both Jews and Gentiles; the expression being equivalent to the ἐν παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ supra v. vi. See also v. 16, and Matt. xxiv. 14, and Note.

24. νῦν χαίρω—σαρκί μου.] The sense is, "Now I rejoice at my sufferings [undergone] for you [Gentiles]; and [I consider that] I [thereby] fill up in my flesh, what remains of the afflictions to be endured by me for Christ's sake. His sufferings and his rejoicing therein seem mentioned to show that his profession is founded in solid self-conviction. Compare v. 11. The ἀντὶ is not, as it is generally considered, pleonastic, but may have the sense assigned by Elsn. and Abp. Newc. in the following paraphrase: "I, who formerly persecuted the Church, now in my turn fill up, by my bodily sufferings, what remains behind in the course of my life of the afflictions allotted to me because of Christ." See, however, Whitby and Dodd.

25. οἶκο.] See Note on Eph. iii. 2. Πληρ. signifies "to fully promulgate the Gospel [to you Gentiles]; so as to leave none unevangelized."

26. τὸ μυστ.] "[even] the mystery;" namely, that of admitting the Gentiles into the Christian Church; which, to speak comparatively, had been concealed from preceding ages and generations of men." See Notes on Matt. xiii. 35, and Eph. iii. 3—6.

27. οἷς ἡθέλ., &c.] "to whom God was pleased to make known what are the glorious riches and preciousness of this mystery among the Gentiles."

—ὅς ἐστι Χρ. ἐν ὑμῖν.] The ὅς refers in sense to the μυστ. and indeed some MSS. have ὅ; but by emendation; which, however, shows the ancient interpretation. The words may be explained, with Newc. and Holden: "Which mystery consists in preaching Christ among you as the author of the hope of eternal glory." Compare Rom. ix. 23.

28. The sense of this verse seems to be, "Which Gospel we preach, admonishing every man [of whatever nation] of its claims to attention, and teaching every man [who attends to the admonition], the duties it enjoins." The πάντα is repeated for emphasis sake. On παραστ., see Note on 2 Cor. iv. 14, and Eph. v. 27. Ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ must chiefly denote spiritual wisdom; but it is meant to include, by implication, every sort of knowledge requisite for the purpose.

29. εἰς ὃ] scil. πρᾶγμα. Render, "unto which purpose also I strenuously labour, according to the energy which operates in me powerfully." See Phil. iv. 13, and compare 1 Cor. xv. 10. In κοπ. ἀγ. is a strong expression, illustrated by what is said at 2 Cor. xi. 28, that he has the care of all the [Gentile] churches.

II. Ceasing to speak of himself, the Apostle now turns to the Colossians, admonishing them to abide constantly by the pure and genuine Christian instructions which they had received from Epaphras, and not to suffer themselves to be led away by any of the devices of false teachers. An admonition, on account of the many errors of doctrine with which they were carried to and fro, especially necessary. (Heinr.)

1. γάρ.] This refers to ἀγωνιζ., "I say, labour earnestly; for," &c. Ἀγῶνα περὶ ὑμ., "anxious solicitude and earnest care on behalf of you." This was natural, on account of the dangers they were in from the arts of wily seducers, both Judaizing and Paganizing Christians, who had corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel. In ἑωρ. τὸ πρόσωπόν μου. ἑ. σ. there is a Hebraism signifying "to have personal knowledge of." It is generally supposed that the words καὶ ὅσοι οὐκ ἑωρ. show that Paul had not been to Colosse and Laodicea. But thus we must supply ἄλλοι; which is harsh. And yet it is highly improbable that he should have gone throughout Phrygia (Acts xvi. 6; xviii. 23.) without visiting two of its most considerable cities.

2. παρακλ.] Here there seems an allusion to deprivation of the comforts of the Gospel, arising from the doubts and fears infused by false teachers. For συμβιβασθέντων many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, read συμβιβασθέντες, which is edited by Griesb., Tittm., and Vat. But there is no sufficient reason to prefer that reading. The term refers to the means whereby the schism might be closed, and amity restored. See Note on Eph. iv. 16.

— καὶ εἰς πάντα, &c.] "As (remarks Heinr.) the ἐν ἐν ἀγάπῃ shows the instrument, so the εἰς here denotes the scope and end, to which they were to be united,—namely, that their minds might be imbued with knowledge far more elevated than the false teachers knew." In order to heighten the representation, the Apostle, instead of εἰς πάντα or εἰς πλήρη σύνεσιν, says εἰς πληροφορίαν τῆς συνέσεως, and, what is yet more, εἰς πάντα πλοῦτον τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως. Then, by apposition, he at εἰς ἐπίγν. τοῦ μυστηρίου adds the cause why he ascribes πλοῦτ. and πληροφορ. to Christian knowledge,—namely, inasmuch as it leads us to understand the μυστήριον, or divine decree for blessing men by Christ, hitherto hidden.

3. ἐν ᾧ] scil. Χριστῷ; or, according to others, μυστηρίῳ. Either yields a good sense; but much depends upon whether the words preceding, καὶ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, are, or are not, genuine. Now there is, I apprehend, nothing like evidence to authorize any one word to be omitted; though Griesb. and others have cancelled them all. Render, "of God even the Father, and of Christ." See i. 26, 27. The ᾧ is better, with most Expositors, ancient and modern, referred to Χριστοῦ. See Whitby in Rec. Syn. But Χρ. may be taken for his Gospel. Thus the sense will come to the same as μυστ. Of Θησ. τ. σ. καὶ τ. γν. ἀπόκ. the sense is, "in whose Gospel are laid up (as in a treasury) the most precious and boundless doctrines of Divine wisdom and knowledge." I would compare Eurip. Alc. 614. ἐν τοῖς ἀγαθοῖσι δὲ πάντ' ἐνέστι σοφίας (δῶρα) and Julian, Hymn in Solem 2. ἀναλαβόντι σοφίας ἀνοῖξαι Θησανρούς. By σοφ. is meant divine wisdom. Compare Eph. i. 3, and 1 Cor. i. 24; ii. 6 & 7. And it is implied that the Gospel alone hath it.

4. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, &c.] There is a reference to v. 2; v. 3. being parenthetical. The sense is, "This I say, meaning that," &c.; i. e. I mean to say that. Παραλ. signifies 1. to make a wrong account; 2. to cause a person to reckon or judge wrongly, to deceive. Πιθαν. signifies a plausible but false representation. Compare χρηστολογία in Rom. xvi. 18.

5. εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῇ σαρκὶ—εἰμί.] See a kindred passage in 1 Cor. v. 3 & 4. Χαίρων καὶ βλ. By Hendiads, for χαίρων βλέπειν. So the Pesch. Syr., "gaudeo quod videam;" of which idiom examples are adduced by Wets. The βλ. may be understood of the certain information received by Epaphras and others. See 2 Cor. vii. 8. Τάξιν, for εὐταξίαν, (by a military metaphor) denoting subordination to their spiritual pastors and masters. See 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

7. ἐρριζ. καὶ ἐποικ.] See i. 23, and Eph. iii. 18. Βεβαιούμ. is exegetical of ἐρριζ. and ἐποικ. Περισ. denotes more than the περιπ. just before. So Rom. xv. 13. περ. ἐν ἐλπίδι. 1 Cor. xv. 58. περ. ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ τοῦ Κυρίου.

8. βλέπετε μή τις, &c.] The general sense is, "Beware lest any delude you by means of an empty and deceitful philosophy, which rests merely on what is handed down as wisdom, or what is agreeable only to the imperfect doctrines of the world; and not the Gospel of Christ." Compare Matt. xxiv. 4. Συλλαγωγεῖν here signifies to lead off captive, make spoil of your Christian liberty. So 2 Tim. iii. 6. αἰχμαλωτεύοντες τὰ γυναικάρια. In διὰ τῆς φιλοσ. καὶ κεν. ἀπ. many recent Commentators recognize a hendiad. for φίλ. τῆς ἀπατηλῆς; for the Apostle, they think, does not condemn philosophy itself, but out of its proper limits, and exercised upon matters beyond its scope. See Schoettg. and Lord Bacon, Advanc. of Learning, L. ii. 5, p. 5. It should seem, however, that the Apostle does mean to condemn and caution them against the Grecian philosophy, as sure to deceive them on matters of religion; and which was a "vain deceit," by professing to be what it was not, and promising what it did not perform. This view I find supported by the authority of Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. L. iii. § 4, who observes that "the Apostles always speak in terms of contempt or abhorrence of the Grecian philosophy." And he shows at large that they had good reasons for so doing.

On the persons in question see the Introduction. The στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου (on which see Note on Gal. iv. 3.) as well as the παράδ. τῶν ἀνθρώπων may relate to both Jews and Gentiles; referring, in the case of the latter, to those systems of religion and philosophy handed down from generation to generation, but resting only on the opinions and authority of men. How the Gospel was corrupted by vain philosophy, has been ably pointed out by Bp. Warburton, Works, iii. 196. seqq.

9. Ἦτι ἐν αὐτῷ, &c.] q. d. "Beware of any who would draw you away from Christ; for in Him," &c. I have in Rec. Syn. shown at large that the sense of the passage (which is disputed) is (as the ancients interpret it) "For in Him all the complete perfection essential to the Godhead abides corporally, substantially, and really, [and not in the manner of types and shadows]." Of the three significations which have been assigned to σωμ., each has been adopted by one or other of the Expositors; but it has been shown by Wolf, in an able Note, (which see in Rec. Syn.) that they merge into one another. "In Christ (says Whitby) the Deity dwells in fulness, as nothing could be added to it; and so in him, bodily, that is, as the sun dwells in the firmament, where the body of it is. The whole divine nature is not only in part, but fully, without absence of any part of it, in Christ; and that not by species, or image only, but really and substantially: and consequently the will of God must be supposed to be so revealed in Christ, that there can be no need of any addition from the Heathen philosophy, or from the Jewish Law." "The Apostle (he adds) thus indirectly expresses the Divine nature of Christ, partly to represent to the Jews his divinity, with allusion to the God of Israel dwelling in the temple; partly to oppose him to the πλήρωμα of the Gnostics, which, according to them, was made up of their thirty æones, and to the local and partial deities of the heathens, who of them all made up the plenitude of the Godhead."

10. πεπλ.] i. e. "amply provided by him, or by his doctrine," with whatever is necessary to salvation; without needing any additions from philosophy, or from the law of Moses. Ἡ κεφαλὴ —ἐξουσίας; i. e. "who is supreme over every order of intelligent beings, that exercise authority and power."

11, 12. The Apostle here encounters those who endeavoured to bring in circumcision. In the expressions περιτομῇ ἀχειρ. and ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῆς σαρκὸς, and ἐν τῇ περιτομῇ τοῦ Χρ., we have the principal traits of the true spiritual circumcision required by Christ; on which see Rom. ii. 29. Phil. iii. 3, and compare Deut. xxx. 6. Jer. ix. 26. The second and third of the above clauses are exegetical of the first. Thus the sense is, "By whom ye have been circumcised with a circumcision not corporeal [but spiritual]; namely, that which consists in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh; (i. e. in renouncing the sins to which the body and the flesh are prone) even with the circumcision of Christ (i. e. that spiritual circumcision which he requires) as it is typified by baptism, which corresponds to circumcision." In v. 12. the Apostle illustrates this by a fresh image, though employed at Rom. vi. 2—4. The sense of συνταféντες αὐτῷ ἐν τῷ βαπτ. is, "having engaged at your baptism to renounce sin and walk in newness of life." Of ἐν ᾧ συνηγ. the sense is as in Eph. ii. 5 & 6. where see Note. Διὰ τῆς πίστεως—νεκρῶν. Render, "through faith in and dependence on the power of God, who raised him from the dead [and can therefore raise you]." The τῶν is wanting in many MSS. and early Editions, and is cancelled by Beng., Matth., and Griesb., agreeably to the general usage of the N. T.

13. καὶ ὑμᾶς νεκροὺς—παράπτ., &c.] This moral reformation is here illustrated by another figure, found in a very similar passage of Eph. ii.

1—5. See ante Rom. vi. 3. Τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ. i. e. "your carnal and corrupt state as heathens," as opposed to περιτομῇ ἀχειροπ. at v. 11. Several MSS. and some Versions, Fathers, and early Edd. insert ὑμᾶς after συνεζ., which is received by Griesb., and others, for ὑμῖν, have ἡμῖν, which is edited by Griesb., Tittm., and Vat.; but, I think, injudiciously; for (as Rinck justly observes) this is closely connected with the preceding; q. d. "You who were dead in your sins, are quickened, your trespasses being forgiven. After which, at v. 14, the general subject is resumed, with the introduction of the first person pronoun possessive."

14. ἐξαλείψας—σταυρῷ.] Compare the parallel passage at Eph. ii. 14. The Apostle here considers the Law as a note of hand, or bond, given by a debtor to his creditor; and, by way of explanation, he adds τοῖς δόγμασι, where Bp. Middl. thinks there is an ellip. of σὺν; which is, however, perhaps unexampled in the N. T., and the sense arising, "together with all its covenants," is too feeble for such a writer as St. Paul. It is better to suppose an ellip. of ἐν, which is supplied in the parallel passage of Eph. ii. 15. τὸν νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι καταργήσας. Thus it is for δ ἦν ἐν τ. δ. Render, "consisting of the covenants,—namely, contained in the various expiations prescribed by the Levitical law. These ordinances, it is added, "were in full force against them," for that is undoubtedly the sense of καθ' ἡμῶν, notwithstanding that some render "with respect to us." The words δ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν, which are variously interpreted by the recent Commentators (see Rec. Syn.) seem to be simply meant to explain the καθ' ἡμῶν, as the ἤρκεν ἐκ μέσου (from the Latin ex medio tollere) is exegetical of ἐξαλείψας, in which there is an allusion to defacing, and thus annulling, a writing. In προσηλώσας αὐτὸ τῷ σταυρῷ there is an allusion to the ancient custom of annulling covenants or bonds, by driving a nail through them. The sense, however, cannot be, "nailing it to his cross;" for that would involve too great a confusion of metaphor. Rather, "having driven a nail into it by his cross," (i. e. the atonement through his cross) and therefore annulled it.

15. ἀπεκδυσάμενος—ἰδειγμ.] Here there is a succession of military metaphors. Ἀπεκδ. alludes to the stripping and plundering of vanquished foes: ἰδειγ., to their being exposed to public gaze and derision: and θριαμβ. (on which term see 2 Cor. ii. 14. and Note) is added to complete the idea. Ἐν παρρ. is equivalent to δημοσίᾳ. By the ἀρχ. καὶ ἐξ. are meant those so called at Ephes. vi. 12,—namely, the evil spirits and their agents. See John xii. 31.

16. μὴ οὖν, &c.] The sense is, "Wherefore [such being the case with the ceremonial law,] let no one judge you in [respect of any rite connected with] meats." Ἐν μέρει is used as in 2 Cor. iii. 10; ix. 3. On the thing itself, see Rom. xiv. 2—17, and Notes on 1 Pet. iv. 16.

17. ἃ ἔστι σκιά—Χριστοῦ.] The sense is: "which things [as compared to the future benefits to be obtained by Christ] are a mere shadow; but the substance is what appertains to Christ and his Gospel." The best Commentators are agreed that the Genit. Χρ. is put for the Dative with ἐν; q. d. "the thing (i. e. the truth itself) the future blessings themselves subsist in Christ, from whom alone they are to be sought." For it is not to be understood that these and all other of the ritual constitutions of the Law of Moses shadowed forth some Christian mystery; but only (as the best Expositors are generally agreed) that they were as mere shadows compared to that solid and substantial truth which Christ, by his Gospel, hath discovered to us.

18. καταβραβεύετω.] This term (which is called by Jerome a Cilicism, but is found in Demosth., Polyb., and Plutarch) has been variously interpreted, for want of a clear notion of the sense of the word, which signifies, 1. to artfully disappoint any one of the prize he seeks; 2. to circumvent, like παραλογίζεσθαι, supra v. 4. And although some recent Commentators take the sense to be to condemn, or dannify, or tyrannize over, yet it seems to be rather that assigned in the Vulgate and our common Version, "be-guile," namely, by drawing you off from the true doctrine to a false one. Of θέλων the sense is not clear. It is by many eminent Expositors taken with ἐν ταπεινοφρ. and explained "de-lighting in." By others it is interpreted "affecting," viz. by an affected humility and modesty. These two senses merge into each other. After all, however, I am inclined to think it should be taken, as it is by some ancients (as the Peschito Syriac and Theophyl.), with καταβρ.; though not in the sense they assign. The meaning seems to be, "Let no one gain his will, or please himself by beguiling you," &c. From the context, ταπεινοφρ. must be taken in sensu deteriori, to denote an affected humility. Θρησκεία τῶν ἀγγ. It is not agreed whether this means “a worshipping of angels,” the Genitive being considered as a Genitive of object; or, “a worship of angels;” meaning, such as angels render, a sort of extatic devotion, called at v. 23. ἰθελοθρησκεία. The latter interpretation, however, is founded on no certain proof, and is liable to many objections; and the former, which is adopted universally by the ancient and by most modern Expositors, is preferable. The persons in question (supposed to be Gnostics) adopting the opinion of the Esenes, Pythagoreans, and Platonists, maintained, from a sentiment of affected humility, that direct access of prayer to the Deity was presumptuous and impracticable, and that prayers could only be presented and accepted through the mediation of the angels; to whom, of course, as mediators at least, worship was to be paid.

The next words, ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβ., seem meant to censure generally that prying and speculative spirit, on points not revealed, which had been introduced by the Gentile converts. And the sense seems to be, “stepping out of his bounds, and intruding or prying into matters which he cannot know or understand;” i. e. the state of the invisible world. The words following trace this spirit to its origin; namely, in vanity, lightly taken up and engendered by a carnal disposition. So 1 Tim. vi. 4. τετύφωται μηδὲν ἐπιστάμενος.

19, καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφ.] These words refer to the whole of the preceding verse, and mean, that by such worship of angels, and such presumptuous intrusion into the secrets of the Lord, they did not hold fast their allegiance to Christ, the Head and sole Mediator between God and man, and the Revealer of what was proper to be known. Of ἐξ οὗ πᾶν—συμβιβ. the sense appears from the Note on Eph. iv. 16. Αὖξει τὴν αὖξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ may either signify, “the greatest increase,” τοῦ Θεοῦ being taken as an idiom importing the superlative; or rather, “such an increase as God may grant.” See Schleusn. on αὖξισις.

20—23. The general sense contained in these verses seems, from the full discussion of the phraseology in Recens. Synop., to be this: “If ye be [as ye profess yourselves at baptism] dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world (i. e. have renounced both Jewish ordinances, abolished through Christ), (see Eph. ii. 15.) why, as if living in conformity to the world, do ye subject yourselves to carnal ordinances,—such as, ‘Touch not this, taste not that kind of meat

(1 Cor. vii. 1. 1 Tim. iv. 3.), Handle not that, as unclean,’ all which restrictions tend, in use, only to the detriment of those who employ them; inasmuch as they are only founded on the carnal words and doctrines of men, and not of Christ: which [ordinances] have, indeed, a semblance of wisdom (i. e. religion), by an affected devotion, humility, and mortification of the body—but with no regard for the body, so as to satisfy its cravings;” meaning, that these and all such things are but specious emptiness, having no solid or true worship in them, nor any benefit in their use. On the τὰ στοιχεῖα, see Note on Gal. iv. 3. Δογματίζεσθε, “ye suffer ordinances (namely, of the Jewish law) to be imposed on you.” In μὴ ἄψῃ, &c., there is a specimen of the δόγματα in question. Yet the expressions are not (as some consider them) synonymous. The ἄψῃ and θίγῃς seems to refer to greater or less contact with things ceremonially unclean. Though the former may denote the same as γεύσῃ: on which see my Note on Thucyd. ii. 50. The terms are supposed to have reference to certain meats; and indeed, animal food in general; which was forbidden by the Pythagoreans to be eaten. Surely, however, it must chiefly be meant of what was forbidden by the Jewish law.

Of ἃ ἐστὶ πάντα εἰς φθ. the sense is not a little disputed. If ἃ πάντα refer to the meats prohibited (as is generally supposed), the best sense will be that assigned by the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, as Grot., Wolf, and Rosenm., “which things are all so far from polluting the user, that they rather themselves perish by using, and tend only to corruption;” and consequently do neither good nor harm (see Rom. xiv. 17.); conformably to the words of our Lord, Matt. xv. 17, 18. Yet this yields a sense not sufficiently apposite; and it should rather seem that the reference is to the prohibitory ordinances; and that φθορὰν is to be taken in a metaphorical sense. Thus the meaning will be: “All which sort of ordinances tend only, in use, to the destruction of those who adopt them; being [only] according to the commandments and precepts of men [not of God].” By this method of exposition (supported, I find, by the authority of Augustin, Vatabl., Est., Wolf, and Wahl), we gain a sense worthy of the Apostle; and also obtain a good construction. For, according to the foregoing interpretation, the next words κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων cannot be referred to what immediately precedes, but to δογματίζεσθε at v. 20.; which is exceedingly harsh.” According to the construction I have adopted, the ἐστὶ must be repeated before κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα.

23. ἀτινα] scil. ἐντάλματα. On this use of the relative, by which it serves to connect propositions, instead of the demonstrative pronoun, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 477. c. compare Eph. v. 6. and Col. iii. 6. Λόγον is by many of the later Expositors, from Kypke to Dodd. explained pretense; but it seems best interpreted by the ancient and most modern ones show. So Chrys., who adds οὐ δύναμιν, οὐδὲ ἀλήθειαν. The opposition is suggested by the μέν, which alludes to a δέ. The above sense, it may be added, is placed beyond doubt by 1 Cor. iv. 20. οὐ γὰρ ἐν λόγῳ ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει. The ἐν ἐξελ. may be rendered, "as evinced in a pretended or affected sanctity;" for on that sense of the term the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed; and Heinr. shows how it arose. So Theophyl. explains it τὴν ὑποκρινομένην εὐλάβειαν ἐν τῇ θρησκείᾳ, "scrupulosity of worship." And so the word is used by the early Ecclesiastical writers. Ἐξελο-περισσοθρησκεία occurs in Epiphani, cited by Heinr. Ταπεινοφρ. must, from the context, denote that kind of humility under which lurks spiritual pride. For "pride (says the Poet) may be pamper'd while the flesh grows lean." With respect to ἀφειδ. σώμ., it denotes harshly treating (see 2 Cor. xiii. 2.) by the neglecting the comfort of the body as to other things besides food; namely, clothing, warmth, rest, &c. And the words οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ—σαρκός are, I conceive, meant to be explanatory of the ἀφειδία. Πλησμ. may only denote the fully satisfying the wants of the body so as to fit it for the service of the mind.

III. 1. The general sense contained in the first four verses seems to be as follows: "If, then, ye have really died with Christ unto the observance of Jewish rites (see ii. 20.), and have risen with him to better hopes, and, by his example, profess to pursue better aims; no longer grovel in worldly and fleshly superstition, but seek after and embrace those observances which are spiritual and heavenly; set your affections on heavenly, not on earthly objects; aiming at those blessings which are seated, where your Redeemer will dispense them,—who sitteth at the right hand of God now and for ever, to bless and reward all his faithful servants." Φρονεῖν is a stronger term than ζητεῖν, and is so used at Rom. viii. 5. Phil. iii. 10.

3. ἀπεθάνετε, &c.] The sense is well expressed by Abp. Newc., in the following paraphrase: "I say mind not earthly things. For ye have died to the things of this world (ii. 12.): and as Christ is invisibly with God, so your life (i. e. as Mr. Holden explains, your fruition of God, in which your future life will consist) is with God, concealed, deposited, or treasured up, with him, to be bestowed on you in his good time." See i. 5. 1 John iii. 2.

5. νεκρώσατε—γῆς.] The sense, I conceive, is: "obtain a complete mastery over the earthly and carnal lusts, which war in your members." To make his meaning clearer, the Apostle subjoins some examples of the lusts and vices which ought to be mortified. Πορνείαν, however, may include adultery. By ἀκαθ. and πάθος are denoted those enormities mentioned in Rom. i. And that such is the sense is clear from the only two other passages where St. Paul uses the word, Rom. i. 26. παρῶκεν αὐτοὺς εἰς πάθη ἀτιμίας. and 1 Thess. iv. 5. μὴ ἐν πάθει ἐπιθυμίας, καθάπερ καὶ τὰ ἔθνη τὰ μὴ εἰδότα τὸν Θεόν. Hence the Latin Pathicus. And as in those two passages πάθος is so connected with other words as to show that it must be taken in a bad sense, so here the words following ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν are used for that purpose alone.

Τὴν πλεονεξίαν is by most Expositors, ancient and modern, interpreted covetousness. As, however, that cannot well be reckoned among the lusts in the members, it should seem better, with some ancients (as Hilary) and moderns, as Est., Hamm., Dodd., Wakef., and others, to understand it of an insatiable desire of lawful sensual gratification. So Wakef. not ill renders, "inordinate desire." See Note on Eph. iv. 22. & v. 3, 5.

6. τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθ.] i. e. the heathens; as Eph. v. 6.

7. ἐν οἷς.] This refers to the ἀ., "which sins," at v. 6; and the ἐν αὐτοῖς has the same reference.

11. ὅπου οὐκ ἔνι—ἐλεύθερος] q. d. "in which new creation, or regeneration, it matters not whether any one be Jew or Gentile," &c. See a similar passage in Gal. iii. 28, and compare Acts x. 30. The omission here of καὶ βάρβαρος and Σκύθης, and between δούλος and ἐλεύθερος is remarkable, and has not a little perplexed Interpreters. One thing is certain,—that what is said in the second clause βάρβαρος—ἐλεύθερος is, as Calvin says, per amplificationem, or crescit oratio, as Dav. remarks; and thus the copula was omitted, not for brevity so much as for spirit, to which the asyndeton so much contributes. The ancient Versions, indeed, and also the most ancient MSS. supply the copula. And in a modern Version this is probably the best course; for our language, at least, will not admit of this asyndeton. The nor, however, of our common Version spoils the meaning; which, as Prof. Scholefield observes, is, "In which new creation none of these distinctions have any existence." Of the βάρβαρος, Σκύθης, it is remarked by Heinr. that they are not opposites, like the former (otherwise we should have had βάρβ. καὶ Ῥωμαῖος); but that there is a kind of climax; q. d. "barbarians, nay, the most barbarous of them, Scythians." As to the former, however, the βάρβαρος, καὶ Ῥωμαῖος, I can by no means agree with him. The Apostle would surely rather have written Ἕλλην καὶ βάρβαρος; certainly not Ῥωμαῖος. See Note on Acts xxviii. 2. Rom. i. 14. 1 Cor. xiv. 11. And as to the climax, we can hardly suppose the Apostle would thus intermingle climax with antithesis, and so spoil the whole. It should rather seem that there is an opposition; and, if so, it is probably that pointed out by Prof. Scholefield, that the "Scythians are opposed to other barbarians, as more barbarous, just as barbarians in general are opposed to Greeks." Yet thus the comparison is obviously one not a little irregular. Though, indeed, it is an anomaly not unprecedented; since I can myself instance one example, in a writer not the least polished of the later Grecism. I allude to Max. Tyrius, who at Diss. xvii. 4. has Ἄλλ' οὐδὲ τὸν Σκύθην οὐδὲ τὸν Ἕλληνα, οὐδὲ τὸν Πέρσην ἢ τὸν Ὑπερβόρειον. For certainly there was not that difference between the Persians and the Hyperboreans as between the Greeks and Scythians. The above view, moreover, seems required by the scope of the Apostle; which is to show that, under the new Covenant, all human distinctions, whether of nation, or of religion, of state (civilized or uncivilized), or of condition in life, would be of no avail, either to help or to exclude any one from the benefits of that dispensation. But distinction surely implies something like opposition; or, at least, comparison. And, after all, the ellipsis may be not of καὶ, but of ἢ, which is expressed in the passage of Maximus Tyrius above quoted. That the terms βάρβαρος καὶ Σκύθης have reference to knowledge and civilization, is plain from Rom. i. 14. Ἕλλησί τε καὶ βαρβ. σοφοῖς τε καὶ ἀνοήτοις. On the sense of ἀλλὰ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἐν πᾶσι Χριστός, see 1 Cor. xv. 23. and Eph. i. 23. and Notes.

12. ὡς ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Whitby shows that, "as the exhortation is addressed to the Colossians in general as a Church, the Apostle cannot be understood to speak of any absolute election of particular persons to eternal life; but must mean the election of them as a Church to the privileges and blessings of the Gospel, as Matt. xxiv. 22. 1 Pet. i. 2. compared with Rom. viii. 28—30. and Eph. i. 3—5." Indeed, the absence of the Article, and the close connection of ἐκλ. with the words following, exclude any such application. On the metaphor in ἐνδ. and σπλ., see Rom. xiii. 12. Eph. vi. 11. and the Notes. Instead of the common reading οἰκτιρμῶν, many good MSS. and all the early Editions except the Erasmian have οἰκτιρμοῦ, which has been adopted by almost every Editor from Beng. to Vat.; and, I think, rightly: the οἰκτιρμῶν, it should seem, arose from those who wished to accommodate this to the usage of the Apostle elsewhere.

15. βραβεύετω ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις. The sense may be, what some assign, "Let that peaceable disposition, enjoined by God for all Christians, be, as it were, an umpire to compose all differences between you. Since, however, Elsn. and Raphael have shown that βραβεύειν sometimes signifies "to rule," so the sense perhaps is, "let it be the director of your feelings." Εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλ., i. e. unto which [peace] also ye were called, i. e. in becoming Christians, and being initiated into his religion who preached peace on earth. Ἐν ἐνὶ σώματι, for εἰς ἐν σώμα, scil. εἶναι, i. e. "that you should be one body;" for without peace and concord, unity is out of the question. See Eph. iv. 3. Εὐχάριστοι is by some ancient and many modern Expositors, including most recent ones, interpreted gentle, courteous, amiable. And, indeed, there is much to countenance this sense. See Schleus. Lex. But more natural is the sense assigned by the Greek Commentators and most modern ones, including Grotius, Casaub., and Hein., "be ye thankful," i. e. feel and express thankfulness to God, viz. for having called you to such privileges and blessings. So supra ii. 7. περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ (scil. πίστει) ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.

16. ὁ λόγος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, &c.] I have in Rec. Syn. shown at large that the sense is, "Let the doctrine of Christ and the truth of the Gospel be deeply impressed on your hearts, accompanied with all spiritual wisdom." See Col. i. 9. and Eph. i. 8. The ἐν is for σύν. Διδάσκ., is, by anacoluthon, for διδάσκονσι. Render, "by teaching." The sense of the whole passage will appear from the Note on Eph. v. 18. Compare also Eph. iv. 29.

17. Ἀτ πᾶν supply κατὰ, "quod attinet ad." Ἐν ὀνόμ. Κ. Ἰ. signifies, "agreeably to his will and suitably to his Gospel." Compare 1 Cor. x. 31. Δι' αὐτοῦ is variously, but in general wrongly explained by the recent Commentators. The sense seems to be that assigned by the ancient Expositors, "by his mediation."

18—25. From general the Apostle proceeds to particular precepts. Compare Eph. v. 22—33. vi. 1—9. Ὡς ἀνῆκε is equivalent to the δίκαιον of Eph. vi. 1. The literal sense is, "is right and just, as being agreeable to the commandment of the Lord." Πικρ. (corresponding to the παροργ. of Ephesians) signifies to indulge in a spirit of irritability and exacerbation. In this sense the word occurs in Philo, but rarely in the Classical writers, though one example, from Demosthenes, is adduced by Schleus. Instead of the common reading τῷ Κυρίῳ, many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Edd. have ἐν Κυρίῳ, which is adopted by almost every Editor from Beng. to Vat.; and, it should seem, rightly, since this is the more difficult reading. For ὀφθαλμοδουλείαις, I have ventured to edit, from many of the most ancient MSS., and Chrys. and Theoph., as also the parallel passage of Ephesians, ὀφθαλμοδουλείᾳ, which was preferred by Beng. and approved by Griesb. It is probable that s was subjoined from the word following. At v. 24. εἰδότες—κλη. the argument is pointed at a possible objection; viz. What shall we get by such fidelity? The answer to which is, "Perhaps from your master nothing: but from the Lord ye will receive," &c. In ἀντ. τῆς κλη. the Genit. is exegetical, and signifies "the reward which consists in the inheritance of heaven in return [for your obedience]." See Eph. vi. 8. Ὁ ἀδικῶν must be referred, not, with some, to the master, but to the servant: though, by the words καὶ οὐκ ἔστι προσωποληψία, it is hinted, that if the master do wrong, he shall be punished. See Theophyl. and Theodoret. To prevent, however, misapprehension, this is fortified with a strong injunction to the masters, in the words following, which ought not to have been made the commencement of a new Chapter. Τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὴν ἰσότητα may be rendered "the just and right thing." So Thucyd. ii. 44. οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε ἴσάν τι ἢ δίκαιον βουλευέσθαι, οἷ. Compare also 2 Cor. viii. 13.

23. πάν ὅτι ἐὰν ποιῇτε.] See a Sermon on this text by Dr. Parr, Vol. II. xxxii. & xxxiii., where he considers, 1. the mingled rashness and meanness of permitting the love of worldly praise to constitute an exclusive principle of action. 2. The danger of that love, when it becomes excessive, and obstructs the discharge of our most important duties towards God. 3. The exact influence which a regard to the opinion of the world may in some circumstances very properly and meritoriously be allowed to have on our conduct. He then concludes as follows: "Singleness of heart, united with earnestness, activity mingled with patience, good will to our neighbour, animated by the love of God,—these are the duties which the Apostle enjoins on us as moral and redeemed creatures. And then only shall we perform them effectually, when disdaining to act as men-pleasers, with mere eye-service; and striving heartily to do what the Deity has commanded to be done, we aspire to immortality, as the precious inheritance of approved sons, and the glorious inheritance of servants faithful to their Lord."

IV. 2. τῇ προσ. προσκαρτ.] The same sentiment, more fully expressed, occurs in Eph. vi. 18. See Note supra iii. 15.

3. προσευχ. ἅμα καὶ π. ἡ.] See Eph. vi. 19. The Apostle, it should seem, desires their prayers, partly to suggest the duty of praying for each other. Θύραν. See Note on Acts xiv. 27.

4. ὡς δεῖ με λαλ.] There need have been no doubt as to the sense of this passage, of which the best comment is the parallel one of Eph. vi. 19, 20. By ὡς δεῖ is meant boldly and authoritatively, as one empowered to do so from being Apostle of the Gentiles.

5. ἐν σοφίᾳ περ.] "conduct yourselves with prudence," namely, to avoid giving unnecessary offence. τοὺς ἔξω, i. e. those who are without the fold of Christ, whether Heathens or Jews. See 1 Cor. xii. 13. Of τὸν καιρὸν ἐξαγ. the sense will fully appear from the Note on Eph. v. 15, 16.

6. ἐν χάριτι.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is for ἐπιχαρις, courteous, agreeable, as opposed to ascetic austerities, and therefore likely to make them esteemed. Comp. ii. 5. ἐπιχάριστοι. This will tend to fix the sense of the disputed phrase ἁλατι ἡρτ., which must not, with many, be interpreted of Divine wisdom, but have the sense "seasoned with the flavour of, made agreeable by being blended with, wisdom or good sense, (of which salt was the symbol) and thus made more palatable to the hearers." The Apostle means, I conceive, that kind of talent, which shows itself in terseness of thought and smartness of expression. Thus they would be enabled, as the Apostle adds, to give an answer to any one, who asked them a reason of the hope that was in them; and would make it more effectual, by being skilfully pointed, and adapted to circumstances.

7—fin.] This portion corresponds to Ephes. vi. 21. On ἀγαπ. ἀδ., see Note on Phil. ii. 25. and Eph. vi. 21.

8. ἵνα γνῶ, &c.] That he may obtain a knowledge of your affairs, and make report to me. This anxiety of the Apostle to have that knowledge appears from ii. 1. At τὰ sub. πράγματα;

9. ⁹ ὅς ἐστιν ἐξ ὑμῶν.] This is generally rendered “who is of you;” though some assign the sense “from you.” It should seem to mean, “who is your countryman.” See supra v. 12. We learn from Theodor, that this Onesimus was the runaway slave of Philemon, converted by Paul, and concerning whom he wrote his Epistle to Philemon. Τὰ ὧδε, “the present state of his affairs,” including whatever would be interesting to them as Christians.

10. ἐντολὰς] “instructions, whether by letter, or verbal.”

11. οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περ.] i. e. who are Jewish Christians. The οἵτινες must be resolved into καὶ οὗτοι, as is done by the Pesch. Syr. Translator. Παρηγορία is used, according to the popular idiom, (found also in our own language) for παρήγοροι, or for οἵπερ μοι παρηγόρουν.

12. ἀγωνιζόμενος ὑ. ὑμῶν] “praying fervently for you.” Ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς seems to signify “in his prayers.” Στήτῃ is not, as Heinr. imagines, for ἦτε. Its force is the same as at Eph. vi. 13. καὶ πάντα κατεργασάμενοι στήναι, and Phil. i. 27. and Galat. v. 1. On τέλειοι see 1 Cor. ii. 6. and Eph. iv. 13. Πεπλ. means thoroughly endued with all spiritual gifts and graces.” Ἐν παντὶ θελ., for εἰς τὸ πᾶν θέλημα. So Eph. iii. 19. ἵνα πληρωθῇτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλῆρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ. There is, however, a blending of the two modes of expression, and “complete in all the will of God” sufficiently well represents the sense.

14. Α. ὁ ἰατρός, ὁ ἀγαπ.] So I point, with the Pesch. Syr. and a few good Edd. Render, “Luke the physician, our beloved brother.” See Note on Eph. vi. 21.

16. ἡ ἐπιστ.] “this Epistle.” See Notes on 2 Cor. x. 10. and Eph. i. 1. 2.

— τὴν ἐκ Λαοδ.] These words have been thought to refer to a lost Epistle of St. Paul to the Laodiceans. But as no other instance is on record of a lost Epistle of the Apostles, we may hesitate to admit that to have been the case here. We have only to suppose, with almost all the best Commentators, that the Epistle in question was another copy of that to the Ephesians, that being in some measure a circular one.

17. Ἀρχίππῳ.] He is supposed to have been discharging the office of ruling Presbyter, i. e. Bishop at Colossæ. From the words of the address βλέπε, &c., it has been generally supposed, that he had been inattentive to the duties of his station, and that it is intended to convey a reproof. This, however, is so inconsistent with the commendatory manner in which he is mentioned by the Apostle to Philemon, that it surely cannot be admitted. Nor is such a conclusion at all necessary. We might as well suppose the admonition to Timothy, 2 Tim. i. 6. to “stir up the gift of God in him” implies reproof for negligence. Such language as this is only to be understood as exciting to renewed activity; for which, considering the then state of the Colossian Church, (beset with false teachers) there would be especial need.

18. τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Π.] See Note on Rom. xvi. 21—23. Μνημ. μου τῶν δ., “Be mindful of my bonds [so as to imitate my courage and constancy in the faith].”

Christianity was first planted at Thessalonica (about A. D. 50) by St. Paul, who formed a Church, partly of Jews, but chiefly of Gentiles. The unbelieving Jews, however, having, as usual, excited a persecution against him, he was forced to leave the newly planted Church, under great trials and many disadvantages, and to flee to Berea, and from thence to Athens and to Corinth. From which latter place this Epistle was written. The immediate occasion of its writing was, the favourable report which Timothy, whom he had sent to visit them in his stead (1 Tim. iii. 6.) had given of the steadfastness of the Thessalonians in the faith. But though the Apostle found in the state of things, as reported to him, much to commend, and scarcely any thing to censure; yet he thought proper, on account of the temptations to which the converts were exposed, from the evil communications of Jews and Heathens, to intermix cautions and warnings with his commendations and exhortations. In short, the leading design of the Apostle, in writing it, was to confirm them in the faith, to exhort them to courageous profession of it (notwithstanding the persecutions of the unbelieving Jews); and, above all, to excite them to such a practice of its duties as was becoming their high and holy calling.

The genuineness of this Epistle has never been doubted, being attested by citations from, or references to it in the Fathers, from the time of Polycarp downwards. It is almost universally admitted to have been written first of St. Paul's Epistles; though on the precise date the learned, as usual, differ. It could not well be written earlier than 52, nor later than 54. But the exactly intermediate date may most safely be left in medio. The style of the Epistle is more simple and perspicuous than any other of St. Paul's, and is characterized by deep earnestness and an affectionate spirit. He first reminds them of the formidable difficulties he had to encounter in their conversion; and warns them against those heathen impurities which they had so lately abandoned. Then, after inculcating brotherly love, he settles some points with regard to the resurrection (on which sundry erroneous notions were entertained), and enjoins them to a due preparation for the advent of Christ to judgment, and concludes with various practical counsels and instructions.

1. Σιλουανός.] Silvanus, or Silas, is first mentioned in Acts xv. 22. Τιμόθεος. See Note on Acts xvi. 1. At ἐν Θεῷ supply οὕση. At Θεσσαλ. the Article τῇ would, strictly speaking, be necessary; but it might very well be omitted.

2. εὐχαρ., &c.] Comp. similar sentiment at Rom. i. 8.—10. Eph. i. 16. 2 Tim. i. 3. 2 Thess. i. 3. ii. 13. where see Notes.

3. ἀδιαλείπτως] for πολλάκις. See Note on Rom. i. 9. Τοῦ ἔργου—ἐλπίδος. This is by Koppe and many of the more recent Commentators thought a periphrasis equivalent to πίστεως, καὶ ἀγαπῆς, καὶ ἐλπίδος. The proofs, however, adduced are insufficient. The ἔργου and κόπου must have an intensive effect, and denote, in the former case, zeal and constancy; and in the latter, alacrity and diligence. But to advert to particulars: “As (observes Professor Schott) in the words following, κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης and ὑπομονῆς τῆς are so used, that the former substantive indicates the thing as arising from the latter, so ἔργον τῆς πιστ. (opus quod ex fide proficiscitur) denotes sentiendi agendique ratio ex persuasione Christiana oriunda; nearly equivalent in sense to πίστις ἐνεργουμένη in Gal. v. 6.” A view of the sense supported by the most eminent Expositors, ancient and modern. By τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης is meant that diligence of exertion which springs from love, nearly equivalent to ἀγάπης κοπιώσης. Thus, again, τῆς ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπ. means that constancy of endurance, which springs from hope [in Christ or salvation.] See Εὐαγγ. Thus it is nearly equivalent to ἐλπίδος ὑπομενούσης. Τοῦ Κυρίου is a Genit. of object, for εἰς τὸν Κύριον, "hope reposed in the Lord, as the only bestower of salvation." Ἐμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c. This form is by some Expositors, ancient and modern, referred to the three nouns πίστις, ἀγάπη, and ἐλπίς, and supposed to denote (by a Hebraism derived from יְהוָה יָשַׁל) the purity and sincerity of those virtues. Others, however, connect the words with μνημ., and understand them of prayers to God. This latter view is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr., and is, not without reason, preferred by the best Expositors, from Benson to Schott.

4. εἰδότες, &c.] It is well shown by Pelt and Schott, that εἰδότες here, as well as μνημ. at v. 3, depends on the words of v. 3. εὐχαριστοῦμεν—προσευχῶν ἡμῶν. Ὑπὸ Θεοῦ (as Wolf, Pelt, and Schott, show) must be construed with ἡγαπ., not with τὴν ἐκλ.; as propriety of language almost requires, and the usage of the Apostle elsewhere (as 2 Thess. ii. 15. and Col. iii. 12.) confirms. So also the Peschito Syr. and Vulg. Versions. With ἡγαπ. ὑπὸ Θεοῦ. we may compare the Hebrew phrase יְהוָה יָשַׁל.

The ἐκλογ. is by some (especially the Calvinistic Commentators) understood of the absolute election of the persons, as individuals, to eternal life. But from iii. 5. 14. and 2 Thess. iii. 11. it appears that some were disobedient, and in danger of falling away. We may, therefore (with the best Commentators, from Chrys. down to Pelt and Schott), interpret it of their election to external privileges as a Church. I entirely agree with Dr. A. Clarke, that "the election here spoken of is that treated of by the Apostle at large in the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Ephesians; and that it is no irrevocable, unconditional, eternal, and personal election to everlasting glory, that is meant by the Apostle; but temporal election, the being called and chosen, as a body out of the world by the Word and Spirit (see John xv. 19): that all was specifically conditional as far as their final salvation was concerned; so that without any merit on their side, they were chosen and called to those blessings which, if used aright, would lead them to eternal glory." See more in Zanch, Grotius, Whitby, Hamm., Benson, Mackn., and Tomline.

5. The scope of this verse seems to be, to intimate their full persuasion that this conversion of the Thessalonians to the Christian faith was marked by the efficiency of Divine power, as attested by the most indubitable signs. See Koppe, Pelt, and Schott. Here, Pelt observes, are subjoined the signs by which that election to the Christian religion might be known. Τὸ εὐαγγ. ἡμῶν (the best Commentators are agreed) signifies, "our preaching of the Gospel," or the Gospel as preached by us; as in ii. 4. Rom. xvi. 25. Gal. ii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 13. 2 Tim. ii. 8. With ἐγενήθη εἰς ὑμᾶς, ad vos pervenit, Pelt compares Gal. iii. 14. ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἡ εὐλογία γένηται. The words ἐν δυνάμει καὶ ἐν Πν. ἀγ. (put for ἐν δυν. τοῦ Πν. ἀγ.) are by many eminent Expositors understood of the miracles worked, and the supernatural gifts imparted by St. Paul. See Rom. xv. 19. 1 Cor. ii. 4. The sense, however, must not be confined to these; but (as the context requires) the words are to be understood, also, nay chiefly (with Calvin, Beza, and others, down to Scott and Pelt) of the internal power of the Gospel on the heart, effected by the Holy Spirit, and attested by the fruits of the Spirit. This, too, is plain from the ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ, which, according to the first-mentioned sense, would have to be taken (unless a harsh transposition were supposed) of the Apostle, namely, his παρρησία. The expression is well rendered by the Pesch. Syr. "cum firmissima persuasione," a full persuasion and complete conviction. Thus it is equivalent to ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστει (i. e. ἐν π. πεπληροφορομένῃ) at Heb. x. 22. and πεποιθήσεις πολλὰ at 2 Cor. viii. 22. Compare 1 Cor. ii. 4.

The scope of the next words καθὼς—δι' ὑμᾶς seems to be, as Chrys. points out, to propose himself as their example. The comparison, however, is left imperfect, and there is in οἴδατε a reference to the εἰδότες at v. 4. The full sense of the briefly worded καθὼς οἴδατε οἱ οὗτοι ἐγενήθημεν seems to be that expressed by Schott: "inasmuch as ye well know [and can testify] what sort of persons we have been among you; i. e. with what Divine power and πληροφορία we have taught you, and with what confidence, alacrity, and patient endurance we have borne the sufferings we had to undergo for yours and the Gospel's sake."

6. καὶ ὑμεῖς μιμ. ἡμῶν ἐγενήθη.] Here it is not necessary to suppose so long an ellipsis as is done by Benson and Mackn. It is sufficient to supply οἶτω, taken from the words left to be understood in the preceding clause. Thus the words will be equivalent to ὥστε γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς μιμητὰς, &c., which the Apostle perhaps would have written, but that the next clause commences with ὥστε γενέσθαι. The imitation here enjoined is not, I conceive, what most Commentators make it, an imitation of Christ and the Apos-

ties in bearing afflictions, but (as Zanch, Grot., Dodd., Scott, and Pelt explain) in a general way. Indeed, the words ἐν ἑλίψει πολλῇ form an intermediate clause, thrown in, to note a circumstance attendant on the principal subject of the sentence, their imitation of the Lord; namely, that it was "amidst much tribulation:" for so I would render, with Abp. Newc., Goesch., and Schott. See Acts xiv. 22, compared with Rom. v. 3. When the Apostle says that they were imitators of him and the Lord, he, I think, means imitators of him, and thereby of the Lord, whom he imitated. This is confirmed by a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xi. 1. μιμηταὶ μου γίνεσθε, καθὼς καὶ ἐγὼ Χριστοῦ. By μετὰ χαρᾶς Πνεύμ. ἁγ. is meant a joy inspired by the Holy Spirit, which accompanied and rewarded their alacrity in receiving the word, and their firmness in adhering to it; and "which was (as Benson and Mackn. observe) an evidence of their election, and a pledge of their title to a happy immortality." Comp. Rom. xiv. 17, and Acts xv. 41. The Genit. here denotes author, or efficient cause.

7. ὥστε γεν.] "insomuch that ye became exemplars," &c. On the term τύπ. see 1 Cor. x. 6. 11. Phil. iii. 17, and Notes.

8. ἀφ' ὑμῶν.] The Apostle now dilates on the excellent effects of this good example of the Thessalonians, whose fame had spread far and wide. (Schott.) This is explained by most of the modern Commentators "by your instrumentality." The literal sense (of place), however, adopted by the earlier Expositors, must not be excluded. In fact, both senses seem meant. "From you the sound of the Gospel first issued, and by your means was spread abroad in all Macedonia." With the construction, indeed, of the sentence, owing to the οὐ μόνον—ἀλλὰ καὶ the Commentators are not a little perplexed. They are generally agreed in supposing a transposition of οὐ μόνον, which must be taken, they think, with ἐξήχεται. See Koppe, Pelt, and Schott. But it should rather seem that the true notion of the construction can alone be attained by considering the passage as blending two modes of expression, thus: "For from you sounded the word of the Lord, over all Macedonia and Achaia; and not only has your faith in God been well known there, but the report of it has been disseminated every where else,"—namely, in most of the countries of the civilized world; with which Macedonia and Achaia had constant commercial communication. In ἐξήχ. there is an allusion to the κήρυγμα of the Gospel, and to that sonorous voice, as it were of a trumpet (see Is. lviii. 1. Rev. i. 10.), with which κήρυκες (like our cryers) were accustomed to speak. How honourable it was for the Gospel to issue forth from any place first of all the places of a country, we may infer from 1 Cor. xiv. 36. ἡ ἀφ' ὑμῶν ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθε; By λαλεῖν τι, "to say any thing," is meant either in commendation, or congratulation.

9, 10. αὐτοὶ γάρ.] i. e. as Grot. observes (by the construction per τὸ σμαινόμενον, like that at Acts viii. 5.) οἱ ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ scil. πᾶσι τόποις, those to whom the tidings of your conversion were brought.

—ὅποιαν εἰσοδὸν ἔσχομεν.] Of this phrase the sense has been debated; but it seems to be: "What a successful entrance we had unto you," i. e. what a favourable reception we experienced at your hands. For that is implied by ὁποῖος, qualis. The words καὶ πῶς—ἐρχ. are explanatory of the ὅποιαν εἰς. ἔσχ.; where ἐπεστρ. πρὸς τὸν Θ. is a formula occurring also in Acts xi. 21. xiv. 15. 2 Cor. iii. 16., and which denotes by a Hebraic and figurative phrase, conversion from idolatry and paganism, or Judaism, to Christianity. The contrary is spoken of in 2 Cor. xii. 2., namely, a going πρὸς τὰ εἰδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα. The words following show the purpose of this turning; [ὥστε, or εἰς τὸ] δουλεύειν, to worship and serve. On Θεῷ ζῶντι καὶ ἀληθ., see John xvii. 1—5.

10. καὶ ἀναμένειν, &c.] "Here," Pelt remarks, "we have those points adverted to, which distinguish the Christian religion from Judaism; and this and the preceding verse contain a brief summary of the most important doctrines of Christianity, theoretical and practical." I would add, that "waiting for Jesus Christ's second advent," is a beautiful expression for receiving him as their Redeemer; implying obedience to his precepts, and faithful profession of his religion. The same metaphor occurs in Rom. viii. 19. 25. 1 Cor. i. 7. Gal. v. 5. 1 Cor. i. 7. 2 Thess. iii. 5. This I find confirmed by Calvin; who points out, that the expression, waiting for the advent of Christ to judgment, implies the extreme difficulty of this turning unto the Lord, and the deep anxiety [expressed in the above passages of the N. T.] by which alone it can, humanly speaking, be effected. Here the expression has much propriety, being meant, as Pelt suggests, to lead to the principal purpose of the Epistle; which was to correct the errors that had arisen as to Christ's return from heaven. With the whole passage compare a kindred one of Phil. iii. 20.

— τὸν ῥύμενον.] Render, who delivereth, as in the Pesch. Syr. ("qui liberat"), Calvin, and Abp. Newc. The present has been thought to be put for the future, to denote certainty. But it is not necessary to resort to that principle here; since, according to the usual force, the Present has, as Schott acknowledges, great propriety and suitableness to the context; as denoting, says Piscator, "certainty of action," or rather what is done at all times, as when we say, The sun shines. For this deliverance, which commenced at our Lord's death and sacrifice, may be said to be continually carrying forward (so 2 Cor. i. 10. ὅς ἐκ τηλικούτου θανάτου ἐβρύσατο ἡμᾶς, καὶ ῥύεται εἰς ὃν ἡλπίκαμεν, ὅτι καὶ ἔτι ῥύσεται. Heb. vii. 25. "He ever liveth to make intercession for us") by Himself our Advocate with the Father, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete: and this He will himself complete at the last day, when death spiritual as well as temporal shall be swallowed up in victory; a victory achieved over Sin, Death, and the Law, by "Him who loved us, and washed us from our sins by his own blood."

II. Having, C. i. 4, 5, briefly touched on the subject of his coming to the Thessalonians, the Apostle here pursues it more at large, both to indulge the high feeling of satisfaction, which he experiences at the success with which he had, under the Divine blessing, preached the Gospel to them; and to confirm the minds of the Thessalonians in that sound doctrine, which they had received from the Apostle and his colleagues, so that they might hold it fast in spite of all the artifices of the false teachers; and to excite them to imitate the fidelity, diligence, and truly Christian spirit of their teacher. (Schott.)

1. The γὰρ here refers, I conceive, to the ὁποῖαν εἴσοδον ἔσχ. at i. 5. 9. q. d. "I need scarcely have said what I did; for ye yourselves know."

2. Here, as Pelt remarks, e contrario idem probat. Ἀλλὰ ἰμο. Καὶ after ἀλλὰ is not found in very many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and all the early Editions, except the Erasmusian, and is cancelled by almost every Editor from Beng. and Wets. to Vater. It might, indeed, be justified from internal evidence; but it is so weak in external authority, that that is unnecessary. It arose, I suspect, from the ἰμο etiam of the Latin glossographers. The προ in προπαθόντες need not be regarded, as it is by most recent Commentators, as pleonastic. See Acts xvi. 22. xvii. 4. The ὑβρισθέντες refers to his being scourged; a great insult to a Roman citizen. Ἐπαρρ. ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, &c. i. e. (as in Acts

xiv. 8.) we took courage, in dependence on the aid of our God, to speak, &c. Ἐν ἁγῶνι may be rendered, with many Commentators, "with earnestness and solicitude," as Col. ii. 1. And in this sense the word occurs in Thucyd. vii. 71. ὁ δὲ περὶς πολλὴν τὸν ἁγῶνα καὶ ἐξίστασιν τῆς γνώμης εἶχε. i. e. with earnest and anxious intentness. Or it may mean, "amidst a great struggle," i. e. danger. So Thucyd. ii. 45. ὁρῶ μέγαν τὸν ἁγῶνα. also Arrian cited by Wolf: ὅτι ἐν ἁγῶνι ξυνέχεται τὰ κατὰ σφᾶς, καὶ βοηθεῖν δεῖ. But the former interpretation seems preferable.

3, 4. The οὐκ is here emphatic; what is here said being meant as a reply to those who accused him of doing what he did under the influence of error (πλάνης), or acting through imposture (ἐν δόλῳ), or at least of being swayed by interested motives, ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας. So Calvin thus defines and distinguishes the charges: 1. imposture as regarded the substance of the doctrine; 2. impurity, as regarded the affections of mind and motives; 3. guile, as regarded the mode of action. These charges, then, the Apostle simply and gravely denies; and then shows how ungrounded they were; since his conduct could not be accounted for on the supposition of fanaticism, or of imposture, or of interested motives in general. Παράκλησις, in this context, denotes not exhortation only, but all other branches of pastoral instruction. So Chrys. interprets it ἐδιδάχη. Ἀκαθ. denotes, in general, the being swayed by corrupt motives, whether of wealth, fame, &c. See Tittm. de Synon. N. T. p. 150. So Arrian Epict. iv. 11. cited by Koppe, ψυχῆς ἀκαθαρσία, δόγματα πονηρά. Δόλω means the knowingly beguiling men into error, by misstating, or adulterating the truth; or at least undertaking and carrying on the work of evangelizing with fraudulent views, or to answer sinister ends. In short, he means to say, that they are neither themselves deceived nor do they wilfully deceive others; they are neither fanatics, nor impostors or cheats. Moreover, the Apostle might here not only intend an answer to his accusers, but mean this as a retort upon them; the ἡμῶν being emphatic; for the false teachers of the Jews, or Judaizers, and the heathen Philosophers and Sophists were, as Dr. Chandler has shown, themselves notoriously guilty of that very conduct which they imputed to the Apostles, being the veriest impostors and cheats, γοῆτες καὶ τερατείας μεστοί, says Lucian; who adds that the impudence of their hypocrisy was intolerable: οὐκ ἦνεγκα τὴν αἰσχύνῃ τῆς ὑποκρίσεως.

4. Here the Apostle declares what was really the origin of his instruction, and the disposition suitable to such an origin. (Schott.)

that this is an irregular construction, to be resolved into καθὼς ἐδοκίμασε ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεός, ὥστε πιστεῦναι ἡμῖν τὸ εὐαγγ. See Win. Gr. Gr. § 38. 1. Note 2. Perhaps, however, there is a blending of two constructions, "as we were approved by God," and, "as we were put in trust with the Gospel." 'Αρέσκοντες, "endeavouring to please." I would compare Ignat. ad Rom. C. 2. οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμῖν (I conjecture ὑμᾶς) ἀνθρωπαρεσκῆσαι, ἀλλὰ Θεῷ ἀρέσαι. This use of ἀρέσκω is thought Hellenistic; but I have noted an example of it in Soph. Antig. 74. ἐπεὶ πλείων χρόνος, "Οὐ δέ μ' ἀρέσκειν τοῖς κάτω (scil. θεοῖς), τῶν ἐνθάδε. The ὁ δοκιμάζων τὰς καρδίας is equivalent to the ὁ ἐρευνῶν τὰς καρδίας, Rom. viii. 27. or ὁ καρδιογνώστης, Acts i. 24.

5, 6. The Apostle now proves this integrity and purity of intention, by adverting to two things which usually sway men; vanity or ambition, and avarice. But before he notices those points, he briefly preoccupies the charge of flattery (of which his adversaries were notoriously guilty), and he proves himself not to be a men-pleaser; and that by simply appealing to themselves as his witnesses, who, had he been guilty of base adulation (the surest mark of a sordid mind and corrupt motives) must surely have known it.

To advert to a few points of phraseology, in ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας we have a peculiar idiom, which we need not (with some) regard as a mere Hebraism, for ἐν κολακείᾳ; or, with others, as put for in accusation adulationis (which would weaken the sense, and perhaps be scarcely true in sentiment); but, with Koppe and Schott, we may take ἐν λόγῳ εἶναι for γίνεσθαι ἐν λόγῳ, to be conversant in words, &c., and consider the Genitive κολακείας as put for the adjective κολακευτικῇ; the sense being, "nunquam versati sumus in sermonis genere adulatorio," were not conversant in the words of flattery, used not flattering speeches. With respect to οὔτε ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας, these words are variously explained. Some sink the sense of προφ.; others think it serves to qualify the πλεον.; and others assign senses more or less objectionable. It is, I think, best (with the Pesch. Syr., Beza, Grot., Benson, Chandler, Flatt, and Schott) to take ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας (sub. ἐγενήθημεν) to mean uti prætexit avaritiæ; this being a popular way of expressing the carrying on any plan of avarice under a fair pretence, as the false teachers did. For the truth of which protestation, Paul appeals to the only Judge, who cannot err, even the Searcher of all hearts.

— οὔτε ζητοῦντες ἐξ ἀνθρ. δόξαν.] The Apostle here adverts to another kind of avarice, ambition or the thirst of fame. At ζητοῦντες supply ἡμεν, from the ἐγενήθημεν of the preceding verse: both being for ἐζητήσαμεν, on which δυνάμενοι ("though we might") is suspended. It may seem strange that the Apostle should write ἐξ ἀνθρώπων and ἀπ' ἄλλων, not ἐξ ἀνθρ. and ἐξ ἄλλων, nor ἀπ' ἀνθρ. and ἀπ' ἄλλων. But the reason will appear by considering the distinction of signification in ἐξ and ἀπὸ, which is well pointed out (after Herm. on Soph. Elect. 65.) by Schott,—namely, that ἀπὸ always has reference to the mediate origin (or second cause) (for examples to the thing or person that gave occasion to any thing said or done) but ἐκ (as also παρὰ) to the immediate, or first cause. In the present passage this distinction is very discernible: and the sense is well expressed by Schott as follows: "non expetii laudem, quæ ex ore hominum, labores meos, doctrinam, discipulorum multitudinem admirantium et prædicantium (immediate) mihi contingeret (idem q. παρὰ ἀνθρώπων, Joh. v. 41.) sive vobis, seu aliis catibus, quos doctrina evangelica imbuisset, huic laudi et admirationi occasionem præbentibus." With respect to the expression ἐν βάρει εἶναι, Expositors are not agreed whether it signifies "to be burdensome to you," or "to use authority over you." The latter interpretation is adopted by the most ancient and many modern Expositors, as being more agreeable to the words preceding and following. But it should seem that the sentiment, in the clause οὔτε ζητοῦντες—ἄλλων is subordinate to that in οὔτε ἐγενήθημεν ἐν προφ. πλεονεξίας, and that the words δυνάμενοι ἐν βάρει εἶναι, &c. (which are parenthetical) refer to the principal one. This view is confirmed by the language of the Apostle elsewhere. So at verse 9. πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαι τινα ὑμῶν, also 2 Thess. iii. 8. ἐπιβαρῆσαι. 2 Cor. xi. 9. ἐν παντὶ ἀβαρὴ ὑμῖν ἐμάντων ἐτήρησα. Whereas the other signification of βάρος is no where found in the N. T. Perhaps, however, the Apostle may here have intended both senses; meaning that he might, in virtue of his authority and privileges as an Apostle, have ruled them authoritatively and imperiously, and been chargeable to them, by taking pay for his services.

7. ἥπιοι] i. e. as it were a mild parent. So the Homeric πατήρ δ' ὡς ἥπιος ἦεν. To avoid a confusion of metaphor, it is proper (as the best Expositors suggest) to take the next words with what follows, not with what precedes. First the Apostle compares himself to an indulgent father; then to a tender nursing-mother. In the expression θάλπη there is an allusion to the manner in which birds cherish their young, by placing them under their wings (Deut. xxii. 6. Matt. xxiii. 37.), or nursing-mothers warm them in their bosoms; implying, indeed, every necessary sustentation.

8. οὕτως ἡμειρόμενοι ὑμῶν.] “thus having a strong affection for you.” Instead of ἡμεῖς, many MSS. and Fathers, and some early Editions have ὁμεῖς, which has been edited by Matth., Griesb., Koppe, Tittm., Vater, and Schott; but perhaps without sufficient reason. External authority, indeed, is much in its favour; but internal, I apprehend, is against it. Ὅμεῖς, is a word destitute of any authority, being found only in a few MSS. (not the text) of Job iii. 21. οὐ ἡμεῖρονται τοῦ θανάτου. And, notwithstanding what Matthæi urges, it is, as Rinck says, contrary to analogy. Indeed, Schott, who adopts ὁμ., has not proved that the word ever existed. He appeals, indeed, to Hesych., Phot., and Phavor. But they, copying from the Scholiasts, manifestly had the present passage in view; and, therefore, to infer from them the existence of the word, would be reasoning in a circle. The same objection, also, applies to his argument, that “ὁμ. is entitled to the preference, as being the rarer word:” for that Canon surely cannot hold good of words so rare as no where to be found, especially if they would be formed contrary to analogy; indeed, ὁμ. can easily be accounted for as a mere error of the scribes. See Rinck. It should seem that the o arose from the ρ preceding. In the passage of Job it arose evidently from the οι preceding, as the testimony of the text (almost all the MSS. having ἡμεῖς.) shows. Matthæi, indeed, says the word occurs in Symmachus’s Version of Ps. lxii. 2. But the Editions there have ἡμεῖς. And if even ὁμεῖς. were found in some MSS., ὁμ. might be easily accounted for from the ω preceding. The scribes, I suspect, fell into the error, because ἡμεῖς. never came into the common dialect, and is rarely found in any but good writers. Thus when an o or ω preceded, the scribes, thinking of the common word ὁμνηρεύσθαι, easily manufactured ὁμείρεσθαι; the ει and η being perpetually confounded. Finally, as to what Schott urges, that ὁμ. is the stronger term, that may be doubted, for ἡμεῖς. is surely a very significant term. Not to say that ὁμεῖς. would yield a sense little suitable, for it could only mean closely connected with; whereas the sense intended by the Apostle is “warmly attached to.” Those who adopt ὁμ., and suppose the word to come from ὁμοῦ and εἰρεσθαι, besides being ignorant that οὐ is never cut off at the junctura, in derivation, fall into the same error with those who derive ἡμεῖρεσθαι from ἡμᾶς and εἶρω; though it is plainly derived from ἡμερος, on which see Hemsterh. on Lennep Etymol. For the above reasons, then, I have thought proper to follow Wets. and Rinck, in retaining the common reading, found in the Ed. Princ., and which was read, I doubt not, by the Pesch. Syr. Translator.

—εὐδοκοῦμεν] “we were ready.” Literally, “we should have thought good.” A sense found in the N. T. and the later Greek writers. The usual construction with μεταδοῦναι, the Genitive and Dative, is here altered to the Accusative and Dative, from the nature of the thing.

9. μνημονεύετε γάρ—Θεοῦ.] Compare 2 Thess. iii. 7—9. Μνημ., “ye, no doubt, remember,” i. e. ye must remember. Κόπον καὶ μόχθον, by hendiadys, for “my toilsome labour;” namely, of his trade. Νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας is equivalent to ἀδιαλείπτως, assidue, early and late.

10. ὁσίως.] ‘Ος. regards duty towards God; δικ., that towards men; and ἀμέμπτως denotes by implication the repute of performing both.

11, 12. The construction is here somewhat irregular, and can only be adjusted by repeating ἐγενήθημεν from v. 10, or (which is better) supplying ἡμεν, to be fetched from ἐγενήθημεν.

—παρακ., παραμ., and μαρτυρ.] I would not, with Koppe and Rosenm., regard this as synonymous. Παρακ. and παραμ. differ as our exhort and persuade. The same sense of παραμ. occurs in Hom. II. θ. 417. & 680. Xenoph. Venat. vi. 25. Μαρτυρ. is a stronger term than the former, signifying to solemnly urge, urgently press, as in a kindred passage of Eph. iv. 17, and also Thucyd. vi. 80, and viii. 53. For μαρτυρούμενοι, I have, with Matth. and Schott, edited μαρτυρόμενοι, from about 30 MSS. of various recensions, and the Ed. Princ. It is well remarked by Schott, that μαρτυρεῖσθαι cannot admit of the sense here required. “And although (continues he) Expositors assert that μαρτυρεῖσθαι is sometimes used for μαρτύρεσθαι, yet they do not prove it.” The truth is, that though μαρτύρεσθαι is sometimes used for μαρτυρεῖσθαι in the sense testari, sanctè affirmare, yet there is no proof that μαρτυρεῖσθαι was ever used for μαρτύρεσθαι. See Poppe on Thucyd. viii. 53. 2. and Note on Acts xxvi. 22. The common reading, doubtless, arose (as Rinck points out) from alliteration with the preceding verse. the intent and effect of the foregoing admonition, compare Col. i. 16. Βασιλ. καὶ δόξαν may be for βασιλείαν ἔνδοξαν, as almost all the recent Commentators suppose; but I agree with Schott, that it is not necessary to resort to that principle here; since the word may retain its proper substantive force, so as to further explain and illustrate βασιλείαν; q. d. "et [ad] felicitatem gloriosam regni Div. consortio vobis futuram."

13. Here we have, Pelt observes, a completion of what was begun to be said supra 2. See also i. 6. Διὰ τοῦτο, "wherefore [since we have been thus successful among you]" we, &c. In παραλαβόντες—Θεοῦ there is a transposition usual in St. Paul (and frequently in Thucyd.) by which the Genitive is separated from the noun which governs it, by intervening words. Λόγον ἀκοῆς is not (as most recent Commentators imagine) for λόγον, or ἀκοή. It is well regarded by Theophyl. as equivalent to κήρυγμα, ὡς διὰ τοῦ ἀκουσθῆναι πιστευόμενον. and so Æcum. explains. See Rom. iii. 16. John xvi. 38. The Apostle had in view Is. liii. 1. τίς ἐπίστευσε τῇ ἀκοῇ ἡμῶν; This I find confirmed by the opinion of Schott. Ἐδέξασθε is well rendered by Newc. "ye embraced it." I would compare Thucyd. i. 95. ἐδέξαντο τοὺς λόγους, καὶ προσεῖχον τὴν γνώμην. The term differs from παραλαμβάνειν, as implying more or less of approbation. It may be observed, that there is here a brevity of expression for ἐδέξασθε αὐτὸν ὡς οὐ λόγον, &c. In ὃς καὶ ἐνεργεῖται the ὃς is by some, as Theodor., Storr, and Kop., referred to Θεοῦ: but the best Expositors are in general agreed in referring it to the more remote antecedent λόγον τ. Θεοῦ.; which, indeed, is required by the words following. Ἐνεργ. signifies "is made effectual," or, shows itself in its effects,—namely, (as is just afterwards shown) in producing an imitation of the best examples of Christian piety and virtue. This view I find supported by the opinion of Schott, who maintains that ἐνεργεῖσθαι is never in the N. T. used as a middle form, with an Active sense; but always (especially in St. Paul's writings) as a Passive. Indeed, BP. BULL. Exam. p. 9, goes yet further, and asserts that it is scarcely ever so used, even in the Classical writers, (I believe he might have said never,) but always in a Passive sense. And after adducing, as examples of the N. T. use, Rom. vii. 5. 2 Cor. i. 6, he rescues 2 Cor. iv. 12. from the misinterpretation by which an active sense is by many there attributed to ἐνεργεῖται. He also vindicates the same sense to Eph. iii. 20, and Col. i. ult., and finally the present passage, 2 Thess. ii. 7, and James v. 10. And though Bp. Bull in these passages renders energy, by perfect, while Schott adopts efficax reddi, yet both are agreed on the sense. The latter explaining it of passing from the mind and understanding into the life and actions, and thus bringing forth fruit. 2 Pet. i. 8; while the former ably elicits the full sense by the weighty remark: "Scilicet tum demum in homine Dei Verbum ἐνεργεῖσθαι, sive perfecti, dicitur, cum finem obtinet, et effectum sibi destinatum, quæ est FIDEI OBEDIENTIA."

14. This verse is meant to illustrate the efficacy of the faith of the Thessalonians by their courageous endurance of persecution, and to suggest a strong reason for their constancy, by advertising to their resemblance therein to the primitive Christians of Judæa, and even of the Lord himself.

— ὑμεῖς γὰρ μιμ., &c.] The point of imitation here chiefly intended, seems, from the context, to be bearing the same troubles and persecutions as the persons in question with the same fortitude. So supr. i. 6. μιμηταὶ ἡμῶν ἐγενήθητε καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, δεξάμενοι τὸν λόγον ἐν ὁλίγῃ πολλῇ. On ἐκκλησιῶν—Χρ. 'I., see i. 1, and Acts viii. 1—4.

15. ἰδίους.] This has been cancelled by Griesb. and others; but rashly. We can hardly suppose that a marginal gloss should have crept into nearly all the MSS. It is far more probable that it was cancelled in a few copies, from a groundless fear lest it might countenance the dogma of Marcion, that the Jewish Prophets were not the Prophets of the true God; and, as an excuse for the omission, they would be likely to plead a corruption of the text; and to cast that on Marcion himself would clench the argument. Or perhaps it was thrown out by some over nice Critics of Græcism; this use being not very Classical. Or finally it might, as Schott observes, (who retains the word,) have arisen by homœoteleuton with the preceding word. Besides, the expression carries with it great emphasis, as in Tit. i. 12. ἴδιος αὐτῶν προφῆτης. See Benson and Chandler. Ἐκδιωκ. is more significant than διωκ., denoting "to chase away and annihilate." In Θεῷ μὴ ἀρεσκόντων we are not, I think, to understand the μὴ ἀρεσκ., as is usually done, in the sense "do not seek to please God;" but the term is to be taken, with the best Commentators, ancient and modern, per meosin, for "are in disfavour with God," are Zeosstyngeis, as Josephus himself admits them to have been. ἀνθρώποις ἐναντίων there is an allusion to that unsocial, or rather antisocial, spirit towards other nations, called by Tacitus the adversus omnes alios hostile odium, and of which the later Greek, and the Latin Classical writers, furnish striking proofs; some of them here adduced by the Commentators. The scope of this verse and the next is well pointed out by Chandler.

16. κωλύοντων.] Render, "Not forbidding, but hindering." So the best Expositors, from Theophyl. downward, interpret. This signification is not uncommon in the N. T.; whereas the other scarcely occurs more than once. By λαλῆσαι must here be meant generally giving instruction in religion. "ἵνα σωθῶν," "in order to their being saved, or put into the way of salvation, [as well as the Jews]."

— εἰς τὸ ἀναπληρ.] This is rightly considered by the Greek Commentators, and the earlier modern Expositors, as put for ἵνα ἀναπληρῶσι. q. d. "they act as if they meant to fill up," &c. So our Lord, Matt. xxiii. 30, 31, 32, after showing that they are true sons of their fathers, who slew the prophets, ironically bids them "fill up the measure of the iniquities of their fathers." See Benson and Schott. That passage is, indeed, the best comment on the present, and was probably in the mind of the Apostle. Compare Gen. xv. 16. Some of the more recent Commentators, indeed, would render, "so that they thereby fill up." But, not to say that that eventual force of εἰς τὸ is somewhat unusual, the sense yielded is too feeble for the occasion. And of this opinion, I find, is Schott. Πάντοτε, "at all times;" i. e. now as well as formerly. It is well remarked by Schott, that the word is put last in the sentence not without reason; namely, for the purpose of intimating their perpetual obstinacy, which admitted of no repentance.

— ἐφθασε δὲ—τέλος.] The sense is, "But the punishment [due to their offences, and pre-determined by God] is, in a manner, come upon them, and must terminate in their utter destruction." So the best Expositors, ancient and modern, interpret. The signal fulfilment of these words, only a few years after, is fully attested by the great Jewish historian.

17—20. Here the Apostle reverts from the Jews to the Thessalonians, and, agreeably to what he had said at v. 8, expresses his great desire to again visit them, and the reason why he has sent

Timothy to them. Ἀπορφ. is a very significant term, (and a rare word, though I have myself in Rec. Syn. adduced one example from Æschyl. Choeph. 244.) properly denoting separation of children from their parents, but sometimes, as here, of parents from their children. The expression is, in the present case, peculiarly apt,—since, by a continuance of the metaphor at vv. 7 & 11, the Apostle is considered as their spiritual father.

— πρὸς καιρὸν ὥρας.] This is by many eminent Commentators taken for πρὸς καιρὸν, or πρὸς ὥραν. But it should rather seem that we have here a blending of two synonymous expressions, in order to give a sense stronger than either separately. So Theophyl. and Theodor. rightly explain it by πρὸς ὀλίγον. In προσώπῳ, οὐ καρδίᾳ there is a delicate turn. And at περισσ. ἐσπουδ. and ἐν πολλῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ there is a blending of two modes of expression, denoting great desire, and earnest endeavours to satisfy it. Τὸ πρόσωπον ὑμῶν ἰδ. is a Hebrew, or rather primitive expression, for "to visit you."

18. ἐγὼ μὲν Παῦλος] "I Paul at least." This insertion was intended to prevent any mistake in the use here of the plural for the singular.

— ἅπαξ καὶ δις] i. e. not once only, but again a second time. On which sense see Note on Phil. iv. 16. It thus differs from that use found in Nehem. xiii. 20, and 1 Macc. iii. 30, by which the expression merely denotes once or twice out of a small uncertain number. Ἐνέκοψεν ἡ. ὁ Σατ. "Satan thwarted our purpose." See Luke xxii. 3. 1 Cor. vii. 5, and Note on Gal. v. 7.

19. τίς γὰρ—παρουσία] The γὰρ refers, I conceive, to a clause omitted; q. d. "[And no wonder we should be thus desirous of seeing you] for what," &c. The sentence following would have been plainer if expressed declaratively; but instead of this, the Apostle elegantly makes it interrogative; to which is subjoined the same sentiment expressed declaratively, with a γὰρ referring to the answer supposed to be given; q. d. "[Are not ye such," &c. I may with truth say that ye are] for ye are." In ἐλπ. χαρ. and καυχ. there is a climax.

III. 1. μηκέτι στέγοντες.] Here, as the best Commentators are agreed, must be supplied from the subject matter τὸν πόθον ὑμῶν (the desire of seeing you). See Note on 1 Cor. ix. 12. For a reconciliation of a seeming discrepancy between what is here said, from v. 1—7. and Acts xvii. 14. sq. xviii. 5. see Paley's Hor. Paul., Pelt in his Proleg., and Curt. cited by him in loc.

2. παρακαλέσαι.] The best Commentators are agreed, that as παρακ. is united with στηριῶσαι περὶ τῆς πίστεως, the sense is, "to exhort or admonish," as at Acts xvi. 32, where στηριῶζειν and παρακ. are likewise conjoined.

3. τῷ.] This denotes cause, like the Hebr. ו put before Infinitives; and thus it is equivalent to the εἰς τὸ at v. 5. As to the reading τοῦ, it is evidently a gloss, or correction. The sense of σαίνεσθαι here is somewhat disputed, especially as the word occurs no where else in the N. T. It seems to be best explained by Chrys. and the ancient Commentators by κινεῖσθαι, σαλευέσθαι, ταράττεσθαι: a signification of the word often found in the Classical writers, especially the Poets. Those Commentators who adopt this view of the sense, tell us it comes to mean this from the primitive signification of the word being "to wag the tail," as a dog does. But that idea is not sufficiently primary, and would rather lead to the sense of adulari, which would here be quite out of place. In fact, the original signification of σαίνω is (as I have shown in Rec. Syn.) the same as that of the cognate form σείω, to move or stir, shake any thing from its place; and hence, in the figurative sense, to perturb, &c. A view, I find, adopted by Pelt and Schott, of whom the former rightly observes that σαίνω comes from the old uncontracted form σεαίνω (with which I would compare λεαίνω and νεαίνω) and that, of course, from the primitive form σείω.

With respect to the exact sense here, I should say, that while some explain it "to be perturbed," others, to be moved [from the faith] it will be best to unite both senses, the latter arising from the former.

— ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι ταύταις] "at these evils [suffered by me and you]." The reason for this is assigned in the next words, εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα, which must not be confined to the Apostle and the Thessalonians, but taken generally, referring (as is pointed out by Calvin) to the lot or condition of all Christians. Κείμεθα, "are appointed." See Luke ii. 34. Phil. i. 17, also Job v. 7. Matt. x. 16.

4. καθὼς καὶ—οἶδατε.] A somewhat harsh construction for καθὼς (put for ὅ) καὶ, οἶδατε, ἐγένετο, "which also, as ye know, came to pass."

5. Here we have a resumption of what was said at vv. 1 & 2; the third and fourth verses being, in some measure, parenthetical. The καγὼ is emphatical. "The Apostle (observes Benson) knew all things respecting Christ's doctrine but was not inspired with a knowledge of all other things." That is, not a perpetual knowledge, but only imparted as occasion served, like the power of working miracles.

— μή πως ἐπειρ. ὁ ὁ πειρ.] Supply φοβούμενος, "fearing lest the Tempter may, by some means, have tempted you." So the Commentators generally interpret. The passage, however, is remarkable in its construction, and is rendered by Prof. Scholefield ap. Middl. Gr. Art. as follows: "I sent to know your faith, whether the tempter have tempted you by any means, and lest (in that case) our labour be in vain." "Exactly similar (adds he) is Eurip. Phœn. 91—2. μή τις πολιτῶν ἐν τρίβῳ φαντάζεται, Κάμοι μὲν ἔλθῃ φαῖλος, ὡς δοῦλω, φόγος, Σοὶ δ', ὡς ἀνάσῃ. In both cases μή has different senses, according to the different modes with which it is connected." The above view of the import is, I would observe, supported by the authority of Theodoret, who takes the meaning to be, ἐπέμψα, μαθεῖν ποθῶν μή τις, &c. And nearly the same view is adopted by Winer and Schott, who observe that the Indicative is used because the Apostle thought the event (their temptation) not improbable. Whereas in the next clause he uses the Subjunctive, because he trusted the other event was not probable." Accordingly, they render the passage thus: "ut cognoscerem, quomodo se haberet persuasio vestra, num forte tentator vos tentaverit, adeo ut (quod Deus avertat!) labor meus irritus fieri possit;" which seems to be the exact sense intended by the Apostle.

7, 8. The Apostle here professes the joy he experienced in receiving, while at Corinth, so good an account of them from Timothy. (Schott.) Pelt observes that as at v. 6. there is a protasis, so here we have its apodosis. The construction is : ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει καὶ ἀνάγκῃ ἡμῶν παρεκλήθημεν ἐφ' ὑμῖν, διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν πίστεως. With θλ. καὶ ἀνάγκη compare 2 Cor. vi. 4. ἐν θλίψεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις. The ὅτι in ὅτι νῦν ζῶμ. seems to refer to a clause omitted; q. d. "[We may truly say we were comforted in our distress;] for now, on hearing this good news of you, we do indeed live, i. e. enjoy life;" a frequent sense of ζῆν, and vivere in Latin. The words following εἰς—Κυρίῳ do not correspond in construction; but, in fact, there is a blending of two clauses, νῦν ζῶμεν ὅτι ἐστήκατε, and ζήσομεν εἰς τὴν στήκην. On στήκ. in the sense of being steadfast, see Gal. v. 1, and Phil. iv. 1.

9. This joy, experienced at the faith of the Thessalonians, leads the Apostle to bless Him who was the author of so good a work; after which act of thanksgiving, he offers up a prayer to Almighty God that He would graciously favour his purpose of returning to Thessalonica. (Schott.)

—τίνα εὐχαρ.] For τ. ἀξίαν εὐχ., or πῶς δυνάμεθα εὐχαριστεῖν ἀξίως τῷ Θεῷ, as Chrys., Theophyl., and Theod. explain. There is an allusion to Ps. cxvi. 12. Ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ χαρᾷ, for ὑπὲρ π. χαρᾶς, "on account of the great joy." This use of πᾶς seems to be derived from the Hebrew. Ἐμπρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ should be joined with χαρᾷ: and, as Chrys. observes, the words are meant to refer to God as the Author of that joy; and to hint that it is his gift, and not to be ascribed to their own exertions alone.

10. ὑπὲρ ἐκπ. δεόμενοι, &c.] The feeling of devout thankfulness to God for them was naturally accompanied with a desire and prayer to be permitted to revisit them, expressed in prayers to that effect; for in εἰς τὸ ἰδεῖν the εἰς τὸ denotes end. In καταρτ. τὰ ὑστερήμ. τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν the sense of repairing (i. e. converting) and completing seems to be united; as Gal. vi. 1, and 2 Cor. xiii. 11.

11. κατευθ. τὴν ὁδόν.] This does not mean merely (as some recent Commentators imagine) "May God grant us to come unto you." It is, in fact, a sort of prayer. And it need not have been debated by Expositors whether there be an allusion to making a straight road, or to cutting out and levelling a road (on which see Matt. iii. 3. and Luke i. 79.); for both may be understood: the directing one's steps implying a removal of all impediments. The language (that of humble dependence) is founded on those passages of the O. T., where God is said to direct the ways, or steps, of men; (Is. xlv. 13. lxi. 8. Jerem. x. 23. Prov. iii. 6.) and (which the Apostle appears to have had in mind) xvi. 9. And what is so often in the N. T. ascribed to God, is here ascribed to Christ also; as also in the next verse there is another ascription of what pertains to Deity. On which see Whitby.

12, 13. Having thus expressed his anxious desire to be permitted to again see them, the Apostle subjoins pious wishes and ardent prayers for their spiritual advancement,—especially in charity and love, "the very bond of all perfectness," Col. iii. 14. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. 1 Tim. i. 5. iv. 12. On the full sense here intended see Chandler.

Here πλεον. and περισσ. are used in an active sense (see Note on 2 Cor. ix. 8.), as, indeed, words of this sense often are in all languages.

τῶν ἁγίων is by some understood of the holy angels; by others, of all true Christians. The latter sense must be chiefly intended; but the former may be included.

On the remainder of the Chapter comp. 2 Cor. xi. 2. Eph. v. 27. and Notes.

IV. Though the Apostle had seen reason to bestow high commendation on the Thessalonian Church generally, he at the same time judged it proper, by adverting to his own course of life, both to confirm those who had hitherto done well, and to admonish certain who might be inclined to follow the evil examples so frequent in this city. After which, he then (Ch. iv.) proceeds to various exhortations, passing from generals to particulars. (Schott.)

1. τὸ πῶς.] Literally, the [instruction] how. Περιπατεῖν καὶ ἀρέσκειν may be taken for οὗτως περιπατεῖν ὥστε ἀρ.; or there may be an Hendiadys, for Θεῷ ἀρεσκόντως περιπατεῖν. "Ἵνα περισσ. μᾶλλον," "that ye may make greater and greater progress."

2. παραγγελίας.] The term imports the authoritative injunction of a ruler or his ambassador.

3. τοῦτο γάρ, &c.] We may render γάρ by now (as it ought to be taken in 2 Tim. ii. 7. νόει ἂ λέγω· ὁ γάρ ὁ Κύριος, &c.) or then, as the particle often signifies in the Sept., corresponding to the Heb. עַתָּה. Or it may mean nempe, exempli gratiā, as introducing a principal instance of the παραγγελίαι. The τοῦτο is not pleonastic, but serves to strengthen the expression: and ὁ ἁγιασμός is per appositionem exegeticam. This term is put, like ἁγιοσύνη at iii. 13., to denote universal purity both in actions, words, and thoughts. See Scott. The Apostle, however, especially adverts to what, though it be the lowest branch of it, is yet the most required of Christians. In ἀπέχ. there is an exegetical apposition. By πορνείας is here meant all kinds of lewdness, as the πάσης added in many MSS. and the Pesch. Syr. expresses.

4. What is said in this verse is evidently meant to be exegetical of what was said in the verse preceding. The exact import, however, will depend upon the sense to be assigned to ἑαυτοῦ σκεῦος, which by almost all ancient and most modern Expositors of any eminence from Luther, Calvin, and Beza down to Pelt, is supposed to mean "his body;" a sense of the word extremely suitable to the context (see Chandler), and established, as to the consuetudo linguae, by examples from the Heathen Philosophers and the Christian Fathers of the earliest period, as Barnabas and Hermas, who seem to have had this very passage in mind. Thus the body is considered as the ἀγγεῖον τῆς ψυχῆς (to use the expression of Philo cited by Loesner), i. e. the receptacle of the soul. So Cicero Tusc. Quæst. i. 22. "Corpus quidem quasi vas est, aut aliquod animi receptaculum." And Hermas calls the body simply the vessel, without adding any thing to explain it. That the scope of the context requires this verse, is plain. See Benson and Chandler. But whether there be, as they think, any allusion to the vessels of the Temple, which were constantly to be kept clean and pure for use, is uncertain. The above interpretation, however, some ancient and several modern Commentators reject, and adopt another, by which σκεῦος is supposed to mean wife; a signification which they seek to establish from 1 Pet. iii. 7. and also several passages from Rabbinical writers, where the wife is called the vas mariti, i. e. his goods or furniture, as we say utensil. But as to the passage of 1 Pet., it is, as Schott admits, not to the purpose. And the same may be said of the passages from Rabbinical writers. For even the one most apposite will not prove that ὅς could of itself mean wife; the word there simply meaning utensil or article, or goods, and only acquiring the other sense from the next words, by a sort of catachresis and double meaning, which would surely be quite out of place in the present passage, containing a serious and solemn admonition. Indeed, on that interpretation it is impossible, without the greatest violence, to extract from the passage any sense suitable to the context. For to suppose, with Schott, the meaning to be, that every one should marry, and thereby live in purity and holiness (as 1 Cor. vii. 7.), that surely cannot be elicited from the words, being forbidden by the expression εἰδέναι (which, as Bengel remarks, denotes not knowledge, but ability, as in Phil. iv. 12. Matt. xxviii. 65. 2 Pet. ii. 9. and sometimes in the Classical writers), and also by the τιμῇ, and, indeed, by the whole air of the context.

The former interpretation, then, is undoubtedly the true one; against which, indeed, no reasonable objection can be made. For as to the remark of Wets. and Schott, that κτᾶσθαι will not admit of that sense, which would rather require κέκτησθαι, the objection is more specious than solid; since it is surely better to suppose that the Apostle was inattentive to this nice propriety of the Greek language, than that he should use σκεῦος in such a sense. Not to say that the purity of the Grecism has been maintained by the learned Pelt, though perhaps unsuccessfully. This use of κτᾶσθαι for κέκτησθαι was perhaps popular and provincial, and introduced, I suspect, from the Latin use of possidere, for κατέχειν (see the Glossaria) which is sometimes employed in the very sense here, I conceive, intended by the Apostle, namely, to hold the mastery over. So Cicero Verr. 5. C. 68. says, "totum hominem possideret," made himself master of the whole man. And pro Rosc. Com. 6. 6. "qui mediisfidius plus fidei quam artis, plus veritatis quam disciplinæ possidet in se," mastery over himself. Such, I repeat, is the very sense of κτᾶσθαι here intended, which is well expressed by Turretin, who remarks: "Qui sese affectibus carnalibus dedunt, non possident corpus suum, non sunt ejus domini, sed sunt ejus servi." In τιμῇ there is a reference to abuse and consequent dishonouring of the body by impurity. With the whole passage compare Rom. i. 21. ult., which is the best comment on the present.

6. τὸ μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν καὶ πλεονεκτεῖν ἐν τῷ πράγι.] There has been much difference of opinion as to the sense of these words. Most modern Expositors understand ὑπερβ. and πλεονεκ. of covetousness, or rather cheating and extortion; and by τῷ πράγματι, business, i. e. commercial transactions; or they take the τῷ as put for τινι. That use, however, is contra linguam: and τὸ πρᾶγμα in the sense business is negated by the use of the Article (which, as Bp. Middl. observes, "limits the sense to the matter in question, namely, the conduct of the incestuous person"), and is required by the context. See vv. 3, 4, 5, 8. It is therefore better, with almost all the Greek Fathers and Commentators, and some eminent Latin ones, (as Jerome and Hilary, and also, of modern Expositors, Est., De Dieu, Ham., Raphel, Heinr., Whitby, West, Mackn., Wakef., Newc., Rosenm., Schott, and Scholefield,) to take πρᾶγμα to denote the matter in question, that of seduction. Of course, ὑπερβ. and πλεον. must thus be understood of the same thing; not, however, I think, with reference to the person whose chastity is violated, but to another, who is grievously injured in the affair; namely, the husband, or father. Ὑπερβαίνειν, scil. τὸ δίκαιον, signifies to violate the rule of right, being for παραβαίνειν, as in 2 Kings xviii. 12. Jer. xxxiv. 18. and often in the Classical writers: And though πλεονεκτ. may be rendered, with most of the above Commentators, injure, it is rather, however, meant to denote a kind of injury which is done not by force, but by circumvention; whereby any one is overreached as well as injured; as the word is used in 1 Cor. vii. 2. οὐδένα ἐπλεονεκτήσαμεν, and xii. 17, 18. So Thucyd. iv. 86. ἀπάτῃ εὐπρεπεῖ πλεονεκτῆσαι τινα. The above view of the sense in this whole passage is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr.

The words following διότι—τούτων should be rendered, "for the Lord is the avenger of all such [things]," i. e. the vices just mentioned. I would compare Joseph. p. 169. init. νόμος κολαστῆς γίνεται τῶν τοιοῦτων. Comp. Gal. v. 21. and Rom. i. 9—11.

8. ὁ ἀθετῶν scil. τὴν τοῦ ἁγιασμοῦ κλησιν, as the Pesch. Syr. supplies. Οὐκ—ἀλλά, non tam—quam. On ἀθετ., see Note on Gal. ii. 31. By ἄνθρ. the Apostle means himself; intimating that any such disregard of him would be, in fact, disregard of God. Indeed, he seems here to have had in mind Christ's words at Luke x. 16. ὁ ἀθετῶν ὑμᾶς ἐμὲ ἀθετεῖ, &c. For ἡμᾶς, many MSS., some Versions, and several Fathers and early Edd. have ὑμᾶς, which is adopted by Wets., Koppe, Matth., Tittm., and Vat. But I rather agree with Griesb. and Pelt, that the Vulg. (which is found in the Ed. Princ.) should be retained, being far more suitable and natural. And as to the superiority of MS. evidence for ὑμᾶς, the words are so perpetually confounded, that such authority is here of little weight. By the Πνεῦμα ἅγιον are not so much meant the extraordinary and supernatural, as the ordinary aids of the Spirit, given to every man to profit withal.

9. φιλαδ.] From the context it appears, that we are chiefly to understand that sort of love to the brethren (i. e. Christians) which is evinced in what is denoted charity. By Θεοδιδ. is meant not merely, or chiefly, the teaching of God by the precepts of the Gospel; but that teaching of God by the HOLY SPIRIT, by which not so much the intellect is enlightened, as the heart touched, and the affections swayed. Compare Is. liv. 13. John vi. 44.

11. φιλοτ. ἡσυχ.] "that ye earnestly study to be quiet." So φιλ. is used at Rom. xv. 20. Ἡσυχ. is meant to be opposed to that restless and insubordinate spirit, which, we have reason to suppose, was then very prevalent; and such as would be likely to arise from the extreme excitement of a new and deeply interesting religion. The πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια is closely connected with the ἡσυχ. So Hesych.: "ἰδιοπραγεῖν, ἴδια πράττειν, ἡσυχάζειν." for so the words should be pointed; the Lexicographer meaning to say, that ἰδιοπρ. and ἡσυχ. are combined. Sim. Plato p. 680. ἡσυχίαν ἔχων καὶ τὰ ἐαυτοῦ πράττων. And so the Schol. on Thucyd. i. 32. τὸ ἰδιοπραγεῖν καὶ ἡσυχάζειν. Instead of ἴδια in this phrase, elegance of Grecism requires ἐαυτῶν. But an example of ἴδια has been adduced from Galen. Be that as it may, the pronoun is very emphatical, and the full force of it is well shown by Dr. Barrow, in two admirable Sermons on this text. On ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶ, see Eph. iv. 28. and Note. The ἴδ.

12. ἵνα περιπ. εὐσχ. π. τ. ἔ.] So Col. iv. 5. ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω. Εὐσχ., however, has here a more special sense; i. e. "respectably, or creditably," which must be understood in the general sense, as applicable to all ranks and stations. Τοὺς ἔξω, "those out of the pale of the Church," as often. Of μηδενὸς χρ. ἔχ. the full sense is, "that ye may have sufficient for your sustenance [and not be beholden to others]." The Apostle goes still further at Eph. iv. 28. ἵνα ἔχη μεταδοῖναι τῷ χρεῖαν ἔχοντι.

13—18. The Apostle now passes on to correct the errors of those who were altogether doubtful of the state of Christians already dead, or who should die before the solemn return of Christ to judgment (an event which they thought not very remote); namely, whether they would, equally with those whose earthly course should reach up to the coming of the Lord, be partakers of the resurrection of the dead; or, at least, who supposed they would be in a worse condition in the heavenly kingdom. Although we are not enabled to exactly trace the origin of this anxiety, yet from what St. Paul says, we may collect that some such doubt existed among them at that time, as to the matter in question; inasmuch that they mourned bitterly over those brother Christians who had already died, as if they were to be deplored, and 'themselves being ignorant of the fatal day, were in great fear of death; and accordingly were more prying than was proper in searching to know the time when Christ should come. (Schott.) To repress these vain doubts and fears, and, as far as he could properly do it, satisfy their curiosity, he repeats the doctrine he had already taught them of the resurrection of the pious dead to a happy immortality, as founded on their Lord's own resurrection. He further informs them, that those found alive at the coming of Christ will have no advantage or privilege over those already dead as regarded the happiness of a future state. That they would, indeed, not die at all, but be changed into incorruptible; yet that they would not anticipate the dead in being received up into heaven; nay, that the dead must first be raised, and then both they and the persons then alive shall be taken up together, to meet the Lord in the air, and be received into heaven.

— οὐ θέλω ὑ. ἀγ.] A frequent form of soliciting earnest attention. So 1 Cor. xi. 3. Ἐλπὶς here signifies a sure and well-founded expectation; for that the heathens had a hope, and even a sort of expectation, is proved by the Commentators. Though that was, as Bp. Warburton thinks, rather in the exoteric than the esoteric doctrines. "And (as Benson observes) even their ablest reasoners expressed themselves with so much uncertainty and variation, as only served to confound the common people, who were ready to fear that death might prove an utter extinction of the man."

14. εἰ γὰρ πιστεύομεν, &c.] At οὕτω καὶ we must supply πιστεύσωμεν, taken from πιστεύομεν just before. And so, I find, Theodoret and also some modern Commentators, as Abp. Newc. (who paraphrases: "If we believe, as we do, the death and resurrection of Christ, we have equal reason to believe," &c.) and Schott. The argument is popular, as in 1 Cor. xv. 13. 18. Διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ is by some construed with τοῖς κοιμ.; by others with ἄξει. The former method, in whichever way it be turned, rests on precarious grounds: and the latter is decidedly preferable; according to which the ἄξει will have, as Pelt remarks, a sensus prægnans, for "will raise them up, and bring them along with Him (i. e. Jesus) into heaven;" so that they may remain with him and partake of his glory. See John xiv. 3. 1 Cor. xv. 18. 23.

15—18. Here the Apostle solemnly assures them that all true Christians shall be partakers not only of the resurrection, but also of the same salvation prepared for them in the kingdom of heaven, whether they be dead, or still alive at the coming of the Lord Jesus. (Schott.)

— τοῦτο γὰρ—κοιμ.] Render: "Now this I tell you, on the revelation (or authority) of the Lord, that those who are alive and shall survive at the coming of the Lord, will by no means anticipate those who are already dead," namely, in entering into heavenly bliss. Every one, as the Apostle says at 1 Cor. xv. 23. will enter "in his own order." The words may express (what some suppose them to do) the Apostle's belief that he should survive until the last day. But as we have no proof from any other passage that the Apostle did entertain such an opinion, it may be better, with many Expositors, ancient and modern, to take the ἡμεῖς as said per κοινωνίᾳ—meaning we Christians. (See Chrys., Theodoret, and Benson.) Though, indeed, in thus understanding the words as put hypothetically, not a little harshness is involved: and, as Schott observes, "it is difficult to imagine any good reason why the Apostle should have adopted a mode of speaking always ambiguous, and in this context obscure." And the passages here adduced in proof that ἡμεῖς may mean, "we Christians" (as Mark x. 3. John vii. 19. 22. Acts vii. 38.), are perhaps not quite of the same nature: or at least if we should admit that it may mean, there is no proof from the context or elsewhere, that it does mean, that. It may be best, then, to adopt a middle course; i. e. to suppose that, though the ἡμεῖς does not imply that the Apostle thought certainly he should live till the last day, yet it may serve to show that he thought it possible the last day was so near at hand, that some then living might see it; and that, having no certain revelation, he expressed himself indefinitely. A view, I find, supported by the opinion of Prof. Schott, who after an elaborate discussion of the sense, comes to nearly the same conclusion. That the Apostle had reference to those of his own age, involves, he thinks, no difficulty; for our Saviour himself never spoke definitely as to the time when he should return, whether sooner or later; although some of his sayings seemed to import as much. Thus there was nothing to hinder the Apostle from supposing, with most Christians (who ardently desired the advent of Christ, and the great change it would bring), that the coming of the Lord might take place during the lifetime of some part of the persons then living. That St. Paul was strongly inclined to think so, seems evident from v. 4. Nor is there thus any contrariety with what is said at 2 Cor. iv. 14. vi. 1 Cor. vi. 14; if we do but consider, that the Apostle was unwilling ever to pronounce any positive opinion respecting the time of Christ's coming. And the ἡμεῖς may very well include both all those who had died before the Apostle wrote this, and also those who should die before the coming of the Lord. By speaking obscurely he doubtless meant to express no certain expectation on the subject; for though he was himself inclined to think that some then alive should witness the coming of Christ, or, at least, that it was not far distant; yet he was well aware that it was not permitted to him "to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath reserved to himself," so we find that he sometimes refutes those who expected the Lord's return to be close at hand, and gladly anticipated it. And as the Apostle, at the time when he wrote this Epistle, was not yet advanced in life, he might very well entertain the opinion that he should perhaps live to see that day.

16. Here we have a description of the solemn advent of Christ, expressed by images and types derived from the triumphal entry of an earthly king taking possession of a kingdom with an armed force. (Koppe.) Ἐν κελεύσματι—Θεοῦ Koppe and Rosenm. take as put for ἐν κελ. διὰ φωνῆς ἀρχαγγέλου καὶ σάλπ. Θ. The word κέλευσμα (as appears from the examples adduced by Wets.), properly signifies the shout with which soldiers or sailors rushed to battle, or labourers exerted themselves in any common effort of strength. See my Note on Thucyd. ii. 92. ἀφ' ἐνός κελ. ἐμβοήσαντες. How far this may be referred to figure, it were difficult to say, and presumptuous to pronounce. See Note on 1 Cor. xvi. 51. Certain it is, that by οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χρ. are meant those who have died in the faith and fear of Christ; for the best Commentators are agreed, that nothing is said, either here or at 1 Cor. xv., of the wicked; since the time when they should rise could be of no moment to their friends, inasmuch as they would rise only to perdition. The πρῶτον has reference to the whole clause, not merely to οἱ νεκροί. The sense is, that the resurrection of the dead shall take place first, and then the glorification, by incorruptibility, of the living; who shall be caught up, together with them, into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. Ἐν νεφέλαις is for εἰς νεφ., which is better than interpreting, with some Commentators, "on the clouds," by an ellipsis of ὀχλήσαντες. Εἰς ἀπάντ. is for ἀπαντῶν, as in Matt. xxv. 1. 6. Acts xxviii. 15. 1 Sam. ix. 14. Jerem. xli. 6. and sometimes in the later Classical writers. It denotes, as it were, their being introduced to the Lord, preparatory to their being for ever with Him.

18. Ὡστε.] "This being the case." Λόγοις τοῦτ. "these assurances."

V. 1. The Apostle here anticipates the further inquiry of curious persons; q. d. "when shall these things be?" &c. (see Matt. xxiv. 3.) and endeavours to turn their minds to something of greater importance;—even the living such a life, as that they shall always be prepared for the advent of the Lord; however sudden and unexpected it might be: which, come when it might, would surprise the wicked world. Καιρῶν is more significant than χρόνων, denoting the exact time. Γράφεσθαι, for γράφειν (scil. ἐμῇ), as supra iv. 9. Though the passive sense may be retained by supposing an ellip. of τι, thus: "There is no need that any thing be written [to you]."

2. οἶδατε, &c.] Alluding to the saying of our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 38. This must certainly not be understood, with Hamm. and Schoettg., of the destruction of Jerusalem. It is better taken by others of the day of death; which is to every one, in all respects, the same as the day of judgment. But the context here will not, I think, permit us to understand it in any other than the literal sense, of the day of judgment: though it may (as Chrys. and Bp. Jebb suggest) admit of being transferred, in an under sense, to the period of each Christian's death.

3—5. For greater impressiveness, the Apostle now adverts to the effect which the resurrection will have on the unprepared and wicked; and graphically represents the character of the careless and disobedient, and of the watchful and obedient respectively, under the usual figures of light and darkness: and then at v. 6. he on this figure founds the exhortation; Let us, then, as children of the day, not act like children of the night and of darkness, by sleeping at our post; much less by engaging in other pursuits usually thought appropriate to the night, as drunkenness. Such is the full sense, which, however, is expressed in an inartificial, but most forcible, manner. With respect to νυκτὸς μεθύνουσι, the Commentators have shown by several passages from the Classical writers (to which may be added Athen. p. 279. & 433. and Hor. Sat. i. 4. 51. Ebrus et, (magnum quod dedecus,) ambulet ante Noctem cum facibus, that the being drunk in the day-time was thought the greatest disgrace. See also 2 Pet. i. 13.

8. The admonition to watchfulness suggested, it seems, to the Apostle a figurative comparison of the Christian with the soldier at his post on guard; and the various virtues and graces, with which he is to work out his salvation, are compared to the various arms of a soldier; as at Eph. vi. 13—17, where see the Note.

9. The full sense is well expressed by Benson, as follows: "The design of God in sending his Son into the world, was not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. He did not reveal the Gospel unto mankind, that they might sin with the greater aggravation, and so be the more severely punished. But the motive was love, and the design was mercy. And he hath appointed none to wrath, but such as wilfully and obstinately refuse his gracious offers, and persist in vice and wickedness." Εἰς περιποιήσιν, for εἰς τὸ περιποιεῖσθαι, and accommodated to ὀργὴν. So also in 2 Thess. ii. 14. Heb. x. 39.

10. εἴτε γρηγ. εἴτε καθεύδ.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is put for εἴτε ζῶμεν εἴτε ἀποθάνωμεν. See Benson. The Apostle means to say, that whether we be alive or dead at that day, it matters not; the living with Christ, or enjoying eternal happiness with him (see supra iv. 17.), shall be equally our portion.

11. οἰκοδ.] An architectural metaphor, as at 1 Cor. viii. 1. This edifying was either by increasing one another's knowledge, and strengthening their faith and hope, or by promoting their holiness. Εἰς τὸν ἕνα. Literally, "one by the other," for ἀλλήλους. A very rare idiom in the Classical writers; though an example is adduced by Wets. from Dionys. Hal.

—καθὼς καὶ ποιεῖτε.] This praise, mixed with the exhortation, is delicately thrown in, to make the latter more effectual. Of this example occurs in Aristid. T. i. 232. 11. σχεδὸν δὲ οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ ὁ ποιεῖτε παρήμεσα. See also 2 Thess. iii. 1. καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

12—14. Having exhorted them to comfort and edify one another, the Apostle adds such other exhortations as he found, from Timothy, were necessary. Lest they should imagine they had no occasion for religious teachers, he enjoins them to show all due respect to their spiritual pastors and masters: and to those he hints their reciprocal duties to their people. (Grot. and Bens.) Εἰδέναι seems to include the notions of respect, obedience, and gratitude, shown especially in making due provision for their comfortable sustenance. From this passage some learned Commentators have inferred the existence then at Thessalonica of the three distinct orders of the Ministry. Koppe, however, maintains, that the terms νοῦντες. and προϊστάμενοι are not meant of various kinds of Presbyters (some Bishops, and others Teachers, see Acts xx. 17. compared with 28. Phil. i. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 2. sqq.) but of the same persons comprehended, in this verse, under the more general term κοπιῶντες. Κοπ., is, indeed, a very general term to denote, "labouring in the promulgation of the Gospel;" as Rom. xvi. 6. 12. 1 Cor. xvi. 10. xvi. 16. Gal.

But, upon the whole, I see not how we can come to any determinate opinion on the nature of the ecclesiastical government of the Thessalonian church, for want of more exact information than we possess. Yet it seems probable that by κοπιῶντες are denoted those who occupied the ordinary offices of teaching; and by the προϊστάμενοι, the rulers of the church; and that νοουθετοῦντες is a general term applicable to both. See Note on Rom. xii. 7, 8.

13. ἡγείσθαι αὐτοὺς ὑπὲρ ἐκπ.] This expression ἡγείσθαι ὑπὲρ ἐκπ. answers to the frequent Classical phrase περὶ πλείστου ἡγείσθαι or ποιῆσαι, "to make very much of, to hold in the highest honour." Ἐν ἀγάπῃ superadds the idea of loving to that of honouring. The ἔργον denotes the work of instruction, or government, or both. Εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς has especial reference to the preservation of peace between the rulers and the people. See Eph. iv. 3.

14. The best Expositors are agreed, that by ὑμᾶς ἀδ. are meant those spiritual rulers just before mentioned, and now apostrophized. To these the terms νοῦς. and παραμ. are especially suitable: and ἀντέχ. may very well respect the Deacons. Ἀτάκτους is properly a military term, but is of general application, and denotes insubordinate. Ὀλιγοψύχ., for μικροψ., often occurs in the Sept., and signifies one who is labouring under such trouble, that his heart sinks within him. It may here, however, mean those who are despairing of working out their salvation. Ἀντέχ. τῶν ἀσθ. must, from the context, mean "support the weak [in faith];" a sense of ἀσθ. occurring in Rom. xiv. 1. τὸν ἀσθ. ἐν πίστει. It denotes those who are weak in their notions of religious liberty. Μακροθ., "be long-suffering and indulgent." By πάντας, "all persons of your Christian flock," all, of whatever disposition. Need is there of this μακροθυμία in Pastors, since, as Benson observes, "the stupidity of some, and the infirmities of all, call for great patience and indulgence."

15. ὁρᾶτε μὴ τις κακὸν, &c.] This admonition (manifested in effect for all, both rulers and people) is founded on that of Christ, Matt. v. 39. 44., where see Note. Compare xii. 14. Διάκετε. Not follow, but, earnestly endeavour to do; as Rom. ix. 30. xiii. 13. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. xiv. 1. Phil. iii. 12. Τὸ ἀγαθόν, as being in opposition to κακόν, must denote benevolence and beneficence. Εἰς ἀλλήλ. is well rendered by Professor Scholefield, "towards one another."

16. πάντ. χαίρετε.] It is strange that some eminent Commentators should have explained

this as equivalent to a sort of valediction. And Dr. Burton's Version, "be cheerful," is not to be commended; since, connected as this plainly is with the admonition following, it must denote joy in the Lord, as most Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed. Nay, in some MSS. is added ἐν Κυρίῳ; though, doubtless, from the margin. Thus it is equivalent to the admonition at Phil. iii. 1.

17. ἀδιαλείπτως.] The full meaning of this expression (which is too much pressed on by some, and too much lowered by others) seems to be unintermittingly, i. e. both at all stated times for public or family prayer, and at all such times as are suitable or required by circumstances, for private devotion. See Note on Luke ii. 37. xviii. 1. Rom. viii. 1. Compare Eph. vi. 18. Col. i. 8. See the able Discourses of Dr. Barrow on Prayer, p. 69. seqq. and 79. vol. i. Ἐν παντί. Supply χρόνῳ, τόπῳ, πράγματι, i. e. at all times, and under all circumstances. See more in Whitby.

18. τοῦτο γὰρ—ὑμᾶς.] The sense is: "For this is the will of God [signified by Jesus Christ] respecting you; this is what God is pleased to order by Jesus Christ to be performed by you."

19. τὸ Πνεῦμα μὴ σβ.] The ancient Expositors in general, and all the most eminent modern ones, regard Πν. as relating solely to the supernatural Spiritual gifts, which that some of the Thessalonians had, is plain from the verse following. They are not, however, agreed whether by that is meant the quenching them in others, (by discouraging and disallowing them) or in themselves; i. e. by neglect or abuse, or by vice in general. The latter is, I conceive, the sense chiefly intended. But though we may understand chiefly the extraordinary influences of the Holy Spirit, surely we must include His ordinary influences and graces, given to every one to profit withal; and thus the admonition will be a kindred one to that at Eph. iv. 30. μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. In the passage of 2 Tim. i. 6. ἀναχωπεύειν τὸ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, both these senses are found, and perhaps the second is predominant.

20. προφ. μὴ ἐξουθ.] As the foregoing admonition was not to quench the Spirit in themselves, so this, I apprehend, is not to quench it, by disallowing and discouraging the exhibition of it in others. The sense of προφητεία, is, I conceive, the very same as in the three Chapters on the Spiritual gifts at 1 Cor. xii. & xiv. See also Note on xii. 10. Indeed, those Chapters are the best comment on the present passage. See also Phil. i. 1—16. Ephes. iv. 1—11. Rom. 12. 3—6.

Comp. John iv. 1. By using the plural, St. Paul meant χαρίσματα προφητείας.

21. πάντα δοκιμάζετε—κατέχετε.] In δοκιμ. there is a metaphor taken from the assaying of metals, or rather the trying of money, by ringing or the touch-stone. To this there seems an allusion in the κατέχετε. There are here two remarkable diversities of reading. Several MSS. have πάντα δὲ δοκ.; others, πάντα δοκιμάζοντες. The former of which is edited by Griesbach, Knapp, and Tittman; the latter, by Matthæi. But I see no reason to adopt either reading. Both were, I conceive, meant to point out the connection of the words with the preceding, and make the sense plainer; and therefore deserve no attention; except as serving to show the interpretation of the earliest ages. From the context, and the parallel passage of 1 John, it is plain that the Apostle meant the injunction only of the χαρίσματα προφητείας: and the πάντα seems to refer to χαρίσματα, intending, however, I apprehend, also the doctrines brought forward by the ὁ πνευματικός; for though only the προφ. be expressed, yet all the spiritual gifts which ministered instruction are to be understood. Some, indeed, have supposed it meant generally of doctrines, by an ellip. of δόγματα. But that is quite inadmissible. The connection, together with the injunction to the searching of the spirits, διακρίσεις τῶν πνευμάτων at 1 Cor. xii. 10. & xiv. 29., decide the point. At the same time, as the admonition regards the doctrines of such scriptural persons, as well as the reality of their gifts, it may very well admit of being applied, mutatis mutandis, to the endowments and doctrines of the teachers and preachers of the Gospel in every age. This δοκιμασία is shown by Whitby and Benson to be indispensable to those, on whom it is obligatory to “hold fast that which is good:” and that the ancient Fathers allowed this trial to their hearers, is certain from the citations adduced by Whitby. Wets. compares a passage of Aristotle, where, speaking of reason, he says: ὧ δοκιμάζοντες τὸ καλὸν αἰρούνται. To which I would add the following one from Marc. Anton. iii. 6. ἀπλῶς καὶ ἐλευθερίως ἐλοῦ τὸ κρεῖττον, καὶ τούτου ἀντέχεσθε.

22. ἀπὸ παντὸς εἶδους πον. ἀπ.] Expositors are not agreed whether εἶδους should be rendered appearance, or kind. The former interpretation is adopted by most modern Commentators, including Bp. Middl. (on account of the want of the Article); the latter by the ancient ones generally, and some eminent moderns (as Hamm., Le Clerc, Buxtorf, Wets., Benson) and almost all recent Expositors, including Koppe, Schleus., Pelt, and Scott. The former interpretation, indeed, yields a good sense; but this use of the word is no where else found in the Scriptural, and rarely in the Classical writers. And, moreover, it has little or no connection with the preceding. Whereas, the latter has a very close one; on which, and other accounts, it is greatly preferable. That the word was so taken by St. Polycarp, appears from an imitation of the present passage in his Epistle to the Philippians, C. ix. “Keep yourselves from all evil. For he that in these things cannot govern himself, how shall he be able to prescribe them to another?” On the subject itself, see Dr. Parr’s Sermon on this verse, in which he shows that the obedience required from Christians must be universal, that no distinctions of greater or less will justify us in evading any commands, or any prohibitions; that the very appearance of evil voluntarily hazarded, is contrary to the purity and dignity of the Christian character, and that no action can be blameless in the sight of God, which gives just offence to the moral sentiments of his creatures.”

23. Here the Apostle, I conceive, speaks with reference to all the Church of Thessalonica. Ἀγιάσαι should be rendered, “may he sanctify.” The expression Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης is used with reference to that peace, the cultivation of which was enjoined at v. 13., and the violation of which was contemplated in what was said of the Spiritual gifts. On the full sense of ἀγ. see Notes on John xvii. 17. and 1 Cor. vi. 11. Ὁλοτελεῖς is for ὁλοτελῶς; and ὁλόκρ. is nearly synonymous with ὅλου. Dr. Parr, in a Sermon on this text, remarks that this word, which primarily signifies the whole of a thing given by lot, is metaphorically applied, 1. to a city, whose buildings are all standing; 2. to an empire, which has all its provinces; 3. to an army, whose troops are undiminished by accident or calamity. Many eminent Commentators maintain that the Apostle, by distinguishing the τὸ πνεῦμα, the ἡ ψυχὴ, and τὸ σῶμα, meant to advert to the opinion of those Philosophers, who represented man as consisting of three parts, spirit, soul, and body. See Whitby, Benson, and Vitrina. It is, however, unlikely that the Apostle should advert to such vain speculations. He here speaks popularly; meaning to denote the whole man, with all his faculties and powers both bodily and mental.

24. ποιήσαι i. e. will do [what He has promised.] See Whitby. With vv. 24—26. compare 1 Cor. i. 9. Rom. xv. 31. xvi. 16.

This second Epistle was evidently written not long after the first; probably as soon after sending the first, as the Apostle had had time to learn the situation of the Church of Thessalonica. It was, no doubt, written principally for the purpose of correcting a mistake, which had arisen from the misunderstanding of certain expressions therein contained; as if the day of judgment were to be in that age; an error which, if not corrected, might have proved very dangerous; and which had already occasioned much evil, by leading some persons to neglect the business of life. This the Apostle does by showing that the day of judgment will not so speedily arrive as they imagined; but that before it, an awful apostasy would prevail. The Apostle, moreover, takes the opportunity to reprove the disorderly conduct in some, which had been occasioned by the opinion in question, and to earnestly exhort them to the discharge of their Christian duties.

The Epistle consists of three divisions (corresponding to the three Chapters), of which the 1st is consolatory, the 2d partly prophetic and partly didactic, the 3d hortatory and valedictory.

C. I. 1, 2. On these verses, see 1 Thess. i. sq. ii. 14, 19, 20, and Notes.

3—12. The Apostle commends them for the steadfastness of their faith, and for their patience under persecution; assuring them that when Christ comes to judgment, they should be rewarded, and their persecutors punished. (Benson.) Εὐχαρ., &c. Compare Rom. i. 8. 1 Cor. iv. 5. Phil. i. 3, 4. The we here and throughout the Epistle is, as the best Expositors are agreed, to be understood of St. Paul only. The ὀφείλ. εὐχ. is taken by Koppe as expressed populariter, for αἰτίαν ἔχω τοῦ εὐχ. This, however, is paring down the sense, which cannot be less than what Abp. Newc. expresses, "We ought to thank God;" a rendering confirmed by the ancient Versions. "Ἀξιόν ἐστι is for καθήκον or δίκαιον, par est, it is fit or proper; of which expression examples are cited by the Commentators. Schott, indeed, objects that thus there will be a pleonasm. He is of opinion that καθὼς here points at the high degree required, of their thanksgiving; q. d. both in words and works. And he renders: "Oportet nos Deo gratias agere, quales conveniant præstantiæ beneficii." Yet though the sentiment is sufficiently true, to introduce it here would be harsh. The exact force of the expression (missed by all the modern Commentators) was long ago pointed out by Theophyl., who observes that καθὼς ἄξιόν ἐστιν is added to prevent us from being too much exalted by the performance of such an act of thanksgiving, since we are doing no more than our duty; there being an ellipsis of μόνον. Thus the injunction answers to that at Luke xvii. 10. λέγετε ὅτι δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοί ἐσμεν· ὅτι ὃ ὠφείλομεν (sub. μόνον) πεποιήκαμεν, "we have done our duty [and no more]." As ὑπεραυξάνει is a stronger term than πλεονάζει, we may infer that their faith had increased in a greater degree than their ἀγάπη, which includes all those kind offices by which Christians might assist Christians; and thereby mutually sweeten the bitterness of that cup of sorrow, which their profession of a new religion, every where spoken against, would be sure to expose them to.

4. ὥστε—Θεοῦ.] Render, "Inasmuch that we ourselves are proud (or, may boast) of you among the churches of God, on account of," &c. See Turretin and Schott. Ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. e. inter ceteras. Καυχ. in this sense occurs in 2 Cor. xii. 5. and often. The ἐν is equivalent to the Heb. בְּ, de; as in Gal. iv. 20. ἀποροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν, and i. 24. ἐδόξασαν τὸν Θεὸν ἐν ἐμοί· and sometimes in the Classical writers. In ὑπομονῆς καὶ πίστεως there may be, as most of the later Commentators say, an Hendiad. for ὑπομονὴ τῆς πίστεως, as ὑπομονὴ τῆς ἐλπίδος. But it is better (with the ancient and earlier modern Expositors), to keep the terms distinct; the latter being considered as productive of the former; since patience (as Calvin says) "is the fruit and testimony of faith."

5. ἔνδειγμα—Θεοῦ.] These words evidently refer to the preceding; but the connection is not very clear. If ἔνδειγμα be taken as a Nominative, we must supply ὅ ἐστιν: if, with Koppe and Pelt, as an Accusative, we may supply εἰς, with the Pesch Syr. and even some MSS. The former method, however, deserves the preference. Still the reference is the same; though what that is, Expositors are not agreed. Some refer it to ὑπομονῆς, &c.; but almost all the best Commentators, to διωγμοῖς καὶ θλίψεσιν; q. d. "Which suffering of persecution and affliction is a proof of the righteous judgment God will exercise at the last day." So Calvin well remarks: "If we hold it as a first principle of faith, that God is the just Judge of the whole world, and that it is his office to reward every one according to his works; it necessarily follows that the present ἀταξία is an evidence of a judgment not yet apparent;" q. d. (as Chrys., Grot., and others explain) "God suffers you to be afflicted with troubles, in order that, by apportioning to you salvation in heaven, and adjudging them to punishment, he may set forth a demonstration of the justice of his judgment." Yet the sentiment, however excellent, would, so introduced, involve considerable harshness; and therefore it seems best, with Schott, to unite both references; q. d. "Which your patient endurance of afflictions is an evidence of the righteous judgment of God [to both you and your persecutors]; to you, by apportioning to you the rewards of an everlasting kingdom, to those the punishment of their sins." Such, too, is the explanation given by Schmid, Benson, Flatt, and others. Here compare a kindred sentiment at Rom. ii. 5—8, and especially at Phil. i. 28. With respect to εἰς τὸ καταξίω, it is by some referred to ἔνδειγμα, or δικαίας (see Pelt); by others, to ἀνέχεσθε. The former method, however, is preferable. Indeed, the scope of the clause is to point out the happy consequences of thus bearing afflictions for the Gospel's sake with patience, even the being thought worthy of being made partakers of eternal bliss, as Luke xx. 35. sq.

6—8. The Apostle now dwells at large on this sure expectation of a just judgment, introducing a brief description of it, as well for the purpose of speaking comfort and consolation to the persecuted Thessalonians, as also in order from thence to take occasion to rectify an erroneous notion of theirs concerning the day of judgment, &c.

Εἵπερ is here confirmatory, not dubitative, and may be rendered "siquidem," "inasmuch as." So in Rom. viii. 9. Παρὰ Θεῷ, "judice Deo." Ἀνταπ. is a word of middle signification; but it has here more point than a term would have, which had only a bad sense. Ἄνεσις is also opposed to θλίψις at 2 Cor. viii. 13. The word properly signifies release from labour or affliction, and thus is nearly equivalent to ἀνάπαυσις. It is figuratively used to denote the felicity promised to God's faithful servants; which image is finely employed in a passage of singular beauty and pathos at Heb. iv. 1—11.

— ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλ. τοῦ Κυρίου—ἐν πυρὶ φλ.] Here ἀποκ. (on which see Luke xvii. 30.) is nearly synonymous with φανέρωσις at Col. iii. 4.; but is more significant than παρουσία. Δυνάμει is not (as some say) for δυνατός; but signifies (as Luther, Calvin, Grot., Benson, Pelt, and Schott explain) "by whom he exercises his power." Ἐν πυρὶ φλογός may be construed either with the preceding words (as it is done by most recent Commentators), or with the following, as it is by the ancients and moderns in general. In the former case, it will denote the glory with which the Lord will be clothed at the last day; in the latter, it will be symbolical of the awful punishment to be inflicted on the wicked, even "the lake of fire," mentioned in Revel. xx. 10. As to the reading φλογ. πυρός, it is a manifest correction. Διδόναι ἐκδ. is for ποιεῖσθαι ἐκδ. By τοῖς μὴ εἰδ. are meant those who have not embraced Christianity; implying the possession of the means of knowing how to worship God aright, but the neglect of them. Τοῖς μὴ ὑπακ. designates those who, after having embraced the Gospel, have not fulfilled its injunctions.

9. ὅλεθρον αἰῶν.] This is an exegetical apposition, showing the nature of the punishment, even "everlasting perdition." Ὁλ. is for ἀπάλειαν, implying misery the most extreme (see Matt. vii. 13. 1 Thess. v. 3.); utter and irremediable destruction. The words ἀπὸ προσ. τοῦ Κυρίου, &c. depend upon τίσουςιν; and their sense must be decided by the force ascribed to the ἀπὸ, which many eminent Commentators suppose to be causal, explaining, “punientur a Domino et a majestate ipsius vim suam exserente.” It is, however, more commonly, and perhaps justly, supposed to signify “far removed from,” “thrust from,” as in Luke xiii. 28. There is supposed to be an allusion to Is. ii. 19. ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ φόβου Κυρίου, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ. The τὸ πρόσ. τοῦ Κυρίου is not so much put for τοῦ Κυρίου, as it is a more energetic and graphic term.

10. In ἐνδοξ. ἐν τοῖς ἀγ. α. and θανμ. ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς πιστ. there is a parallelism, of which the two members illustrate each other, and the sense is, “that God may derive glory from the eternal happiness, which he will bestow on all faithful Christians.” The words ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκ. are transposed; as in Rom. ii. 12. κριθήσονται to which, after a parenthesis of two verses, corresponds ἐν ἡμέρᾳ at v. 16. So here the words ὅτι—ὑμᾶς are parenthetical; and the sense (which has been variously expressed) seems to be, “because our testimony among you (literally, apud, i. e. coram vos) hath been believed by you.” Now the foregoing sentiment which has respect to all believers, is in this parenthesis indirectly and mentally applied to the Thessalonians in particular. Thus the full sense is, “And in you particularly this will be the case, because you have believed and obeyed the Gospel.”

11. εἰς ὃ] “in order to which,” i. e. that he may be thus glorified in you. The sense of the next clause ἵνα ἀζώσῃ—Θεὸς ἡμῶν depends upon that assigned to the term ἀζώσῃ, which some Interpreters explain, “would make you worthy,” i. e. make you to be worthy; equivalent to ικανώσ. at Col. i. 12. A signification rare in the N. T., but found in the Classical writers, and here adopted by the Peschito Syr. This interpretation, however, is somewhat precarious; and it seems better (with many eminent Commentators, and our English Versions) to render it, “may account you worthy of,” “vouchsafe to bestow upon you.” So καταξιώσθαι supra v. 5. Luke viii. 7., and perhaps in Heb. iii. 3., as also in the Classical writers. See Hesych.

and Steph. Thes. Κλήσεως the best Expositors are agreed in regarding as put, by metonymy, for the object of calling, the state of blessedness in the Gospel, to which they were called; as Phil. iii. 14. Eph. i. 18. Heb. iii. 1. Compare Eph. iv. 1.

— καὶ πληρώσῃ—δυνάμει.] These words are not very perspicuous, and have been variously interpreted. The sense seems to be, “that he would powerfully and fully accomplish all the designs of his goodness, and consummate your work of faith.” Εὐδοκία signifies beneplacitum, good pleasure. By πληρ. ἔργον πίστεως (which is variously interpreted) seems to be meant, “make your faith complete in those things which are its proper fruits.” See 1 Thess. i. 3. James i. 3, 4.

12. ὅπως ἐνδ. τὸ ὄνομα—αὐτῷ.] This points to the effect of the preceding. Τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κ. is not a pleonasm, but a stronger expression, meant, as Beng. suggests, to do the more honour to God in the work of man's salvation. Ἐν ὑμῖν and ἐν αὐτῷ may be rendered, “by him and by you;” the former relating to this world; the latter, to the world to come. But the ἐν may, as Beza supposes, have been adopted to hint at the union between Christ, the Head, and his members. Now this great work so far exceeds all that could have been imagined, or the greatest human merit have claimed, that it is well said in the words following to be κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c.

II. The mention of the coming of the Lord enables the Apostle to introduce that of the end of the world, and to correct the error, which had arisen from a misunderstanding of his words, as if it were just at hand.

1. ἐρωτῶμεν.] The full sense seems to be, “we earnestly intreat and exhort you.” The ὑπὲρ must be taken, as often, for περὶ, concerning.

Ἡμῶν ἐπισ. ἐπ' αὐτόν, “our gathering together unto him.” Ἐπισυναγωγῇ only occurs once elsewhere in the N. T., namely, at Heb. x. 25., where it is used of a Christian congregation. It is often employed in the Apocrypha to denote the congregation of the Israelites. The term corresponds to the ὑπάντησις of 1 Thess. iv. 14—27., and is illustrated by Matt. xxiv. 31. συνάξουσιν τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ. It is well observed by Salmas. cited by Pott, that “the coming of Christ, and our gathering together unto Him, are here united, as relatum et correlatum."

2. εἰς τὸ μὴ ταχ. σαλευθῆ. This depends upon ἐρωτ. in the preceding verse; εἰς τὸ being for τοῦ. Σαλ. signifies to [suffer yourselves] to be troubled; of which we have an example at Acts xvii. 13. Compare Eph. iv. 19. James i. 6. So Arrian cited by Wets.: μὴ ἀποσαλεύεσθαι διὰ τῶν σοφισμάτων, where the metaphor is taken from a ship torn from its anchorage, and carried out to sea; which, indeed, seems to be what St. Paul had in mind in this passage; ἀπὸ τοῦ νοός ("from your mind") being for ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγκύρας τοῦ νοός. In what that consists, the passage of Hebrews best shows, namely, faith in the revelation of God by his Apostle. Θροεῖσθαι is exegetical of σαλευθῆ. See Note on Matt. xxiv. 6. ὁράτε μὴ θροεῖσθε. Thus the sense is: "that ye be not hastily shaken from the hitherto settled persuasion of your minds, nor be thrown into unreasonable perturbation."

The Apostle then adverts to the various modes by which they might be perverted; i. e. διὰ πνεύματος, λόγου, and ἐπιστολῆς, where πν. is not to be taken (with some) of a person, but simply, a pretended revelation of the Spirit. Διὰ λόγου is by most Expositors, from Grot. downwards, united (per hypozeugma) with διὰ ἐπιστ.; and thus ὡς δι' ἡμῶν will be referred to both; (as λόγου and γράμματα in Polyb. iv. 24.); the former referring to something asserted to have been said by St. Paul; the latter, to a letter purporting to have been written by him. Render, "neither by report, nor by letter as coming from us."

3. ὅτι ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία, &c.] There is plainly an omission, at the end of the sentence, of some words to complete the sense; which, from the extreme length of the inserted portion, were forgotten to be supplied. Now, from the ὡς ὅτι ἐνέστηκεν ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ Χριστοῦ in the preceding verse, it is plain that the Apostle meant, "that day will not arrive unless there be first an apostasy."

On the purport of this most difficult portion, v. 3-12., treating of the Apostasy and the Man of sin, very great difference of opinion exists. The interpretations, numerous as they are, may be distributed into two classes; 1. That of those who suppose the words to have respect to what was speedily to happen, and, in a comparatively short time, did happen; as the destruction of Jerusalem, or the great apostasy which preceded that event, or the revolt of the Jews from the Romans, or the prevalence of the heresy of the Gnostics; not to mention other less probable opinions. The second comprises those which regard the words as having respect to something which was to happen long after; and of the interpretations of this class, there are again two divisions; 1. of those who suppose the apostasy and the Man of Sin to have already appeared, in Popery, or Mahometanism; 2. of those who think they are yet to come.

The most general opinion is, that the passage has reference to the grand heresy of Popery, and the corruptions of the Romish Church; the Man of Sin being supposed to denote the Pope for the time being, i. e. the series of persons who have filled the Papal Chair; (an idiom by no means rare;) and the apostasy being understood of the abominable corruptions of the Romish Church. But though this view has been supported by the ability of Mede, Benson, Bp. Newton, Macknight, and others, and is much countenanced by several striking coincidences, which exist between the characters of the apostasy, and those of Popery, yet it is liable to such serious objections (as will appear from what is said further on), that I cannot venture to recommend it. As to that interpretation which refers the passage to Mahometanism, it may be considered utterly unfounded. For surely Mahometanism cannot be called apostasy from a religion with which it had never had any connection. As to the interpretations comprised under Class I., they are all liable to insuperable objections, and deserve little attention. Before I venture to suggest where the truth probably lies, it may be proper to premise a few remarks on the nature of the passage, and to consider how far we are warranted in expecting to be enabled clearly to discern its full sense, and explain its complete application. And first, it is evident from the use of the Article with ἀποστασία in every one of the MSS., and the words οὐ μνημονεύετε, &c., of v. 5, 6., that the Apostle does not here communicate any new declaration, but that he only repeats one before made. And equally clear is it that, when he bids them "remember what he had told them," it is therein implied, that something was then said, which is now omitted. The Apostle's words, too, are plainly meant for the Thessalonians only; and we may presume that, with the aid of what had been before said, they were enabled to sufficiently comprehend their meaning. But it does not follow, that those words should be intelligible to such as are ignorant of what the Apostle had before said. Thus, much of obscurity must necessarily hang over the passage, and therefore some harshness may be tolerated in the explication; in essaying which, it is of no small consequence to ascertain what general points, and those unconnected with any particular hypothesis, admit of being regarded as fully established, and consequently fit to be made a foundation whereon to build whatever further may be propounded.

That the day of the Lord here spoken of is not the destruction of Jerusalem (as some maintain), but the day of judgment, seems to be quite certain. It is scarcely less so (and the ancient Expositors were all of that opinion) that the Man of Sin of St. Paul has reference to the very same character as the Antichrist of St. John (1 Epist. iii. 18. and elsewhere), and who seems intended, though not called by that name, in the Apocalypse, ch. xiii. That the ancient Commentators universally considered the prophecy as one of distant δένα τρόπον· ὅτι ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία πρώτην καὶ ἀποκαλυφθῇ, ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, 4^p ὁ ἀντικείμενος καὶ ὑπεραιρούμενος ἐπὶ πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν ^{p Dan. 11. 36.} ἢ σέβασμα· ὥστε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ὡς Θεὸν 5 καθίσαι, ἀποδεικνύντα ἐαυτὸν ὅτι ἔστι Θεός. . . . Οὐ μνημο-completion, and not to be understood till its fulfilment, is alike certain, and deserving of serious attention. The ancient and the most eminent modern Expositors are, with reason, agreed that the prophecy has the same reference as that in Daniel viii. It is probable, then, that both St. John and St. Paul had in view the above portion, which manifestly relates to the coming of the Son of Man, and the events that should precede and accompany his advent.

But that their descriptions were, as some imagine, solely founded thereon, may be doubted. It should seem that something was founded thereon, and that the same highly figurative, symbolical, and allegorical mode of expression was adopted; but that many other characteristics of the Apostasy and Anti-Christ, or the Man of Sin, were added by St. Paul (whose words in this whole portion, vv. 3—12, may be regarded as a further illustration of what was obscurely and very figuratively spoken of by Daniel) under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, or from actual, though limited, revelation. Upon the whole, there seems good reason to suppose, with many eminent Expositors for the last half century, that what is here spoken of has not yet taken place; though I am inclined, for various reasons, to think that the mystery, or secret principle, of iniquity and apostasy is now actually working, and that, when Almighty Providence shall please that the τὸ κατέχον shall no longer impede the full working of the principle, —the apostasy, (no doubt consisting of a series of acts, though marked by the Article as one whole,) will rapidly display itself; especially when the Man of Sin, or Anti-Christ, shall be revealed, or appear; and who shall be the great Agent of the Evil One in the whole transaction. But to proceed to the verbal interpretation of the most important words and phrases contained in this interesting portion.

Ἀποστασία properly denotes abandonment of connection with any person; which implies, in the case of a political ruler, rebellion. In the Scriptures, however, it almost always means abandonment of a religion, by passing over to another, or to no religion: but it is scarcely ever, I think, used of corruption of a religion by persons still continuing in the profession of it. The term must here denote, as Calvin says, a very general defection from God, by Atheism. And so it was taken by many of the ancient Expositors. Ἀποκαλυφθῇ does not, as some suppose, simply denote appearance; but has an allusion to those secret workings of apostasy and vice, which should at various times precede the final public and general one. Schott observes, “that St. Paul speaks of the apostasy and impiety as then latent; but hereafter to openly appear, and have its extremest measure at the appearance of the Man of Sin.” In the expression ὁ ἄνθρ. τῆς ἁμαρτίας we may (with the ancient, and some eminent modern Expositors) trace, as Pelt says, a parallelism of Satan with Christ. “As the Saviour, clothed in the human nature, appeared at the time decreed by God and Christ, so will the Power of Hell, introduced in the person of a man, (δεχόμενος (says Chrys.) τοῦ Σατανᾶ τὴν ἐνέργειαν,) appear, when the apostasy shall have become so ripe, as to require his agency.” He is here called ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, as Judas is, at John xvi. 12.

4. ὁ ἀντικείμενος—σέβασμα.] In these words the Apostle had doubtless in mind Dan. xi. 36. The ἀντ. and ὑπεραιρ. are (as Pelt observes) to be conjoined in one idea, denoting the exalting himself over, and opposing himself to God, and, putting down all worship of the Deity, in whatever form.

—πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν] “claiming to himself that adoration which is due to the Deity alone, so as to be the only object of worship.” A mode of interpretation supported by the authority of Chrys. and other ancient Expositors; and, of modern ones, by Grot., Koppe., and Pelt. The ὑπεραιρ. (on which see 2 Cor. xii. 7.) expresses, Pelt observes, the very extreme of pride. The word σέβας was used both of God and of men; i. e. such as were considered God’s viceregents on earth,—namely, sovereigns. Accordingly, σέβασμα signifies whatever object is worshipped or regarded as God. See Theophyl. Thus in Wisd. xiv. 20, and Acts xvii. 23, it designates the idols of the heathens.

—ὥστε αὐτόν, &c.] The ὥστε should be separated from the foregoing by a colon, since (as Pelt observes) “minus consilium quam sequelam innueri videtur.” Render, “insomuch that.” Αὐτόν—καθίσαι is best rendered, on the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and several eminent Expositors, “seat himself in the temple of God as God;” i. e., in quality of God. The words following ἀποδεικ. ἐαυτὸν ὅτι ἔ. Θ. are (as Chrys. and Pelt observe, comparing 1 Cor. iv. 9.) put for ἐπιδεικνύναι πειρώμενον; i. e. σπουδάζαν Θεὸς νομίζεσθαι, as Philo said of Caligula. Considering the highly allegorical and symbolical nature of the whole of this passage, there can be little difficulty in supposing that by “the temple of God” is meant (as almost all the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors understand) the Christian Church, as in 1 Cor. iii. 16. 2 Cor. vi. 16. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Eph. ii. 21. To this, indeed, some objections are made by Schott, but not such as have any great force. He takes it (with the generality of modern Expositors) of the Temple of Jerusalem, or rather de æde sacro generally, understanding thereby that the Man of Sin will, as it were, fix his seat above God’s holy place of worship, and affect Divine worship or authority.

5. οὐ μνημονεύετε—ὑμῖν.] It now seems to have occurred to the Apostle, that to some all this might be new and unheard; therefore he reminds them that this is no other than he had before told them; having communicated to them the substance at least of this information when he was with them. (Pelt.) q. d. “And you have no need to stumble at this doctrine, or to wonder that you do not see the Man of Sin exerting his baleful force; for you are well aware that there is something which prevents him from making his appearance."

6. καὶ νῦν τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε, &c.] The νῦν seems rightly taken by Koppe, Platt, and Pelt, as a particle of transition, "Now then." As to what is meant by τὸ κατέχον, (well explained by Chrys. τὸ κωλύον,) it is impossible to pronounce with certainty. And no wonder, since, as the Apostle was speaking of what they knew, he had no reason to open it out very clearly; and, therefore, we cannot expect to very well understand it. Upon the whole, the most probable opinion is that of Theodoret; who understands it of the decree of God's providence, which hinders the appearance of the Man of Sin until the "fulness of time." Εἰς τὸ ἀποκαλ. is suspended on κατέχον, and is not put (as Koppe supposes) for ἀλλ' ὁμῶς ἀποκαλυφθήσεται; but there is a blending of two clauses into one; and the complete sense is, "prevents him from being revealed, as he will at length be, in his season,—namely, that agreeable to the counsels of Almighty Providence." So John vii. 30. ἡ ὥρα αὐτοῦ. Here for ἑαυτοῦ, I would, from nine MSS. and some Fathers, read αὐτοῦ, as the context evidently requires. The ε might very well arise from the ω preceding. This reading was well followed by our English Version, which renders "his time."

7. τὸ γὰρ μυστήριον ἥδη ἐνεργ. τ. ἀ.] The Apostle saw a most pernicious principle of evil even in his time insinuating itself among Christians; though, from the power which restrained it, not yet fully developed. (Pelt.) Τῆς ἀν. is rightly supposed by Pelt to differ little from the ἀποστασία at v. 3; since ἀνομία may, by its etymology, very well signify ἀποστασία ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τοῦ Θεοῦ. So in 2 Macc. ii. 44. those are called ἄνδρες ἄνομοι whose ἀποστασία was mentioned at v. 15. Μυστ. ἀνομ. must, with the ancient Expositors, be taken for κεκρυμμένη ἀνομία; implying also a notion of evil; and of what consequently seeks concealment. See John iii. 19—21. So Schott well explains the phrase to mean, "improbities, quæ adhuc efficientiam suam occultat, sive occultare debet, eo quod speciem præ se ferat honestatis, et artibus clandestinis utatur." I would here compare what Josephus calls the life of Antipater, "a mystery of wickedness;" and what Dionysius Halic. says of Theopompus, that "he developed the mysteries, or secrets, of falsely seeming virtue, and of concealed vice." Ἐνεργεῖται may be rendered, "is being carried into action, (ἔργον,) is being developed." So the Pesch. Syr., "is beginning to be effective." See Note at 1 Thess. ii. 13.

In the next words, μόνον—γένηται, there is an ellipsis common in the popular style. And the sense (as was seen by the Syriac and some other ancient Translators) is only to be expressed by expanding the expressions as follows: "Only there is one who now obstructs; [and who will continue to do so] until he be removed." This use of μόνον (which corresponds to that of the Latin modo) is found in Gal. ii. 10, and vi. 12. Or we may, with Schott, regard the construction as an inversion of the words, for μόνον ἕως ὁ κατέχ. But thus, while the construction is adjusted, the sense is left very imperfect; which is only to be fully expressed by supposing here, as often, a blending of two clauses into one. As to the meaning of ὁ κατέχων, that is explained according to the hypothesis of the Interpreter. It seems well observed by Pelt, that ὁ κατέχων may be taken of a "genus hominum quoddam," a "vis quædam spiritualis simul cum ipso malo initum habens." And Calvin well remarks:—"Hoc mysterium iniquitatis revelationi opponitur; quia enim nondum tantas vires collegerat Satan, ut palam Antichristus Ecclesiam opprimeret, dicit eum furtim et clanculum moliri, quod aperte suo tempore facturus erat."

8. Here ὁ ἄνομος designates, as Pelt remarks, the author of the μυστ. τῆς ἀνομίας. The words following are added for the consolation of true Christians. The first clause ἀναλώσει—αὐτοῦ is formed upon Is. xi. 4. and Ps. xxxiii. 6. And ἀναλώσει is used for the ἀνελεῖ of the Sept., as being a stronger term, denoting total destruction. As to the reading ἀνελεῖ, here found in some MSS., it doubtless came from the Sept.: and the common reading may be supported from Thucyd. viii. 65. καὶ ἄλλους τινας ἀνεπιτηδείους κρύφα ἀναλώσαν, made away with.

The πνεῦμ. τοῦ στόματος is well explained by Vater, "verbo, jussu suo efficacissimo;" which is confirmed by Chrys. τῷ ἐπιτάγματι μόνον ἀναλώσει, and Theod. φθέγγεται μόνον, καὶ πανωλεθρία παραδώσει (read ἀναλώσει). The next clause designates the ease and speed of this destruction; (here represented by the equivalent term καταργ., to utterly destroy any force, see 1 Cor. xv. 24. 2 Cor. iii. 7.), namely, by and at his very presence. Ἐπιφ. παρ. signifies "his glorious presence." Indeed the expression is often both in the Scriptural and Classical writers used to denote Divine majesty.

9, 10. Οὗ παρουσία must, of course, be understood of the ἄνομος. The following description of the working of this μυστ. ἀν. is subjoined, not for consolation only, as Beng. thinks, but for warning, and other purposes. See Matt. xxiv. 25. John xvi. 4. xiii. 19. Οὗ ἡ παρουσία ἐστὶ κατ' ἐνέργ. τ. Σ. is (as Pelt remarks) for ὅς παύεται σὺν τῷ Σ. ἐνεργουμένῳ ἐν αὐτῷ, "at whose presence Satan will work with great power." So Eph. ii. 2. he is said to be ἐνεργῶν ἐν τοῖς υἱοῖς τῆς ἀπειθείας. The δυνάμις καὶ σημ. καὶ τέρ. may be taken, with almost all Commentators, as at Acts ii. 21. δυνάμει καὶ τέρασιν καὶ σημείοις. Since, however, πάσῃ is here added, it should rather seem, that by ἐν πάσῃ δυν. is denoted "great power;" and by σημ. καὶ τέρ., the kinds of power. The ψεύδους qualifies all three. The next words, καὶ ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ τ. ἀδ. advert to other modes, by which Antichrist and his agents and abettors will endeavour to advance their cause; namely, by every other unrighteous deceit and fraud, as well as that of pretended miracles. 'Εν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις must, as Pelt says, be joined with ἐνεργεῖται, quod latet in παρουσία κατ' ἐνεργεῖαν. Now this implies a yielding to the arts of the Seducer, and therefore ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλ. may be rendered, "among those who are sure to perish," or "among the wretched victims of their deceit." The next words show why they are thus devoted to perdition, and may be rendered, "inasmuch as they have not admitted the love or care of the truth, in order to their being saved." The sense, indeed, is disputed: but the best way of settling it is to suppose, as I have done in Rec. Syn., that we have here a blending of two modes of expression, "They did not love or care for the truth," and, "they would not receive or admit it."

11. διὰ τοῦτο] i. e. because they have had no love of or care for the truth. "For (observes Benson) there is no effectual preservative from fatal error but the sincere love of truth and virtue. See two excellent discourses on this text by Dr. South, vol. iv. p. 325, seqq., wherein he shows that ill-disposed affections are both naturally and penal the cause of darkness and error in the judgment. The best Commentators are agreed, that we are here to suppose that idiom, by which God is figuratively said to do a thing which he only permits to be done. Τῷ ψεύδει, not "a lie," but "the lie," i. e. that which is false.

12. ἵνα κριθ.] "Iva here denotes, as often, not end, but effect. See Luke xi. 50. Κριθ., for καταρκ. The εὐδοκ. ἐν τῇ ἀδ. signifies, "willingly indulging themselves in false, and therefore wicked doctrines."

13. ἡμεῖς δὲ—ὑμῶν.] This is a repetition of what was said at i. 3. Render: "However, we are bound to give perpetual thanks to God for you, that God hath, from the beginning, chosen you to salvation." Ἀπ' ἀρχῆς signifies "from eternity" (as at 1 John i. 1. ὁ ὧν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς), alluding to the eternal purposes of God in calling the Thessalonians to the Christian faith. See Chrys. and Benson. Εἰς σωτηρίαν, for εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι, or ἵνα σωθῶσι. In ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πν. is denoted the means, or the mode of the salvation; i. e. "by the sanctification of the Spirit," or, as Pelt explains, "on condition of sanctification of spirit." So at Eph. i. 4. to election is added the end and condition of it, εἵνα ἡμᾶς ἁγίους, &c. And at 1 Pet. i. 1, 2. Christians are termed ἐκλεκτοὶ κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος. By πίστει ἀληθ. is meant "faith in, belief of the truth," i. e. the Gospel.

14. εἰς ὃ] "unto which," namely, election and sanctification. Εὐαγγ. ἡμῶν, i. e. the Gospel preached by me; as 1 Thess. i. 5. Περιπ. δόξης, like περιπ. σωτηρίας at 1 Thess. v. 9.

15. στήκετε.] See Gal. v. 1 1 Cor. xvi. 3. and Notes. Κρατεῖτε τὰς παραδόσεις, for κατέχ. as 1 Cor. xi. 2. τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε. By παραδ. the best Expositors (except those of the Romanist persuasion) are agreed in understanding, "the doctrines and precepts delivered to the world by the Apostles," either in writing, or by word of mouth, as a revelation from God. And so παρέδωκα is used at 1 Cor. xv. 3. See the able Notes of Calvin and Benson cited in Rec. Syn. and Dr. Miller's Plea of Tradition, as maintained in the Church of Rome. The above view is further supported by the authority of Theodor., who explains: "Ἐχετε κανόνα διδασκαλίας τοὺς παρ' ἡμῶν ὑμῖν προσερχθέντας λόγους, οὓς καὶ παρόντες ὑμῖν ἐκρούξαμεν, καὶ ἀπόντες ἐγράψαμεν. In εἴτε διὰ—ἡμῶν, the ἡμῶν belongs to both λόγον and ἐπιστολῆς; and the sense is, "whether by our word, or by epistle." The εἴτε, as Gomar and Pelt remark, is (as in 1 Cor. xiii. 8. and xv. 11.) not disjunctive, but conjunctive, as often the Latin sive.

16, 17. Comp. 1 Thess. iii. 11—13. and v. 23. and see Notes there and at Col. ii. 2. Παράκλησιν αἰώνιαν καὶ ἐλπ. ἀγ., i. e. the consolation arising from the well-founded hope of everlasting life and salvation. So at 1 Cor. i. 3. God is called the God of all consolation. Ἐλπίς ἀγαθὴ here is equivalent to μακαρία ἐλπίς at Tit. ii. 13. Ἐν χάριτι must be construed with δούς, and signifies, "through [His] grace [alone]," without any merit of ours. Παρακαλέσαι is by the best Expositors understood of that kind of comforting, which consists in quieting the mind, when troubled by anxious doubts and fears as to our salvation, or tempted to let go our confidence in God, under affliction or persecution. See supra v. 2. Though surely the comforting them under affliction or persecution must be included. In στηρίζαι—ἀγαθῷ we must not, with some Expositors, take the λόγῳ of conversation, or, with others, of consolation; but, as the ancients and best moderns are agreed, doctrine. Thus the sense of the passage is: "may he support and confirm you in sound doctrine and virtuous practice."

III. 1. προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα, &c.] The Apostle here, as occasionally elsewhere, desires the prayers of his converts, to set them an example of humility; and, as in the case of praying for them, to hint to them their duty of praying for each other. He, however, does not ask their prayers generally, or for any temporal good, but for what would be to him the greatest blessing—that the Gospel may, through his means, make its way rapidly, and be successful; for that, as the best Expositors are agreed, is the sense of τρέχῃ καὶ δοξάζεται. In the former of those terms there is the same metaphor (taken from a race-course) as in Ps. cxlvii. 15. (where the LXX. render, ἕως τάχους δραμεῖται ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ), which passage was probably in the mind of the Apostle. I would compare Eurip. Ion. 531. τρέχων ὁ μῦθος ἄν σοι τὰ μὰ στήναιεν ἄν. The δοξάζ. has reference, not so much to the Gospel being embraced by many, as its being glorified in itself by a faithful fulfilment of its requisitions, and recommended to others by its producing the fruits of righteousness. Compare supra i. 10, 12. The words καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς contain a delicate commendation of those whom he is addressing.

2. καὶ ἵνα ῥυσθῶμεν, &c.] These words must be connected with ἵνα τρέχῃ, &c. Render, "And [in order thereto] that we (meaning himself, Silvanus, and Timothy) may be delivered from [the opposition and persecution of]" &c. In τῶν ἀτόπων καὶ πον. ἀνθ. the ἀτόπ. is by most recent Expositors regarded as synonymous with πον. And so the word is used at Luke xxiii. 41. But, from the words following, some more special sense seems intended; and the term appears to include the notions of unreasonable, and perverse (the latter of which senses is assigned by the Pesch. Syr.); the former regarding the heathens, the latter the Jews or Judaizing Christian teachers, described in 2 Tim. iii. 8. as ἄνθρωποι κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν, and, by an explication of the foregoing, ἀδόκιμοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν.

—οὐ γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις.] The sense here is certainly not what many Expositors assign, "There are few men of integrity, or persons whom we can trust;" for that interpretation is neither permitted by the use of the Article, nor is it suitable to the context. And the sense assigned by Benson and others, "for all men do not embrace the Christian faith," is very frigid and inapposite. The true interpretation is, I apprehend, that of the ancient, and many eminent modern Expositors (especially Crell., Wolf, Le Clerc, Turretin, Wells, and Pelt), "all have not the dispositions of mind to permit them to receive the truth," i. e. the Gospel; but only the lovers of truth and virtue possess them.

3. πιστὸς δέ ἐστιν ὁ Κύριος, &c.] This is by the best Expositors supposed to have been suggested by the πίστις of the preceding verse. The connection is ably traced by Pelt as follows: "Those bad men who oppose the truth do, indeed, lie in wait for us; but God will, we trust, rescue us from their evil designs, Who of his faithfulness and truth will never forsake us." Comp. 1 Cor. x. 13. i. 8, 9. and 1 Thess. v. 24. and Notes.

—ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ.] Expositors are not agreed whether this means "evil," or "the Evil one." The latter interpretation is adopted by almost all the ancients and many moderns; and, among them, by Bp. Middl., who urges the presence of the Article. That, however, will only show that the interpretation may, not that it must be adopted. The other (which is adopted in our common version, and also by most of the later Commentators and Translators) is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. That τοῦ πον. may mean "evil," is clear from Rom. xii. 9. ἀποστύγουντες τὸ πονηρὸν.

4. πεποιθ., &c.] Compare Gal. v. 10. Pelt observes, that it is the Apostle's manner to couch exhortation under exhortation. The ὑμᾶς is opposed to πάντων at v. 2.

— ἐν Κυρίῳ] i. e. says Chrys., “in his benevolence, implying the necessity for the Divine assistance co-operating with our own earnest endeavours.” See Chrys. and Theophyl. To trust, indeed, in the assistance of God, that they are doing what he enjoins, seems to involve something of incongruity. The most effectual method of removing the difficulty is to regard the sentence as containing two members blended into one. Thus the sense will be, “Now we hope and trust that [upon the whole] ye are doing the things which we command you; and we trust in the Lord's assistance that ye will be enabled to continue to do them.” It is plain that the Apostle everywhere urges the necessity of divine grace, and yet, on the other hand, admits the existence of free-will, or human liberty of action. See Phil. ii. 12. sq. 2 Cor. iii. 5. Rom. vii. 18.

5. ὁ δὲ Κύριος κατευθύναι—Θεοῦ.] Notwithstanding the attempts here made to establish a sense which differs widely from the one commonly assigned, the latter is doubtless alone the true one. See Rec. Syn. and Pelt. The words (which are quite in the Apostle's manner) may be rendered, “And now [in order thereto] may the Lord [by his Holy Spirit] direct your hearts unto the love of God.” On κατευθύναι see Note on 1 Thess. iii. 11. Any seeming incongruity is removed by supposing Κύριον to mean “the Lord [working by the Holy Spirit].” Τὴν ὑπομ. τ. Χρ. is by most recent Commentators explained, such patience as Christ displayed in his sufferings.” But there seems no reason to abandon the view taken by the ancient and most modern Expositors, “the patient endurance of tribulations such as Christ suffered; and which Christians must be prepared to endure in his cause.”

6—16. We may observe the address with which the Apostle first employs soothing language to show his affection for them, and to make palatable the reproaches he was about to introduce, and which were meant to correct a spirit that the Apostle had remarked among some of them; namely, a disposition to be idle, and throw themselves on the bounty of their richer or more industrious brethren for maintenance. These he had before enjoined to “quietly work, and eat their own meat.” As, however, his injunctions had been little attended to, he repeats them with greater authority and earnestness; strictly commanding the other Christians to break off all familiar intercourse with such, in order thereby to bring them to shame and repentance. Στέλλ. ὑμᾶς, “that ye withdraw yourselves from,” ἀφίστασθαι, χωρίζεσθαι ἀπὸ, as the ancient Commentators explain. See Note on 2 Cor. viii. 18—21. Ἀτάκτως περιπ. must here denote an idle life, unaccompanied by that regular industry, which the Deity enjoined on man at the fall. See 1 Thess. v. 14. By the παράδ. are meant those spoken of at ii. 15.

7. The Apostle here calls in his own example in aid of his precepts. Αὐτοὶ γὰρ, &c. The sense seems to be that assigned by Beng. and Pelt., “For you yourselves know what manner of life ye ought to practise, in order to imitate us.” Ὅτι οὐκ ἡτακτ., &c. There seems to be a clause omitted; q. d. “[Only, I say, imitate us;] for.” &c.

9. ἐξουσίαν] scil. τοῦ δωρεὰν ἄρτον φαγεῖν παρὰ ὑμῶν. On which see 1 Cor. ix. 6.

10. εἴ τις οὐ θέλει—ἐσθιέτω.] A sort of proverb, of which many examples are adduced.

11. ἀκούομεν γὰρ.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. “[I am induced to give this injunction] for I have,” &c. At ἐργάζ. and περιεργ. there is a paronomasia; as 1 Tim. v. 13. οὐ μόνον ἀργαί, ἀλλὰ καὶ περιεργοί. Περιεργάζεσθαι signifies, 1. to labour exceedingly; 2. to devote superfluous labour (the περι answering to our over, as in over-work); 3. to labour or give one's attention to things which have no relation to one's own proper business; which is usually the case with busy meddling persons.

 Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Θεσσαλονικεῖς δευτέρα ἐγγραφή ἀπὸ Ἀθηνῶν.

12. μετὰ ἡσυχ.] Namely, as opposed to that unsettled spirit which indisposed them for labour and disposed them to a disorderly life. The phrase τὸν ἑαυτῶν ἄρτον ἐσθίειν seems to be adagial. Many similar expressions are cited from the Classical writers, descriptive of the contrary. So the parasite is said ἀλλοτριοφάγειν.

13. μὴ ἐκκακήσῃτε καλοπ.] This is similar to the injunction at Gal. vi. 9. τὸ καλὸν ποιοῦντες μὴ ἐκκακῶμεν, "let us not be weary of doing good;" i. e. by the exercise of charity; which passage, together with the connection with the preceding (indicated by the δὲ) must determine the sense here to the subject of Christian charity; though most Expositors extend it to that of virtue in general. And as to καλοποιεῖν occurring in that sense at Levit. v. 4, there the context and opposition with κακοποιεῖν as much require that sense, as the context here does the other. The δὲ shows that the admonition was intended for those persons above the working classes; and was meant to repress that disinclination to relieve and assist even the industrious and deserving, which was apt to be engendered by the idleness, or unworthiness of some of the objects of charity.

14. διὰ τῆς ἐπιστ.] Some Expositors connect this with σημειοῦσθε, placing a comma after ἡμῶν, in the sense, "inform me of the delinquent by letter." That, however, is negatived by the use of the Article; for, (as Bp. Middl. has shown) if such had been the meaning, there would have been none. And σημειοῦσθε cannot well admit of that sense. Τῆς ἐπιστολῆς may be rendered (with Bp. Middl.) "our Epistle," literally, the Epistle which we wrote you. The sense of σημ. required by this interpretation is, indeed, not very frequent, but it is sufficiently supported by authority, and is confirmed both by the context here, and the etymology of the word. On μὴ συναναμίγ. see 1 Cor. v. 9 & 11. The expression is equivalent to συγχρᾶσθαι at John iv. 9. Thus it was a sort of excommunication, such as was in use among the Jews. See Schoettg. on Matt. xviii. 17. "ἵνα ἐντραπῇ; i. e. "that the shame thereof may bring him to repentance." Compare Tit. ii. 8, and 1 Cor. iv. 14, and Notes.

15. καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐχθρόν ἡγ.] "and yet regard him not as an enemy." These words are meant to show the nature of this sort of punishment, and how far it should extend. It was to be considered as a νουθεσία, having in view not so much the punishment, as the reformation of the offender. And the conduct adopted with regard to him was not to be so far removed from friendliness, as to approach to hostility. The term νουθ. is to be taken as at 1 Thess. v. 14. Compare Levit. xix. 17.

16. See Matt. xxviii. 20, and compare Rom. xv. 33.

Gal. 1. 1.
ταγὴν Θεοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ

The time when this Epistle was written is a point of great uncertainty. Dr. Burton refers it to A. D. 52.; while the opinion of the most eminent Critics is, that it was written A. D. 65. The arguments in favour of an early and of a late date respectively, are ably stated by Mr. Horne, Introd. iv. 386—388., who, after an elaborate discussion, decides (I think justly) in favour of a late date, and fixes the Epistle to A. D. 64.

The design of this Epistle is generally supposed to have been, to instruct Timothy in the discharge of his ministerial office: but the more immediate occasion of its being written seems to have been, to caution him against the delusions of those false teachers (supposed to have been Es-senes), who by their subtle distinctions had corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel, and by their interminable controversies on speculative points, had turned men's attention off from weightier matters. Accordingly, he presses on him to keep continually in view (in his preaching) the interests of practical religion, and gives him the most salutary counsels and earnest exhortations to the discharge of his office. Hence the Epistle naturally divides itself into two Parts.—I. That wherein Timothy is instructed as to his conduct in the settlement and administration of the Church at Ephesus. II. That wherein some reasonable admonitions are given, for the benefit of the people at large; some of whom, it seems, had been disturbed by the seductive arts of false teachers; and others had been too little mindful of the sacred obligation incumbent on them, to “adorn the doctrine of God in all things;”—the poor, by insubordination, and the rich, by covetousness. Accordingly the Apostle gives counsels suitable to both those classes; warning the one of the pernicious consequences of trifling controversies on matters of no moment; the other, of the danger of resisting the ordinance of God, “who maketh rich and poor,” and whose will it is that both should alike “glorify Him,” the rich “out of his abundance, and the poor out of his poverty.”

importance; for, although the erroneous notions of the Judaizing teachers (the immediate occasion of its being written) have disappeared, yet, as Dr. Mackn. observes, “the Epistles to Timothy are still of use, as they serve to show the impiety of the principles from which these errors proceeded. For the same principles are apt in every age to produce errors and vices, which, though different in name from those which prevailed in Ephesus in the Apostle's days, are precisely of the same kind, and equally pernicious.” They are also exceedingly important to the Church in every age, by giving its Ministers, of whatever community or denomination, the most perfect precepts as to the duties of their respective offices, pointing out the general qualifications necessary to such as are candidates for the ministry, and explaining the ends for which the offices were originally instituted, and ought still to be continued in the Church.

On the parentage of Timothy, see Acts xvi. 1—3. 2 Tim. i. 5. He was, as we find by the Acts and Epistles, frequently employed by St. Paul in going about to settle the state of things in various Churches. At the time when this Epistle was addressed to him, he was Bishop of the Ephesian Church. And it was written to instruct him as to the right discharge of his important duties, and probably, through him, others similarly circumstanced. Certainly the instruction contained in this and the second Epistle, and that to Titus, as to the character of persons to be appointed to the sacred offices, must be of perpetual use. And even those parts, which have reference only to the state of things in the primitive Church, are nevertheless calculated to be profitable in all ages, and under all circumstances. The design of the Epistle was not only to remind Timothy of the sacred obligations he had undertaken, and to give him directions for his conduct, both in a public and private capacity; but also to admonish and edify the Church at Ephesus, which had been disturbed by the arts of false teachers.

the whole Epistle. And in it the Apostle, after reminding Timothy of the sacred charge committed to him (i. e. to preserve the purity of the Gospel against the pernicious doctrines of the false teachers, whose notions led to empty speculations and frivolous controversies, and not to a holy life, and which therefore he in the next Chapter warns them to shun and avoid), then shows the true use of the Law of Moses, agreeably to the representation of it in the Gospel committed to him to preach; on the mention of which the Apostle expresses at large his ardent gratitude to God, not only in calling him (who had been a bitter persecutor and insulter), not only to the Christian faith, but in entrusting him with the office which he held in the Church.

1. κατ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ.] Render, "by the appointment of God," with Doddr., Benson, Wakefield, Newcome, and others. And so not only Montan., Erasm., and Calvin, but most recent Expositors, who regard it as nearly equivalent to κατὰ τὸ θέλημα Θεοῦ, comparing 2 Cor. i. 1. Gal. i. 1. Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, i. e. the author of our salvation, as iv. 10. Tit. ii. 10., &c. God is with reason so called, since, as Benson observes, "the original of our redemption through Jesus Christ was the love and goodness of the Father, who planned, as well as the Son, who effected it." Τῆς ἐλπίδος means, by metonymy, "the cause of our hope."

2. γνησίῳ τέκν.] Render, "my genuine, or true son;" (so the Pesch. Syr. "vero") called son, as being converted by St. Paul (1 Cor. iv. 14, 15. Gal. iv. 19.), and genuine son, as, from his zeal in propagating the faith, and his other dispositions, bearing that likeness to him, which true sons may be supposed to do to their parents.

3. καθὼς παρεκάλεσά—Μακεδ.] The construction here is tortuous and elliptical. Πορ. εἰς Μακεδ. must be construed between καθὼς and παρεκ., and the protasis at καθὼς is without its apodosis, οὕτως, which must be supplied. The simplest and most natural method is to understand οὕτω καὶ νῦν παρακαλῶ. Μὴ ἑτεροδ. should be rendered, "not to teach any other doctrine [than such as the Apostles teach]," and, as is said at vi. 3., contrary to "sound-words." These are supposed to have been the doctrines of the Judaizers.

4. By the μύθ. are denoted the traditions and interpretations of the Jewish Rabbis. So Tit. i. 14. μὴ προσέχοντες Ἰουδαϊκοῖς μύθοις. And this may serve to determine what is meant by the γενεαλογίαις ἀπεράντοις, which words are by some referred to the Eons of the Gnostics; but (as the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors have seen), the expression must chiefly relate to that attachment to genealogical investigation, which has ever distinguished the Jews. Thus the μύθ. may relate to the stories connected with the genealogies. So Polyb. ix. 2. cited by the Commentators: ἐξαρτμεῖσθαι τὰ περὶ τὰς γενεαλογίας καὶ μύθους. Some Expositors, ancient and modern, take the ἀπερ. to signify unprofitable. But of this sense they adduce no example; nor is any one furnished among all the numerous passages here cited by the Commentators and Lexicographers. I cannot find that the word had ever any sense but endless: though occasionally in Æschyl. and Aristoph. it is used for ἀπέρατος; unless (which I suspect), that be, in fact, the true reading. The word is often used with λόγος, or some term implying that sense. The common interpretation, then, confirmed by the ancient Versions, must be retained. The most apposite Classical citations illustrative of it, are Plutarch i. p. 255. λόγον πρὸς ἀπεράντους δεισιδαιμονίας ἐκφέροντα. So Milton, "And found no end, in wandering mazes lost."

The next words αἵτινες ζητήσεις, &c., give another reason why they are not to be attended to;—namely, inasmuch as they were useless; only affording matter for interminable and vain debate. The μάλλον may be, as the Commentators say, for καὶ οὐ. The sense of the words following depends upon the reading, which is disputed. For οἰκοδομίαν, almost all the MSS., some Versions, and most early Edd. and Fathers have οἰκονομίαν, which is preferred by Grot., Hamm., and Mill, and adopted by almost every Editor from Wets. to Vater. The question is one of no easy determination; for though critical reasons are in favour of οἰκονομίαν, yet it yields, turn it how we will (whether understanding it of the Gospel dispensation, or of the ministry), so unsuitable a sense that I see not how we can adopt it. It must be remembered, that the rule of preferring the more difficult reading, has an exception in the case of readings which violate the propriety of language, and yield no tolerable sense. As to the preponderance of MSS. in favour of οἶκον., it is not fatal to οἰκοδ., since in words very similar, and therefore likely to be confounded, manuscript authority cannot determine the reading. How perpetually Δ and Ν were confounded, is well known. Besides, the words themselves are actually confounded in Thucyd. vi. 98. Moreover, though οἶκον. be the more difficult reading, yet οἰκοδομία is so rare, and οἰκονομία so frequent a word, that, by another critical canon, we are bound to prefer οἰκοδ., since the scribes perpetually mistake rare words for other and common ones, very similar in appearance. Finally, the common reading is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., the Vulg., and other ancient Versions; and is required by the words preceding (for St. Paul would naturally say they were unprofitable and unedifying; which, on the new reading he does not), and also by what follows, τέλος (scope, or end), being more suitable to οἰκοδ. than οἰκον. In Θεοῦ there is a Genitive of substantive for the cognate adjective, as δύναμις Θεοῦ in Rom. i. 16. 1 Cor. i. 18. At τὴν ἐν πίστει, Sub. οὔσαν, "which is found in the Gospel." So at vi. 20. the contrary are called κενοφωνίας βεβήλους.

5. Τῆς παραγγελίας is commonly rendered precept, commandment; meaning the revelation of God in the Gospel. But it is better taken, with Crell., of the system or body of commandments (παραγγελμάτων) which we are to observe. Many Expositors, however, from Benson downwards, understand it of the charge which Timothy was to deliver; which last view seems to deserve the preference, and is confirmed by v. 18. ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν. See Scott. The interpretation of ἀγάπη will depend on which of the above two views be adopted of παραγγ. According to the former, it will denote love to God and man; according to the latter, the τὴν ἀγάπην at Col. iii. 14. ἥτις ἐστὶ σύνδεσμος τῆς τελειότητος. The words following show the kind of charity. It is to be sincere (not founded on interested motives) and springing from motives of conscience, and undissembled conviction of Gospel truth.

6. ὦν "from which [virtues]." In ἄστοχ. and ἐξετρ. there are two metaphors; one of missing a mark (suggested by the τέλος just before) the other, of wandering from a road. So Joseph. Antiq. L. xiii. 18. ἐξετρ. τῆς ὁδοῦ δικαίας. See also 2 Pet. ii. 15. Ματ. has reference to the vain speculations, or endless and unprofitable ζητήσεις mentioned at v. 4., and called κενοφωνίας at vi. 20. and it is here, by implication, opposed to the performance of substantial duties.

7. θέλοντες "desiring to be [thought], affecting to be," as Col. ii. 18. Νομοδ., i. e. doctors or teachers of the [Christian] law. The term; indeed, properly signified a Doctor of the Jewish law; but it was here used, because the persons in question were Judaizing Christians, and therefore likely to cling to the old term, rather than adopt πρεσβύτερος, or other terms generally used among Christians. Μὴ νοοῦντες ("though understanding not what they say") is a popular phrase, to which is subjoined the more recondite one μήτε περὶ τίνων διαβεβαιοῦνται, where διαβ. is used (as often in the later writers), of strongly affirming or strenuously maintaining any thing; meaning, the true nature of the law, and the real intent of the Gospel. To this the Apostle in the next words adverts, in order to make his meaning the clearer, and also to show that he does not despise the law.

8. καλὸς] "excellent," both in nature and intent, especially the moral law; though the ceremonial was excellent in its true scope. Νομίμως χρῆται, i. e. "live by it agreeably to its design," which was to restrain and check, by the fulfilment of its moral precepts, vicious and evil habits; and, by its ceremonial ones, to lead them to that better law which was revealed in Christ.

9. εἰδὼς τοῦτο, ὅτι—οὐ κείται.] By νόμος many eminent Expositors understand the minatory and severe enactments of the Mosaic law: q. d. "Those do not concern or apply to such as have a Christian law of righteousness; are of force only against such as contemn and violate the law." See Crell., Rosenm., and Doddr. I am, however, inclined to prefer the interpretation of Benson, and Bp. Middl., the latter of whom thus paraphrases: "Recollecting that neither the Mosaic, nor any other law, is directed against the just and good; but only against the lawless and disorderly." So also (observes Bp. Middl.) at Gal. v. 23. St. Paul having enumerated the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, &c., subjoins, against such there is no law, οὐκ ἐστὶ νόμος, which appears to be exactly equivalent to the νόμος οὐ κείται in the present verse. "I do not deny (continues he) that the Mosaic Law is comprehended in νόμος; I contend only, that νόμος in this place is not limited to that Law, but that it comprises every law written and unwritten, human and Divine; nor could the argument of the Apostle be stated with greater force, than by his extending what was primarily meant of the Law of Moses, to Law universally: the Mosaic Law, says St. Paul, was intended to restrain the wicked; against the just, neither it nor any other law was ever promulged. [So Aristotle cited by Benson says: "The law is not against the virtuous, because the virtuous are a law unto themselves." Ed.] So, I would add, Menander, δίκαιος ἐάν ᾗς, τῷ τρόπῳ (thy [good] disposition) χρῆσις νόμου. As to the following crimes being violations of the Decalogue, that will not be conclusive against this interpretation, since, even supposing St. Paul to have alluded more immediately to the Decalogue, this allusion will not be inconsistent with the supposition, that νόμος was meant of law indefinitely; and in speaking of the vices, which all laws are designed to restrain, a Jew would naturally specify those which his own Law had particularly prohibited." (Bp. Middl.)

In the subsequent enumeration of vices, the general terms ἀνόμ. and ἀνυποτάκ. (lawless and unruly), are, by way of exemplification, followed up by special ones. These, however, are introduced by the connecting link of some which are partly general, and partly special;—as ἀσεβ. and ἀνοσ., ἁμαρτ., and βεβ.; and which rather consist in principle than in practice. Ἐμαρτ. may be taken, with some, to mean idolaters; but it is rather synonymous with ἀσεβ., with which term it is often connected in Scripture. Ἀνοσ. and βεβ. are also nearly synonymous, and may be rendered “impious and heathenish.” Next come the special terms, commencing with murder, both of the worst and the less criminal sort. By πόρνοις must be denoted adulterers as well as fornicators. Ἀρσεν. seems here to denote sodomites of both kinds, namely, both the μαλακοὶ and the ἀρσεν. mentioned at 1 Cor. vi. 9. To murder and sins of uncleanness of the worst sort, the Apostle, in ἀνδραποδισταῖς, subjoins robbery of the worst kind; for Expositors are agreed that the word means kidnapping free persons to be sold as slaves (see Schol. on Aristoph. Plut. 521.); a crime universally regarded as of the deepest dye, and always punished with death. By the ψευσταὶ and ἐπίορκοι are denoted different modifications of the same crime (see Rom. i. 31. ἀσυνθετοί, ἄσπονδοί), the latter rising beyond the former, as perjury exceeds perfidy. For ψευστ. does not, I conceive, simply mean (as it is generally interpreted), liars, but deceivers, utterly faithless, as in Rom. iii. 4. 1 John ii. 4. 22. So Thucyd. in his inimitable description of the state of society in Greece at the time of the Peloponnesian war, L. iii. 83. throws together these two vices (namely, ψευστ. and ἐπίορκ.) thus: οὔτε λόγος ἐχυρὸς οὔτε ὅρκος φοβερός. The εἴ τι is for ὅ τι, meaning “whatever else.” By ὑγίαν. διδ. is meant, by metonymy, “what sound or salutary doctrine enjoins.” So ὑγαινοντες λόγοι at vi. 3. 2 Tim. i. 13. and Philo cited by Loesn. Also Plutarch cited by Wets. has δόξας περὶ Θεῶν ὑγαινούσας καὶ ἀληθεῖς.

11. κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγ., &c.] These words are closely connected with the preceding, and are added to show that there is reference to the Christian law, as well as the moral part of the Mosaic law: which Benson thinks is the same as saying, that the law of nature, or the moral law, is adopted into the Christian system. Μακάριος is an epithet applied to God at vi. 15., and also by Philo, who calls God μόνον μακάριον. It is meant to denote felicity infinite and beyond comparison.

12. τῷ ἐνδυν.] literally, “who gave me the ability and qualifications [for discharging this trust],” of course, implying all that Divine illumination and supernatural power (called δύναμις, Acts i. 8.) by which he was enabled to fully comprehend and effectually preach the Gospel. All this he constantly ascribes to Christ only. See Acts ix. 17. Rom. xv. 19. 2 Cor. v. 5. Gal. i. 1. “Ὅτι πιστ. με ἠγ. θέμ. εἰς διακ., is for ὅτι ἔθετό με, πιστόν ἠγησάμενος, εἰς διακ.

13. In βλάσφ., διώκ., and ὕβρ. there is a climax; the spirit of ill-will expressed in the first, being in the second and third terms carried into greater and greater effect. On βλάσφ., see Acts xxvi. 11.; on διώκ., Gal. i. 13. and on ὕβρ., Acts viii. 3. 11. ix. 2. In ὅτι ἀγνοῶν—ἀπιστία there is an obscurity and seeming incongruity, arising from brevity of expression; two clauses being blended into one. The full sense is, “because I did what I did in simple ignorance [of the nature of my conduct], and in sincere [though unfounded] unbelief [of the truth of the Gospel].”

14. ὑπερεπλέονασε—ἀγάπης.] This is, from brevity, obscure. The sense, when fully expressed, is as follows: “[And not only was I pardoned], but the grace of our Lord so superabounded [beyond my deserts], that I was also brought to believe and love Jesus Christ [whom I had blasphemed].” See Acts viii. 3. xxvi. 9. 1 Cor. xv. 9. “The πιστ. (says Newc.) is opposed to the ἀπιστία; and the ἀγάπης to the βλάσφ.”

15. πιστὸς—ἄξιος.] The sense is, “Assuredly true, and worthy of entire acceptance is the assertion, that,” &c. Ἀποδ. ἄξιος is often found in the later Classical writers and Philo. Σῶσαι denotes not only to put into the way of salvation, but also to furnish with such aids of Divine grace in working it out, as are consistent with the free-will of men as moral agents.

—ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ.] At this strong expression the Commentators stumble. To remove the difficulty, Benson explains it, “the first who from a blasphemous persecutor have become a Christian.” That sense, however, would require the Article; and perhaps the truth of the sentiment may be questioned. Some, as

 18 ^{d Infra 6. 12. 2 Tim. 4. 7.} Ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν παρατίθεμαί σοι, τέκνον Τιμόθεε, Newc. and Valpy, render "a chief," i. e. one of the chief. But whether πρώτος ever has that sense may be doubted; certainly not in Eph. vi. 2., where see Note. Nor will the absence of the Article countenance it; since, as Bp. Middl. Gr. A. i. 6. 3. shows, ordinals dispense with the Article. Besides, from the very position of the word, and the air of the clause, it is manifest that a superlative sense is here intended. The common interpretation must therefore be retained, and the words regarded as expressive of deep modesty and humility; like 1 Cor. xv. 9. ἐγὼ εἰμι ἐλάχιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων.

16. ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἡλ., &c.] The sense seems to be: "Howbeit for this reason [also] was I," &c., q. d. "I was the first and chief of sinners, and therefore in me first [of all who had so sinned] did Christ show mercy." Ὑποτύπωσις properly denotes such an exact representation of the form of any thing, as is obtained by a stamp, or impression. Thus it came to mean an exemplar, and finally a striking example, as was the case of God's dealings with St. Paul to all sincerely penitent sinners.

—πρὸς ὑποτύπ. Ὑποτ. is well explained by Dr. Burton, "a likeness made by impression," and generally an exemplar. "Now, no example (observes Mr. Holden) could be fitter both to show the mercy of God in pardoning sin through Christ, and to encourage sinners to repent and believe, than the pardon granted by Christ to so great a transgressor as St. Paul had been."

17. Here the Apostle's gratitude for the mercy of God breaks out (as often) into an expression of praise and adoration. The term βασιλεὺς is often applied to God, as being the King of kings and Lord of lords. Ἀφθάρτῳ, as distinguished from earthly monarchs. Of ἀοράτῳ, the best comment is the parallel passage at vi. 16, which the taste of Milton induced him more than once to imitate; as φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον, ὃν εἶδεν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ ἰδεῖν δύναται. On μόνῳ σοφῷ, see Rom. xvi. 27. I have here pointed as I have, because it has been shown by Bp. Middl., that ἀφθ. and ἀορ. agree not with βασιλεῖ, but with Θεῷ, and that the true construction is, "To the eternal King, the immortal, invisible, only wise God;" the Article before ἀφθάρτῳ being, as frequently elsewhere, omitted before a Title in apposition. The σοφῷ is not found in some ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. and others. Internal evidence would seem against it, inasmuch as it may have been introduced from Rom. xvi. 27. Yet I cannot but suspect that it was removed by those half-learned Critics, who stumbled at the expression σοφῷ, and thought it would be better away; perhaps from their taking the passage (with Lampe on John xvii. 3.) as if pointed: ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ, μόνῳ, σοφῷ Θεῷ, which punctuation that Commentator strenuously maintains, appealing to Clem. Epist. ad Cor. 1. οὕτω ἐποίησεν εἰς τὸ δοξασθῆναι τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ ἀληθινοῦ καὶ μόνου Θεοῦ; but in vain, as will appear from the Note on that passage. If, indeed, that were the punctuation, it would seem almost useless: but that argument will only be valid against the punctuation, not the presence of σοφῷ. Lampe, indeed, asks why the expression only wise should be applied to the Deity any more than only invisible. But it would not be difficult to offer a reason for that, were it necessary: but it is not; for μόνος is only used by an idiom very suitable to Oriental diction, whereby it merely raises the positive of any quality to the superlative. "Certainly μόνος (as is observed by Bp. Burgess cited on John xvii. 1.) does not possess so exclusive a sense as the Unitarians suppose." But what Unitarians think now, the Arians might think in the early ages; and, therefore, I cannot but suspect that doctrinal reasons (to use the expression of Matthæi) may have concurred in inducing some early Critics to throw out the word, emboldened perhaps by what is said at vi. 15 & 16. ὁ μακάριος καὶ μόνος δυνάστης, ὁ Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευνόντων, καὶ Κύριος τῶν κυριενόντων, ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανάσιαν, φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον. It may, indeed, be urged, that the Trinitarians might introduce it from Rom. xvi. 27. But (putting good faith out of the question, and the fact, that of their adding any thing to the text, very few proofs can be adduced) it was far more the interest of the Arians to remove than of the Trinitarians to add any thing. Besides, the former were accustomed to tamper with the Text in various ways. That the Pesch. Syr. has not the word, will not be decisive in a case like this, which concerns the addition or omission of words, for unless we have better reasons for believing a word not genuine, than its being not expressed in an ancient Version, it must be retained.

18. The Apostle here resumes what he had said at v. 3. There is a remarkable transposition in the verse: the construction being π. παραγγ. παρατίθ. σοι, ἵνα, κατὰ τὰς πρ. ἐπ. σὲ προφ., στρατ., &c. With the words τὰς προαγγ. ἐ. σ. πρ. the later Commentators are much perplexed, and propose various interpretations, which, however, are open to insuperable objections (see Rec. Syn.); and the only true one appears to be that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, by which the προαγγ. προφ. respecting Timothy are referred to the revelations made by the Spirit to Apostles, or persons possessing the Spiritual gift called the προφητεία, of the existence of which we have indubitable evidence in the N. T. See Chrys., Theophyl., Theodor., and Ecumen. Thus the revelations may be supposed to be, that he would be a person who should much benefit the Church, and be very proper to be invested with government in it. See Whitby. Ἐρί, "concerning;" a signification not very frequent but which is found in Mark ix. 12. γέγραπται ἐπὶ τὸν Υἱὸν τ. ἀ. Heb. vii. 13. ἐφ' ὃν λέγεται ταῦτα. 2 Cor. ii. 3. 2 Thess. iii. 4. Προαγ. may be rendered "antecedent," or "preceding" (as Heb. vii. 18.)—namely, which preceded his appointment to the ministerial office.

—στρατεύῃ] "Not that thou mightest," but "mayest war." The military metaphor is employed in allusion to the courage and vigilance requisite to his office. Such figures (Wets. has shown) are also employed by the Classical writers with reference to any office, public or even private, representing life as a warfare, and man as a soldier. The Article τὴν is not pleonastic; the sense being, as the Pesch. Syr. Translator saw, "the good warfare,"—namely, of faith; as vi. 12. ἀγ. τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα τῆς πίστεως. For there is, as Theophyl. remarks, a κακὴ στρατεία, the making our members instruments of unrighteousness. There is an ellipsis of πίστεως, as at 2 Tim. iv. 7. τὸν ἀγῶνα τὸν καλὸν ἡγωνίσμαί. Ἐν αὐταῖς seems to mean, "by and through them;" i. e. by the stimulus proceeding from those revelations, even the desire not to be found unworthy of them. So ἐν is used at 2 Cor. iv. 6.

19. πίστιν καὶ ἀγ. συνείδ.] Mentioned supra v. 5, and forming the principal virtues of the Christian soldier. "These (observes Dr. Barrow, Sermon. vol. ii. p. 10) are terms born together, inseparable from each other, living and dying together: for the first is nothing but the stipulation of a good conscience, fully persuaded that Christianity is true, and firmly resolved to comply with it: and as to the other, a man void of conscience will not embark in Christianity, or having laid conscience aside, he will soon make shipwreck of Faith by apostasy from it." Πίστ. must here respect orthodoxy of doctrine, and συνείδ. probably means sincerity in teaching it. Ἀπωσ., "having cast off." In περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐνανάγησαν there is a nautical metaphor (but imperfectly understood by Expositors) derived from merchant-sailors, who lose their property by the vessel in which they have embarked it being shipwrecked. This metaphorical use is rare, yet is found not only in the Fathers (as Greg. Naz. navay. τὴν σωτηρίαν) but also in Plutarch, vol. viii. p. 460; yet always, I believe, with the Accusative only, not accompanied with περὶ; with the exception of a single passage adduced by Wets. from Philo, vol. i. p. 678. ναυαγίσαντες περὶ γλῶτταν ἄζορον, ἢ περὶ γαστέρα ἀπληστον. Though there navay. has a sense very different from that in the passage before us. The only difficulty in the phrase ναυαγεῖν περὶ is to ascertain the force of the περὶ, which Commentators have failed to notice. I cannot but think that had they more attentively considered the nautical figure here, they would have seen that there is an allusion to losing a vessel by running it on a rock, περὶ ἔρμα; of which phrase examples may be seen in my Note on Thucyd. vii. 25.

20. οὓς παρέδωκα τ. Σατ.] See Note on 1 Cor. v. 5. Ἴνα παιδ. μὴ βλασφ. This does not mean, as Beza thinks, "ne impune ferant suas blasphemias;" which would make what Heinr. calls "a severe expression" still more so. But βλασφ. may only allude to that speaking evil of the truth, to which error indirectly leads. Heinr. would not have handled this passage in the unskilful, not to say irreverent, manner he has done, had he possessed the good taste to discern, that there is in it a kind of proverbial expression (not unknown in our own language), as in a kindred passage of Soph. Antig. 1089. ἵνα γυνὼ τρέφειν τὴν γλῶσσαν ἡσυχυτέραν.

II. The Apostle now proceeds to particulars, and to give directions for the regulation of the Church; and first as to its external state, commencing with the most important of external observances, public worship.

1. δεήσεις, προσευχάς, ἐντ., εὐχ.] By the first of these terms (which, however, are regarded by some ancient and modern Expositors as synonymous) may be meant deprecations of evil; by the second, supplications for good; by the third, intercession for others; by the fourth, grateful acknowledgments to the Divine goodness for their preservation or prosperity. A view supported by the authority of St. Augustin (as quoted by Dr. Parr, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 644.), who interprets δεήσεις deprecations, that evil may be averted from rulers, προσευχάς, petitions that good may be obtained for them; ἐντενύξεις occasional intercessions, that needful graces may be conferred upon them; εὐχαριστίας, thanks when they have fulfilled the high functions of their station, by effecting the deliverance of their people from impending danger, or by redressing some grievous and inveterate wrongs, or by diffusing general happiness in the regular and orderly administration of government. See an admirable Sermon on this text by Dr. Barrow, vol. i. p. 122. By πάντ. ἄνθρ. are meant all, both Christians and non-Christians.

2. τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ.] These are equivalent to the οἱ ἐν τέλει of the Classical writers, "those who hold any office in the State," the ἐξουσία of Tit. iii. 1. Ἴνα ἡρεμον—ἀιάγωμεν. This does not mean, as some imagine, "Let us do this, that we may live free from persecution." What seems meant is, that the prayers are to be offered up chiefly, and in a religious view, with reference to the will of God, by whom the powers that be are ordained; but partly, and in a political one, in return for that quietness, which can no otherwise be attained than by good government; and without which, godliness could be ill cultivated. The latter of these reasons is referred to in the καλὸν (for δίκαιον) of the next verse; the former, in the ἀπόδεκτον ἐνώπιον τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ of v. 3.

3. ἀπόδ.] for εὔρεσθαι. in Heb. xiii. 21.

On σωτῆρος, see Note on i. 1.

4. The words καὶ—ἐλθεῖν suggest the means of salvation,—namely, by coming to a full knowledge and recognition of the truth [of the Gospel]. The Commentators seem not to have perceived this sensus prægians in ἐπίγν., which is often found in ἐπίγνωσκω. The conjoint and implicit sense “recognition” is found in the verb at Matt. xiv. 35. Mark vi. 54. Luke xxiv. 16. Acts iii. 10; xii. 14.

5. εἰς γὰρ Θεός—Ἰησοῦς.] This seems to have reference, not (as Benson and Rosenm. suppose) to the praying for all; but to what immediately precedes; q. d. “[God our Saviour will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth]; for He is the God alike of all; and the Man Christ Jesus is the Mediator between God and man, who gave himself a ransom for all. Here it is implied, that it is alone by a recognition of the truth, as regards God and the Mediator between God and man, that we can be saved. As to the Unitarian gloss on μεσ. (by which it is taken as merely meaning “one who makes known the mind of two parties to each other, and concludes an agreement or covenant between them”) that is disproved by the words of the next verse, ὁ δὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων from which it plainly appears that the principal notion of μεσ., as applied to Christ, is that of atonement. This is irrefragably proved by Whitby, Mackn., and Abp. Magee, the last of whom shows that this doctrine of Atonement is interwoven with the whole texture of the N. T. On the whole subject of mediation and atonement, see some masterly remarks by Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. Book ix. Ch. 2, who there shows at large that mediation, to be effectual, must be enforced by some satisfaction; and that, as the mode of this mediation might have been either by interceding for the remission of the forfeiture, or by satisfying for the debt, so we find by Scripture, that both were employed, the intercession being by way of satisfaction for the debt. The price paid was the death of the Son of God. And as to the nature of that death, which had the efficacy of redemption, he shows that it must be (as it was) both voluntary, and offered up as a sacrifice. And thus the expiatory sacrifice of Christ on the cross operated for our Redemption.

As to the other Unitarian perversion of the sense, which represents Christ as here called a mere man, it has been abundantly refuted by Bps. Pearson, Bull, and Warburton, and Dr. Mackn. Suffice it to say, that if he was a mere man, how could he mediate between God and man. He would himself need a mediation. See

Bp. Beveridge cited in D'Oyly and Mant. It is plain that this passage cannot contravene the doctrine, that Christ was both God and man. Indeed, as Mr. Slade observes, “had he not been more than man, there would have been no occasion for ἄνθρωπος, which word is never found so applied to any other person, as Moses or John.” And though in Numb. xii. 3. we have ὁ ἄνθρωπος Μωϋσῆς πρᾶς (ἦν) yet there the Article is found, (which it is not here, in any MS.) nay more, it is there required; where it should have been rendered this man; for there is surely no reason why ὡς should not be so translated in that passage, as it is in Esther ix. 4. מִדָּנִי וְשֹׁמֵרִי is “this man Mordecai.” And here it may be remarked, that our common Version throws a needless stumbling-block in the way of the ignorant by rendering the οὗτος,—αὐτός, and ὁ δε in Heb. iii. 3; vii. 4 & 24; viii. 3; and x. 12, by “this man.” It ought surely to be, “this person.” But to proceed,—in the present passage the Article is unnecessary, since, as Bp. Middl. has shown, Jesus Christ could not be called the man κατ’ ἐξοχήν, since he did not possess the human nature in a pre-eminent degree. The learned Prelate rightly regards ἄνθρ. as used for a Title, in the same way as Κύριος Ἰ. Χρ. Thus we may safely assert, (with Mr. Valpy,) “that Christ is here named Man by the title derived from his inferior or human nature, and that is attributed to one of his natures, which properly belongs to the compound nature of Christ: for he is mediator, not inasmuch as he is man, but inasmuch as he is θεάνθρωπος. This does not exclude the Son’s participation of the Godhead, but distinguishes his mediatorial office, to which on many accounts the divine nature was also necessary.” “Furthermore Jesus Christ (says Whitby) has here the Title adapted to his Humanity given him, in order to intimate to us, that having taken upon him the Nature common to us all, to fit him for this office, he must design it for the good of all who were partakers of that nature.” Comp. Heb. ii. 16, 17, 18, which is an excellent comment on the present passage.

6. ὁ δὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλ. ὁ. π.] See Matt. xx. 28. and Note, and Bps. Sanderson and Beveridge in Mant. The ἀντίλ. of this passage is a stronger term than the λυτρ. of Matthew, and is well explained by Hesyeh. ἀντίδοτον, implying the substitution, in suffering punishment, of one person for another. See 1 Cor. xv. 3. 2 Cor. v. 21. Tit. ii. 14. 1 Pet. i. 18. The next words, τὸ μαρτύριον καιροῖς ἰδίαις, from their abruptness, involve considerable difficulty, and hence great diversity of opinion exists on their sense. As to the various readings, they seem only to attest the perplexity of the ancient Critics; and are of no value, except to show what some ancients supposed to be the sense. To advert to the interpretation of the moderns, Abp. Newc. renders,

"a doctrine to be testified of in its proper time."

This, however, is paying no attention to the Article, which, indeed, chiefly occasions the difficulty of the sentence. And though Dr. Benson's version expresses the force of the Article, it cannot, I think, be admitted, since μαρτύριον in the sense of a personal witness, is unprecedented. I should prefer, with Bp. Middl., to put the clause into a parenthesis, and render, "the proof of it in due time." Yet this runs counter to the laws of parenthesis, and the sense arising is scarcely suitable: not to say that the signification proof is unauthorized. In fact, the learned Prelate so distrusted his own interpretation, as to be ready to suppose (as Scultetus long ago had done) that the clause is not genuine. I would propose to render, "which (i. e. the fact of Christ's having given himself a ransom for all) is the testimony (or doctrine) [to be borne witness to, i. e. to be set forth and taught] in its due season," namely, that fitted for its purpose. Thus καιροῖς ἰδίοις will have the same sense as at vi. 15. and Tit. i. 3, and is nearly equivalent to πλήρωμα τοῦ χρόνου at Gal. iv. 4, the time appointed in the counsels of God, the time of the Gospel. The Apostle, then, means to hint to Timothy (and, through him, to all ministers), that the fact of Christ's having given himself a ransom for all is to be the great subject of their preaching. And, accordingly, the present sentiment is quite parallel to that at 1 Cor. ii. 2, where Paul professes that he "determined to know nothing (i. e. to keep solely to the one truth) of Jesus Christ, and him crucified." The above interpretation is, I believe, not liable to any well-founded objection. The supplying "which is" may be defended from the laws of apposition; for that the idiom falls under that head was seen by Estius and Crell. The above version is, I find, supported by that of Le Clerc, "Ce qui devoit être annoncé dans son temps;" and also that of Luther, approved by Wolf, who shows that the μαρτύριον must be referred, not to Christ, or to his passion, but to the thing to be testified of, declared and taught concerning Christ, namely, that "he gave himself a ransom for all." Finally, the above interpretation is strongly confirmed by the next words, εἰς ὃ (scil. μαρτ., i. e. κήρυγμα) ἐτέθην κήρυξ.

7. ἀλήθειαν—οὐ ψεύδομαι! This solemn form of asseveration occurs also at Rom. ix. 1. See also John i. 19, 20. and Note. Ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀληθ., i. e. "in the faith [of Christ] and the truth of the Gospel."

8. The οὖν is resumptive, and refers to the direction at v. 1. Τοὺς ἄνδρας may be rendered "the men," as having opposed to it just after τὰς γυναῖκας. Ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ seems to mean, "in every or any place [appropriated to public prayer]." Perhaps with allusion to the superstitious attachment to certain places (as Jerusalem) supposed to be more than ordinarily holy, which the Judaizers fostered. Ἐπαίροντας χεῖρας refers to the action usually adopted in fervent prayer. So Ps. cxli. 2. ἐπαραισίων χερσῶν. Indeed similar ones occur in the best Classical writers. The use with an epithet is very rare; though I have in Rec. Syn. adduced one example from Philo, where the καθαράς there answers to the ὁσίους here; which means "unpolluted by vice," in allusion to the carefully washed, though morally unclean, hands of the Jews and Judaizers. The ὀργῆς καὶ διαλογισμοῦ may best be understood of animosity, disputing, and altercation. See the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg., Bens., Newc., and Heinr. The common interpretation, "doubting," yields, indeed, a not unsuitable sense, but is liable to objection. The full sense seems to be, "debating about matters of doubtful disputation and scruple."

9. Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας, &c.] Here almost all modern Expositors take the sense to be, "And in like manner I wish the women to adorn themselves," &c. But thus there is no correspondence, such as is suggested by the ὥσαύτως. Now, as it is likely that the Apostle would address something to the women, as well as the men, on the subject of prayer, I agree with the ancient and a few eminent modern Expositors (as Grot.), that we must repeat not only βούλομαι, from the preceding, but also προσεύχεσθαι. Grotius, indeed, repeats the whole sentence. But that is harsh and unnecessary; for ὥσαύτως may be taken to mean ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ—διαλογισμοῦ. There seems to be here, as often, a blending of two sentences into one; and thus a καὶ is to be repeated with κοσμεῖν. So at ὥσαύτως in Luke xiii. 3. and 1 Cor. xi. 25. ἔλαβεν must be repeated from the preceding; and in 1 Tim. iii. 8, 11. v. 25. Tit. ii. 3, 6. δεῖ εἶναι is to be repeated from the preceding. In the present passage, however, the Apostle blends the two sentences, as meaning to say, "I wish them to attend such prayers in modest apparel." Thus adverting to two points in which both respectively would be too apt to err; the former from a spirit of contention, the latter from vanity and fondness for exterior adornment.

In μετὰ αἰδούς, &c. the Apostle here further develops his meaning; q. d. "And let this adornment be rather with modesty than with art," where the αἰδ. καὶ σωφρ. correspond to what Pericles in Thucyd. ii. 45. calls "the virtue of their sex, and its greatest glory;" and who carries the ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ εἶναι even further than St. Paul, by saying that it ought to be their greatest praise to be as little as possible the theme of conversation among the other sex, whether for praise or censure." It may be observed that the μὴ, in this kind of converse construction, stands for οὐκ—ἀλλά, non tam—quam; as in a kindred passage of 1 Pet. iii. 3, where see Note, as also my Note on Thucyd. i. 6. The πλέγματα of St. Paul corresponds to the ἐμπλοὶα τριχῶν of St. Peter and the κρόβυλον of Thucydides; both meaning a topping of braided hair. By the χρυσῶν are denoted the golden head-bands, bracelets, armlets, anklets, ear-rings; and by the μαργαρίταις, ornaments for various parts of the body, made of precious stones. So aurum in Latin is used for ornaments of gold; as Virg. Æn. iv. 138. Crines noduntur in aurum. Revel. xvii. 4. καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἦν κεχρυσωμένη χρυσίῳ καὶ λίθῳ τιμίῳ, καὶ μαργαρίταις. In illustration of the sentiment, Wets. cites Xenoph. Mem. 2. τὸ σῶμα τῇ καθαρότητι κεκοσμημένῃ, τὰ δὲ ὄμματα αἰδοῦ, τὸ δὲ σχῆμα σωφροσύνη. To which I would add Philostr. Heroic. C. 13. ἐκομᾷ τε ἀνεπαχθῶς· οὐ γὰρ ἦσκει τὴν κόμην, οὐδὲ ὑπέκειτο αὐτῇ, ἀλλὰ μόνῃ τὴν ἀρετὴν ἐποιεῖτο κόσμημα.

10. ἐπαγγ.] This use of the word, by which it denotes "the following a course" of life, or adopting a set of opinions, is found also in the best Classical writers. Θεοσ. denotes the worship of God, and, as is implied, in its purest form. Thus it had been used of Judaism, but was now transferred to Christianity.

11. γυνὴ ἐν ἡσ. μανθ., &c.] The best Expositors are agreed that this injunction relates, like the foregoing, to public worship: and that in the next verse the Apostle intends to make his meaning the clearer. Women are enjoined, at divine worship, to keep that silence which is suitable to subjection: they are not only not to pray, but not to instruct; they are to learn, and not to teach, nor in any way assume authority over the other sex, but to be quiet. Thus the injunction is exactly the same as that at 1 Cor. xiv. 34. Αὐθεντεῖν signifies properly "to slay with one's own hand;" 2. to do any thing (as we vulgarly say) of one's own head, or take the law into one's own hand, αὐτοδοκεῖν. Hence it comes to mean ἐξουσιάζειν. At εἶναι ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ, supply κελεύω, from the preceding words οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω. See Note on iv. 3. Ἠσυχ. here cannot, as Rosen. imagines, denote the not discharging a public office (for the women occupied the Diaconal office), but that peaceable acquiescence (the ἡσυχίῳ πνεύματι of 1 Pet. iii. 4.), which is the very opposite to a spirit of turbulence or disorder.

13, 14. Here are adduced two principal reasons for the foregoing injunction, showing why the female sex is in subjection to the male. As to the first, it is generally supposed to be founded on the Jewish notion, by which (as we find from the Rabbins) priority of creation was always thought to carry with it precedence. There is, however, no necessity to resort to that principle. We may regard the words as briefly intimating an argument, which is more plainly expressed in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xi. 8, 9. Οὐ γὰρ ἐστὶν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικὸς, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ ἐξ ἀνδρὸς· καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐκτίσθη ἀνὴρ διὰ τὴν γυναῖκα, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ διὰ τὸν ἀνδρα, which passage is the best comment on the present. Her being created as an helpmeet to man, implies an inferiority to, and dependence on man. The ἐπλάσθη here is equivalent to the ἐκτίσθη there, and has reference to Gen. ii. 7. ἐπλασεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρ. χεὶρ ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς.

With respect to the second argument, Ἀδὰμ οὐκ ἡπατ., here the ancient and most modern Expositors repeat, from the preceding, πρῶτος. This, however, is not a little harsh. The Apostle merely means to say, that the fault of being deceived rested on the woman. The full sense being, "It was not Adam that was deceived [by the serpent], but the woman; who, being so deceived, was especially in fault." Hence it follows, that she, from that original imbecility and persuasibility, was very properly subjected to the man, and thus must not usurp authority over him. The phrase ἐν παραβ. εἶναι corresponds to the Latin in culpā esse.

15. σωθήσεται δὲ—σωφροσύνης.] This passage has occasioned great perplexity to Expositors; and all the interpretations proposed are more or less objectionable. The difficulty centres in τεκνογ., and Commentators have attempted to remove it by assigning to the term some peculiar sense,—as education, or offspring; the διὰ being taken for σύν. But thus the latter part of the sentence will not correspond (as it is evidently intended to do) to the former. And, indeed, both those significations are destitute of any authority, and yield a forced and frigid sense. To take the expression, with others, as meant of the bearing the promised Redeemer, would suppose such an enigmatical mode of speaking on a plain subject, as it is very improbable the Apostle should adopt. Lastly, the difficulty has been attempted to be removed by changing the sense of σωθ., which many eminent Commentators think may here denote only temporal deliverance. So Abp. Newc. renders, "Notwithstanding, she shall be preserved in child-bearing, if they continue," &c. This, however, lies open to the fatal objection,—that the deliverance has not been observed to be confined to Christian and pious women; and that the context requires σωθ. to be taken of salvation. In short, the true sense is, I have no doubt, as follows: "The sex, however, which was the means of bringing such ruin on the human race, will not be excluded from salvation, or admitted to it on worse terms; but it will be extended to them, in consideration of their child-bearing. They will, I say, be saved, as a sex, and all the individuals of it, if they embrace and continue in the Christian faith, and practise those duties of loving obedience, holiness, and modesty, which it enjoins." The διὰ means "on account of," in consideration of, as in Rom. iv. 43. οὐ γὰρ διὰ νόμον ἡ ἐπαγγελία τῷ Ἀβραάμ, ἀλλὰ (διὰ) δικαιοσύνης πίστει. Nor ought it to be an objection, that thus those who die virgins (which, however, very few do in the East), or bear no children, would be excluded from salvation; since what is here said only refers to the sex at large, not to any individual of it. The meaning is, that by their child-bearing (for that is the force of the Article) the evil done by the sex (for which, too, it is punished by the pains and perils of child-bearing brought on by the curse) is regarded as balanced by a correspondent benefit; and thus it will be admitted to salvation with the other sex, on the same conditions, of faith, &c. As γυνή is taken generically, the transition from the singular to the plural has nothing objectionable, and seems to have been resorted to for the sake of more pointed application.

III. The Apostle now proceeds to the cognate subject, of the qualifications of those who are to preside in the above assemblies for prayer, or are to discharge other and æconomical functions connected therewith.

1. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος.] Many Commentators, ancient and modern, thinking that the subsequent affirmation would scarcely require so solemn an introduction, refer these words to the preceding assurance in σωθήσεται, &c. But though the formula is used of what goes before, at iv. 9., yet it has just been used of what follows. And certainly the character of the formula is far more suitable thereto. Besides, it is not solemnity, but seriousness that characterizes it; q. d. "It has been said, and is a true saying, and highly worthy of notice, that," &c. I have fully shown, in the Notes on Acts xi. 30. xx. 17. Phil. i. 1., that originally the terms ἐπισκ. and πρεσβ. denoted the same offices of the Church; and I pointed out also how the office of Bishop (in the sense in which we now use the word) was introduced. It is not clear whether St. Paul here means to denote ministers of the second, or of the first rank of the ministerial offices; but probably the former is intended. "The question, however, is (as Mr. Holden observes) immaterial, since the qualifications for both the superior offices in the ministry must have been much the same." By calling it καλὸν ἔργον, an honourable work, the Apostle means to suggest that its weighty duties are to be considered rather than the honour, much less the emolument of it.

2. Ἀνεπιληπτος is properly an agonistical term, signifying, "one who gives his adversary no hold upon him;" but it is often (as here) applied metaphorically, to one who gives others no cause to justly accuse him. So Thucyd. v. 17. τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἀνεπ. εἶναι. Of the words μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρα the sense has been disputed.

That the Apostle forbids polygamy, cannot be doubted; but the only question is, whether he means to forbid more than one wife at a time, or more than one wife at all: q. d. "the candidate shall not have married a second wife." Authority seems most in favour of the former interpretation; but, as in a kindred passage of v. 9., where it is required of a widow, in order to be put on the list for support by the Church, to have been ἐνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνή, where the expression can only mean, to have one husband, and as it seems (as Chrys. observes) to have been the chief intent of the Apostle καλῶν τὴν ἀμετρίαν, it may be supposed that he forbids second marriage in a Bishop, lest, in an age when divorce was so prevalent, Ministers might be induced to seek divorce, and thus subject themselves to scandal, as if actuated by improper motives.

Instead of νηφάλιον (the reading of many of the best MSS. and all the early Edd.), νηφάλεον was introduced by Beza, but without sufficient reason; and the former has been rightly restored by Wets., Griesb., Matth., Tittm., and Vat. Render "vigilant," or circumspect; a sense occurring in the later writers. So the Peschito Syriac "mente sit vigilantī." Σώφρ. Render "sober-minded," or κόσμ., "orderly," "decorous," σεμνοπρεπῆ, as Theophyl. explains. Indeed the three terms form a class of cognate virtues. No wonder that the Apostle should require so much from Christian ministers, since as much was expected of the heathen priests. So in Æschyl. Theb. 606. Amphiarus is described as being a model for priests, thus: Οὗτος δ' ὁ μάντις σὺ φρῶν, δίκαιος, ἀγαθὸς, εὐσεβεὺς ἄνθρω, μέγας προφήτης. Οὐ φιλόξενον, hospitable, see Rom. xii. 13. and compare Heb. xiii. 2. Διδάκτ., "fit to teach;" as possessing the knowledge and faculty necessary (see Tit. i. 7.)

3. μὴ πάροινον.] Some Expositors, ancient and modern, take this to be equivalent to ὑβριστὴν or αὐθάδη; which is, indeed, much countenanced by three vices in this clause standing opposed to the three virtues in the next. But the expression μὴ οἶνον προσέχοντας, said of the Deacons at v. 8., requires the physical sense to be here at least included: and, according to every principle of correct exegesis, it must stand first. Πλήκτην is commonly rendered "striker." But, as the expression is opposed to ἄμαχον in the next clause, it is better explained, with the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, quarrelsome, litigious. Or it may denote, as Theod. and other ancients interpret, "rebellion, impetuous, and bitter in censuring," the ἐμπλήκτως ὄξυς of Thucyd. iii. 82. Of this metaphorical sense, rare in the Classical writers, I find an example in Dicæarchus, p. 15., Σπασεῖς δὲ καὶ ὑβρισταί, καὶ ὑπερήφανοι πλήκταιί τε, &c. And Pollux vi. 129. reckons among the disturbers of the state τοὺς πλήκτας.

Μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ is in many MSS., Versions, and Fathers not found; and is rejected by several Critics, and cancelled by Griesb. The words may be an interpolation from Tit. i.; for as to the argument of Wets., that to three vices are opposed in the following clause three virtues, that weapon cuts two ways; for it may be urged that the words were introduced to complete the sense, and cause the very correspondence in question. And certainly the style of St. Paul, like that of Thucydides, is characterized by variety, and does not affect the trim exactness of Isocrates. With respect to the word itself, it is used by the best writers to denote one who will gain money by methods, which though not dishonest, yet are base. See the admirable sketch of Theophrastus of αἰσχροκερδεῖα.

4. καλῶς προϊστ.] “well or creditably regulating.” Of the citations in Wets. the most apt is Diog. Laert. i. 70. τῆς αὐτοῦ οἰκίας καλῶς προστατεῖν. To which I add Dionys. Hal. i. p. 178. ἐμμέφeto δὲ τοὺς κακῶς προϊσταμένους τῶν ἰδίων. The words μετὰ πάσης σεμν. are to be construed with τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου καλῶς προϊστάμενον, denoting the demeanour to be adopted. And the τέκνα ἔχοντα ἐν ὑποταγῇ adverts to the case wherein the καλῶς προϊστ. is most requisite.

5. εἰ δέ τις—ἐπιμελήσεται.] This seems founded on a sort of proverb, that he who cannot manage his private affairs, is not fit to be entrusted with those of the public.

6. μὴ νεόφυτον.] “Not a new convert,” by a metaphor like that in 1 Cor. iii. 6. ἐγὼ ἐφύ- τενα. There is also implied a danger of the rawness, and imperfect acquaintance with the doctrines of Christianity, likely to be found in such: which seems referred to in the τυφωθεῖς just after; since imperfect knowledge generates conceit. See vi. 9. The words εἰς κρίμα ἐμ- πέσῃ τοῦ διαβόλου are by most Expositors, ancient and modern, understood of falling into the same condemnation and punishment which the Devil fell into, through pride: which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Several eminent Expositors, however, from Luther and Erasmus, downwards, take τοῦ διαβ. to mean the calumniator or slanderous enemy of the Gospel; the noun being, they say, used generically, of those who seek an occasion to calumniate the Christians. But the former interpretation is greatly preferable.

7. μαρτυρίαν.] This may be best rendered reputation, or character. By παγίδα τοῦ διαβόλου some modern Expositors understand “the snares of the calumniators.” That sense, however, is frigid. Τοῦ διαβ. is best taken, with the most eminent Interpreters, from the Pesch. Syr. downwards, to mean the “Devil.” Παγ. may denote, in a generic sense, the various snares which, as we learn from Scripture, the Tempter is ever laying to entrap our virtue. But probably one temptation may here be particularly meant, namely (as Theophyl. and Doddr. think), that of not being scandalized for nothing.

8—10. The qualifications for Deacons are comparatively few, such being omitted as have reference to government, or teaching. Διλόγους, “double-tongued,” or double dealers, deceitfully saying one thing to one party, and another thing to another; one thing to the minister, and another to the people.

9. ἔχοντας—συνειδήσει.] These words are variously interpreted. The meaning seems simply to be, “holding the doctrines of the faith sincerely and conscientiously.” So i. 19. ἔχων πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συνειδήσιν. On μυστ. τῆς πίστεως in this sense, see Eph. i. 9. vi. 19. Col. iv. 3. and compare 1 Cor. ii. 7.

10. καὶ οὗτοι] “those too,” viz. as well as the Presbyters; for, it seems, examination as to character and qualifications was to precede election.

11. γυναῖκας.] Most modern Commentators understand “the Deacons’ wives;” but the ancient ones, and Prof. Dobree, interpret “Deaconesses,” to whom certainly the qualifications mentioned are more suitable than to the former; and the voice of antiquity ought not lightly to be rejected. However, it is probable that the same persons might sometimes be both.

12. See supra vv. 2, 4.

13. βαθμὸν καλὸν περιπ.] Literally, “obtain an honourable post or step,” i. e. a higher degree, viz. of Presbyter, or Bishop. Πολλὴν παρρ. Supply περιπ. The sense seems to be,

“they obtain the privilege of speaking with freedom (i. e. beyond that of private Christians) on matters concerning the faith.”

15. ἐὰν δὲ βραδύνω, ἵνα εἰδῇς.] The best mode of removing the difficulty here seems to be, to repeat ταῦτα γράφω from the preceding verse; q. d. “[And I write these things unto thee, not as if I should never come again], but that if I should be delayed, thou,” &c.

The next words, στῦλος καὶ ἐδρ. τῆς ἀληθ. have been variously interpreted. See Poole's Synop., Wolf's Curæ, and especially Deyling's Obs. Sac. vol. i. Diss. lxvi. and Weber's Diss. in the Critici Sacri. The question is not so much what is the sense, as what is the scope of the words; and whether they should be taken with the preceding, or the following. Some ancient and several modern Expositors, (as Chillingworth, Gataker, Maius, Zorn,) and many recent Interpreters refer them to what follows. This method, however, lies open to insuperable objections, as stated by Poole, Benson, and Scott. And thus, too, I apprehend, the sentiment is overloaded with words, has in its air something frigid and jejune,—and, what is more, involves an anticlimax no where found in Scripture, and very rarely in any writer of credit. The natural connection of the words is, doubtless, with what precedes: yet certainly not, as some imagine, with εἰδῇς, as if the reference were to Timothy; for that would be an utter violation of the construction, and involve somewhat of incongruity; for, though Timothy might be a pillar of the truth, yet not a foundation thereof. In short, the words cannot well be united with any part of the preceding context, except with ἥτις ἐστὶν—ζῶντος, which is their natural connection, and which would probably have been more generally received than it has among Protestant Expositors, had they not wished to rescue the passage from Romish perversion. But surely such forced expositions, devised merely to evade the arguments or claims of opponents, are unworthy of a cause which needs not the aid of disingenuous arts to uphold it. Here there can be no doubt but that the true reference is to ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία, as was maintained by almost all the ancient Expositors, and many eminent modern Protestant Commentators, as Grot., Bp. Hall, Calvin, Hamm., Gothofred, Weber, Schmid, Deyling, Wolf, Whitby, Mackn., and Bp. Van Mildert, who understand it of the Church Universal, administered under an external visible form of government,—and which, by maintaining the Revelation of God and his religion, upholds it as a foundation does a building, or as pillars support an edifice. So Grotius: “Veritatem hic comparat operi superno; Ecclesiam, maximè universalem, sed et eas partes quæ universali adhærent, columnæ et basi.” That such is the meaning, is plain from the context: the design of the Apostle being evidently this, to give weight to his preceding instructions, as to the regulation of the Church at Ephesus, by suggesting the important purpose for which the Church Universal was instituted. The above interpretation is, I believe, liable to no well-founded objection: and, indeed, any other mode of explanation is, both philologically and otherwise, quite untenable. It may, indeed, be asked, that if such be the meaning, why was it not expressed more exactly and intelligibly? I answer, that the Apostle could not express ἥτις ἐστὶ before στῦλος, &c., because that would have involved a tautology of the very worst kind possible, and of which there is no example to be found in any good ancient writer. And it was not necessary so to do, since the aposition supplies this subject to the context, and that context furnishes us with ἥτις ἐστὶ, just what is wanted. And that perhaps was one reason why Saint Paul wrote ἥτις ἐστὶν just before, and not ὅστις ἐστὶ, as the grammatical concord with οἶκος requires; though it is not unfrequently deserted; as Gal. iii. 16. καὶ τῷ σπέρματι σου· ὅς (for ὅ) ἐστὶ Χριστός. The idiom is frequent in the Classical authors, especially Thucydides; though there is generally some reason for the hypallage. Here, besides the one above suggested, the writer could not well use ὅς, lest it should be referred to Θεοῦ as the nearest antecedent, and lead to a confusion of ideas.

Finally, with reference to the dispute in doctrine here involved, I would say, that as the Church of that age (to which the words were especially meant to apply) might well be said to be στῦλος καὶ ἐδραῖωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, because founded by the Apostles, who were the Pillars of the Christian faith; so, if the words be applied, in the present instance, to the Church, they are not to be referred to the Church of Rome, or to the Church of England or Scotland, or any particular Church, but to Christ's Holy Catholic Church (for which we pray in our Liturgy), consisting of all the true Churches of Christ throughout the world; i. e. all such Churches as hold the essential doctrines of the Gospel. So that the passage by no means implies the infallibility of any particular Church. On which subject see the able and instructive Essay of Dr. Macknight. That the words are well adapted to express the above sense, is manifest; for στῦλος being qualified and explained by ἐδραῖωμα, must be put for στῦλωμα (on which word see Steph. Thes.); and in ἐδραῖωμα there is, I think, an allusion to the mode in which vast edifices, like the Temple at Jerusalem, or that of Diana at Ephesus (supposed by some Commentators to be here alluded to in οἶκος), were built; namely, as in several of our cathedrals (such as Canterbury, and old St. Paul's) by first laying a foundation with rows of pillars penetrating deep under ground,—and then, upon those, building the superstructure. Accordingly, here, as the CHURCH UNIVERSAL is the ἐδραῖωμα, so each particular Church may be a pillar of that foundation, which upholds the superstructure of Gospel Truth.

16. καὶ ὁμολογουμένως—μυστήριον.] This is closely connected with the preceding, and the sense may be thus expressed, “And, indeed, νερώθη ἐν σαρκί, ἐδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι, ὥφθη ἀγγέλοις, ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, ἐπιστεύθη ἐν κόσμῳ, ἀνελήφθη ἐν δόξῃ.

vast is the importance of the mystery of godliness contained in the long concealed, but now revealed Truths of the Gospel, which that Church is to recommend and support;—and of which the sum is, that God was manifested in the flesh.” There may, indeed, seem an abruptness, and a sort of hiatus in the sense between μυστ. and Θεός. But that is not uncommon in the writings of St. Paul, and especially in passages, like the present, of great pathos. See Rom. xi. 33—36. In these cases, I have, after eminent Editors, placed a mark denoting the aposiopesis. The term μυστήριον is often used of the doctrines of the Gospel in general; but was here, I conceive, adopted chiefly with reference to that great mystery of “God manifested in the flesh,” on which all the others depend, and which Timothy was especially to urge.

It is true that the sense, as above laid down, depends upon the reading, which, in the case of Θεός, is disputed. Griesb. has for Θεός edited ὁς; but without any sufficient reason: for the external evidence in favour of it is next to nothing; only three MSS. having ὁ, and one ὁ; and those all of the Western recension, and probably altered from the Vulgate. As to Versions, though most of them favour the ὁς, yet they cannot be balanced against nearly the whole of the MSS. The Latin Fathers, indeed, support the ὁ; as might be expected from its being the reading followed in the Vulgate. But as to the Greek Fathers, they are by no means, as Griesb. affirms, in favour of the ὁς. For it has been irrefragably proved by Matthæi, Dr. Burton (in his Testim. p. 141. seqq.) and Rinck, that their testimony is upon the whole decidedly in favour of Θεός. The false reasonings of Griesb. and Belsham have been fully exposed by Dr. Burton and the British Critic, and Quart. Theol. ii. 297; the former adducing evidence of the way in which the passage was understood by the Ante-Nicene Fathers, in citations from Barnabas, Clem. Alex., Hippolytus, and Dionys. Alex.; to which others are added by Rinck from Ignat. Ep. to the Ephesians, § 19. Θεοῦ ἀνθρωπίνως φανερούμενον. Beng., Matt., and Rinck are decidedly of opinion that the reading ὁς arose from ὁς; and not ὁς from ὁς. And no wonder; since (as Matthæi has shown) in the uncial MSS. the line in Θ is not unfrequently omitted by the scribes; as, for instance, in the next word ἐφανερώθη. Now, in a question of testimony, like this, it might be sufficient to prove that external evidence is decidedly in favour of Θεός. But we may as confidently refer to the internal, since it is not less so. It has been shown by Bp. Bull, Abp. Magee, Dr. Nolan, Dr. Burton, the British Critic, and Rinck, that the ὁς is liable to almost every objection in interpretation, and violates all the rules of construction. It cannot legitimately have any antecedent but Θεοῦ ζώντος. That, however, is rejected by the Socinians, since it equally inculcates the doctrine of the DEITY OF CHRIST, which they are resolved, at all events, to exclude. As to the sense thus produced, it has been shown by Dr. Nolan,

VOL. II.

Rinck, and the British Critic to be quite unsuitable. I must not omit to state, that Dr. Pye Smith, in his very valuable “Scripture Testimony,” adopts the reading ὁς, which, with Berri-man and others, he connects with Θεοῦ ζώντος, including the intermediate words in a parenthesis. But, with deference to that learned and excellent writer, I must here differ from him in opinion; especially as I am strongly confirmed in my persuasion of the genuineness of Θεός by the very elaborate discussion of the evidence, both external and internal, given in an able Tract by Dr. Henderson, entitled “The great Mystery of Godliness incontrovertible, London, 1830,” (who decides the question in favour of Θεός), and also by the opinion of the writer or writers of the Critique on this work in the Eclectic Review for Nov. 1832.

In short (to use the words of Bp. Pearson on the Creed) “St. Paul unfolding the mystery of godliness, has here delivered six propositions together, and the subject of all and each of them is God. And this God, who is the subject of all these propositions, must be understood of Christ, because of him each one is true, and all are so of none but him. He was the Word, which was God, and was made flesh; and, consequently, ‘God manifested in the flesh.’ Upon him the Spirit descended at his baptism, and after his ascension was poured upon his Apostles, ratifying his commission, and confirming the doctrine which they received from him; wherefore he was ‘God justified in the Spirit.’ His nativity the angels celebrated; in the discharge of his office they ministered unto him; at his resurrection and ascension they were present, always ready to confess and adore him. He was therefore ‘God seen of angels.’” The rest of the propositions need no proof or illustration.

IV. 1. τὸ δὲ Πνεῦμα ῥητῶς λέγει.] The connection with the preceding context may be thus traced. “[Of such vast importance, then, are the doctrines involved in the mystery of godliness, and ever to be carefully adhered to, especially] since the Spirit expressly assures us that,” &c. By τὸ Πν. some eminent Expositors understand that portion of the Spirit vouchsafed to the Prophets of the O. T.; as, for instance, Dan. xi. 36—39. By most, however, it is referred to the Apostle himself; including, some think, the other Apostles also. Be that as it may, the expression seems to imply a direct revelation; as Acts viii. 29. x. 19. xi. 12. Revel. ii. 7. ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις. By ὑστ. καιρ. are meant, as in Acts ii. 17. Heb. i. 1. 1 Pet. i. 20, the times of the last or Christian dispensation. Compare, also, similar expressions in the kindred passages of 2 Tim. iii. 1. James v. 3. 2 Pet. iii. 3. Jude 18. Ἀποστήσονται τ. π., “will fall away from the faith.” This has, no doubt, the same reference as the ἀποστασία in a parallel passage at 2 Thess. ii. 3—12, where see Notes. Both these terms chiefly denote apostasy from the religion; but sometimes only a falling away from the true faith of it. Πνεύμ. πλάνοις (in which we have subsp. for adj.) signifies persons who profess to speak by the Spirit, but in reality are impostors. The πλάνοις serves to determine the sense of πν., which otherwise would only be, "those professing a divine inspiration," as 2 Thess. ii. 2. 1 John iv. i. iii. 6. With respect to διδασκ. δαιμ., it is not agreed whether it means doctrines suggested by demons, or "concerning demons." The former interpretation is preferable, especially as it may include the sense of devilish, i. e. impious. So in James 3. 15. weilave σοφία δαιμονιώδης.

2. ἐν ὑποκρ. ψευδ.] The construction here is somewhat perplexed; but as to the antipotesis supposed by some, it is utterly inadmissible; as is also the factitious mode of construction proposed by Heinr., who would supply ὄντες, or repeat προσέχοντες. The words depend, I conceive, upon ἀποστρέφονται; and the ἐν must (with many eminent Expositors) be taken for διὰ, Heb. 2, by or through. By ὑποκρ. is meant a pretence to extraordinary sanctity. In the figurative expression κεκαυτ. τὴν ἰδ. συν., Commentators are not agreed whether the metaphor is taken from the branding of persons for crimes, or from the cauterizing employed by surgeons with mortified flesh, which is, as such, insensible to all feeling. The latter view, which is supported by the authority of Theodoret, is, on account of the adjective ἰδίαν, greatly preferable. Comp. Eph. iv. 19. οἵτινες ἀπηλγνῆκότες, &c.

3. ἀπέχ. βρωμ.] Here the best Expositors are agreed, that κελευόντων is to be supplied, taken from κωλ. before; comparing 1 Cor. xiv. 34. These two passages being peculiar cases, differing from those many, where, in the latter part of a sentence, a word (generally a verb) is to be supplied from one that occurs in the former part of it; or if not the same, some word of cognate sense. Whereas, in these two passages, the word to be supplied is one of the very opposite in signification to what had occurred in the former member of the sentence. Which may perhaps be paralleled with the Classical idiom, by which, in the first clause of a sentence comes a verbum imperandi with a negative; and in the second, the verb is to be repeated, without the negative. Now here κωλύω includes within itself both; yet, in the second clause, a verbum imperandi is to be repeated, as in the former case. On βρωμ. see Note on Acts ii. 44. Μετὰ εὐχ. See Note on Eph. v. 4. Τοῖς π. is for ὑπὸ τῶν πιστῶν.

4. κτίσμα.] This means, "any thing provided by God in the creation." Ἀπόβλ., for ἀποβολῆς ἄξιον. Compare Rom. xiv. 6. 1 Cor. x. 31. There is much light thrown on this part of the Epistle, in a Sermon of Bp. Sanderson's his 5th ad Populum, on this text. He takes κτίσμα here to mean the heaven and the earth, and all things therein.

5. ἀγιάζεται—ἐντεύξ.] These words do not so much give a reason for the preceding, as they limit the foregoing position, and show that every κτίσμα Θεοῦ may become καλόν (for that is what is meant by ἀγιάζεται) namely, "if it be partaken and enjoyed, διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ καὶ ἐντεύξεως," "in conjunction with, preceded by the use of prayer," &c. See Note on Acts ii. 42. Διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ is well explained by Dr. Benson, who paraphrases: "The word of God, in the Gospel, hath abolished the ceremonial law; and among other things, the distinction between meats clean and unclean."

6. ταῦτα.] This must denote all the instructions that have been before given. Ὑποτίθεσθαι signifies, "to lay any thing before another," as instruction or admonition. Ἐντρεφόμενος, &c., "[thou wilt be] one nourished up in the doctrines of faith." The words following apply what was said generally, of a καλὸς διάκονος, to Timothy: and the διδ. refers to the Apostle's own instruction. Ἐντρέφεσθαι and the Latin innutriti are often used with Datives denoting instruction. Παρηκολ., literally, "hast followed up, and learnt;" implying attention to.

7. βεβήλους—παραιτοῦ.] The mention of διδασκ. reminded the Apostle of a kind of learning to which Jewish youths particularly attended,—namely, that of the Rabbinical traditions and speculations, such as we find in the Talmud; the μῦθοι καὶ γενεαὶ. ἀπεράντ. of i. 4. To these the epithets here used are quite applicable: and βεβήλ. may refer to something in them akin to the Pagan superstitions. Γραῶδεις, silly, absurd; like the Latin anilis. So Strabo cited by Wets. calls poetry γραῶδῃ μυθολογίαν. As regards the sentence, I would compare Phil. Jud. 132. C. τῷ δὲ Θεοῦ θεραπευτῇ πρεπωδὲς ἀληθείας περιέχεσθαι, τὴν ἀβεβαίαν μυθοποιῶν χαίρειν εἰπόντι. Παραιτοῦ signifies, "have nothing to do with;" synonymous with περίεστας in Tit. iii. 9.

The next words seem meant to anticipate and answer a plea for the kind of learning just condemned,—namely, that it exercised the understanding. The Apostle directs Timothy rather to occupy himself in acquiring a perfect knowledge of the religion he had to teach. See v. 13. Εὐσέβεια is here used as at iii. 16.; though it may also be meant to include exercise in the practical part of religion, by studying to lead a holy life.

8, 9. Ἰν γύμν. σεαυτὸν there is an agonistical metaphor, from which the Apostle seems to have taken occasion to show the high importance of this γυμνασία, by contrasting its benefits with those resulting from the γυμνασία to which young men so devoted themselves, either by way of preparation for the games, or for honourable display in general: the advantages of the former being only temporary and temporal, those of the latter permanent, and extending to a future life. The argument is the same as in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. ix. 25. ἐκεῖνοι μὲν οὖν, ἵνα φθαρτὸν στέφανον λάβωσιν, ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἀφθαρτον. The above seems to be the most natural and consistent view of the sense; though many Expositors understand the γυμν. of what we call bodily exercise. But that is too limited a sense: and it certainly was not the intent of the Apostle, as Rosenm. imagines, to inculcate the advantages of mental over bodily exercise. Still less can he be supposed (with some) to have reference to the mortifying of the body practised by certain Jewish and Heathen ascetics. For though there is something to countenance that interpretation in the context, there is more which discountenances it. And indeed such a use of γυμνασία, or even of γυμνάξις, is destitute of authority. Σωματικὴ is for τοῦ σώματος (as μάχας νομικὰς, Tit. iii. 9.), and alludes to the exercising or training of the body. The term γυμνασία must, however, not only be referred to the laborious exercises of the athlete, but to all the other parts of what we call training, as applied to pugilists, and expressed by the term ἐγκρατεῦσθαι in 1 Cor. ix. 25.

Πρὸς ὀλίγον may be understood both of degree and duration. Πρὸς πάντα, “in every way.” The ἐπαγγελίαν as regards this world must be understood of that spiritual “peace which passeth all understanding:” not to say that virtue and temperance preserve the health, and foster habits of industry, which must be productive of many temporal blessings. See Benson, Newc., and Scott. On this latter clause see two admirable Discourses by Dr. Barrow from this text, vol. i. p. 13. seqq. and 27. seqq.

9. ὁ λόγος] i. e., as the best Expositors are agreed, the above, namely, ἡ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα ὠφέλιμος. The γὰρ in the next verse refers to the ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχ., at v. 8.

10. εἰς τοῦτο] scil. τὸ ἔχειν ἐπαγγ., &c. Κοπιῶμεν—ὀνειδ. The full sense is, “we undergo the toils [we do in spreading the Gospel] and the reproaches and persecutions we have to bear from its enemies” (compare 2 Tim. vi. 5. xi. 23. 27. 2 Thess. iii. 8.), “because our hope and trust is in the promises of God.”

— ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων.] Many eminent Commentators, anxious to support the doctrine of Universal Redemption, explain, “would have all men to be saved.” But that sense cannot be extracted from the words. And though it may seem countenanced by what follows, and the same expression supra ii. 3, 4., yet see Note there. The full sense seems to be, “who is the temporal Preserver of all men, as well as the Saviour of mankind in general, whether Jews or Gentiles;” i. e. holds out salvation to all of every nation who seek it in faith. See Whitby and Scott.

12. μηδεὶς—καταφρ.] From the connexion of this with the next clause, by means of ἀλλὰ, it is clear that the meaning is, “Let no one have reason to despise thy youth,” i. e. despise thee on account of thy youth; as appears from a similar idiom common in the Classical writers. The Apostle then enjoins him to be an example, and adds how, first generally,— ἐν λόγῳ, ἐν ἀναστροφῇ, in words and actions, conversation and conduct; then speciallly; where ἀγάπῃ, must be taken of love both to God and man, the ἀγάπῃ ἀνυπόκριτος of a similar passage in 2 Cor. vi. 6. Πίστις must here have reference to the outward profession rather than the internal sentiment. With respect to ἐν πνεύματι, it may seem not in place, in a detail of outward qualities which shall be an example to others. Hence the ancient Critics (as we find from the omission of the words in a few MSS. and Versions) cancelled the words. In this they have been followed by Griesb. and others; but without any sufficient cause: since for the insertion of them no reason can be imagined; while for the omission a very strong one may be assigned;—namely, that πνεῦμ. was commonly understood of the Holy Spirit; a sense which they rightly judged could have no place here. Or perhaps the eye of the scribe passed from the first to the second ἐν, and thus πνεύματι was omitted. At all events, the words must be retained; and are best explained, with Theophyl. and some eminent modern Expositors, “in a spiritual disposition, character,” &c. Of course, in this and most other cases where this signification has place (see Bp. Middl. Diss. on the word πνεῦμα, § 6. at Matt.

i. 18.), the effects of the influence of the Holy Spirit are to be understood.

13. πρόσεχε τῇ ἀναγ.] This is not to be understood, as it usually is, only of the reading of the Old Testament; but includes all such other reading or study, as would enable Timothy to better understand the Scriptures, and consequently fit him for the more effective exercise of his ministry among enlightened heathens. On the utility, if not necessity, of profane literature to Christian ministers, we have the testimony of all the most eminent Fathers, and distinguished Theologians of every age. See the passages adduced in Recens. Synop., of which one must here suffice. Thus Chrysostom (who every where enjoins severe study, of which he gave the example) says: Τῶν πάντων κακῶν αἴτιον μὴ ἀναγνώσκων βιβλία, ψυχῆς φάρμακα. In writing which passage it is probable that the erudite Father had in mind the saying of Athenæus L. iv. p. 159. ἀπαίδευτοί ἐστε, οὐκ ἀναγνώσκοντες βιβλία, ἃ μόνον παιδεύει τοὺς ἐπιθυμοῦντας τῶν καλῶν.

14. τοῦ ἐν σοὶ χαρ.] Notwithstanding that this must chiefly allude to the Spiritual Gifts which Timothy had received, it may include the ordinary graces of the Spirit, by which his endowments in learning would be sanctified. These were given διὰ προφ., i. e. according to prophecy; of which the passage at i. 18. is the best comment. The words μετὰ ἐπιθ. τ. χειρῶν τ. πρεσβ. are not at variance with what is said in a kindred passage at 2 Tim. i. 6. διὰ τῆς ἐπιθ. τ. χειρῶν μου since the μετὰ here only denotes concurrency in the thing. How far that extended, we are not informed; nor is it necessary for us to know.

15. ταῦτα μελέτα.] The sense is, "Exercise thyself in these things, make them thy perpetual care and study." So the words are explained by Prof. Scholef., who compares Thucyd. i. 142. (as said of the long training and practice, by which the Athenians had attained their naval preeminence) μελετῶντες αὐτὸ εὐθὺς ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν. The Apostle, I apprehend, had still in mind the above agonistical metaphor; since the term μελ. is (as Benson observes) used of all preparatory exercises, whether of mind or body. In ἐν τούτ. ἴσθι there is the same idiom as in the Horatian "totus in illis."

V. 1. πρεσβ.] The best Expositors are agreed that this does not mean a presbyter, but an elderly person, as being opposed to the νεωτέ-

ρους and νεωτέροις just after. Ἐπιπλήξῃς denotes sharp rebuke and oburgation, with a reference to the verbera lingue. Ὡς πατέρα, "as you would a father." Such was, indeed, in theory at least, the custom of antiquity. And Diog. Laert. in his life of Plato, ascribes a similar sentiment to that Philosopher. Παρακάλει, "intreat them [to act more circumspectly]."

3. τίμα.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that the sense is, "support," or honourably provide for, as at v. 17. Matt. xv. 4—6. See Notes on Mark vii. 9—13. Compare Acts xxviii. 10.

— τὰς ὄντως χ.] i. e. those who are really widows, in the proper sense of the word, and adverted to at v. 5., namely, destitute. See Note supra iv. 25. From what the Fathers and Greek Commentators tell us, it appears that these persons were maintained from the funds of the Church. And from what follows it is clear that they filled an office; the name χήραι being as much one of office as ἐπίσκοπος, or πρεσβύτερος, or διάκονος. On its exact duties, however, Expositors are not agreed. That the persons who held it instructed the younger females in the principles of the Christian faith, is pretty certain; but whether they were, as some say, the same as the Deaconesses, is yet a disputed point. It should seem that they were not necessarily the same; but that having once been such, during the life of their husbands, they were not removed from that office. Otherwise it should seem, their duties were different from those of the deaconesses; and if we were to call them by such a name as would designate their chief duties, we might call them Female Catechists. That these differed from the deaconesses, is certain from the positive testimony of Epiphanius. Yet they might occasionally assist them in their duty of visiting the sick. Be that as it may, the existence of such an order as the χήραι requires no very strong testimony from Ecclesiastical History; since, from the extremely retired life of the women in Greece and other parts of the East, and their almost total separation from the other sex, they would much need the assistance of such persons; who might either convert them to the Christian faith, or farther instruct them in its doctrines and duties.

4. ἐκγονα.] The term denotes any descendants further removed than children; as grand-children, or great grand-children. Μανθ., "let [those children] learn [a lesson proper for them to know].” So Thucyd. i. 34. μαθέτωσαν ὡς, &c., where the force of the idiom was seen by the Schol. Εὐσεβ. τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον, “to show piety (i. e. pious and dutiful care and support) to their own family,” meaning, by an idiom common to our own language, their parents or progenitors. So Thucyd. i. 17. ἐς τὸ τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον αὔξειν. This use of εὐσεβεῖν was almost as common in Greek as that of pious and pietas in the Latin. The expression ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι hints that this is no more than repaying a debt due to them for their former care and attention to them.

5. ἤλπικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν—ἡμέρας.] These words hint at the qualifications required in such persons; namely, a genuine and constantly operative faith; and habits of devotion, both at stated times, and at all needful seasons.

6. ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα] “but she who liveth a life of luxury and dissipation.” The word is rare; but its sense is plain from the context, and from James v. 5. ἐτρυφήσατε καὶ ἐσπαταλήσατε. The term comes from σπατάλη, the skin. But the metaphor is certainly not (as Schleus. imagines) ἐ cutis pruritu, but ἐ cute bene curatā, a common figure to denote luxury. So Hor. Epist. i. 4, 15. Me pinguem et nitidum, bene curatā cute, vides. Τέθνηκε, “is [spiritually] dead,” i. e. in sin. See Eph. ii. 1. Similar sentiments are found in the Apocrypha, the Rabbinical writers, and even the Grecian Philosophers.

8. εἰ δέ τις—χείρων.] This depends upon ἀνεπίλ. in the preceding verse; and the δὲ is well rendered by the Pesch. Syr. enim. The full sense is, “that so they do not incur censure [from the heathens;] for, indeed, whoever,” &c. By τῶν οἰκείων some Commentators understand no more than ἰδίων. The two words are, indeed, in their general use, synonymous; but οἰκ. denotes properly a nearer connection than ἰδίων; the former that of consanguinity, the latter that of affinity. This use of οἰκείος is founded on that of οἶκος supra v. 4. τὴν πίστιν ἥρν., “he denieth [by his works] that faith [which he professes with his lips];” for that teaches him τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ μητέρα σου. Ἀπίστου χείρων, i. e. “is less observant of the moral and relative duties than an unbeliever;” for the heathens were not often deficient in this respect; and indeed the laws strictly required them to maintain their parents.

9. καταλεγέσθω] “be chosen” or “approved,” literally, “be put on the list.”

—ἐνὸς ἀνδρός γυνή.] It is strange that some eminent Expositors should have taken this to denote, or at least include, preserving conjugal fidelity. The expression plainly signifies the having had but one husband, being univira. So Luke ii. 38. ζήσασα μετὰ ἀνδρός, scil. ἐνός.

10. εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησε.] It is not necessary here to suppose any unusual sense of εἰ; but it will be sufficient to repeat χήρα καταλεγέσθω. By ἔτεκν. is meant “educated,” and, as is implied in the context, virtuously. See Eph. vi. 4. Of course, it must be meant of such children as she has had, if any; for we are not to suppose, as Heinr. does, that the bearing of children is here insisted on. Nay, at a later period we find, from Ecclesiastical History, that aged virgins were received into the number of the χήραι. Ἐξεν. denotes hospitably entertaining Christian brethren; chiefly, we may suppose, travelling preachers, since ἀγίων just after occurs. On ἀ πόδας ἐνίψεν see Note on John xiii. 14. This observance was usually administered by, or under the superintendence of, the mistress of the house; and being, in the East, particularly grateful, is meant to designate generally kind attention to the comfort of guests. Ἐπηκ., literally, “has followed it up,” i. e. has lost no opportunity of practising it.

11. ὅταν γὰρ καταστρ.] There is not, as Heinr. imagines, an inversion of construction; but the sense is, “When they become wanton against Christ, rebel against the restraints of Christianity [by which they are destined to celibacy], they desire to marry.” The verb στρην. comes from στρηνής, stiff; and figuratively, stubborn, rebellious. Compare 1 Sam. ii. 29. and Deut. xxxii. 15.

12. ἔχουσαι κρίμα—ἡθέτησαν.] Expositors are not agreed whether πίστ. is to be interpreted of the Christian faith, and ἡθέτ. of abandoning it; or whether it is to be understood of the en-gement to celibacy, and devoting themselves to the office of χήρα, which marriage would render impossible; and ἡθέτ. of making light of and forsaking it. As to the former interpretation, I am not aware of any example of ἀθετεῖν τὴν πίστιν, or ἀθ. being ever used of casting off a religion; which, too, would not necessarily follow their marrying even with heathens, as appears from 1 Cor. vii. 14. Besides, thus the suitability of the expression πρώτῃν might be questioned; since Paganism was their first religion. Whereas, according to the sense it carries in the second interpretation, it is very apt. And the phrase ἀθετεῖν τὴν πίστιν is frequent in the later Classical writers and the Sept. Indeed, the words preceding evidently allude to an engagement to celibacy; and therefore to that the πίστιν may most naturally be referred. Πρώτῃν is for πρωτέαν, as often in the N. T.; though there is no occasion to follow the idiom in any version. The κρίμα will thus mean condemnation, severe censure, and πίστις, a solemn engagement, perhaps by vow.

13. ἅμα δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάν. &c.] This corresponds to the γαμεῖν θέλουσιν at v. 11.; v. 12. being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. "They desire to marry, and moreover, learn to idly gad about among families." By which seems to be meant, that they made their duty of going about to instruct the women and children, or other parts of their office (see Note supra v. 10.) rather a means of pastime, than subservient to the purposes of their vocation. Thus they formed habits of idleness,—and not only that, but, as is added, of trifling, prying, and intermeddling; a spirit which is admirably depicted in the masterly sketches of Theophrastus, περὶ λαλιᾶς, and περὶ περιεργίας. Between the terms ἀργαί and περιεργ. we may observe a paronomasia, as in 2 Thess. iii. 11. Φλύαρος comes from φλύος, a bubble: and to blow up such well designates the occupation of a trifler. Λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δ. is an euphemism for "talking scandal." So Eurip. Phœn. 205. Φιλόσογον γὰρ χρῆμα θηλειῶν ἔφν· Σμικρὰς δ' ἀφορμὰς ἦν λάβωσι τῶν λόγων, Πλείους ἐπεισφύρονσιν. ἥδονη δὲ τις Ἰνναίξι, μὴδὲν ὕγιε ἐ ἀλλήλαις λέγειν.

14. νεωτέρας] i. e. the younger widows, not women, as in our common Version and Wakef.; for of those the context alone treats. Indeed, χήρας is added in several MSS., and expressed by the Greek Commentators. Βούλομαι is only to be understood of wish, not injunction. The Apostle wished them to be left to marry, if they thought proper. At τεκνογονεῖν and οἰκοδ. supply ὥστε: ὥστε τεκν. being for ἵνα τεκνογονῶσι καὶ οἰκοδ., "that they may be occupied in the duties of mothers and wives; and [thereby] give no handle," &c. Τῷ ἀντικειμένῳ is used in a generic sense, for τοῖς ἀντικειμένοις. Compare Luke xxi. 13. 1 Cor. xvi. 9. Phil. i. 20. 2 Thess. ii. 5. Λοιδ. χάριν, for λοιδ. ἔνεκα, and that for εἰς λοιδορίαν.

15. ἐξέτρ. ὀπίσω τ. Σ.] This may mean, "have turned aside to follow the suggestions of Satan; i. e. by marrying, to the violation of their sacred engagements, and to the virtual abandonment of the faith."

16. ἔχει χήρας] "have near relations who are poor widows;" i. e. as mothers, grandmothers, daughters, or sisters. In 6 MSS. and 3 inferior Versions the words πιστὸς ἢ are not found; and in others not ἢ πιστή. But in either case it was evidently an omission to remove an unusual expression.

17. From the relief of the poor the Apostle proceeds to the support of ministers; though with an obscurity of expression (arising from delicacy), which prevents us from acquiring any very exact information. That a stipend was appropriated to the support of the minister is certain; but on the amount, and the mode of collection, we are left much in the dark. We get, however, some glimmering of light from a passage of Euseb. H. E. v. 28. (cited by Wets.) where there is mention of a certain Bishop being engaged ὥστε λαμβάνειν μηνιαία ὀνδάρια ρν' at 150 Denaria a month. The προεστ. πρεσβ. must not be taken, with some, of the Pastoral duties properly so called; but of the directive functions of some one ruling Presbyter, who regulated and had the government of the Church of a city or district; in fact, the Bishop of a somewhat later period. Ἀξιούσθ. signifies not merely, "let them receive," but, "let them receive as their just due." So Heb. iii. 3. πλείονος γὰρ δόξης οὗτος παρὰ Μωϋσῆν ἤζιτωται. Τιμῆς may denote both competent reward and suitable respect. And διπλ., as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, is to be taken as put for πολλῆς, i. e. "liberal stipend." This sense of the word is here to be preferred to the one commonly assigned, because the Apostle never descends to particulars on this subject, as indeed rarely do the Ecclesiastical Historians. By κοπιῶντες—did. is plainly meant, "discharging the regular pastoral duties." See Benson.

18. καὶ ἄξιός—αὐτοῦ.] These words are no where to be found in the O. T.; and as we are not compelled here to repeat λέγει ἡ γραφή, we may suppose that the words in question are introduced as a proverbial maxim, such as our Lord often adopted.

19. κατὰ πρεσβ.] Not, "an elderly person," as many interpret; but "a presbyter." See Whitby. Ἐπὶ, "under the testimony of." A rule founded on the Law of Moses. Deut. xix. 15, and adverted to at Matt. xviii. 16. John viii. 17.

20. τοὺς ἁμαρτ.] It is not agreed whether the presbyters, or the people at large, are here to be understood. The context favours the former view; but the air of the sentence, and the change of number, rather require the latter, which is preferred by the ancient and most modern Expositors.

21. διαμ., &c.] The Apostle subjoins a most solemn charge; with which Heinr. compares Joseph. Bell. ii. 16, 4. μαρτύρομαι ὑμῶν τὰ ἅγια, καὶ τοὺς ἱεροὺς ἀγγέλους τοῦ Θεοῦ. It may partly extend to all the foregoing injunctions; but it chiefly respects the last; and the ταῦτα meaning "all these matters of discipline." On ἐκλεκ. ἀγγέλων see Note on 1 Cor. iv. 9, and xi. 10. Χωρὶς προκρίμ., "keeping yourself apart from prejudice or prepossession." The word indeed seems formed from the Latin præjudicium. Κατὰ πρόσκλι., "through partiality, or undue favour." So Clemens' Epist. to Corinth. κατὰ προσκλίσεις.

22, 23. χείρας—ἐπιτίθει.] Lay hands hastily or inconsiderately on no man." Μηδὲ κοιν. ἀμ. ἀλλ., i. e. "Do not [by thus ordaining unfit persons] make thyself answerable for their delinquencies." The next words Μηκέτι ὑδροπ. are by many referred to what follows; but more properly by others, to the preceding; which is certainly more suitable to the gravity of the Apostle and that of the foregoing subject. Nay, it ought on another account to be adopted—namely, because v. 24, according to the opinion of the best Expositors, is closely connected with

v. 22, v. 23. being a parenthetical admonition. The abruptness here is thus accounted for by Mr. Scott: "it occurred to the Apostle's mind, when reflecting on Timothy's manifold cares and labours, that his frequent indispositions might be increased by too great abstemiousness, to the prevention of his usefulness, and the shortening of his days. He therefore broke in upon his subject, to counsel him, not to drink water any longer, at least as his only liquor; but to use a little wine to strengthen his stomach, and preserve his health." The judgment and taste of this observation are in strong contrast with the foolish and irreverent remark of Benson, that "there was no need of inspiration to give this counsel." It is justly observed by Mackn., that "it was not unworthy of a place in an inspired writing, and might be meant to discountenance the superstition of those who, from that, or any other ascetic practice, claim the praise of superior sanctity."

24, 25. This must, as was before observed, be connected with the preceding; and the sense of the whole may be expressed as follows: "Keep thyself pure from all participation in other men's sins [by ordaining unfit persons to the ministry;] [To avoid which, however, will require much circumspection and consideration]; for though some men's sins are discernible without any close examination, anticipating, as it were, the judgment passed on them; yet, in other persons, their faults only follow, and are only known after much examination. In like manner it is with respect to men's virtues. Some immediately appear; others are only known after long acquaintance with the persons." Τὰ ἄλλως ἔχοντα, &c. The sense seems to be: "those good works which are otherwise [than manifest] (i. e. οὐ πρόδηλα) cannot, whether they be good or bad, be long hid." See Whitby and Newc.

VI. 1. The admonitions in this and the following verse are (as appears from v. 3.) intended to correct certain contrary positions of the false teachers, (commonly supposed to have been Judaizers); who, as some eminent Commentators imagine, wanted to introduce into the Christian Church the doctrine,—that, as no Jew was to remain a slave for life, so ought no Christian; thus releasing men from all civil duties, under the pretence of religious rights; to the great scandal of the Gospel. Indeed, into errors of this kind ignorant or unreflecting persons might easily fall, (partly by misinterpreting the metaphorical language of the Apostle) even without being perverted by any Judaizing teachers. It was obvious that the spirit of the Gospel is adverse to slavery.

Indeed, in proportion as its injunctions are obeyed, it tends to root out a practice, in which folly and injustice are alike conspicuous. And it was natural for persons so ignorant as slaves, to regard the Gospel as freeing men from all obligations intrinsically and fundamentally inconsistent with justice and equity. Thus the admonition was highly seasonable.

— ὅσοι εἰσὶν ὑπὸ ζυγὸν δ.] The Commentators are not sufficiently aware of the strength of this expression, in which there is a blending of two expressions (compare Gal. v. 1. ζυγῶ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθε), to put the case in its strongest point of view (supposing even the harshest bondage), in order to make the injunction to obedience the more forcible. See parallel exhortations in Eph. vi. 5—8, and 1 Pet. ii. 18, where see Notes.

2. μὴ καταφρον.] scil. αὐτῶν. This denotes neglecting to obey their orders, as being their equals in a spiritual point of view. So Matt. vi.
24. ἡ ἐνὸς ἀντίκειται, καὶ τοῦ ἑτέρου καταφρο-νῶσει.

— ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δου.] Render, "but let them serve them the rather," i. e. the more zealously and faithfully. So μᾶλλον ἀγαπᾶν in John iii. 19, and xii. 43, and often elsewhere.
At ἀγαπητοὶ supply ἀδελφοί. This serves to strengthen the preceding term πιστοί. The next words οἱ τῆς εὐεργ. ἀντίλ. must not, with some, be referred to the slaves (which yields a very frigid sense), but, with many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, to the masters. Render,
"because they who enjoy the benefit [of their service] are believers, and beloved [brethren]."

3. ἐτεροδιδ.] See Note supra i. 3. Προσέρχ.,
"accede to, acquiesce in." See 1 Pet. ii. 4.
ὑγιαίνουσι λόγοις, "sound words." A medical metaphor, used several times in this and the second Epistle to Timothy, and that to Titus.

By εὐσέβ. is meant "the true religion," the Gospel, as supra iii. 16, and elsewhere.

4. τετύφωται, μηδὲν ἐπιστ.] The sense is,
"he is puffed up with pride, though knowing nothing." So Polyb. ii. 81. ἀγνοεῖ καὶ τετύφω.
Τετύφ. is equivalent to φησίουμένος in a similar passage of Col. ii. 11. Νοσῶν is used agreeably to the metaphor in ὑγ., and denotes "having a morbid fondness for," of which examples are adduced in Wets. and Rec. Syn. e. gr. Diog.
ap. Athen. p. 104. Στοιὰς λογαρίων ἀναπεπλη-σμένοι νοσεῖς. I add Plato in Phædr. p. 282.
ἀπαντήσας τῷ νοσούντι περὶ λόγων ἀκοήν.
The ζητήσεις are those mentioned at i. 4, and
λογ. the verbal altercations thence arising.

5. παραδιατριβαί.] The reading here is uncertain. Griesb. edits, from 4 uncial and about 20 other MSS., διαπαρατρ., which Schleus. prefers; but, I think, without reason. The compound διαπαρατρ. is almost unexampled. And good reasons are given by Tittm. de Syn. p. 233, why the reading cannot be admitted. Indeed, the common one yields a far better sense. The παρα, as Heinr. observes, denoting inanity, and the dia vehemence.

— νομίζ. πορισμὸν εἶναι τ. εὐσ.] Render, with Newc., "supposing that godliness is gain,"
i. e. regarding the Gospel or any other religion only as subservient to gain. The Article, as Newc. observes, shows that εὐσέβ. is the subject, not the predicate. So Dionys. Hal. iii. 5. (cited by Wets.) οἱ δὲ χρηματισμὸν ἡγούμενοι τὸν πόλεμον. Οὐ ἀφίστ. ἀπὸ τῶν τ. may be compared Ecclesiasticus vii. 2. ἀπόσπλην ἀπὸ ἀδίκων. And so ἐφίστασο, ii. 16.

6. ἔστι δὲ πορισμὸς μέγ., &c.] Here such a skilful turn is given to the foregoing position, as to make it express a weighty truth;—namely, that Religion, if accompanied with that contented spirit which it inculcates, produces the truest gain, even the greatest happiness. So Philo, cited by Wets. τί ἂν εἴη κέρδος λυσιτελέσσειον ὁσιότητος;

7. οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰσ., &c.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "Why should we be so anxious to secure what can stand us in so little stead, and fail us so soon? For there is nothing we can long enjoy." Loesn. compares Philo p. 852. Μηδὲν εἰς κόσμον, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ σαντὸν εἰσηνεγκας· γυμνὸς μὲν γὰρ ἦλθες, γυμνὸς πάλιν ἔπισης.

8. The Apostle here shows the nature of the above αὐταρκεία (v. 6.) And διατρ. is put in the plural to answer to σκεπάσμα., which answers to our clothes. With the sentiment Wets. compares several from the Classical writers, and others may be seen in Rec. Syn.

9, 10. In vain is it that Heine attempts to refine away and sink this impressive admonition into Jewish notions. Avarice and idolatry are indeed compared, both in the Old and New Testament; not that they are of equal guilt, but in order to show the great guilt of the former. And that it is regarded in the Gospel as such, the strong language of the Apostle puts beyond a doubt. Οἱ βουλ. πλ. means, "those who study to be rich, and devote their thoughts to increase their wealth;" thus including those who are already rich. Εἰς πειρ. καὶ παγ., "into ensnaring temptations," namely, both in spending what they have, and in gaining more. The words following point out the effects; where ἀνοήτ. refers to all such gratifications as are beneath the dignity of a reasonable being. They are called βλαβερὰς, as always more or less pernicious to health and happiness, ever cheating the sensualist with the shadow, but never giving him the substance of happiness. Several MSS. here have ἀνοήτους· which some Critics approve, though the common reading is greatly preferable. The Apostle means to say, not only that the desires are hurtful, but such as are unworthy of a being endowed with νοῦς (or the faculty of reason), and who, being thus raised above the animals, ought to rise above them in such animal propensities. This sense of the word is found also in Ps. xlix. 13, where the Sept. has τοῖς κτήνεσι τοῖς ἀνοήτοις, "destitute of reason." And Longinus de Subl. § 44. says, that when men are devoted to avarice and sensuality, and the cognate passions and affections, they can no longer look upwards, and that mental greatness must pine away and be neglected, when men τὰ θνητὰ ἐαυτῶν μέρη καὶ ἀνόητα ἐκθαιμάζουσιν παρέντες αὐτῶν τὰ ἀθάνατα, where Toup compares a passage of Plato, in which the mortal body, contrasted with the immortal soul, is said to be θνητὸς and ἀνόητος. The metaphor in βυθίζουσι—ἀπώλειαν is bold, and I cannot but suspect that Longin. de Sublim. § 44. had in mind this passage (as he elsewhere quotes Moses) in the following words, cited by Wets.: ἡ γὰρ φιλοχρηματία, πρὸς ἣν ἅπαντες ἀπλήστως ἤδη νοσούμεν, καὶ ἡ φιληδονία δουλαγωγούσι, μᾶλλον δὲ, ὥς ἂν εἰποῖ τις, καταβυθίζουσι αὐτὰνδρους ἢ τὸς βίους. Thucydides, too, finely remarks (iii. 45.) that "the licence of wealth imparts a grasping insatiableness to insolence and wantonness; and that the lower situations are not exempt from this; being, by the impetuous and irresistible dominion of some insatiable lust, hurried into ruin." Τῶν κακῶν, "mischiefs and vices." Ἡς τινὲς ὀρ. Render, "through the lust of which;" as in the above passage of Thucyd. ὀργῇ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. It is strange that some (as Beza, Elsn., Dodd., Mackn., and Burton) should take this to mean, "have pierced themselves all over from head to foot." The περι is for ἐπι or ἐν; and περιτείρειν signifies properly to stick any thing upon a sharp stake, &c., or to stick the stake into it (of which sense many examples are adduced by Wets.); and, metaphorically, to inflict acute agony. Indeed, the very phrase π. ὀδύν. occurs in Homer and Orpheus cited by Wets.; to which I would add Æsop. Fab. 304. ἐαυτοὺς περιτεύροντες ἀποτίσις, "unexpected evils." Ὀδύνη is a very strong term, derived, I apprehend, from ὀδοῦς, and thus denoting a gnawing pain.

11. ἄνθρωπε τοῦ Θεοῦ.] A title formerly given to the prophets of the O. T., and therefore very suitable to the inspired teachers of the New, and, indeed, to Ministers of succeeding ages, as denoting "one devoted to God, and employed in making his will known unto man." See 2 Cor. v. 20. and 2 Tim. iii. 17. Δικαιοσύνη—πραότητα. The Apostle here keeps much to generalities; while in Eph. v. 22, where he specifies, or exemplifies the fruits of the Spirit, he is more particular. It is, however, worthy of remark, that he ends both lists with the qualities of meekness and forbearance; meaning, it should seem, to hint, that by these alone can the other virtues be made effectual to the great purpose of the "man of God," even the salvation of souls.

12. ἀγωνίζου τὸν καλὸν ἀγ. τ. π.] The expression must regard the whole of his exertions, whether in the defence, or in the illustration of the faith, both by words and actions. Καλόν. Honourable, indeed, as compared with the ignoble objects which called forth the exertions of the ἀγωνισταί. (1 Cor. ix. 25.) The agonistic allusion (which see also at 1 Cor. ix. 24—27.) is kept up in ἐπιλαβοῦ, with reference to the eagerness with which the ἀγωνισταὶ strove to attain the prize; for endeavour here is to be united with the sense of the verb. See Glass Phil. Sac. and Note on John vii. 52. Idē. By rendering the word "obtain," as most recent Commentators do, the spirit of the metaphor is lost. I have thought proper to mention this, because the misinterpretation in question deceived Winer (Gr. § 37. 2.), and induced him, without reason, to class this passage under his rule 2, which rule itself is a doubtful one. Eis ἣν ἐκλ. Render, "to which thou wert, or hast been called;" namely, at his baptism, and afterwards at his ordination, which latter is especially adverted to in the next words, with allusion to the public profession of faith which always accompanied the rite. Now this might well be called καλὴ, as being a full profession of faith and hope, and a solemn engagement to give himself wholly to the work of the ministry. As no var. lect. occurs on εἰς ἣν, I cannot but suspect that in the Vulgate, for in quā, should be read in quā, i. e. quam.

13. What the Apostle had before enjoined in figure, he now expresses in the natural way; making, however, what he says yet more impressive from the solemnity of the manner, taking God and Christ as witnesses to his injunction. The words τοῦ ζωοποιούντος seem meant to animate the courage of Timothy in defence of the Gospel, as well as his zeal and exertions in fulfilling his vows, from the remembrance of that Being, who gave him life and preserved it, and would raise him up at the last day, (see Rom. iv. 17. Eph. ii. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 18.) and give him an eternal inheritance. In μαρτυρήσαντος—ὁμολογίαν ὁμολογεῖν, yet never, I think, μαρτυρίαν ὁμολογεῖν. The τὴν ought to be expressed, both here and in the preceding verse, as denoting notoriety.

14. By ἐντολὴ is here meant the injunction before given, to "fight the good fight of faith."

"Ἀσπιλον, ἀνεπ. is for ὥστε ἄσπ. καὶ ἀνεπ. εἶναι. The ἐπιφαν. τοῦ Κυρίου is best explained of that advent of our Lord, which may be said to take place at each one's death. This is placed beyond doubt by a kindred passage of 1 Cor. i. 8., where see Note.

15. Here are accumulated the grandest predicates of the majesty and power of God, which pave the way for the doxology that closes the passage. (Heinr.) Καί. id., "at his own good time," be that sooner or later. Μακάρ. See Note supra i. 11. Δυναστής, as 2 Macc. iii. 24. xii. 15. xv. 23. Ὁ Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλ., καὶ Κύριος τῶν κυρ. Similar expressions are here adduced from ancient writers, the most apposite of which is the following: Philo 2. 187. 5. Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλέων, καὶ Θεὸς Θεῶν. To which I would add Diodor. Vol. i. 166., where, in the column set up by Sesostris, to commemorate his conquest of Thrace, he calls himself βασιλεὺς βασιλέων καὶ δεσπότης δεσποτῶν. It seems to have been an epithet first applied, by the piety of the earlier ages, to the Supreme Governor of the universe; but afterwards usurped by the pride of earthly monarchs, or ascribed to them by base adulation. So that, in the times of the later Greek historians, it was regularly claimed by, or attributed to, the Roman Emperors, and the Persian monarchs. On μόνος, see Rom. xvi. 27. supra i. 17. and note. The epithet is applied to all the attributes of the Deity, to show that He is so transcendently the possessor of them, that He alone may be said to possess them.

16. ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθαν. i. e. "immortality self-derived;" by which it is implied that He alone can confer it. So John v. 26, "hath life in himself." Ὁν εἶδεν οὐδ. &c. So John i. 18. Θεὸν οὐδεὶς ἑώρακε πώποτε.

17. τοῖς πλουσίοις, &c.] i. e. From his anxiety with respect to a class of persons of whose salvation his own manner of speaking, and still more that of his Lord, asserted the great difficulty, the Apostle subjoins, by way of postscript, what follows. In τοῖς πλουσ. ἐν τῷ νῦν α. we have a tacit opposition to the spiritually rich. (Matt. vi. 20. xix. 21.) And here I would compare Plato de Repub. 696. B. Ἐν μόνῃ γὰρ αὐτῇ ἄρξουσιν οἱ τῷ ὄντι πλούσιοι, οὐ χρυσίου, ἀλλ' οὐ δεῖ τὸν εὐδαίμονα πλουτεῖν, ζωῆς ἀγαθῆς. Μὴ ὑψηλοφρονεῖν, "not to carry themselves haughtily." See Note on Rom. ii. 20. I would here compare a passage of Eurip. Suppl. 863. where of Capaneus he elegantly says: ὃ βίος μὲν ἦν πολὺς, "Ἡκιστα δ' ὀλβω γαῦρος ἦν, (was not at all purse-proud) φρόνημα δὲ Οὐδέν τι μεῖζον εἶχεν, ἢ πένης ἀνὴρ. The argument hinted at in τῷ παρέχοντι ἡμῖν—ἀπόλανσιν is, that as God is so bountiful as to satisfy all our wants, and to some (as the rich) supplies these blessings πλουσίως,—so He expects that the rich should imitate His beneficence, by liberally imparting thereof to their fellow-creatures.

19. ἀποθησ. ἑαυτοῖς θεμ. &c.] There is here a certain harshness of expression, arising from a blending of two metaphors, and a catachresis, by which ἀποθ. is put for καταβαλλ. or κατατί-ζεσθαι, as in Thucyd. iv. 87. αἰδίων δόξαν κατατ. Θεμ. means a good ground for hoping.

So Tobit iv. 9., cited by Schleusn., θέρμα γὰρ ἀγαθὸν θησαυρίζεις σεαυτῷ εἰς ἡμέραν ἀνάγκης.

20. The Apostle would not conclude without again urging the injunctions contained in i. 18. and iv. 7. The κενοφ. here is equivalent to the ματαιολογία at i. 16. It is here further called ψευδώνυμος γνώσις. In ἀντιθ. there is, I think, an allusion to the ἐναντιώσεις of speculative science (see Philostr. Vit. Soph. i. 25. 9.) and the λογομαχίαι at v. 4. The Apostle seems here to have alluded to the doctrines of the Judaizers, or probably of those Gentile Christians, who paved the way to Gnosticism.

—ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως.] With reference to this, it is finely observed by Cudworth, Sermon on I John: "We have much inquiry concerning knowledge in these latter times. The sons of Adam are now as busy as ever himself was about the tree of knowledge of good and evil; shaking the boughs of it, and scrambling for the fruit, whilst, I fear, many are too unmindful of the tree of Life."

Rom. 1. 8, 9.
Eph. 1. 16.
1 Thess. 1. 2.
& 3. 10.

That this Epistle was written by St. Paul while under confinement, and at Rome, appears from i. 8, 12, 16, 17, and ii. 9, and is universally admitted. But whether that was his first imprisonment (mentioned in Acts xxviii.), or a second one, much later, is a point on which much difference of opinion has existed. The question is discussed by Mr. Horne with great diligence and accuracy (from the statements of Benson, Lardner, Mackn., and Paley), and he decides in favour of the latter supposition: rightly, I think; for the arguments on that side certainly preponderate. Though, indeed, had they been of equal weight, the uniform testimony of early Ecclesiastical tradition must have decided in its favour. If this view be correct, we can be at no loss to fix the date of the Epistle; for as Paul was liberated from his first imprisonment in A. D. 63, and after visiting several of the Gentile Churches, returned to Rome early in 65, where, after a second imprisonment of more than a year, he suffered martyrdom in June 66; and as at iv. 21, he desires Timothy to "come to him before winter," it is certain that this Epistle must have been written some time in the summer of 65; yet it could not be so late as Dr. Paley, Benson, and Mr. Horne suppose; since it is admitted that Timothy was at Ephesus, or somewhere in Asia Minor, when St. Paul wrote to him. Now, considering the tardiness of communication by sea in that age (as we find from Acts xxvii., it will be evident that St. Paul could not well expect Timothy to receive the Epistle before the latter part of September; when, according to the customs of the ancients, it would have been impossible for Timothy, even had he set out immediately, to have reached Rome before winter, which was thought to commence about Oct. 11. Nay, he could scarcely have set out before navigation was considered dangerous. See Acts xxvii. 9. Hence it appears that the Epistle was not written at the close of summer; and yet not in the earliest part of it, otherwise St. Paul would not have said σπουδάσον πρὸ χειμῶνος ἔλθεῖν.

The immediate purpose of this Epistle was, to apprise Timothy of the circumstances of his second imprisonment (for of the fact itself he had probably been already informed by the brethren travelling from Rome to Ephesus in the latter part of the spring), and to request him to make haste and come to him before winter. But being uncertain whether Timothy would receive the letter in time so to do, and thinking that if he should not, he might not find him alive when he did come, he gives him various counsels, exhortations, and encouragements, with the earnest affection of a dying parent, in order that his loss might be, in some measure, supplied by this solemn Epistle; which may be read with the greatest edification by all faithful Christians unto the end of the world. With respect to the scope of it, "Imagine (says Benson) a pious father, under sentence of death, for his piety and benevolence to mankind, writing to a dutiful and affectionate son, that he might see and embrace him again, before he left the world;—particularly that he might leave with him his dying commands, and charge him to live and suffer as he had done;—and you will have the frame of the Apostle's mind during the writing of this whole Epistle."

I. 1, κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν.] The best Expositors are agreed that κατὰ in this somewhat unusual expression denotes end or purpose; q. d. "that I might publish the promise of salvation through Christ."

3. χάριν ἔχω τ. Θ.] See 1 Thess. i. 2. and 2 Thess. i. 3. Ἀπὸ προγόνων, "after the custom of my forefathers." There could have been no doubt as to the sense, had the Commentators remembered the words of Paul at Acts xxiv. 14. Ὁμολογῶ δὲ τοῦτό σοι, ὅτι κατὰ τὴν ὁδόν, ἣν λέγουσιν αἰρεῖσιν, οὕτω λατρεύω τῷ πατρί Θεῷ, &c., where see Note. What the Apostle here says was meant against the Jews, who accused him of abandoning the God of his Fathers. Ἐν κατ. συνειδ. must be taken as Acts xxiii. 1. συνειδ. ἀγαθῇ πεπολίτευμαι, xxiv. 16. and 1 Tim. iii. 9. Heb. xiii. 18. 1 Pet. iii. 16, 21. The ὡς is for ὅτι. And by ἀδιάλ. ἔχω τὴν περὶ σοῦ μνείαν it is meant, that he gives thanks to God, that he has reason to bear Timothy in mind.

5. ὑπόμν. λαμβάνων] for ὑπομνησκόμενος. Ἐνώκησε has reference to the doctrine of the Gospel, by which true Christians are considered as temples of the Holy Spirit. See Eph. ii. 22. and Note. At ὅτι supply ἐνοικεῖ from ἐνώκησε.

6. δι' ἣν αἰτ.] i. e. that it may continue to dwell. Ἀναζωπυρεῖν properly signifies "to stir up, blow up," as it were keep alive a dull fire; and hence, metaphorically, to rouse sluggishness, and call into action any dormant faculty, whether of body or mind." See Notes on 1 Thess. v. 19. and 1 Tim. iv. 14. The χάρισμα here must, as appears from what follows, chiefly denote the supernatural gifts of the Spirit imparted by St. Paul on setting him apart for the ministry; but it may include the endowments and dispositions, formed by the ordinary graces of the Spirit.

7. οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκεν—σωφρονισμοῦ.] The Apostle here delicately (per κοίναςιν) hints at a faculty which, it seems, required to be roused,—his courage. Yet, considering what precedes, I cannot agree with many recent Commentators in excluding the influences of the Holy Spirit, as the Giver of fortitude, tempered with discretion, as well as love; and which constrains the minister to attempt the salvation of souls, even amidst multiform dangers. See 2 Cor. v. 14. Σωφρ. is well explained by Newe, of prudence, "as evincing in displaying or not displaying miraculous powers, in avoiding or softening persecutions, in teaching and admonishing."

8. The Apostle here hints that this timidity had in some measure been evinced by his not coming to Rome, lest he should be involved in the persecution of his master. And he then sets before him the momentous nature of that for which he is called upon to encounter persecution; namely, the salvation to be attained by the gracious calling of God, who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel. Μαρτύριον, i. e. the preaching and profession of the Gospel. Δέσμιον αὐτοῦ, i. e. on his account. See Note on Phil. iii. 1. Κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ (Bp. Middl. has shown) is not connected with τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, for then the Article would have been repeated (τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τῷ κατὰ δύναμιν), but it is joined with the verb, thus: "but do thou jointly suffer the evil which the Gospel brings, in dependence on the support which God affords."

9. τοῦ σώσαντος] "who puts us into the way of salvation." See Note on Matt. i. 21. Καλέσαντος κλήσει ἁγία. See Gal. i. 6. The epithet respects the purpose of the calling, i. e. to make us holy here, and eternally happy hereafter. Comp. 1 Pet. i. 15. Οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα ἡ. See Eph. ii. 8. Πρόθεσιν is for προαίρεσιν. See Note on Rom. ix. 11. viii. 28. seqq. Eph. iii. 11. The sense of this whole passage is well illustrated by Bp. Bull, Prim. et Ap. Trad. C. vi. p. 43. There is, he remarks, at κατὰ πρόθεσιν καὶ χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν ἡμῖν, an Hendiadys, for propositum gratiosum, as at v. 10. ζῶν καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν, vitam incorruptam. The sense of the passage, he adds, is plainly this: "Secundum gratiam, quam proposuit, seu decrevit, Deus ante tempora secularia nobis in Christo dare." And he proceeds to observe: "Dari enim tum quidem gratia à Deo dici potest, respectu certitudinis illius προθέσεως, quâ futuris post seculis istam in Christo gratiam fideles habituros decrevit Deus; licet actu nec ea, nec illi tum existerent, qui tum haberent, quod dabatur iis."

10. καταργήσ. τὸν θάνατον] i. e. as the best Commentators explain, "has deprived it of its final power, by procuring for all men a resurrection from the dead." The same term on the same subject occurs in 1 Cor. xv. 25—27. and Heb. ii. 14.; also in an inscription found in Nubia, cited by Bornem. de Glossis, p. 48., it is said of God; ὁ τὸν θάνατον καταργήσας καὶ ἄδην καταπατήσας. Ἐπιφανεία here denotes Christ's first appearance in the flesh; though elsewhere the word always means his second appearance to judge the world.

— φωτίσαντος.] Render, "who hath illustrated," and, by implication, made certain, what was before obscure and dubious, just as bringing light to any object ascertains its reality. So Arrian Epict. i. 4. τῷ δὲ τὴν ἀλήθειαν εὐρόντι καὶ φωτίζαντι. Whitby, in an able and instructive Note, shows that "the hope the heathens had conceived, by tradition and the light of nature, of certain future good things to be received after the termination of the present life, was but faint, not credited by their philosophers, and disbelieved by the bulk of the people. The immortality of the soul (says he) they utterly discredited and even ridiculed, as both impossible in itself, and unworthy of God to effect. And the Israelites, though they had always an obscure notion of the resurrection and immortality of the soul, yet it was rather by inference from, than any thing plainly revealed in the O. T." See Bp. Tillotson's Sermons iii. 111. and Bp. Warburton's Div. Leg. L. i. There had been many guesses on the subject; but since (as Paley says) he alone discovers who proves, thus the term φωτ. is perfectly applicable. In this view, I would compare Arrian Epict. i. 4. τῷ δὲ τὴν ἀλήθειαν εὐρόντι καὶ φωτίζαντι.

11. εἰς ὃ] for the Classical ἐφ' ὅπερ.

12. τὴν παραθήκην μου φυλάξαι ε. ἐ. τ. ἡ.] By τὴν παραθήκην many eminent Expositors understand here (as at v. 14. and 1 Tim. vi. 20.), the doctrine of the Gospel committed to him. But by most it is taken, I think more properly, of the immortal soul, an interpretation better suited to the usus loquendi (for, as Slade says, the phrase ἡ παραθήκη μου more usually signifies what I have deposited with another, than what another has deposited with me. See v. 14. 1 Tim. vi. 20.), and more accordant with the manner of speaking adopted by Jewish writers, as appears from the passages of Philo, Josephus, and the Rabbinical writers cited by the Commentators. Thus persons in dying used to commit their souls into the hands of God, professing to refer their salvation entirely to him. So 1 Pet. iv. 18. ὡς πιστῷ κτιστῇ παρατιθέσθωσαν τὰς ψυχὰς ἑαυτῶν. Accordingly here, παραθ. μου must mean my soul, i. e. my hopes of salvation, my eternal interests. That by ἐκείνην τ. ἡμ. is meant, as at iv. 18. and elsewhere, "the day of judgment," Expositors are agreed. The reference to it is as to something of great notoriety. An idiom not wholly unknown in the Classical writers.

13. Now follow some exhortations, first general, and then special. On ὑποτ., see Note on 1 Tim. i. 16. And on ὑγ., see Note on 1 Tim. i. 11, and vi. 3. By ὑποτύπωσις ἔχε ὑψαινοντων λόγων is meant literally, as Mr. Holden observes, "the sketch, delineation, outline of sound doctrines, which must have been such a summary of the Christian faith as is now called a creed, and in which the Apostle instructed his converts, Rom. vi. 17. 1 Tim. vi. 3. 4. Tit. i. 9." The ἔχε must be connected with ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ. Timothy was to hold fast this summary, not in faith only, but with love and charity towards those, who might differ from him in some respects.

14. παραθήκην.] Such, for παρακαταθήκην, is the reading of very many MSS., early Edd. up to the fourth and fifth of Erasm., and many Fathers; which has been justly restored by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Tittm., and Vat.; παρακαταθήκη being the Attic form, παραθήκη the common one. See Wasse and Popp. on Thucyd. ii. 72. By this παραθ. is here meant the deposit of sound doctrine committed to him by Paul. It was to be retained by the aid of the same Holy Spirit, under whose influence it was communicated.

15. Now are held out some examples, partly for warning, partly for instruction. Ἀπειστρ. does not, I conceive, so much respect abandonment of the religion, as a forsaking of its outward profession, and a withdrawing of their countenance from St. Paul. Πάντες, i. e. in a manner all.

16. The family of Onesiphorus acted the reverse; and therefore the Apostle prays that they may find mercy and acceptance with God. On ἀνέψυξε, see Note on Col. iv. 11. The word seems to signify properly to "bring a person to life again (ava) who is fainting with heat, by giving him air."

Π. 1. ἐνδυναμοῦ ἐν τῇ χάριτι, &c.] I have, in Recens. Synop., shown at large, that this cannot mean less than "exert thyself vigorously;" strengthen thyself [by every exertion in thy power], in [humble dependence on] the grace of God bestowed by and through Jesus Christ. Thus the passage is quite parallel to Eph. vi. 10. ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, and 1 Cor. xvi. 13. κραταιοῦσθε, where see Notes, and also Grot., Benson, and Dodd., on the present passage. In all these cases the expression is to be taken, if not literally, in the reciprocal sense, (inculcated by Grot. and Benson,) in the popular sense of the word, rouse your powers. "Quo dicto (it is well observed by Calvin) vult torporem et inertiam excutisse." Nor are we to wonder that such an exhortation has been thought necessary by the Apostle,—since, as Calvin remarks, "Adeo ignava est caro, ut medio in cursu flaccescant etiam qui præditi sunt egregiis donis, nisi identidem excitentur."

2. διὰ πολλῶν μαρτ.] There has been some doubt as to the persons here referred to. It seems best, with Vatab., Est., Beza, Wolf, Rosenm., and Heinr., to understand both the presbyters and others of the congregation present at Timothy's ordination, (mentioned at 1 Tim. i. 18; iv. 14; vi. 12; and 2 Tim. i. 6.) which was probably accompanied with a public Charge, the substance whereof St. Paul desires may be delivered to others also. In παράθου there is the same metaphor as in παράθήκην, supra i. 14, and elsewhere. The next words, πιστοῖς—διδάξαι, advert to the two principal qualifications for the ministry,—fidelity, and fitness for preaching or instructing.

3. A military allusion, as at 1 Tim. i. 18; vi. 12. Here, however, are, I apprehend, designated, not so much courage in defending, as labour and hardship in propagating the Gospel. So supra i. 8. συγκακοπάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. And be it observed, that κακοπαθεῖν is often used by the Greek Historians with reference to the manual labours of the soldiery. As particularly applicable to the present purpose, I have noted the following passage of Valer. Max. viii. 5. Carnæades laboriosus sapientiæ miles.

4. On this military comparison St. Paul founds an argument derived from the life of a soldier, and here applied a fortiori. By τοῦ βίου πραγμ.

is meant the business of life in general; the plural being used with allusion to the various kinds thereof, as agriculture, trade, manufactures, &c. Now, by the Roman law, soldiers were excluded from all such. See Grot. By τῷ στρατολ. is meant the monarch or state that has taken him into pay.

5. On the military St. Paul now engrafts an agonistical allusion; as in 1 Cor. ix. 25. Ἀθλῇ, "contend in the games," viz. by wrestling. Οὐ στεφ., "he does not gain the prize." Νομίμως refers, I think, not so much to the rules according to which the wrestlers contended, as to the previous rules of exercise enforced by the trainers. So Arrian Epict. iii. 10. ὁς μοι ἀπόδειξιν, εἰ νομίμως ἤθλησας, εἰ ἐφαγες ὅσα δεῖ, εἰ ἐγυμνάσθης, εἰ τοῦ ἀλείπτου ἤκουσας. The phrase νομίμως ἀθλ. occurs also in Galen and other writers. The two things which seem here especially adverted to, are, 1. the previous severe exercise, and 2. the stripping off all their clothes, throwing aside every encumbrance, and giving their opponent no advantage over them.

6. The agonistic metaphor now passes into an agricultural one, such as we find at 1 Cor. ix. 10; xi. 6; vi. 7. James v. 7. The sense, however, will depend upon what πρῶτον is to be referred to. It is most naturally connected with μεταλ.; and such is the construction adopted by the generality of Expositors, ancient and modern. The sense, however, thus arising, either involves what is inconsistent with facts, or (even when helped out by the harsh ellipsis of ἵνα κοπιᾷ, "in order that he may be enabled to labour"), contains a truth not here to the purpose; and the spiritual application thence deduced is forced and frigid. It is not, however, necessary, with some, to resort to conjecture. We have only to suppose, what is common in the writings of St. Paul, a somewhat harsh transposition; and (with Grot., Eras., Beza, Calvin, Casaub., Hamm., Pearce, Wolf, Benson, Dodd., and almost all recent Commentators) to join πρῶτον with κοπιῶντα, as is required by the course of argument. The true construction being this: Δεῖ τὸν γεωργὸν πρῶτον κοπ. τ. καρπ. μετ., where κοπ. is the particle imperfect. And the literal sense is: "It is necessary that the husbandman, after first labouring, should enjoy the fruits [of his labour]."

ing." Some difficulty attaches to the γὰρ following, as introducing a prayer or wish. This, indeed, is removed in some MSS., which have δώσει; but, I suspect, from emendation. The γὰρ need not, however, be treated as redundant; and no authority will warrant us to render it and.
We may suppose (as often) a reference, though remote; not, however, that which Hoogev. ap.
Valpy imagines; but rather such as Benson and Wahl point out, "For it is my prayer that the Lord," &c.; i.e., for ὁφελον, or εὐχομαι, ἵνα δῶῃ.

8. μνημ. 'Ι. Χρ., &c.] Here there is a continuation of the admonition in νόει ἃ λέγω: the intent being, to admonish him, in all his sufferings and dangers to remember Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, (i. e. the promised Saviour) who had been raised from the dead; the recollection of whose sufferings, with the glorious termination of them, in his exaltation as a Prince and a Saviour, would be the strongest incentive to constancy, both for himself and others. Κατὰ τ. εὐαγγ. μου, i. e. according to the Gospel as taught you by me. See Rom. ii. 16.

9. κακοπ.] q. d. "I labour," suggesting his example in aid of his precepts. 'Ως, for ὡς εἰ.
Of ἀλλ' ὁ λόγος—δέδεται the sense is: "but it is my comfort, that the word of God is not bound along with me," but is making free course and is glorified; and that not only by others, (as is generally understood,) but also, in some measure, by the Apostle himself; for he seems not to have been restricted from preaching it at his own hired house.

10. διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς.] By this expression is simply meant (as the best Commentators are agreed) those who were called to receive the Gospel, especially the Gentiles, of whom St. Paul was especially the Apostle.

11. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος.] This formula is by some referred to what precedes, as at Tit. iii. 8. But it almost always relates to what follows: and that it is so to be taken here, appears from the γὰρ in the next clause, which means scilicet, so that there is no occasion for an ὅτι. This use of the formula is intended to direct the attention to some weighty and indubitable truth. See 1 Tim.
i. 15. iii. 1. iv. 9, and especially when, as in the present case, flesh and blood would be likely to stumble at a somewhat unpalatable doctrine, involving the sacrifice of what is most precious in this world, in order to the happiness of the next.
See Calvin. Many Expositors are of opinion that what is here said was a saying in frequent use among Christians. But of this we have no proof. And the fact itself may be doubted; for, 1. the saying is not at all in the manner of a common dictum, especially as it is too long (the saying extending as far as οὐ δύναται); and, 2.

it is too refined in the thought, and pointed and antithetical in the expression; both characteristics of the Apostle. The punctuation, however, has been hitherto incorrect; for the saying consists of two parts: the first (meant for encouragement and consolation, and containing in συζηήσομεν—συμβασιλεύσομεν a beautiful climax) terminating at συμβασιλ., the second, meant for warning, as to the awful consequences of failure in enduring the fiery trial. See 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 12, namely, that of being discorned by Christ. See Matt. vii.
23. and comp. x. 23. The remaining words of the sentence form, properly speaking, but one clause, and that intended for an illustration of what has been said, and to point the warning.
The sense is: "Though we should be unfaithful to our engagements, He will, and must, abide faithful both to his promises and to his threaten- ings. He cannot deny himself (as we may) by falsifying his own solemn declarations. Therefore, as Christ is true, so must apostates and backsliders be rejected by him at that day, with the awful denunciation, 'I never knew you, depart from me,' &c." On the force of the expression συμβασ. see Rom. v. 17. (and Note) and Revel.
iii. 21. This passage was perhaps had in mind by Epictetus Enchir. c. xxi. where he thus addresses the patiently suffering virtuous man: Οὐ μόνον συμπότης τῶν Θεῶν ἔσῃ, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνάρχων.

I have pointed the sentence according to the above, I apprehend, correct view of the sense; in which I am partly supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version, Benson, and Mackn., who, by supplying a but, admit that a new sentence commences. Though that was not neces- sary to be supplied; since the Asyndeton here has equal force: which had Griesb. perceived here, he would probably have also seen it at ἀρνήσασθαι ἐαυτὸν, and consequently would not have obtruded into the text the γὰρ, found in some 17 MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, but manifestly proceeding from certain half learned scolists, who did not perceive the force of the Asyndeton.

14. ταῦτα ὑπομ.] So I point, with Theophyl.,

ρίου μὴ λογομαχεῖν, εἰς οὐδὲν χρήσιμον, ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ
 15 τῶν ἀκούοντων. Σπούδασον σεαυτὸν δόκιμον παραστήσαι τῷ
 Θεῷ, ἐργάτην ἀνεπαίσχυντον, ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον τῆς ^{c 1 Tim. i. 4.}
 16 ἀληθείας. ^{& 4. 7.} Τὰς δὲ βεβήλους κενοφωνίας περιίτασο· ἐπὶ ^{& 6. 20.}
 17 πλείον γὰρ προκόψουσιν ἀσεβείας· ^{Tit. i. 14.} καὶ ὁ λόγος αὐτῶν ὡς ^{& 3. 9.}
^{d 1 Tim. i. 20.}

which is more suitable to the gravity and dignity of solemn injunction. There is no occasion to supply any subject to the verb ὑπομ.; but if any, the “men” of Abp. Newc. is preferable to the them of our Common Version.

— διαμαρτυρόμενος ἐνώπ. τ. Κ.] See 1 Tim. v. 21. On λογον, see 1 Tim. vi. 4. At ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ there is not, as some suppose, an ellipsis of εἰ μὴ or ἄλλω. Much energy is imparted by the Asyndeton. The general sense is, that controversies which turn on some nice distinctions in words, rather than involve differences in things, are to be avoided; not merely as useless, but as tending to subvert the faith of the hearers: since they may thus doubt of the truth of that Gospel about which the contending parties cannot agree. See Calvin.

15. After having shown what the preachers of God’s word ought not to do, the Apostle proceeds to point out what they ought to do. It is proper to notice the connexion here, though none seems to have been recognized by the Commentators. At least no Expositor has shown the connexion, but Calvin, in the following admirable Note: “Quoniam ex hoc fonte nascuntur omnes pugnae in doctrina, quod ingeniosi homines se venditare coram mundo cupiunt: optimum et aptissimum remedium opponit hic Paulus, dum praescribit Timotheo, ut in Deum conjectos habeat oculos, ac si diceret, ‘Alii plausum captant theatri, tu autem studeas approbare te ac tuum ministerium Deo.’”

— ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λογ. τ. ἀλ.] The general sense here is plain; but the nature of the metaphor has been not a little debated. Many recognize in ὀρθοτ. an allusion to the Jewish Priests cutting up or dividing a sacrifice into its proper parts; or to the scribes dividing the Law into sections; others, to a carver distributing the meat to the guests; or, to a steward dealing out the articles committed to his management. All which notions, however, are unsupported by proof. The opinion most generally adopted is that of Greg. Naz. (ably supported by Elsner in his Obs. ii. 311., Wets. in loc. and Schleus.) and followed by most recent Expositors; by which there is supposed to be a metaphor taken from those who proceed by a direct road, leaving crooked and winding paths. And they compare the Greek phrase τέμνειν ὁδόν, or κλέυθον, εὐθεΐαν, and the Latin viam secure. This view, however, is liable to two objections; 1. That it drops the idea of ἐργάτης, and brings in ὁδόν wrongly. 2. That it does not sufficiently unfold that part of the compound term ὀρθοτομοῦντα which imports the act of cutting, or dividing; and which might lead us rather to think that the Apostle had in view the act of ploughing, when the furrows are made straight. An opinion supported by the authority of Chrys. and Theodoret, who annotate thus: “We praise even those husbandmen, who cut their furrows straight; so also the teacher is to be commended, who follows the canon, or rule, of the Divine Oracle.” According to this view, “the spiritual workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth,” is he who wanders not to the right or to the left, but goes forward directly in the path of truth, who, at every step, takes for his rule the revealed word of God. After all, however, I am inclined to think that even this view may be unfounded, and liable to the same objection as all the others,—namely, of introducing an idea which there is no reason to think was in the mind of the Apostle. Nay, it may be doubted whether he is speaking of Scripture at all, and consequently whether he is giving any direction for its interpretation. By “the word of truth,” seems rather to be meant the Gospel. And the Apostle appears to have had no special allusion to any of the qualifications or offices of the spiritual workman, but solely has in view the general idea of “doing his work of the Gospel so as not to be ashamed,” i. e. in a workmanlike manner. So the Vulgate well renders, “rectè tractantem;” and the Pesch. Syr. Translator, renders freely, “preaching rightly:” whence it appears that he also took λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας to mean, not the Scriptures, but the Gospel; an interpretation confirmed by the context, at v. 14., ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ τῶν ἀκούοντων. And in this sense the expression occurs at 2 Cor. vi. 7. Eph. i. 13. James i. 18. Col. i. 5. Thus, too, in Euseb. and other writers, ὀρθοτομία is used for ὀρθοδιδασκαλία. With respect to the nature of the metaphor, it is not clear to me that St. Paul had any particular one in view. If he had it should seem to have been to the labours, not of the ploughman, but the stone-cutter, who, to do his work well, must cut straight. Now ὀρθοτόμος (from which ὀρθοτομέω is derived, and not from ὀρθός and τομέω) means a straight cutter, and thus might κατ’ ἐξοχήν be used of a stone-cutter. If this should be thought inadmissible, I would suggest, that we may, at least, suppose, with the learned N. Fuller, that the Apostle speaks with allusion to the expression applied (as we find from the Rabbinical writers) to teachers of the Law, who were termed רַבִּינֵי דְּפִשְׁתָּא, οἱ τέμνοντες τὸν νόμον. Be that as it may, the objection urged by those who contend for the agricultural metaphor, that ἐργάτης is a term almost confined to agricultural labour, is by no means such as to invalidate the above view. For the word is sometimes used of artizans; of which there is at least one example in the N. T.; namely, in Acts xix. 25., where it is used of the mechanics who made the silver models of the Temple of Diana. So also Thucydides ii. 40. speaking of the people of Athens, says καὶ ἑτέροις πρὸς ἔργα τετραμμένοις τὰ πολιτικά μὴ ἐνδεῶς γινῶναι, where see my Note.

16—18. On these verses see Notes on 1 Tim. i. 4. 20. vi. 20. iv. 7., and also Bp. Warburton’s Div. Leg. vol. iii. 198.

19. ὁ μέντοι στερεὸς, &c.] This is a passage of considerable difficulty, and on which great diversity of opinion exists. In order to determine which, it is proper to pay particular attention to the connexion. Now although some have denied that any exists (see Doddr.), and others have thought it doubtful, yet it is clearly with the preceding verse; q. d. “Nevertheless [whatever may be the evil effects produced by these seducers] the Foundation of God standeth firm and immovable. But what is meant by this Foundation of God? The recent Expositors in general understand by it the Christian religion, which has God for its author. Yet thus it will be necessary to take θεμέλιος to mean an edifice; for which signification there is no good authority, and which is not very agreeable to the context. It is plain that the usual sense of the word must here be retained. Though even by those who retain this sense, the expression is variously interpreted; by some of the doctrine of the resurrection; by others, of Christ himself, or of the promise of eternal salvation through him: by others, again, of election; which last interpretation is least deserving of attention. The third interpretation is very specious, and has much to recommend it in other parts of Scripture. But it has little support from the context, which is strongly in favour of the first-mentioned exposition. And it has this further advantage, that it admits of the other being engrafted upon it: for the fundamental doctrine of the Gospel, the resurrection (see 1 Cor. xv. Introd.), contained in itself the promise of eternal salvation to all true believers. This view of the sense is supported by the authority of Theoph.: παρασάεισαι οὐ δύναται τὴν τῆς ἀληθείας κρηπίδα· ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ τοῦτον τέθεικε τὸν θεμέλιον. Σφραγὶς δὲ τοῦ θεμελίου, τῆς ἀναστάσεως ἡ ἐλπίς. What is more, the above view can alone enable us to assign any tolerable sense to the words following, ἔχων τὴν σφραγίδα ταύτην: for to suppose it to mean token or confirmation (as those are obliged to interpret it, who understand θεμελ. of an edifice), would make the next words incapable of any tolerable sense. The best Critics, for nearly a century, have been of opinion, that σφραγ. may retain its almost constant signification in the N. T., and denote the impression or stamp made by a seal, whether cyphers, figures, or letters. And Biblical antiquaries (see Calmet) have proved that the ancient seals had often whole sentences, moral apophthegms, &c. Also, that the foundation stones of great edifices had often engraven on them, or stamped upon them by a large seal, inscriptions having reference to the purpose of the building. Now here the foundation of this mystical building, meaning the Gospel, is supposed to have two inscriptions upon it, proper to be impressed on the minds of all professing Christians, both for encouragement and for warning, according as the case might be.

20. ἐν μεγάλῃ δὲ—ἀτιμίαν.] This passage partakes much of the obscurity of the preceding; but the difficulty here, as at Rom. v. 12., chiefly arises from the application of the similitude not being expressed. It is not agreed whether μεγ. οἰκία means the world, or the visible Church: but there is little doubt that the latter is the true view. By the σκευὴ some think are meant Ministers; others, Christians in general. But if οἰκ. mean the visible Church, σκευὴ must mean all professing Christians in it, whether ministers or not. Thus the connexion may be laid down, with Mr. Holden, as follows; “such being the case, let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity, if he desires to attain to the resurrection of the just. This he must do; for though there are bad as well as good characters in the Church, as in a large house there are various sorts of vessels, yet it is only by cleansing himself from all iniquity, that he can be fit for his Lord and Master’s service here, and rewards hereafter.”

21. ἐκκαθ.] “keep himself pure.” Τούτων, evil things, i. e. heresies and iniquities. Εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγ. ἡτοιμ. is exegetical of the εὐχρηστον; and ἡτοιμ. signifies “accommodated to,” as in Prov. xxxi. 9.

22. νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθ.] This is not, I think, to be interpreted of lusts properly so called, (though many examples of that signification are adduced by the Commentators), such a sense being foreign to the context, and the character of the person addressed. And the abstinence elsewhere ascribed to Timothy excludes the idea of sensuality. It should seem that νεωτ. is here for μευρακιώδεις (so Philo cited by Wets.: μευρ. ἐπιθυμία, literally, younker-like) and that the Apostle means that heady, vehement, impetuous, rash, and arrogant disposition, to which young men are prone. See Salmas., Wolf, Doddr., Rosenm., Heinr., and especially Calvin, who entirely adopts this view. The words following must be meant to refer to the qualities opposite to those designated by νεωτ. ἐπιθ. The sense seems to be, "Cultivate justice, (æquitatem, see Acts xxiv. 25. Heb. xi. 23.) fidelity," &c., as in Rom. iii. 3. Tit. ii. 10. Or δικ. and πίστ. may mean, generally, virtue and piety. See Matt. xxiii. 23. τὴν κρίσιν καὶ τὴν πίστιν. See also Acts vi. 5. xi. 24. By the words μετὰ τῶν—καρδίας it is suggested that this love is to be evinced even to those who conscientiously differ from him in opinion, on matters not affecting fundamentals.

23. ἀπαιδεύτους] "insulsas," which tend to no solid information, and are founded in folly, if not ignorance; being, in fact, the κενοφρονία and ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως of 1 Tim. vi. 20.

24, 25. μάχεσθαι] "be disputations and quarrelsomeness." See Tit. iii. 2. On διδακτ. see 1 Tim. iii. 2. Ἀνεξίκακος properly signifies "patient of injuries;" as in Hierocl. cited by Wets. (see also Wisd. ii. 18.) Here, however, it must denote tolerant of those petulant expressions which arise from difference of opinion. The next words limit the διδ., and point out the manner of the thing. Τοὺς ἀντίο. has, I conceive, a sensus prægn., signifying, "those who are of a contrary opinion, and maintain it in opposition to him." On μήποτε ("trying whether") see Note at Luke xxi. 15. Rom. xi. 21. Εἰς ἐπίγνω. ἀλ. This means, "that so they may acknowledge the truth which they had before rejected." The Apostle then hints at the sinfulness of their even conscientious opposition to the truth, by making it need repentance. Compare Acts xi. 18.

26. καὶ ἀνανηψ., &c.] This strong expression is, I think, meant to more clearly express the sinfulness and danger of those opinions, by a reference to their origin and tendency. And thus the passage need not have so much perplexed the Commentators as it has done. We have only to suppose a somewhat abrupt transition from the metaphor derived from the deep sleep of inebriety, to that of slavery; as also, in the first clause, to the harsh blending of the metaphors of sobering from inebriety, and that of disengaging oneself from a snare, here denoting temptation. So 1 Tim. vi. 9. ἐμπίπτουσιν εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα. Of this mixture of metaphor, and on this subject, I have in my Recensio Synopt. adduced several examples from Liban., Joseph., Cebes, and the Orac. Sybill.

III. 1. Compare 1 Tim. iv. 1; the expression ἐσχ. ἡμ. here being equivalent to the ὑστεροὶ καιροὶ of 1 Tim. iv. 1.

2—5. The Apostle now illustrates the χαλεποὶ, in a description full of energy, containing, as in Rom. i., a long drawn συναρροισμὸς, with which the Commentators compare some from the Classical writers, all serving to show the degeneracy of Christians at the καιροὶ χαλεποὶ spoken of. The fulfilment of the prophecy has been referred to various periods, with more or less of probability; but perhaps never so as to attain certainty.

The various vices seem here (as on almost all occasions in St. Paul's writings) to be enumerated with some regard to plan; so as to form groups, of which φιλαντοὶ and φιλάργυροὶ form the first, and should be rendered "selfish, fond of lucre." The former term properly implies no more than the feeling implanted by the Almighty in man for his preservation. So Joseph. Ant. iii. 8, 1. διὰ τε τὸ φύσει πάντας εἶναι φιλαύτους. and Ant. v. 6. 3. ἐδήλον τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν αὐτοφίλαντον οὔσαν, where the αὐτοφ. is a vox nihili. The best MSS. there have αὐτῶ φιλ. Read αὐτῶ. It is usual for the first-rate writers thus to join αὐτὸς and ἐαυτῶ. In the same good sense of the word, Aristotle Rhet. ii. 15. says that old men are φιλαντοὶ μᾶλλον ἢ δεῖ. In the later writers, however, it is generally used in a bad sense, like our selfish. The next group comprises, I think, ἀλαζόνες, ὑπερήφ., βλάσφ., which may be rendered "boasters, arrogant, rail-

φωσιν εὐσεβείας, τὴν δὲ δύναμιν αὐτῆς ἡρνημένοι. καὶ τοὺς ἀποτρέπου. ^p Ἐκ τούτων γάρ εἰσιν οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς 6

ers." The two first terms are associated at Rom. i. 30. And the βλάσφ. corresponds to the ὕβριστας there. The next group comprises, I conceive, the γον. ἀπειθ., ἀχάριστοι, ἀνόσιοι, ἄσποργοι, ἄσπονδοι; those vices being naturally connected. For, as Theophyl. observes, he who is disobedient to parents will be ungrateful to others. And he that is such, is ἀνόσιος, because τὴν ὅσian καὶ τὸ ὀφειλόμενον ἀθετεῖ. He will also be ἄσποργος; since for whom will he feel affection, if he has none for his benefactor? He will also be ἄσπονδος; for whom will he keep covenant with, if not with his parent, or benefactor? It should seem that the three last are introduced (as in Rom. i. 30.), by way of climax to the preceding. 'Ανόσιος' denotes "violators of the most solemn civil obligations," which are called ὅσια as opposed to ἱερὰ (or Divine obligations) by the best writers. So Thucyd. ii. 52. ἐς ὀλιγωρίαν ἐπράπαντο καὶ ἱερῶν καὶ ὀσίων. Finally, when they are said to be devoid of natural affection, it is not meant that they never had it, but that they have divested themselves of it. See Benson. The next group comprises, I conceive, the διάβ., ἀκρατεῖς, ἀνήμεροι, ἀφίλαγθοι, of which terms the first may be rendered "calumniators;" namely, on the principle of bringing all down to their own level. 'Ακρατεῖς' is generally regarded as equivalent to ἀκόλαστοι, to denote incontinence. This sense, however, is devoid of proof; for I know of no example throughout the Classical writers of the word being used like the Latin incontinentes. It should rather seem to mean (as Erasmus, Beza, Casaub., Pisc., Grot., and Wolf render) intemperantes, for ἀκρατεῖς εἰσὶν αὐτῶν, scil. ἐπιθυμιῶν, affectuum, "having no mastery over their passions and affections," literally, unreined. And although examples of this absolute use in a general sense are rare, yet Aristotle furnishes more than one in his Eth. vii. l. 4. And so Hippoc. Epidem. l. iv. and Thucyd. iii. 84. ἀκρατὴς ὀργῆς, "ungovernable in its impetuosity." This trait consorts well with the προπετεῖς just after. And, indeed, the next word ἀνήμεροι, fierce, savage, seems an illustration of this, as the ἀφίλαγ. may illustrate the διάβολοι. The ἀφίλαγθοι is explained by many eminent Commentators "haters and averse to all that is good." See Dodd. and Bens. The word is very rare; but as φιλάγαθος occurs at i. 8. in the sense "a lover of good men," we ought surely here to render, with Newc., "haters of good men;" which well consorts with the διάβ. preceding. With ἀφίλ. is, I think, conjoined προδόται, indicating a treacherous way of showing their hatred of the good, and bringing them into trouble with the persecutors, whether Jews or Heathens. The προπετεῖς and τετυφ. form another group. The former (on which see Note on Acts xix. 36.) answers to the ἐμπλήκτως ὀξεῖς of Thucyd. iii. 83, signifying a headlong, rash, reckless spirit. Τετυφ. has been before treated on. Lastly, we have what may be considered a general trait, φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι, with which Wets. compares Demoph. φιλήδονοι καὶ φιλόθεοι τὸν αὐτὸν ἀδύνατον ἐστι. Philo 333. 49. φιλήδονοι καὶ φιλοπαθῆ μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι. By the ἡδον. in φιλήδ. may be meant sensuality in general; but it is probable the Apostle chiefly intended a dissipated spirit, and one fond of pleasure; though, at the same time, the sort of pleasure may, in some cases, be not very censurable. With this view the words following are very consistent, as denoting a mere profession of the Gospel, and attention only to its external forms, with little influence on the heart and life. So Philo cited by Loesn. has ἐπιμορφίζεν τὴν εὐσεβείαν. Here, Schleus. thinks, ought to be supplied, from what goes before, ἔχεν. And he renders, "factis vero hanc pietatem suam demonstrare recusant." Of which sense of ἀρν. he adduces other examples from Heb. xi. 24. Wisd. xii. 27. xvi. 9. Herodo. vi. 13.

As to the persons here supposed to be characterized, and the period of the fulfilment of this prophecy, opinions are various. I agree with Benson in regarding this as having the same reference as the great ἀποστασία mentioned at 2 Thess., and introductory to the reign of the Man of Sin, or Anti-Christ; on which see 2 Thess. ii. 3—9. Here, however, as in the former case, the Apostle seems to have considered the mystery of iniquity as then working, though only in its beginning, and his corrupt opposers paving the way for it. See v. 13. and iv. 3, 4.

6. οἱ ἐνδύν. εἰς τὰς οἰκ.] Here the Apostle throws in a peculiar trait of the persons in question; namely, of insinuating themselves into the confidence of families, for the sake of interested purposes. Commentators here recognise a metaphor derived from serpents; though they adduce no example in proof. It should, however, rather seem derived from worms. Thus the persons in question may be said to (as we say) worm themselves into the confidence of persons, in order to make them their dupes: which brings to my recollection a passage of Anaxilas in Athenæus, p. 254, where, describing a similar class of persons, namely, flatterers and parasites, he says:

Οἱ κόλακες εἰσι τῶν ἐχόντων οὐσίας
 Σκώληκες. εἰς οὖν ἄκακον ἀνδρῶπων τρόπον
 Εἰσὺς, ἕκαστος ἐσθίει, καθήμενος

"Ἐως ἂν, ὥσπερ πυρὸν, ἀποδείξῃ κενόν.

"Ἐπειδ' ὁ μὲν λέμψ' ἐστίν, ὃ δ' ἔτεροδακνεῖ.

So the passage ought to be pointed, in order to make sense. Moreover, for καθήμενος, read καθήμενος; and for ἔτεροδακνεῖ, read ἔτερον δάκνει. Observe, too, the elegant paronomasia between κόλακες and σκώληκες. Λέμψα means the husk, as compared to πυρὸς, the grain. This passage, I would observe, throws much light on the κατεσθίει of 2 Cor. xi. 20. It seems that both the Pharisees and the false teachers, like impostors in religion of every age and sect, fastened on the liberality of their devotees. Αἰχμ., "domineering over." In illustration of this propensity, passages are cited by the Commentators from Irenæus, Josephus, and others. The Pharisees, it seems, had always employed these means. Indeed, the same thing has happened in every age, and been practised by religionists the most widely separated. In short, Jerome asserts that all heresies begin with women; and Less, in a Dissertation on this passage, pithily remarks: "Veteratores istiusmodi plerumque, varium et mutabile semper, feminam adoriri: hujus conscientia pro lubitu imperare, ejusque ope familias regere integrasque respublicas, historia docet æque ac nostri temporis experientia." The strong passions of the female sex have, in all ages, laid them open to the arts of fanatics or impostors.

Σεσωρευμένα ἄμ. the Lex Cyrill. well explains βεβαρημένα ἄμ. So in Ps. i. 4. (which St. Paul seems to have had in mind), instead of the πληρὴς ἁμαρτιῶν of the Sept., the other Greek versions have βεβαρημένα. This may, I think, partly denote the weight of the former sins burdening the conscience (see Matt. xi. 28.); from the guilt of which they sought to be delivered on easier terms than the Gospel authorizes. By ἐπιθυμ. ποικ. many understand carnal lusts and vices of every kind, in which they were indulged by their teachers. But by what follows, it should seem to be the lust of the heart that is meant. (See Ps. lxxxi. 12.) See ii. 22.

7. πάντοτε μανθάνοντα—δυνάμενα.] Here we have an example of a verb being used of endeavour after the action denoted; for that they did really learn, cannot be supposed.

8. Ἰαννῆς καὶ Ἰαμ. Names of two Egyptian Magicians, who, as we learn (not from Moses, but from the Rabbins, confirmed by Pliny and other Classical writers, were magicians at the court of Pharaoh, and who opposed their sleight of hand tricks to the miracles of Moses. Ὁν κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν, see 1 Tim. vi. 5, and on ἀδόκιμοι, the Notes on Rom. i. 28. and 1 Cor. ix. 27. Compare 1 Tim. vi. 5.

9. Ἀνοια here involves the conjoint notions of extreme folly, presumption, and impiety; in which last sense it often occurs in the Sept.

10. σὺ δέ.] The δὲ is adversative, and serves to contrast the abandonment of the true faith by the false teachers, with the adherence to it by Timothy, a commendation, however, serving to introduce at v. 14. an admonition to constancy. Thus, instead of παρηκ. τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, the Apostle says μου τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, thus emphatically denoting its truth. On this he engrafts a sketch of the principal features of his own conduct, as a model to Timothy; and closes with adverting to the persecutions he had endured, in order that Timothy might be prepared to encounter the same with like courage; suggesting, moreover, for his comfort, a trust in that mighty power which had delivered him out of all his trials. On παρηκ. see Note on Luke i. 3. 1 Tim. iv. 6. The term here signifies follow up; as 2 Macc. ix. 27. Ἀγωγῇ is for ἀναστροφῇ, as often in Classical writers. Προθέσει is by some eminent Commentators explained firmness or resolution of purpose; which sense they support from Acts xi. 23. τῇ προθέσει τῆς καρδίας προσμένειν τῷ Κυρίῳ. But the notions of firmness and resolution are there communicated by καρδίας and προσμ. whereas, here there is no adjunct, and therefore the usual sense, purpose, scope, aim, and design (which is supported by the ancient Versions, and often occurs in St. Paul, the Sept., and the later Greek writers) is preferable. After the general terms ἀγωγῇ and προθέσει come, as in 1 Tim. iv. 12, the special ones πίστ., μακροθ., ἀγ., and ὑπομ. Πίστει is explained by many Commentators faithfulness, as in 1 Tim. iv. 12. There, however, ἀγάπη comes first, and is afterwards followed by πίστει; while here πίστ. comes first, as in 1 Tim. i. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 22. 1 Tim. vi. 11. 1 Thess. v. 8, where they are considered as being united (as in Eph. vi. 23.) by being compared to a breast-plate. And at Gal. v. 6. it is shown how they should be united; viz. when "faith worketh by love." It may be thought strange that the terms should be here separated. But if we were to impute it, with most recent Commentators, to mere irregularity of style, we should overlook the scope of the Apostle; who here, I apprehend, purposely separated πίστει and ἀγάπῃ, in order to introduce with each the virtue springing from it. That πίστις is closely connected with μακροθ., is plain from Heb. vi. 12, which passage is the best comment on the present: μνηταὶ τῶν διὰ πίστewος καὶ μακροθυμίας κληρονομοῦντων τὰς ἐπαγγελίας. And that ἀγάπῃ is equally connected with ὑπομονή, appears from 1 Tim. vi. 11. πίστιν, ἀγάπην, ὑπομονήν. Tit. ii. 2. τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ. Whereas of πίστις followed by ὑπομονή, we have no instance, except Heb. vi. 12; nor of ἀγάπῃ followed by μακροθυμία. Besides, St. Paul seems to have subjoined ὑπομ. to intimate that the love was, as it regarded men, of that fervent kind, which constrained him to bear any thing and every thing to accomplish the salvation of souls. The best comment on this whole passage is Rom. v. 1—9. In τοῖς διωγμοῖς there is an exegetical apposition. Render "namely by." At οἷους δ. must be supplied from the context, παρηκολούθηκας, which, by an accommodation of sense, may mean "thou well knowest."

12. εὐσεβῶς ζῆν ἐν Χρ. Ἰ.] A formula denoting to live with the piety and holiness suitable to the Christian faith.

— διωχθήσονται.] The remark is more or less applicable in every age (see Acts xiv. 22. and Note), especially at periods when (like the Apostolic) the good and evil principles of our nature are brought into close collision.

13. πονηροὶ—χεῖρον.] Here there is an indirect admonition to Timothy to go forward in the right path, from strength to strength, and righteousness to righteousness; as the impostors or false teachers in question will go on from bad to worse. The next words πλαν. καὶ πλανώμενοι some eminent Commentators take to mean, that as they deceive some, so are they themselves the dupes of others. But though that might sometimes be the case, the words are, I conceive, meant to suggest how it happened that they went from bad to worse; namely, by the influence of self-deception as well as that of deceiving others; for men are observed to repeat falsities till they almost believe them themselves. The process is depicted with a masterly hand in the 5th Book of Cowper's Task.

14. ἐπιστώθης.] The sense is, "thou hast learnt with full certainty and certain persuasion." So Hesych. ἐπιληροφορήθης. The words following show the grounds of that assurance; namely, 1. that he had been taught it by a Divine Legate like Paul; 2. that the truths were founded on what had been learnt by him when a child, and were deeply rooted in his mind; for his mother was a Jewess; and mothers are more likely to carefully communicate a religion than fathers. Εἰδὼς must be repeated, in the sense "mindful." By the ἱερὰ γράμμ. are meant (as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed) the Scriptures of the Old Testament, not the New, which in Timothy's childhood were certainly not in existence. They are called ἱερὰ, as being by revelation from God. Τὰ δυνάμενά σε σοφίσει—Ἰησοῦ, i. e. which are able to make thee wise (i. e. to sufficiently instruct thee) in the salvation which is to be obtained alone through faith in Jesus Christ, i. e. by means of the Christian religion. So Hooker, Eccl. Pol. L. i. § 14. p. 43. (1st Ed.) proves that the Apostle is here speaking of the main intent of the Old Testament. The comparative intent of the Old and of the New he well expresses thus: "The general end is one; the difference between them consisting in this,—that the Old did make wise by teaching salvation through Christ that should come: the New, by teaching that Christ the Saviour is come, and that Jesus whom the Jews did crucify, and whom God did raise again from the dead, is he."

16. πᾶσα γραφὴ—δικαιοσύνη.] This is, I conceive, meant to further explain what was said in the preceding verse, proving and illustrating the ἱερὰ and the εἰς σωτηρίαν there. There is evidently an ellipsis of ἐστί; but Commentators are not agreed whether it should be introduced between γραφὴ and θεόπνευστος, or between θεόπν. and καὶ ὠφέλ. thus joining θεόπν. in immediate concord with πᾶσα γραφὴ. The latter method is adopted by Theodoret, of the ancient, and most eminent modern Commentators, from Camer. to Heinr. and Iaspis; q. d. "all inspired Scripture is also profitable," &c. This, however, is not permitted by the καὶ, which is found in every existing MS. And though it does not appear in the Syr. and Vulg. Versions, yet, as Bp. Middl. observes, it is far easier to perceive why καὶ does not appear there, than how, supposing it not to have been in the earliest MSS., it should have found its way into those that remain. Bp. Middl. proves that γραφὴ must be meant of the ἱερὰ γράμματα just before mentioned; the sense being, "the whole of such [Scripture] is divinely inspired." Of the terms διδασκ., ἔλεγχον, ἐπανόρθωσιν, and παιδ., it should seem that the two first regard doctrine, and the two last practice; διδασκ. denoting instruction in the truth, ἔλεγχ. conviction of the opposite errors. Ἐπανόρθωσις denotes the working a reformation of life; and παιδ. differs, I think, in this,—that the former teaches how to "cease to do evil," the latter how to "learn to do well." On ὁ ἄνθρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, see Note on 1 Tim. vi. 11. On ἄρτιος, which is equivalent to κατηρτισμένος, see Luke vi. 40. and Note, and on ἐξηρστ. Note on Acts xxi. 5. Of πρὸς πᾶν ἔ. the sense is, "for every good purpose [his ministry is intended to answer]." See 1 Tim. vii. 11. and comp. supra ii. 21. and Ephes. ii. 10.

IV. To the foregoing statement of the means necessary for making the teacher complete for every good work, the Apostle engrafs an earnest exhortation to the perpetual and zealous use of them.

of 1 Tim. v. 21. Here τοῦ μέλλοντος—αὐτοῦ is added, to express the strict and solemn account which Timothy must have then to give of his stewardship; and by τὴν βασιλείαν is intimated the glorious reward of fidelity. The latter clause simply means, "when he will come in his kingdom," i. e. that of his glory commencing with the day of judgment; the present being only his mediatorial one.

2. ἐπίστηθι] "assiduously apply [to your work]." An exhortation, if not necessary to Timothy, yet proper to be made for the sake of others of that and future ages. Εὐκαίρως ἀκαίρως must, as the best Commentators are agreed, be understood with reference to Timothy, not the people; and denote "at all times and places not only convenient, but inconvenient to yourself." Or, in the words of Dr. Barrow, "not only taking opportunities presented for it, but catching at them, and creating them to ourselves, when there is no such apparent need of it." Ἐλεγξον, ἐπιτίμ., "confute [viz. those who are in error of doctrine], reprove [viz. the unruly or the immoral in life]." Παρακάλεσον, "exhort to continuance in sound doctrine and holy life." So Plutarch de Educ. speaks of instructors, διδάσκοντας, ἀπειλοῦντας, δεομένους, συμβουλευόντας. All this to be done ἐν πάσῃ μακροθυίᾳ, with the greatest patience. The next words καὶ διδαχῇ are not (as Rosenm. imagines) per hendiad.; but πάσῃ must be repeated, the sense being, "and with every [suitable] instruction," i. e. sound doctrine, as appears from what follows just after, τῆς ὑγιαίνουσας διδασκαλίας οὐκ ἀνέξονται.

3. τῆς ὑγιαίν. διδ.] See 1 Tim. i. 10. 2 Tim. i. 13. Οὐκ ἀνέξ., "will not bear to listen to." To sound doctrine, which requires a holy life, the corruption of human nature, in every age, renders men averse; inducing them to follow such doctrines as make the gratification of their passions consistent with hopes of salvation. Κατὰ τὰς ἰδ. ἐπιθυμίας is by the earlier Commentators construed with ἐπισωρεύουσι, by the more recent ones with διδασκ.; which latter method seems preferable, since it is more agreeable to the usus loquendi, yields a better sense, and is more suitable to the style of St. Paul, which does not reject transposition. The words may be rendered, "according to their fancies or caprices." See supra iii. 6, and Note. The term ἐπισωρ. implies contempt on the part of the writer; q. d. "there will be no want of persons istius farinae." The next words suggest why they will do so,—namely, as κνηθόμενοι τὴν ἀκοήν, literally, "having a tickling in the ears;" i. e. wanting to be gratified with something which may please their fancies. So Hesych. ζητούντες τί ἀκούσαι καθ' ἡδονήν. Of this expression several examples are adduced by Wets., to which I would add one yet more to the purpose from Julian, p. 333. δυνάμενοι τὰς ἀκοὰς ὑμῶν κνησιτύσας παραμυθήσασθαι.

4. μύθους.] This hints at the false nature of the doctrines, and the mythical nature of the discourses; such being ever employed ad captandam; i. e., as Theodoret observes, τέρψιν, οὐκ ὄνησιν ἔχοντα.

5. νῆφε.] See 1 Thess. v. 6, and Note. And on κακοπάθησον, see supra ii. 3, and Note. On πληροφ., see Note on Acts xxi. 8.

6. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπένδ., &c.] The ἐγὼ is emphatical, and corresponds to the σὺ in the former verse. And the γὰρ refers to a clause understood; q. d. "[Do thou fully discharge thy ministerial duties, nor expect any further exhortation from me]; for I already," &c. Σπένδομαι; i. e. ἐπιζανᾶτός εἰμι. Expositors, however, are not agreed whether the meaning be, "I am ready to be poured upon," as the victim had the libation poured upon its head; or, "I am ready to be poured;" i. e. my blood, as a libation. The latter sense seems preferable, (since the term is not ἐπισπ., but σπένδ.) and is confirmed by Phil. ii. 17. "Ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῇ θύρᾳ, &c.," where see Note.

7. See Note on 1 Tim. vi. 12. And on δρόμον τετέλεκα, Note on Acts xx. 24. Τὴν πίστιν τετήρηκα is by many eminent Commentators rendered "I have preserved my fidelity." I am not, however, aware of any authority for that phrase; whereas τηρεῖν is often followed by words similar in sense to τὴν πίστιν, meaning the doctrines and precepts of the Christian religion; and this signification always carries the Article. That of fidelity scarcely ever occurs. Finally, as the sense yielded is much less apt, the common interpretation, "I have kept the

8. ἀπόκειται μοι] "is laid up as ready." See Notes on Col. i. 5—8. 1 Thess. ii. 19. Gal. i. 15. Ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμ. See Note supra i. 12. Of τοῖς ἡγαπ. τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ the sense seems to be, "who have reason to look forward with satisfaction to his coming;" i. e. by having fought the good fight and kept the faith.

10. ἐγκατέλιπεν, ἀγαπ., &c.] Demas, it seems, through cowardice, had deserted him, and, through worldly-mindedness, preferred some opportunity of temporal advantage to assisting the Apostle, and furthering the Gospel.

11. Μάρκον.] See Col. iv. 10.

13. φαιλόνην.] Some MSS. and Edd. have φαινολην, which is probably the more correct spelling, though perhaps not that adopted in the later Grecism. The word seems at first to have been φαινολή (whence the Latin Paenula) then per metathesis, φαιλόνη, afterwards altered to φενόλη and φελόνη. If, however, the etymology of Salmasius (who derives it from φελλός) be right, φελόνη is the most correct spelling. As to the sense,—"of the various opinions proposed by the learned, the most probable seems to be, that it means a wrapper or great-coat, called by the Jews ἵν." ^h

14. Ἀλέξ.] See 1 Tim. i. 21, and Acts xix. 33. Ἀποδῶν, &c. To this unbelievers find much to object; and the defence made by Commentators has not been so satisfactory as might be wished. Rosenm. and Iaspis urge that the Apostle justly imprecated him, as an apostate from God and the Gospel, and also for his incorrigible malice; which, Iaspis observes, is one, though not the only, cause of the imprecations in the Psalms. However, after all, I cannot but agree with the ancients, and several eminent moderns, that there is here, properly speaking, no imprecation at all, but rather a wish for his condign punishment; i. e. that the righteous God and Judge will treat him as he deserves. By τοῖς ἡμ. λόγ. is probably meant the doctrine of the Gospel.

16. πρ. ἀπολογία.] One hearing, it seems, had been granted him at Rome; and he was in expectation of a second, during which interval, it is said, this Epistle was written. And, as we learn from Ecclesiastical History, this second hearing, or trial, turned out very different from the first; since the Imperial butcher, in a rage (as Chrys. tells us) at his conversion of the royal cup-bearer, had him beheaded. Μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθῇ! See Rom. iv. 8, and Note. These words are in strong contrast with those of the preceding verse. But it should seem that the Apostle had in view the different motives of the persons.

17. παρέστη] i. e. by secret help and support. So Homer says Minerva παρέστη (helped) Achilles. By κήρυγ. is meant the Gospel, as 1 Cor. xv. 14. Πληροφ., "might obtain full credence." See Rom. iv. 21. The πάντα is to be taken, Heinr. and Rosenm. say, populariter, for many of different nations; i. e. who had business at the court. The words, however, are not, with those and other Commentators, to be referred to his defence only. They appertain to the preaching of the Gospel by him during his long confinement, by which in a manner all the nations might be said to hear it; since Rome was the resort of persons from every part of the civilized world, individuals from each of which would hear the Gospel, and carry tidings of it, or diffuse its doctrines, in their respective countries.

— ἐρόσθην ἐκ στόματος λ.] The best Expositors are agreed in understanding the λέοντος of the Emperor Nero. May there not be an allusion to a well known fable of Æsop? for Paul's

18. καὶ ῥύσεται—πονηροῦ.] “And the Lord will, I trust, deliver me from every evil work;” i. e. all dangers, temptations, and adversities; for such appears to be the simplest interpretation of ἔργου πονηροῦ, on which the recent Commentators seek needless refinements.

19. καὶ τὸν Ὀνησ.] That the Romanists should infer from this salutation of Onesiphorus, that he himself was dead, is not surprising; for on that slender foundation they chiefly build the gainful doctrine of prayers and masses for the dead: but that many eminent Protestant Commentators should do the same, is unaccountable. For, as Benson observes, “he might be gone from Rome, and yet not be at Ephesus, when the Apostle wrote this Epistle: or Onesiphorus might possibly be the bearer of this letter.” Indeed, that he was not dead, the authority of the ancients (which the Romanists always profess to follow) uniformly tends to establish. They, however, say that he was yet at Rome; which, from i. 6. (where see Note) appears not so probable. Heinr. maintains that in both places it may signify, by a familiar idiom, Onesiphorus and his family. And he compares the phrase οἱ ἀμφὶ τὸν Σωκράτη. This, however, appears precarious. It is sufficient to say, that there is no proof that he was dead, and little probability; since thus οἶκον would not have been used. On the other hand, nothing is more probable than that he might be, to Paul's certain knowledge, at some other place, and not Ephesus.

Titus was a Greek, either of Syria, or of some province of Asia bordering upon it. He was one of St. Paul's earliest converts, and so much in his confidence, as to be allowed to accompany him and Barnabas to the first Council at Jerusalem; and afterwards to attend him in his circuit, to visit and confirm the Churches. He was probably afterwards employed in confidential public business for the Church; inasmuch, that some years after, we find him sent by St. Paul to Corinth, to examine the state of the Church in that city, and to transmit a report of it to him. In consequence of that he was sent back to Corinth to hasten the collection for the poor brethren in Judæa. After that time, we have no further mention in the N. T. of what became of Titus, except that in this Epistle he is spoken of as himself with Paul in Crete, and in 2 Tim. iv. 10. as being in Dalmatia, having, it is supposed, been sent there to settle the affairs of the Church. It should seem that Titus, though perhaps occasionally sent to settle the affairs of other Churches, had Crete as his especial province, from the time when he was left there by Paul (Tit. i. 5.). As to the time when Christianity was first planted in Crete, we are left much in the dark. The most probable opinion is, that notwithstanding that the Gospel might have been announced, and become known in Crete, from the time of the first effusion of the Holy Spirit at Jerusalem (Acts ii. 11.), where some Cretans were present; yet that it was not thoroughly planted there till many years after; most probably by St. Paul, and possibly during the year and a half he spent at Corinth, between the latter part of A. D. 51. and the early part of 53. For it appears from 2 Cor. xii. 14. xiii. 1. that he did make an excursion somewhere during that time, and after it returned back to Corinth. This, however, is, to say the least, very uncertain; it being little probable that St. Paul could spare time enough for so great a work, as evangelizing the "hundred-cities isle," quasi ἐν παρ-εργῇ. It should either seem, as others suppose, that St. Paul evangelized Crete during the period between his first and second imprisonment at Rome. Thus the date of the Epistle (which has been exceedingly controverted, and entirely depends upon the date assigned to St. Paul's evangelizing Crete) will be brought to about A. D. 64. And there is much to support this in the strong verbal coincidences between this Epistle and that of 2 Timothy, confessedly written not long before St. Paul's death. These coincidences, indeed, are nearly as great as those between the Epistles to the Ephesians and the Colossians, and cannot satisfactorily be accounted for except on the same principle, namely, by supposing that they were written about the same time, and when the same ideas and expressions were in the writer's mind. Moreover, as in Acts xxviii., where St. Paul is recorded to have touched at Lasæa, and Fair Havens, not a hint is given as to the island being evangelized, it should seem that then (namely, the autumn of 61), St. Paul had not evangelized Crete. This circumstance strongly confirms the idea suggested by the strong verbal coincidences above mentioned, that the Epistle was written about the same time as the 2d Epistle to Timothy. It should seem that Paul evangelized it at the period between his first and second imprisonment at Rome; and wrote this Epistle a little before 2 Timothy, some time in the summer of A. D. 65. The scope of the present Epistle is the same as that of the preceding one. For an analysis the reader is referred to Mr. Horne's Introd.

C. I. 1—3. κατὰ πίστιν.] The best Expositors are agreed that this must be taken as at 2 Tim. i. 1. and denote "for the purpose of promoting the faith." So of καὶ ἐπίγνωσιν—εὐ-σέβ. the sense is, "and for the promotion, the acknowledgment of the true doctrine which is intended to lead us to holiness." See 1 Tim. vi.

3. Ἐκλεκτῶν, "of faithful Christians." See 2 Tim. ii. 10. Ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ζωῆς, for εἰς ἐλπίδα, "hope of obtaining salvation." Ὁ ἀνγεν-δής. An appellation of God, like ὁ ἀληθινός, and used by the Heathen writers as well as by the Scriptural ones. Προ χρόνων αἰώνων. See Notes on 2 Tim. i. 9—11. Ὁ ἐφανέρωσσε, see 2 Tim. i. 10. and on καιροῖς ἰδοίς, Acts i. 7., and 1 Tim. ii. 6. and Notes. Τὸν λόγον. So λόγ. ἐπαγγελίας at Rom. ix. 9. Ὁ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ σωτ. ἡμ. Θ. see 1 Tim. i. 1. In both places the sense seems to be "according to the ordinance or direction of God."

4. Compare 1 Tim. i. 2. Κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν, "according to the faith common to both of us and all Christians." Χάρις, &c. See Note on 1 Tim. i. 2.

5. For κατέλιπον, some 12 or 14 MSS. have ἀπέλ. But that is susceptible of no sense suitable here; and is not supported by a single Version. The reading, doubtless, arose from the Scribes; for κατ and ἀπ in composition are perpetually confounded. Καταλ. is frequently used in the sense here required not only by St. Luke, but by St. Paul, as in a kindred passage of 1 Thess. iii. 1. καταλειφθῆναι ἐν Ἀθήναις. Moreover, though the writers of the N. T. sometimes use καταλ. where a Classical writer would have employed ἀπολ., yet never the contrary. "Ἰνα τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθῷ. The complete sense is, "that thou mightest further put in order the things which remained [to be ordered]." Ἐπι is here intensive, and has the same force as in ἐπιδιδασσομαι at Gal. iii. 15. Of the verb no example has been adduced; but several of the nouns ἐπιδιορθώσις with τῶν λειπόντων. The terms καταστήσῃς πρεσβ. plainly show that Titus was invested with Episcopal authority, in the highest sense of the word ἐπίσκοπος, which was sometimes, as at v. 7., and Acts xx. 17. 28., used in the lower sense of πρεσβύτερος, since pastors are overseers over their flocks. The Presbyterians are obliged to understand this appointing, of Paul's interposing his influence with the congregations, to procure the election of these persons as presbyters; than which a harsher or more factitious gloss was never promulged by the Socinians themselves.

— κατὰ πόλιν.] Not "in every city," but in each city or town (literally "city by city"), of all those which had Christian congregations. Of such there might be several in this "hundred-cited isle;" though the name πόλις was often given to towns. And not a few of the Cretan cities were probably no better. See Meursii Creta. Σοὶ διαταξ., "as I [then] directed thee." Paul, it seems, had not time then to give the directions and injunctions which he now sends.

6. εἴ τις ἐστίν.] Render, "whoever is," such as are, &c. Compare 1 Tim. iii. 2—7. The ἀνέγκλητος here is equivalent to the ἀνεπιληπτος there. Πιστά. Render, with Newc., "believing;" a sense frequent in St. Paul; implying also an obedience to the requisitions of the Gospel, and especially those which are then specified. Ἀνυπότακτα, "disorderly and unruly." So in 1 Tim. iii. 4. the presbyter is to have his children ἐν ὑποταγῇ.

7—9. Compare 1 Tim. iii. 23. and Notes. Ὡς Θεοῦ οἴκ., "as the steward of God's family," (which every congregation is). For surely, if fidelity be required in earthly affairs, how much more is it requisite in spiritual ones. See 1 Cor. iv. 2. Αὐθάδη, "self-willed." See a spirited sketch of this character in Theophr. Char. C. 15. On the other terms see 1 Tim. Φιλάγ. may signify either "a lover of good men" (as the word is used in Aristot. Rhet. C. 2. 4. Cod. Vat.), or, "a lover of goodness." The word also occurs in Dionys. cited by Suicer, and Sirach vii. 22. Ἀντεχόμενον, "closely adhering to," literally, holding fast anything, in opposition to [αντι] one who would wrest it away. This also implies diligent attendance to, as in 1 Thess. v. 14. ἀντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθενῶν. By πιστὸς λόγος are denoted the sure and certain truths of the Gospel. Παρακαλεῖν ἐν τῇ διδ. τῇ ὑγ. is by most of the later Commentators explained of exhorting them to embrace and abide by sound doctrine. That, however, involves a very harsh ellipsis. The ἐν is well rendered by our common Version and most Expositors, "by;" which is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. It is, indeed, placed beyond doubt by a kindred passage of 2 Tim. iv. 2. ἐλεγξον, ἐπιτίμησον, παρακάλεσον

10. The καὶ after πολλοὶ is absent from several MSS.; and in others is put before ματαιολόγ. It is, therefore, with reason, suspected by the Editors to be interpolated; probably by some early Critics who thought a copula was required. Ἀνυπότ. here seems to denote disobedience both in matters of doctrine and discipline; Judaizers being probably for the most part intended. Ματαιολ., is meant of those who are at 1 Tim. i. 6. said to have turned aside εἰς ματαιολογίαν. The φρεναπάται are those who at Rom. xvi. 18. are called ἐξαπατῶντες τὰς καρδίας τῶν ἀκάκων.

11. οὓς δεῖ ἐπιστομ.] i. e. by putting them to silence after full confutation; just as a horse when well bridled, is not disposed to be unruly.

— ὅλους οἴκους ἀνατρ.] i. e. “subvert the faith of whole families.” So 2 Tim. ii. 18. τὴν πίστιν ἀνατρέπουσι. This, indeed, is hinted at in the words διδ. ἂ μὴ δεῖ, where there is a litotes, as in Is. lxvi. 4. John xxi. 18. I would here compare Plato, p. 960. ὅλας οἰκίας, χρημάτων χάριν, ἐπιχειροῦσι κατ’ ἄκρας ἐξαίρειν. These are the kind of persons described in 2 Tim. iii. 6., as οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς οἰκίας, αἰχμαλ., &c., and who are at v. 2. described as φιλάργυροι.

12. εἰπέ τις—προφ.] Here ἴδιος αὐτῶν is put per epanorthosin, being a stronger expression. Προφ. is by Newc. and others rendered poet. And, indeed, the term, like poet in Latin, was then applied (as denoting a sort of inspiration) to all poets of more than ordinary celebrity; though it had been formerly confined to Homer, Hesiod, and Pindar. Epimenides, however, (who is admitted to be the person here meant) was not a poet, but a prophet, and a writer περὶ χρησμῶν, and as Theophyl. says (imitating Thucydides vii. 50.) ῥησμοῖς καὶ ἀποτροπισμοῖς προσέχων, καὶ μαντικὴν δοκῶν κατορθοῦν, “was reputed to be an able μάντις.” Hence he is called by Apulejus fatidicus, and by Cicero vaticinans. It should, therefore, seem that St. Paul had reference to his prophetic rather than poetic celebrity. The words Κρῆτες αἰε ψεύσται were borrowed by Callimachus (Hymn on Jove, v. 8.); who proves the truth of the αἰε, from their having fabricated a tomb which they pretended was Jupiter’s. “Thus (says Bp. Warburton) proclaiming a truth concealed from the vulgar, that the Gods were only mortals raised to Divine honours for the benefits they had conferred on men.” This bad character always adhered to them, as the Greek proverb testifies; Τρία κάππα κάκιστα· Καππαδοκία, καὶ Κρήτη, καὶ Κιλικία. which is the best illustration of the κακὰ just after. And of the terms θηρία and γαστ. ἀργ. the former denotes their brutishness, the latter their sloth.

13. ἐλεγχε αὐτοὺς ἀποτ.] See Note on 2 Cor. xiii. 10.

14. μὴ προσέχ. Ἰουδ. μύθοις.] See Note on 1 Tim. i. 4.

15. πάντα μὲν καθαρά—συνείδ.] Compare a similar sentiment in 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5. and Rom. xiv. 14. 23. The Apostle takes occasion from what has been said of Jewish fables and traditions, to inculcate, that the Jewish distinctions of meats and drinks, as clean or unclean, were of no effect as to moral purity; which consists not in abstaining from certain meats, but in preserving an unpolluted heart; q. d. “to the pure [in heart] all such meats as, by the Jewish traditions, were held as unclean, are pure;” i. e. may be eaten without defilement; but to the polluted [in heart], and unfaithful to Christ nothing is pure.

16. Θεὸν ὁμολογ., &c.] This is said by way of justifying the charge of ἀπιστία in the preceding verse. On the expression Θεὸν εἶδέναι, see 2 Tim. ii. 19. and Note. The ἔργοις has reference to the λόγοις implied in ὁμολογοῦσι. So in a passage of Aristot. cited by Budæus Comm. L. Gr. in voc. συνάδω, we have καὶ συναδόντων μὲν τοῖς ἔργοις (scil. τοῖς λόγοις αὐτῶν) ἀποδεκτέον· διαφωρῶντων δὲ λόγους ὑποληπτέον, where instead of the manifestly corrupt words λόγους ὑποληπτέον, I venture, with some confidence, to propose to read λόγους ἀποληκτέον, for ἀποστατέον, i. e. abandon their society. Moreover, διαφωρῶντων λόγοις is elliptical for διαφ. (ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις) τοῖς λόγοις. The above criticism is, I apprehend, II. 1—6. See 1 Tim. iii. 11. v. 14. and Notes.

2. πρεσβ.] Repeat λάλει, in the sense εἰπέ, bid. Πρεσβ. is by some eminent Expositors taken to denote, not aged men, but Presbyters; since the directions given are similar to those at 1 Tim. i. 3. and πρεσβύτιδας at v. 3. is applicable to those women who bore offices in the Church; as appears from the epithets ἱεροπρεπεῖς and καλοδιδασκάλους. This view, however, is supported neither by the authority of the ancient Expositors, nor by the opinion of the best modern ones. And the qualifications do not sufficiently correspond. Neither is the word ever used in the N. T. in that sense. More may be said for πρεσβύτιδες as denoting female elders, or deaconesses; where there is ancient authority to allege. Perhaps we may, in the former case, reconcile the two interpretations, by supposing that the Apostle, though using the general term πρεσβύτης, yet had also in mind those who filled ecclesiastical offices. With ὑγαίαν. τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγ., τῇ ὑπομ. may be compared 1 Tim. vi. 11. δίωκε πίστιν, ἀγάπην, ὑπομονήν. and 2 Tim. iii. 10. where see Notes.

3. καταστήματι] “deportment;” corresponding to the French “maintien,” whence our mien. So Porphy., cited by Wets., τὸ δὲ σεμνὸν καὶ ἐκ τοῦ καταστήματος ἐωράτο. and Simpl. τὸ κατ. σεμνόν. In ἱεροπρ. the reference should seem to be (not, as many eminent Expositors suppose) to dress, but to the καταστήματι; denoting that their deportment should be suitable to their holy calling. So Menand. cited by Schleus. ἱερ. τέχνη. Δεδουλ., “addicted to;” nearly synonymous with προσέχοντας at 1 Tim. iii. 8, though a somewhat stronger term, and illustrated by John viii. 34. and Rom. vi. 14.

4, 5. ἵνα σωφρονίζ., &c.] These words point at the chief purpose of the instructions,—namely, that they should teach them to be σώφρονες, acting as monitresses, and regulators of their morals. There is no reason to suppose, with some, an allusion to the ten σωφρονισταί, who were chosen as Censors of the morals of the Athenian youth; for the term was used (as Hemsterh. on Pollux ix. 138. has shown) in a general way, of those who bring others to a right mind. Thus it occurs in Thucyd. iii. 65. σωφρονιστὰι τῆς γυνάμης. And the verb is found in this sense at Thucyd. vi. 78. These instructions (as appears from what follows) were to turn on the domestic duties suitable to young married women, and each in the order of importance. The first is, as it were, their cardinal virtue; for it was well said by Socrates (ap. Stob. p. 488.) εὐσέβεια γυναικεία, ὁ πρὸς τὸν ἀνδρὰ ἔρως. In like manner modesty is by Pericles in his Funeral Oration (Thucyd. ii. 45.) called the virtue of the female sex. In οἰκουροὺς we have a very significant term, denoting not only “stayers at home,” but ex adjuncto, care-takers of the house. So Theophyl. explains by οἰκονομικάς which, I would observe, is the sense of the obscure term στεγανόμους in Lycophr. Cass. 1095, who just after uses the term οἰκουρίαν to denote housewifery. Ἀγαθὰς may mean either,—with reference to the words following,—good-tempered; or, as it should rather seem, with reference to the preceding, good-wives, in the sense in which the word was used by our ancestors, like the οἰκοδεσποῖναι of Artemid. ii. 33. or the bona-femina of Ennius; namely, good managers. Thus it will be exegetical of the preceding. On ἵνα μὴ ὁ λόγος, &c. see 1 Tim. vi. 1.

7, 8. τύπον.] See 1 Tim. iv. 12. and Note. At ἐν τῇ διδ. ἀδιαφθορίαν repeat παρέχ. in the sense ἐνδεικνύμενος. The ἀδιαφ. is closely connected with the κατηνέειν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ at 2 Cor. ii. 17; i. e. corrupting it for the sake of lucre, or other base motives. Now this regards the person, as λόγον ὑγιῇ (by a metaphor often occurring in the Epistles to Timothy and Titus) does the thing. Ἀκατάγν. is properly a forensic term, but is here synonymous with the ἀνεπίληπτος at 1 Tim. vi. 14. At ἐξ ἐναντίας supply γνώμης; this expression being equivalent to the ὁ ἀντικείμενος at 1 Tim. v. 14, and including both Jews and Judaizers. The same phrase occurs in Thucyd. vii. 45. τὸ ἐξ ἐναντίας. Ἐντραπῇ, “that he may be ashamed;” as 2 Thess. iii. 14. Compare a similar passage at 1 Cor. xiv. 24. On these two verses see two admirable Sermons by Bp. Jeremy Taylor, Works, vol. vi. 483. seqq.

9, 10. Compare similar admonitions at 1 Tim. vi. 1. sq. Eph. vi. 5—8. Col. iii. 22. The ἀντιλέγειν here is equivalent to the ἀνταποκρίνεσθαι of Rom. ix. 20. Hence may be illustrated the obscure words of Æschyl. Theb. 244. παλυστόμεις αὖ; for so I would point, regarding the preceding line as spoken aside. Hence the conjecture of Bp. Blomfield, πολυστόμεις, however learned and ingenious, is unnecessary.

10. νοσφιζ.] See Note on Acts v. 1, 2. On τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμ. Θε., “of God our Saviour,” see Note at 1 Tim. i. 1, 2.

11, 12. ἐπεφάνη—ἀνθρώποις.] The connection seems to be as follows: “And this honouring of your religion ye all, as Christians, are bound to aim at; since from all, of whatever rank, it is required]; for the grace of God,” &c. The Apostle then shows that in that religion is contained the obligation to avoid the vices, and cultivate the virtues above enjoined; and, in general, to live righteously, soberly, and godlily. After which he points out the strongest imaginable motives to avoid the one and cultivate the other, arising from the expectation of a day of retribution; suggesting, withal, an encouragement to strive after virtue, in the doctrine of atonement and expiation by Jesus: and, finally, he notices the strong incentive to perform all we are really able, from a regard to the purpose for which this atonement was made;—namely, “to purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.” Πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις must be construed, not with ἐπεφάνη, but with ἡ σωτήριος, thus: “which bringeth salvation to all men, whether Jews or Gentiles.” Ἐπεφάνη, “hath been revealed and promulgated.” Παιδεύουσα is for εἰς τὸ παιδεύειν. The ἵνα is for ὅτι, and ἀρνησάμενοι may be rendered rejecting, renouncing. So Thucyd. vi. 56. ἀπαρν. τὴν πείρασιν. Ἀσέβ. denotes not only neglect of the proper object of worship, by idolatry, but by those vices which result from it. On τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθ. the best comment is 1 John ii. 16. Σωφρ. denotes virtue as regards ourselves; δικ., as regards our fellow-creatures; and εὐσεβῶς, as respects God. Similar divisions are found in passages of the Classical writers cited by the Commentators.

13. προσδεχόμενοι—Χριστοῦ.] The most natural sense, and that required by the proprietas linguæ, is the one assigned to the passage by almost all the ancients from Clem. Alex. downwards, and by the early modern Expositors, as

Erasmus, Grot., and Beza, and also by some eminent Expositors and Theologians of later times, as Bps. Pearson and Bull, Wolf, Matth., and Bp. Middl.,—namely, “Looking for (or rather, looking forward to. Comp. Job ii. 9. and see Grot.) the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.” The cause of the ambiguity in our common version is ably pointed out, and the above version established on the surest grounds, by Bp. Middl. and Prof. Scholefield. But, besides the argument founded on the propriety of language, that of Beza, who urges that ἐπιφ. is no where used of God, but Christ, is unanswerable. So in a late able Critique on Dr. Channing’s works, in the British Critic, the Reviewer justly maintains, that “Christ must be the God here spoken of, because it is his glorious appearing which all Christians here are said to expect: but of God the Father, we are expressly told, that Him no man hath seen, nor can see.” Other convincing arguments for the construction here laid down may be seen in Dr. Routh’s Reliquiæ Sacre, vol. ii. p. 26. The reader is also particularly referred to Clem. Alex. Cohort. ad Gentes sub init., where vv. 11—14 are cited by that Father, and the view of σωτ. here maintained is adopted. The whole of the context there is deserving of great attention, as containing such plain and repeated attestations to the Divinity of Jesus Christ as can rarely be found. The passage itself may be seen in Bp. Bull’s Def. Fid. Nic. p. 87. also, with learned remarks, and an English translation of it, in Dr. Burton’s Testimonies of the Antenicene Fathers, p. 99. Here Doddr. and Mackn., though they profess to leave the matter dubious, yet so translate as both to leave no ambiguity, and decide it in a manner we should little expect. See Rec. Syn. They and our other Translators have, I suspect, been influenced, more than they were aware, by an argument specious, indeed, and employed by the maintainers of the new version, that “Jesus Christ is no where styled the great God.” But the μεγάλου belonging to both Θεοῦ and σωτῆρος alters the case, and removes that objection. The sense is plainly, “the glorious appearance of that GREAT BEING, who is our God and SAVIOUR.”

14. λυτρώσῃται] “might redeem us.” The word is here a verbum prægnans, denoting not merely, as the Unitarians contend, withdrawing men from sin by a pure doctrine and a holy example, but paying the λύτρον, which delivers them from the punishment of sin, and places them in a condition to please God. The second of these senses is alluded to in the next words καὶ καθαρίσθαι, &c., in which may be recognized a blending of two clauses into one, namely—"that he might [by atonement] purify us unto his service, and [thus] make us a people peculiarly his own, by being zealous of good works." Περιούσιος, in this Hellenistic use (derived from the Sept.), signifies (as Chrys. observes) what is ἐξαιρετόν, or chosen out from other things, eximium, by an allusion to the title formerly given to the Jews by God, i. e. λαὸς περιούσιος. (Exod. xix. 5. Deut. vii. 6.) This use is formed on that of the Heb. בְּחֵרָה. See Eph. ii. 10. So 1 Pet. ii. 9. λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν.

15. ἔλεγγε.] This must not be rendered, with Rosenm. and others, "enjoin;" for which signification there is no authority. No perplexity would have existed, had the comma of the early Editions after παρακάλει been retained. The sense may be thus expressed: "The above doctrines and duties do thou teach, and exhort to the practice thereof; and [any who gainsay or neglect them] rebuke with all authority," i. e. in the exercise of all the authority vested in thee as God's minister for that very purpose. So 2 Tim. iv. 2. κήρυξον—ἔλεγγον—παρακάλεσον.

—μηδεὶς σου περιφρονεῖ.] i. e. give no one just cause to despise thee; as in 1 Tim. iv. 12.

III. 1. See Rom. xiii. 1. compared with Col. i. 10. Expositors are not agreed whether πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐτοιμοὺς εἶναι should be referred to the preceding words (thus limiting the obedience to all things lawful), or to the following ones, as suggesting how political obedience may best be rendered,—namely, by discharging the other duties. The latter mode is preferable, and it is confirmed by 2 Tim. ii. 21. εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐτοιμασμένοι. Thus the sense is, "readily disposed to the performance of that [namely, political obedience] and every other good work," i. e. moral duty connected therewith, such as abstinence from all reviling language and quarrelsome conduct, and the cultivation of the opposite disposition of meekness and forbearance towards all men, even those who, like their Heathen adversaries, little deserved it at their hands.

3. ἡμεν γὰρ ποτὲ, &c.] The γὰρ is meant to assign a reason for such lenity and mildness towards abusive Heathen opponents; namely, pity for their situation, and recollection that they themselves were once such as those persons now are. The best Expositors are agreed, that by ἡμεῖς the Apostle speaks per κοινωνίαν; i. e. identifies himself with them; as he often does elsewhere, in order to soften disagreeable topics, and avoid offence. For, notwithstanding what some say, there is here scarcely any particular suitable to Paul when a Jew; whereas all of them are very similar to those by which the Apostle describes the heathens at Rom. i. and elsewhere. Ἀνόητοι has reference to the peculiar ignorance of atheism, or polytheism; namely, idolatry, and unacquaintance with the religion revealed by God. Πλανώμενοι is nearly synonymous. So at Heb. v. 2. it is joined with ἀγνοῦν. and πλαν. may, as there, signify "deceiving yourselves," implying error. So 1 John i. 8. εαυτοὺς πλανᾷ, καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἡμῖν. The ἀπειθεῖς, as being placed between ἀνόητ. and πλαν., must denote a contumacious refusing of belief and obedience, corresponding to οὐκ ἑδοκίμασαν τὸν Θεὸν ἔχειν ἐν ἐπιγνώσει at Rom. i. 28. On the δουλεύοντες ἐπιθυμ. καὶ ἡδ. ποικίλαις the best comment is Rom. i. 28—31, and Eph. ii. 3. And as those words allude to the abominable vices of the heathens; so, I conceive, do the next to certain evil dispositions, such as malice, envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness. So Rom. i. 29. πεπληρωμένους κακίᾳ· μετὰ τοῖς φθόνῳ, φόνῳ, ἐρίδος. Στυγητοὶ, "hateful (or deserving of hatred) to God and good men." So Rom. i. 30. θεοστυγεῖς. The μισοῦντες ἀλλήλους has no exact counterpart in the above passage; but it is implied in the ἀσυνῆτους, ἀσπόρους, ἀσπόνδους. We may render, in the words of Tacitus, "invisos mutuis odiis."

4—6. Compare the parallel passages at Gal. iv. 3—6, and Eph. ii. 1—10, the latter of which especially is a good comment on the present. Τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ is rendered by Bp. Middl., "of our Saviour God;" who, in supposing that here and at i. 3; ii. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 2, the Saviour God means Christ, is certainly mistaken. Not only the parallel passages of Gal. and Eph. show it to be God the Father who is here meant, but such is clear from v. 6.

Mackn. and Wakef., "which we had done," or did; i. e. before faith and the laver of regeneration. "This (as Whitby observes) does not in the least exclude the works of righteousness which should hereafter be done, by virtue of the new nature given to Christians, and the renewing of the Holy Spirit, from being conditions of their future happiness. And when the Apostle says κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς, his meaning is, that by his free mercy he brought us from a state of wrath and condemnation, into the way of salvation; in which, if we walk, and continue, we shall assuredly obtain salvation."

— ἔσωσε.] The best Expositors are agreed that the sense is, "hath put into a state of salvation." See Note on Matt. i. 21, and Acts ii. 47. It must, however, likewise import deliverance from the consequences of former sins, negligences, and ignorances, by having the means of true knowledge and virtue communicated. Διὰ λουτροῦ παλ. Render, by "the laver of regeneration." The ancient Expositors almost universally (see Chrys. i. 323.) and all the most eminent modern Commentators are agreed that by παλιγγ. is meant baptismal regeneration. And that this is the doctrine of our Church, is certain from its 27th Article. See the masterly Vindication of this doctrine by Bp. Marsh, Lect. p. 386—392, and Dr. Whitby. The term, indeed, might, without the adjunct λουτρὸν, mean moral regeneration. And though that sense be very rare in the ancient writers, yet I have myself noted an example in Euseb. Eccl. Hist. iii. 23. fin. διδόνς μέγα παράδειγμα μετανοίας ἀληθινῆς, καὶ μέγα γνώρισμα παλιγγενεσίας. The ἀνακαιν. Πν. ἁγ. must, of course, be primarily understood of the renovation proceeding from the regenerating grace of baptism; though it must not be confined to that; but understood of that moral renovation begun in baptism, but requiring the aid of the Holy Spirit throughout the whole of life. The reader is here referred to a most admirable elucidation of this controverted topic by Dr. Gloucester Ridley (cited in Mant and D'Oyly); which leaves, in fact, very little about which moderate men, careful to understand each other, would differ.

6. ἔξεχεν—πλουσίως.] See Acts ii. 17, and Note.

7. See the above parallel passages of Galatians and Ephesians, and also Rom. iii. 24—26; v. 1—9; viii. 17. Gal. iii. 29, and Notes. See also Bp. Bull, Harm. Ap. pp. 16 & 83.

8. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος.] Literally, "Faithful or true is the saying." Expositors are not quite agreed whether this refers to what precedes, or to what follows. In the latter case the sense will be, "uphold the doctrine, that believers should maintain good works." To this sense, however, the plural τούτων is adverse; and the ἵνα will not admit it. It is better (with almost all eminent Expositors, ancient and modern,) to refer them to the preceding, understanding by τούτων the doctrines above mentioned; i. e. concerning salvation to sinners from the mercy of God in Christ, through regeneration, by faith and justification of grace. The sense of the next words is: "And I would have you constantly insist on these truths: so that those who have believed in God may maintain good works." The cause of the obscurity, and consequent diversity of interpretation arose from the Apostle's not having here shown how it should be, that the doctrine of salvation by grace should produce holiness of life. But he has done it in another kindred passage which the Commentators have omitted to adduce; namely, Eph. ii. 9 & 10, where, after having at large treated on the subject of salvation by grace (as here), adding that it is not of works lest any man should boast, he subjoins: αὐτοῦ γὰρ ἔσμεν ποίημα, κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, οἷς προητοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπατήσωμεν where the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "[Yet works must be done,] for," &c. Hence it should seem that the καλῶν ἔργων here must have the same sense as the ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς there: and consequently it must not be limited, with many eminent Commentators, to works of benevolence, still less the business of our vocation, but be extended to good works of every kind. Προϊστασθαι signifies 1. to set oneself about any thing; 2. to assiduously practise it; a sense sometimes found in the Classical writers. Ταῦτά ἐ. τὰ καλὰ. Some 14 MSS. have not the τὰ, which Bp. Middl. is disposed to cancel, for scarcely any better reason than because he does not perceive the force of it. And what the Bishop was only inclined to do, Mr. Valpy, swayed by his authority, takes courage, and does; and, with less than his usual discretion, cancels the word, alone of all the Editors. But, not to advert to Bp. Middleton's reasons for supposing it not genuine, it is surely difficult to imagine how, if so, it should have been introduced into nearly nine-tenths of the MSS.; for Rinck's collations present no variation. Whereas, for its omission we can well account; namely, from the ancient Critics being as unable to discover its force as was Bp. Middl. Yet, if I mistake not, it is susceptible of a very good sense, namely: "These are the things (i. e. duties) which are good and profitable unto men." A sense much stronger than that yielded by the common version; and such as is very agreeable to the Asyndeton, which in St. Paul is commonly introductory to a sentiment of more than usual energy. Indeed, it is here required by the contrast in the next verse: for in the pursuit of curious speculations, and scholastic subtleties, unconnected with the main articles of our faith, and the common rules of human duty, practice is usually neglected.

9. See Notes at 1 Tim. i. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 16 & 17. By genealogies it has been thought by some learned men that St. Paul has reference to that Oriental system of Philosophy, the advocates of which taught that the eternal and perfect Deity lived in a state of undisturbed repose and happiness: that two beings, male and female, immediately sprung from him: that from them descended successive generations (Æons): and that these three species of beings constituted a celestial family, (πλήρωμα).—See Mosheim's Ecclesiast. Hist. vol. i. p. 71.

10. The mention of frivolous questions and curious subtleties naturally introduces that of the heresies and schisms which they usually generate. Compare Rom. xvi. 17, where see Note. On the sense of αἰρετικὸν ἄνθρωπον, and of the term σχίσμα much has been written. Suffice it here to say, that αἰρ. seems to mean one who takes up any doctrine in opposition to, or inconsistent with the fundamental truths of the Gospel; especially if anxious to promulgate his own notions, and from a vain-glorious desire of being the head of a Sect. Of course, schism is the promulgation and supporting of such heresies. See Bingham's Ecclesiastical Antiq. L. xvi. 6. 21. Vitringa de Synag. p. 755. sqq. Ellis's Fortuita Sacra, p. 238.

11. εἰδὼς ὅτι—αὐτοκατ.] These obscure and controverted words are, I conceive, meant to suggest a reason why all intercourse with such a person is to be avoided. And the difficulty hinges upon αὐτοκατάκριτος, which some eminent Commentators think may mean “one who furnishes matter of self-condemnation against himself.” This sense, however, seems very harsh, and little agreeable to what preceded. The ancient interpretations, from their simplicity, deserve more attention. Chrys., Theophyl., and Æcumen. explain it ἀναπολόγητος, i. e. condemned by himself and his own conscience. And it is well remarked by Theodoret, that the import of the whole verse is ἀνόνητος γὰρ ἐστὶν ὁ πόνος. Perhaps, however, the truth will best be attained by uniting both interpretations, thus: “Such an one avoid; for he is utterly perverted, and therefore no good can be expected to be done: he sins self-condemned, and is so inexcusable that you may justly break off intercourse; and, by his being already self-condemned, you need not keep up intercourse with the intent of convincing him of his error; for of that his conscience will admonish him.”

14. The scope of this verse seems to be to engraft upon the Christian duty enjoined in the last, a general admonition, further illustrative of v. 8, as to works of benevolence in general; and the words may be rendered: “And withal, let our people learn to carefully exercise themselves in goodly actions, (i. e. honest industry,) for the supply of necessary wants, that they may not be unfruitful. By ἡμέτεροι are to be understood the Christians in Crete. On the expression προϊστασθαι see Note supra v. 8. By καλὰ ἔργα must here be especially, if not solely, meant works of benevolence and charity; as appears from the context, and the very expression καλῶν ἔργων, occurring in a similar connection at 1 Tim. vi. 18, and v. 10, and elsewhere. The next words seem intended to show what was meant by the καλῶν ἔργων here, and in some degree to qualify what had been said; the sense being, for the supply of necessary wants, ad vitæ subsidia, as Schleus. explains. And that the ἐφόδια provided for travellers, were sometimes so called, is plain from Acts xxviii. 10. καὶ ἀναγομένοις ἐπέδεντο τὰ πρὸς τὴν χρείαν. So that Theophylact (following Chrys.) well explains by ἐφοδιάσαι, κηδεσθαι τῶν δεομένων, καὶ ἐν χρήμασι καὶ ἐν ἡμίμασι, where, for ἐν ἡμίμασι, read, as the sense requires, ἐνδύμασι. The words following suggest the reason why they should do this; namely, that they may not fail in rendering such fruit as Gospel principles require.

This Epistle is simply a brief letter written to reconcile a Colossian named Philemon to his slave Onesimus, who had absconded; and having come to Rome, had been converted to the Christian faith, and baptized by St. Paul; with whom he staid some time, attending upon him with the greatest fidelity. In order, however, to repair the injury he had done his master, he was anxious to return to him; and St. Paul wrote this letter to entreat Philemon to pardon his offence, and receive him again into his service; since he might now place entire confidence in him, as he was become a sincere Christian, and would conscientiously discharge his duties. Nay, in order to prevent all objection on the score of injury suffered, the warm hearted Apostle offers to reimburse it.

On the time and circumstances of the writing of the letter, see Paley's Hor. Paul.; who proves it to have been written at the same period with the Epistle to the Colossians, and committed to the same person, who conveyed that, and no doubt this at the same time, to Colosse. The writer was yet in confinement, but is supposed to have been nearly at the end of his first imprisonment. It is impossible to read the letter without being much struck with the generosity of spirit which breathes throughout it, and the address and delicacy employed by the Apostle in accomplishing his benevolent purpose.

C. I. 1. δέσμιος X. 'I.] "a prisoner for the sake of, or in the cause of Jesus Christ." See 2 Tim. i. 8. and Note. Συνεργῷ. Literally, "helper [in the cause of the Gospel]," whether as Deacon, or preacher to the congregation assembling at his house, is uncertain.

2. Ἀφφία.] Said by the ancients to have been the wife of Philemon: and Archippus, they tell us, was his son, and a Deacon in the Church.

On συστρατ. see Phil. ii. 25, and Note. With respect to τῇ κατ' οἶκόν σου ἐκκλησίᾳ, Benson has given good reasons for supposing that this was not the whole congregation of the Christians at Colosse, but a part only. The Christians there (as in most other places at this period of persecution, before they were allowed to build edifices for the common worship of considerable numbers) probably assembled in small parties at the houses of some of the leading persons among the Christians, who happened to have rooms convenient for the purpose. See Rom. xvi. 5, 11, and 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

4. εὐχαριστῶ, &c.] See 2 Tim. i. 3, and Note.

5. ἀκούων—πίστιν.] Here the Commentators have been agreed that there is a transposition (per Chiasmum et Synchysin) for τὴν ἀγάπην ὑμῶν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, καὶ τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν πρὸς τὸν Κύριον Ἰ., as in Col. i. 4, and Eph. i. 15. It was, however, left for the taste and judgment of Bp. Jebb to account for this seeming irregularity, which he has satisfactorily done in his Sacred Literature, p. 345—347; rightly tracing the reason to the different objects of those Epistles as compared with that of the present. "In the former case, he observes, "it was requisite to give prominence to faith; in the latter, the object would be promoted by making love toward the saints the prominent member of the period. St. Paul, therefore, has distributed his terms like a consummate master of language; he placed love first, and the object of that love last; including faith toward Christ, the originaive fountain of all Christian love, between these two extremes: thus, instead of detracting from the grand impression, the mention of Christian faith promotes it."

- 6 τας τοὺς ἀγίους· ὅπως ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεώς σου ἐνεργῆς γένηται ἐν ἐπιγνώσει παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν, 7 εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. † Χάριν γὰρ ἔχομεν πολλὴν καὶ παράκλησιν ἐπὶ τῇ ἀγάπῃ σου, ὅτι τὰ σπλάγχνα τῶν 8 ἀγίων ἀναπέπναιται διὰ σοῦ, ἀδελφέ. ^d Διό, πολλὴν ἐν ^{d 1 Thess. 2. 6.} 9 Χριστῷ παρρησίαν ἔχων ἐπιτάσσειν σοι τὸ ἀνῆκον, διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην μᾶλλον παρακαλῶ· τοιοῦτος ὢν ὡς Παῦλος 10 πρεσβύτης, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ δέσμιος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. ^e Παρακαλῶ σε περὶ τοῦ ἐμοῦ τέκνου, ὃν ἐγέννησα ἐν τοῖς 11 δεσμοῖς μου, Ὁνήσιμον, (τὸν ποτέ σοι ἄχρηστον, νυνὶ δὲ 12 σοὶ καὶ ἐμοὶ εὐχρηστον,) ὃν ἀνέπεμψα· σὺ δὲ αὐτὸν, 13 τουτέστι τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα, προσλαβοῦ. ^a Οὐ ἐγὼ ἐβουλόμην πρὸς ἐμαυτὸν κατέχειν, ἵνα ὑπὲρ σοῦ διακονῇ μοι ἐν 14 τοῖς δεσμοῖς τοῦ εὐαγγελίου· ^f χωρὶς δὲ τῆς σῆς γνώμης ^{f 2 Cor. 9. 7.} οὐδὲν ἠθέλησα ποιῆσαι, ἵνα μὴ ὡς κατὰ ἀνάγκην τὸ ἀγαθὸν

6. ὅπως ἡ κοιν. &c.] The best Commentators are agreed that here προσευχόμενος is to be supplied from προσευχῶν at v. 4., "praying that." Ἡ κοιν. τῆς πίστεώς σου (as I have shown in Recens. Syn.) must mean, "thy communication or participation in the faith." Compare Tit. i. 4. and Jude 3. Ἐνεργῆς, "effectual," as in Gal. v. 6. Ἐν ἐπιγνώσει, for εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν. The sense of the clause is not quite certain, but it may probably be expressed with Mr. Holden as follows: i. e. "by leading you all to the knowledge that every good which you possess, or practise, is for, and redounds to, the honour and glory of Christ." For the common reading ὑμῖν, many MSS., early Edd., and Fathers have ἡμῖν, which has been adopted by almost every Editor from Beng. to Vater.

7. χάριν.] Some MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Edd. have χαρὰν, which has been edited by Griesb., Tittm., and Valpy; but, I think, without sufficient reason; since the external evidence for χαρὰν is very weak; the MSS. which support it being only 15, and all of the Western recension, and abounding in corrections. As to Versions, they are in a case of this kind no evidence; and the authority of Fathers very slight. With respect to the internal evidence, it is decidedly in favour of χάριν, as being the more difficult reading. That it may have the sense joy, is proved both from the examples adduced from the Classical writers and from 2 Cor. i. 15., where one MS. has χαρὰν, which is acknowledged to be a gloss. Therefore why not here? And as the Greek Commentators explain χάριν by χαρὰν, the thing is certain.

8, 9. διό] "This being the case," i. e. since you have shown so benevolent and liberal a spirit to Christians. Ἐχων παρρ. ἐν Χρ., i. e. such as I might, by the authority of Christ and as his Apostle, use. Τὸ ἀνῆκον, i. e. what is proper for you to do as a Christian. Διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην seems to mean, "because of the love [which subsists between us]." Πρεσβύτης should (as Bp. Middl. observes) be rendered "an old man." "There are (says Heinr.) three claims on which he grounds his request: 1. as being an Apostle to whom Philemon was indebted; 2. as being an old man (and to such we should be loath to refuse a request); 3. as being a prisoner in the cause of the Gospel, i. e. for the Gospel's sake." See Note at Tit. i. 1—5. The repetition of παρακαλῶ after a parenthetical clause has great energy. On the use of τοιοῦτος, Wets. aptly compares Andocid. in Alcib. ὁ δὲ πάντων δεινωτάτων ἐστὶ, τοιοῦτος ὢν, ὡς εὐνοῦς τῷ δήμῳ τοὺς λόγους ποιεῖται.

10. ἐγέννησα] i. e. have converted to the Christian faith; by a metaphor common both in the N. T. and the Rabbinical writers.

11. τὸν ποτέ σοι—εὐχρηστον.] On the admirable address shown in thus introducing the request to be made, see Benson. Ἀχρηστον is supposed to be used, per litoten, in the sense injurious; since from v. 18, 19, it appears that he had robbed his master. See, however, the Note there.

12. τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα] i. e. whom I love as if it were myself, or my own son. So the best Commentators explain, comparing Esth. vii. 3. and adducing several examples from the Classical writers of σπλάγχνα in the sense son. To which may be added another from Soph. Antig. 1053. Προσλαβοῦ, "take him to thy confidence and protection." A sense of the word found in Acts xxviii. 2.

13. ὃν ἐγὼ ἐβούλ. πρὸς ἐμ. κατέχ.] This is added to show the Apostle's decided opinion that he is now εὐχρηστος. Ὑπὲρ σοῦ, for ἀντὶ σοῦ, "in thy stead," i. e. (says Fell) as thou wouldst have done hadst thou been present." Διακ. refers, not so much to the waiting on of a servant, but to the kind offices which a spiritual father had a right to expect from those whom he had begotten in the faith.

14. χωρὶς δὲ σῆς γνώμης.] Literally, "without thy determination [on the point.]" I would remark, that the Classical writers in this sense use ἀνευ, in preference to χωρὶς. So Herodian v. 1. ἐμοὶ δὲ σκοπός, μηδὲν τι πράττειν ἀνευ τῆς ὑμετέρας γνώμης. Xenoph. Mem. iv. sub fin. ἀνευ τῆς τοῦ προτέρου δεσπότου γνώμης. —ἵνα μὴ ὡς κατὰ, &c. "that the benefit [if you choose to give him up to me],” (or, as Benson explains, of pardoning and receiving him into favour) may not be, as it were, compulsory, but voluntary. This use of τὸ ἀγαθόν is very rare; but examples have been adduced.

15. The Commentators remark on the euphemism in ἐχωρίσθη, “was parted from you;” and they are agreed that the words suggest the probability that this separation happened κατὰ Θεῖαν οἰκονομίαν, by Divine Providence. “There was,” observes Benson, “no human intention on the part of Onesimus, or Paul, or Philemon, to accomplish an event which had led to much good; therefore Providence might probably be supposed to have brought it about for the good of Onesimus, and eventually of Philemon. Comp. Gen. xlv. 5. l. 20. This could not indeed justify Onesimus’s running away (Rom. iii. 8.); but hence is magnified the gracious mercy of God, who had brought good out of evil.” “ἵνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχῃς. Here there is, I conceive, a blending of two clauses into one, i. e. “that thou mightest receive him back from me reformed, and thus to remain with thee for ever,” or perpetually. This is not only meant indirectly to engage that he shall not run away again, but to suggest another and affecting consideration; “for if,” as Dr. Burton observes, “Onesimus had continued a heathen, Philemon might have had him as his servant for life, but after that they would have been separated; now they would be companions for ever, in this world and the next.”

18. εἰ δέ τι ἡδίκησέ σε ἢ ὀφείλει.] From these words many infer that Onesimus had been guilty of robbery as well as desertion. But the recent Commentators seem right in thinking that the terms will scarcely authorise us to suppose this. Ἡδίκ. may apply to the having wronged his master by depriving him of his services during his absence, or perhaps by idleness before. What is meant by ὀφείλει, is not easy to determine. It would certainly seem little applicable with reference to any money Onesimus had robbed his master of. Though, indeed, some consider it as an euphemism. Benson and Heinr. suppose that he had in some way contracted debts, which his master had been obliged to pay. Τοῦτο ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει. Literally, “reckon that in the account between us as an item for me to pay.”

19. ἐγὼ Παῦλος ἔγρ. τ. ἐ. χ.] q. d. “For greater certainty, take my engagement; I, Paul, [do hereby] write with my own hand, I will repay it.” So οἰκειόχειρος ἀσφάλεια in Pachym. L. vi. 26. and οἰκειόχειρος in Ducange Gloss. Græc.

20. ναί—Κυρίῳ.] “Do (ΝΑΙ), brother, grant that I may enjoy this from thee, as from a Christian,” (i. e. as from thy conversion). The next clause seems to mean, “grant my request,” and may be best rendered, “gratify my heart in this matter connected with the religion of Christ.” See Note supra v. 7.

21. ὑπακοῇ.] Benson and others take this in the sense compliance. But it should seem best to retain the usual signification obedience, viz. to the precepts of the Gospel, which would best secure his compliance in the matter. Εἰδὼς ὅτι—ποιήσεις. Some think this hints that he should manumit Onesimus; while others recognise no such meaning. Indeed, it is not clear what is intended.

1 I. ¹ΠΟΛΥΜΕΡΩΣ καὶ πολυτρόπως πάλαι ὁ Θεὸς λαλήσας ^{1 Num. 12. 6, 8.}
τοῖς πατέρας ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, ἐπ' * ἐσχάτου τῶν

We are now arrived at a Book, on the nature of which, and especially on the writer, there has been more discussion than on any or all of the other Books of the N. T., putting aside the Apocalypse. Here five points (all of them disputed), have to be attended to. 1. What may be considered the nature of this Book? Is it to be called an Epistle, or not? 2. To whom was it addressed? 3. In what language was it written? 4. By whom was it written? And, 5thly, What was the occasion of its being written, and what the scope of its contents. Now, from the forms of salutation, usually found in the Epistles, being here wanting, some have doubted, whether it can be regarded as an Epistle sent to some one Christian community; or whether a Discourse on some important topics, intended for the instruction of Christian readers in general. But the objections to its claim to be regarded as an Epistle, have been quite over-ruled; and by the able reasoning of some eminent Critics (especially Michaelis, Hug, and Prof. Stuart), it has been established that the composition in question, though it be without some of the usual characteristics of an Epistle, yet is essentially an Epistle; i. e. is an address combined with dissertatory and argumentative matter in order to give the appeal greater effect;—though, for reasons adverted to by Stuart, not avowedly such. That it was meant especially for some Christian community in particular, is plain. Thus, for instance, we have the pronoun ye, and that in conjunction with some particular circumstances connected with the persons so addressed; and especially a visit is mentioned, as promised to them, and various salutations are sent.

2. As to the question, to whom this Epistle (for such it must certainly be called) was addressed; it is inscribed to the Hebrews: though the learned are not agreed whether by those are to be understood Hebrews in general, Christian and non-Christian, or whether the former only: and if so, whether Hebrew Christians in Palestine, or in Asia Minor, or in Greece, or in Spain. These and other suppositions have been discussed at considerable length, and with great ability, by Prof. Stuart; from whose learned researches it seems pretty certain, that the opinion of the ancient Greek Church, and that also adopted by

Beza, Calvin, Bp. Pearson, and nearly all the most eminent Critics up to the present day, is the one entitled most to reception—namely, that the Epistle was principally intended for the Hebrew Christians in Palestine, who bore the appellation Hebrews, by way of distinction from the Foreign Jews, who were called Hellenists. But whether it was meant for the Church or Churches of Palestine in general, or some Church in particular (as that of Jerusalem, or that of Cæsarea), must, after all that has been said, be left undecided. And probably it might, in some measure (like the Epistle of St. James), be meant for the Jewish Christians in foreign countries as well as those in Palestine, and was therefore written in Greek. Though on that point a difference of opinion exists. The Fathers of the Greek Church generally, some of the Latin (as Jerome and Augustine), and a few eminent modern Critics (as Michaelis and Bardt), maintain that it was originally written in Hebrew, and afterwards translated into Greek by St. Luke, or Barnabas, or Clement of Rome. While the modern Critics and Commentators in general, maintain that it was written in Greek. For the former opinion the chief reason alleged is, 1. that, since the Epistle was addressed to Hebrew Christians, it was proper that it should be written in Hebrew. But surely there were, as we have seen, reasons why it would be proper to be written in Greek. Those, on the other hand, who contend for the Greek original, establish their opinion from various points of internal evidence arising from the composition itself: 1. since the work has all the freedom and spirit of an original, and Hebraisms are in it not so frequent as in the Septuagint Version. 2. That Hebrew names are interpreted. 3. That the passages cited from the O. T. are not quoted from the Hebrew, but from the Septuagint. These arguments, however, are not all of them very cogent: for as to the first, can any work have more of the air of an original than Josephus's History of the Jewish War? And yet we know, from Josephus himself, that it was translated from a Hebrew original. It is further urged by Prof. Stuart, against the existence of a Hebrew (i. e. Syro-Chaldee) original, that “it would have been understood by comparatively few of Palestine; or at least only Jews, and consequently would be misrepresented to the unbelieving multitude, and especially the Gentiles. Whereas, by writing in Greek, the author would both instruct his countrymen, and explain the nature of the Christian covenant to the Gentiles." Of these arguments, however, the former takes too much for granted, and supposes a state of things of which it would be difficult to furnish any proof. At all events, those arguments only tend to show the expediency of a Greek, but do not disprove the expediency of a Hebrew original. And as the weight of historical testimony (in the Greek and early Latin Fathers) is most decidedly in favour of a Hebrew original, it should seem to be the best mode of reconciling conflicting testimony, of removing various difficulties (that may be urged, whichever hypothesis, of a Greek or of a Hebrew original, be adopted), and accounting for various phenomena is to suppose that here (as in the case of St. Matthew's Gospel, and Josephus's History), there were, in a certain sense, two originals, both coming from the author himself, and therefore equally entitled to the name of an original. Nor will it be of much importance to ascertain which came first. But if we inquire which, in all probability, actually preceded, there are as many reasons why we should here assign the priority to the Greek, as, in the case of St. Matthew's Gospel, to the Hebrew—reasons founded on internal evidence, as supplied from the nature and state of the composition itself. Besides which, the Greek would be more called for first, and, at all times be of more extensive circulation and utility. As to supposing, with several ancient Critics, that the Greek was a translation formed from the Hebrew by St. Luke, or Barnabas, or Clement, such probably originated merely in report, or surmise, or was perhaps suggested by the desire to account for the dissimilarity supposed to exist between the style and manner of this Epistle and those of the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul. It is probable that the Hebrew was formed either contemporaneously with, or a very short time after, the Greek: and was, we may suppose, drawn up for the especial use of those Palestine Jews, who, being of the less educated class, or living in the country, did not understand Greek: though intended, I imagine, also for those Jews out of Palestine, who were called of the Eastern Dispersion; i. e. those who sojourned in the parts beyond the Euphrates, as Mesopotamia, Babylonia, Media, Parthia, Elamitis, &c. Now these were not likely to understand Greek, but would probably have a tolerable knowledge of the Syro-Chaldee, into which the Old Testament was now, it is probable, already translated, as appears from the Targums (i. e. Chaldee Versions) of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel. And that St. Paul spoke, and consequently, a fortiori, wrote the Syro-Chaldee, we know from Acts xxi. 40. (where he is said to address his countrymen "in the Hebrew tongue"). Now the existence of these Chaldee or Syro-Chaldee Versions, formed at or before this period, proves the existence of a very extensive class of persons, probably both in and out of Judæa, i. e. of the Eastern Dispersion, who did not understand Greek, and therefore could not read the Septuagint Version, which, indeed, was at first intended alone for the Foreign Jews of the Western Dispersion; though from the circumstance of the Greek language becoming prevalent in Judæa, it proved useful to the educated class there. Thus by addressing his countrymen in both Greek and Hebrew, the writer certainly took the best method of making this address to his nation intelligible to all, whether in or out of Palestine. Thus we know that, in after times, in the fifteenth century, there was a Hebrew Version of this Epistle made for the use of those Jews, dispersed up and down, who were unacquainted with the Greek, and not very conversant with the Latin, or other languages of the Versions.

With respect to the age and canonical authority of the Epistle, the former is established by Prof. Stuart, from evidence of the most weighty kind, both external and internal; and the latter, by actual testimony the most decisive. That it was written while the Temple at Jerusalem and the Jewish state were yet in being, is plain from the work itself. And yet that it was written in the latter part of the Apostolic age, is evident from various intimations. See v. 12. x. 32. xiii. 7. 17. And the external evidence for its canonical authority is almost of equal strength, from its being found in the Pesch. Syr. Version, and from a chain of quotations and attestations from the early Fathers, Clemens, Barnabas, and others down to the close of the second century; where, as Prof. Stuart observes "the question of the Canonical credit of the Epistle intermingles itself with the question whether St. Paul was the writer of the Epistle." And this naturally leads us to the most important, though, at the same time, the most difficult question connected with the Epistle—namely, who was the writer? Now some have ascribed it to St. Luke, or Barnabas: others, to Clement of Rome, or Silvanus, or Apollos. However, the Christian Church in general has ever ascribed it to St. Paul. Indeed, as to Barnabas, Clemens, Silvanus, Apollos, and Luke, there is no external authority whatever to prove any one of them to be the writer. And internal testimony is very slender, nay, as regards Luke and Clemens, quite adverse. Internal testimony is not wanting in favour of Apollos. But it only amounts to this—that if the matter depended wholly upon internal evidence, we might indeed say that there is nothing in the Epistle but what seems agreeable to the character and talents ascribed in the N. T. to Apollos. Yet this kind of evidence cannot be admitted, where external evidence is entirely wanting, and where internal evidence of a still stronger kind may be alleged in proof of some other writer; and where external authority of the strongest kind is combined with that internal. And this leads us to advert to the evidence for the opinion which has generally prevailed in the Christian Church, that this Epistle was written by St. Paul. On so very extensive a question, to enter into details would be unsuitable to a work of this nature.

ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης καὶ χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, φέρον τε τὰ πάντα τῷ ῥήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ,

I must therefore content myself with briefly adverting to the leading features of the evidence external and internal, referring the reader, for further particulars, to the very elaborate and invaluable Introduction to his Translation and Notes on this Epistle by Prof. Stuart, or to the admirable summary of what has been written on the subject, by Mr. Horne, in his Introduction. Now the evidence FOR the Pauline origin, is of two kinds,—external and internal. As to the external evidence, or Historical testimony,—in the first place, it seems adverted to as the production of St. Paul by St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, iii. 15, 16.; for there is great reason to suppose that this Epistle was the one which St. Peter had chiefly in view. 2. The Epistle is found in the most ancient of the Versions, Eastern and Western; as, for instance, the Pesch. Syr., formed in the early part of the second century, and the early Latin Version called Italic, made a little after that period. 3. The testimony of Ecclesiastical antiquity is decidedly in favour of the Pauline origin; the Greek Fathers almost universally ascribing it to Paul; as also many of the most eminent of the Latin. How it came not to be received more generally, or earlier by the latter, is satisfactorily accounted for by Hug. Introd. vol. ii. p. 516—525. To sum up the matter in the words of Prof. Stuart (p. 119.) “the early testimony is, of course, immeasurably the most important. And there seems to be sufficient evidence, that this was as general and uniform, for the first century after the Apostolic age, as in respect to many other Books of the N. T.; and more so, than in respect to several. So that it is apparent that the weight of evidence from tradition is altogether preponderant in favour of the opinion that Paul was the author of this Epistle.”

Let us now advert to internal evidence FOR the Pauline origin. I. Paul cherished a great affection for his kinsmen according to the flesh (Rom. ix. 1—4.); and it is probable that he should never write to them, and endeavour to remove their prejudices and their unbelief? II. If a writer's method of treating his subject, together with his manner of reasoning, be a sure mark by which he may be recognized,—then St. Paul must be allowed to be the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. For, in the first place, the general arrangement or method pursued in this, corresponds with that found in the confessedly Pauline Epistles. 2dly. We here find that superabundance of meaning expressed in very few words, which distinguishes St. Paul from the other sacred writers. And 3dly, many things in this Epistle show its writer to have been not only mighty in the Scriptures, but perfectly conversant with the customs, practices, opinions, traditions, expositions, and applications of Scripture then received in the Jewish Church. III. Not only does the general scope of this Epistle tend to the same point on which St. Paul so much dilates in his Epistles (namely, that we are justified and saved alone through Jesus Christ, and that the Mosaic institutions cannot accomplish that); but there are various doctrinal propositions in this Epistle, which are found in the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul; 1. As to the degree of religious knowledge imparted by the Gospel. 2. As to the views, displayed in the Gospel, concerning God the Father, and the communication of the gifts of the Holy Spirit. 3. Concerning the person and mediatorial office of Christ. IV. There is such a similarity between the modes of quotation, and style of phraseology of this Epistle, and those which occur in the Epistles confessedly by St. Paul, as evince this to be his production. 1. Modes of quotation and interpretations of some passages of the Hebrew Scriptures, which are peculiarly Pauline, because only to be found in the writings of St. Paul. 2. Instances of coincidence in the style and phraseology. Of these Schmidt, De Groot, and Stuart, adduce a considerable number. Add to this, that agonistic figures, which are frequent in St. Paul, are found in the Epistle to the Hebrews vi. 18. xii. 1—3, 4. 12. 3. Coincidences between the exhortations in this Epistle, and those confessedly Pauline. 4. Similarity of the conclusion of this Epistle to the conclusions of St. Paul's Epistles. V. There are several circumstances towards the close of this Epistle which prove that it was written by St. Paul. See xiii. 23, 24. x. 34. Now is it possible that those coincidences can be the effect of mere accident? Is it not, rather, far more probable that Paul was the writer of this Epistle?

The foregoing sketch, chiefly formed on the details in Stuart or Horne, presents the outlines of the argument on the internal evidence, adduced for the Pauline origin of the present Epistle. For the details themselves I must refer the reader to Prof. Stuart, and content myself with offering a few remarks on the nature and force of the above evidence. First, the evidence as regards the circumstances, is, in some respects, inconclusive, and in all not so strong as that deduced from similarity of doctrines, &c.; and yet even similarity of doctrines and method would not, of itself, be sufficient to prove this to be the production of St. Paul: for such are not inconsistent with its being from the pen of Apollos. The evidence arising from similarity of diction would seem likely to be decisive. But here it must be acknowledged, that a considerable part of the passages adduced by the defenders of the Pauline origin are not sufficiently definite to prove coincidence: while a few passages that are so (as will be seen by the subsequent Annotations) have been inadvertently passed over. One thing, however is certain—from the learned researches of De Groot, and especially Stuart, namely, that the points of similarity and coincidence are far more numerous than those of dissimilarity. Though these last have been hunted out by the indefatigable diligence of a whole phalanx of German Critics for the last 50 years (especially Seyffarth), of which the summary may be seen in the Prolegomena of Kuinoel, and also, with answers, in the Introduction of Prof. Stuart. It must, however, after all, be confessed that the internal evidence for the Pauline origin is less strong than the external. It is, indeed, of the nature of all internal evidence in favour of the authenticity of any composition (I mean, that a work came from the pen of any certain writer) to be less satisfactory than that against it. For while, in the latter case, internal evidence may be so strong as to prove the point almost to demonstration, in the former case, it can rarely rise much beyond this—that the work very probably was from the writer in question. And as no internal evidence can prove a book to be genuine, when external evidence is decidedly against it; so no internal evidence short of that strongest kind, proceeding from what involves anachronism, can prove a work to be spurious, or not written by any author, when external testimony decidedly attests that it was. Yet, sometimes, internal evidence that a composition is by a certain writer, may, if his style, manner, and cast of thought be peculiar, prove so strong, that a person possessed of a true taste and correct judgment may feel such a persuasion that the composition is by that writer, as to rise to what he thinks certainly. Here, however, we have to encounter the perplexing fact, that while the cast of thought, and modes of reasoning are decidedly Pauline, yet the colourings of style, and especially the composition of the sentences, are not so: though that difference may be partly attributable to the difference of subject in this Epistle; which was intended as a treatise rather than an hortatory letter; and being didactic, would consequently be written with far greater deliberation, than most of the Epistles confessedly Pauline appear to have been, and would have more finish of style and composition than those. At all events, the coincidence in the former particular is of by far the most importance; and I must say that the feeling of my own mind as to the composition now in question, after repeated and most attentive examinations of its contents, is that none but St. Paul could have written it, and consequently that none but St. Paul did write it. In it, in short, we have all the peculiar and prominent features of St. Paul's style and manner—the same method of treating his subject, the same fulness of thought, the same devotional spirit, the same warmth of feeling, and the same energy of expression, which characterize his other Epistles. Can all this be the case, and yet the Epistle be not by St. Paul?

Notwithstanding, however, what may to most persons seem to be satisfactory proof of the Pauline origin, yet the Continental Critics for the last half century have almost unanimously rejected it. Of course, they take their stand on the internal evidence, founding there-upon various objections, though for the most part exceedingly frivolous. These have been examined at considerable length by Prof. Stuart, under the distinct heads of objections by Bertholdt, by Schulz, by Seyffarth (in which the objection deduced from the number of ἀπαξ λεγόμενα is utterly refuted by a simple reference to the number of ἀπαξ λεγόμενα in 1 Cor., collected with indefatigable industry by Professor Stuart), by De Wette, by Boëhne, and finally by Bleek. The above have been, upon the whole, satisfactorily refuted by Prof. Stuart; and for the details, I must refer the reader to his elaborate Exposé. One or two remarks must suffice. All the Critics who contend against the Pauline origin, rest their cause chiefly on the allegation, that the Greek of this Epistle is so much superior to that of the Epistles admitted to be by St. Paul, that the composition in question cannot have been his. Now nothing can be more fallacious than such a kind of reasoning. And moreover, the fact may be confidently denied. After a study of the Greek language as diligent, and an acquaintance with its writers, of every age, about as extensive as any person, at least of my own country, I must maintain that the Greek is, except as regards the structure of the sentences, NOT so decidedly superior to the Greek of St. Paul, as to make it even improbable that the Epistle was written by him. To prove this would here be out of place, and indeed were agere actum, since the Section of Prof. Stuart on the Hebraisms and non-conformations to Classical usage, in this Epistle, may suffice to decide that point. At all events, it is certain that, though arguments drawn from the style and diction of the Epistle to the Hebrews, as compared with those of the Epistles admitted to be written by St. Paul, would not of itself be enough to prove the Pauline origin; so also, on the other hand, the same kind of arguments, if even far stronger than they are, never could decide the Epistle to be not written by St. Paul. And this latter needs the aid of external and historical evidence even more than the former. Yet the historical evidence against is very slight compared with that for the Pauline origin. And the historical testimony that does exist against it is, as Stuart shows, of a nature which is grounded more on taste and feeling than on solid testimony. In short, external and historical testimony ought here to decide what internal evidence might leave dubious: nor ought we to hesitate, except on the surest grounds (and we see there are none), to suppose that the opinion handed down by ancient tradition (preserved in the Church to the time of Origen) is well founded; namely, that the Epistle was written by St. Paul. Indeed, it is worthy of remark, that those who bring themselves to be of opinion that the Epistle was not written by St. Paul, are quite unsuccessful in showing who was the author: for objections of the most serious kind lie against any name that has been or can be brought forward, as has been shown at large by Prof. Stuart. That it was written by Barnabas, or by St. Luke, there is not a shadow of evidence: for Clemens Romanus or Silvanus, the evidence is very slight: and for Apollon the external or historical evidence is next to nothing; and the internal only such as to induce us to grant that he might be the writer, if historical testimony would allow it: but it does not. And one cannot imagine that if Apollon had been the writer, all attestation to the fact would have been thus wholly lost. It is plain, therefore, that this, as well as the preceding hypothesis is utterly untenable. Of this, indeed, Seyffarth and Kuinoel are quite aware; and sooner than admit the Pauline origin, they have devised another hypothesis even less admissible than the above,—namely, that the Epistle was written by an anonymous Alexandrian Jew. But what can be imagined more improbable, than that the work of an anonymous writer, and an obscure person, should, in the space of 30 years after it κρείττων γενόμενος τῶν ἀγγέλων, ὅσῳ διαφορότερον παρ' αὐτοὺς κεκληρονόμηκεν ὄνομα. ^{p 2 Sam. 7. 14.} ^{1 Chron. 22. 10.} ^{28. 6.} ^{Psalm. 2. 7. Acts 13. 33. infra 5. 5.} ^p Τίνι γὰρ εἶπε ποτὲ τῶν was written (the time of Clement of Rome, who appeals to it as a book of Divine authority), or soon after, when the Pesch. Syr. Version was formed, have come to be regarded as an inspired work, and received into the Canon of Scripture, though no works had been admitted to a place there, but such as were confessedly written by Apostles? This argument, indeed, holds good, more or less, of Clemens, Silvanus, and Apollos, but much more of an anonymous writer. Besides, as the writer evidently was well known to those whom he especially addressed, how could it happen that he should not be more generally known? On the other hand, the early almost general persuasion that the Epistle was written by St. Paul, can hardly be accounted for, except on the supposition that it was so. Indeed (to use the words of Prof. Stuart), "if Paul did not write it, who did? And what is to be gained by endeavouring to show the possibility that some other person wrote it, when so many circumstances unite in favour of the general voice of the primitive ages, that this Apostle was the author? That the Church, during the first century of the apostolic age, ascribed it to some one of the Apostles, is clear from the fact that it was inserted among the canonical books of the Churches in the East and the West; that it was comprised in the Peschito; in the old Latin Version; and was certainly admitted by the Alexandrian and Palestine Churches. Now what Apostle did write it, if Paul did not? Surely neither John, nor Peter, nor James, nor Jude. The difference of style is too striking between their letters and this, to admit of such a supposition. But what other Apostle, except Paul, was distinguished in the ancient Church as a writer? None; and the conclusion therefore seems to be altogether a probable one, that he was the writer. Why should all the circumstances which speak for him be construed as relating to some unknown writer? Are the sentiments unworthy of him? Are they opposed to what he has inculcated? Do they differ from what he has taught? Neither. Why not then admit the probability that he was the author? Nay, why not admit that the probability is as great as the nature of the case (the Epistle being anonymous) could be expected to afford. Why should there be any more objection to Paul as the author of this Epistle, than to any other man?" I must, therefore, conclude by entirely acquiescing (with Prof. Stuart) in the opinion of Origen (which certainly attests the persuasion to have been of the highest antiquity), that "it is not without reason that the ancients have handed down to us, that this Epistle is Paul's."

To advert briefly to the scope and contents of the Epistle (which cannot better be expressed than in the words of Mr. Horne): "The great object of the Epistle is to show the Deity of Jesus Christ, and the excellency of his Gospel, when compared with the institutions of Moses; to prevent the Hebrews or Jewish converts from relapsing into those rites and ceremonies which were now abolished; and to point out their total insufficiency, as means of reconciliation and atonement. The reasonings are interspersed with numerous solemn and affectionate warnings and exhortations, addressed to different descriptions of persons. At length St. Paul shows the nature, efficacy, and triumph of faith, by which all the saints in former ages had been accepted by God, and enabled to obey, suffer, and perform exploits, in defence of their holy religion; from which he takes occasion to exhort them to steadfastness and perseverance in the true faith."

C. I. The general design of the writer being so to commend Christianity to those whom he addressed, as to confirm them in their adherence thereto, or induce them to embrace it, if they had not yet done so; he commences his discourse by raising in their minds the highest conceptions of Jesus Christ, the Author of that new revelation which God had made to man (v. 1.). He then points out the dignity of His office and person, as Lord of the world, which was created by Him (v. 2.); representing him as being the true image of God, the representative to men of His glory, and accordingly endowed with sovereign power (v. 3.): that, as Mediator of the new Dispensation, he is exalted far above the angels, who were the mediators of the old one; that in his name SON, he has an appellation far more exalted than theirs (vv. 4, 5.); nay, that he is the object of worship to the angels; while they are only God's messengers (vv. 6, 7.). That in his quality of King and Messiah, he has an eternal dominion; and is elevated by his love of righteousness to an honour above all other kings (vv. 8, 9.), being, indeed, addressed in Scripture as Creator of the Universe, immutable, imperishable (vv. 10—12.); an exaltation never ascribed to angels (v. 13.), who are only considered as agents employed for the good of those who are to attain to the salvation which Christ confers. See Stuart's full Analysis.

1. πολυμέρως καὶ πολυτρόπως.] Some difference of opinion here exists among Expositors, ancient and modern, as to whether these words should be kept distinct in sense, or be connected, as synonymous, and designating, by intensity, the greatest variety of the ancient revelations; q. d. "in various and different ways." Of those who keep them distinct, some assign to πολυμέρως the sense "at various times;" others, that of "in sundry parts;" or they unite both; which is surely inadmissible. As to the sense, "at sundry times," it is destitute of authority, and unsupported by any of the ancient Versions. Upon the whole, it is better (with Chrys., of the ancients, and some of the best modern Expositors, as Grot., Dindorf, and Kuinoel) to regard the two words as synonymous in signification, and united to strengthen the sense; being intended to denote the variety in general of the matters and doctrines, which God directed the Prophets to reveal. An opinion supported by certain passages of Maximus Tyrius and Philo, where we have πολυμέρως καὶ πολυτρόπως, and πολυμερῶν καὶ πολυτρόπων; nay, in one passage, with the addition of ποικίλου. If, however, the words be taken separately, πολυτρόπως may be meant (as most Commentators think), of the various modes of Divine revelation, by dreams, visions, ἀγγέλων· Υἱός μου εἰ σὺ, ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά

σε; καὶ πάλιν· Ἐγὼ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα, καὶ symbols, Urim and Thummim, prophetic ecstasy; or (as Dindorf and Kuin. maintain) of “the variety in general of the things and doctrines which God commanded to be revealed by the Prophets.”

—πάλα[ι] “in ancient times.” For 400 years had elapsed since the time of the latest of those writers, who were the writers, in various ages, of the Book which composed the Revelation of God, according to the Old Dispensation. Λαλεῖν properly denotes immediate oral communication; but sometimes, as here, communication made in any other way,—by visions, supernatural impulses, or such like; and not to the persons themselves, but through the medium of others. Ἐν stands here for διά; an Hellenistic idiom. Προφ. here, as often, denotes those who communicate the Divine will. Instead of the common reading ἐσχάτων, very many MSS., early Editions, and Fathers, have ἐσχάτου, which has been adopted by every Editor of note from Mill to Vater: and justly, especially as it is confirmed by the occurrence of the very expression in the Sept. at Num. xxiv. 14. Ezek. xxxviii. 16. Jerem. xxiii. 20; though ἐσχάτων elsewhere occurs. Moreover, ἐσχάτου is to be preferred, as being the more difficult reading. With respect to the sense of the expression ἐπ’ ἐσχάτου, it generally imports, “at some future time” more or less remote, according to the context and scope of the passage. When the times of the Messiah are spoken of, the expressions ἐσχάται ἡμέραι, καιρός, or χρόνος ἐσχάτος, and τὸ ἐσχάτον τῶν ἡμερῶν mean the last times; and so then an end would be put to the Mosaic Dispensation, by the coming of the Messiah. Thus the expression ἐσχ. ἡμ. was occasionally applied by the Apostles to denote the time shortly previous to the advent of Christ to judgment at the end of the world. Sometimes, however, it was employed to denote the period of the Gospel, the last dispensation of God, even that of the Messiah. And such seems to be its import here.

—ἐν Υἱῷ.] This use of Υἱῷ without the Article does not, as Prof. Stuart imagines, tend to invalidate Bp. Middleton’s theory of the Greek Article. In a Note on Matt. i. 1, and iv. 3, he shows that, by a licence arising out of the nature of Θεός, we may write either ὁ Υἱός τοῦ Θεοῦ, or Υἱός Θεοῦ. But he has, I believe, no where noticed the peculiar usage before us of Υἱός for Υἱός Θεοῦ, which is indeed exceedingly rare, yet again occurs at vii. 28, and v. 8. Had he done so, however, he would have found no difficulty in reconciling it with his theory; since he would have seen that Υἱός may, in this use, be considered (like Χριστός put for ὁ Χριστός τοῦ Θεοῦ) as an appellation converted into a sort of proper name, and consequently entitled to the same licence; which we find to be the case in Χριστός; very rarely, indeed, in the Gospels and Acts, but frequently in the Epistles. In this case, propriety seems to require that the word should be written with a Capital. And so I find Theophyl. Moreover, it is probable that in the Υἱῷ of this verse, and the κληρονόμου of the next, the writer had in view the words of our Lord in the parable, Matt. xxi. 37. ὕστερον δὲ ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτοὺς τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ.

2. ἔθηκε] for κατέστησε, as in Acts xiii. 47. 1 Thess. v. 9. 1 Tim. i. 12; which use is also found in the Hebrew יָשָׁה. Yet the idiom is not merely Hellenistic; being sometimes found in the Classical writers; e. gr. Herodian iv. 7. 10. ἔμενος αὐτὸν υἱόν, καὶ κοινωνόν τῆς ἀρχῆς, where there is a use of υἱός midway between the ordinary use a son, and the one just noticed.

—κληρονόμου.] The best Expositors are agreed that the word is here used in the sense Lord, or Possessor: as at Gal. iv. 1. the Son is said to be κύριος πάντων. And Christ is so called at Acts x. 36. See also ii. 36. This Prof. Stuart supposes to be a Hebraism, formed from שֵׁן. But the idiom seems rather formed from the use of the Latin hæres for dominus; the heir being called herus minor. Still to render it “Lord” is objectionable; since the expression in question was used for κύριος, to hint at something further. See Theophyl. Of κληρονόμος πάντων the full sense is: “Lord of all things in the world by inheritance,” in virtue of his Sonship just mentioned. So κληρονόμος κόσμου is used at Rom. iv. 13. Compare v. 3, and vi. 14. Bp. Bull, Jud. Cath. Eccl. Ch. v. § 8, p. 42, well remarks: “Non ibi dicitur Christus Dei Filius, nedum unigenitus, quòd hæres omnium constitutus fuit; sed contrà is hæres factus dicitur, qui prius Filius fuit, idque Filius, per quem Deus Pater sæcula considerat, quique adeo ante sæcula fuit.”

—δὲ οὖν.] Here Kuin. justly rejects the Version of Grot. and others, “on account of whom;” since δὲ οὖν and δὲ ὅν are no where confounded, but kept distinct in this Epistle. Indeed, the sense thus arising would be inapposite, and the thing asserted be contradictory to what is said repeatedly in the N. T.; as John i. 3. 1 Cor. viii. 6. Eph. iii. 9. Col. i. 16 & 17; from which it appears that the words must be understood of a physical, or efficient creation by Christ, as all the ancient Fathers are agreed. So Justin Martyr: ὃ τοὺς οὐρανοὺς ἐκτίσσε. By τοὺς αἰῶνας is meant (as at xi. 3, and perhaps 1 Tim. i. 17.) the whole system of creation, the universe, (so the Syr. olma); answering to the πάντα of John i. 3. This sense of αἰὼν (found also at Wisd. iv. 2; xiii. 9; xiv. 6.) is confined to the plural, being formed by the Alexandrian Jews on the Hebr. עולמים. Thus the Pesch. Syr. here uses ܥܠܡܝܢ, i. e. the universe. So Bp. Bull, Jud. Cath. Eccl. Ch. v. p. 42, remarks, that the expression עולמים רב הוֹלֵמִים is frequent in the Jewish Liturgy, with allusion to the three Æons, or worlds, 1. the עולם השפל or lower world, the region of the elements; 2. the עולם התיניק, the middle world, meaning the celestial orbs; 3. the עולם העליון, the upper world; namely, the abode of the Divine Majesty and the angels, which St. Paul at 2 Cor. xii. 2. calls “the third heaven.”

3. ἀπαύγασμα—ὑποστάσις.] Render, “the effulgence of his glory, and the exact image of his substance or essence.” Δόξα corresponds to the Hebr. כְּבוֹד, and, like it, is used especially of the Divine Majesty of the Deity. The word ἀπαύγασμα denotes properly the light reflected from a lucid body; but it is often used by Philo in the sense of εἰκών. Χαρακτήρ from χαράσσω, sculpo, properly signifies the die, or stamping-tool, used in coining, by which the figure expressed is stamped; or the impression made by a seal; being thus synonymous with σφραγίς. And as such cannot but be an exact representation of the die or seal, so the word came to denote an exact and perfect resemblance, or counterpart, of which sense examples are adduced from Aristotle and Plato. Thus it is a stronger term than εἰκών; with which, however, it is in use synonymous. So at 2 Cor. iv. 4, and Col. i. 15, Christ is called εἰκὼν τοῦ ἀοράτου Θεοῦ. Ὑπόστασις signifies, as the best Commentators are agreed, not person, (a sense of the word unknown until after the Arian controversy, in the fourth century) but substance, or essence; i. e. being: a sense supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg. Versions. The general meaning, then, is,—that the glory of the Father was reflected on the Son, and the ὑπόστασις of the Father was impressed on the Son; so that the Son represented it, as an impression represents the seal; forming a perfect representation of God's person and attributes; i. e. of the perfections subsisting, or existing, in God. The writer here had probably in mind a passage of Wisd. vii. 26, where Wisdom is said to be an efflux or exhalation from God's glory, ἀπαύγασμα φωτὸς αἰδίου, ἔσπετρον τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐνεργείας, καὶ εἰκὼν τῆς ἀγαθότητος αὐτοῦ.

— φέρων τὰ πάντα, &c.] Φέρων is rendered by Newc. "ruling;" by Stuart, "controlling." But I prefer our common version upholding, which is supported by the Pesch. Syr., Chrys., and Theoph., and almost all the early modern Expositors. Here the writer had perhaps in mind Ps. lxxv. 3. "I bear up the pillars of it (i. e. the earth)." Thus it is for ἀναφέρων; which involves an adjunct notion of regulating as well as preserving; just as the Hebr. נָשָׂא denotes both to preserve and to govern. Indeed, such seems to have been the reading of the original, from which the Vatican MS. B. (perhaps the most ancient in the world) was copied; for the reading φανερῶν is evidently a mere error of the copyist. The reading ἀναφέρων was, I doubt not, an interlineary gloss of the MS. from which the archetype of the Cod. Vat. was copied, and perhaps nearly coeval with the Apostolic age, and representing the interpretation of the earliest period. Ῥῆμ. τῆς δυνάμ. is, by Hebraism, for ῥήματι δυνάμει, "by his powerful fiat;" the words ῆν and ῥῆμα being often used in the O. T. of the fiat of Omnipotence. See Gen. i. 3. Ps. xxxiii. 6 & 9; and Col. i. 17. Καθαρισμόν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν, is equivalent to ἰλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἀμαρτίας, ii. 17, and ποιεῖν λύτρωσιν at Luke i. 68, and means, "having made expiation for our sins." Δι' ἐαυτοῦ is equivalent to διὰ τῆς θυσίας αὐτοῦ, as in ix. 12 & 26; ii. 14; implying, "not by the blood of victims." It is a brief expression for the more fully developed διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος at ix. 12. See also ii. 14.

— ἐκάθισε.] Supply ἐαυτόν, "seated himself." To sit at the right hand of a king, implied, by Oriental customs, peculiar approbation, and even participation in the government. See Prof. Stuart's Excurs. iv. Τῆς μεγαλωσύνης scil. τοῦ Θεοῦ. Abstract for concrete, to signify "the Almighty." So Liber Enoch (cited by Stuart), ἐνώπιον τῆς δόξης τῆς μεγαλωσύνης. Ἐν ὑψηλοῖς is equivalent to ἐν ἐπουρανίοις in a kindred passage of Eph. i. 20.

4. τ. κρείττων γενόμε. τῶν ἀγγέλων.] Render, "being so much superior in rank to the angels." From the examples cited by the Commentators, it appears that κρείττων was used, in an august sense, of the Gods and Demigods of the Heathens. Διαφορώτερον is for ὑψηλ. It often occurs in the later Greek writers in the sense of κρείττων. This use of παρά after comparatives (answering to the Heb. מִן, the Latin præ, and the English than) is found both in the Sept. and the Classical writers. This force of comparison is derived from its original sense of "by the side of," juxta-position implying comparison. Ὄνομα is by many modern Commentators explained "dignity;" but by the ancients and the generality of moderns, "name," or title; i. e. of SON, which is preferable; for (as Kuin. and Stuart observe) "the argument in the sequel shows that the title SON is the ground on which the superiority over the angels is proved." Now none but Christ is ever called the Son of God.

5. In confirmation of the above, an argument is adduced from the O. T., formed on two passages of it (Ps. ii. 7. and 2 Sam. vii. 14.), which have been in every age referred, by even the best Jewish Interpreters, to the MESSIAH, at least in their mystical and sublimer import. For in such a sense as is inherent in these passages (namely, one that imported supreme dominion and authority), neither angels nor men were called sons of God. The force of the argument lies in νίος μου and γενένηκα; but, as Mr. Holden remarks, "in whatever way this may be referred to Christ's human nature, it can be no ground for such pre-eminence; and consequently this filiation must be applicable to him in his Divine nature, or the Apostle reasons fallaciously." The σήμερον γενένηκα is usually understood of the eternal generation of the Son of God; q. d. "Whereas the angels are created, he is begotten," i. e. holds the dignity he possesses by an eternal generation. But it does not appear how σήμερον can ever denote "from eternity." By Chrys. and Theophyl. it is referred definitely to time; and the best Expositors have always so understood it; though they are not agreed whether by that time is denoted the period of our Lord's incarnation, or of his exaltation (as regards his human nature) to his mediatorial throne after his resurrection. The latter view, however, is decidedly preferable; on which see Stuart, especially in his Excurs. v.

— ἐγὼ ἔσομαι—εἰς υἱόν.] This was said primarily of Solomon; though there are expressions which cannot apply to him. Εἰς πατέρα is a literal version of the Heb. בְּנִי הָאֵל, though purity of Greek idiom would require πατὴρ αὐτοῦ. On the exact import of the position and nature of the Apostle's argument, see Stuart.

6. ὅταν δὲ πάλιν—λέγει.] The difficulties in this passage rest on πάλιν and εἰσαγ.; and it is best to retain the same sense as just before; and, if necessary, we may, with Rosenm., suppose a transposition of the words, for πάλιν δὲ ὅταν, as in Rom. i. 20. v. 6. and often in the Scriptural and Classical writers. Stuart, indeed, contends that there is no transposition; and he thinks δὲ πάλιν means, "Again, also, when he," &c. But the words δὲ and πάλιν do not, properly speaking, belong to each other; the δὲ belonging to ὅταν εἰσαγ., and the πάλιν (if it have the same sense as in the former verse) to λέγων, taken from λέγει, or εἰπών, taken from εἶπε just before. Thus the literal sense is, "And when, speaking in another place, he introduces," &c. Εἰσαγ. has been variously interpreted: but there is no sufficient reason to abandon the sense commonly assigned; namely, of ushering, as it were, to the world (i. e. by the predictions and prophecies of Scripture) the advent of the First-begotten. Of which idiom examples are adduced by Kuin. from Jerem. i. 10. and Mich. ii. 12. It should seem that the term εἰσαγεῖν was used by the writer, from his having in mind not so much the Θεός, to which the preceding context points, as the holy Prophet speaking under Divine inspiration. That the Psalmist is intended at vv. 7 & 8 is, I think, clear; and this is better than supposing (with many eminent Commentators) that the Scripture is meant.

— τὸν Πρωτότοκον.] This is not well rendered by Stuart, "his first-born." Rather, "the First-begotten," or "First-born." (So the Pesch. Syr. "Primogenitum.") For that, as appears from Ps. xxxix. 20, compared with Rom. viii. 29, was a title of the Messiah; and when the force of the metaphor is duly weighed (on which see Schoettg. and Kuin.), it means the Lord of men and angels; or, as the Apostle at Col. i. 16. more fully expresses it, τὸν πρωτότοκον πάσης κτίσεως, where see Note.

With respect to the words following, the best Expositors are now agreed (see Stuart's Excurs. vi.) that they are taken from Ps. xevi. 7. according to the LXX., who have rendered ἄγγελοι by ἄγγελοι; though modern Interpreters take it to mean the false gods of the heathen. It is, however, as Kuin. remarks, used in the former sense at Gen. xxxv. 7. Ps. viii. 5. lxxxi. 1, which would be very suitable to the context and the intent of the Psalmist here; for it is admitted by Kimchi that "this Psalm, as well as all from xciii. to ci., relate to the mystery of the Messiah." Θεοῦ was supplied by the Sept. to make the sense clearer; though the use of the Article with ἄγγελος would have answered the purpose as well. The argument of inferiority deduced from any one's worshipping another, is irrefragable. Of course, it is implied how supremely great must that Person be, whom the very angels are to reverently bow before. The προσκυν. here has the same reference as the γόνυ κάμψαι in the sublime and kindred passage of Phil. ii. 10.

7. To further prove this inferiority of the angels to Christ, the Apostle now adduces passages from the Psalms, in which they are called ministers, but Christ KING supreme and perpetual. (Kuin.) Πρὸς, "as regards," "in reference to." The words following are from Ps. civ. 4. (Sept.), though for πυρὸς φλόγα we have πῦρ φλέγον; which, however, will not prove that the Apostle quoted from memory, as Kuinoel imagines: but only that he gave another version to ὡπὶ ὡν, and that so similar to the version of Symmachus, that it is not improbable some copies of the Sept. (or other Greek Versions) might then have the rendering assigned by the writer. Indeed, such is found in many of the best MSS. of the Sept. It has been doubted whether the subject here is contained in πνεύματα and πυρὸς φλόγα, or in τοὺς ἄγγ. and τοὺς λειτουργούς. Many eminent Expositors (especially the more recent ones) adopt the latter view, rendering, who maketh the winds his messengers, and flames of fire his ministers." See Newc. and Campb. This interpretation, however, Bp. Middl. thinks, would require the Article at πνεῦμα. and ἄγγ. And though it be very agreeable to the context of the Psalm, yet that of the Epistle requires the first-mentioned construction; which is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version. And Pr. Stuart thinks the Hebrew words admit of no other construction. There has been equal debate as to the sense of πνεύματα, whether "spirits," or "winds." Now Bp. Middleton's criticism would necessarily exclude the latter, and consequently oblige us to adopt the former. Considering, however, the licence throughout St. Paul's writings, with respect to the omission of the Article where it can conveniently be omitted, such a principle may be regarded as precarious; and the question must be determined solely by the comparative fitness of the two senses. That of "spirits" is contrary to the use in the Psalm, and is at variance with the other member of the Parallelism; "since (as Carpz. observes) there can be no comparison between an intelligent ens and what is not intelligent." Indeed, the best Commentators have been long agreed in rejecting that interpretation. The sense "winds" or "the winds" is doubtless the true one. And though here again the words are susceptible of more than one sense, yet (as Kuin. and Stuart have shown) the only one suitable to the context is as follows: "Who employs his angels as winds, and his ministering servants as lightnings;" q. d. "Angels not less than the winds and lightnings obey his fiat. As he employs the winds and lightnings as instruments of his will, so does he the angels as his agents."

8. πρὸς δὲ τὸν Υἱόν.] Not "unto" the Son, as our common Version (following the Vulg.) renders: but "respecting," a sense adopted by the best Commentators, and supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Δὲ here is equivalent to ἀλλὰ, contra. Ὁ Θεός. Nomin. for Vocat., as elsewhere in the N. T., and generally throughout the Sept. This clearly ascribes Divinity to the Son, agreeably to the Prophet Isaiah ix. 6. "His Name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, &c. In Θρόν. and ῥάβδ. we have emblems of dominion; and as the former clause designates the perpetuity, so does the latter the perfect equality of the Son's government. For the best Jewish Commentators admit the 45th Psalm to relate, at least in a secondary sense, to the Messiah. For Bp. Horsley (in loco) has shown that, by "throne," the kingdom of God-man must here be meant, as is evident from what follows. And he shows that the passage is here with the greatest propriety applied to Christ, and made an argument of his Divinity, not by any forced accommodation of the words, but according to the true intent of the Psalmist, and the literal and only consistent exposition of his words.

9. ἡγάπησας—ἀνομί. This is illustrative of the εὐθύτης before. The best Commentators are agreed that the Aorist here denotes, as often, what is customary; and thus it is well expressed by the Present tense. The general sense (enhanced by the use of the negative form following the affirmative) is this; "perfectly equitable and just is thy government." At ἔχρισε—ἔλαιον ἀγαλλιάσεως there is commonly supposed to be an allusion to the inauguration of Kings and Prophets by anointing; reference being supposed to the anointing of Christ by the Holy Spirit for his regal and priestly office in the Church. To this, however, both the context and the usus loquendi are adverse. See Kuin. and Stuart. Indeed, anointing with perfumed oil was often used to do honour to a guest. See Luke vii. 46. John xii. 3. But χρίειν sometimes simply denotes ornare, instruere (as in Acts x. 38.), which seems to be the sense here. Thus ἀγαλλ. will have reference to the notion of exaltation and celebrity, included in that of honouring: and so Chrys. must have taken it, since he explains ἀγαλλ. by ἀγλαΐσμου, καλλωπισμοῦ δόξης. By τοὺς μετόχους (answering to the Heb. עֲמֻנָה) are meant associates in dignity, συνθρόνους, i. e. fellow Kings, as Dr. French and Mr. Skinner well render, aptly comparing Revel. xix. 16. The Accusative is here (by an idiom found also occasionally in the Classical writers) put for the Dative, which is the usual syntax. It is not certain whether the first ὁ Θεός is a Nominative, or a Vocative. Many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, including Ernesti, Rosenm., Kuin., and Stuart, suppose the latter; while the ancient Translators, and almost all modern ones, adopt the latter; which yields a better sense, and with a more natural construction.

10—12. The καὶ ("and further") connects this portion with the testimonies at v. 8. The passage is taken from Ps. cii. 25—27, which, Commentators are generally agreed, does not relate primarily to the Messiah, but to Jehovah, absolutely considered, being a description of the eternity and immutability of the one true God. Yet, as Stuart observes, "there is nothing in the Psalm which forbids its application to the Messiah; but many passages which are most applicable to him: and such a reference is supported by the fact that several Psalms do contain such predictions." That the writer of the Epistle so considered the Psalm, is plain. But Stuart shows that "if it were supposed to be applicable merely to Jehovah, there would be no difficulty with the quotation here, since the application of the same words to the Son of God which were originally spoken of Jehovah, would be the same as saying, What was affirmed by the Psalm of Jehovah may be as truly affirmed of the Son. "Thus (continues he) the weight of the argument as to the Divine nature of Christ would be the same, and either would show the opinion of the writer to be, that the Son is eternal and the Creator of the universe, and truly Divine, since, as he says at iii. 4. ὁ δὲ τὰ πάντα κατασκεύασας, Θεός."

In the next words we have the climax of the whole, completing the proof of the Divinity of the Son. Κατ' ἀρχάς is best rendered "of old," since the Sept. only rendered עוֹלָם κατ' ἀρχάς, with reference to the ἐν ἀρχῇ of Gen. i. 1. ἔθεμελ. refers to the first act of creation, with allusion to the idea entertained of the earth by the Hebrews, namely, as a plain surface erected on foundations. The use of τῶν χειρῶν imports not instrumentality (as Stuart supposes), but power, as Menoch., Est., and Kuin. understand. By the αὐτοὶ may, with Kuin. and Stuart, be supposed to be meant the heavens and the earth; both having been mentioned. Thus ἡ γῆ καὶ οἱ οὐρανοὶ are a periphrasis of the world. See Gen. i. l. xiv. 19. And the gender is accommodated to οὐρ. as the last mentioned and the worthier gender. For διαμένεις, a few MSS. have διαμενεῖς, which is adopted by some Critics, as Knapp and Stuart. But the other is plainly the true reading, and is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who well renders, "Thou art permanent." And certainly there is nothing to hinder the Heb. עוֹלָם from being expressed in the present tense, as it is done by Dr. French. Thus, too, there is more force and sublimity in the sentiment; the Present being more applicable to a Being whose duration is unconnected with time, who was, is, and is to be; who "is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." It is, moreover, required by what follows, σὺ ὁ αὐτὸς εἶ, corresponding to σὺ διαμένεις. The words καὶ πάντες—ἀλλὰ γὰρ, are exegetical of ἀπολούνται, as καὶ τὰ ἔτη—ἐκλείψ. are of διαμένεις. So Theoph. explains ἀπολ. by μετασχηματισθῆσονται. With πάντες ὡς ἱμάτιον παλαιωθήσονται compare Is. li. 6. Περιβ. denotes a wrapper, or outer garment, like the hyke or bournouse of the Arabs, for such is the idea in the Heb. שָׂרָא whence perhaps our old English rack, for the sky. In that and ἐλίξεις there is an allusion to the heavens as an expanse, the rolling up implying removal, for the purpose of substituting others; the 'new heaven and new earth' of Revel. xxi. 1. Compare xx. 11. Of σὺ δὲ οὗτός εἰ the sense is imperfectly expressed by the Commentators, who have failed to perceive that this must here be exegetical of the more fully expressed phrase at xiii. 8. So Philo (cited by Carpz.) says of the Sun, οὗτος ἐστὶν αἰὲ. Τὰ ἔτη σου οὐκ ἐκλ. is expressive of immortality; q. d. "thy years [thy existence] will never fail, or come to an end."

13. πρὸς τίνα δὲ, &c.] So τίνι at v. 5. The sense is: "Where does God even address the angels in terms implying that they are σύνθρονοι with him;" for such is implied by the phrase κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν: on which see Notes on Matt. xxii. 44. and Acts ii. 34. The words ἕως ἂν θῶ—ποδῶν σου contain an image of complete subjection, and are highly intensive of the sense of the foregoing phrase. See Stuart. These words are applied by our Redeemer himself to the Messiah.

14. οὐχὶ πάντες εἰσὶ λειτ. πν. &c.] This forms the conclusion of the comparison made between the Son of God and the angels, to show the great superiority of the former. The interrogation here has great force, as intimating that the thing is an universally admitted truth. The full and literal sense is: "Are not all of them [of whatever rank] [no more than] ministering Spirits, sent forth for service (or assistance), on the part of (i. e. in behalf of) those who are to inherit (i. e. obtain) salvation?" They are said to be λειτουργ. πνεύματα, (an expression formed on Ps. ciii. 21. Sept. εὐλογεῖτε τὸν Κύριον, λειτουργοὶ αὐτοῦ, ποιῶντες τὰ θελήματα αὐτοῦ) as being merely διάκονοι Θεοῦ, not σύνθρονοι, like Christ. The next words are exegetical of the λειτ., and show the nature of that service. Ἀποστελλ. is inserted in order to show that they have no self-derived dignity, but are only ἀπόστολοι, with delegated authority; which is the constant doctrine of the O. T., and the Jewish writings in general. So the angels are called, in the Rabbinical writers, "angels of ministry." מלאכי דשירות (see De Dieu and J. Capell.), with allusion to the etymon of ἰσχυρ., sent [on service] and ἄγγελος. The word ἄγγελος appears to be derived from ἄγγω, cognate with ἄγω, to bring or bear, (as κλάγγω from κλάγω, and πάγγω from πάγω), and is a derivative from ἄγγος, which means an utensil adapted to carry any thing. So στρόβελος from στρόβος, σφάκελος from σφάκος, εἴκελος from εἰκός, σθένελος from σθένος, τράπελος from the old τράπος cognate with τρόπος, σκόπελος from σκοπός, &c. Ἀγγε-λος, then, simply means a bearer, and, by use, a bearer [of a message or order]. Here Carpz. compares from Philo: ἀγγέλοις, ὑπηρεταῖς καὶ διακόνοις ὁ δημιουργὸς εἰώθετο χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν θνητῶν ἐπίστασιν. The use of πνεύμ. here seems formed on Num. xxvii. 16. Θεὸς τῶν πνευμάτων καὶ πάσης σαρκός. On the present subject see two able Sermons of Bp. Conybeare's, on the nature and employment of good angels, Vol. ii. p. 267—310.

—διὰ τοὺς μέλλοντας κληρ. σωτ.] A periphrasis for faithful and true Christians.

II. This and the preceding Chapter Ernesti justly calls the Scandalmum Socinianorum. And the learned Commentator lays down a summary of the doctrines which may thence be proved, namely, the divinity and the humanity of Christ; the conjunction of both natures in one person, communication of the Divine idiomata; the twofold state of Christ, and his triple office.

1. διὰ τοῦτο] "wherefore," i. e. such being the infinite superiority of Christ, the Head of the new Dispensation, over the angels, the mediators of the old, &c. In ἡμᾶς the Apostle, as often, speaks per κοινωνίαν. Περισσότερας is by some construed with προσέχειν, by others with δεῖ. It seems meant to refer to both. At ἀκουσθ. supply ῥήμασι scil. λόγοις, doctrines of the Gospel. With respect to παραρρόνμεν, the Commentators are not agreed whether it denotes to glide, to slide from them, turn aside from them, fall from them, so as to perish; or, to let them glide or slip from the mind. And Stuart takes the sense to be, "lest we should pass by, neglect the things heard;" supporting his version from Prov. iii. 21. (the only example of the word in the Sept.) νῆ, μὴ παραρρόνῃς ("neglect not"), τήρησον δὲ ἐμὴν βουλὴν. and Clem. Alex. ἵνα μὴ παραρρόνῃσι τῆς ἀληθείας, "neglect or transgress the truth." Yet, ably as this interpretation is supported, the proofs of the sense in question seem insufficient. The passage of Proverbs is not to the point, since, from the wide discrepancy from the Hebrew, and the irregularity of the sense, there is, as the best Critics are agreed, reason to suspect corruption, and that παραρρόνῃ is the true reading; and the Hebrew verb there, נָל, signifies, to decline, recede from. As to the passage of Clemens, it was doubtless formed on the one before us; yet there παραρρόν. admits equally well of the other sense. The first mentioned interpretation, therefore, seems to deserve the preference, especially as it is supported by almost all the ancient, and most modern Expositors; and adopted, after a learned discussion of the sense, by Kuin., who thinks the image is derived from a torrent, that has been raised by heavy rains; which rapidly falls, when the rain has given over. So Job vi. 15.

2. εἰ γὰρ ὁ δι' ἀγγέλων λαλ. λόγ.] The writer now proceeds to show by an argument ex minori ad majus, why the Gospel demands especial obedience. Notwithstanding what some eminent Expositors maintain, ὁ δι' ἀγγ. λόγος must denote the promulgation of the Mosaic Law, as appears from Gal. iii. 19. ὁ νόμος διαταγείς δι' ἀγγέλων, and Acts vii. 53. ἐλάβετε τὸν νόμον εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγ. where see Notes. And in a similar argumentation at x. 28, we have τὸν νόμον Μωυσέως. Any seeming discrepancy between what is said in those passages and the present, as compared with Exod. xx. 1. and elsewhere, where God himself is said to proclaim the law, is done away on the principle of "Qui facit per alium, facit per se:" and God might be said to promulgate, and the angels to proclaim the law. If more be necessary, see the elaborate Excursus of Stuart, who concludes with the following very sensible remark, "that the excess of speculation into which the later Jews run on the subject of angelic ministration at the giving of the Law does not disprove the fact itself, that the angels were, in some way, employed by Jehovah at the promulgation of the Law, which, though not asserted, is implied in several parts of the O. T." "This is all the text can be well interpreted as meaning, and all that is requisite for the argument of the Apostle." Βέβαιος, i. e. firm by being carried into full execution. So Prof. Dobree well paraphrases v. 2—4.: "If the denunciations of Moses were actually fulfilled, much more will Christ's, which are now confirmed to us (i. e. further explained and partly accomplished) by the Apostles, through the witness of the Spirit." See Rom. iv. 16. 2 Pet. i. 19. Παράβασις and παρακοή are nearly synonymous; but the latter implies contumacy as well as disobedience. Μισθ. should be rendered "retribution," since that rather implies punishment, though at x. 35. and xi. 26. it signifies reward. To the illustration of the Commentators I add Eurip. Or. 833., πατρώων παζέων ἀμοιβάν· where the Scholiast explains ἐκδίκησιν. Æschyl. Theb. 1023., τοῦπιτίμιον λαβεῖν, mercedem, τιμωρίαν. Hor. Carm. 3, 24. 24. et peccare nefas, aut pretium emori. It occurs in no other writer, and is justly supposed by Fischer to have been taken from the common dialect, for the Classical μισθοδοσία.

3. τηλικαύτης σωτηρίας.] Σωτ. is taken by the best Commentators for λόγον σωτ., which occurs in Acts xiii. 26., i. e. the Gospel, or Christian religion. Σωτ., however, may, by metonymy, denote the means, or, the doctrine of salvation, there being (as appears from the τηλικ.) a tacit comparison between the temporal salvation of the Law, and the eternal salvation of the Gospel. Ἀμελ. is used instead of a stronger term, and involves the sense of total disregard and contempt by apostasy. See x. 26. Ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα corresponds to the Latin initium capere. Eis ἡμᾶς ἐβεβαιώθη is rightly regarded by Ernesti and Kuin. as a formula prægians, and to be explained ἥλθεν eis ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐβεβαιώθη, "was delivered unto with confirmation."

4. συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος—Σέλησιν.] This is exegetical of ἐβεβ., and the sense is: "God [himself] bearing his testimony [to the truth of what was preached] by signs and wonders, and various miraculous powers and distributions of the Holy Spirit, [imparted] according to his own will and pleasure." Οἱ σμ., τέρ., and ποικ. div. see Note on Acts ii. 22. div. must mean miraculous powers; otherwise ποικ. would not have been used. The words following are exegetical, and also show the manner of the thing; for μερ. does not denote, as Stuart thinks, "the additional gifts of the Spirit other than miraculous powers," but "particular distributions;" and the best comment on the expression are the words of the Apostle, on the same subject, at 1 Cor. xii. 4. διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων εἰσι, τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα, &c. and xii. 11.

5. οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλοις—λαλοῦμεν.] Having warned them against the consequences of apostasy from the Gospel, the Apostle resumes the subject of Christ's superiority to the angels, proceeding to show that the new dispensation was not indeed ordered, like the old, by angels; but that the Son of Man, the Messiah, was, in his human nature, placed at the head of it. Now as the Jews granted that the dispensation of the Messiah would be of a higher order than that of Moses, proof that Jesus was the sole mediator or head of the New dispensation, and that angels were not employed as mediators in it, would satisfy them that Jesus was superior to the angels; since the place which he holds in the new economy, is higher than that which they had under the old, because the new economy itself is of a higher nature than the old. At the same time, an objection which a Jew, weak in Christian faith, and strong in his attachment to the Mosaic institutions, would very naturally feel, is met, and tacitly answered by the Apostle, in what follows. The unbelieving Jews, doubtless, urged upon those who professed an attachment to Christianity, the seeming absurdity of renouncing their subjection to a dispensation of which angels were the mediators, and of acknowledging a subjection to one of which the professed head and mediator appeared in our nature. The Apostle concedes the fact, that Jesus had a nature truly and properly human, v. 6—18. But instead of granting that this proves the new dispensation to be inferior to that of Moses, he proceeds to adduce evidence from the O. T. to show that man, or the human nature in the person of the Messiah, was to be made Lord of the universe. Consequently, in this nature, Jesus the Messiah is superior to the angels. Of course, the possession by Jesus of a nature truly and properly human, does not at all prove either his inferiority, or the inferiority of the dispensation of which he is the Head (v. 6—9.). Nay, more; it was becoming that God should exalt Jesus, in consequence of his obedience unto death; a death necessary for the salvation of Jew and Gentile, v. 9, 10. To suffer this death, he must needs take on him a nature like ours; and, as his object was the salvation of men (and not of angelic beings), so he participated in the nature of men, in order that by experience he might know their sufferings, temptations, and trials, and thus be prepared to succour them, vv. 11—18. (Stuart.)

Τὴν οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν must, from the context, denote the new dispensation (as opposed to the old); i. e. the Gospel dispensation, commencing at Christ's first advent, and when completed at his final advent, to be merged into the economy to subsist under the reign of Christ. See Witsius cited by Kuin. The term μέλλ. is used because as long as the Temple and the Jewish state were in being, the old dispensation might yet be said to continue. Hence the propriety of the phrase advent of Christ as applied to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish state. Schoettg. has shown that the Jews used מָלַךְ to denote reign or dispensation of Messiah.

6. διεμαρτ. δέ π. τίς.] There is here a lacuna, which may be thus supplied: "but [God put it in subjection to Christ] for," &c., which suppressed clause is implied in the proof itself. (Kuin.) Thus the sense is well expressed in paraphrase by Abp. Newc. as follows: "But God hath committed the dispensation under which we live to his Son, who became man: to which assumption of human nature, and its consequences, I apply the words of the Psalmist." Τίς must, from the subject and the context, denote an inspired writer. This mode of citation by no means implies an ignorance of the writer in question, nor even of the part of his work intended; but only supposes so familiar a knowledge of both in the reader as only to need the words being cited: and as it was only used of writers of the greatest eminence, it implies any thing but irreverence. Indeed, Schoettg. and Carpz. have shown that this is a mode of citation common in the Rabbinical writers, and not unexampled in the Classical writers. It often occurs in Eustathius, and sometimes in the Scholiasts on Aristophanes, Euripides, and Thucydides. It has been not a little debated whether by ἄνθρωπος and υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου is here meant Man, (i. e. human nature,) or the Son of Man, i. e. Christ. That the passage is applicable to the Messiah, we might infer even from our Lord's applying another part of the Psalm to himself. (Matt. xxi. 16.) This, however, will not prove, as some imagine, that the whole Psalm is meant of the Messiah alone. That notion has been refuted at large by Bp. Middl., who shows that "this Psalm is an instance of the existence in the O. T. of various passages having both a primary and a secondary sense; i. e. capable of a two-fold application, being directly applicable to circumstances then past, or present, or soon to be accomplished; and indirectly to others, which Divine Providence was about to develop under a future Dispensation." "Indeed (continues he) on no other hypothesis can we avoid one of two great difficulties; for else we must assert, that the multitude of applications made by Christ and his Apostles are fanciful and unauthorized, and wholly inadequate to prove the points, for which they are cited; or, on the other hand, we must believe that the obvious and natural sense of such passages was never intended, and that it is a mere illusion. Of the 8th Psalm the primary import is so certain, that it could not be mistaken. יְהוָה לֵב may surely be taken of Palestine." The learned Prelate shows that the objections advanced against this view only tend to establish a secondary, not to disprove a primary sense. "It may readily (he continues) be admitted that the words, though primarily spoken of Adam and his descendants, cannot in their full and complete sense have their sole reference to them, because they expressly represent a person, who after a while was advanced to the highest dignities, a perfect Lord and governor over all created beings, a complete conqueror over all the enemies of God's kingdom." See a confirmation of this view in Prof. Stuart's Exkurs. iv.

But to consider the phraseology in detail, μιμνήσκη ("shouldst bear in mind") is explained by the antithetical term ἐπισκέπη, which denotes regard, viz. with favour and protection. It is truly observed by Bp. Middl., that "the real difficulty of the Psalm, as applied in the Epistle, lies in שָׁמַע, which signifies both in a small degree, and also for a short time, the former sense adapted to man, the latter to our Saviour. In this case (he continues) three suppositions appear possible; either that the Psalmist has used the word to signify in a small degree, which is the more common meaning, and that the Apostle, availing himself of its ambiguity, has employed βραχύ τι in the other sense; or else that the Psalmist had by inspiration a knowledge of man's future resurrection and exaltation to the condition of angels, in which case he might properly say for a little time; or lastly, that the Apostle was content to use the phrase, as the Psalmist had used it, to signify in a small degree, since this was sufficiently expressive of the condition of human nature, though the other sense would have been more immediately applicable to the condescension of Christ: and of these the last appears to be the least embarrassed with difficulties. If the Psalmist has declared man to be little inferior to the angels, the application of this phrase to Christ will signify that he took the human nature; the only difference will be, that what in the one case is made matter of pride and exaltation, is a subject of humiliation in the other." This interpretation of βραχύ τι is confirmed by the authority of Dindorf and Stuart; who show that the sense is required in the Psalm, and is more suitable in the Epistle. "What (observes Stuart) is the design of the writer? To prove that Christ, in his human nature, is exalted above the angels. How does he undertake to prove this? First, by showing that this nature itself is made but little inferior to that of the angels; and next, that it has been exalted to the empire of the world." The Apostle (as Kuin. and Stuart show) was fully justified in using ἀγγέλους, it being found in the Sept., and indeed maintained by many of the best Interpreters, Hebrew and Christian, to convey the true sense of כְּמַלְאָכִים, on which see Stuart. Δόξῃ and τιμῇ are terms synonymous, but combined to raise the sense. Στεφ. denotes ornare. On the nature and origin of the metaphor, see my Note on Thucyd. iv. 121. and Wessel. on Diod. Sic. i. 684. The present passage seems to have been had in mind by Philostr. V. Ap. i. 11. οἱ Θεοὶ—στεφανώσαντες, οὐ χρυσοῖς στεφάνοις, ἀλλ' ἀγαθοῖς πᾶσιν, and vi. 21. οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐπὶ δικαιοσύνῃ τινα στεφανώθητα ὀίδα. Also see Ceteb. Tab. p. 41. and Artemida. Oneir. ii. 30.

The next words, καὶ κατέστησας—σου, not found in very many MSS. (including those recently collated by Kinck) as also some Edd. and MSS. of the Pesch. Syr., the Slav., and several Fathers, and all the Greek Commentators, were regarded as spurious by Mill, Beng., and Wets., and cancelled by Griesb., Matth., and Schott; and, I think, justly; for it is easy to account for their insertion (namely, from the Sept.) but not for their omission.

8. πάντα ὑπέταξας ὑπ. τ. ποδ. α.] i. e. thou hast given him complete and universal dominion. A metaphor formed from Oriental customs, and copiously illustrated by Dind. and Stuart Excurs. ix. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 27. Τὰ πάντα, as Bp.

Middl. observes, "is a term whose extent seems ascertained by the subjoined enumeration of the several classes of brute creatures, v. 7, 8. of Ps. viii. But as πάντα may include all things, without exception, and angels as well as men, what proves the secondary sense by no means disproves the primary."

— ἐν γὰρ τῷ, &c.] The writer now proceeds to comment on and argue from the above citation. The γὰρ may be rendered scilicet. The expressions ἐν τῷ ὑποτάξαι—ἀνυπ. are a strong designation of the universality of the subjection. ὑποτ. and ἀφήκεν may, with many recent Commentators, be referred to the writer, by the figure mentioned in the Note on εἰσαγάγει supra i. 6. But it is more agreeable to the context and scope of the passage to suppose it (with the ancient and most modern Expositors, including Kuinoel, Boehme, and Stuart), to relate to God.

— νῦν δὲ—ὑποτεταγμένα] q. d. "this was fulfilled in no man, therefore it must be referred to Christ" (Kuin.); q. d. "This prophecy of the Psalmist is not, as yet, wholly fulfilled; but so much of it has been accomplished, that we may regard it as a pledge that a fulfilment of the rest will certainly follow."

9. τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι—ἐστεφ.] If we were to judge from the perplexity which Commentators have found in settling the sense of this passage, and from the variety of interpretations propounded (which see in Dind., Kuin., & Stuart),—we should conclude it to be one of no ordinary obscurity and difficulty. And yet the general sense is pretty plain, and the construction, I think, very clearly defined; namely, as it is laid down by Bp. Middl., who remarks, that the subject is τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι—Ἰησοῦν, and the predicate all which follows. I entirely agree with the learned Prelate, that the subjoined clause ὅπως θανάτου is to be regarded as "the reason assigned why Christ suffered death, as mentioned in διὰ τὸ πάθημα τοῦ θανάτου." The difficulty here complained of is partly caused by an inversion of construction (resorted to, it should seem, in order to make the grand subject of the assertion, JESUS, the more prominent), and partly by the last clause being worded with obscure brevity. Accordingly the sense (when the construction is cleared, and the wording duly expounded) will be as follows: "But Him who was made a little lower than the angels (namely, by assuming the human nature), even Jesus, we behold, on account of his having suffered death, crowned with glory and honour; [which suffering he bore], in order that, by the grace of God, he might taste of death for every man;" i. e. that, by the goodness and mercy of God, this his suffering of death might be effi-caxious for the salvation of all men. I am not aware that this mode of taking the passage (which is nearly that adopted by Morus and Kuin.) is liable to any well-founded objection; for the sentiment contained in the last clause is not, as some affirm, the same as before, but is a further illustration of what was before said; namely, that Jesus suffered the death in question, that he might give his life a ransom for all, as it is said in 1 Tim. ii. 6. Matth. xx. 28. Mark x. 45. and elsewhere. This may, then, be regarded as an addition, meant to inculcate the great and cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, THE ATONEMENT.

Prof. Stuart, indeed, in his second Edition, after rejecting, with reason, several interpretations supported by great names, as being at variance with the scope of the writer, declines to admit this, on the ground that "it does not seem to lie in the text;" nor can he understand how Jesus was exalted, in order that he might taste death for all." That, he thinks, has not been explained by me and those Expositors who adopt the same view of the sense. But this, I must beg to say, proceeds on a misconception of my interpretation of the last clause, which, indeed, involves nearly the whole difficulty. The learned Commentator will perceive, on reconsidering my Note, that I do not refer to it what immediately precedes, but to the words a little further back. As to the interpretation adopted by Prof. Stuart in his first Edition, and retained and defended by him in his second (notwithstanding the ability displayed in the defence of it) I cannot but consider it inadmissible; since it runs counter to the usus loquendi, by ascribing to ὅπως the sense when, which has been disproved by Tittman de Syn. P. ii. p. 64. by a searching and masterly examination of all the passages which have been adduced in favour of that signification; and, amongst the rest, Acts iii. 19, on which Prof. Stuart principally rests his assertion. It is there shown that the usual sense of ὅπως is very suitable to the context here, which is ably discussed, and the sense of the passage well expressed by him as follows: "Sed Jesum videmus ob ipsam mortem summo honore potitum, ita ut, beneficio Dei, pro omni (homine) mortem perpassus fuerit [atque imperium nactus]." 10.

10. The Apostle proceeds to show how suitable this crowning of Jesus with glory and honour was to the wisdom, justice, and other attributes of God. (Rosenm. and Kuin.) See also Dodd. It is well remarked by Kuin.: "Πρέπει in N. T. poni solet de eo quod necesse est, quod honestas, vel officii ratio postulat, atque adeo idem valet quod ἀναγκαῖον viii. 3. ὁφείλει infra v. 17, δεῖ Matt. iii. 15." By αὐτῷ is meant God, not, as some say, Christ. The words δι' ὃν—τὰ (where supply ἐγένετο) are a formula designating the supreme Lord, Creator, and Preserver of all things, as Rom. xi. 36. ἐξ αὐτοῦ, καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ, καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα. On the construction, as respects ἀγαγόντα, Expositors are not agreed.

Many construe it with the words following, thus referring it to Christ. But thus the sentiment seems overloaded. It is better, with Ern., Dind., and Kuin., to suppose ἀγαγόντα as put for ἀγαγόντι, by an anacoluthon frequent in St. Paul (as 2 Cor. xii. 17. Col. iii. 16.), and often in the Classical writers, especially Thucyd. The sense is, "after he had decreed to bring men to glory," i. e. to bring them [back] to life and salvation [from death and misery]. A sense of δόξα occurring in Rom. v. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 8. By πολλοὺς υἱοὺς are denoted "all true Christians." Ἀρχηγόν is, as Theophyl. says, for αἰτίον. So v. 9. αἰτίος σωτηρίας αὐτῶν αἰωνίου. Acts iii. 15. ἀρχηγός τῆς ζωῆς. And Philo says παλιγγενεσίας ἀρχηγόν. The παθημάτων relates not only to the death of Christ, but to those many acute sufferings which preceded it. On the exact force and nature of the metaphor in τελειῶσαι some difference of opinion exists. It is justly observed by Knapp and Kuin., that τελειοῦν (a word frequent in this Epistle) denotes properly "to bring to an end;" as Acts xx. 24. τελ. τὸν δρόμον, and 2 Tim. iv. 7, where there is a metaphor derived from the stadium; 2dly, it signifies to perfect, or render perfect. But there is also inherent in the term a notion of reward and felicity, derived, probably, from the agonistical metaphor. And, indeed, the word is used of reaching the goal and receiving the prize. Hence he who proclaims the victor and bestows the prize is said τελειοῦν τινα, and those who receive it are said τελειοῦσθαι; which is very applicable to Christ. The above, which seems to be the most correct view of the expression, is supported by the authority of Theophyl. and has been adopted by Schleus., Wahl, and Stuart.

11. Ὁ τε γὰρ ἀγιάζων—πάντες.] To prevent any perversion of the sense, it is better here to render "the expiator and the expiated," rather than "the sanctifier and the sanctified." And it has been abundantly proved by Ern., Kuin., and Stuart, that, amongst its other senses, ἀγιάζειν denotes to purify from sin, free any one from its punishment, to expiate. Hence at Heb. ix. 13. sq. it is interchanged with καθαρίζειν. And that it must have that sense here, is plain from the context. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. "[I say many sons]; for the expiator and the expiated are all sons of one Father, God." At ἐνός some supply γένους, or σπέρματος, or αἵματος; others, more properly, πατρός: which, however, must not, with some, be understood of Adam, or Abraham, but (as the context requires) of God. Both are sons of God, but in different ways; one, as of the same substance with the Father, the others as creatures. See Theophyl. Οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται (as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed) the vast superiority of Christ to the human nature. "For if Christ (as Abresch and Stuart remark) were merely a man, where would be his condescension in calling men his brethren;

- 12 ἀδελφούς αὐτοὺς καλεῖν, ^k λέγων· Ἀπαγγελῶ τὸ ὄνομά σου τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς μου, ἐν μέσῳ ἐκκλησίας ὑμνήσω σε. καὶ πάλιν· Ἐγὼ ἔσομαι πεποιθὼς ἐπ' αὐτῷ. ^{12 Sam. 22. 3. Ps. 18. 3. Isa. 8. 18. whereas, if he possessed a higher nature, and ἐκέ-νωσε ἑαυτὸν, μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, Phil. ii. 7, 8., then, indeed, it was great condescension to call men his brethren."

12. For the truth of the above, the Apostle appeals to the O. T. λέγων, "since he (i. e.
Christ) says," Ἀπαγγελῶ, &c., for which the Sept. has the synonyme διηγέσομαι. (Stuart.)
The best Commentators, both Jewish and Christian, are in general agreed that the Psalm (xxii.)
relates to the Messiah. See Dind. Indeed, as Stuart remarks, "the history of His death seems a kind of practical commentary upon it: and there is nothing which forbids the application of it to the Messiah, but quite enough to show that it is inapplicable to David." "The object, he adds, of the quotation is merely to point out that Christ is exhibited in the O. T. as recognizing men as his brethren: accordingly he is here supposed to use the words." Ἐκκλησι. means primarily the assembly of the nation congregated at Jerusalem; but secondarily the assembly of the faithful.

13. The citations in this verse are by some supposed to be from Ps. xviii. 3. or from 2 Sam.
xxii. 3. The Psalm, however, contains no allusion to the MESSIAH. Indeed, the best Commentators are now agreed that both citations are from Is. viii. 17, 18. "There could (Dind. observes) have been no doubt as to the thing, but for the second καὶ πάλιν, which some thought could not be meant of the same passage. At x.
30., however, there is an exactly similar case."
"The argument (says Stuart) is this: Men exercise trust or confidence in God. This is predicated of them as dependent, and possessing a feeble nature. The same thing is predicated of the Messiah; and consequently he possesses a nature like theirs, and therefore they are his brethren." See more in Stuart's 10th Excursus.
"These words (Newc. remarks) Christ may be supposed to use. Accordingly, while on earth, he called his disciples his children, John xiii. 33.
xxi. 5., and those whom God had given him,
John xvii. 9. 24."

14, 15. The writer elegantly takes up the word children from the preceding verse; and goes on to show the fitness of Christ's sufferings.
(Newc.) By κεκοινώνηκε σαρκὸς καὶ αἵματος, the best Expositors are agreed, is meant, "partook of a human nature," as 1 Cor. v. 50. and often. By the παιδία are denoted the spiritual children of Christ. Παραπλησίως signifies, not "in a similar manner," but, by an idiom common in the best writers (especially Thucyd.), "in the same manner," which, of course, implies really and truly, not in appearance only, as the Docetæ explained the word.

— ἵνα διὰ τοῦ—τὸν Διάβ.] The sense is,
"that he might by his [own] death put down, and deprive of his power, him who had the power over death, namely, the Devil." Καταργ., is here used as at the kindred passage of 2 Tim. i. 10.
Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καταργήσαντος τὸν θάνατον.
Here, however, the Apostle, instead of θάνατον, adopts τὸν τὸ κράτος, &c., suitably, Kuinöl thinks, to the preceding imagery. In what sense the Devil is here said τὸ κράτος ἔχειν τοῦ θανάτου, has been not a little debated. Many eminent Expositors illustrate this from the dæmonology of the Jews, by which a certain evil angel was supposed to preside over death, whom, from a misinterpretation of Prov. xvi. 14., they called the Angel of death, and Sammaël. Possibly the Apostle might allude to this notion; but there seems to be rather (according to the ancient and most modern Commentators) a reference to the history of the Fall, in Gen. iii. 15.; wherefore our Lord, John viii. 44., calls the Devil a murderer from the beginning. Thus, as being the author of sin, and so of death also (the latter being introduced by the former), he may be said figuratively to have the power of death; and that not only temporal, but eternal. But by his own death, our Lord, offering himself up for the expiation of our sins, destroyed the cause of eternal death, even sin.

The next words καὶ ἀπαλλάξῃ, &c., are explanatory of the foregoing, and may be paraphrased with Abp. Newc.: "and, by bringing life and immortality to light, might deliver those whose continual fear of death placed them as it were in a state of slavery to an inexorable tyrant." Mackn. and Stuart understand θανάτου to mean punishment in another world. And certainly to understand it, with the generality of Expositors, of the mere dissolution of the body, cannot be defended. I would, with Beza and Calvin, interpret it of death both temporal and spiritual, both the first and the second death, as it is called in Rev. ii. 11., not only the separation of the body from the soul in this life, but the eternal separation of body and soul united, from the presence and favour of God, in another world; most significantly expressed in 2 Thess.
i. 9. by ὁλεσθός αἰώνιος ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης. This must be meant especially of the heathens, who were held in such bondage to the fear of death that, as Dr.
A. Clarke observes, "they (often) preferred life in any state to death, because they had no hope beyond the grave." But with them, and even yet more with those who have any thought or conscience, it is not simply the ceasing to be, the "shuffling off this mortal coil" that alarms men; for, as Bacon observes, there is no passion so weak, that does not overcome the fear of death—love, revenge, grief, fear, and even satiety. But it is, as Shakspeare says, the dread of something after death. Thus conscience does indeed “make cowards of us all:” and, as Lord Bacon observes, “men fear death, as children fear the dark.” So Arrian Epict. L. 3. 26. fin. κεφάλαιον τοῦτο πάντων τῶν κακῶν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, καὶ ἀγενείας καὶ δειλίας, ὁ θάνατός ἐστι, μᾶλλον δέ, ὁ τοῦ θανάτου φόβος. However, the great “sting of death” is sin; from which we can be delivered only by faith in Jesus Christ. See 1 Cor. xv. 57. note. Ἀπαλλ. is probably a forensic term, also denoting to liberate from slavery. By τούτους must be understood the τὰ παιδία of v. 14. Ἐνοχος is here put for ἐνεχόμενος, subject, literally, held bound. The physical sense is very rare; but it occurs in an epigram in Steph. Thes. ἐπ’ ἀγκύρας ἑνοχον βάρος. The phrase ἐνοχος εἶναι δουλείας is like the ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθαι at Gal. v. 1. Διὰ παντός τοῦ ζῆν is for διὰ πάσης τῆς ζωῆς. This use of the Infinitive in the place of a noun is frequent in the Classical as well as Hellenistic writers: but the former very rarely so far consider it as a noun, as to apply an adjective with it. For which reason Stuart (following Dindorf) would suppose an ellipsis of χρόνου. But surely to unnecessarily call in ellipsis, is uncritical. And as Dindorf admits that the idiom in question does occur in the early Fathers (citing examples from Ignatius), there can be no difficulty in supposing it here; so as to form one among the examples of later Grecism, or perhaps provincialism, to be found even in this Epistle.

16. οὐ γὰρ—ἐπιλαβ.] On the sense of these words some difference of opinion exists. The difficulty hinges on ἐπιλαβ., which is by the Greek Commentators, and the earlier modern Expositors interpreted “assumes our nature.” But this sense is neither inherent in the word itself, nor is agreeable to the context. The best Interpreters have been long agreed in explaining, “helps,” “assists,” viz. by redeeming. Thus at v. 18. βοηθῆσαι is substituted for ἐπιλαβ. here. The above sense is agreeable at once to the usual force of the word, and to the context, and arises thus. Ἐπιλ. signifies 1. to take by the hand; 2. to raise up, help, assist. The expression σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ may be understood either of the natural (meaning the Jews) or the spiritual seed of Abraham, the Gentiles; it being true of either; though, as the writer is addressing Jews, the former is more to the purpose; yet the latter may be included.

17, 18. These verses contain an inference from the foregoing. Ὁθεν, whence, i. e. because he was to be their helper and redeemer. Κατὰ πάντα ὁμ. signifies, “to be, in every respect, in the same condition,” i. e. as far as extended to the human nature, its innocent infirmities and amiable sympathies. See Stuart. Ἐλεήμων, as sympathizing with the human frailties and infirmities which he had experienced. Πιστός, i. e. faithful in the duty laid upon him as High Priest. The words following εἰς τὸ ἰλάσκ. suggest the purpose of that priesthood, i. e. to expiate the sins of the people. Ἰλάσκεσθαι answers in the Sept. to the Heb. כָּסַף, to cover, remove from sight, and, as used of sins, to forgive; and takes either a Dative or Genit. with περί. In Ecclesiasticus xxviii. 5., however, we have (similar to the present construction) τίς ἐξιλάσεται (will expiate) τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτοῦ; And so in Dan. ix. 24. 1 Sam. iii. 14. The full construction seems to be ἰλάσκεσθαι τινα κατὰ τι. This, however, was sometimes, as we see, shortened to ἰλ. τι in which case ἰλ. signifies to make an appeasement.

18. πέπονθεν α. πειρ.] “hath suffered by being tried with various afflictions.” *Δύναται τοῖς *πειρ. βοηθ. This is founded on the common sentiment of every age, that experience of calamity peculiarly fits men to sympathize in it, and disposes them to succour the afflicted. Δύναται implies with the power also the disposition to succour. On these words the best comment is supplied by the similar sentiment at iv. 15., &c. So Philemon ap. Max. Tyr. lxi. p. 93. 6. Ἐκ τοῦ παθεῖν γίνωσκε καὶ τὸ συμπαθεῖν καὶ σοὶ γὰρ ἄλλος συμπαθήσεται παθών. “Hence (observes Dr. Blair, in a Sermon on Heb. iv. 15.) the distressed fly for consolation to those who have known the touch of woe: the prosperous, as ignorant of their feelings, and therefore likely to be regardless of their plights, they decline.”

III. Next to the consideration, that the “law was διαταγείς δι’ ἀγγέλων,” the grounds of its pre-eminence with the Jews were, the exalted character of Moses, and the dignity and offices of the high priest, who was the instrument of reconciling the people to God, when under sin. In respect to both these points, the Apostle undertakes to show, that the Gospel has a preference, since Jesus is superior to Moses, as ἀπόστολος, and Curator ædis sacræ, and to the High Priest, his superiority is alike visible. (Stuart.) The writer here compares Christ with Moses, in order partly, by a parity of reasoning (such as was calculated to conciliate his readers) to show the similarity of both; and partly from the disparity in condition between Moses as θεράπων ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ, and Christ ὡς υἱὸς ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον, to evince the superiority of the latter to the former. The exhortation contained in v. 1. is on the same subject with the preceding Chapter, and by ἀπόστολος and ἀρχιερεὺς he meant to comprise the sum of the 2d Chapter; the τὸν ἀπόστολον including what at ii. 3. he had said respecting the preaching of the Gospel introduced by Christ; and the τὸν ἀρχιερ., what he had said (v. 9.) of the death of Jesus for the salvation of men. At v. 1. he only gives the cursory admonition, to attentively consider Christ as our high Priest, intending to treat more at large on the Priesthood of Christ further on at iv. 14; xii. 13, and proceeds to evince the superiority of Christ to Moses; in pursuance of which he first uses the term ἀπόστολος.—(Kuin.)

1. ἀδελφ. ἅγ. The best Expositors are in general agreed that the sense is simply “Christian brethren;” i. e. by profession at least. (See Stuart); and that κλήσ. ἐπουρ. μέτοχοι denotes the invitation or offer of the Gospel, and its benefits to all who will accept it, and fulfil its requisitions. On the import, however, of ἐπουρ. they are not agreed; some supposing it to regard the nature of the blessing proffered in the Gospel, as being of a celestial kind, (so Phil. iii. 14. τῆς ἁνὰ κλήσεως) far exceeding those of the law in spirituality and value. Others think it respects the origin of the offer, as being from heaven and promulgated by one from heaven; and who is in heaven, i. e. Christ; which latter view is confirmed by vi. 4, and xii. 25; ii. 3; and John iii. 13. And so Boehme and Kuin. Κατανοήσατε, “attentively consider.” An expression used to solicit attention to what is of high moment.

— τὸν ἀπόστ. καὶ ἀρχ.] Of these terms the former designates Christ as legatus Dei, et interpres voluntatis ejus, (as in John iii. 34; x. 36; xiii. 16; xx. 21. Heb. i. 1.) and is adopted because of the comparison with Moses, who was such. So, at least, the term is generally understood. Some Expositors, however, as Stuart, think that there is an allusion to the πῦλ or minister of the synagogue, who managed all its affairs; and as Moses was curator ædis sacræ, so they understand Christ as here represented. But though that opinion is countenanced by the subsequent words, the other interpretation is more simple and natural, and on that account more likely to be the true one. In ἀρχ. there is involved a comparison with Aaron, the first and most eminent ἀρχιερεύς. It is generally supposed to be meant, that as Aaron was the ἀρχιερεύς of the old and imperfect covenant, so is Christ of the new and better one, who is therefore of higher dignity, making that real atonement for men, of which the sacrifice offered by the high Priest was only the type. But the idea of covenant in δόμολογ. may be rather implied than expressed; for though the Classical writers use the word in the sense covenant, and Philo calls the high Priest μέγας ἀρχιερεύς τῆς δόμολογίας, it is no where in the N. T. used in any other sense than profession; which the most eminent Expositors have here adopted, taking the meaning to be, “our profession of him as our Lord;” q. d. τὸν ἀπόστολον καὶ ἀρχ. τὸν δόμολογούμενον ὑφ’ ἡμῶν. But the expression may simply denote faith, as in x. 23. And so it is explained by Chrys. and Stuart.

2. πιστὸν] i. e. as faithfully discharging all the duties of his office of Legate, or High Priest, revealing to mankind the will of God. At τῷ ποιήσαντι supply ἀπόστ. καὶ ἀρχ. This use of ποιεῖν in the sense constitute, is supposed to be founded on the Hebr. פָּנַן; but a similar usage is found in all languages.

— πιστὸν—ὅλῳ τῷ οἴκῳ α.] This is founded on Num. xii. 7, where the words are used of Moses. From the context it is plain that οἴκῳ must, as applied both to Moses and to Christ, mean family, (including the more definite idea of Church,) and, as respects the Jews, nation; for the Jewish nation is considered as God’s family, and is so called in Amos iii. 1. As applied to Christ, it must denote the great Family of Christians comprehended in the visible Church. See Eph. iii. 15. By the αὐτοῦ, as appears from Numb. xii. 7, is meant God.

3. πλείονος γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ connects with κατανοήσατε, &c., introducing another point of view, in which Christ is greatly superior to Moses. On the exact nature, however, of the parallel, some difference of opinion exists. Most Expositors suppose the points of comparison to be between the honour due to the builder of a house, and that due to the building itself. Others (and those the most eminent) suppose them to be between the founder and master of a family, as compared with the family itself. The former is very agreeable to the figure carried on in the context; but not to the sense of that context. “The purpose of the writer (observes Stuart) being to show that Christ at the same time that he is head of the new spiritual house, was also the founder of it; while Moses, who was at the head of the ancient spiritual house, was himself only one of the household [though at the head of it]. As (continues he) a steward of a house, while he is curator of all in the house, is still but a servant, so Moses was but a servant, while Christ, who was curator, was also Son, and therefore ‘heir and lord of all.’ The point of comparison between Moses and Christ, in which the latter appears to have a decided preference, is not the being at the head of God’s house or family (for such an office Moses sustained); but it consists in this,—viz. that while Moses was curator, he was also Θεράπων; but while Christ was curator, he was at the same time υἱός, and κατασκευάστης οἴκου.”

4. πᾶς γὰρ οἶκος—Θεός.] There is no little difficulty connected with this passage, and, consequently, great diversity of interpretation; the αὐτοῦ ὡς θεράπων, εἰς μαρτύριον τῶν λαληθησομένων"

difficulty, however, is not so much respecting the words themselves, as in tracing their connection, and bearing upon the context. Most Commentators, from Whitby to Stuart, suppose the words to be an argument to show the superiority of Christ over Moses, by showing that Jesus is God. But that requires us to supply at the end, "and Christ is God." The argument, too, would be brought forward with an abruptness very unlike any other in the Epistle. The sense of the whole passage is, I think, well represented by Abp. Newc. in the following paraphrase: "He who constituted, or set in order, any Society, hath greater honour than that Society, or any part of it. But Christ conducted the Mosaic dispensation, as the visible Representative of God. (John i. 18.) I say, 'he who framed the household.' For every religious or civil body has some Head; the Israelites, for instance, when they were miraculously conducted out of Egypt, and received the law at Mount Sinai: but the supreme and ultimate Head of all things is God." This view of the sense is confirmed by the learned researches of Dind. and Kuin., and leaves no real difficulty, except to account for the Apostle's having subjoined this. All would, indeed, be easy, if we might (with Mackn.) supply after Θεός the words "who having delegated his authority to his Son has made him Lord of all" (rather, "whose Son is Lord of all"): but this we are not warranted in doing. Neither is it necessary; for in the course of the next sentence, the Apostle shows by what right (namely, in quality of Son) Christ had such authority, as made Him Lord of all.

Thus far I had written in the first Edition of this work. I have now to add, that Prof. Stuart, in his second Edition, makes several, I must confess, well founded objections to the interpretation adopted by me from Newc., Kuin., and Boehme. 1. "Where (he asks) is there any intimation here that Christ is the visible Representative of the supreme God, the ultimate end of all things?" I answer, that it is to be found here just as well as the words "and Christ is God," which Prof. Stuart supplies. 2. He asks, "How is it to the present purpose of the writer, whose design is to show the superiority of Christ to Moses? Moses, as the delegate of God, was the founder of the Jewish institution; and if Christ is merely declared to be only a delegated founder, then in what way does the writer make out the superiority of Christ to Moses? Both were delegates of the same God; and both founders of a new and divine dispensation. If Christ then is not here asserted to be founder in some other character than that of delegate, I am unable to perceive any force in the writer's argument." To this representation I scarcely know how to give any satisfactory reply. And although it is only a change of difficulties, I feel half inclined to adopt the Professor's view, who regards the amount of the reasoning to be this: "Consider that Christ, as Θεός, and the former of all things, must be the author too of the Jewish and Christian dispensations; which shows that a glory belongs to him, not only in his mediatorial office, and as being at the head of the new dispensation, but also as the founder both of this and the Jewish dispensation in his divine character; while Moses is to be honoured only as the head of the Jewish dispensation, in the quality of a commissioned superintendent, but not as author and founder." According to this view, the course of argument contained in vv. 3, 4, 5, 6, may be very well expressed in paraphrase, with Mr. Holden, as follows: "Now every house is built by some one, every church has its head and founder; but He that built all things, both the Jewish and Christian dispensations, is God, v. 4. Jesus, then, who founded both dispensations, is God, and consequently entitled to more glory than Moses, who, though the head of the Jewish Church, was himself one of that Church. 'And [though] Moses was faithful in all his house,' v. 2, yet it was only 'as a servant for a testimony (i. e. to bear testimony) to the things which were to be spoken after' by Christ and his Apostles, v. 5; 'but Christ was a son over his own house,' or Church, to which we belong, if we hold fast, &c. v. 6. Therefore Christ, who rules over his Church as a son, and by virtue of that relationship is Lord of all, is far superior to Moses, who was only as a servant in the Church founded by him."

5, 6. The θεράπων is opposed to the υἱός a little after; though the term is properly opposed to κύριος, as denoting one who despatches any business as assistant to, or under the direction of the principal; i. e. the κύριος, and is synonymous with οικονόμος. As, however, υἱός has been shown to be tantamount to κύριος, there is no anomaly. The next words εἰς μαρτύριον τῶν λαλησ. state the object of Moses' service,—namely, to deliver to the people what was to be promulgated and taught from God in the religion intended to be introductory to a more perfect dispensation. Such, at least, is the sense, if μαρτ. be taken (with most recent Expositors) to denote instruction: but if it be understood as bearing the more usual interpretation of testimony, the meaning will be (as Dr. Burton expresses it) that "the commission of Moses was merely to bear witness to the higher revelation which was afterwards to be made by Christ." Eis μαρτ. is for εἰς τὸ μαρτυρεῖν, to teach or give directions. See Kuin. Υἱός may be, as Theophyl. says, for υἱός καὶ κληρονόμος, equivalent to κύριος. From the structure of the words it is plain that πιστός ἦν must here be repeated. The opposition, too, is not only between θεράπων and υἱός, or κύριος, but between ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ and ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον, to show the difference between Moses and Christ. The former was part of the family; the latter over the family, in quality of Lord. Here it is doubted whether αὐτοῦ or αὐτοῦ be the true reading. The former is greatly superior in external testimony: but the latter, I think, in internal evidence; and it is preferred by many of the most eminent Critics. But in so minute a difference, manuscript evidence is of little weight; and every thing must depend upon comparative fitness. And here αὐτοῦ is, I think, superior, as yielding a sense more agreeable to the idea of κύριος involved in υἱός. This reading, too, is supported by the Syr. and Vulg. Versions, and is

6. οὐ οἶκός ἐσμεν ἡ.] Some MSS. and Versions have ὅς οἶκ., which is preferred by certain Critics on the ground that otherwise the Article would be required at οἶκ. But it has been shown by Bp. Middl. that such is not the case; and that, as to sense, it makes no difference. Indeed, as only four MSS. have this reading, we may well suspect it to be an error of the scribes, who would be more likely to write ὅς than οὐ. In the next clause, τὴν παρῥ. καὶ τὸ καύχ. τῆς ἐλπίδος may be rendered, "our confidence and joy of hope;" i. e. of the hope of salvation by the Gospel. The παρῥησία, fiducia, has reference to the ὁμολογία, or profession of faith, supra v. 1, and infra iv. 14. κρατῶμεν τῆς ὁμολογίας. So also x. 19. ἔχοντες παρῥησίαν εἰς τὴν εἰσοδὸν τῶν ἁγίων, and in a kindred sentiment at x. 35. μὴ ἀποβάλῃτε τὴν παρῥησίαν ὑμῶν. The same sentiment occurs at v. 14. The expression τὸ καύχ. τῆς ἐλπίδος is added to further qualify the idea contained in παρῥησ. as not only a sure confidence, but a joyfully hopeful one. Βεβαίαν is made to agree with παρῥ., as being the more important term, designating the principal thing.

7. The foregoing clause οὐ οἶκος—τέλους is skillfully employed as a vinculum to connect, with the παρῥησία there mentioned, an exhortation (extending to iv. 11.) to constancy in the profession of a religion which furnishes such a joyful hope. And, as a foundation for it, and to enhance the gravity of the admonition, the Apostle adduces Ps. xc. 7—11. Διὸ, "wherefore," i. e. such being the superiority of Christ to Moses. Many eminent Expositors, indeed, refer the διὸ to βλέπετε at v. 12, regarding the intermediate portion as parenthetical. That, however, is not a little harsh; and it is better, with Heinr., Dind., and Kuin., to refer it to σκληρύνετε at v. 8, in the sense: "Wherefore (as the Holy Spirit speaks by the Prophet, whose words I make my own) 'To-day,' &c. Interwoven with the exhortation is a parallel between the state of the family of Moses (i. e. the Jews in the wilderness), and that of the family of Christ; i. e. Christians under the Gospel, who are proceeding "through the wilderness of this world to the heavenly Canaan, the rest which remaineth for the people of God in heaven." The promise of the earthly rest, given by Moses to the Israelites, is paralleled with the glad tidings preached by Christ in the Gospel. The grace and mercy shown to the Israelites is paralleled with that vouchsafed to us Christians: and the important lesson inculcated, that as that grace was meant to produce in them faith and obedience, so was that to us designed to keep us faithfully devoted to God and the Gospel. Also, that as the message of mercy did not profit them, because not embraced in faith; nay, even increased their condemnation, and brought them under God's wrath unto temporal destruction;—so we Christians, by the same evil heart of unbelief, may incur God's wrath unto perdition. Of course, the application being two-fold, many of the terms, as τῆς φωνῆς, must be understood accordingly. Compare John x. 14—16, which is a good comment on the sense here; the expression being equivalent to the κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου, supra v. 1. The σήμερον is very emphatical; i. e. "this very time," viz. of the admonition, ἀρχὴς οὐ τὸ σήμερον καλεῖται (see also iv. 7.), since that alone is the "day of salvation." See 2 Cor. vi. 2, compared with John ix. 4.

8. μὴ σκληρύνετε τ. κ.] q. d. "Be not obstinate and disobedient [as your fore-fathers were]." See Ps. lxxviii. 8. The words ὡς ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ are well rendered by Kuin.: "ut [olim] factum loco, qui a rebellione dicitur, tempore tentationis in deserto factæ;" and he shows that, even in the Psalms, Meribah and Massah are not used as proper names, though that use be hinted at; and that the place where the provocation and temptation occurred was in fact called by Moses Massah and Meribah, as appears from Exod. xvii. 7. Moreover, the use of the words as appellatives was more adapted to the purpose of the Epistle, namely, admonition. The Article is here used κατ' ἐξοχήν; for though the Jews provoked and tried the patience of God, throughout the whole of their journey through the wilderness, (five particular provocations being mentioned, Exod. xvi. 2. xvii. 2—9. xxxii. 10. Num. xi. 32. xiv. 29. Deut. i. 34. sq.) yet the occasion in question was the last and most signal instance, when God swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest.

9. οὐ] is for ὅπου; and in ἐδοκ. (i. e. put him to proof, to see what he would do) there may be a climax. Καὶ εἶδον. Render, with Dr. French, "although they had seen;" which is required by the Hebrew, and this sense of καὶ, like that of the Hebrew ו is not unfrequent. By the ἔργα are denoted the wonderful works wrought for their preservation and protection in Egypt, and their sustenance in the desert.

10. διὸ.] This is added by the Apostle to make what follows more impressive. In προσώχθισα ("indignatus sum") the metaphor is the same as in προσκρούω and προσκόπτω; though it is εἶπον· Ἀεὶ πλανῶνται τῇ καρδίᾳ· αὐτοὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τὰς ὁδοὺς μου· ^a ὥς ὥμοσα ἐν τῇ ὀργῇ μου· 11 Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου. derived “e re nautica,” the word signifying, as used of a ship, to impinge on the shore. The figurative sense occurs also in Ecclesiasticus i. 25. ἐν δυσὶν ἔθνεσι προσώχθισεν ἡ ψυχὴ μου, and Levit. xxvi. 43. There is, however, a conjoint notion of hatred and abhorrence. The word often occurs in the Sept. Ἀεὶ has nothing corresponding in the Hebrew, but was added by the Sept. to strengthen the sense; and it is justified by the τεσσ. ἐτη, to which it adverts. Καρδία must be understood of the affections, as appears from the words following, which are illustrative: and ἔγνωσαν implies not simple ignorance, but the not caring to know, or even disapproval, as far as they might know.

11. εἰ.] So the Hebrews used DN in the latter clause of an oath which ran thus: “God so do to me, if (DN) I do thus,” &c. See the full form in 1 Sam. iii. 17. 2 Sam. iii. 35. 2 Kings vi. 31. The former part of this oath was sometimes omitted, and DN had then the force of a strong negative. See 2 Sam. xi. 11. 1 Sam. 14. 45. alibi. (Stuart.) τὴν κατάπ. μου, i. e. the rest which I had provided for them. The word is combined with κληρονομία in Deut. xii. 9.

12. See on this verse an able Sermon of Dr. Barrow's, vol. ii. p. 1. sqq.

13. παρακαλ.] Carpz. shows that under παράκαλ. is comprehended teaching, admonition, entreaty, consolation, reprehension, &c. each to be used as the case might suit. Ἐαυτοὺς, for ἀλλήλους, as often. Ἀχρις—καλεῖται. A forcible expression, importing “as long as it can be said, ‘To-day do so;’” or (to use the words of Dr. Burton), “so long as you are allowed to consider the time still unexpired, in which God invites you to hear his voice.” Ἰνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ; q. d. “[Use these means], that none may, by neglect of them, be hardened and grow callous to all remonstrance.” Ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἁμαρτ. is by the best Expositors, ancient and modern, understood of the delusion to unbelief and apostasy. But ἁμαρτ. may be taken of that corruption of our nature, the φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, which blinds the understanding, and, by giving undue weight to carnal reasonings, plunges men into unbelief, and thus into immorality.

14. μέτοχοι γὰρ—κατὰσχωμεν.] Τὴν γὰρ

refers, I conceive, to the injunction at v. 6, which seems implied as the subject of the exhortation at v. 13; q. d. [κατέχετε τὴν παρόρρησιαν καὶ τὸ καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν] μέτοχοι γὰρ γεγόναμεν. By μέτ. τοῦ Χρ. is denoted that spiritual union with Christ, which implies participation in the benefits of his Gospel. See John xiv. 11. xvii. 23. and 1 John i. 3. Ἐάν περ has reference to the implied sense, and suspends it on a conditional particle. Supply μόνον. Thus the general sense of the clause may, with Stuart, be expressed thus: “Continue to the end of life to exercise such confidence in Christ as you had at first, and you shall obtain the reward which he has promised.” Ὑποστ. is synonymous with the παρόρρησιαν at v. 6. Ἀχρι τῆς ὑποστ. is for τὴν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπόστασιν, “constancy in the profession of the Gospel.”

15. ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι· “Σήμερον, &c.] These words seem rightly supposed by Abresch, Ern., Dind., Kuin., and Stuart, not to connect with v. 13, but to refer to what follows; being partly a confirmation of what was said at vv. 12, 13, and partly an introduction to what was to be said. Thus ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι is put for κατὰ τὸ λεγόμενον (see Theophyl.): or rather we may render it, with Kuin., “Whilst (I say) it is said, i. e. while the warning is yet sounded in your ears, To-day, &c.” So ἐν τῷ λέγειν at viii. 13. I agree with Rosenm., Heinr., Kuin., and Stuart, that the quotation in this verse extends only to the words σήμερον—ἀκούσητε, the rest of the verse being an exhortation of the writer, though expressed in the words of the writer himself. The full sense is, “To-day, if we are disposed to hear his [warning] voice [attend!], harden not your hearts to the warning.”

16. τίνες γὰρ—Μωϋσέως.] The words are commonly taken declaratively, in the sense expressed in our common version. Dind., Kuin., and Stuart, however, have shown that this is by no means agreeable to the design of the Apostle; which (as Stuart observes) “is, to lead the minds of the readers to consider the specific sin,—viz. unbelief, which occasioned the ruin of the ancient Israelites, and which would involve their posterity in the like condemnation.” The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that the sentence is interrogative, and may be rendered, “quānam enim, auditâ voce divinâ, Deum irritarunt? nonne omnes qui Mosis ductu ex Ægypto egressi erant?" the πάντες being, as often, taken with limitation. So Stuart renders: "Who now were, &c. Might I not rather ask, or, nay, might I not ask, Did not all who came out of Egypt do this?" "The writer (says Stuart) means to intimate by this, that the number who embrace error cannot sanction it; and that those who receive great blessings may be refractory and unfaithful, and even perish. Consequently, that the great body of the Jews rejected the Messiah during the time then present, and urged the Christian converts to do the same, would be no excuse for apostasy."

17—19. The general sense considered apart from the δεινότης of the mode of expression, is that expressed by Kuin. as follows: "But what was the fate of those Israelites, whom God had brought out of Egypt, and blessed with so many and great benefits, who had revolted from God? their carcases were strewn in the wilderness, and they attained not to the rest, the felicity destined for them by God." Thus meaning to hint what will be the fate of those whom he is addressing, if, after receiving from God benefits beyond that of the promised land, they imitate the unbelief and disobedience of their forefathers, and apostatize from Christ. Kuin. observes that the terms ἁμαρτ., ἀπειθεία, and ἀπίστια are used promiscuously as synonymous; the sin of the Israelites being distrust in God, and consequent defection from him. "Blind unbelief (to use the words of Cowper) is sure to err;" being, as Ern. observes, "the origin of all sins, as faith of all virtues." In ὧν τὰ κῶλα ἔπεσεν ἐν τ. ἐρ. there is a graphic representation of destruction by a violent death. If κατεστρώθη were substituted for ἔπεσε, it would, indeed, be yet more so. But πίπτω, like the Heb. שָׁח, of itself suggests the idea of a sudden and violent death. See Ez. vi. 11. Judg. iv. 22. 1 Sam. xxxi. 8. Κῶλα (which signifies the members, as apart from the trunk) is said to be put, by synecdoche, for the bodies themselves. But the usual sense may be retained, as being truer to nature (see Ps. cxli. 8.); for we find from the accounts of Oriental travellers, that in places where carcases are found prostrate, the κῶλα (as leg and arm bones) are soon all that are left by the vultures; and that those continue for a long time uncorrupted.

*Ὦμοσε may denote solemn asseveration rather than swearing, properly so called. Stuart remarks that, "the manner in which the unbelieving Jews were declared in Numb. xiv. 23, 28, 30. and Deut. i. 34. excluded from the goodly land, and the reasons stated for that exclusion, together with the reasoning of the Apostle, would lead us to suppose exclusion implied from the heavenly Canaan also, or from the rest of God."

—καὶ] "and [so]," so then. Καὶ is often thus used, forming the last link of a chain of reasoning. Ἡδυνήθη. is wrongly rendered by some recent Expositors, would not. It is well observed by Grot, Carpz., and Ern., that both ἦδυν. and βλέπομεν are taken populariter, and that the sense is simply: "we see [by the story and the event];" in other words, "we are authorized to infer from the story and the event, that the reason why they could not enter, was their unbelief; which, together with the sins springing from thence, made them unfit objects of the protection and favour of God; and thus their introduction to the promised land was so far impossible; as it is said at Mark vi. 5. οὐκ ἠδύνατο ἐκεῖ οὐδεμίαν δύναμιν ποιῆσαι διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν" meaning, that he could not, consistently with the rule on which he acted, of requiring faith in the subjects of the miracles." So in the present case, that want of faith which made them distrust the providence of God, rendered them unfit objects of his favour; and made it, in that sense, impossible for God to confer it on them. See Calvin.

IV. The writer now treats the history allegorically (as in Gal. iii. 16. iv. 24.), applying it to the case of Christians. (Dind.) He begins with declaring, that a promise of entering into God's rest is still made to Christians, as it was to the people of Israel, v. 1, 2., and into which believers are still admitted, v. 3. Now that the rest spoken of by the Holy Ghost in Ps. xcv. is not a mere temporal rest in the land of Canaan, but also a future and heavenly rest, is evident, because God's rest is such a rest as God enjoyed when he had finished the work of creation, and consequently a spiritual, heavenly rest, v. 3, 4.; because the terms of the oath, "they shall not enter into my rest," imply that the promise included another rest besides that of Canaan, a rest resembling God's rest, v. 5.; because, since it remains that some must enter into the rest spoken of in the oath, and they to whom the promise was first given did not enter in by reason of unbelief, it follows that a rest must be intended into which all true believers may enter, and consequently a future and heavenly one, v. 6.; and because God in the oath warns the Israelites against losing this rest, a long time after they had been in possession of the promised land, and consequently he must have intended another rest than that of Canaan, v. 7, 8. There remains, therefore, a spiritual and heavenly rest for the people of God, into which those who enter shall cease from their labours, as God did from his work of creation, v. 9, 10. Hence follows the duty of labouring to enter into it, v. 11—13. (Holden.)

1. φοβηθῶμεν.] The sense is, "Let us solicitously beware lest." So Phil. ii. 12. μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου τὴν ἐ. σωτηρίαν καταργήσθε, where see Note. There is shown the nature of this promise and of the rest bestowed.

—καταλειπο. ἐπαγγ.] It is not agreed among Expositors, whether the sense is, "spred" promissione," or "relictā promissione." The signification desert, or neglect, is found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers; but Abrsch has shown that that would here require καταλείπων ἐπαγγελίαν. Indeed the latter sense, "a promise being still left," is far more agreeable to the context, implying (as Dr. Burton observes) that the promised rest had not yet been enjoyed, but was left for others to enter upon. Ὑστερεῖν signifies 1. to come too late for a thing, and miss of it; 2. to fail of obtaining any thing. The δοκῇ is generally considered as pleonastic; but the best Commentators, ancient and modern, have seen that it is here introduced to soften the harshness of the ὑστ., as in 1 Cor. vii. 40. and other passages cited by Kuin. and Stuart.

This inculcates a wholesome fear; "for (as it is well observed by Bp. Sanderson) the promises of God as well as his threatenings are conditional, and such as must be ever understood in the one case, with a conditional clause, and, in the other, with a clause of exception, the exception being repentance; the condition, obedience.—Wouldst thou then know how thou art to entertain God's promises, and with what assurance to expect them? I answer, with a confident and obedient heart. Confident, because He is true, who hath promised; obedient, because that is the condition under which he hath promised."

2. καὶ γὰρ ἐσμεν εὐηγγ.] The sense seems to be: "for to us [Christians] also has the blissful promise, or proffered blessing [of a rest] been made." On the allusion (for it is no more) to the Gospel as a message, see Note on Acts xiii. 32. Ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκ. is a Hebraism for ὁ ἀκουσθεὶς λόγος, "the word heard by them." See Rom. ix. 6. 1 Thess. ii. 13.

— μὴ συγκεκραμένους—ἀκούσ.] Many eminent Expositors suppose συγκεκ. to be used by a figure taken from the concoction and digestion of food, and its conversion to aliment. This, however, is somewhat far-fetched; and it is better, with others, to suppose only a figure derived from the mixture of different liquids, and intended to express complete union. So Menand. cited by Wets. τὴν ἐκ λόγου δύναμιν ἥξει χρηστὰ συγκεκραμένην ἔχειν. Thus the sense is (as Stuart renders), "faith not accompanying it." But instead of συγκεκραμένους, several MSS. have συγκεκραμένους, which is approved by Mill, Wets., Griesb., Heinr., and Vat., and edited by Matth. But I agree with Kuin. that the common reading ought to be retained, as yielding a good sense, and being rather less usual in the expression than συγκεκραμένους. Moreover, συγκεκραμένους might easily creep in by reason of the ἐκείνους preceding.

3. The sense of this verse is (as Kuin. observes) obscure from extreme brevity; arising from the writer's pen not keeping up with the celerity of his thoughts; as also from the Jewish cast of reasoning. Hence various modes of interpretation have been propounded; which, however, I agree with Kuin., are on many accounts inadmissible. The ancient and common interpretation is recommended by its simplicity and suitableness to the context. It is well observed by Kuin., that the writer here unfolds, though briefly, what he meant by the κατὰπανσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ in the Psalm; namely, a quiet and felicity similar to that which God enjoys; to which, he says, Christians are to arrive, after having gone through the troubles of this life. Thus in Rev. xiv. 13. the dead in Christ are said to "rest from their labours." See also Wisd. iv. 7. He also compares the rest and felicity to be expected by Christians in heaven, to the rest of God after the work of creation was ended (v. 4.); the Sabbath (calling it σαββατισμός) v. 9, 10.; for it is a saying of the Jewish Doctors, that "the sabbath was an image of the future rest of the departed after the resurrection." See Wets. and Schoettg. Εἰσερχόμεθα may be rendered, "We are to enter." It is rightly remarked by Kuin., that the οἱ πιστ. are opposed to the τοῖς ἀπειθήσασιν at iii. 18. iv. 2. The καίτοι signifies (as the best Commentators are agreed) nampe, nimirum; "namely," or, "and indeed such a rest as God enjoyed [when he rested] from his works after the creation of the world." The true ellip. at καίτοι is κατὰπανσιν ἀπό. See vv. 4. 10. The Article τῶν refers to τοῦ Θεοῦ omitted. Γενηθέντων must signify "gone through," or completed: and ἀπὸ καταβολῆς, "after the work of creation."

The chief difficulty, however, is how to supply what is wanting to the sense at the second clause of the verse καθὼς εἶρηκεν, &c. It seems best to understand after εἶρηκεν the words περὶ τῶν ἀπιστησάντων, to correspond to the οἱ πιστεύσαντες, which, indeed, suggests this subaudition. And such omissions of words serving to show the reference, or indicate the application, are very frequent after the formulas καθὼς γέγραπται and such like, of which καθὼς εἶρηκεν here is one, being equivalent to καθὼς εἶπε at John i. 23, and elsewhere, and καθὼς εἴρηται just after. Ex. gr. 2 Cor. vi. 16. ὑμεῖς γὰρ παὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε ζῶντες· καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ Θεός· Ὅτι ἐνίκησα ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐμπεριπ. Now in such a case the formula merely means that some truth adverted to may be collected from the words thus introduced. Thus here the meaning is, that the truth just mentioned may be collected from the words of God concerning the faithless Hebrews, that they should not enter into His rest; implying that the faithful would.

4, 5. Here the Apostle further proves that the rest in question is the rest of God, and consequently heavenly and spiritual. The force of the argument is in the αὐτοῦ and μου; for περὶ τῆς ἐβδ. must not be regarded as the subject spoken of; as, indeed, is plain from the words themselves of the quotation. The purpose of περὶ τῆς ἐβδ. is simply to make the reference in που more definite; and therefore λέγων may be supplied. Thus there will be that kind of reference, in use among the ancients (and found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers), by which, as books were not yet distributed into Chapters, a division was made according to the prominent subjects any where treated. See my Note on Thucyd. i. 9. ἐν τοῦ σκίπτρου τῇ παραδόσει εἴρηκε.

6. ἐπεὶ οὖν—ἀπειθεῖαν.] The only mode of interpreting this sentence, so as to make it agreeable to the context, is to suppose (with several eminent Expositors) that here, as occasionally elsewhere in this Epistle, and in those of St. Paul, the conclusion of the argument is left to be supplied; which may be done thus: "It follows, then, that οἱ ὑστερον εὐαγγελισθέντες εἰσελεύσονται διὰ πίστιν." And this is the less harsh in the present case, since a conclusion comprising it is introduced at v. 9., meant both for the argument at vv. 7, 8., and also for that in v. 6. I have pointed accordingly.

This view is I find supported by the opinion of Prof. Stuart, who gives the following able illustration of the sense of this verse, in conjunction with what goes before: "This verse is a resumption of the subject in v. 3., after the explanations of rest which vv. 4, 5. contain. There the writer says, 'Believers enter into the rest of God.' How is this proved? 'Because he has sworn that unbelievers shall not enter into it;' which necessarily implies that believers shall enter into it. Then, after delaying a moment in order to show what the nature of the rest in question is, viz. that it is God's rest, i. e. such rest as God enjoyed after the work of creation was completed (v. 3—5.), the author resumes the consideration of the proposition advanced in the first part of v. 3., and avers that, as some must enter into God's rest (for God could not be supposed to have provided one in vain), and as unbelievers cannot enter in, so it is necessarily implied, that believers, and they only, will enjoy the rest in question."

7, 8. The argument here is not very clearly expressed; but it may be laid down, with Whitby and the best Expositors as follows: "And since the Psalmist, so long after the Israelites entering into Canaan, speaks of a set time of entering into his rest, and that time as still future, and typical of something under the Gospel; for Joshua did not give the rest, emphatically called the rest of God, otherwise the Holy Ghost would not so long after that, in David's time, have spoken of another day of entering into his rest: it follows, therefore, that there must be yet another rest remaining to the people of God." See more in Stuart. The term σαββατισμός (which is very rare) is substituted for ἀνάπαυσις, partly to exclude any notion, that the rest of God spoken of might be the Sabbatical rest, and partly by thus comparing it with the Sabbath, to hint that that was a symbol of the true and spiritual sabbath of which their Doctors spake, the rest and felicity of the world to come.

10. ὁ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν—ὁ Θεός.] The best Expositors, from Theophyl. to Kuin. and Stuart, are agreed, that this is meant to show that God's rest, into which true believers are to enter, may, in a certain sense, be called ὁ σαββατισμός.

11. On the foregoing position the Apostle subjoins, by way of conclusion from it, an exhortation (similar to those at iii. 12—14. and iv. 1.) to strive after this rest. "Ἰνα μὴ—ἀπειθείας, 'lest any one [of us] perish, in the same manner, by unbelief and contumacy.'" There is here an Hypallage for ἐν τῇ ἀπειθείᾳ τῇ ἐν ὑποδείγματι.

12, 13. Having shown that unbelievers shall not enter into the rest of God, the Apostle now represents the awful nature of the denunciations τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐνεργῆς, καὶ τομώτερος ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν μάχαιραν δίστομον, καὶ δίκνουμένος ἄχρὶ μερισμοῦ ψυχῆς τε καὶ πνεύματος, ὁρμῶν τε καὶ μυελῶν· καὶ κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν καρδίας. ^k καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφανὴς ἐνώπιον 13 αὐτοῦ, πάντα δὲ γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχλησιμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ, πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος.

of God against unbelief and apostasy. And here he expresses himself in highly figurative, though, at the same time, difficult phraseology; in interpreting which, and determining the scope of the passage, the preceding context is our best guide. By this it appears that ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ must not be taken, with many, of the word of God in general, but (with the best Expositors) only of the minatory declarations to be found therein. So in 3 Esdr. i. 47. οὐκ ἐνετράπησαν ἀπὸ τῶν ῥήξεων λόγων ὑπὸ Ἱερემίου τοῦ προφήτου. Now this minatory word is said to be ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργῆς, i. e. per hendiad., of mighty energy and of unfailling fulfilment on the disobedient. This force of ζῶν is found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. So 1 Pet. i. 3. ἐλπὶς ζωσα. 1 Esdr. iv. 38. Ecclus. xlii. 23. Soph. Œd. Tyr. μαντεῖα ζῶντα. This terrible force and efficacy is then figuratively described, 1. as being τομώτερος—δίστομον, i. e. more effective and fatal than the double-edged sword, δίστομον ξίφος (Eur. Hel. 989), like our battle-axe, with which the heroes of antiquity used to mow down whole ranks. So, in the Apocalypse, (see i. 16. ii. 12. xix. 15.) the Son of Man is described as having a two-edged sword in his mouth; i. e. using the most cutting reproof and awful denunciations. This awful efficacy of God's judgments on the soul is further represented by comparing it to the dreadful effects produced on the body by the μάχαιρα δίστομος: viz. by cutting asunder the trunk, so as to divide the joints and marrow; i. e. to divide the joints, including the commissure of the ribs, into two parts, and thus to, at once, separate the soul or spirit from the body, i. e. inflict instant death. This seems to be simply the sense; nor need we, with many, distinguish minutely between the ψυχῆς and πνεύματος (see 1 Thess. v. 23. and Note), nor ascribe to the writer philosophical subtleties alien to the passage.

The words following, καὶ κριτικὸς, &c. contain another not less momentous admonition, grafted on the former, and suggested by the figure in δίκνουμένος—μυελῶν. Here Dind., Kuin., and Stuart suppose the Subject to be changed from ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ to ὁ Θεός; which they think is clear from v. 13, from whence it appears that there must be a transition somewhere, and there is no other place but this where it can be. In this view, too, I myself coincided in the first edition of this work. But, on further consideration, I must, for several reasons, abandon it. 1. Because there is here nothing to indicate transition. And had the writer intended one, he would, I apprehend, have written, καὶ κριτικὸς ἔστι; for thus the verb substantive would be almost indispensable. 2. Because the words have quite as apposite a reference to the former as to the latter context. 3. Because the transition is not necessarily to be sought for here, but in καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις, &c., as appears from the use of ἔστι, and from the air of the words.

Of the obscurely figurative words καὶ δίκνουμένος—μυελῶν the import is well explained by Calvin: "examen habet de totâ hominis animâ; inquit enim in cogitationes, voluntatem cum suis omnibus desiderijs scrutatur. Eodem pertinet, quod subijcit de compagibus et medullis. Significat enim nihil esse tam durum aut solidum in homine, nihil tam reconditum, quo non perveniat hæc Verbi efficacia." And on κριτικὸς ἔστι, &c. he remarks: "Et quum officium Christi sit retegere proferreque in medium cogitationes ex cordis latebris: id per Evangelium magnâ ex parte efficit. Est igitur sermo Dei κριτικὸς, quia mentem hominis quasi ex labyrintho, quo prius tenebatur implicita, in lucem cognitionis educit." A view confirmed by 1 Cor. xiv. 24, where (as Calvin observes) we learn "valere prophetiam ad coarguendos et judicandos homines, ut occulta cordis in lucem prodeant."

13. καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις, &c.] In these words the foregoing sentiment is confirmed by transferring what was said of the word of God to God himself, its author. For it is well remarked by Calvin: "Ut confirmet illud, verbo Dei quicquid in homine absconditum est judicari, argumentum a naturâ Dei sumit. Nulla, inquit, creatura est, quæ lateat oculos Dei. Ergo nihil tam profundum erit in animâ hominis, quod non extrahitur in lucem ejus verbo, quod auctorem suum refert. Sicuti enim officium Dei est scrutari corda, ita hanc cognitionem verbo suo exerceat." The general meaning intended by τετραχλησιμένα is obvious; but on the nature of the metaphor some difference of opinion exists. See Dind., Kuin., and Stuart. The most probable supposition is, that it is taken from the bending back the head, so as to expose the neck, as in slaughtering animals, or executing criminals. By πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, many eminent Expositors from the time of Chrys. to Stuart understand "Him, to whom we have to render an account." And this sense is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Thus there will be an ellipsis of ἀποδοτέος. Yet even if the term λόγος be interpreted, with the generality of Commentators, negotium, concern, the sense will come to the same thing; q. d. "with whom we are concerned as our Lawgiver and our Judge;" and therefore, as Calvin observes, "non esse ludendum, quasi cum homine mortali;" or, as it is said at Gal. vi. 6, "God is not mocked." Finally, much of the doubt and debate as to the reference in αὐτοῦ and the sense of λόγος has, I think, arisen from the construction of the verse being not sufficiently understood. It should seem that the true construction (thrown a little out of its natural order by the writer's thoughts outstripping his pen) is as follows: καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφανὴς ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος· πάντα δὲ γυμνά καὶ τετραχλισμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ. The sentence consists of two sentences blended into one, and ὁ λόγος might be meant to be taken in both the above senses, one for each clause, thus: "Moreover there exists no creature that is not manifest in the sight of Him with whom we have to do; but all things are naked and exposed to his eyes, to whom we have to render an account." "To make this sure (says Bp. Sanderson, 3d Serm. ad Populum) that nothing may escape his search, by lurking unspied in some remote corner or dark cranny of the heart, he taketh a light with him; he searcheth it with candles, as the Prophet speaketh." (Zeph. i. 12.)

14—16. The Apostle now returns to a subject only hinted at, supra iii. 1, where he calls Christ the ἀρχιερεὺς of the Christian religion. And this comparison of Christ with the ἀρχιερεὺς and the Levitical priesthood, intermixed with occasional warnings and threatenings, extends to Ch. x. 18, where terminates the doctrinal part of the Epistle. The reason why this subject is treated of so much more at large than any other, is from its very great importance, as having a direct bearing on the most momentous part of our Lord's office, his Atonement for sin by the sacrifice of himself. The μέγαν has much significance, adverting to the points of superiority in Christ over Moses, or the High Priests above mentioned. Διεληλ. τοὺς οὐρανούς, "who hast passed through the heavens," viz. so as to reach the seat of the Majesty on high. The Jews reckoned three heavens,—the aerial, the sidereal, and the highest heaven, or the residence of God and the angels, called by Sirach xvi. 18. ὁ οὐρανὸς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, and in Luke xxiii. 43. παράδεισος. See 2 Cor. xii. 2. and Note. So there were three divisions of the Temple,—the Court, the Sanctum, and the Sanctum Sanctorum; to the furthest of which, and through the Veil that hid it from view, the High Priest passed once every year. Thus the passing in the one case is compared to the passing in the other; and by passing to the farthest heaven is implied completion of the work of expiation, and an access to God fully obtained. Τῆς ὁμολογίας is to be taken as at iii. 1, where see Note.

15. οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν—ἁμαρτίας.] This is meant to encourage them to follow his admonition, by meeting a tacit objection;—as if the great High Priest were a personage too exalted to concern himself with their miseries. To which it is answered, that he is not such; but (which displays another point of superiority in the new dispensation), one who can sympathize with their infirmities; as has been already proved ii. 18. So συμπ. is used in the Sept. and Philo. Ἀσθ. has a conjunct notion of the misery resulting from human frailty. The πεπειρ. adverts both to trials by affliction, and temptations to sin; implying, however, no more than that of being susceptible to temptation, resulting from the possession of a human nature. Though, indeed, our Saviour Christ was, in some respect, tempted, and assuredly tried beyond what men are: his whole life being little else than one unvaried conflict or trial of virtue, as is shown at large by Dr. Blair, in an able Sermon on this text. Καθ' ὁμοίωτ. (scil. ἡμῶν) is for ὁμοίως ἡμῶν, as Origen and Theophyl. explain. Χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας is not well explained by some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, "without giving way under those afflictions;" a sense frigid and inept. It is plain from the ἀσθ. and the πεπειρ. before, that the common interpretation is the true one, "without yielding to, or falling into sin;" which is also adopted by Kuin., who confirms it from v. 2. vii. 6. 2 Cor. v. 20. 1 Pet. ii. 22. 1 John iii. 5. "To a nature (says Dr. Blair) altogether raised above us we must have looked up with terror. But he who remembers the struggles of his own soul will not surely judge ours like a hard master. Acquainted with the inmost recesses of the heart, he perceives the sincerity of our intentions: he sees the combat we maintain; he hears the voice of those secret aspirations, which we are unable to express in words, or form into prayer." Parallel to this is what is said at ii. 18. ἐν ᾧ πέπονθεν αὐτός πειρασθεῖς, δύναται τοῖς πειραζομένοις βοηθεῖν.

16. προσερχόμεθα—χάριτος.] Here is contained an inference and exhortation, founded on the foregoing doctrine; q. d. "Having, then, an High Priest who can sympathize, &c. let us, as we may, approach with confidence." "Amidst (says Blair) the innumerable sorrows of life, how soothing is the thought that our great Intercessor with God was a fellow-sufferer with ourselves, while passing through this vale of tears." Well may we therefore approach with confidence, assured that whatever we ask in prayer, nothing doubting, we shall receive. See Matth. xxi. 22. Deyl. and Kuin. have shown the exact propriety of the term προσερχ. from the circumstances of the worship of the Jewish people in the Temple, who were not admitted to approach even the altar of the holocausts, unless when they offered a sacrifice. In θρόνῳ τῆς χάρ. there is not, as some say, an allusion to the Jewish notion of God's having two thrones,—of mercy and of judgment; but rather (as the best Commentators suppose) to the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat (Rom. iii. 25.), where God was represented as sitting enthroned, hearing the supplications of the people, accepting their oblations, and dispensing ἔλεον καὶ χάριν. The throne must be understood as that of God, on which also Christ sitteth at his right hand. Λάβωμεν καὶ εὐρωμεν are synonymous, though the latter is rather the stronger term. "Ελεος and χάρις, too, are generally synonymous; the gracious dispensations of God being called his mercies, to hint our unworthiness of them. Here, however, the terms have a distinct sense, corresponding, I conceive, to the two ideas involved in πεπειραμένον at v. 15, viz. mercy and compassion to beings encompassed with sin, and surrounded with trials and tribulations (with reference to the ἀσθενέειαι at v. 15.), and grace vouchsafed at all times, to comfort, support, and sanctify them. Εἰς εὐκαιρ. βοήθ. is for εἰς βοήθ. ἐν καιρῷ, "for seasonable relief."

V. 1. The writer proceeds to show that Jesus Christ is the true High Priest, and infinitely superior to the Jewish ones, having all the qualities necessary in a High Priest, and those in the highest degree. Ἐξ ἀνθρώπων λαμβανόμενος, i. e. (as Kuin. well explains) of merely human condition; there being a tacit comparison with the Jewish high priests, who were mere men, with the great and Divine High Priest. It is well remarked by Theodoret: οὐκ ἄγγελος ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων ἱερατεύειν ἐτάχθη, ἀλλ' ἄνθρωπος ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων, τὴν αὐτὴν φύσιν ἔχων, τὰ αὐτὰ περικείμενος πάθῃ, τῆς φύσεως τὴν ἀσθένειαν ἐπιστάμενος, συγγνώμην νέμων τοῖς ὀλισθαίνουσιν, ὁρέγων χεῖρα τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσιν, ἐκ τῶν οἰκείων καὶ τὰ τοῦ πέλας σκοπῶν. Here λαμβάνειν, like the Hebr. קָבַץ, is used (as in the Sept., Philo, and Josephus) in the sense to select. In πᾶς ἀρχιερ. the singular is used generally; i. e. for the whole class of persons denoted by the appellation. Τὰ πρὸς Θεόν. Supply κατὰ and πράγματα. The sense is, "is appointed [such] for the benefit of men [in respect to their observances] towards God." Or we may, with Theophyl., supply, from the subject-matter, μεσιτεύειν. See ii. 17, and Note. Προσφ. is a sacrificial term, found also in Matt. v. 23. John xvi. 2, where see Notes.

—δῶρα καὶ θυσίας.] These terms are properly distinct; the former being the original term, and such as chiefly respected the most ancient and primitive kind of oblation, that of the fruits of the earth,—and, indeed, the unbloody offerings in general, which were afterwards called thank-offerings; the latter, the bloody offerings, the various sin and trespass-offerings made by slain beasts. Sometimes, however, (as at viii. iv. and often in the Sept.) δῶρον includes the idea of both the unbloody and bloody sacrifices. Here the terms are both used, to denote universality.

2. μετριοπαθεῖν δυν.] As this phrase corresponds to συμπαθεῖναι δυνάμενος at iv. 15, it must denote something nearly akin, though not, I conceive, (as some think,) the same. Μετριοπαθεῖν properly signifies "to carry oneself with moderation," holding in the passions and appetites, so as not to give way to anger or any other excess. Thus it came to denote (as it here seems to do) being gentle, merciful, forbearing, and indulgent to the failings of others. Thus δυν. μετριοπαθεῖν means "being disposed to show forbearance and indulgence." "He (says Dr. Blair ubi supra) who remembers the struggles of his own soul, will not surely judge ours like a harsh or unfeeling master." In ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλαν. there is not, I conceive, (as some eminent Commentators have supposed,) a Hendiad, for τοῖς ἐξ ἀγν. πλαν.; for as Dind., Kuin., and Stuart remark, the indulgence of the High Priest on earth was not limited merely to this class of offenders; much less is the clemency of our great High Priest in the heavens so limited. See also Levit. vi. 1—7. They rightly regard the words as being, by the Hellenistic use, (found in the Sept.) nearly synonymous. See Ps. xxv. 7, compared with 2 Chron. xxviii. 13, and Hos. iv. 16, where ἀγν. is put per ὑποκορισμὸν, for ἁμαρτάνειν. And so ἀγνοεῖ and ἀγνόημα in Ecclus. v. 18, and ἀγνόημα in Heb. ix. 7. See Kuin. In περικείται ἀσθένειαν there is a metaphor taken from clothing, and employed, as in many other cases, to denote the being intimately conversant with, and implying a notion of habit: of sinfulness cleaving to us, like the fatal garment of Nessus to Hercules; which, says Soph. Trach. 770. καὶ προσπύσσετο Πλευραῖσιν ἄρτίκολλος, ὥστε τέκτονος Χιτῶν ἅπαν κατ' ἄρσρον.

3. διὰ ταύτην] "on account of this [frailty] [and the sinning consequent upon it]."

—καὶ περὶ ἑαυτοῦ.] This he was bound to do, if conscious of any particular sin. The sacrifice was a young bullock; which, for greater security, was always offered up by the High Priest for himself on the day of Expiation. See Levit. xvi. 11 & 24.

4—6. The argument is, that the same God who constituted the High Priests of the Jews, constituted Christ, who did not arrogate to himself the office, but was appointed by God.—

(Kuin.) Τιμή, like the Latin honor, is often used of office, whether civil, military, or religious. Λαμβ. ἑαυτῷ signifies, "to arrogate to oneself that to which one has no claim." The use of the Present tense here denotes what is customary; and, by an idiom found at vii. 13, and elsewhere, the sense is: "no one can lawfully, or ought to take;" it must be by Divine appointment. The ὁ before καλούμενος in the common text has been cancelled (on the authority of many MSS. and early Editions) by Beng., Griesb., Matth., Knapp., Tittm., and Vat., and justly; since it might easily originate with the scribes, or even some injudicious Critics; though as Bp. Middl. observes, it disturbs the sense; καλούμενος being opposed to ἑαυτῷ; q. d. "not of his own accord, but being called thereto by God." On the same authority the ὁ before Ἀαρὼν is cancelled. The argument here is, that, though no man could take upon himself the Levitical priesthood, unless called by God, as Aaron was; yet Christ was not only appointed by God, but had an everlasting priesthood conferred upon him, of which Melchizedek's was but a type. Ἐαυτὸν ἐδόξασε corresponds to ἑαυτῷ λαμβάνει. Literally, did not exalt himself, claim to himself. Thus it comes to mean to think too highly of oneself, as in Rev. xviii. 7. ἐδόξασεν ἑαυτὴν καὶ ἐστηνύισε. And at ὁ λαλήσας πρὸς αὐτὸν must be supplied, not per elliptin, but from the context, ἐδόξασε αὐτόν. It is meant, that Christ's Pontifical office was far superior to that under the law, inasmuch as he was appointed to it by the immediate investment of heaven, in virtue of his relation to God as Son; and therefore was High Priest in a far more elevated sense. The Apostle proceeds, vv. 5—11, to observe, that these qualifications are all found in Christ, who being thus made perfect, was enabled to be the author of eternal salvation to all who should obey him; inasmuch as the being made a Priest after the order of Melchizedek exalts him far above every other priesthood. The appointment to this is shown by reference to Ps. ii. 7, and ex. 4; those passages, of course, being regarded as prophetic of Christ, and fulfilled in his appointment; q. d. "God who spoke these words appointed Christ to be our High Priest." For the latter passage (which is applied to the Messiah by our Lord himself, Matt. xxii. 43,) plainly designates appointment. And in the latter that is implied in the address Υἱός, which, in its august sense, included the dignity in question. See i. 5, and Note. Κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχ. the best Expositors (supported by the Pesch. Syr.) are agreed, is for καθ' ὁμοιότητα, "after the manner of," as the writer expresses it at vii. 15. So 2 Macc. ix. 18. ἐπιστολὴν ἱκετηρίας τάξιν (for τρόπον) ἔχουσιν. "The particulars (observes Stuart) of the comparison, in respect to the priesthood of Christ and Melchizedek, are not immediately brought into view, but suspended until the writer has introduced other considerations relative to Christ as a priest, vv. 7—9, and given vent to his feelings of concern for those whom he was addressing, by suggesting various considerations, adapted to reprove v. 11—14; to warn, vi. 1—9; as well as to excite and animate them, vi. 10—20."

7—9. The exact reference, scope, and bearing of these verses is much disputed. They seem rightly regarded by Newc., Stuart, and Holden, as explanatory of v. 2, being intended to serve to the comparison of Christ, as a priest, with the Jewish priests. Thus there is shown the fitness of our Saviour to be a merciful and compassionate High Priest, inasmuch as from his assumption of human nature, and exposure to its infirmities, he can pity the infirmities of others. In the phraseology itself there is some obscurity in particular expressions, as θανάτου, εὐλαβείας, and τελευθής; and still more a perplexity in the construction; which some attempt to remove by placing in a parenthesis the words δεήσεις τε—εὐλαβείας, or the whole of v. 8, or (as Griesb. and Valpy) the words καίπερ ὢν Υἱός. To each of these methods there are objections: and none of them completely removes the difficulty. The obscurity seems to be chiefly occasioned by the insertion of the words καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλ.; and if these are considered as parenthetical, the sense will be effectually cleared; as will appear by an investigation of it in detail. Ἡμέρ. τῆς σαρκὸς signifies, "during the time when he lived as a man, among them;" in which there is an evident allusion to the period before he had put off his Divine nature, of course implying that he had such. So the Pesch. Syr., "cum carne esset vestitus." Σαρκὸς also carries with it a notion of the frailty and misery of the flesh; "the whole (as Stuart observes) designating the condition of the Logos on earth (see John i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16.), and the period of the Saviour's humiliation." Of the phrase προσφέρειν δεήσεις (which contains a sacrificial allusion) examples are found in the later Classical writers. Ἰσχυρᾶς κρ. here means vehement or ardent entreaty,—an unusual sense of ισχ., but of which I find something very similar in Eurip. Med. 999. στεῖνός ἐνεγκούσ' ἐν τόκοις ἀλγυδόνας. Δεήσεις and ἱκετ. are terms nearly synonymous (though the latter is rather the stronger one, and therefore introduced last) but united for intensity of sense. Μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχυρᾶς καὶ δακρύων must be construed after δεήσ. καὶ ἱκ.; and the whole be referred to our Lord's earnest prayers and agony in the Garden at Gethsemane. With respect to εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλ., it has ever been a disputed question whether εὐλαβ. should be rendered fear, or piety. The usus loquendi permits either version, and especially the former; that signification being frequent in the later Classical writers and the Sept. And as the sense yielded by the latter is rather jejune, the former interpretation (supported by the most eminent Expositors, ancient and modern,) is preferable. Thus εἰσάκ. will have two meanings, by what is called a sensus prægnans (an idiom common both in the Scriptural and Classical writers); and the Commentators refer to a similar use of the Heb. עָנַן in Ps. xxii. 22, and Job xxxv. 12. Thus the full sense is, "was heard, in respect to that which he feared ;" i. e. was so heard, as to be delivered from it. The syntax is accommodated to the latter part of the sense. On the nature and extent of this fear see Stuart's Exc. xi. Good reasons are adduced by him for supposing that it was a suffering (of course confined to the human nature) not the apprehension of the suffering of the cross, but the dread of sinking under the agony of being deserted by his Father, (see Matt. xxvii. 46,) the consequence of being made a curse for us to redeem us from the curse, Gal. iii. 13. How our Lord was delivered from this fear we learn from Luke xxii. 13,—namely, by being strengthened by an angel.

— καίπερ ὦν Υἱὸς.] Render, not "though he were a son," but "though he was Son,"—(namely, of God). So Υἱὸς occurs without the Article at i. 1, where see Note. The above sense I find supported by the authority of the ancient Commentators almost universally. So the Vulg. Filius Dei. Indeed, the best modern Expositors are agreed that it means "Son of God." But if so, it ought to have the capital letter, and that idiom must here have place, on which I have treated supra i. 1. The above view is, moreover, confirmed by the close connection which, I think, exists between καίπερ ὦν Υἱὸς and ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ,—meaning, "when he was made man :"—on account of which, and to clear the intermediate portion, I have, with Gratz, placed the words δεήσεις—εὐλογ. in a parenthesis. In ἔμαθεν—ἔπαθε there is supposed to be a paronomasia, (a figure frequent in the Epistles of St. Paul,) probably founded on the proverb μαθήματα τὰ παθήματα, which may be traced to Herodot. i. 107. Indeed, a paronomasia on the verbs is frequently found in the best authors. In ἔμαθε τὴν ὑπακοήν it is best not to seek metaphysical refinements, but to regard it as a popular expression; denoting that he was made to learn experimentally how difficult it is to obey God's will amidst complicated trials.

9, 10. τελειωθείς.] This has reference to the ἔπαθε at v. 8., and must therefore have the same sense as at ii. 10. διὰ τῶν παθημάτων τελειωθείς, which, as appears from the preceding verse, is "brought, or exalted, to glory in heaven." The ὑπακ. denotes obedience to his Gospel, as prompt and complete as that rendered by our Lord to God the Father. Αἵτιος, effector, is equivalent to ἀρχηγός at ii. 10. Of προσαγορευθεὶς the sense (which is disputed) seems to be, "being proclaimed and constituted." Appointment to office was in ancient, as in modern times, made by saluting the person by the title attached to the office.

11—14. Having thus introduced the subject of Christ's exaltation as priest, the nature of the comparison introduced, viz. the comparison of Christ's priesthood with that of Melchizedec, occasions the writer to stop short, in order to comment on this, and also to give utterance to his emotions of concern for those whom he addressed. The difficulty and obscurity of the subject which he is about to discuss are, in his view, occasioned principally by the low state of religious knowledge in those whom he addresses. This he tells them very plainly, in order to reprove them for the little progress they have made in Christian knowledge, as well as to guard them against objecting to what he is about to advance. (Stuart.)

—περὶ οὗ] "respecting which [personage] and his priesthood." Or we may, with Grot. and Pisc., supply πράγματος, "which matter," namely, the comparison of the priesthood of Melchizedec and Christ. Δυσερμ. λέγειν is for δυσ. ἐν τῷ λέγειν, "difficult to be made intelligible, in speaking on that subject." Πολὺς δὲ εἰς ὁ λόγος was a frequent mode of expression. Νωθοὶ γεγόν. ταῖς ἀκ., "you are dull in apprehension."

12. καὶ γὰρ, &c.] The καὶ is by some rendered etiam, or præcipue. But such a sense is precarious; and it is better to suppose a clause omitted, to which the γὰρ refers, and to assign to καὶ its usual sense also or even; q. d. "[And such ye are] for though ye ought, according to the time, to be teachers," &c.

—διὰ τὸν χρόνον] "in respect to, or considering the time [ye have learnt the Gospel]" Meaning, that they had learnt long enough to be teachers; i. e. long enough to understand, not merely the elements, but the more recondite doctrines of the Gospel. At διδάσκειν supply ὑμᾶς. Στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς, for τὰ πρῶτα στοιχεῖα; meaning faith, repentance, and such like. Τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ some, as Kuin. and Stuart, explain (as also did formerly Grot., Est., and others), the doctrines or communications of God in the Gospel, the system of Divine truths, which we understand by Christianity. A view of the sense confirmed by vi. 1. Καὶ γεγόνατε χρεῖαν ἔχοντες, &c., "and have become such as need," &c.; q. d. "like children, who cannot digest any but the lightest food." The comparison of knowledge, or doctrine, to food is frequent in the Jewish writers. The elementary and the more recondite doctrines are here compared to milk and to solid food respectively, just as at 1 Cor. iii. 2. γάλα is opposed to βρώμα. By στερεὰ τροφή is meant solid food, called by Galen ἰσχυρὸν βρώμα, like that of flesh, and grain in its most condensed state; as opposed to milk, porridge, and such like, elegantly termed by Sophocles νέα τροφή.

13, 14. There is here some obscurity, occasioned by a confounding of the natural with the metaphorical (or allegorical) sense. If kept distinct, the thought would be expressed as follows: "Thus [as] every one who can live only on milk is, in some sort, a babe; [so] every one who can profit only by the first elements of the Gospel, is also a babe in knowledge, being ἄπειρος λόγου δικαιοσύνης." So Philo p. 188. cited by Carpz. ἐπεὶ δὲ νηπίαι μὲν ἐστί γάλα τροφή, τελείους δὲ τὰ ἐκ πυρῶν πέμματα· καὶ ψυχῆς γαλακτώδεις μὲν ἂν εἴεν τροφαὶ κατὰ τὴν παιδικὴν ἡλικίαν—τέλειαι δὲ καὶ ἀνδράσιν εὐπρεπεῖς—(I conjecture εὐπρεπεῖς) αἱ ὠφελήσεις. The expression λόγου δικαιοσύνης is variously interpreted. It may mean, as it is generally explained, "the doctrine of salvation," i. e. the Christian religion. The best Expositors, from Abresch to Kuin., take it to mean doctrinam perfectiorem, the τελειότης of vi. 1.; regarding it as in antithesis with τὰ στοιχεῖα. And such is the view of the sense adopted by Calvin. But it should seem better to simply interpret it "the Christian religion," the doctrine of salvation through Christ, the doctrine of justification by faith and grace. In short, this appears to be a periphrasis to denote the Gospel. To the ἄπειροι λόγου δικ. are opposed the τέλειοι, or those who can bear the solid food of a more recondite inquiry into the origin and nature of the Gospel; comparing the word of righteousness, the righteousness of Faith (See Rom. iv. 6.), with the righteousness of the Law (See Rom. x. 5, 6.), and tracing the connexion between the Patriarchal and the Mosaic, and between the Mosaic and the Christian Dispensations.

The terms τελείων, στερεὰ τροφή, and ἕξιν, are equally adapted both to the natural and to the allegorical sense. The Genit. in τελείων denotes fitness for. Διὰ τὴν ἕξιν denotes "by habit, induced by long use and exercise;" ἕξιν signifying properly a habit of body, and, metaphorically, a habit of mind; which supposes use and exercise. At τὰ αἰσθητήρια supply ὄργανα, meaning τὰς αἰσθήσεις, as in a fragment of Ælian, p. 1051. It here, however, denotes the internal senses.

By καλοῦ and κακοῦ are meant moral good and moral evil, the good [of truth] and the evil [of error], &c., in religion. What is said in vv. 12, 13, 14. is in some measure parenthetical (for the διὸ in the next verse connects with v. 11.), and what is there premised (as introductory to the subsequent discussion of the matters of difficulty) is, as Br. Fell observes, "not said as if he thought them utterly unfit for, or incapable of, the sublime doctrine he afterwards delivers; but by gently taxing their negligence and impropriety (of whom also some were fallen away, and others, like children, were relapsing to the former ceremonies, elements, and rudiments of the Mosaic law) to excite them to a greater vigilance and attentiveness to it."

VI. 1. διὸ i. e. "since ye ought now to be thus τέλειοι, and must be, in some degree, able to comprehend τὰ τέλεια (the more recondite doctrines of the faith) let us proceed," &c. Such seems to be the true force of the διὸ; yet, on the whole of these six verses much difference of opinion exists. Towards ascertaining the true sense, it is important to previously attend to the scope of the whole portion, and the intent of the writer. And here Expositors adopt two distinct and materially different views. One class considers the whole passage as hortatory, i. e. earnestly exhorting them not to rest satisfied with the elementary principles of religion, but to aim at being fully conversant in the Christian faith. But to this view of the sense the words καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσωμεν, &c., and ἀδύνατον γάρ, a little after, are very adverse. Prof. Stuart, indeed, who adopts it, offers the following as the course of reasoning: "Christian brethren, who ought, by this time, to be qualified, by your knowledge of religion, to become teachers of it, quit the state of ignorance in which you are. Let it not be necessary any more to teach you the first rudiments of Christian doctrine. Such progress we must make, Deo volente. Stationary we cannot remain; we must either advance or recede. But guard well, I beseech you, against receding; ἀδύνατον γάρ," &c. Yet notwithstanding that the view is thus ably represented, it is liable to several objections. It is scarcely necessary to remark how much the meaning of καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσωμεν has to be strained. Ποιήσωμεν cannot mean "we must make:" and that sense, if admitted, would be quite incongruous with ἐάνπερ ἐπιτρέπη ὁ Θεός. Certainly it did not occur to those Critics of old, who, as we find from some of the MSS., altered ποιήσωμεν into ποιήσωμεν; a reading which no modern Editor or Philologist ever ventured to plead for. Moreover, ἀφέντες cannot possibly mean quitting, i. e. not resting content with, as Mr. Holden explains. According to the usus loquendi and the context, it can only mean, "prætermittentes, passing over [for the present];" a signification frequent in the Classical writers, and of which the Commentators adduce several examples. In short, the interpretation in question is, I apprehend, philologically untenable. The true sense of the words is, I conceive, that assigned by many eminent Commentators (as Grot., Vat., Pisc., Go-διδαχῆς ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν, ἀναστάσεώς τε νεκρῶν καὶ

mar, Whitby, Wolf, and others, down to the time of Kuin.) who understand the writer by these words to apprise them what he is going to do; viz. passing over the more elementary parts of the Christian doctrines, to proceed to the higher and more recondite ones; q. d. "Passing over [for the present] the elementary doctrines of repentance, faith, baptism, &c., let us proceed to the consideration of the higher doctrines (as involved in the comparison between the priesthood of Melchisedek and Christ)." And this, God willing, we will now do," i. e. intend now to do. Now this the writer does; but not until after a digression, contained in vv. 4—12. inclusive; commencing the discussion in question at v. 13. The above interpretation is, I believe, liable to no serious objections, if it be but borne in mind that the words μὴ πάλιν θεμελιον—κρίματος αἰωνίου are, in some measure, parenthetical: and thus καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν connects well with ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερώμεθα. It may, indeed, be urged that, according to this view of the sense, it is difficult to trace the connexion in ἀδύνατον, &c. But, in fact, the case is otherwise: for the words need not, nay, ought not to be referred to what immediately precedes, but to the parenthetical portion μὴ πάλιν—κρίματος αἰωνίου, as is shown in the Note on v. 4. Finally, the above view of the sense is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version: the Translator even rendering φερώμεθα, "we will leave [out of sight] and we will come to," &c. By τελειότητα is meant τὰ τέλεια, those recondite doctrines, which correspond to the solid food just mentioned, food fit for the τέλειοι, v. 14., and 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7. σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν ἐν τοῖς τελείοις, σοφίαν ἐν μυστηρίῳ. It is observed by Theophyl. that "the Apostle says ἐάνπερ ἐπιτρέπη ὁ Θεός, not as if it were doubtful whether God would permit this, but as being accustomed to use such formulas, denoting entire dependence on Divine Providence." The τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χρ. λόγον is explained by the στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Χρ. at v. 12. And τοῦ Χρ. here is for the τὰ λόγια τοῦ Χρ. there. In φερώμεθα there is a nautical metaphor. The whole is for: ἀφείλς τὸ λέγειν περὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ λόγον τοῦ Χρ., and that for τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— μὴ πάλιν—αἰωνίου.] The sense here assigned will depend upon the view adopted respecting the sense of the preceding words. It should seem that the Apostle meant to advert to the chief of the elementary doctrines of the Christian religion (as in Rom. xv. 20. 1 Cor. iii. 10.), omitting such as were implied in the very profession of the religion. And therefore we are not to expect to find all that are specified in similar enumerations at 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. 1 Thess. i. 9, 10. Tit. ii. 11—14.; though some of them may be ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις.

In fact, the doctrines are such as were, so to say, catechetical; and inculcated on candidates for baptism; viz. to repent, to have faith in the declarations of God through Christ, and to believe in a resurrection and future judgment. Moreover, the best Expositors are agreed, that by μετανοίας, πίστ., βαπτ., &c., are meant, not the things themselves, as acts, but as subjects of consideration, or doctrines. Thus the sense is, "the doctrines of repentance," &c. This is plain from διδαχῆς being expressed at one of the clauses; doubtless to suggest it as to be understood with the rest. For it must not be regarded, with some, as a separate particular, but be joined with the βαπτ. It is worthy of notice, that though these fundamental points of doctrine are sic, yet they are so formed as to constitute, as it were, three pairs, in which the doctrines of each pair are closely connected. Thus the particulars are naturally connected, and the best comment on them is Acts xx. 21. διαμαρτυρούμενος Ἰουδαίους τε καὶ Ἕλλησι τὴν εἰς τὸν Θεὸν μετάνοιαν, καὶ πίστιν τὴν εἰς τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν. See also Acts ii. 38. xxvi. 20. In μεταν. there is a sensus prægnans, such as is sometimes found in μετανοεῖν, by which is meant both repentance and reformation, the ceasing to do evil and the learning to do well; (this being alluded to in the ἀπό). The νεκρῶν is by some interpreted sinful; by others, what causes death, or condemnation. Both senses may be included, the one as implying the other. Thus at ix. 14. the blood of Christ is said to purify the conscience [namely, of those who are converted to Christianity] ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων.

2. βαπτισμῶν.] The plural here involves some difficulty; there being but one Christian baptism: and to take the word in a distributive sense would be harsh. Most Commentators (as Stuart) regard it as plural for singular, and denoting Christian baptism; alleging a similar use in αἵματα, καρδιαί, πορνείαι, &c. Yet they have never proved, by a single example, that this idiom extended to βαπτισμός; which, indeed, were very improbable. The word is used in three other passages of the N. T., though no where in the sense baptism (which is expressed invariably by βάπτισμα) but always in the sense washing. Thus I should prefer (with Limborch, Barrington, Dind., Rosenm., Schleus., and others) to understand it of the various ceremonial washings of the Jews (so ix. 10. διαφοροῖς βαπτισμοῖς), especially the baptism of proselytes, as compared with the Christian baptism. Since, however, it is difficult to extract the sense expressed in the last clause, I am inclined (with Vater, Kuin., and Dr. Burton) to take βαπτισμῶν as a general term, referring both to the Jewish and Christian baptisms; and implying, in the adjunct διδαχῆς, such a comparison of one with the other, and such a knowledge of the difference between them, as would lead to the adoption of the latter.

— ἐπιθέσεως χειρῶν.] Here we have a separate head of doctrine, though closely connected with the last; and (as the best Expositors are agreed) there is a reference to the laying on of hands, by which, in that age, baptism was followed; namely, as a symbol of the spiritual gifts imparted to the new converts: a circumstance alluded to at v. 4. Now it was necessary that these neophytes should be taught the meaning and intent of this imposition of hands, and the nature of the benefits which it imparted. Ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν must be understood, not (with many eminent Expositors) of the resurrection of the just, but a resurrection generally, both of the just and the unjust. So Acts xxiv. 15. ἐλπίδα ἔχων εἰς τὸν Θεόν, ἦν καὶ αὐτοὶ οὗτοι προσδέχονται, ἀνάστασιν μέλλειν ἔσσεσθαι νεκρῶν, δικαίων τε καὶ ἀδίκων. By καὶ κρίμ. αἰων. is meant, "and of a judgment, the consequences of which, whether for bliss or woe, will be eternal."

3. καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, &c.] See Note supra v. 1.

4, 5, 6. Much difference of opinion exists as to the sense contained in these verses; in determining which, it is of consequence to settle the conception, as contained in ἀδύνατον γάρ. Some refer γάρ to the preceding verse; others suppose it belongs to v. 1; but of course vary in their representations of the meaning,—according to their different views of the import of that verse, and according as they take the ἀδύνατον in a qualified or in an unqualified sense. If we adopt the view generally taken of the sense of v. 1, we may regard it as an argument to show the necessity of going on in the true profession and faithful practice of Christianity, founded on the desperate condition of apostates, and thus paraphrase, with Mr. Holden: "Let us strive to go on to perfection, and resolve upon it, v. 1—3, for it is impossible to renew again by repentance those who have been once enlightened, &c. and yet have fallen away, since they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh," &c. Yet thus the argument can scarcely be considered conclusive, and the case is thus made far more prominent than seems to have been meant. It is preferable, with Kuin., to suppose the reference in γάρ to be neither to v. 3, nor to v. 1, but (by an abruptness peculiar to passages written under mental agitation) to the matter which lay nearest to the heart of the writer; namely, the sluggishness and backwardness, nay, falling off, in Christian knowledge of those whom he is addressing; and whom he is here anxious to excite to a greater attention to the doctrines of their religion, by a diligent use of all their opportunities of instruction, and the means of grace. See xiii. 17. x. 25. Thus the sense may be represented with Kuin. as follows: "[Renuntiate inertiae, plenam accuratamque religionis cognitionem vobis comparate, ne a religione deficiatis;] nam qui religionis luce collustrati sunt, et ab ea deficient, ad meliorem frugem revocari non possunt, et penas luent gravissimas." Such may be a correct view of the passage; but if the above mode of accounting for the reference in γάρ be thought somewhat visionary, it will be better, with some ancient and several modern Commentators, as Whitby and Newc., to suppose the γάρ to refer to πάλιν θεμέλιον καταβαλλόμενοι; q. d. "Let us, I say, not have to lay again the foundation of our religion, or by giving way to sluggishness, gradually slide into apostasy; for it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance who," &c. That the crime of apostasy is here meant, is sufficiently evident. And this appears from what follows, and especially from the parallel passage at x. 26, 27. (which is the best comment on the present), ἐκουσίως γὰρ ἁμαρτανόντων ὑμῶν μετὰ τὸ λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας, οὐκ ἐτι περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἀπολείπεται ἴσως. Φοβερὰ δέ τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως, καὶ πυρὸς ζήλος, ἐσθίειν μέλ- λοντας τοὺς ὑπερπαντίους from a comparison of which with the present, we are far better enabled to explain the chief terms here (on which the sense mainly rests) ἀδύνατον, φωτισθ., παρα- πεσόντας, and ἀνακαινίζειν. No writer has, I think, thrown so much light on this most controverted passage (which has occasioned much perplexity to serious, but timid believers), as Bp. Jeremy Taylor in § 4 of his instructive treatise "On the effect of repentance," vol. ix. p. 199—202 of his works. He there shows that by παρα- πεσόντας is meant, in conjunction with what follows, a falling away from the state of excellent things, in which they had received all the present endearments of the Gospel—a full conviction and pardon of sins, the earnest of the Spirit, the comfort of the promises, an antepast of heaven itself. "Now (continues he) to fall away from all this cannot be by infirmity, ignorance, or surprise: which is meant by ἐκουσίως ἁμαρτάνειν, to sin wilfully, after they have received the knowledge of the truth. It must denote absolute apostasy, either unto heathenism or Judaism, or any other state of despising and hating Christ, as thus crucifying him afresh." On the expression φωτισ- θέντας, see the Note infra. In ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, Bp. Taylor shows there is also something peculiar; by which is, he thinks, meant, that such persons cannot be restored to their former condition, or to any other gracious covenant; since they have despised this. "Other persons who 'hold fast their profession,' and 'forget not that they were cleansed in baptism,' they, in case they do fall into sin, may proceed, in the same method, in their first renovation to repentance; that is, in their being solemnly admitted to the method and state of repentance for all sins known and unknown. But when this renovation is renounced; when they despise the whole economy; when they reject this grace, and throw away the covenant, there is 'nothing left' for such but a 'fearful looking-for of judgment;' for these persons are incapable of the mercies of the Gospel,—they are out of the way. For there being but one way of salvation, viz. by Jesus Christ, whom they renounce,—neither Moses, nor nature, nor any other name can restore them. And, 2. their case is so bad, and they are so impious and malicious, that no man hath power to persuade such men to accept of pardon by those means which they so disown. For there is no means of salvation but this one; and this one they hate, and will not have: they will not return to the old, and there is none left, by which they can be ἀνα- καινιζόμενοι, renewed; and therefore their condition is desperate." Finally, with respect to the expression ἀδύνατον, there need not have been such debate, as to whether it should mean absolutely impossible, or very difficult. The truth here (as not unfrequently) may be said to lie in θέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου, καὶ καλὸν γευσάμενους Θεοῦ ῥῆμα 5 δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, καὶ παραπесόντας, πάλιν 6 ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, ἀνασταυροῦντας ἑαυτοῖς τὸν Υἱὸν

medio. The learned Prelate above cited shows that the word is not to be understood in the natural sense, but in the legal and moral. "There are, he observes, degrees of impossibility, and therefore they are not all absolute." And this he illustrates from the case of a criminal condemned by the law, of whom we say it is impossible he should escape, i. e. by the law, it being clearly against him." In like manner (I would add) the apostate may be said to stand in the same place with respect to religion, that a deserter does with respect to an army; the one is condemned by the articles of war, and has as little chance of regaining the name and character of a brave man, as the other of ever again attaining to the state of a sincere believer. Thus we may, with Bp. Taylor, illustrate the expression from the parallel words οὐκ ἐπι ἀπολείπεται Ώσία, alluding to Moses' law, in which, for those that despised it, i. e. for apostates (as Maimonides expounds) there was no sacrifice appointed. "So that (continues he) ἀδύνατον does signify, in sensu forensi, a state of sin, which is sentenced by the Law to be capital and damning; but here it signifies the highest degree of that deadliness and impossibility, as there are degrees of malignity and desperation in mortal diseases; for of all evils, this state here described is the worst. And therefore here is an impossibility." Such an impossibility (we may observe), because the sin of apostasy being a sin against light and knowledge, and especially against that which is the very condition and instrument of salvation, FAITH,—that is destroyed without which no man can be saved; and the very anchor of the soul is thus broken. "Finally (says Bp. Taylor), besides all other senses of this word, it is certain, by the whole frame of the place, and the very analogy of the Gospel, that this impossibility here mentioned is not an impossibility of the thing, but only relative to the person. It is impossible to restore him whose state of evil is contrary to pardon and restitution, as being a renouncing the Gospel, that is, the whole covenant of pardon and repentance. Compare 1 John iii. 9. Yet if this man will repent with a repentance proportioned to that evil which he hath committed, that he ought not to despair of pardon in the court of heaven, we have the affirmation of Justin Martyr. So that this impossibility concerns not those that return and do confess him, but those that wilfully and maliciously reject this only way of salvation as false and deceitful, and never return to the confession of it again." Thus it appears that ἀδύνατος here (as elsewhere in Scripture and in other writers) denotes the highest degree of what we call moral impossibility, something so exceedingly difficult as to be utterly hopeless; though not beyond the reach of His grace, "with whom all things are possible." (Matt. xix. 26.)

As a warning against this falling away, the writer, in the words following, places in strong contrast the precious benefits accruing to true believers, with the hopeless condition of apostates; whose guilt is forcibly represented by being indirectly compared with that of those who crucified

the Lord of life; implying, consequently, a similar fate with theirs. The happy condition of the faithful is represented in glowing metaphors; in the interpretation, however, of which there has been no little difference of opinion. It should seem that the Apostle, by τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας—αἰῶνος, meant to designate the benefits in question as distributed into two parts, 1. those which respect Divine knowledge; 2. those which regard its results, in conferring happiness. The ἅπαξ φωτ. and the μετόχους γεν. Πν. ἁγ. fall into the former class; the other particulars into the latter. By φωτισθέντας is denoted, by a metaphor frequent in the Sept., the being enlightened by the truths of the Gospel. (Eph. i. 18. iii. 9.) The expression may be compared with the λαμβάνειν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας in a kindred passage at x. 26., though it is stronger. By the earlier Commentators and a few later ones (as Ern., Mich., and Dr. Burton) it is regarded as put for βαπτισθέντας. They, however, only prove that use to have prevailed at a much later period; not in the age of the Apostles. Yet there is, doubtless, an allusion to baptism, in this expression and ἀνακαινίζειν, especially as the things mentioned at v. 2. were the points in which candidates for baptism were instructed: and as we know the Apostles never allowed a repetition of baptism, the ἀδύνατον may have had an allusion to the non-reiteration of baptism. With respect to the other particular, μετόχους γενηθέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου, it has reference, not so much to the increase of religious knowledge in the ordinary way, namely, by the sanctifying graces of the Spirit, as by its extraordinary influences; occasionally, too, by the communication of those supernatural gifts by which miracles were worked.

To turn to the other class, the expressions indicating the privileges and blessings are suspended on the term γευσάμενους, which, by a figure extending to the Heb. טָעַם, the Latin gustare, and the correspondent terms in most languages, signifies to have experience of. So Ps. xxxiv. 9. Sept. γεύσασθε καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι χρηστός ὁ Κύριος. 1 Pet. ii. 3. εἰπερ ἐγεύσασθε ὅτι χρηστός ὁ Κύριος. Both the sacred writers seem to have had the Psalmist in mind. Carpz. aptly compares a similar sentiment in Philo p. 470. Ζητήσαντες καὶ τί τὸ τρέφον ἐστὶ τὴν ψυχὴν, ἐβρον μαζόντες ῥῆμα Θεοῦ καὶ λόγον ζεῖον—αἱ δὲ ἰδοῦσαι, καὶ γευσάμεναι, σφόδρα ἡσθεῖσαι, ἐμαζον μὲν ὅ ἐπαθον. I would observe that γευσ. is here used with the Genit., but just after with the Accus.; and, therefore, although our Translators render γευσ. in both cases by taste, we may suppose some difference of sense, which seems to be this. In the former case it signifies to have experience; and in the latter, to know [viz. the benefit of any thing] by experience. Δωρεάς ἐπουρανίου is by some explained, the gift of the Holy Spirit; by others (I think more properly), of the gift of God in the Gospel. So iii. 1. κλησείας ἐπουρανίου. The καλὸν Θεοῦ ῥῆμα is variously interpreted. Many Commentators understand it of the Gospel, or Christian religion, with its blessings, as derived from God. But thus there would be no more than the sense contained in δωρ. ἐπουρ. just before. It should seem best explained, with Theod., of the ancient, and some eminent modern Expositors, "the promise of God, as held out in the Old Testament, and fulfilled in the New," viz. of blessings here and salvation hereafter: a sense of ῥῆμα found also in Luke i. 38. ii. 29. and sometimes in the Sept., and corresponding to that of the Heb. נָתַן נָתַן. The next expression δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος is obscure. Some Expositors take it to mean "the miracles, or miraculous powers, of the Gospel dispensation;" others, "the blessings and advantages of a heavenly life." Neither of which interpretations, however, seems tenable. I would understand it of "the powerful motives and supports arising from the doctrine of a future state [revealed by God]." See Scott.

Παραπεσούτας. Literally, "those who have fallen away." A mild expression for τοὺς ἀποστάτας. Thus the LXX. render the same Heb. word נָפַל by παρὰπίπτειν and ἀποστασία. Here it is equivalent to ἀμαρτάνειν and ἀποστῆναι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ζώντος at x. 26. iii. 12. 'Ανακαίνιζεν signifies, 1. to rebuild decayed edifices; 2. to have them to renew; 3. in a metaphorical sense, to restore. So Chrys. explains: τὴν ψυχὴν παλαιωθείσαν ἀνακαίνιζεν. Here ἀνακ. eis met. is for ἀνακ. ὥστε μετανοεῖν, implying καὶ ἀναστρέφειν εἰς τὸν Κύριον, which is expressed at Acts xxvi. 20. This figurative sense of ἀνακαίνιζεν is not unexampled in other writers. So Philo p. 1004. cited by Loesner: ἀνισότητα τὴν ἀδικίας ἀρχὴν ἀνεκαίνισεν ἰσότητι (reformed by equality) ἥτις ἐστὶ πηγὴ δικαιοσύνης. The next words ἀνασταυρ., &c. represent the peculiar enormity of the offence,—namely, that by turning apostates, they represent Christ as an impostor, and consequently his crucifixion as just; and thereby put him to shame. Several eminent modern Expositors (and amongst the rest Stuart) adopt a somewhat different view of ἀναστ. from that taken by the ancient Expositors in general. He would not assign to the ἀνα the sense afresh, but would regard the expression as the same with the simple σταυρ. But all that they show is, that the word is capable of that sense, not that it must be so taken here. The Prof. indeed, urges that to interpret it crucify afresh, is contrary to the usus loquendi. But that is only applicable to the Classical, not to the Hellenistic Greek. And as σταυρώω, both in the Sept. and repeatedly in the N. T., not only in the Gospels but in the Epistles of St. Paul, signifies to crucify, contrary to Classical usage, which requires ἀναστ.; so why should not ἀναστ. mean to re-crucify? That it does mean this here, is plain from the context; otherwise the point between πάλιν, ἀνακαίν., and ἀνασταυρ. will be destroyed, and, indeed, the sense be weakened; for thus we must, with Stuart, explain it only of treating with ignominy and contempt, which is no other than is expressed in the words following. Ἐαντοῖς, i. e.

apud se, for ἐν ἑαντοῖς, quantum in se. On παραδειγ. see Note on Matt. i. 19.

7, 8. γῆ γὰρ ἡ πιούσα, &c.] To enforce the admonition contained in ἀδύνατον, v. 4. the Apostle now contrasts, in striking imagery, the respective conditions of those who, enjoying the advantages and privileges of the Gospel, use them aright, and of those who abuse them. The former are compared to fertile, and the latter to barren ground; the difference between which is denoted by the different effects which the rain from heaven has upon them; in the one causing exuberance of corn or grass, in the other raising up nought but thorns or briars. Blessing attends the one; cursing and burning the other. Thus are represented the different effects of the Christian doctrine on different persons, as in the parable of the Sower. Those (it is meant) who improve their spiritual advantages will be blessed, and those who are either wholly unfruitful in Christian graces, or abandon the Gospel, will be rejected, as thorny ground is rejected by the husbandman, and whose end will be, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire!"

Βοτάνη, in Classical usage, denotes any vegetable produce except corn; but in the Hellenistic, corn is also included. Εὐθετος properly denotes fitted or fit; and then suited to, useful for. Δι' οὓς, "on account of whom." Μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογ. is for εὐλογεῖται. The sense is simply, "enjoys God's blessing in fertility;" "meaning (says Stuart) either that the earth, when thus fruitful, is contemplated with satisfaction by its Creator; or that the earth which thus produces useful fruits, is rendered still more fruitful by Divine beneficence; the fruitfulness being the consequence of the Divine blessing, and by metonymy taken for the blessing itself." The former sense is preferred by Stuart; but I would rather adopt the latter, since it is usual both in the Old and N. T. to use such language as implies devout dependence on God for every thing. So Gen. xxvii. 27. "the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed;" i. e. is blooming and fruitful.

At ἐκφέρουσα the circumstances, of the land's having been watered and cultivated, are implied. And the sense (which is made plainer in the Pesch. Syr. Version than in any other), is, "But the land (supplying ἡ at ἐκφέρουσα) which [after receiving rain and cultivation] bringeth forth thorns," &c. Ἀδόκιμος, i. e. is held despicable by its owner, as unfit for cultivation. The word is properly used of money that will not pass.

—κατάρας ἐγγύς.] The sense (somewhat disputed) seems to be, "is near to being utterly rejected," literally, thrown up with a curse. So viii. 13. ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ. Thus land so hopelessly unproductive was called cursed land. The sense seems to be, "is near being cursed by God to utter barrenness," the opposite to μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ. So the Hebrews called a sterile field ἐπικατάρατος; i. e. devoted by God to a curse. See Psalm cvi. 34. Septuagint.

— ἥς τὸ τέλος εἰς καὺσιν.] The best Expositors are agreed that εἰς καὺσιν (scil. ἔστιν) is a Hebraism formed on עָשָׂה וְיָרָה, and that the verbal is for the Infinitive passive used as a noun. See Is. xlv. 15. The καὺσιν must not be understood, with some Expositors (as Mackn. and Burton) of being burnt up with drought; (because, as has been before seen, it is implied that the rain has fallen on the ungrateful soil,) but it must denote (as all the best Commentators are agreed) a process common in the East, and found more or less every where, by which foul land is ameliorated, by the thorns and thistles being pared off at the roots and heaped and burned; which both cleans and manures the soil. When the land is said to be burnt, it is only meant that the foul surface is burned. So Virg. Georg. i. 85. “Sæpe etiam steriles incendere profuit agros.” “Thus the whole (observes Stuart) is as much as to say: “You are now enjoying abundant means of spiritual improvement. If you act in a manner worthy of such privileges, God will approve and bless you; but if you disobey the Gospel, and become wholly unfruitful in respect to Christian graces, you are exposed to final rejection and endless punishment.”

9. πεπείσμεθα δὲ, κ. τ. λ.] Here the Apostle softens the seeming harshness of the address by expressions showing that he is not without hope of them, and that he has dealt thus plainly with them solely from affection. Πειπείσμεθα is not to be taken of full persuasion, nor even confident expectation, (for the Apostle's previous complaint of their sluggishness forbids that,) but merely denotes, as we popularly say, a good hope. So at Gal. v. 10. Paul says, ἐγὼ πέποιδα εἰς ὑμᾶς, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρονήσετε, and yet at iii. 1. he had called them foolish. In τὰ ἐχόμενα σωτ. the σωτ. is not to be taken, with some eminent Expositors, of temporal preservation; still less, with Schleus., of constancy and perseverance; but of salvation. Ἐχόμε. σωτ. may be rendered, “which are connected with and promotive of salvation.”

10. οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος, &c.] Whitby paraphrases thus: “For [if ye be not wanting to yourselves] God is not unkindful,” &c. But this is a perversion of the sense; which, indeed, is misunderstood by almost all the Paraphrasts. The γὰρ refers, I conceive, to the reasons for his good hope of their salvation. And those were founded partly in themselves and partly in God. Both are, I apprehend, adverted to in the next words. They had, it seems, shown such attention to one important branch of Christian duty, as justified him in the hope that they would in time add other virtues and graces. And what they had done must be supposed to have gained them such blessing and aid from God by His Holy Spirit as might serve to “support, strengthen, settle them;” and thus give an additional hope of their perseverance unto salvation. See Jude 24. The best Commentators are agreed, that ἄδικος is to be taken for unmerciful, as δίκαιος often means merciful. At ἐπιλαθέσθαι supply ὥστε, as in Galat. iii. 1. Μὴ ἐπιλαθῶ, here is, per meiosis, for μεμνήσεται. See Heb. xiii. 3. Compare x. 11 & 12; ix. 13.

The words τοῦ κόπου are not found in several ancient MSS., Versions, and some Fathers, and have been rejected by Mill and Beng., and cancelled by Griesb., Knapp, Schott, Tittm., Valpy, and Vat. To whose opinion I myself assented in the first Edition of the present Work. But on further consideration of the question, I see no sufficient reason to doubt their being genuine. External evidence is most decidedly in favour of them: for the MSS. that have them not are very few in number: and as to the ancient Versions, they are no good evidence in a matter which concerns the omission of words that seem superfluous. Internal evidence, too, is, I think, quite in favour of the words, since no good reason can be imagined for their insertion: for as to their being interpolated (according to the above Critics) from 1 Thess. i. 3. μνημ. ὑμῶν τοῦ ἔργου τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης. that is surely too hypothetical to be safely rested on. Neither is it probable; for such interpolations from one Epistle into another are of rare occurrence: this being a species of composition offering so little temptation; unlike historical records, in which a matter of fact may be, and has often been, introduced from the margin. On the other hand, for the omission of the words the best of all reasons may be imagined; since those early Critics who tampered with the text in so many other places, would be likely to do so here; especially as they waged a πόλεμος ἀκήρυκτος against pleonasm, or what they accounted such; though they did not always agree which to cancel and which to leave. So here some MSS. and Fathers omit ἔργον, and retain κόπον. But such falsely called pleonasm (as Longinus long ago proved) rather serve to promote the strength of a sentiment.

In τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης there is an Hendiadys, as in a not dissimilar passage of Soph. Aj. 536. ἐπὶ νηυσὶ ἔργον, καὶ πρόνοιαν ἦν ἔξου, and Eurip. Phœn. 189: μόχθου δὲ χάριν τῆνδ' ἐπιδάσω. It was, doubtless, the intention of the writer to dwell upon this labour and toil, in order to intimate that as χαλεπὰ τὰ καλὰ, so benevolence can rarely attain its object,—the real and permanent good of another,—without much pains and trouble. The same elegant allusion is observable in a passage of Soph. Œd. Tyr. 314. (which I adduce because the sentiment would not be unworthy of an Apostle): ἀνδρα δ' ὥφελειν, ἀφ' ὧν ἔχει τε καὶ δύνατο, κάλλιστος πόνοιν.

11, 12. Here the Apostle means to say, that he wishes them still to evince the same zeal and activity which they had already shown in performing offices of charity and benevolence, in the more important concern of making their hope of salvation firm and sure unto the end of their lives. The best Expositors are agreed that πληροφορίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος is for ἐλπίδα πεπληροφορημένην, signifying a sure hope, as at x. 22. ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, "unwavering faith," and Col. ii. 2. ἡ πληροφ. τῆς συνέσεως, for ἡ σύνεσις πλήρης.

The next words, ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ, &c., further develop the sense in ἐνδείκνυσθαι σπουδὴν before, and have reference to the ἐλπ. preceding; q. d. "that ye be not sluggish or faint in your hope;" to rouse which, the Apostle recommends an imitation of such as had evinced those qualities (faith and constancy) which are best calculated to stimulate hope and rouse exertion. Compare James v. 7, 8.

— κληρονομοῦντων.] The only true interpretation of this word is that of the ancient and most modern Commentators, who take it as an Aorist, and explain, "who have come into the enjoyment of the promised blessing of salvation," understanding the κληρ. as referring partly to the patriarchs their pious progenitors, who lived by faith in the promises of salvation through the future Saviour; and partly to those Hebrew Christians, who, imitating the faith and patience of their ancestors, had fought the good fight of faith and endured unto the end, and being at length delivered from their trials, had entered into the joy of their Lord promised to all his faithful servants. The plural in ἐπαγγ., as Kuin. observes, "is used because the promises in question were extended to the Patriarchs generally, and were given at various times and seasons, (see Gen. xii. 3; xxii. 16 & 18; xxvi. 3; xxviii. 13); all, however, centering in the promises of salvation through a Redeemer."

13, 14. Here the Apostle takes occasion, from the foregoing, to excite them to perseverance, by enlarging on the certainty of the promises of God confirmed by oath; recalling to their minds the many examples of faith presented by their ancestors, especially Abraham, whom he extols, though he shows him to have been inferior to Melchizedek; thus paving the way to represent the dignity of Christ, as being supreme. Γὰρ, "[for example]." Εἶχε, "had it in his power:" a significant frequent both in the Scriptural and Classical writers.

— ὥμοσε καθ' ἑαυτοῦ.] "Sanctissimè promisit," pledged his eternal Godhead to fulfil his engagement. So God is said at Num. xiv. 21, and elsewhere in the O. T., to swear by himself, as having none superior to swear by. Ἡ μὲν is a formula of serious affirmation and solemn engagement, often occurring in the Classical writers. Πληθύνων πλ. σε is well rendered by Böhme, "Næ omnibus te implebo bonis;" the reduplication being intensive. Εὐλογ. is here, as often, to be taken de effectu, i. e. blessing. "The Apostle (remarks Dr. Burton) only quotes part of the promise, because it was so well known to his readers; but his argument is concerned principally with those words, 'And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.'"

15. The Apostle here again inculcates constancy (as at v. 12. iii. 6. and elsewhere), and in order to enjoin it the more strongly, remarks, that it was only through constancy in faith that Abraham obtained the "promised blessing;" namely, of a son who should produce a progeny that should become numerous. The preternatural birth of a son under such remarkable circumstances was a sufficient pledge that what had been promised respecting him would be fulfilled. Other blessings, too, were connected with the birth of Isaac and the faith of Abraham, which Abraham did not, indeed, obtain by actual possession; but by anticipation, confident hope, and unwavering faith in the promises of God. Comp. John viii. 56. (Stuart.)

16. From the promise made by God to Abraham the writer takes occasion to speak on the firmness of the Divine counsels and purposes in general. See v. 18. (Kuin.)

— τοῦ μείζονος] i. e. "by some person greater than themselves, who can avenge falsehood," meaning God, who is called in John x. 26. μείζων πάντων. Of the next words καὶ πάσης—ὁ ὅρκος the sense has been disputed. The common version and some others are obviously wrong by omitting to express the force of the Article; as also are others in rendering, "the oath for confirmation;" since (as Abresch and Bp. Middleton observe) that sense would require ὁ εἰς βεβ. ὅρκος. "The meaning (adds the latter) is this: The oath (implied in ὀμνύουσι preceding) is to them the termination of all controversy unto confirmation; i. e. it causes uncertainty to end in assurance." This view of the sense is confirmed by the authority of Theophyl. and Œcumen.: καὶ πέρας πάσης ἀντιλογίας καὶ ἀμφισβητήσεως, εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι τὰ λεγόμενα παρ' αὐτοῦ (read αὐτῶν) ἐστὶν ὁ ὅρκος. So also the passage is taken by Kuin. and Stuart.

17. ἐν ᾧ περισσ. βουλόμενος—ὅρκῳ.] The ρονόμοις τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τὸ ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ, ἐμεσίτευσεν ὄρκῳ· ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμεταθέτων, ἐν 18 οἷς ἀδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεὸν, ἰσχυραν παράκλησιν ἔχωμεν οἱ καταφυγόντες κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμένης ἐλπίδος. Ἦν ὡς 19 ἄγκυραν ἔχομεν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀσφαλῆ τε καὶ βεβαίαν, καὶ sense of this passage (somewhat disputed) seems to be that assigned by Kuin. as follows: "Although faith would have to be reposed in the assertion of the God of truth, even without the interposition of an oath, yet, in condescension to human weakness, He subjoined an oath to the promise." This is confirmed by the authority of Theophyl. Τὸ ἀμετάθετον τ. βουλ. α., "the immutability of his will or purpose." To understand the full import of this expression, see Hooker's Ecdl. Pol. L. I. § 2., where he treats of "that Law which God from the beginning has set for himself to do all things by;" there showing "that the force of the term implies that there is a reason (however inaccessible to human comprehension or search) for whatsoever God doth." The use of the singular here, and not the plural, is (though unattended to by Commentators) not without its force. So Bp. Sanderson, in his 8th Sermon ad Pop. § 17. p. 657. (on Prov. xix. 21.), remarks, that "it is no commendation, but rather a disparagement of men's devices, that they are so many; but it is the honour of God, that his counsel is but one, and unchangeable; as it is said at Heb. vi. 17., where it is then laid down as the great foundation of our Christian hope, the very strength of our consolation."

—ἐμεσίτευσεν ὄρκῳ.] Of the various interpretations propounded by modern Expositors, Kuin. prefers that of Bretsch.; who explains μεσιτεύειν sponsorem esse, since a sponsor acts the part of a mediator between two parties. He renders, "promissionis veritatem spondit iuramento," and cites an example of μεσίτης in the sense sponsor from Josephus. Yet even this is liable to objection. For as God cannot be a mediator between himself and the heirs of the promise, so neither can He be a sponsor (in the above sense.) There is no reason to abandon the sense, "interposed by an oath," i. e. by a common Hypallage, interposed an oath, as the Vulg. freely renders: meaning, as Stuart explains, "made [so to speak] μεσίτην by an oath; interposed an oath between himself and the heirs of the promises," i. e. made an oath the means of removing all doubt on their part whether he would faithfully perform what he had promised. There is the very same Hypallage in Soph. Elect. 47. ἄγγελλε δ' ὄρκῳ προστιθεῖς ὅτι, &c. where the Schol. rightly take it for προστιθεῖς ὄρκον τῇ ἀγγελίᾳ.

18. ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμετ.] In further urging the argument founded on the oath, the Apostle (anxious in every way to infuse comfort in the afflicted minds of his readers) enlarges on this oath of God; and, in reference to it, resorts to a distinction which has been thought somewhat far-fetched; it being almost universally admitted, that by the two immutable things are meant the promise and the oath of God. To this, however, Storr and Stuart take strong exception. And they are of opinion, that by the two immutable things, in which believers may confide, are meant, 1. the oath that Abraham should have a Son (the Messiah) in whom all nations should be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18. 2. The oath that this Son should be High-priest for ever, after the order of Melchizedek, Psal. cx. 4. "These two oaths (says Stuart) it is impossible God should disregard, and the salvation of believers is therefore adequately and surely provided for." Yet whether this be a satisfactory solution of the difficulty, may be doubted; nay, it may be questioned whether the difficulty itself be not purely imaginary. Bp. Sanderson, I find (Serm. p. 178.), understood the passage as I do. Nor am I aware that that view is open to any well-founded objection. It may, indeed, seem to us to have something frigid and overstrained; but such forms of expression are quite in accordance with the style of Jewish composition, and of perpetual occurrence in the Rabbinical writers. Nay, examples are not wanting of such sort of harshness in the best authors of antiquity. So I have noticed in Thucydides ii. 95. ἐστράτευσεν διὰ δύο ὑποσχέσεις· τὴν μὲν βουλόμενος ἀναπράξαι, τὴν δὲ αὐτὸς ἀποδοῦναι. where see my Note.

Παράκλησιν is variously explained: but Kuin. seems right in retaining the common interpretation, consolation; which is supported by the authority of the best ancient Versions and Commentators. In οἱ καταφυγόντες κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμ. ἔλπ. there is a sensus pragmat., which may be thus evolved, "[we] who run to take refuge in and grasp at the hope set before us." There is a mixture of a nautical and an agonistic metaphor, προκ. referring to the βαρεῖον. The refuge is supposed to be sought by flying from sin, sorrow, and death, in order to obtain the hope of eternal life by Christ. Ἐλπίς here, as often, denotes the thing hoped for; though in the next verse it means the hope itself; of which double sense in the same passage examples are adduced by Kuin.

19. From the nautical image the writer slides into that of an anchor. So common, indeed, was it so to designate Hope, that an anchor is found on ancient medals as a symbol of hope. Ἐχομεν is for κατέχ., as in an anonymous writer cited by Chrys. κατέχεν τὴν ἀγκυραν τοῦ πνεύματος. There was, too, an ancient proverb, ἐν πείσῃ (a sure cable) καρδίαν τηρεῖν. Εἰσερχ., the best Expositors are agreed, is to be referred, not to ἄγκ., but to ἔλπ. Render, "which hope gives us an entrance into the inner sanctuary, where God dwells." The καταπέτασμα was the thick veil or curtain which separated the Sanctum from the Sanctum Sanctorum: (that which parted the Sanctum from the Court of the Gentiles being called κάλυμμα) and designated Heaven. So Joseph. says εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον παραπέτασμα. "The meaning (observes Stuart) is, that the objects of hope are in heaven, where God dwells; and the sentiment is: 'Hold fast the objects of your Christian hope.' These will keep you steady in adherence to your holy religion, and preserve you, like an anchor, from making shipwreck of the faith."

20. ὅπου προόδρομος, &c.] On the sense of these words some difference of opinion exists. The more recent Commentators, from Dindorf to Stuart, are of opinion that προδ. ἦλθε is put for προῆλθε: appealing to Æschyl. Theb. (196. Blomf.) ἐπὶ δαίμονων προόδρομος ἦλθον ἀρχαῖα βρέτη. That passage, however, suits not the present purpose; since there προδ. is for προτροπάδην, as in Soph. Antig. 108. φυγάδα πρόδρομον. Indeed, it may be doubted whether the word ever simply means one who goes before any thing; for though in the 400th fragment of the Tragedies of Æschylus we have δέσποιν' Ἑκάτη τῶν βασιλείων προόδρομος μελάθρων: yet there, I am persuaded, the true reading is πρόδρομος, to be taken adjectively, for πρό μελάθρων ἰδρυμένος; meaning the statue. So Pausan. iv. p. 337. ἔστιν ἐκτὸς τεύχους ὁ Θεὸς (the statue of the God) ἰδρυμένος. In short, wherever it means one who runs or goes forward, it is there almost always implied, that the going forward is to prepare the way for those who stay behind. So Eurip. Iph. Aul. 424. ἐγὼ δὲ προόδρομος σῆς παρασκευῆς χάριν ἤκω. Hence I see little force in the observation here generally made, that Christ is merely said to be our pre-cursor, to intimate that it is our duty to follow him. That is, I apprehend, but a part of the truth. This was, I conceive, said not so much by way of exhortation, as of encouragement; implying that the possibility of entering the heavenly kingdom is ascertained, and preparation made for those that follow.

And here the best comment is a passage of John xiv. 2. πορεύομαι ἐτοιμάσαι τόπον ὑμῖν. The meaning, then, is, that Christ, having opened heaven, remains there, as the High-priest, to introduce thither all the faithful into the presence of God. The above view of the sense is supported by the authority of Chrys., Theodoret, and Ecumen., of the ancients; and, of modern Expositors, by Schlit., Wolf, and Carpz. Render, with Prof. Scholefield, "Whither Jesus is entered as a forerunner for us."

The expression ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν refers to Christ's Priesthood, and serves to introduce, by the mention of Melchizedek, another subject, on which the writer now proceeds to treat: namely,—as it was lawful for the Mosaic High priest only to enter, through the veil, into the inner sanctuary; so Jesus, as High priest of the new dispensation, alone entered the eternal sanctuary above, making expiation of perpetual efficacy for sinners, Heb. ix. 11, 12, 22—26.

VII. The Apostle now takes up again a subject which he had before slightly touched on at v. 6. and 10.; and pursues it to vii. 25., where he resumes the topic broken off at v. 10., and completes what he intended to say concerning it, vii. 26—28.; explaining the passage which he had referred to from Ps. cx. 4. And after removing the doubt which might seem to hinder him from treating of the sublime doctrines of the allegories and types of Christ, he labours to convince them of the authority, prerogatives, and exalted Priesthood of Melchizedek. His argument is founded on the oath of God, by which Jesus was constituted a High Priest for ever, according to the order or similitude of Melchizedek. Whatever, therefore, as a priest, this personage was, whose history is recorded Gen. xiv. 18. et seq., such must Jesus our High Priest be. Now the superiority of the priesthood of Melchizedek is shown in v. 1—10.; and though the Apostle has not expressly stated the conclusion, but left it to be supplied by the reader, it is clearly this, that, as Melchizedek is superior to the Aaronical priests, and Christ is a priest after the order of Melchizedek, Christ must be far superior to them. (Dind., Iaspis, Stuart, and Holden.)

The Apostle points out the resemblance between the type Melchizedek and the antitype Messiah. From v. 1—10. the type is described and explained, first his priesthood, and thence its excellence. From v. 11. the type is transferred to the antitype; and the superiority of Christ's priesthood over Aaron's demonstrated. (Schöttg.) On the whole of this parallel Limborch judiciously remarks: "Observandum est, scriptorem sacrum non hoc velle, omnia quæ Melchisedeco cum Christo communia dicit, secundum literam precise esse similia, sed certo quodam modo loquendi: ac perinde de Melchisedeco quædam dicere, quæ de illo non alio sensu dicuntur, nisi quatenus Christo assimilatur, quæque absolute de Melchisedeco dici non possunt: ac proinde quod ait v. 9. ὡς ἔπος εἶπεν, ut ita dicam, idem etiam aliis, quæ v. 3. de Melchisedeco ait, applicandum; i. e. certo tantum modo loquendi hæc de Melchisedeco dici."

1. The γὰρ is resumptive and explanatory, and may be rendered enim, nam. Some Commentators after ἰερεὺς supply ἦν which, however, mangles the course of argument, from an examination of which Kuin. shows that "the periodus oratoria drawn from v. 1. ends at the words of v. 3. μένει ἰερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές; and that these words belong to Melchizedek, and are to be considered as the predicate; while all the rest that precedes is subjoined to the subject, describing it more at large." This, it may be observed, is confirmed by the use of the Article at Μελχ., which Bp. Middl. shows would not otherwise have been employed. Here it has been doubted whether Μελχ. is to be regarded as an appellative or title of honour, or a proper name. The latter is the common opinion, and, as Dind. and Kuin. prove, the best founded. At all events a real person is here designated, and not (as some suppose) an imaginary one. Yet of those who admit the reality, all are not agreed as to the nature of his person. Many ancients and some moderns have supposed him to have been a superhuman person; while others suppose him to be the same as Enoch, or Shem, or Job. There seems, however, most probability in the opinion

ἱερεὺς τοῦ Θεοῦ [τοῦ] ὑψίστου, — ὁ συναντήσας Ἀβραάμ ὑποστρέφοντι ἀπὸ τῆς κοπῆς τῶν βασιλέων, καὶ εὐλογῆσας αὐτόν· ᾧ καὶ δεκάτην ἀπὸ πάντων ἐμέρισεν Ἀβραάμ· πρῶ- 2

of Josephus, of the ancients, and several eminent moderns, that he was a descendant, not far removed, of one of the sons of Noah; that he was a powerful chieftain, or head of a tribe, among the Canaanites, and, after the custom of the patriarchal ages (transmitted, I would add, to those earliest of colonies from Asia, in America, and found in Mexico) was, as head of his tribe, both King and Priest.

— Σαλήμ.] Whether this was the same as Jerusalem is a disputed question. Almost all the ancient and most modern Expositors think it was; while some, as Carpz., Heinr., and Dind., maintain it was not. But Kuinöl, who has discussed the question with his usual diligence and ability, decides in favour of the former opinion.

— ἱερεὺς τοῦ Θεοῦ τ. ὑψ.] Some eminent recent Commentators have thought that ἱερεὺς here only signifies minister: but Winzer in a learned Dissertation "On the Priesthood of Christ," cited by Kuin., has quite refuted that notion, and satisfactorily shown that "Melchizedek was such a priest as offered up sacrifices; as, indeed, is apparent from the comparison with Christ as priest, who offered up himself, in the place of a victim, to God. Nay he is called by Philo p. 381. ὁ μέγας ἀρχιερεὺς." How highly the Jews of the Apostle's days esteemed the honour of priesthood, the Commentators have fully shown.

— ὁ συναντήσας Ἀ.] Kuin. has here ably removed a seeming discrepancy between this account and what is said in Gen. xiv. 17.; from whence it may, as he shows, be collected that Melchizedek did meet Abraham; though the circumstance is only expressly mentioned of the King of Sodom. I have here followed Knapp and Goetschen in including the words ὁ συναντήσας—Γῆν τοῦ Θεοῦ in a sub-parenthesis; since "they form, as Stuart observes, a parenthetic explanation, thrown in for the sake of suggesting to the reader's mind some considerations respecting the character and dignity of Melchizedek, which would be very useful in order to a right understanding of the comparison to be drawn further on."

— τῆς κοπῆς.] Notwithstanding that all our Translators render this "slaughter," yet its true sense, I conceive, is simply defeat, meaning a total overthrow. A metaphor found in the Heb. כָּרַח, the Greek κόπτω, the Latin cedere, and the English beat. In the same manner, too, I would take Josh. x. 20. κόπτοντες αὐτούς κοπήν μεγάλην σφδέρα. See also Judith xv. 17.

Εὐλογῆσας is by many recent Commentators taken to mean no more than "having congratulated him." See Rosenm. and Schleus. But it has been fully proved by Ernesti, Winzer, and Kuin., that the word must here have that more eminent sense which the ancient Expositors assign to it,—as denoting a sacerdotal benediction.

So that the expression does not simply denote bona apprecari, but bona, ut certò eventura apprecari. See Levit. ix. 22. Num. vi. 23. This is plain from v. 7. τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος εὐλογεῖται. It is implied therefore that what was uttered was ex autoritate monitumque Divino; in short, such a blessing as that which Jacob desired, and obtained of the angel, Gen. xxxii. 29.

2. ἀπὸ πάντων] scil. τῶν ἀκροθινίων, as is expressed at v. 4. Heinr. and Rosenm. attempt, but in vain, to prove this to have been only a courteous interchange of presents between two chieftains. The Apostle's language will admit of no such sense; but plainly implies what is expressed by Philo, p. 437. (confirmed by the Rabbins) that this tenth was given νικηφόρῳ Θεῷ χαριστήρια τῆς νίκης. That the proportion in question was not, as the above Commentators aver, accidental, is clear from what is said by Spelman and Selden on Tithes; who have traced back the custom, of dedicating tithes to religious uses, to so remote an antiquity, that it is supposed by Parkhurst to have existed as early as the dispersion of Babel; nay, he thinks, may have made a part of the Patriarchal religion before the deluge.

— πρῶτον μὲν ἐρμηνευόμενος—εἰρήνης.] The best mode of taking these words is to consider them as elliptical, and (with Carpz.) to be supplied as follows: Πρῶτον μὲν ἐρμηνευόμενος ἐστὶν ὁ Μελχισεδέκ κατὰ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης· ἔπειτα δ' ἐστὶ καὶ βασιλεὺς Σαλήμ, ὅ ἐστι ἐρμηνευόμενος βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης.

— βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης.] This is by some Expositors (including Stuart) taken to be equivalent to βασιλεὺς δίκαιος; while others (as Ernesti, Boehme, and Kuin.) have gone far to prove, that the expression here designates such a king as discharges his functions, whether regal or sacerdotal, so as to make his subjects righteous and holy; with allusion to that full justification which we obtain through the intercession of the great High Priest, JESUS. So βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης is shown by Winzer to be an appellation adapted to the great antitype, the "Prince of peace," the reconciler of man to his offended Maker, and who put away the enmity between Jews and Gentiles. Compare Eph. i. 10. Col. i. 18—23. Yet, after all, the former interpretation may be the true one; especially since I find it confirmed by Joseph. Antiq. vi. 4., where speaking of the original founding of Jerusalem, he says: ὁ δὲ πρῶτος κτίσας (read ὁ κτίσας) ἦν Χαναανίων δυνάστης, ὁ τῇ πατρίῳ γλώσσῃ κληθεὶς Βασιλεὺς Δίκαιος· ἦν γὰρ δὴ τοιοῦτος. Διὰ τοῦτο ἱεράσαστό τε τῷ Θεῷ πρῶτος, καὶ τὸ ἱερὸν πρῶτος, δευτέρως Ἱεροσόλυμα τὴν πόλιν προσηγόρευσε, Σόλυμα καλουμένην πρότερον.

3. ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, ἀγεν.] On the sense of these words much difference of opinion exists.

 7 χωρὶς δὲ πάσης ἀντιλογίας τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος ^{Gal. 3. 16.}

The two most probable interpretations are the following. 1. That of many ancient and some eminent modern Expositors, from Heins. down to Stuart, who take the sense to be, "whose father and mother are not mentioned in Scripture." So the Pesch. Syr., "cujus nec pater, nec mater scripti sunt in genealogiis." 2. That of others, as Kuin., who, adopting a modified view, interpret, "who had not a father a priest, nor a mother the daughter of a priest." Ἀγεν. is added for explanation, and means properly one whose origin and pedigree are unknown. Others however, think the sense is clear from v. 6. μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν scil. υἱῶν Λευὶ. They explain ἀγενεαλ. "one who is not of the Sacerdotal race, who does not derive his family from the sacerdotal tables." Which finds a striking counterpart in Christ.

Of the next words μήτε ἀρχὴν—ζωῆς the sense has also been much disputed; but, I think, without reason. We have only to observe, (though the Commentators have generally neglected to do so), that the Apostle must have intended the words to be taken in two senses, as applied to Melchisedek and to Christ, the type, and the antitype. As said of the former, the sense may be that assigned by Cameron, Limborch, and others, down to Schmidt and Kuin., "having no beginning of his [Sacerdotal] days, nor end of his [Sacerdotal] life;" or according to others, "having no limited time for the commencement and expiration of his office," as had the Levitical priests, who were restricted to serve between the ages of 30 and 50. As applied to the latter, CHRIST, the words will have their literal sense, and must refer to the eternity of Christ.

The next words ἀφωμοιωμένος τῷ Υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ are not, I think, to be referred to what immediately follows (since Melchisedek's priesthood ended with his life; Christ's will only terminate with his Mediatorial reign); but to the words just preceding, taken by themselves, and no other assimilation understood, but that of his "being made by the Divine decree a type of that great High Priest, who had neither beginning of days, nor end of life." And Melchisedek might be said to remain "a priest for ever," since sacred history makes no mention of any successor.

4—7. The Apostle here sets forth the superiority of Melchisedek to Abraham, on the ground that this superiority was acknowledged by Abraham himself, in the act of rendering tithe to him; consequently the inferiority acknowledged by him must attach to his descendants.

—τῶν ἀκροθ.] The word properly denoted the first fruits (ἀπαρχαί) of the spoils taken in war; but came at length to designate the whole of those spoils; and since Josephus and Philo, in relating the story, both testify that Melchisedek received the tenth of the whole of the spoils, the best Expositors have, with reason, supposed that to be the meaning here.

5. καὶ οἱ μὲν—αὐτῶν.] Render "And those, indeed, of the tribe of Levi, who hold the office of the priesthood, have a direction by the Law to take tithe of the people,—that is, their brethren, though sprung from the loins of Abraham [like themselves]." Τὴν ἱερατείαν λαμβ. is said, since, though all the tribe had a right to tithes, all were not priests, but only the sons of Aaron. The argument goes on the principle (acknowledged by those here addressed) that the rendering of tithes to another implied inferiority in the payer. With ἐντολὴν ἔχουσιν compare John xix. 7. νόμον ἔχουмен. Ἀποδεκατοῦ generally signifies to pay tithes, but here (in a Hippil or Hithpahal use) to cause them to be paid one, to receive them, as also in 1 Sam. viii. 15. Nehem. x. 37. Ἐξέρχεσθαι ἐκ τῆς ὁσφύος τυγνός is a Hellenistic phrase, found in the Sept., and corresponding to the Classical one γενναῖσθαι ὑπὸ τινος.

6, 7. ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλ. ἔξ α.] "But he (i. e. Melchisedek) who did not trace his origin from them (and consequently might be thought no priest by the Jewish law) received tithes," intimating that his priesthood was of another kind, and in virtue of another authority. There is an emphasis on Ἀβρ.; and εὐλόγ. contains the other argument for superiority; which is plain if the word be taken in the same sense as at v. 1. The plural in ἐπαγγελίαι here and at Gal. iii. 16., as used of one promise (that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed) is either put dignitatis gratiâ, or rather with reference to the several repetitions of the original promise. The δὲ is argumentative, and may be rendered now. The τὸ ἔλαττον is reckoned among the examples of the use of the neuter for the masc. as John vi. 37. πάν. 1 Cor. vi. 11. ταῦτα. and often in the Classical writers. In the Scriptures, however, it should seem to be rarely employed (as in the Classics) for no better reason than to promote cloquence of diction; but almost always on account of some delicate propriety. Here the neuter is better adapted to a general proposition such as the present; and, moreover, does not bring a mortifying comparison so home to those here addressed.

8. Here another ground of superiority is urged. Ὡδε, i. e. under the Levitical law, which assigned them tithes. Οἱ ἀποθνήσκοντες, i. e. those who exercise their office only in succession, each succeeding to the other by death, and consequently only life-possessors. Ἐκεῖ δὲ, "but there," i. e. in the case of Melchizedek's priesthood. Μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῇ, i. e. [one receiveth them] of whom it is testified (namely, Ps. cx.) that he liveth [for ever], μένει εἰς διηνεκές, as it is said at v. 3. This view of the sense (on which see Recens. Synop.) I find supported by the opinion of Theophyl., Kuin., and Stuart.

9, 10. Here the argument is, that the Levites virtually paid tithes through Abraham their ancestor: a somewhat bold argument, but proceeding on a principle recognized by those to whom it is addressed. (See Iasp. ap. Recens. Synop.) It is, however, softened by the qualifying expression ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, intended to hint that he did not mean to press on the argument. See some excellent remarks in Stuart's 14th Excursus.

— ἐν τῇ ὁσφύϊ, &c.] The meaning is, that even then, when Melchizedek met Abraham, Levi already (in a certain sense) existed, and through Abraham, paid tithes to the king of Salem, i. e. acknowledged inferiority compared with him. Here, as often, the conclusion is left to be supplied, and the argument is: Christ is a priest after the order of Melchizedek. Melchizedek is superior to the Aaronical priests: consequently Christ, as a priest, is superior to them. (Stuart).

Should some parts of the Apostle's reasoning with respect to this parallel drawn by him between the person of Melchizedek and that of our blessed Saviour, appear to dwell upon seemingly trifling coincidences of facts, we should recollect that it was from that very circumstance admirably well adapted for the convincing of the parties to whom it was specially addressed. The commentaries of the Rabbinical writers upon their own sacred books were, as is well known, almost uniformly of this minute, and as to the eye of modern criticism it may appear, over ingenious, character; not merely the general phraseology of any passage under review, but the collocation of the words, and even the number of syllables contained in them, being sometimes made the subject of discussion, and adduced by them in confirmation of certain conclusions. (Shuttleworth.)

11—18. The Apostle now proceeds to prove the superiority of Christ by another mode of argument, which may be stated, with Stuart and Holden, as follows: "If the Levitical priesthood had accomplished all that was needed (a free atonement and salvation), there would have been no occasion for another priest to arise after a different order,—namely, after the order of Melchizedek, v. 11. But if the priesthood were changed, there must also be a change of the law under which it was appointed, v. 12. Now that the Levitical priesthood was intended to be changed, is evident from this,—that Christ, of whom the things in Ps. xc. 4. were said, sprang from Judah, of which tribe no one was allowed by the Mosaic law to officiate at the altar, v. 13, 14. And farther, it is still more clear, from God's oath, that there was to be another priest, different from, and superior to, the Aaronical priesthood; inasmuch as he was to be after the order of Melchizedek, v. 15—17., and perpetual. Consequently the law of Moses was to be abolished, and to give place to a more perfect dispensation, v. 18, 19., the High Priest of which must therefore be pre-eminent."

— τελείωσις ἦν.] This term τελείωσις has been variously interpreted. Some (following the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg.) render it consummatio, accomplishment, viz. of the design of the priesthood. Others, perfectio; which may be understood to express the same sense; and is by Kuin. thought to be required by the context, and the subject matter, namely, the Levitical priesthood, the main purpose of whose order was to sacrifice for expiation. Others, however, understand the perfection of consummate holiness: others, again, of perfect happiness. For my own part, I agree with Prof. Stuart, that "it is best explained by a reference to some corresponding passages in the subsequent part of the Epistle; as ix. 9. compared with v. 14. and x. 1. compared with vv. 2—4.; whence it appears that the writer meant to say, that the sacrifices could not bestow peace of conscience, could not take away the burden of sin from the mind of the worshipper, but left him filled with apprehensions of the penalty of the Divine law still to be executed upon him." On the use of the Imperfect ἦν without ἂν (where in English the Subjunctive would be used) see Matth. Gr. Gr. §. 510.

— ὁ λαὸς γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῇ νενομοθέτητο.] Of these words the sense is disputed, and depends upon that assigned to ἐπ' αὐτῇ. This, the best Commentators are of opinion, must mean "under the condition of being subject to it," i. e. the priesthood. Perhaps, however, the αὐτῇ should rather be referred to τελείωσις, and the sense may be: "For the people were put under the law, or had the law given them," i. e. on account of that τελείωσις. A sense of ἐπὶ occurring in 2 Tim. ii. 14. Luke v. 5. ix. 48. Acts iii. 16. 1 Cor. i. 4. Phil. i. 5. iii. 9. And so ἐφ' ᾧ in Rom. v. 12. 2 Cor. v. 4. Phil. iv. 10.

— τίς ἔτι χρεία—ἱερέα.] The meaning is, "What need was there for it to be abolished, and another substituted for it, unless for its insufficiency to expiation; which would prove the Levitical priesthood greatly inferior to Christ's.

— ἀνίστασθαι] “to be raised up.” The word is often used of introduction or accession to any public office, especially the Regal or Sacerdotal. Many eminent recent Commentators take λέγεσθαι as put for ἐκλέγεσθαι, “to be constituted.” For that signification, however, no sufficient authority is alleged. And this is even more the case with some other senses which have been assigned. It is best rendered “to be nominated or styled,” which may imply appointment.

12. μετατιθεμένης γὰρ—γίνεται.] There has been needless obscurity occasioned here by rendering the γὰρ nam. for. The use of it falls, I conceive, under that extensive class, where the reason referred to is to be gathered from the context, or the subject-matter. And we may render it nempe, scilicet, quippe; of which sense several examples may be seen in Schleus. Lex. in v. §. 4. Μετατίθω. imports abandonment of the old and the substitution of a new law. The necessity here mentioned is, as Rosenm. remarks, a necessity arising from the condition of human nature, i. e. what Dialecticians call a necessity of consequence; the means of atonement, as Abp. Newc. says, depending on the priesthood. That a change of the priesthood involved a change of the law, is not what the writer means to prove; for that his readers would admit without proof. But that there was this change of priesthood (necessarily involving a change of law) is what he proceeds to establish, in vv. 13—17; and that by two arguments, 1. That the High Priest Christ was not descended from the tribe of Judah, 13, 14. 2. That he was to be a High Priest for ever, and consequently no change of priesthood is any longer to be expected. See Kuin. Moreover, as Christ's priesthood differed from the Levitical, so must the law by which it is regulated differ from that which regulated the Aaronical priesthood. See more in Stuart.

13. ταῦτα] i. e. his being a priest after the order of Melchizedek, and of his having an eternal priesthood. Μετέσχ. Literally, “had part in, had to do with, i. e. belonged to.” So Diod. Sic. p. 217. (cited by Munthe) μετέχειν τῆς παλαιῆς. Προσέσχηκε τῷ θυσ. is equivalent to the προσεδρεύειν τῷ θυσ. at 1 Cor. ix. 13., where see Note. Προδῆλον is a stronger term than δηλον, and synonymous with the κατάδηλον in the verse following, it may mean prominently conspicuous. See Recens. Synop. and Note on 1 Tim. v. 24. In ἀνατέταλκεν the best Commentators are agreed that the metaphor is derived from the springing up of plants; and they remark that the Heb. נָצַח (a plant) is often used in the O. T. of the Messiah, and that נָצַח is sometimes rendered by the Sept. ἀνατολή, and sometimes βλάστημα. That ἔρνος and θάλας are in the Classical writers used of illustrious persons, is well known.

15, 16. περισσότερον κατὰδ.] “still plainer is it,” namely, that the priesthood of Christ is far superior to that of Aaron, and that the law is to be changed. Κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότη. is equivalent to κατὰ τὴν τάξιν. On the sense of the next words ὅς οὐ κατὰ—γέγονε see Dind., Stuart, and Kuin., the latter of whom justly rejects the many novel interpretations proposed by recent Commentators, and in general adopts the common mode of explanation, which is supported by the context. The sense may be expressed by paraphrase as follows: “Who (i. e. Christ) was not made such (i. e. a High Priest) by a law of fleshly commandment [like the Mosaic, which was so, inasmuch as its ordinances were frail, looked no further than this life, and therefore temporary, and to be abrogated, Eph. ii. 15.], but through the power of an endless life;” namely, as having in him the power of endless life, involved in the promise and oath of God, “Thou art a Priest for ever,” &c. Σαρκ. may have been also intended to suggest the inferiority of the old Law in respect of its carnality; and that the exalted excellence of the new High Priest demanded a corresponding excellence in the law, namely, by passing from a carnal to a spiritual service. With νόμος ἐντολῆς Kuin. compares Rom. ii. 26. δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου, and well observes, that the Apostle might have written κατὰ νόμον σαρκικόν, but that he used the circumlocution for better correspondence to κατὰ δύν. ζ. αἰ. On the var. lect. σαρκίνης see Note on 2 Cor. iii. 3.

17. μαρτυρεῖ] scil. ὁ Θεός. The conclusion, Stuart remarks, that the law is also changed, is left to be supplied by the reader.

18, 19. The Apostle here repeats more positively what he has before said respecting a change of the law and the priesthood, and at the same time gives a reason for the change. Verse 18, then, is closely connected with the words of the Psalm, especially the phrase κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχ.; for this order of things was contrary to the Mosaic law. (Kuin.) q. d. "For there is indeed implied in these words an annulling of the former ordinances [concerning the priesthood], and an introduction of a better hope." With this sense, however, seems interwoven a reason for the abrogation in question. Διὰ τὸ α. ἀσθ. καὶ ἄνωφ., "because of its weakness and uselessness" (viz. for the desired object, expiation) as is made clear by the parallel clause οὐδὲν—νόμος, of which the full sense is, "for the law [by its sacrifices and the observances of the priesthood] provided no real expiation and atonement for sin." On this signification of τελειοῦν see Note on ii. 10. and supra v. 11. To advert to the construction, Theophyl., of the ancients, and the best modern Expositors are agreed that ἀθέτησις μὲν has corresponding to it ἐπεῖς. δὲ, with a repetition of γίνεται. Ἐπεισαγωγὴ signifies superinduction. It is a very rare word. The Commentators have, however, here adduced but one example, from Joseph. Ant. 11, 6, 3., to which I add Thucyd. viii. 92. I would also compare a similar expression in Eurip. Hel. 1037. εἰς φέρεῖς γὰρ ἐλπίδας. By the ἐλπίδος is meant, not the author of hope (as Rosenm. explains), but the hope of salvation held forth in the Gospel, and introduced by Jesus, by which (the Apostle adds) we (alone) have approach to God, namely, with a hope of acceptance, through our great mediator Jesus. The commandment denoted by ἐντολή is (as Kuin. observes) not to be confined to the priesthood, but extended to the whole of the Mosaic Law, so as to be equivalent to νόμος; as Mark vii. 8, 9. In applying the epithets ἀσθ. and ἄνωφ. to the law, there is, we may observe, something very similar to the language used in the Epistles of St. Paul to the Romans and Galatians. So Gal. iv. 9. ἀσθενὴ καὶ πτωχὰ στοιχεῖα [τοῦ νόμου]. Indeed, almost the whole of that Epistle is occupied in showing the imperfection of the Law, for justification, and that it is therefore abrogated. See Kuin. and especially Stuart, who have proved at large the striking coincidence in doctrine and expression between this Epistle and those to the Romans and Galatians, which point out how the law was weak, and in what sense it was useless; showing, as Carpz. observes, that neither can the moral law make us holy, nor the ceremonial one, expiate our sins. And what is true of the Mosaic Law, is also true of the law of nature.

ἄσθενές καὶ ἄνωφελές, ^r (οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος,) ¹⁹

19. ἐγγίζομεν τ. Θε.] "we have access to God." The best comment on this is Eph. iii. 12.

The sense of ἐγγίζειν or προσέρχεσθαι or προσάγειν τῷ Θεῷ is "to be permitted to have access to God in prayer," i. e. with the hope of acceptance and favour.

20—23. Here is further proved by implication the superiority of Christ, from his having been appointed with the solemnity of an oath, while the Aaronical priests were not.

The construction here is involved and irregular; for at οὐ χωρὶς ὀρκωμοσίας is to be supplied from what follows, ἱερεὺς γέγονε Ἰησοῦς; or, with Schmid, Böhme, and Kuin., διαθήκης ἔγγυος γέγονεν; and καθ' ὅσον at v. 20. has answering to it κατὰ τοσούτον at v. 22, the intermediate portion (v. 21.) being parenthetical, and added for explanation. The words may be literally rendered, "And [there is this argument too,—that] inasmuch as he was made a priest not without an oath, (for those have been made priests without an oath, but he with an oath, even that of him who said unto him, 'The Lord hath sworn and will not repent,' &c.) in just so much is he made the mediator of a better covenant." Compare viii. 6. The argument may be stated with Stuart thus: "The Gospel is a better source of hope; for as much (καθ' ὅσον) as the appointment of a priest, by an oath, exceeds, in solemnity and importance, an arrangement to take the office merely by descent, so much does the new covenant, of which Jesus is the sponsor, exceed the old." Ὀρκωμοσία is not (as Kuin. considers it) the same as ὄρκος, but (as Tittm. de Syn. observes) denotes a solemn affirmation, or promise on oath. It is a rare word, though found in Ez. xvii. 19, and 3 Esdr. viii. 9. The Classical writers use ὀρκωμόσιον, though in the sense covenant, or treaty sanctioned by oath.

The words following are explanatory of the nature of the oath. Now when an oath of this kind accompanies an appointment, it is implied that the appointment shall not be reversed; which is here expressed by οὐ μεταμελ.; i. e. "will not alter the purpose which hath gone out of his mouth," Ps. lxxxix. 34. Διαθήκη signifies 1. a disposition or arrangement of any thing; 2. a covenant; 3. when applied to the Jewish law, or to Christianity, it denotes (with allusion to the engagements and conditions involved) a dispensation. Ἐγγυος, sponsor, or surety. A word occurring nowhere else in the N. T., but found in Ecclesiasticus xxix. 15. 2 Macc. x. 28. The Classical writers use ἐγγυητής or ἐχέγγυος. The term is one of extensive signification, and here carries with it a double sense,—namely, of Surety and Mediator; as is plain from the parallel passage at viii. 5, where the term used is μεσίτης. These senses answer to the two principal parts of Christ's work in the business of man's redemption.

23, 24. Another point of superiority in Christ's priesthood to that of the Levites, is here stated, founded on the fact, that the latter is continually changing, and passing into different hands by succession; while the former is unchangeable and perpetual. The comparison, however, is especially intended to apply to the High Priest's office; Jesus being all along considered as ἀρχιερεὺς; though ἱερεῖς, and not ἀρχ., seems here to be used in order to include the priests as well as the High Priest. Εἰσι γεγον., for γεγόνασι. An idiom not infrequent in the N. T., and sometimes occurring in the Classical writers, as Thucyd. i. 38. ἀρέσκοντές ἴσμεν. The πλείονες (as Stuart observes) refers not to the number of Priests existing at any one time, (said to have been 1500,) but to the numbers formed by repeated succession. Of the High Priests there had been 75 at the destruction of Jerusalem. Παραμένειν must (as Wakef., Dind., Rosenm., Stuart, and Kuin. are agreed) signify, not "continue alive," (as is clear from v. 3, 17 & 21,) but "continue in their office." The μένειν, however, in the next verse must have the former sense. The meaning simply is, that he is immortal in his nature, πάντοτε ζῶν, as it is said at v. 25.

— ἀπαράβατον.] Literally, "not transmissible," not having to be transmitted or to pass into different hands in succession. So Theophyl. explains by ἀδιάδοχον; which interpretation is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. and Athanasius, who explains it ἀδιάδεκτον. The word occurs only in the later writers, and is used either actively, (as in Joseph. εὐσίβεια ἀπαρ.) or passively, as in Epict. νόμος ἀπαρά.

The argument is this: "God has by oath constituted the Messiah ἱερεὶς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, in virtue of which his priesthood has not, like Aaron's, any succession in office. He is one and the same to his Church yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Hence is then drawn the conclusion, that he alone (and not the Jewish High Priest) is able to completely procure salvation for all who have access to God through Him. The proof of this ability lies in the words following, πάντοτε ζῶν, "since he liveth for ever." Σώζειν must not, with some Expositors, be understood of temporal preservation; but, as Böhme and Kuin. observe, must be used (as the term always is by the writer of this Epistle) of salvation. Εἰς τὸ παντελὲς admits of two senses, entirely, or for ever, according as it is referred to σώζειν, or to δύναται; on which, and consequently on the sense, Expositors are divided into two parties. Kuin. prefers the latter reference and sense, as more agreeable to the πάντοτε ζῶν following. But as it is placed between σώζειν and δύναται, may we not suppose that the Apostle intended it to be referred to both, and in the sense adapted to each? Προσερχομένους is to be understood like ἐγγίζ. at v. 19, where see Note.

25. εἰς τὸ ἐντυγχάνειν ὁ. a.] The sense is — "so that he can [always] make intercession for them." The term may, like ἔγγυος at v. 22, advert to all the various offices of our great High Priest, as well as his intercession. The import of the term has been learnedly discussed by Kuin. in an elaborate Note on this passage; with whom, however, I can only partially agree. "Ἐντυγχάνειν τινὶ (says he) properly signifies to meet with any one. Hence it also denotes to approach or address oneself to any one, either to request something, (whence it means preces facere) or to make suit for another, or to transact business for another as a Procurator. Now the High Priest on the solemn day of expiation both scattered incense, and made prayers for the people; the very office ascribed by Philo to his Logos, whom he represents as παράκλητος and ἱκέτης. And so at 1 John ii. 2. Christ is said to be παράκλητος, deprecator, Fürsprecher. Now here Christ, as our great High Priest, seems to be compared with the Jewish Priest in the work of deprecation." This, however, is taking too confined, not to say low, a view. Intercession, in its fullest sense, must here be intended; which may include both deprecation and that sort of intercession, which is ascribed to our Lord by St. John, ii. 1. Παράκλητον ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα Ἰησοῦν Χρ. Now from the full discussion on the sense of παράκλητος, into which I entered at John xiv. 16, it appeared that the word denotes advocate, or intercessor; which is, I conceive, the principal sense here and at 1 John ii. 1; though that of Helper, the one ascribed by most eminent Expositors to παράκ. in the above passage of St. John's Gospel, may be included. The various offices included in this intercession are (to use the words of Mr. Scott) "to plead his merits and sacrifice in their behalf; to present their persons, services, and prayers for acceptance, through the ransom of his blood; to interpose between them, and every one who would lay any thing to their charge; to protect and deliver them by his almighty power." In the last particular the παράκλ. or ὁ ἐντυγχάνων corresponded to the Patronus of the Romans.

26—28. In order to excite them to come unto the all sufficient and never failing Helper and Intercessor, the Apostle now adverts to the infinite superiority of the High Priest of the new to the one of the old Dispensation, in the spotless purity of his character; which is such that he needs not to offer sacrifice on his own account.

And when he says that such a High Priest as could effectually be our Intercessor and Helper was needed to be such (for that is admitted to be the force of the ἔπρεπε) for the purposes of expiation and salvation, he strikingly represents the superiority of Christ who was such; for that is implied in the words of the Apostle. "Ὅσιος regards the duties to God, accompanied with internal purity of mind and nature: ἄκακος, those to men, with purity of conduct. 'Ἀμείαντος, intaminate. "This (Stuart observes) may have reference to the ceremonial purity of the Jewish High Priest; though it has here a moral sense, and expresses an intensity of the ideas conveyed by ὅσιος and ἄκακος." Rather, it should seem, an intensity of the latter only; as James i. 27. καθάραι καὶ ἀμείαντος. So the Horatian "integer vitæ, seclerisque purus." Κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμ. is regarded by Stuart as synonymous with ἀμείαντος, and added for intensity: and so Abp. Newc. explains: "in his present state removed at an infinite distance from them." But it rather seems to denote, as Kuin. interprets, "differing very far from the rest of men; i. e. therefore not of their number; who has no need to offer expiation for his own sins," v. 27, as being χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, iv. 15. Υψηλότερος τῶν οὐρ. (he adds) is equivalent to the διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρανοὺς at v. 14, and the ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ θρόνου τῆς μεγαλοσύνης ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς at viii. 1. Thus Jesus is represented as being σύνθρονος. See John xvii. 5. Eph. iv. 10. Rev. iii. 21. All which phrases denote the most exalted dignity and majesty, not on earth only, but in heaven; consequently, representing him as infinitely superior to the Jewish High Priests.

27. καθ' ἡμέραν.] Some would here supply ὀρισμένην or τεταγμένην, and understand it of the day of expiation. That, however, is wholly destitute of authority, without which the ellipsis is too irregular to be admitted. The sense would seem to be "daily." And that the High Priest did make a daily offering, for the sins of himself and the people, has been asserted by Commentators, and seems proved by Philo, who says: ἀρχιερεὺς, κατὰ τοὺς νόμους εὐχάς τε καὶ θυσίας τελεῶν καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν. See also Levit. vi. 20. Num. xxviii. 3, 4. And here it is well remarked by Prof. Stuart, that "this shows the deep and "accurate knowledge of the writer of the Epistle in respect to every thing connected with the Jewish dispensation." On the exact nature, indeed, of this sacrifice, some difference of opinion exists. It is, however, observed by Kuin., that the sacrifice was probably not expiatory, but eucharistical. He thinks that the expression is used populariter (as at Mark xiv. 49. Acts xvi. 5.), to denote from time to time, i. e. "as often as he was conscious of any private sins, of course including the sacrifice on the day of expiation." Yet this is running counter to the sacred writer, in whose words it is implicitè asserted, that the High Priest did offer sacrifice daily, and that an expiatory, not a mere eucharistical sacrifice; for the former is required by the words ὑπὲρ—ἁμαρτιῶν, and the force of the sacrificial term ἀναφέρειν for ἀναφ. εἰς τὸ θυσιαστήριον, which occurs at xiii. 5. And so 1 Pet. ii. 5. ἀναφ. πνευματικὰς θυσίας.

With the two γὰρ's which follow, Commentators seem to have been more perplexed than they would confess; and whether the highly elliptical force ascribed to them by Owen, Stuart, and myself in the first Edition of the present work, be quite satisfactory, may be doubted. I am now inclined to think that the truth has been here best pointed out by one who, though not a regular Commentator, has occasionally evinced no inconsiderable talent in penetrating into the hidden sense of Scripture,—I mean the late Bishop Jebb, who in his Sac. Lit. p. 385, brings this passage (vv. 27, 28.) under the head of those Parallelisms of the N. T., wherein, when a precept is delivered, an assertion made, or a principle laid down, co-ordinate reasons for it are independently assigned, without any repetition of the common antecedent, and without any other indication of continued repetition to the original proposition, than the repeated insertion of some causative particle, γὰρ or ὅτι. Of which he adduces as examples Matt. v. 11, 12. v. 17—20. vi. 7, 9, 31, 32. vii. 13, 14. Col. ii. 8, the present passage, and Revel. xiv. 15. x. 4. xviii. 23. xix. 2. On the present passage he remarks, that the division of the proposition here is clear and explicit. 1. Our great High Priest is under no necessity of offering daily sacrifice for his own sins, nor (2) for the sins of the people. The two-fold proof of which two-fold assertion is divided into two clauses, each commencing with γὰρ: the proofs, however, are arranged in inverted order, so as to form an epanodos; the 2d assertion being first proved, and after it the second. The non-necessity of offering sacrifice for his own sins is first asserted, and last proved, in order to give prominence to the grand comparison between him and the legal high-priest. He did once for all offer sacrifice for the sins of the people; he never did, never could, and never will offer sacrifice for his own sins; because he is, and was, and shall be everlastingly PERFECT and FREE FROM SIN."

28. τετελειωμένον] i. e. not consecrated, but, as the best Expositors understand, perfected and exalted to the height of dignity, so as to be able, by his own merits, to expiate the sins of the whole world. On Υἱὸν see Note on ii. 10. v. 9.

VIII. After having, in the preceding Chapter, discoursed on the nature of Christ's priesthood, and his qualifications for discharging it, the Apostle now proceeds (in this and the next Chapter) to the consideration of the duties themselves,—namely, the nature of the sacrifice which Jesus offers; the place where it is offered; and the efficacy which it has to atone for sin; and the difference, in regard to all these points, between the sacrifice offered by Christ, and that which was presented by the Jewish priests." (Stuart.) In the present Chapter he shows that superiority on these grounds: 1. that Christ, as a Priest, exercises his sacerdotal office in heaven; whereas the Aaronical priests only perform theirs on earth, with a typical and emblematic service. 2. That Christ's ministry is more excellent than theirs, corresponding with the greater excellence of the covenant of which he is the Mediator; which covenant it was foretold should in due time be introduced, and by which the old covenant was to be abrogated. (Holden.)

Here it has been not a little debated, whether the Apostle means to say that Christ, as perpetual High Priest, discharges the office of High Priest now in heaven; or that Christ, while yet on earth, (namely, while dying) commenced discharging the office of High Priest, by offering the sacrifice of himself here, and afterwards continuing it in heaven. Prof. Stuart here agrees with Pierce, Mich., Tittm., and Storr in adopting the latter view. The Apostle, he thinks, did not mean to compare the work of Christ on earth, but that in heaven, with the sacerdotal office. This office he entered on in heaven by the offering of his blood; and this he perpetually sustains, while he acts as intercessor for sinful men. It scarcely matters which of the two interpretations be adopted, so long as the great doctrine of the Atonement be duly recognised.

1. κεφάλαιον δὲ, &c.] From what has been said in the foregoing Introduction to this Chapter and the next, and from the fact that a new topic (or, at least, one only glanced at before) is here introduced; it is plain that κεφάλαιον must not be interpreted sum, i. e. summary, or recapitulation, but principal point. So the Pesch. Syr. renders by ܠܐ; caput. So Chrys. explains it, followed by Theophyl., who remarks, τὴν μεγίστην τιμὴν τελευταίαν κατέλειπε. Indeed, the principal modern Expositors have adopted the same opinion. The best Critics have been long agreed, that ἐπὶ must here mean quod attinet ad, in respect to.

— ἐκάθισεν ἐν, &c.] See Notes on i. 3. vii. 26. Here the sacred writer means to show the vast difference between Christ and the Jewish High Priest, by adverting to the fact, that the one is seated on the throne of God in the heavens, while the other only ministers on earth, in a temple reared by the hands of men; which last idea he then proceeds to develop. (Stuart.)

2. λειτουργός.] See Notes on Rom. xiii. 6. and Phil. ii. 25. By τὰ ἅγια (scil. μέρη) is here meant (as at x. 19. xiii. 11.) the Sanctum Sanctorum, as opposed to the ἅγιον κοσμικόν at ix. 1. And, considering that the term united with it, σκηνῆς, has the epithet ἀληθινῆς (like ἄρτος ἀληθινός in John vi. 32.), true and worthy of the name,—it should seem that that epithet may also be mentally extended to ἀγ.; and that both ἀγ. and σκ. are so called, as being heavenly (in opposition to the χειροποίητου, constituted by Moses, ix. 11.), and therefore truly such, as opposed to the earthly ones, which were only shadows of the heavenly.

3. That Christ discharges the office of High Priest and Minister of the Sanctuary, the Apostle now proves from this,—that all the Priests had need to offer a sacrifice; and in the next verse he subjoins the reasons why Christ is and must be a Priest in heaven. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, which may thus be supplied: "We have a High Priest and Minister of holy things in heaven; for," &c. Or, with Stuart, "[Christ is the minister of the upper sanctuary], for every High Priest must have some sacerdotal duties to perform." By προσφ. δῶρα καὶ θυσ. are especially meant piacular sacrifices, unbloody and bloody; the piacular sacrifice of Christ being compared with the sacrifices of the priests. (Kuin.) As High Priest, it was necessary that Christ should have some oblation to present. What that is, we learn from vii. 27. ix. 12, namely, himself; after presenting which, we are told, at ix. 12, that he sat down at the right hand of God.

4. The writer now proceeds to show the reason why Christ is a Priest in the tabernacle above, and not in that on the earth. (Stuart.)

— εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἦν ἐπὶ γῆς, &c.] The full sense is, "[Christ does sustain the character of Priest in heaven;] for if," &c. Dind. and Kuin. have shown that the argument is ex absurdo, and runs thus: "Christ does not sustain the character of a Priest on earth; he was not a Priest here: to call him such would be to say that he was not one at all; for on earth he would not have been a Priest, much less a High Priest; since he was not of the tribe of Levi and of that race which offers up, &c. Consequently the oblation he presents must be in the heavenly temple," i. e. heaven. Τῶν before ἱερέων is absent from a few MSS. and Chrys., and has been rejected by Bp. Middl. and Rinck, as being at variance with propriety of language; τῶν προσφερόντων being the subject, and ἱερ. the object. It probably arose from the τῶν preceding.

5. οἵτινες ὑποδείγ. &c.] The full sense (unobserved by the Commentators) appears to be:

ρανίων, καθὼς κεχρημάτισται Μωϋσῆς, μέλλων ἐπιτελεῖν τὴν σκηνὴν. Ὅρα γάρ, φησι, ποιήσης πάντα κατὰ τὸν τύπον τὸν δειχθέντά σοι ἐν τῷ ὄρει.) * νυνὶ δὲ διαφω- 6

 &c.

“Who [however], serve unto a ministry [in a temple] which is but an image and adumbration of the temple in heaven.” So xiii. 10. σκηνή λατρεύειν. Ὑπόδειγμα signifies properly a sketch (sometimes called σκιαγράφημα) marked out by a painter, to serve as an exemplar for any one to copy, and fill up the outlines. And σκιὰ is added to make the sense more distinct, and with allusion to the substantial reality of the other ministry or temple, in which consists the superiority of its High Priest. Τῶν ἑπουρανίων is equivalent to the τῶν ἐν οὐρανοῖς at ix. 23.

—καθὼς κεχρημάτισται—σκηνὴν.] This is meant to show the propriety of the terms ὑποδ. and σκιὰ, and alludes to the directions given to Moses about the construction of the tabernacle, as intimating its emblematical nature. On χρηματίζειν, see Notes at Matt. ii. 12. Luke ii. 26. Acts x. 22.

6. νυνὶ δὲ διαφ. τ. λ.] The full sense is this: “But, as things now are (i. e. Christ being a Priest in heaven), his priestly function is very far superior to that of the Levitical priesthood; as far as the covenant, of which He is the Mediator, is more excellent than the one introduced by Moses: and such it is, inasmuch as it is founded on better promises. Μεσίτης signifies one who mediates between two parties, equivalent to the ἐγγυος at vii. 22. Μεσέγγυος was the pure Greek term. Μεσίτης is used also at Gal. iii. 19, and is applied to Moses, but in a more eminent sense to Christ at ix. 15, and 1 Tim. ii. 5. As to the manner in which this mediation was effected, it is clear from the preceding context, from the whole of the Epistle, and, more or less, all the Books of the N. T., that this mediation was effected not merely, as the Unitarians aver, by interceding for the remission of the forfeiture of salvation, but by way of satisfaction for the debt. On this deeply important subject, of the means of recovering what was lost by Adam’s transgression, the reader is referred to Ch. II. of the invaluable 9th Book of Bp. Warburton’s Divine Legation. The words ἥτις ἐπὶ κρ. ἐπαγγ. show how they are better,—namely, as respecting an eternal, not a temporal and earthly inheritance, supplying that expiation and atonement of which the old Covenant was destitute. Ἐπὶ here signifies sub conditione; a sense often used in speaking of covenants. Νενομοθέτηται, Rosenm. observes, is used to show that this was both a covenant and a law. “The better promises (observes Stuart) follow in vv. 8—13, and the perfection of the second is further disclosed at ix. 9—14. x. 1—22. xiii. 9—14.”

7. The subject, of the superiority of the new

Covenant, adverted to at vii. 22, and resumed at viii. 6, is here continued up to the end of the Chapter; and this portion is justly regarded by Kuin, as parenthetical; since at ix. 1. is introduced the parallel between the two tabernacles; which would have come in after viii. 5, but that the Apostle, on the mention of the better promises, stopped to show them to be such from the inferiority of those under the old Law.

—εἰ γὰρ—τόπος.] The argument is, that the introduction of a new Covenant implies the insufficiency of the former. Ἀμεμπτος (as Chrys. and all the best Commentators are agreed) means perfectly sufficient to accomplish the purposes in view,—the reformation and salvation of men; which, however, does not imply that the Mosaic law had positive faults, but only that it did not contain the provision necessary for the pardon of sin, and the quieting of the conscience, which the Gospel does. See Whitby, Kuin., and Stuart.

—οὐκ ἂν δευτ. ἐζητ. τόπος.] This is explained by Stuart, “no provision would have been made for a second.” But it is not easy to elicit that, or any other sense that has been assigned, from the words as they now stand. And yet to resort, with some, to critical emendation, is unallowable, and, indeed, unnecessary; this being (like many in St. Paul’s writings) a sentence composed of two sentences blended into one; i. e. “there would have been no place (i. e. room or occasion) for a better covenant, and [consequently] a better covenant would not have been sought for. The term ἐζητεῖτο was, it seems, used with reference to that anxious desire and expectation, ἀποκαταδοκία, which had long filled the hearts of the pious, for the new Dispensation, which “the sure word of prophecy” had told them should be promulgated by the Desire of all nations. (Haggai ii. 7.) So 1 Pet. i. 10. περὶ ἧς σωτηρίας ἐξεζητήσαν καὶ ἐξηρμήνευσαν προφηταὶ οἱ, &c.

8. μεμφόμε. γὰρ α. λ.] Commentators are not agreed whether μεμφ. is to be joined with αὐτοῖς, or be referred to διαθήκη at v. 7. The former mode is generally adopted by the older Commentators, and the latter by the more recent ones; who justly urge that the context, and the precision of style observable in this Epistle, alike require it. See Kuin. and Stuart. Nor is it true that αὐτῇ would thus have been added, as might be proved by many examples, especially from Thucyd. Kuin. shows, that in the passage which follows, the dissatisfaction of God with the Old Covenant is implied; and therefore it is, not unaptly, adduced to prove that that covenant, and the religion introduced, was not ἀμεμπος. The force of the proof, he observes, resides in the words at v. 12. The Apostle, indeed, might the more readily adduce the passage, since, in its literal sense, it at least has been (as Schoettg. and Wets. prove) always referred even by the Jews to the times of the Messiah. In the words, however, there exist not a few minute discrepancies from the Sept., which the recent Commentators generally ascribe to the writer's citing from memory. But as they are for the most part found in some or other of the MSS. of the Sept., they may have been in the text at the time of St. Paul. Αὐτοῖς scil. Ἰσραηλῖταις, as suggested by the context. "Ἐρχονται, "are coming," "are to come." A use of the Present attached to prophecy. The καὶ answers to the Heb. ^ו, for when. Καινὴν, i. e. as being not like the old, but formed on better promises.

9. Κατὰ here, like the Heb. ^ב, denotes similitude, as in 1 Pet. i. 15, and sometimes in the Classical writers. In the words ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπιλαβ. μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν there is (as Kuin. remarks) a Hebraism for ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὅτε ἐπελαβόμην τ. χ. α. On which sense of ἐπιλαβ. see Note on ii. 16. Οὐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῇ διαθ. (per meosin for "they violated my covenant"), suggests the reason why the new covenant was to be formed; namely, because the old one was not observed. By διαθ. are here meant the precepts enjoined in the covenant, the νεομοθετημένα (see Note on v. 6.), and what had been undertaken to be performed. Ἡμέλησα αὐτῶν, "I disregarded them," "took no care of them." This perfectly agrees with the Sept.; but judging from Sym. and the Vulg., most of the modern Versions would seem to be very dissimilar. And yet there is no discrepancy. The sense assigned by the Versions in question is quite unsuitable to the context, and, as many eminent Commentators contend, contrary to the proprietas linguæ. The best Expositors, both Jewish and Christian, have long been agreed that בָּרַךְ יְהוָה should be rendered, "I was weary of and cared not for them;" which is confirmed by the words of 1 Sam. ii. 30.

10. Kuin. observes that διατίθεσθαι διαθήκην occurs also in Aristoph. Av. 438. For διδόνς the Sept. has διδόνς δώσω, and the Heb. simply יָתַן, I will give. Most Commentators suppose διδόνς to be put for δώσω. But it is better, with Kuin., to suppose an ellipsis of εἰμι or ἔσομαι. This use of διδόνς for "will put" is thought quite Hebraic. And yet an example is adduced by Kuin. from Xen. Cyr. viii. 2, 20. ὁ μὲν οἱ Θεοὶ δόντες εἰς τὰς ψυχὰς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. There is, I suspect, a blending of two expressions. As to the metaphor in ἐπὶ καρδίας ἐπιγράψω, it occurs also in Rom. ii. 15, and 2 Cor. iii. 3, nor is it unusual in the Classical writers. The sentiment in ἔσομαι αὐτοῖς—λαόν is frequent in the O. T., and may be, as Carpz. supposes, a formula solemnis appertaining to any Divine covenant; importing the giving protection and blessing on the one hand, and rendering obedience and worship on the other.

11. οὐ μὴ διδ. The best Expositors are agreed that the sense is, "they will have no need to teach." Instead of the common reading πλησίον, almost all the MSS. and early Edd., and several Versions and Fathers have πολίτην, as in the Sept., which was preferred by Beng. and Wets., and was restored to the text by Matth. Griesb., Knapp, Schott, Tittm., and Vat.; and justly: for this is required by the weight of external evidence, though internal might be urged for πλησίον. The words λέγων· Γνωθὶ τὸν Κύριον are, as Kuin. says, "illustrative of the admonition adverted to in διδάσκειν." For thus speaking, it is predicted, there will be, comparatively, no need under the new and better covenant; since the knowledge of true religion will be so universally diffused.

12. ὅτι ἴλεως ἔσομαι, &c.] Here is adduced the reason why all should worship God,—namely, because Christ by his death obtained full pardon of sin, and hope of eternal felicity. (Kuin.) Ἰλεως is properly applicable to persons: and hereby ἀδικίαις is for ἀδικίαις.

—μὴ μνησθῶ.] A refined way of expressing forgiveness of sins. The general sense is, that under the new Covenant a complete atonement will be made for the sins of men, by which they may, under the condition of that covenant, attain salvation.

13. ἐν τῷ λέγειν—ἀφανισμού.] From the prophecy, announcing that a new covenant would be formed, the Apostle infers the abrogation of the old. By πεπαλαίωσε is meant, “represents it as antiquated.” This the Apostle follows up with a sort of locus communis: q. d. Now what is grown old, and, by implication, weak and useless, is near dissolution; implying the inference, that the old covenant being represented by God as antiquated, will be succeeded by a new and perfect one. The expression ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμού may be supposed to indicate the writer’s persuasion, that the Jewish temple worship was destined to experience a speedy destruction, which indeed took place a few years after. This view of the sense is confirmed and illustrated by x. 37. ἔτι γὰρ μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον, ὃ ἐρχόμενος ἤξει, καὶ οὐ χρονεῖ.

IX. The writer has now shown the utter inferiority of the priesthood of Aaron, as compared with that of Christ, and proved that Christ is High Priest in the temple of heaven; while the Aaronical priests offer sacrifice in a temple which is no more than the image and shadow of the heavenly: finally, that to Christ belongs a far more excellent priesthood, as being Mediator of an infinitely superior covenant. This subject he further enlarges on, proceeding to consider the manner and intent of the Temple service; and while he speaks with due respect of ordinances of remote antiquity, instituted by God himself, and gladly dilates on the splendour of the tabernacles formed under Divine direction, yet he shows that there is in the new religion what far overbalances the external magnificence that so dazzled the eyes of the Jews, in the old; nay, what was truly august: while that respected only what is external, and required constant repetition. It was, therefore, though of Divine appointment, only calculated to be temporary, and meant to last only till a more perfect and permanent one was introduced by the promised Messiah; when, having already answered its end, and become useless, it must cease. The subject, thus treated of, extends throughout the present and 18 verses of the subsequent Chapter; and the following sketch of the contents of the present Chapter, formed chiefly from Mackn., Iaspis, Kuin., and Stuart, may be not unuseful to the reader.

1. “The earthly temple, with the various apparatus and ordinances attached to it, are described, and adverted to, to show their imperfection, being merely types and symbols of what was really effected in the heavenly, under the Gospel dispensation, vv. 1—16. This is shown by a reference to what was effected in the heavenly one, as compared with the earthly High Priest, especially in respect to the offences of expiation and atonement. Christ, the heavenly High Priest, entered the eternal sanctuary with his own blood, and procured eternal redemption for all penitent sinners. While the earthly High Priest, entering the terrene sanctuary with no more than the blood of bulls and goats, effected only a ceremonial and external purification, which cannot cleanse the conscience, nor reconcile man to his offended Maker: whereas, such is the efficacy of the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ, that it extends back even to the sins of former ages, 11—15. This is proved and illustrated by the practice among men, of ratifying all solemn covenants by the death of a sacrificial victim, v. 16, 17. Such was the case with respect to the old covenant, vv. 18—21, which required the shedding of blood (the emblem of death) for the remission of sins, v. 22. The heavenly things, therefore (of which those under the Law were but types and representations), must necessarily be purified by so much better a sacrifice, as the substance is superior to the shadow, v. 23; and this has been effected, not like the Jewish High Priest, by repeated expiatory offerings, but by Christ’s offering himself once for all, vv. 24—26. And as all men die but once, and Christ in his human nature, and by dying in it, made an expiatory offering, so he could make this but once; therefore, when he shall make his second appearance, it will not be to repeat his sin-offering, but for the deliverance of all who wait for his coming, vv. 27, 28.”

1. μὲν οὖν.] This is transitive and continuative (as in Acts i. 18, ix. 31. xv. 30. xvii. 30. xxiii. 22.), and may be rendered now or therefore. Σκηνή is absent from most of the MSS., many Versions, Fathers, Commentators, and early Edd., and is cancelled or rejected by almost every Editor from Mill to Vat.; and justly; for, as Kuin. shows, the context will not even permit it to be understood. Almost all the best Commentators from Chrys. to Kuin. are agreed that διαθήκη is to be understood from the preceding, as in our common version. Nay, it is even found in the text of several MSS.

—δικαιώματα λατρ.] “ordinances of service,” or worship. The δικαιώμ. is well explained by Theophyl. Σεμνοὺς καὶ νομοθεσίας. Ὁ λατρεία and λατρεύειν are often used κατ’ ἐξοχὴν, of Divine service. The Genit. in λατρ. may (as in the case of an adjective preceding), be rendered “respecting,” of which sense examples may be seen in Win. Gr. Gr. §. 23. 3., though he omits this use after a substantive.

—τό τε Ἅγιον κοσμικόν.] On the sense of these words, plain as they seem, much difference of opinion exists. Almost all our English Translators render “a worldly sanctuary.” This, however, Bp. Middl. pronounces a sense utterly inadmissible. It would, he says, require either τὸ ἅγιον τὸ κοσμικόν, or else τὸ κοσμικὸν ἅγιον. And to this Prof. Scholefield assents; remarking that, “both ἅγιον and κοσμικόν being adjectives, one of them must be taken substantively; and the position of the Article determines that that one must be κοσμικόν,” which is by Homberg, Bp. Middl., Wakef., and Prof. Stuart, understood to mean “the sacred furniture,” vasa sacra, totumque apparatus Leviticum. An interpretation, however, with reason, rejected by Dind. and Kuin., on account of the signification being destitute of sufficient authority. For though Bp. Middl. adduces that of the Coptic version, which renders ornamentum; yet that is taking for granted the existence of κοσμικόν as a substantive. I have myself sought sedulously for it in the Classical writers of every age; but without success. It is true that in a passage of Leo Grammaticus cited by Ducange, Gloss. Gr. in v. I find καὶ ἐνέδυσεν αὐτὸν κοσμικά. But this proof here halts on the same foot as the last; Leo being a writer infimæ Græcitatîs, who lived long after even the Coptic Version was formed. Not to say that the passage (which I have not the means of examining in connexion with the context) is, I doubt not, corrupt; for the Greek is intolerably bad. It should seem that for ἐνέδυσεν the true reading is ἀνέδυσεν; the letters ε and α, and ν and η being perpetually confounded. Thus κοσμικά is an adjective plural, and signifies secularia; the sense being, "and secular affairs enchain him." So in a Hymn cited by Facciolati in v. saeculum: "Et servientem corpori Absolve vinculis saeculi." See 1 Pet. ii. 19. compared with Luke viii. 14. and Rom. vii. 23, 24. In short, I suspect that the substantive κοσμικόν never had any existence. And even the adjective κοσμικός is very rare: and it is not likely that the substantive would be formed from so rare a word, but rather from κόσμιος, which was common. Moreover all the nouns in ἱκον, are rare—I mean real substantives, and not adjectives taken substantively. For almost all of them are like λεξικόν, i. e. are adjectives neuter taken substantively, by the ellipsis of some noun. In short, the only vestige of the existence of this word is in a single passage of a Rabbinical writer adduced by Bp. Middl. Yet there, may we not suspect (considering that κοσμικός no where occurs, and κόσμιον very often in the later Greek writers) that the Rabbi wrote, not רִמְחָר, but רִמְחָר? And though Bp. Middl. appeals to other Hebrew words similarly formed from the Greek, as διαθήκη and παρόρησία, yet those, it may be observed, were words of frequent occurrence, unlike the one in question; which if it did exist at all, was scarce known to the Greeks themselves, and therefore would not be likely to be adopted by a foreigner. Of the word κόσμιον, and in the sense ornament (namely, of dress), examples occur in the Alexandrine writers, as Judg. viii. 26. (Symm.) Cohel xii. 9. And so the Gloss. Cyrill. κόσμη γυναικός and κόσμη κεφαλῆς. Other examples are also adduced by Ducange from Achmet. Onir., Theophanes, Didymus on Homer, and Liban. Inasmuch that I strongly suspect the Coptic Translator here appealed to by Bp. Middl., read κόσμιον. Certainly the existence of κόσμιον discountenances the existence of κοσμικόν; since, in fact, the latter word was not wanted. At all events, no proof has been adduced of the existence of the substantive κοσμικόν, at least in the Apostolic age; and therefore the adjective use of the word must here be retained. In order, however, to determine its sense, it is necessary to ascertain that of τὸ ἅγιον. Now this certainly must mean the Temple, δῶμα being understood. So the Pesch. Syr. renders by "domus sancta," or rather, the Sanctum

Sanctorum. The word with the Article occurs in Ecclus. iv. 13. and elsewhere in the Sept.; and without the Article, in Joseph. Ant. iii. 6. 4. ὁ μὲν πᾶς νεὸς Ἅγιον ἐκαλεῖτο, and ix. 3. And such, I apprehend, is the force of the word here. Nor will this require us to read (as Bp. Middl. supposes) τὸ κοσμικόν ἅγιον. We have only to consider it as put for that reading. And why, I would ask, should it not? For can we reasonably expect so exact an observance of the doctrine of the Greek Article in a foreigner, as to rest so much on the omission of a τὸ, or the disarrangement of the order, which strict propriety would require? Not to say that there is some reason to think (as Stuart says) that even the Classical writers were less exact in the use of the Article than the Grammarians would fain have us believe. Rejecting, then, the substantive sense of κοσμικόν (which Bp. Middl. admits to be not necessary) and retaining the adjective sense, it remains for us to explain the exact signification of the latter; which has been a matter of no little debate. The ancient and some modern Expositors take it to mean, "which belongs to the whole world:" while others, as Grot., Wets., and Middl., render it mundane, i. e. emblematical of the mundane system. Both interpretations are alike harsh and unsupported by the context. The true sense is, I apprehend, that adopted by Calvin, Crell., Est., Casaub., Beza, Pisc., Ernesti, Dindorf, and Stuart; who regard κοσμικόν as equivalent to ἐπίγειον, χειροποιήτων, ταύτης κτίσεως at v. 11.; to which is opposed the σκηνὴ ἀληθινή, the ἅγιον ἀληθινόν, and ἐπουράνιον at viii. 2. ix. 23, 24. So also the ἡ Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουράνιος at xii. 22. and Rev. xxi. 2. Now, in order to fully understand the scope of the passage, it is proper to attend to the force of μὲν οὖν and καὶ, and even of τό; since they throw light on the intent of the writer in this verse. The καὶ (though the Translators pass it over, and Expositors perceive not its force) belongs to πρώτη, and is meant to serve to the indirect parallel, meant to be instituted between the terrene, or secular, sanctuary, and the heavenly one; there being a suppression of the words to fill up the parallel i. e. as the second covenant has ordinances of worship and a heavenly Sanctuary. How often καὶ serves to comparison, it is scarcely necessary to observe. The force of the Article τὸ is that of reference; the worldly having reference to the heavenly in the indirect parallel. The μὲν οὖν has a continuative, and slightly illative force, and may be rendered Now. But, in fact, the μὲν here should be separated from the οὖν, since it serves to form a protasis, to which the δὲ at v. 11. (Χριστὸς δὲ) forms the apodosis. It will thus, I trust, appear that the passage should be rendered: "Now the first covenant, also, had ordinances of worship, and the worldly Sanctuary," mentioned in the apodosis at v. 11. Here it would be a work of supererogation to notice at large the frivolous objections made to the usual interpretation of κοσμικόν. Suffice it to say, when the learned Prelate pronounces that κοσμ. cannot be assumed of, but must be asserted of ἅγιον, he here offers a specimen of hypercriticism, which, considering the popular cast of that upon which it is exercised, seems not unworthy of Martinus Scriblerus himself. And when the learned Prelate admits that the adjectival sense of κοσμ. after all may be true, and yet propounds such an interpretation, as violates every principle of philology, the effect of hypothesis and system in warping the strongest judgment is obvious. It seems the cogency of the sacred writer's reasoning is to be nothing, when weighed against the omission of an Article, or the translocation of two words which stand together.

2. ἡ πρώτη.] The best Commentators are agreed that πρώτη is here, as often, put for προτέρα, and denotes the anterior, or outward part of the tabernacle, corresponding to the דִּבְרָה or pronaos in the Temple; for the tabernacle of Moses (like the temple of Solomon, and that of Zorobabel) was divided by a Veil into two tabernacles (in allusion to which, the whole Sanctuary is called in Ps. xliii. 3. מִשְׁכָּנִים, Sept. σκηνώματα). Prof. Stuart thinks that "we should here have expected, according to the rules laid down by Grammarians, that either σκηνῇ would have the Article, or πρώτη omit it;" whence he argues that the Canons laid down on the subject are unfounded. That, however, does by no means appear from the present passage; in which, whatever there may be of irregularity in other respects, there is none as regards the use of the Article. We have only a brevity of expression (and consequently peculiarity of construction) common in St. Paul and Thucyd. Σκηνῇ, whether considered as an appellative or as a proper name, did not require the Article; whereas πρώτη (sub. σκηνῇ, and ἦν) could not dispense with it; since the writer meant, after mentioning the tabernacle generally, to advert to its two σκηναί. And it is referred to in the ἥτις λέγεται Ἁγία just after. No difficulty, indeed, would have existed, had the writer expressed his meaning more fully, thus: "For a tabernacle was constructed, [consisting of two compartments], the first, which is called Holy, wherein was the, &c., and the second, which contained," &c. Yet Thucydides himself might have so written; except that he would probably have hinted his meaning by ἡ μὲν πρώτη; though he might, as often, not have subjoined ἡ δὲ δεύτερα, but left it, as here, to be implied in the μετὰ τὸ δεύτερον καταπέτασμα. The misconception of the more recent Expositors arose from the incorrect punctuation of the modern Editions. I have pointed as was done by Beza, Schmid, Pisc., our Common Version, Capell., and Crell., and as I find it in the text of Chrys.

On λυχνία see Exod. xxv. 31. seqq. And on ἡ τράπεζα καὶ ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν ἄρτων, see Exod. xxv. 23. By most Expositors ἡ πρόσ. τῶν ἄρτων is regarded as put for οἱ ἄρτοι οἱ προτιθέμενοι. But it may rather be taken, with others, as put for οἱ ἄρτοι τῆς προθέσεως (see Matt. xii. 4.), the Shew-bread (so called as being placed before the Lord), elsewhere denominated the פַּנֶּה עֵל, literally, presence-bread. The altar of incense is here not mentioned because, as the writer expressly says at v. 12., he does not profess to give an exact detail. The ἥτις refers, not to the πρόθ., but to ἡ πρώτη (σκηνῇ). The Article here and just after is omitted because Ἁγία is here a kind of proper name. Yet Ἁγία must not be written, with some Editors; for the sacred writers do not denote the Sanctum by ἡ ἁγία, but τὸ ἅγιον, scil. δῶμα, or τὰ ἅγια scil. μέρη. See vv. 3. 8. 12. 24. iv. 19. xiii. 11. Whereas Ἁγία denotes the Sanctum Sanctorum.

3. δύτερον καταπέτ.] For there was a second, which separated the Sanctum from the Court, and called ἐπίσπαστρον. Σκηνῇ here dispenses with the Article, because it is sufficiently defined by the ἡ λεγομένη, &c., following.

4. θυμιατήριον.] This perplexing term is usually interpreted, "the altar of incense." A sense, indeed, found in Joseph. and Philo. But the Sept. always calls it θυσιαστήριον. And from Exod. xxx. 20. 26. Joseph. Ant. viii. 4. 11. and Philo, p. 512. it is plain that the altar of incense was in the Sanctum, not the Sanctum Sanctorum. Besides, its very use shows that it could not have been put in the Sanctum Sanctorum, because to that there was access only once a year, by the High Priest alone. (Kuin.) The learned Commentator rightly understands the expression (with Stuart and many other eminent Expositors, as Deyling, Alting, and Ernesti) of the golden censer which the High Priest took with him on entering the Sanctum Sanctorum, on the day of expiation. (See Levit. xvi. 12. sq.): a use of the word often found in the Sept. and the Classical writers. That this censer was of gold (while we know the censers used daily in the Sanctum were of brass) would of itself be highly probable, and is proved by Joseph. Ant. iii. 8. 3. Bell. i. 1. 7. referred to by Kuin. A perplexing circumstance, however, still remains to be explained; namely, that as the High Priest only entered the Sanctum Sanctorum once, how could this censer be laid up, as the ἔχουσα would seem to suggest? Stuart, in his Excursus on the subject, has not noticed this difficulty; but merely argues, that as there is no proof that it was not laid up in the Sanctum Sanctorum, it certainly was so laid up. Grot., Limb., Storr, and Kuin., attempt to remove the difficulty by taking ἔχουσα in a modified sense, and supposing that the Sanctum Sanctorum is said to have the golden censer, because it was brought there once a year, and only used there. I should prefer, however, the solution of Zeibech, in a Dissertation on the subject, who is of opinion, that the golden censer was always in the Sanctum Sanctorum, by being left there by the High Priest until he replaced it the next year by another. But may we not suppose that another censer was used for the purpose of conveying the fire to the censer which remained in the Sanctum Sanctorum; by which it would not have to be removed or replaced at all? And though it may be objected, that all this proceeds on taking for granted what cannot be proved, yet the key that opens the wards is likely to be the right key. As to supposing, with some, ignorance, or inaccuracy from forgetfulness, on the part of the writer, that is utterly forbidden by the intimate and thorough acquaintance which he displays with every thing concerning the Temple and its service, and his minute accuracy on other points.

— πάντοθεν] i. e. both outside and inside, as we find from Exod. xxv. 11, as also Joseph. and Philo. Ἐν ᾗ, i. e. in the ark. This, indeed, would seem to be at variance with what is said at 1 Kings viii. 9, that the ark contained only the two tables of stone. And various methods of removing the discrepancy have been proposed; after a careful examination of which, Dind., Kuin., and Stuart, adopt the opinion of Deyling and Carpz., who think it sufficient to show that what is said is true of the tabernacle constructed and furnished by Moses (of which alone the Apostle is speaking), though not of the temple of Solomon. That the pot of manna and Aaron's rod were laid up in the ark of the covenant, is, they show, proved from Exod. xvi. 32—34, and Numb. xvii. 10, at least according to the interpretation of the Rabbins and Jewish Interpreters even to the present day. The pot too is called golden in the Sept., though not expressly said to be so in the Hebrew; and yet, that it was so, considering the purpose, cannot be doubted.

5. αὐτῆς] scil. τῆς κιβώτου, not διαθήκης, as some suppose (for thus the sense would be inapposite): and though this is going far back for an antecedent, yet the words ἐν ᾗ στάμνος—διαθήκης are, in some measure, parenthetical.

— Χερ. δόξης.] It is plain, from a comparison of the passages where these cherubim are mentioned, that they were symbolical emblems of the Divine nature, denoting the supreme governance of the Deity over all creation, and representing his tutelary presence. The δόξης is by more recent Commentators supposed to refer to the splendour of the figures, covered all over with gold: but by the earlier ones, to “the glory of the Lord” dwelling between, and shining around them, supposed to be alluded to in Ps. lxxx. 1. On the persuasion, found among all nations, of some particular place being selected by the Deity for the manifestation of his presence see Mackn.

— ἱλαστήριον.] This was the ῥαβδος, or lid of the ark, (or the mercy-seat,) so called because, by the sprinkling of blood upon it, the atonement was effected on the day of expiation.—“Over this (says Stuart) the Divine glory (or supernatural brightness) was seen; and hence

God was supposed to be seated on it, as his throne, and from it to dispense his mercy, when atonement was made for the sins of the people by sprinkling it with blood.” By οὐκ ἔστι νῦν λέγειν. κ. μ. it is meant that he does not enter into so particular a description, as to trace their symbolical allusions.

6. τούτων δὲ οὕτω κατεσκευ. Render: “Now these things being [thus] prepared;” i. e. set in due order. Εἰσίσιν is best rendered literally by a Present tense, (not a past, as do most Translators) since the Present, from its indefinite sense, suits all times, and was here used with propriety, the Temple being yet in being. Λατρ. is a general term, including all sacred rites, and not limited to sacrifices, as some suppose.

7. ἅπαξ τ. ἐν.] Since from Levit. xvi. 12—15, it appears that the High Priest entered the Sanctum Sanctorum twice, (some say thrice, and the Rabbins even four times) ἅπαξ τ. ἐ. must (as the best Commentators are agreed) mean “on one day only in the year,” i. e. the day of expiation; and, indeed, as the two enterings were in continuity, and forming one and the same service, they might be almost said to enter the Sanctum Sanctorum but once. From Philo, p. 591, cited by Kuin., we learn that if the High Priest entered on more than one day in the year, or oftener than twice on that day, he was put to death without mercy. By ἁγνοήματα are meant all such sins for which expiation was held available; sins of presumption and wilfulness, and the more heinous offences (as murder, adultery, incest, blasphemy) being excluded from expiation. This signification of the word is also found in the Classical writers. See my Note on Thucyd. vi. 84. No. 25.

8. τοῦτο] Some supply διὰ, or κατὰ; i. e. “by this restriction and difficulty of access.” That, however, involves a needless harshness; and it is better, with others, to regard τοῦτο as representing the subject of what was signified in the instruction, meant to be intimated by a sort of figurative and spiritual application of the injunctions, or by the inference from them; which (he means to say) is, that the true approach to God, and access to the real holy of holies, HEAVEN, by the expiation of sin, was not clearly revealed while the Jewish Economy subsisted. Τὴν τῶν ἁγ. ὁδ. is put for τὴν εἰς τὰ ἅγια (scil. τὰ ἐπουράνια) ὁδόν. So Matt. x. 5. εἰς ὁδὸν εἰσὼν μὴ ἀπέλθῃτε. The meaning is, that through Jesus alone, mankind, whether Jews or Gentiles, have free access to the heavenly mercy-seat, the throne of grace, which had before been obstructed by the impediments of the ceremonial law. By τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς (which has been variously interpreted) is, I think, meant simply the first dispensation; i. e. that under the first temple. The image in ἐχούσης στάσιν is adapted to the figure in σκηνῆς. Of στάσιν ἔχειν in the sense "to subsist," examples are adduced from Dionys. Hal. and Polybius.

9. ἦτις] scil. σκηνή, "which dispensation]" impeding free access to God. Παραβ. scil. ἐστι, "is, or has been, a type or figure, or adumbration,"—namely, of the entrance of the more excellent High Priest into heaven, whereby is obtained free access to God. Εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστ. is best rendered "up to the present time," i. e., as Kuin. well explains, the τὸν καιρὸν τῆς διορθώσεως at v. 10, and which had then begun (see x. 10—14, 19, 22.) when there was no longer occasion for the type or figure in question; though by the continuance of the Temple-service, and the perverse unbelief of the Jews, it might be said still to exist. By δῶρα and θυσ. are denoted all sorts of expiatory sacrifices; and δυνάμεναι is accommodated in gender to the nearer and more important noun. The sense of μὴ δυνάμεναι—λατρεύοντα (somewhat disputed) seems to be, "which cannot perfectly tranquilize the conscience of the worshipper [who offers these expiatory sacrifices]." Literally, "cannot make the worshipper perfect in respect to his conscience." This doctrine the Jews had indeed been taught by their Prophets; but, as far as the great multitude was concerned, in vain.

10. μόνον—ἐπικείμενα.] The Commentators are not a little perplexed to determine the construction and interpretation of these words, of which even the reading is debated. Several varr. lectt. exist (especially δικαιώματα for δικαιώμασι); which, however, seem only so many different attempts at removing what seemed a harsh construction;—namely, δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι—δυνάμεναι—ἐπικείμενα: in adjusting which most Commentators, ancient and modern, take ἐπικείμενα twice, i. e. with ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ πόμασι, and with μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ., the ἐπὶ being put for ἐν. And, indeed, this would seem the most natural construction; but it leads to a sense very objectionable; for how oblations and sacrifices can be said to consist in meats, drinks, and oblations, it is not easy to see. It should, therefore, seem that ἐπικ. is only to be taken once, and that μόνον μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ. ἐπικ. are alone to be referred to δῶρα καὶ θυσίαι; also that the words ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ—σαρκός are meant to designate another class of ritual observances, as being mere ordinances of the flesh; and, therefore, not able to quiet the conscience, or make the worshipper perfect. Thus the ἐπὶ must not be rendered in, but, with the best Commentators, either præter, or cum. The δικ. σαρκός may denote other similar observances, as circumcision, &c.; but as the ellipsis of ἄλλοις is rather harsh, it is better to suppose this clause meant to qualify the preceding, and show the true nature of the βρώμ., πόμ., and thus the καὶ will have the explanatory force (as when placed between two nouns in apposition), and signify nempe. It is, however, omitted in 8 ancient MSS., 6 Versions and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb. In interpreting βρώμ. καὶ πόμ., it is strange there should have been such diversity of opinion, since the subject of the context ("pacular sacrifices") shows that the words must mean "the regulations concerning meats and drinks permitted or forbidden by the Mosaic law." Βαπτ. δ. denotes those ceremonial ablutions of various sorts (some respecting the priests, others, the people at large,) which are detailed in Levit. and Numb. Now these, in addition to the preceding class of ritual observances (i. e. the various kinds of sacrifices) were ἐπικείμενα, i. e. enjoined, and meant to be in force μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ., i. e. which should introduce a reformation of religion, by a change of external forms into vital and spiritual worship; namely, that of the Gospel. For διορθῶσις signifies, 1. the straightening of any thing crooked; 2. as here, the setting right of any thing wrong. Compare Is. xl. 2. Thus καιρὸς διορθ. here corresponds to the χρόνιο ἀποκαταστάσεως in Acts iii. 21.

11—15. The Apostle now contrasts these symbolical and temporary ministrations and ordinances with the effectual services of our Redeemer, who exercises the office of high priest in a greater and more perfect tabernacle, even in heaven, v. 11, into which he entered by his own blood; thus procuring eternal redemption for us, v. 12: for if the blood of bulls and goats, offered by the Levitical priests, could effect an outward purification (v. 13.), much more must the blood of Christ purify the conscience, and fit the believer for heaven (v. 14.); for this reason he is appointed the Mediator of the new covenant; that by dying to purchase redemption for sinners, even in former times, believers of all ages might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance (v. 15.) Holden. In vv. 11, 12, the leading features are the presence of our great High Priest, and his entrance into the holy place, with an eternal ransom of his own acquisition: these, accordingly, occupy the first line and the last. Next in importance are the tabernacle, wherein this high priest officiated, and the blood which he sacrificially shed; his own blood, the tabernacle of his human nature: these occupy the second line and the fourth. Last in consideration are, the tabernacle made with hands in the temple, and the sacrificial victims there typically slain; the blood of goats and calves; these are negatively introduced in the two central lines of the stanza. (Bp. Jebb.) The above remark certainly discovers a refined taste; but many of my readers may, not without reason, object to this converting of the passage into stanzas, as if the verses were part of a sonnet. Nor may they be disposed to agree with the learned Prelate, that the epanodos is here indispensable.

—Χρ. παραγ. ἀρχ. τῶν μελλ. ἀγ.] Of this the complete sense seems to be that expressed by Kuin. thus: “cum Christus has in terras venisset, eum in finem, ut, morte superata (δι' αἵματος ἰδίου, v. 12.), fieret pontifex cui deberemus bona futura.” He rightly regards τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν as a Genit. of cause, as John vi. 35. ἄρτος ζωῆς, and Phil. iv. 9. ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης. By τὰ μέλλοντα, he observes, are meant free access to God, v. 8, expiation perpetually available, v. 12. x. 4, tranquillity of mind and conscience, v. 9. x. 2, 3, and eternal felicity, v. 15. The blessings were at the time the Levitical worship flourished, being yet future, and reserved for “the time of reformation.” They may, however, be understood as commencing in this world, and to be consummated in the next. Διὰ τῆς μείζονος καὶ τελ. σκηνῆς should be rendered, “by the better and more perfect tabernacle.” It is not agreed to what this σκ. is to be referred. The earlier Commentators in general suppose it to denote the human nature of Christ; while others understand it of the Christian Church. But well founded objections are made to both these interpretations by Dind., Stuart, and Kuin., who (with most Expositors from Wets. downwards) are agreed that, a comparison is here made of Christ with the Jewish high priest, who, on the day of expiation, passed through the Sanctum into the Holy of Holies. Thus the Apostle means to compare the visible heavens (called by the Jews the tent of God), through which Jesus passed, in his ascension to the highest heaven, with the veil which separated the Jewish Sanctum from the Holy of Holies. Σκηνὴ τελ. will thus denote the exterior parts of the heavenly Aduym. So at iv. 14. Christ is spoken of as διεληλυθὼς τοὺς οὐρανοὺς. This view, too, is confirmed by the Article τῆς; for there may be supposed an allusion to the σκηνὴ κοσμικὴ and ἐπίγειος at vv. 1, 2. Χειροτ. means “not made by human hands,” οὐ ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως, “not of this world or creation, not of earthly, but heavenly structure,” scil. ἢν ἐπηξεν ὁ Θεός, viii. 2. Thus διὰ will be for σύν or ἐν, as in Rom. xiv. 20. and often.

12. ἐφάπαξ.] Namely, on entering into heaven after his ascension. There seems here an allusion to the High Priest's entering once only, every year, into the Holy of Holies; q. d. “that the Aaronical High Priest entered once every year; the Great High Priest entered once for all.” See x. 10.

13—15. Here is an argumentum a minori ad maius. Σποδὸς δαμάλεως. See Num. xix. 2—9. ‘Ραντίζουσα, “sprinkling;” i. e. when mixed with water, thus forming a holy liquid used to purify the defiled.

—διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου.] An unusual expression, of which the sense and application have been not a little debated. Many eminent modern Expositors (as Beza, J. Capell, Gomar, Vitrina, Wolf, Pierce, Carpz., and Ernesti) refer πνεῦμα to the eternal and spiritual nature of Christ. A view also adopted by Bp. Bull (Def. Fid. Nic. p. 19.), who takes the sense to be, “eternam Christi Divinitatem, sive divinam Filii Dei personam, unitam humanam naturam in arā Crucis Deo obtulisse.” This he supports from the Epistle of Barnabas Ch. vi., where he says of Christ: αὐτὸς ὑπὲρ τῶν ἡμετέρων ἁμαρτιῶν ἤμελλε σκεῦος τοῦ πνεύματος (the vessel of the spiritual nature of Christ) προσφέρειν θυσίαν. And such may very possibly be the sense: though others of the above Expositors take a somewhat different view. And, indeed, the whole interpretation itself is not quite satisfactory. It will, therefore, be better, with the ancient Commentators in general, and many eminent modern ones (as Calvin, Est., Whitby, Bp. Middl., Winzer, Kuin., and Stuart), to understand it of the Holy Spirit, either personally, or through his influences, by which every circumstance of our Redeemer's course is said in Scripture to have been accompanied. See the references in Scott and Stuart. According to the former interpretation, this text supplies a proof of the essential Deity of Christ: according to the latter, it evidences the eternal Divinity of the Holy Spirit. For a full discussion of the present passage, and a review of various interpretations which have been propounded by recent Commentators, see an elaborate Dissertation by Winzer de Sacerdotio officio, quod Christo tribuitur in Epist. ad Hebræos Lips. 1835. 15—18. In this passage (perplexed in itself, and which has been still more perplexed by the various interpretations proposed), the difficulty chiefly turns on the sense to be affixed to διαθήκης. By most Expositors this was formerly interpreted testament. That sense is now, however, generally rejected, as involving what borders upon absurdity. (See the statements of Le Clerc, Mackn., Slade, Kuin., Holden, and Prof. Scholefield.) For how, it is asked, can any one be called the mediator of a testament? How can a testament need a mediator? How can any one be called the mediator of his own testament? How can the Mosaic law be called a testament? Who was the testator? And how can it be said that the testator died to render it valid? This, indeed, is so plain, that no Expositors of any note now contend for the sense testament throughout the passage; and perhaps Carpz. was the last: though some (as Limborch and Medhurst, in a Dissertation on the subject, in the Bibl. Hag.) ascribe to it the double sense of covenant and testament; namely, a covenant which partakes of the nature of a testament. It is, however, generally admitted, that in v. 5. the sense is covenant (as viii. 6. κρίττονος διαθήκης μεσίτης, and often elsewhere in this book and other parts of the N. T.); and the only difference of opinion is, whether at vv. 16, 17, it is to have the same sense, or that of testament (i.e. will.) The former position is maintained by many recent Expositors (as Pierce, Dodd., Michaelis, Mackn., Steudel, Parkhurst, Holden, and especially by Prof. Scholefield); the latter by Calvin, Erasmus., Wolf, Abp. Newc., Alberti, Bengel, Schleusn., Wahl, Bretschneider, Rosenm., Kuin., Stuart, Slade, and Mr. Rose on Parkh. Those who adopt the former view allege that such is likely to be the sense here, as it is found in the preceding verse; that the Mosaic covenant cannot well be considered as a testament, and that accuracy of argument requires the above sense. In order to evince which, they trace the course of the reasoning; which is done by Mr. Holden (chiefly from Pierce and Mackn.) as follows: "The expiation of sin by Christ, and the promise of an eternal inheritance, are made sure and ratified by the death of Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, v. 15. Of this we cannot doubt, since all solemn covenants are ratified by the death of a sacrificial victim, vv. 16, 17; and such was the case with respect to the Mosaic covenant, vv. 18—21, under which almost all things were purified by blood, and without shedding of blood there was no remission of sin, v. 22. It was, therefore, necessary that the heavenly things, of which those under the Levitical law were types and representations, should be purified with better sacrifices, v. 23; and this Christ effected by the offering of himself once for all, vv. 24—26. Whence it follows, that as men must die, and be called to judgment, so sure is it that Christ died for the redemption of transgressions, and that he will appear a second time on earth to bestow the promised inheritance of eternal life on all true believers, vv. 27, 28." Prof. Scholefield traces the course of argument as follows: "For this end, viz. that he might purge our consciences from dead works to serve the living God, Jesus 'is the mediator of the new covenant,' that by his death he might entitle us to the inheritance. For (the strictness of his argument would require him to proceed) in a covenant the Mediator must die; else, how does the declaration of v. 16 assign a reason for that of v. 15? He became the Mediator of the covenant, in order to answer the desired end; and this could not be without his death; for, that the covenant may be valid, there must be the death of the Mediator or mediating sacrifice. In one sense, Moses was the mediator of the old covenant, and so a type of Christ; but not in that sense which required the death of the Mediator, which is clearly the sense required in v. 15. ἵνα θανάτου γενομένου, &c. In that sense the sacrifices, whose blood was sprinkled on the people (v. 19.) were the types of Christ; and the points of coincidence between them as the types, and Christ as the anti-type, is, their being mediating sacrifices to ratify the respective covenants. Now upon the other view of the subject, the argument would clearly be inaccurate. 'Christ is the Mediator of the New Testament, that by his death he might procure us the blessings of the testament: for a testament requires the death of the testator.' Nay, he ought to have said, the death of the Mediator. So that by that view we have a double confusion introduced into the Apostle's style; in the general argument we have testament and covenant confounded together; in the particular argument of this passage we have the testator and the mediator of the testament confounded together." Agreeably to the above statement, he proposes the following version of vv. 16, 17: "For where a covenant is, there must of necessity be brought in the death of the mediating [sacrifice]. For a covenant is valid over dead [sacrifices]; since it is never of any force while the mediating [sacrifice] continues alive." This mode of interpretation, however (notwithstanding the ability with which it is supported by the learned Professor) lies open to serious, if not insuperable, objections. 1. Such a sense of διατεμένου is, as he himself frankly admits, quite unsupported by the usus loquendi: nay, it should seem that the word never could have had any such sense, consistently with its original signification, i. e. to make a disposition or arrangement of any thing. And to understand it not only in the sense mediating, but "the mediating [sacrifice]," is beyond measure harsh. 2. The sense assigned to νεκρῶς is quite at variance with the usus loquendi: for the word is one only used of the dead corpses of men, not of the carcasses of sacrificed animals. Not to say that the use of the plural for the singular, would, according to that sense, be very harsh, and no reason would appear why the writer should not have written νεκρῶ: whereas, according to the common interpretation, it is quite agreeable to the idiom of the language. Moreover, 3dly, the latter clause (as Mr. Slade observes), if thus explained, would imply that there was a custom, at the time when a treaty was made, of appointing some particular animal for its ratification, and afterwards of suspending the execution of the compact, by preserving the animal alive.

16 νοι τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας.—ὅπου γὰρ διαθήκη, θάνατον
 17 ἀνάγκη φέρεσθαι τοῦ διαθεμένου· ^a διαθήκη γὰρ ἐπὶ νεκροῖς a Gal. 3. 15.
 18 βεβαία, ἐπεὶ μὴ ποτε ἰσχύει ὅτε ζῇ ὁ διαθέμενος.—“Ὁθεν

Whereas, we do not hear of any such custom. On the conclusion of a treaty, the animal was immediately slain. “It is (Prof. Stuart remarks) yet to be proved, that no covenants were valid, except those made by the intervention of sacrifices; and yet such is implied in the interpretation in question.” But, waiving the argument as dubious, “the proposition (as Prof. Stuart says) in ὅπου διαθήκη is too general to admit of being limited to covenants of a special nature (as of those ratified by blood).” Finally, I would add, to suppose διαθεμένου and διαθέμενος to be taken in a sense different from that contained in διαθήκη, is exceedingly harsh; since the sentence is highly antithetical, and the points of antithesis fall on those very words. To remove this formidable objection, some who support the interpretation in question render διαθεμένου (as does Dr. Burton, after Whitby), “the covenanting party.” But we may ask (with Prof. Stuart), “where is the death of a person covenanting made necessary, in order to confirm [or ratify] the covenant?” “Besides (as the learned Commentator observes) Christ ratified the covenant, not as a maker, but as a mediator; agreeably to what is said in the preceding verse.

Upon the whole, I see not how the above interpretation can be admitted; for to run directly counter to the usus loquendi, and violate the common idiom of the language, in order, as it is avowed, to make the sacred writer's argument accurate, is not a course which an ingenuous Expositor of the word of God will, on reflection, think allowable, or even prudent: for, as Bp. Middlet. observes, “when once we begin to withhold from words their ordinary and natural signification, we must not complain if Infidels charge our religion with mysticism, or its Expositors with fraud.” And in a passage, like the present, where the fitness of an argument is not the matter in question, it is better to leave the sacred writer's argument (be it what it may) as it is, than to attempt to improve it, at the expense of violating the laws of interpretation, and the dictates of fairness. In such a case, it were better rather to leave the proof of its accuracy or fitness for the purpose in view, to the result of future and more successful inquiry. Here, however, I apprehend, it is not necessary to place the matter on such a footing. For there should seem to be no serious difficulty involved in supposing (to use the words of Mr. Slade) that “the Apostle takes advantage of the two-fold sense of διαθήκη, intimating that it is applicable to the Christian dispensation, not only as denoting a covenant (which is the usual signification of the word in Scripture) but also in its general acception, of a testament, the death of a testator being not only as denoting a covenant (which is the usual signification of the word in Scripture), but also in its general acception, of a testament, the death of a testator being not less requisite to the operation of a will, than the death of a victim to the validity of a covenant.” “As διαθήκη (says Mr. Rose) means both covenant and testament (each being a solemn disposition), and as covenants in general anciently

(and especially that of Mount Sinai) were ratified with blood, the Apostle, in comparing the new διαθήκη with the old, represents it in a double light, a covenant ratified by blood, of which the former sacrifices were the types, and a testament ratified and brought into action by the death of a testator.” The occasion of here introducing διαθ. in a sense deviating from, though closely connected with, that adopted in the preceding verse, is ably pointed out by Prof. Stuart as follows: “The whole comparison of testaments among men, which confer a valid title to an inheritance (vv. 16, 17.) seems evidently to spring from the mention of Christ's death in the preceding verse, and of the confirmation thereby of the believer's title to a heavenly inheritance. It is as much as to say, “Brethren, regard it not as strange, that the death of Christ should have given assurance of promised blessings to believers—should have ratified the new διαθήκη, of which he is the author; other διαθήκαι are ratified by the death of their respective testators, and only in this way.” And then he goes on to show, that even the ancient covenant, though it could not be called a διαθήκη in all respects so well as the new one, was still ratified in a manner not unlike the new one, viz. by blood, the emblem of death, vv. 18—22. There is, as Kuin. observes, a similar play on the double meaning of a word, and a similar transition (ex dilogia) in the use of κατὰπαντος supra ch. iii. and iv. and Rom. iii. 2. 1 Pet. iii. 9. And paronomasias little differing from this are frequent in the Epistles of St. Paul; and both of these are found in the best writers of antiquity, especially Thucydides, Plato, and Philo Judæus. See Calvin, and especially Crellius, who has treated on the passage with his usual ability. He completely answers those who object to this view, as if it involved something trifling and bordering on a sophism. His elaborate discussion completely establishes the view taken by the above eminent Expositors, especially Mr. Rose. It is moreover confirmed by considering the scope of vv. 15—18.; the purpose of the writer being (as Kuinöel shows) to clear the doctrine of the death of the Messiah from objections and scruples, by showing the necessity of it, to effect the grand purposes of his mediatorial office, namely, “the expiation of the sins of the whole world.” It may be added that vv. 16, 17. are, in some measure, parenthetical, and are (as Calvin points out) intended not so much for proof as for illustration, showing that ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη, “whether regarded in the light of a testament or of a covenant, requires to be ratified by death.” So Crellius observes that the argumentation is here “a simili, sed contractam (ut sæpe fit) non explicatam.” It is, he adds, as if it had been said: “Quemadmodum, cum testamentum fit, mortem testatoris accedere necesse est; quandoquidem illud testatoris morte animetur, vivente vero testatore non dum vivat, seu non valeat: sic etiam cum novum fœdus seu testamentum constitutum fuit, mortem illius qui id constituit, ac testatoris instar fuit, accedere, ut testamentum seu fœdus illud firmum ratumque esset, oportuit.” In the sense testament or will, διαθήκη occurs also at Gal. iii. 15.; which will furnish another proof of the Pauline origin of this Epistle.

The words θανάτου γενομένου—κληρονομίας may be rendered, "So that [his] death having taken place for the redemption (i. e. expiation) of the transgressions [committed under the first covenant] they who are called might receive the promise (i. e. the promised blessing) of the eternal inheritance." Compare a similar sentiment at Rom. iii. 25, 26, where the Apostle speaks of the προγεγονότα ἁμαρτήματα of the Jews and Gentiles being expiated by the blood of Christ. Οἱ κεκλημένοι must not be joined with τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας, but are to be referred to the ἐπαγγελίαν, so that ἐπαγγ. τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας be taken for κληρ. ἐπαγγελμένην. At the commencement of v. 16. Kuin. well refers the γὰρ to a clause to be supplied in thought; q. d. "[Christus mori debet]; nam testamentum non nisi testatoris morti insecuta valet. Φέρεσθαι may be rendered, with Prof. Scholefield, "be brought in," to whose Version the insequi of Kuin. is equivalent. And of this sense an example is adduced by Kuin. from Philo.

18. By ἡ πρώτη διαθ. is meant the old covenant mentioned at v. 15. To evince the necessity of the blood-shedding of Christ, adverted to at v. 15, θανάτου γεν. the Apostle shows that, from the first; God ratified his covenant by sacrifice. Hence not even the Sinai covenant was ratified without sacrifice, or blood. This sense of ἐγκ. occurs also in 1 Kings viii. 63. (as used of the temple) καὶ ἐνεκαίνισε τὸν οἶκον (corresponding to the Heb. קָדַשׁ), and 1 Macc. iv. 36, where it answers to our handsel. And as that handselling of any building was celebrated by solemn rites, which served to ratify the possession of the thing, so the word came to simply mean ratify as applied to covenants.

19. This verse is explanatory and confirmatory of what was contained in the preceding. The πάσης ἐντολῆς refers to Exod. xxiv. 4 & 7.

—λαβὼν—ἐρράντισε.] Moses, in his account of this transaction, says nothing of the blood of goats; nor of the water and scarlet wool, and hyssop; nor of the sprinkling the book of the law with blood. These circumstances are justly supposed to have been derived from ancient tradition, being adverted to as things well known to his readers. And as similar rites are mentioned in Levit. xiv. 4—6, 49—52, there can be little doubt that they were used on this occasion. The water and hyssop are easily accounted for as necessary, or at least very suitable to the thing. As to the sprinkling of the book, this involves no discrepancy, being only an addition to, though no variation from, the Mosaic account. And as the altar was sprinkled, so might the book, just as it lay upon the altar. With respect to the expression πάντα τὸν λαόν, that need not be pressed on, but may be taken in a restricted sense.

20. αἷμα τῆς διαθ.] i. e. the blood by which the covenant was solemnly established and ratified. The words do not exactly correspond to the Sept.; but they represent the full sense. Πρὸς ὑμᾶς is put for a dativus commodi.

21. The dedication of the Tabernacle, here adverted to, is described at Exod. xl. 8. sq. and Levit. viii. 1. sq.; where, however, the circumstance in question is not mentioned; and might very well be omitted by Moses in his brief account. It is supposed to have been derived from tradition; and mention of it is made in Josephus and Philo.

22. σχεδόν.] This limitation is employed, because some things (i. e. such as could endure fire) were purified by fire, and others which could not, by water. Levit. xvi. 28; Numb. xxxi. 23. —χωρὶς αἵμ., &c.] Agreeable to what is said by Joseph., Philo, and the Rabbins, that without blood (typical of the remission of sins by the Messiah) no one was absolved from his sins or defilements. On the reasons see Braun, Owen, Dind., Kuin., and the 9th Book of Warburton's Div. Leg. The word αἱματεκχυσία may, as the Commentators say, not occur elsewhere; yet we need not suppose it to be coined by the writer; but only regard it as one of the very numerous words of the Hellenistic Alexandrian and common dialect not preserved in the remains of antiquity.

23. ἀνάγκη οὖν—ταύτας.] The Apostle now, reverting to what was said at v. 21, again treats of the main point, the atonement; and subjoins a conclusion to be drawn from the preceding; q. d. "It was, therefore, necessary that the shadow of heavenly things (the tabernacle) should be purified with these; but heaven itself, with better sacrifices than these;" i. e. it was necessary that an approach to heaven should be afforded by a more efficacious sacrifice. On ὑπόδειγμα see viii. 5. Now all things done by the tabernacle worship, and the priesthood of the Old Law, were but a shadow of heavenly things. Therefore it was enough for them to be consecrated to sacred uses by these,—namely, by the blood of bulls and goats. But those (namely, the heavenly) were to be dedicated κρίττοις θυσίαις, viz. with the sacrifice of Christ alone. In καθαρίζεσθαι there is a metonymy, such as we often find, when things partly similar, partly dissimilar, are compared. For, as by the legal purification an entrance was afforded to the sanctuary; so, by taking the effect as standing for the cause, heaven is said καθαρίζεσθαι, instead of saying that an entrance by them is given to that heaven. (Rosenm.) Καθαρίζεσθαι (to be repeated at the end of the verse) should be rendered (per dilingiam) consecrari. (Kuin.)

24. The heavenly priesthood of Jesus Christ, which had been treated of previously to the parenthetical passage, on the necessity of Christ's death, is here resumed and further illustrated. On χειροπ. see supra v. 11; and on ἅγια see Note on ix. 3. Ἀντίτυπα is nearly synonymous with the ὑπόδειγμα before explained; and denotes the resemblances relative to Christ in his mediatorial high-priestly capacity, and as Lord in heaven. The general sense is, that "Christ did not enter into the earthly holy of holies, which was only an image of the heavenly, but into heaven itself." Ἐμφανισθῆναι is a forensic term, signifying "to present oneself before a tribunal, or court," either as plaintiff, or advocate. Here, from the context, the latter is the sense intended. The points of correspondence with the rites of the law, as performed by the High Priest, are pointed out by the Commentators.

25. οὐδέ] scil. εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν. The writer parallels the offering of Christ with his own blood to the entrance of the priest into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the blood of another; and, accordingly, declares Christ to have appeared before God, and entered into heaven, not in order to make a frequent offering of himself; i. e. not, after having entered into heaven, to again go forth from thence, and descend on earth, and there again be killed as a victim, and rising again, make repeated offerings of himself in heaven to God. Herein, then, he shows the dissimilarity of Christ to the High Priest, and his superiority to him; 1. inasmuch as the High Priest entered into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the blood of another,—namely, of the victims, so that the High Priest and the victim were distinct; Christ, however, by his own blood, so that the High Priest is identified with the victim. 2. That the High Priest, after having entered the Sanctuary, again went forth from it, and repeated this ingress and egress yearly, so as to enter several times; Christ, however, once only. (Limborch.) Ἐαυτὸν for τὸ ἴδιον αἷμα, ix. 12.

26. The reasoning here supposes two very important facts, 1. that from the fall of Adam to the end of the world, no man will be pardoned but through Christ's having offered himself to God as a sacrifice for sin. 2. That although Christ offered himself only once, and that at the conclusion of the Mosaic dispensation, ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων (see 1 Cor. x. 11.), that one offering is in itself so meritorious, and of such efficacy in procuring pardon for the penitent, that its influence reaches backwards to the beginning of the world, and forwards to the end of time: on which account Christ is with great propriety termed, Rev. xiii. 8, "a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The phrase from the foundation of the world, in this passage, is not to be taken strictly, because the necessity of Christ's offering himself a sacrifice for sin did not take place immediately at the creation, but at the fall. We have the phrase in this limited sense, Luke xi. 50. (Mackn.) Φανερ. here is to be taken as ἐμφαν. at v. 24.

27, 28. The Apostle shows by a new argument, derived a simili, that Christ ought once only to offer himself,—namely, because his sacrifice and death were one and the same. Nor does he properly intend to affirm that all men must die, but that it is appointed for them once to die, and that after death, nothing shall remain but judgment. (Dind.) Ἄπαξ, "once for all." See Note on Rom. iii. 21. So it is used in Thucyd. i. 139. ἰδοκεῖ ἅπαξ περὶ πάντων ἀποκρίνασθαι. At προσενεχθεῖς (which is a sacrificial term) supply εἰς θυσίαν. So vii. 27. ἐφάπαξ ἑαυτὸν ἀνεπέγκας. On this verse Prof. Stuart has an instructive Excursus (xix.); and, from the deep importance of the subject (the ATONEMENT), and the perversions of Gospel truth so industriously circulated by the Apostles of heterodoxy, the following sketch of its contents may be not unseasonable.

"The phrase to bear sin is to suffer the punishment due to sin, or to subject oneself to its consequences, and sometimes to expose others to its consequences. But to bear the sins of others is to bear the penalty, or suffering, due to their ἁμαρτία; meaning the consequences of sin; as supra v. 26. also Lament. v. 7. Ezek. xviii. 19. sq. Is. liii. 4. So the שָׂא at Prov. xix. 19. Mic. vii. 7. and פָּעַר, Heb. xiii. 13. Ἀναφέρω has the same (or even a stronger—Ed.) sense as, and corresponds to the Heb. שָׂא and פָּעַר.

So St. Peter (1 Pet. ii. 24.) says of our Saviour ἀνενεγκε—τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν in his own body, on the cross; to explain which he adds, 'by whose stripes ye are healed.' From which and other passages it is plain that the sense attached in Scripture to bearing any one's sins, is the actual suffering of the consequences due to sin. And that such is the sense here, is plain, 1. from the impossibility that the passage can have any other sense: for our Saviour did not take upon himself the moral turpitude, nor remove it as of itself; but the consequences of sin he prevented by his own sufferings. 2. The corresponding Hebrew terms נָשַׁךְ נֶפֶשׁ and נָשַׁךְ all mean punishment of sin, as well as sin itself. The sentiment, then, is, that Jesus by his death endured the penal consequences of our sins. By which, however, we are not to understand, with metaphysical nicety, that the sufferings of our Redeemer were in all respects an exact equivalent; but, that vicarious suffering is here designated, seems to be an unavoidable conclusion, both from the usus loquendi of Scripture, and the nature of the argument, viii. and ix.; and consequently the passage strongly attests the doctrine of the Atonement." On the expression πολλῶν Bp. Middl. has the following luminous annotation. "We are told that οἱ πολλοὶ is often equivalent to πάντες. It is not, however, quite certain, that the Apostle here meant to express πάντων; the verse concludes with the mention of those 'who wait for Him,' i. e. who wait for Christ's second coming in humble hope of receiving their reward: and these manifestly are not the whole human race. So also in his Epist. ii. 10. it is said, that Christ bringeth many sons, πολλοὺς υἱοὺς unto glory. See also Matt. xx. 28. xxvi. 28. Mark x. 45. The reason why, in some places, Christ is said to give himself a ransom for all, and in others only for many, seems to be, that when all are mentioned, it is meant that to all He has offered the terms of salvation; and where many are spoken of, it is considered that by all the terms will not be accepted."

At χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ὀφθῆσεται we must not (with many Expositors) interpret ἀμ. a sin-offering; but, as these words correspond with the εἰς ἀθέτησιν—πεφανέρωται at v. 26., explain χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας (with Pierce, Kuinöel, and Böhme) "without having occasion to bear our sins [in order to atonement]." Εἰς σωτ. may, with some, be referred to ἀπεκδεχομένοις; but it seems more properly referred by the best Expositors to ὀφθῆσ., whence, as Kuin. observes, aptior et gravior sententia procedit; q. d. "will not appear as a peculiar victim, to expiate sin, but to bestow eternal felicity on his faithful worshippers."

X. The scope of vv. 1—18. is to evince the utter inefficacy of the Jewish sacrifices, contrasted with the perfect expiatory sacrifice made by our great High Priest. This subject the Apostle had glanced at before; vii. 11, 19., viii. 7, 10. ix. 8, 10, 13, 14.; and he now enlarges on it, beginning with declaring, that the Levitical sacrifices could not be a perfect satisfaction for sin, v. 1.; for if they had been so, once offering them would have been sufficient, v. 2. But the continual repetition of them shows, that sin remained unpardoned, notwithstanding the previous sacrifices offered for it, v. 3.; and, from their very nature it is impossible that they should procure the pardon of sin, v. 4. This is also asserted in Ps. xl. which is prophetic of the Messiah, v. 5—7.; and from which it is evident, that God designed to abolish his former dispensation concerning the Levitical sacrifices, and to establish another and better one, vv. 8, 9., which offers a perfectly efficacious sacrifice through the offering of the body of Jesus once for all, vv. 10—14.; and which is also testified by the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures, vv. 15—18. (Holden.)

1. σκίαν γὰρ ἔχων, &c.] The γὰρ is rightly referred by Newc. and Kuin. to a clause to be supplied; q. d. "[Christ by one sacrifice did expiate the sins of many; (ix. 28. & x. 10.)] for," &c. There is also an ellip. of μόνον, i. e. "The law having [only] a faint adumbration of future blessings; (See ix. 11.) and not the full form or image of the things in question." Σκιά (on which see Note on viii. 5.) signifies an outline or sketch, as opposed to the filled up figure of anything, so as to constitute a substantial form. At κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ταῖς αὐταῖς, &c. there is a transposition, for ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις ἃς προσφέρουσι κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν εἰς τὸ διηκεῖς, &c. The ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις belongs to the τελειῶσαι. Compare v. 14. Τελειῶσαι signifies to make a complete atonement for. See ix. 9. & vii. 11.

2. ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν, &c.] Here we have a proof of the assertion at v. 1. Instead of the common reading ἐπεὶ ἂν, most of the best MSS., some Fathers, and almost all the early Edd. have ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν with a mark of interrogation at the end of the verse; which reading was preferred by Mill and Wets., and edited by Beng., Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Schoettg., Tittm., and Vater; and I think justly, since the οὐκ might more easily have been omitted than inserted; and thus, as Kuin. says, "oratio fit invidior." Ἐπεὶ means "since or for otherwise," by an ellipsis of ἄλλως, such as I have often treated on in my Notes on Thucyd. That ἐπεὶ may commence an interrogative sentence, the Commentators prove from

Rom. vi. 9. and Aristoph. Nub. 689. The sense is: "For otherwise, (i. e. if the sacrifices could have perfectly expiated sin) would they not have ceased to be offered?" Διὰ τὸ μηδεμίαν ἔχειν —κεκαθ., "because the worshippers, being, once for all, made clean from sin, would have been no longer troubled in their consciences with the remembrance of sins, those being thus expiated." Συνεῖδ., includes the senses of conscience and consciousness; the latter as the result of the former, or the one mutually acting and reacting on the other. Not that it is to be understood that they lose all consciousness of those sins; (since gratitude for the redeeming mercies of a Saviour would prevent that) but that they should have fearful consciousness (a sort of ἐλπίς φόβου, as Thucydides expresses it) arising from the apprehension of suffering the penalty of sin; which can only be tranquilized by faith in Christ. This alone can enable men to solve the Philosophic problem "Quid pure tranquillet?" Καθ. is a term occurring also in the Classical writers, used of expiations and lustrations.

3. ἀλλά has here a very elliptical use, which may, with Kuin., be briefly rendered by imo vero; as in Acts xix. 2. The force of the argument turns much on ἀνάμνησις, and the full sense is well expressed by Boehme and Kuin., "[So far are they, by these continued sacrifices, from being freed from the consciousness of unexpiated sin], that there is [rather] therein a commemoration of the sins of the people." So Philo (cited by Carpz.) says of the sacrifices of the wicked that οὐ λόσιν ἀμαρτημάτων, ἀλλ' ὑπόμνησις, scil. μόνον ἐργάζονται. It is well observed by Stuart, that "the sacrifices offered on the day of atonement, being meant as propitiatory offerings, served to remind the Hebrews of the desert of sin, i. e. of the punishment or penalty due to it. As they continued to be offered yearly, so those who brought them must be reminded, through their whole lives, of new desert of punishment. The writer means, however, that a yearly remembrance of sin in a spiritual respect, not merely in a civil or ecclesiastical one, was made; for in this sense, the yearly atonement procured pardon. In the other it did not."

4. ἀφαιρεῖν ἀμ.] i. e. by atoning, to procure God's pardon for sin, and avert the punishment of it in a future state. "The Apostle's argument implied, that no sacrifice could really atone for sin, or bring sinners into a state of acceptance with God unto eternal life, which did not make full satisfaction to his offended justice, and render it honourable to him to remit the punishment of it. But the legal sacrifices were so far from being thus efficacious, that they did not suffice for the individuals, or the generation of Israel, who presented them even in respect of a permanent exemption from temporal judgments. For the most solemn of them at the day of atonement, was rather an annual remembrance of their sins, than a removal of the guilt of them; so that they had only a respect to the year which was past; and the same remembrance. As Dévine appointments, such sacrifices might be a suitable acknowledgment of guilt, and profession of repentance, and reliance on the mercy of God, on account of which he might bear with the Israelites, and give them temporal benefits; and they aptly typified the sacrifice of Christ. But they could not possibly render pardoning mercy, in its most plenteous exercise, consistent with the infinite justice and holiness of God; without which nothing could take away sin, according to the Apostle's reasoning in this place. The same argument equally proves, that the blood of a mere man, or of a mere creature, cannot take away sin." (Scott.)

5. To prove his doctrine in the most unanswerable manner, the Apostle shows that, however opposed to Jewish prejudices, it is no other than what is recognized in their own Scriptures; adducing and arguing from Ps. xxxix. 6—19., which showed that his coming was the necessary consequence of the inefficacy of the legal sacrifices, and of the Lord's purpose of saving sinners.

Of διό—λέγει the sense is: "Wherefore, in a Psalm which is prophetic of the coming of the Messiah, he is represented by David as saying, on his coming into the world," &c. The quotation is from the Sept., with only the change of ἦτης into εὐδόκησας; and at v. 7. there is only an abridgment of the words of the Sept. Upon the whole, the discrepancy is not so great as it would appear from the writers on the Quotations, who subjoin καὶ τὸν νόμον σου ἐν μέσῳ τῆς καρδίας μου, though the Apostle plainly did not intend to take them: the Sept. Version itself is only a free translation of the Hebrew, and its true sense will better appear when it is pointed (as it ought to be) thus: Ἰδοὺ, ἦκω (ἐν κεφαλίδι—ἐμοῦ) τοῦ ποιῆσαι τὸ θελήμα σου, ὃ θεός μου, ἠβουλήσῃ· καὶ τὸν νόμον σου ἐν μέσῳ τῆς καρδίας μου. In order to properly understand the last clause, it should be observed, that the Septuagint took the הורה as an Accusative, not a Nominative. Agreeably to which, we must suppose in פשוט and ποιῆσαι a dilogia, and repeat them in the next clause, in the sense cause to be, i. e. put. This would strengthen the parallelism, but violate the construction. The most remarkable circumstance connected with this passage is, that in the words σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω the Sept. and the Apostle both differ widely from the Hebrew, which is well rendered, "mine ears hast thou opened." To remove this discrepancy, various methods have been proposed, either by altering the Hebrew to correspond to the Greek, or the Greek to the Hebrew. None of these, however, can be adopted, since the present reading in the Hebrew is confirmed by all the MSS. and Versions; and in the Greek by all the MSS. both of the Sept. and the Apostle. More attention is due to the methods of reconciling the sense of the Hebrew with the Greek, and making them, though different in words, coincide in meaning. These, however, are very harsh. The words in the Hebrew may, with a reference to Is. l. 5., be explained of obedience; but all the various methods of bringing that to any coincidence with what is contained in the Sept. and N. T. σῶμα κατ. μοι seem to me, more or less, unsuccessful. The best Hebraists are now agreed that the Hebrew words לִי מִנְיָהּ mean “me docuisti,” as in Is. l. 5, and 1 Sam. xx. 2. the phrase מִנְיָהּ מִיָּד signifies that the Messiah has opened out some profound truth. And in this very sense, I find, the words are taken by Dr. French and Mr. Skinner, who have admirably rendered the whole portion: and thrown great light on the passage by placing the words in a parenthesis: rightly supposing the meaning to be, that “the truth just stated had been communicated to Messiah by the Almighty.” That such is the force of the expression, is almost certain from the parallel passage of Isaiah. Prof. Stuart, however, takes it to mean, “thou hast made me obedient to thy service;” which he thinks required by the next verse and Job xxxvi. 10, 15. That the words are to be understood as prophetic of the Messiah, is plain, and has been fully established (in opposition to many recent foreign Commentators) by Prof. Stuart, in his elaborate Excursus on the passage, to which the reader is referred.

But, to return to the text of the Apostle, for σῶμα we have the strongest external evidence, and even internal; for it is required by the εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον just before. And at v. 10, in the words διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς τοῦ σώματος Ἰ. Χρ. there is an evident reference to the σῶμα κατηρτίσθαι μοι at v. 5, which must, together with the εἰσερχ. εἰς τὸν κόσμον before, be understood of the incarnation of the Redeemer, with allusion also to the expiation he made with that body offered up as a sacrifice for the sins of the world. See ii. 14; ix. 25; x. 10. It may be urged, indeed, that this is not the sense of the Psalmist. Granted: but the Apostle is amenable to no blame; for, as Stuart well shows, “the circumstance adverted to in σῶμα κατηρτίσθαι μοι is not primary or essential, but only incidental to the argument he is carrying on.” And as the writer had occasion to quote the long passage in which it occurs for another purpose, and was obliged to quote it from the Sept., which alone was understood by his readers in general, the words which he there found he was fully justified in retaining; especially as they did not impede, but rather promote the purpose he had in view; namely, by turning the minds of his readers to CHRIST, who, in his incarnation, became the true expiatory sacrifice, of which the sacrifices in the law were but types and symbols.

7. τότε] “then.” In the Hebr. נ. The words, however, have so perplexed some, that they choose to regard each of them as redundant. But that is cutting the knot. It is better to suppose some rather unusual, yet suitable, sense of נ. and τότε; and we may (with Carpz., Ern., Schmidt, Morus, Tittm., Gesen., Dr. French, and Kuin.) render “therefore.” Perhaps, however, there is no occasion to deviate from the usual sense of time; since it may, as Stuart suggests, be understood of the time referred to in the preceding context of Psalm xl., wherein are related the wonderful works of God. By the κεφαλίδι βιβλίου is meant the Pentateuch, and such other parts of the Scriptures of the O. T. as were then in being. Κεφαλ., “roll.” So called with reference to the wooden rollers about which the sheets of parchment were rolled, and which had at one end a κεφαλis, or sort of carved or turned head, (which gave name to the whole) of which, Kuin. remarks, a figure is given by Hugo in his book on the origin of writing.

8. On the passage of the Psalm the Apostle now offers some remarks, showing from the words of the Messiah briefly repeated, that the Levitical sacrifices, from their inefficacy to obtain the full pardon of sins, are abrogated, and the sacrifice of Christ substituted in their place. The writer’s reasoning on the above prophecy may be popularly expressed, with Mr. Holden, as follows: “Since the inefficacy and unacceptableness of the Levitical sacrifices are declared in Scripture, (v. 8,) and since Christ came into the world to do the will of God, it follows that God designed ‘to take away [abolish] the first ordinance, which was ineffectual, that he may establish the second, dispensation, founded on the sacrifice of Christ, which perfectly accorded with his will and eternal counsels, v. 9.”

9. ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου] i. e. by offering myself on the cross, according to thy command, John xiv. 31. Ἀναίρει contains a conclusion from the foregoing words. By τὸ πρῶτον is meant the Levitical sacrifices; and by τὸ δεύτερον, the will of God as evinced in the sacrifice of the body of Christ.

10. The Apostle proceeds to explain what is meant, in this case, by doing the will of God, and what is the efficacy of that obedience. (Stuart.) 'Εν ᾧ θελ., "in conformity with which will," [of God,] whereby he willed Christ to be a victim, and which Christ came to fulfil. See vv. 7 & 9. 'Ἁγιασμένοι ἐσμὲν, "we are atoned for, purified and made holy," expiation being made for us, and pardon of our sins obtained. Compare vv. 4 & 11; ii. 11. 'Εφάπαξ must be referred, not, with some, to ἁγιασμ., but to προσφ. Compare v. 14, and supra ix. 26 & 28. The full sense is, "once for all;" the term being very significant, and denoting (as observes Dr. Pye Smith, Discourse on the Sacrifice and Priesthood of Christ, p. 132.) the absolute cessation of an act under the idea that it has been perfectly performed. "The Apostle (says Stuart) meets the objection as to dissimilarity in the act of expiation, by showing that being once slain, as an expiatory offering, was quite sufficient to satisfy the demands of the case."

11—15. The Apostle had, at ἐφάπαξ again adverted to a point on which his Hebrew readers might think there was a superiority in the Jewish economy; namely, that the expiation made by the High Priest was made every year, that of Christ only once. The Apostle, therefore, again meets the objection in the present and following verses, showing that it was made once for all, by an act neither needing nor admitting of repetition;—on which our atonement may safely be rested, since it will be for ever availing, and not be temporary like the sacrifices of the old dispensation. Here the Apostle applies generally to the sacrifices offered daily by the priests the argument, by which he had proved the inefficacy of the annual sacrifices of the High Priest in the holy of holies; namely, that the very repetition of such services evinced their inefficacy, viz. to obtain permanent pardon and complete expiation. Whereas Christ offered but one sacrifice for the sins of the world, yet that was so effectual as not to need being repeated; and, as a proof of which completion, he shows he was seated at the right hand of God as Lord of the universe. At v. 14, he affirms that the repetition need not be made, since it has already fully produced the effect, the perfect expiation of those who have an interest in that sacrifice by faith and repentance. Then it is said, that to this efficacy the Holy Spirit has testified, in the before-mentioned account of the covenant of which Jesus Christ is the mediator; namely, that under the new Covenant, sin should be no more remembered. Consequently, since pardon is obtained, no more offering for sin is necessary.

VOL. II.

A few illustrations of the phraseology in vv. 11—18 inclusive, will be all that is necessary. By ἱερεὺς is meant, in a generic sense, the priests generally in their course, including the High Priest. Ἐσθῆκε refers to the rule which required the Priests to stand while in the temple, and there is a tacit parallel between the reverential posture of these ministers and the sitting of Jesus, in quality of LORD.

12. αὐτός.] Griesb. and Knapp edit οὗτος, from some MSS. But this reading Kuin. proves to have evidently arisen from correction. And he well observes, that αὐτός (ipse) was used honoris causā, as Hom. II. θ. 4. αὐτὸς δέ (Jupiter) σφ' ἀγόρευε, θεοὶ δ' ὑπὸ πάντες ἀκούου. Thus, too, the expression αὐτὸς ἔφα as used by the Pythagoreans of their master. Εἰς τὸ διηνεκές is construed by Valckn., Dind., Böhme, and Stuart with θυσίαν; but by the Commentators generally (and recently by Kuin.), with ἐκάθισε, which is more agreeable to the context; and moreover εἰς τὸ διην. ἐκάθισεν is opposed to ἔσθηκε καθ' ἡμέραν λειτουργ. and μίαν προσφ. θυσίαν at v. 11. And so Prof. Stuart in his second Edition.

13. ἐκδεχ., "awaiting." See i. 13. On the next words see ii. 8. Matt. xxii. 44. Acts ii. 35. 1 Cor. xv. 27 & 28.

— τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ δ. τοὺς ἁγ.] A passage pregnant with sense, which may be thus expressed: "For by (or at) one offering [that of himself, v. 9.] hath he perfectly expiated those that are sanctified." Notwithstanding that some Expositors construe εἰς τὸ διην. with προσφ., and others with ἁγιαζ., yet its only natural connection is surely with τετελ. (as most Interpreters take it); εἰς τὸ διην. being nearly equivalent to εἰς τὸ πάντελες in a kindred passage supra vii. 25. ὅθεν καὶ σώζεις εἰς τὸ πάντελες δύνανται τοὺς προσερχομένους δι' αὐτοῦ τῷ Θεῷ. And the writer might here have used that very expression, but that he wished to make prominent the truth, that this expiation, when once made, was made for ever,—neither requiring nor admitting of any repetition. By the expression τετελ. (on which see ix. 9; x. 1, and Notes) is meant that provision which was made by the sacrifice of Christ for perfect justification, unto eternal life. And ἁγιαζου. does not merely mean (as Hammond and Wets., cited in D'Oyly and Mant, explain) "obedient Christians, such as obey the Gospel, and so become entitled to the benefits of Christ's death;" but those who are sanctified by faith springing from regeneration, and evidenced by the sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience." Which view is supported by an able examination of the passage to be found in Bp. Bull's Harmon. Ap. Ch. ii. § 5, p. 9, where he points out (what is not noticed by the Commentators) that "the Apostle here restricts the expiation by the death of Christ to those who are sanctified in heart and action; plainly intimating that, by the merits of Christ, none are justified, unless by the Spirit of Christ they have previously become sanctified. Inasmuch as Justification follows Sanctification, (at least the first and less perfect Justification,) as appears from 1 Pet. i. 2, where the order of man's salvation is beautifully marked out. First comes ἀγιασμός Πνεύματος εἰς ὑπακοήν, then follows ῥαντισμός αἵματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,—namely, for justification."

16. αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη, &c.] This passage (from Jerem. xxxi. 31. sq.) had been before cited at viii. 8. seqq.; but with a different intent. The Apostle has here not adduced the whole passage, because he had given it complete before, and since the nervus probandi is especially inherent in the words here taken. (Kuin.) The ἡμῖν refers to himself and his readers, and indeed all Christians. Kuin, observes, that Beza, De Dieu, Storr, Böhme, and others, rightly connect μετὰ γὰρ τὸ προειρ. with λέγει Κύριος. In διδούς νόμους—αὐτῶν there is a slight deviation from both the Sept. and the Hebrew, and that in order to make the words better understood and applied by his readers.

19. Here ends the doctrinal part of the Epistle, the remainder of which is occupied with admonitory, hortatory, and consolatory matter. And first the Apostle proceeds to the practical application of those doctrines; exhorting his readers to constancy in their Christian profession, and warning them against apostasy and its awful consequences; intermingling, however, encouragements and promises, to excite them to aim at obtaining the prize of their high calling in Christ Jesus, by enduring unto the end.

—παρρησίαν εἰς τὴν εἴσοδον.] Literally, "a confidence for the access;" i. e. a confidence that we may enter. In τῶν ἀγ. we have a Genit. for an Accus. with εἰς. The expression means the true Holy of Holies, heaven.

20. ζῶσαν] for ζωοποιούσαν or εἰς ζωὴν ἄγουσαν, "which leadeth to salvation." Ἐνεκαίνισεν ἡμῖν, "hath consecrated, or dedicated it to us," unto our use, namely, by himself first entering upon it. For to consecrate any road, is to open it for access, and dedicate it to use. See Note supra ix. 18. Chrys. well explains: ἡν κατεσκεύασε, καὶ ἥς ἤρξατο (ἐγκαίνισμός γὰρ λέγεται ἀρχὴ χρήσεως) ἡν κατεσκεύασε, καὶ δι' ἥς αὐτὸς ἐβάδισεν.

—διὰ τοῦ καταπετάσματος.] Supply ἄγουσαν. By this somewhat obscure expression (on which see Note at vi. 19.) is meant Christ's body; which is, by a certain figure (similar to others at John x. 7. and xiv. 6.) compared to the veil of the Temple; q. d. "As the veil of the Temple had to be removed for the entrance of the High Priest into the holy of holies, so was Christ's body to be removed by death, in order to enter into the true sanctuary, heaven, and open the way to all Christians." So Rosenm. and Kuin. explain. But Stuart (in his 1st Edition) and Holden suppose a paronomasia in διὰ, thus: "As the holy of holies could only be entered through the veil, so believers can only have access to heaven, of which it was the representation, through the body of Jesus, which was once offered for sin." In his second Edition, however, Prof. Stuart abandons the above interpretation, and propounds another, which my limits will not permit me to introduce, so as to do justice to its merits, which, on the score of ingenuity, are considerable. Neither, however, can I venture to receive it, inasmuch as it appears, though on different grounds, open to greater objections than the former.

21. οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Though this has been somewhat differently explained, there is, I think, little doubt that it means properly the true sanctuary, heaven (for that there is an allusion to the Jewish holy of holies, is plain from the expressions παρρησίαν (on which see Note on ix. 7.) προσερχώμεθα, and ἐρραντισμένοι. (See Note on v. 22, and compare iv. 16.); but, in an under sense, the spiritual house or family of God on earth, namely, Christ's Holy Catholic Church. This is placed beyond doubt by 1 Tim. iii. 15. ἵνα εἰδῆς πᾶς δεῖ ἐν οἴκῳ Θεοῦ ζῶντος ἀναστρέφεισθαι, and supra iii. 6. οὗ οἴκος ἐσμεν ἡμεῖς.

22. προσερχώμεθα] "let us approach in prayer, and worship." Comp. iv. 16. vii. 19. Ἀληθ. καρδίας is best explained a sincere, faithful, and true disposition of heart. So Is. xxxviii.

I would compare Dionys. Hal. p. 729. 21. Sylb. δόξα ἰσχυρά, καὶ οὐ πολλὸν ἀπέχουσα πίστις εἶναι. See supra vi. 11. Col. ii. 2. 1 Thess. i. 5. 'Εόραντ. and λελουμένοι are terms belonging to the Temple service; and the rites to which they allude had a reference respectively to expiation and to moral purity. See ix. 13. There is here, however, a more special allusion; namely, as Kuin. points out, to what is said at Exod. xxix. 21. and Levit. ix. 2, 20. of the vests of Aaron and his sons being sprinkled with blood, in order to their being allowed to enter the Sanctuary. May we not, therefore, suppose that when the High Priest entered the Sanctuary, he entered not only with blood, but also having his robes sprinkled with blood? The words ἑρραντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συν. πον. (with which compare 1 Pet. i. 2. ραντισμὸν αἵματος 'Ι. Χριστοῦ) may be rendered "sprinkled, as to our hearts, from an evil conscience," i. e. (laying aside the metaphor, on which see Note at ix. 13.) cleansed and freed from whatever dispositions corrupt the conscience, and defile the heart. I would compare Joseph. Antiq. i. 1. 4. ἐπὶ συνειδότητι πονηρᾶ.

23. λελουμένοι, &c.] This is not an admonition to corporeal purity; but the expression turns wholly on a comparison with the legal rite of washing for purification; and there is an allusion to baptism; as also in the foregoing expression we have a parallel with a Jewish rite. The Jews (to use the words of Prof. Stuart) "were sprinkled with blood, in order that they might be purified, so as to have access to God; Christians are internally sprinkled, i. e. purified by the blood of Jesus. The Jews were washed with water, in order to be ceremonially purified, so as to come before God; Christians have been washed by the purifying water of baptism."

— τὴν ὁμολογίαν τῆς ἐλπ.] One should have expected ὁμολ. τῆς πίστεως; but as it is, we must seek the best explanation we can. Nor is it necessary to lower the expression ὁμολ. τῆς ἐλπ. (with most recent Commentators) to a mere periphrasis for "the Christian religion." It may, I think, be regarded as a phrasis prægna; of which the full sense is, "Let us abide by the faith we profess, and cling to the hope which it ministers." Comp. iv. 14. There is also an allusion to the confession in baptism. Πιστὸς γὰρ ὁ ἐπαγγ. "[which we may well do:] for God will surely keep his promises, and therefore we may well perform our engagements."

24. κατανοῶμεν ἀλλ. &c.] Of this expression various senses have been proposed. Some interpret, "take care of." But such a signification of the word is unauthorized. Others, "let us consider, bear in mind," namely, "by showing a mutual concern for each other." Yet neither is that sufficiently authorized by the usus loquendi; and it is not quite agreeable to the context. It should seem that as the Apostle has just been exhorting to a sincere and lively faith, so here he intends to subjoin an admonition to those good works, which are the surest proof of its sincerity, and the fairest fruits of its efficacy (see Gal. v. 6.); and especially to ἀγάπη, in the full sense of the word, as described in 1 Cor. xiii. (See a most beautiful discourse on this text by Dr. Barrow, Sermons, No. xxviii., in which are stated the motives and arguments to Christian charity). The admonition, however, is so expressed as to advert to a certain principle, which might be serviceable towards producing and maintaining these good works,—that of mutual emulation, and the sense of acting under the eyes of each other, as well as of God. Accordingly, the sense seems best represented by Chrys., Theoph., and Theodoret, and the ancient Commentators, and Beza, Calvin, Grot., Est., Menoch., Wolf, Carpz., and Kuin., among the modern ones, who take καταν. to mean, "let us keep our observation attentively fixed on each other." ἐπισκοπῶμεν, as the ancients explain it. And so the Pesch. Syr. ܡܢ ܡܢ ܝܡܝܢܐ, "and let us keep an eye one to another." This mode of understanding the word is confirmed by xii. 15. ἐπισκοποῦντες ἡ ἑαυτοῦ, &c. Of course, εἰς παροξυσμὸν is like the Latin "in incitementum." So Theodoret (following Chrys.) illustrates this emulation by the simile ὡς σίδηρος σίδηρον θήγει, καὶ λίθος λίθον προστριβόμενος ἀποκτείνει φλόγα. And how great an incitement to virtue would arise from acting each in the presence of another, is hardly to be imagined; both on the principle of emulation, and that of fear. See Thucyd. i. 84. 13. With this very idea in his mind, the Apostle at Ch. xii. says, "seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

25. μὴ ἐγκατ. τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν ἐ.] On the import of ἐπισυν. some difference of opinion exists. To omit certain confined and harsh interpretations, several eminent Expositors take τῶν ἐπισ. to mean, "the society of Christians," regarding the admonition as directed against apostasy. And indeed there is something to countenance this in the context, but not sufficient to establish it; especially as there is so much more of aptness in the sense "assembling of themselves together," which is assigned by almost all the ancient, and the best modern Expositors. It should seem that the Apostle meant to suggest one principal means of maintaining their faith and hope, and calling into action the principle of emulation, by which the sluggishness with which he reproaches them at v. 11. might be obviated; namely, regular attendance on the various assemblies for divine worship, whether in the public congregation, or in their more private meetings held for social worship. How indispensable this was to the producing the above ends, and how the neglect of this duty would tend (and that not remotely) to apostasy itself, it is scarcely necessary to observe. Nor are we justified in seeking to diminish the force of the implied admonition too much, by adverting to the peculiar circumstances in which the Hebrews were placed, and the temptation to which it appears they were of themselves too prone,—apostasy, or, at least, backsliding. The importance, and even necessity, of the duty of Christians assembling themselves together, exists in every age. In which view, the following remark of that bitter enemy to Christianity, GIBBON, in his Decline and Fall, vol. iv. p. 83, conveys an important truth (fas est ab hoste doceri), and ought to make those pause who, seek, by an ingenious sophistry, to weaken the obligation of the Christian Sabbath, and thus depreciate the inestimable advantages (to those especially who have to labour, whether with body or mind, to provide for the day which passes over their heads) of one day, at least, rescued from the mass devoted to the cares of this life (getting and spending), in order to labour for the meat which endureth unto everlasting life. “The devotion of the poet, or the philosopher, may be secretly nourished by prayer, meditation, and study; but the exercise of public worship appears to be the only solid foundation of the religious sentiments of the people, which derive their force from imitation and habit. The interruption of that public exercise may consummate, in the period of a few years, the important work of a national revolution. The memory of theological opinions cannot long be preserved without the artificial aids of priests and of books.”

But to advert to a few points in the phraseology, this use of ἐπισυν, in preference to συναγ., was, no doubt, intended for distinction from the Jewish meetings. The word is rare, and only occurs elsewhere in the N. T. at 1 Thess. ii. 1; which, I would observe, supplies another proof in addition to those adduced by Prof. Stuart, of the Pauline origin of this Epistle. It is not found in the Sept., but occurs in 2 Macc. ii. 7. ὥς ἂν συναγάγῃ ὁ Θεὸς ἐπισυναγωγὴν τοῦ λαοῦ. At παρακαλοῦντες, supply ἐαυτοὺς, which is expressed at iii. 13. παρακ. ἐαυτοὺς—ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ τις ἐξ ὑμῶν. By παρακ. is meant “exhorting each other to constancy in the performance of that and all other religious duties.” It is well observed by Kuin. that the words καὶ ποσούτω μαλλον, &c., are to be referred to the whole of the admonition at v. 23.

—τὴν ἡμέραν.] The full sense is, “and so much the rather ought ye to mutually exhort and excite each other to the performance of all good works, inasmuch as ye see the day approaching.” What day is here to be understood, whether the day, or time, of the destruction of Jerusalem, or the day of judgment, is disputed. Most modern Commentators adopt the former interpretation, which is ably maintained by Prof. Stuart. “As Christ (says he) had foretold the destruction of the Jewish temple and nation [in that generation. Ed.], what could be more natural than for the Apostle to say: “Brethren, do every thing in your power to guard against apostasy. And this the more, because a return to Judaism would now be very ill-timed; the season is near, when the Jewish temple and state are to be destroyed.” But though it be true that the day of God’s judgments on the unbelieving or apostatizing Jews would be a seasonable deliverance of Christians from their persecutions, yet that was not, I think, intended to be made the prominent idea. And when we consider that the expression the day or that day is almost always in the N. T. used of the day of judgment, I prefer, with the ancient and several eminent modern Commentators, as Calvin, Wolf, Bp. Fell, and Newc., to take it of the advent of Christ to judgment. “The day” here, I conceive, corresponds to “the day of the Lord” at 1 Thess. v. 2. (evidently meaning the day of judgment), and which is a little after, v. 4. called simply, as here, “the day.” A passage, I would observe, corresponding in several particulars to the present; so much so as to afford a strong evidence that both came from the pen of the same writer. Both the above senses, however, might be intended,—the latter as founded on the former; for there is reason to think that the Hebrew-Christians united in their minds the two events,—the second advent of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem, and, the end of all things, the συντέλεια τῶν αἰώνων. So 1 Pet. iv. 7. πάντων δὲ τὸ τέλος ἡγγικε· σωφρονήσατε οὖν, &c.

26, 27. Here is suggested a reason why they should beware of whatever led to apostasy,—namely, that if, after having acknowledged and embraced the truth, they slide back into error, and deliberately apostatize, there will be no hope of pardon and acceptance, but their case will be desperate. Οὐκ ἐτι—θυσία, “there is no other mode of expiation provided.” And since God will not pardon sin without some satisfaction (else the argument here would be inconclusive), it follows that nought can remain to apostates but a horribly fearful expectation of future judgment unto perdition, strongly alluded to in the awful expression πυρὸς ζῆλος, denoting the fiery anger of God, often thus designated in the O. T. See Ps. xxi. 9. Num. xvi. 25. Mal. iv. 1. Hebr. v. 17. xii. 29. With φοβ. ἐκδ. I would compare ἐλπίδα τοῦ φόβου in Thucyd. vii. 61.

28, 29. Here is an argumentum a minori ad majus, to show the heavy wrath which hangs over apostates, when even Moses’ law punished such defection most severely. By the νόμον is plainly meant the ceremonial law; for a wilful violation of which, no persons, however dignified, were spared from punishment. The words πὸς ὃν—ἐνυβρίσας place in a strong light the guilt of apostates. The interjected δοκεῖτε has great energy, and ἀξ. great elegance. Καταπ. implies the utmost contempt, insult, and contumely, by representing him (with the Jews) as an impostor. Καταπατεῖν, like the Latin conculcare, is a term denoting the utmost contempt and insult. I would compare Joseph. p. 1172, 32. φέρετε δὴ τοίνυν, φέρετε πατούμενα βλέποντες τὰ ἅγια· and 1179, 10. πατήσαντες τοὺς νόμους. Καὶ τὸ αἷμα—ἡγιάσθη, “and who regardeth the blood of the covenant (i. e. the blood of Christ shed to ratify the new covenant) wherewith he was sanctified (i. e. cleansed from his sins, and set apart to the service of God) as a thing common and ordinary, no more than that of a man (and that an impostor), and consequently having no expiatory efficacy.” Καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τ. χ. ἐνυβρίσας. The sense of these words is, I conceive, that assigned by the ancient and most modern Expositors, “hath treated with contumely the Spirit of grace,” i. e. the Holy Spirit, the bestower of grace; viz. by resisting his holy influences; which would have preserved from apostasy. Not that I would have the common version altered, as is done by modern Translators; for the expression doing despite to, means treating with contumely. So Milton, Paradise Lost, B. vi. l. 906.

“It would be all his solace and revenge,
 As a despite done against the Most High,
 Thee once to gain companion of his woe.”

Thus at vi. 4. they are described as once μέτοχοι Πνεύματος ἁγίου. Many recent foreign Commentators, indeed (and the Wakefields and Belshams of our own country) attempt to lower the sense to “the mercies of the Gospel.” But it has been convincingly shown by Bp. Middleton that this version is wholly inadmissible. “Attributes (he observes) are frequently expressed in the ancient Oriental tongues and scriptural phraseology, not, as with us, by means of adjectives, but by the genitives of the names of attributes, made to depend on the noun to which the attribute belongs. The Holy Spirit is continually named in the Syr. Version the Spirit of holiness: the gracious throne, a title of the Almighty, is in this Epist. iv. 16. ὁ θρόνος τῆς χάριτος: and the all-gracious God is 1 Pet. v. 10. ὁ Θεὸς πάσης χάριτος. And here τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος, the gracious Spirit, i. e. the Holy Ghost. And this interpretation exactly suits the context: that the writer should in the same verse speak of “trampling on the Son of God,” and of “insulting the gracious Spirit,” will seem very intelligible and natural to those who admit the personality of the Holy Ghost; and they who do not, ought at least to show that ἐνυβρίξιν in Greek has for its object things, and even qualities; and that to “insult the mercies of the Gospel” is tolerable sense. The last mentioned interpretation, it may be observed, is decidedly rejected by Kuin. He, however, explains it of the influences, i. e. the gifts of the Holy Spirit; which, Stuart thinks, makes a good and apposite sense. But until examples are adduced to prove the use of so very strong a term with a thing, we may well retain what is, I think, a far more apposite sense; for to insult the Holy Spirit, is to reject his holy influences with disdain,—to deny their reality; or, it may be, ascribe them to demoniacal agency,—the sin against the Holy Ghost.

30, 31. This awful warning the Apostle follows up with quotations from Scripture showing the tremendous nature of the punishment threatened; applying to apostates what was originally said of the idolatrous Gentiles. To give greater force to the words, he has employed, in the place of the usual formula of citation, a mode of expression adapted to suggest the acknowledged greatness of the Speaker (i. e. God by Moses), in His attributes of infinite power, justice, and truth. See vv. 31. 37. The passage is from Deut. xxxii. 35; but the words quoted do not entirely agree either with the Sept. or the Hebrew: though the sense is faithfully represented; and probably some copies of the Sept. so read in the time of St. Paul. The passage is cited in exactly the same words at Rom. xii. 19; one among the many proofs of the Pauline origin of the Epistle. The words λέγει Κύριος are omitted in some MSS. and Versions, and are, with some reason, rejected by several Critics. Καὶ πάλιν, “and again,” or also. The words following are taken from Deut. xxxii. 36., though found also in Ps. cxxxv. 14., probably derived from Deut. The κρινεῖ is by some explained “will avenge.” But though that sense seems very suitable to the passage of Deut. and Psalms, the context in the Apostle seems to require that assigned by many eminent Commentators, from Calvin and Limborch down to Kuin., “will condemn and punish his [apostatizing] people;” of course, by an accommodation of the sense of the original. Φοβερὸν answers to the Latin horribile, as in Cicero: “Horribile est causam capitis dicere.” The expression ἐμπίπτειν εἰς χεῖρά τινος, Kuin. shows, denotes to fall into any one’s power for evil,—as revenge, or punishment. The epithet ζώντος may refer either to the eternity, or the omnipotence of God, or may allude to both, in order to show how utterly hopeless is the condition of his enemies.

32. ἀναμνησκέσθε—παθῆμ.] To the influence of threatenings the Apostle now (in order to turn them from apostasy, or presumptuous sin) subjoins the argument of self-interest, reminding them of the supports provided under the trials they had experienced in the former days of their profession; and hinting, that as to what they had hazarded, suffered, and renounced for Christ, the sacrifices would be lost if they should now give way and apostatize. The best comment on this passage is a very similar sentiment at Gal. iii. 3, 4. Πρότερον is here used adjectively, as often in Thucyd. On φωτισθ., “enlightened by conversion to the Gospel,” see vi. 5. In ἄθλησιν there is an agonistic metaphor: and ἄθλ. παθ. should be rendered “a great conflict or struggle with afflictions.” I would here compare Thucyd. ii. 45. παισιν ἢ ἀδελφοῖς ὁρῶ μέγαν τὸν ἀγῶνα. The nature of these sufferings is declared in the two following verses.

33, 34. In adverting to the sufferings just mentioned, the Apostle first uses an expression suggested by the foregoing agonistic metaphor; namely, ὀνειδ. καὶ θλίψ. θεατριζόμενοι, of which the sense is, “being exposed to open and public abuse and insult,” as criminals are in a theatre or public spectacle: an allusion to the ἀγῶν maintained with beasts by the miserable wretches thus θεατριζόμενοι, or exposed to the gaze of the multitude assembled at the theatre; who to brutality added contumely. The best comment here is 1 Cor. iv. 9., and the similarity in the figure is among the proofs of the Pauline origin. The term ἐκθεατρίζειν, “to expose to public ignominy,” is cited by Raphael. from Polyb. Τοῦτο μὲν and τοῦτο δὲ are partitive formulas frequent in the best writers. Render “partly while ye were made partakers with those who were so circumstanced,” i. e. who sustained a like conflict. The nature of this κοινωνία seems not to be comprehended by the recent Expositors, even Dindorf and Kuinöel; though it had been pointed out by Grot., Crell., and Est. They show that we are to understand it of sympathizing with, and participating in their losses, by assisting them in their distress.

The words of the next verse are illustrative of both the above sorts of suffering,—that personally, and that by sympathy and mental participation (as members of the same body); only they are taken in inverse order, per Chiasmum. Thus Thucyd. vii. 71. says of the Athenian and Syracusan land forces in Sicily standing by to witness the last and decisive combat between the Athenian and Syracusan fleets, that they had πολὺν τὸν ἀγῶνα καὶ ἔϋστασιν τῆς γνώμης, and a little further on: οἱ δ' ἐπὶ τὸ ἰσώμενον βλίσσαντες ὀλοφνῶν τε ἅμα μετὰ βοῆς ἐχρῶντο, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ὀρωμένων τῆς ὀψεως καὶ τὴν γνώμην μᾶλλον τῶν ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ ἔδουλοντο. ἄλλοι δὲ καὶ πρὸς ἀντίπαλον τι τῆς ναυμαχίας ἀπιδόντες, διὰ τὸ ἀκρίτως ξυνεχῆς τῆς ἀμίλλης, καὶ τοῖς σώμασιν αὐτοῖς ἴσα τῇ δόξῃ περιδιδῶς ξυναπονεύοντες, ἐν τοῖς χαλεπώτατα διήγον. To the same principle which makes us, as it were, participants in the evils of our friends, the Apostle has another allusion at xiii. 1. μνησκέσθε τῶν δεσμίων, ὡς συνδεδεμένοι.

Here, however, no little difference of opinion exists as to the reading. Instead of the recepta lect. δεσμοῖς μου, 11 MSS. and several Versions have δεσμίοις, which was preferred by Grot., Hammond, Le Clerc., Mill, Beng., Wets., and others, and has been edited by Griesb., Knapp., and Schott. The former, however, is ably defended by Heins., Capell., Wolf, Carpz., Mich., Noess., Matth., Mackn., Schleus., Nolan, Bp. Jebb, and Rinck; and is undoubtedly to be retained, as has been done by Tittm. and Vat.; since the external evidence for it is very greatly superior, and the internal at least as strong. The recent Critics, I suspect, have been chiefly induced to reject the common reading from the opinion of Wets. and Valckn. that it is not good Greek. But it may be observed that in questions of this kind Critics are not fully competent to decide; and as to the latter, it has been shown by Bp. Jebb, Sac. Lit. p. 354., that Valckn.'s testimony is negative by his own admission supra iv. 15. συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀσθενείαις, that “it might be used by the best Greek writers.” That συμπ. can be, and is used of things even by the writer of this Epistle, is plain from the above passage, and from a passage of Isocr. adduced (from Wets.) by Bp. Jebb, very similar to the one before us: ὥστε καὶ ταῖς μικραῖς ἀτυχίαις ἕκαστος ἡμῶν πολλοὺς εἶχε συμπαθῆσας, “so that each of us had many to sympathize even with our small mischances.” Now (says he) since it is unquestionably pure Greek to say συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀτυχίαις, where can be the solecism in saying τοῖς δεσμοῖς συμπαθῆσαι? These phrases, indeed, may be elliptical: δεσμοῖς μου συνεπαθήσατε [μου]. συμπαθῆσαι [ἡμῖν] ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν. ἀτυχίαις ἡμῶν συμπαθῆσαντας [ἡμῖν]. The ellipsis, however, extends even further than this. The complete phrase is συνεπ. μοι ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου; and in the process of abbreviating it, there is an hypallage. So also in Phil. iv. 14. συγκοινωνήσαντες μοι τῇ θλίψει, there is a similar hypallage for συνκ. μοι ἐν τῇ θλίψει μου. Besides, as Wolf and Rinck observe, the correctness of the common reading is strongly attested by the καὶ (even), which with δεσμίοις would be unnecessary. The μοις may, as Rinck conjectures, have been accidentally omitted after the μοις preceding (of which he gives an example at Philem. 10.), and then δεσμίοις have been changed into δεσμίων, to make a sense. I rather, however, suspect that δεσμίοις was a deliberate alteration of those sapient Aristarchs of ancient times, who, when they met with a recondite phrase, or harsh construction, applied themselves to remove the difficulty by emendation; (though they were as ill employed as their brethren of modern times are in defending their alterations), and here introduced one founded on xiii. 1. It is obvious how much the reading δεσμοῖς μου supports the Pauline origin of the Epistle; since St. Paul very often mentions his bonds (not in a boasting spirit, but as seals and confirmations of the truth of the Gospel), and the δεσμ. is generally followed by a μου. And when the above Critics argue, that the common reading was fabricated to support the Pauline origin of the Epistle, they take for granted an eagerness of controversy on the question, of which there is no vestige in Ecclesiastical history, and a dishonesty, of which Christian charity should forbid the hasty imputation: not to mention how unlikely it were, that such a bold alteration should find its way into all the MSS. except 11.; for those collated by Rinck support the old reading, which we can trace to as early a period as Clemens Alex. A. D. 210. With quite as much reason might we say (as Mackn. does) “that the new reading was fabricated in order to disprove the Pauline origin. If, indeed, it could be proved, that the ancient Critics were as opposed to that, as are almost all the moderns, who support the new reading, there might be some ground for the suspicion; for who can doubt that the latter have been chiefly actuated in their rejection of the common reading by their persuasion, that St. Paul was not the author of the Epistle?”

— προσεδέξασθε] “endured.” A signification found in the Sept.; but not in the Classical writers. Ὑπαρξιν, wealth or possession. A signification confined to the later writers. Ἐν is omitted in many MSS. and Versions and almost all the early Edd.; and has been, with reason, cancelled by Wets., Beng., Griesb., Matth., Knapp, and Schott. It, no doubt, arose from the Grammatici, who did not perceive that ἑαυτοῖς is a Dat. commodi.

35. μὴ ἀποβάλητε τ. π. ὑ.] “Abandon not, then, this your confident hope,” namely, the παρρησίαν spoken of supra v. 19.

37. Commentators here notice the remarkable discrepancy which exists between the Hebrew and the Sept. and the Apostle. For while the Apostle's words agree with the Sept., except in the transposition of the two clauses of the latter verse, for better adaptation to his purpose, they both vary exceedingly from the Hebrew. The words, ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἔξει καὶ οὐ χρονιῇ, follow the Septuagint, except in adding ὁ, which, however, it is not improbable, was anciently in the Sept. text, since otherwise the Translators would probably have written ἐρχόμενον, i. e. the prediction. At v. 28. the discrepancy seems very great between the Sept. and the Hebrew; yet it is, I think, better not to ascribe that (as is done by most Critics) to corruption in the Hebrew text: for it has been shown by Pococke, that the Sept. may very well be reconciled with the present text; there being a change of person, to make the sense plainer. If, however, it should be thought, with Grot. and others, that the LXX. read ἔδω and ἔδω instead of ἔδω and ἔδω, I would suggest that we must suppose also some difference of reading at ἔδω. And I conjecture that the LXX. read ἔδω (as in Job xxi. 4.) Gerodsi. The μου of the Sept., where, according to the Hebrew, it should have been αὐτοῦ, may be accounted for on the same principle as that above mentioned. It should seem, however, that the writer did not adopt the μου; for though it is found in two of the most ancient MSS. and some Versions, yet it seems to have been introduced from the Sept., where it was meant to be taken for εἰς ἐμέ. In the two other places of the N. T. where this passage is quoted (namely, Rom. i. 17. and Gal. iii. 11.) the μου is not found, except that in the former passage it appears in one MS. and the later Syriac Version. A strong proof this of the Pauline origin of the present Epistle.

Of more importance, however, is it to advert to the exact sense contained in v. 38., since, from its being connected with doctrinal points, it requires more than ordinary caution in its interpretation. There has been no little debate as to the subject of the verb ὑποσπείνηται. Almost all Commentators, from the time of Beza and Grot., have thought it to be τις: while the ancient and earlier modern Commentators, and a few after their time, as Bp. Pearson, (Parenesis prefixed to Sept.) Mackn., Whitby, Abp. Newc., Dr. A. Clarke, and Prof. Turton (in his Text of the English Bible, p. 89.), refer it to the just man before mentioned. Of course, the advocates for the doctrine of Final Perseverance adopt the former mode; the opponents of that doctrine, the latter; according to which Whitby proves that the doctrine in question is utterly untenable. “The words (says he) plainly suppose that the ‘just man,’ who ‘liveth’ by ‘that faith,’ in which if he persisted, he would ‘save his soul,’ may ‘draw back unto perdition.’ And this is also evident from the expression, ‘My soul shall have no pleasure in him;’ for they plainly intimate that God took pleasure in him before his drawing back; for otherwise this threat would signify nothing, the Lord taking pleasure in none but ‘just’ men only, and such as ‘live by faith.’” The question, however, is which of the two above mentioned modes of reference should here be adopted, and, in order thereto, whether there can be any principle which may suffice to decide a point of such importance. Now here Prof. Turton at p. 78—86. of his Text of the English Bible comes opportunely to our aid as follows: “The Apostle (says he) exhorting those whom heis

σεται· καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστείλῃται, οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχὴ

addressing to steadfastness in the faith, employs, with some variation, the words of the Septuagint Version of Hab. ii. 4., which may be rendered: 'If a man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him; but the just shall live by faith.' In this rendering, the words 'a man,' or 'any man,' are more than the Greek contains; and are introduced because there is, in the Greek, no reference to any individual before mentioned. But it suited the Apostle's argument to invert the order of the clauses. Indeed, the latter clause, as used by the Apostle, had stood first in the Prophet, and from its position had had a more general application, there would have been some difficulty in conceiving how any other version than the one now given, could ever have been thought of. That the bearing and import of words are frequently changed by their position, is known to all who know any thing of the nature of language; and thus the inquiry is reduced to this,—whether, for the purpose of confirming the faith of the Hebrew converts, the Apostle used a sentence, the signification of which should be determined by its own obvious construction—or by what might happen to be recollected of its form when used by a Prophet, who here seems rather to be referred to than quoted. This point the reader shall decide for himself. As to the light in which this passage appeared to the older Commentators,—Erasmus manifestly did not contemplate the introduction of quis, any man: Zeger explained the drawing back with reference to the just man: J. Capellus and Grotius examined the Septuagint Version of Habakkuk; and finding τις to be understood there, seemed to think that it must be understood in Heb. x. 38. likewise: Beza, the great authority for the rendering 'but if any man draw back,' described the Apostle as inverting the clauses of the sentence, but retaining the Prophet's meaning. And this, so far as I can perceive, is his ostensible reason for introducing τις. That, by this rendering, another version was avoided, by no means agreeable to Beza's Theological opinions, there can be no doubt. From Bp. Pearson's Prefatio Paræn. we learn that, in his opinion, the inverted order of the clauses, adopted by the Apostle, at once gave to the verb 'draw back' a nominative case 'he,' the just man, (which also was the opinion of Theophylact); and that when Beza translated, 'But the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in it;' his two methods of excluding the 'just man' from being the subject of the latter clause—1. by introducing the words 'any man;' and, 2. by transferring God's displeasure from the person who draws back (him), to the act of withdrawing (it)—indicate either a want of good faith, or an undue concession to Theological opinions."

And although Bp. Middleton on John viii. 14. seems to be of opinion that τις is here to be supplied, yet, as Prof. Turton observes, "he was in quest of passages in which τις must from necessity be supplied; and it does not appear that he had made himself acquainted with the peculiar circumstances of Heb. x. 28." I would further observe, that Bp. Middl. would be the more induced to receive this proof without too severe examination, as to whether the τις must here be supplied, because he was in great straits to adduce any one unexceptionable example in the N. T. The reader will now be enabled (as far at least as a full statement of the circumstances of the case can go) to determine whether the τις should be introduced or not. In the former case he must suppose that when the Apostle inverted the order of the clauses in the Sept., he intended that the verb ὑποστείλῃται should carry its indefinite nominative case along with it. In the latter, he will do so, because the passage, as it is read in the Epistle, is perfectly clear without it. And assuredly the common laws of interpretation are decidedly in favour of the latter. I would further observe, that the censure here applied by Bp. Pearson and Prof. Turton to Beza, should also be applied, in some measure, to Calvin, who has on this occasion evinced not a little disingenuousness. For though he did not venture on the change introduced by Beza, yet he strove to suppress the sense naturally resulting from the words, by rendering ἐὰν ὑποστείλῃται, "si subductus fuerit;" though such is evidently at variance with the usus loquendi both of the Classical and the Scriptural writers. And, as it would not have been convenient to attempt any justification of this version, he chose (contrary to his usual custom) to be silent upon these verses. Nothing is plainer than that all the above methods were (to use the words of Dr. A. Clarke) "intended to save the doctrine of final and unconditional perseverance; which doctrine this text destroys."

Finally, when I said that the ancient Commentators in general supposed the subject to be ὁ δίκαιος, I would refer for proof to Theophylact and Œcumen., and to the ancient Versions generally, especially the Vulg. and Pesch. Syr. And lest the latter should be urged in support of Calvin's rendering, I would remark that Schaaß's version, "si præciderit ei," is a wrong representation of the sense of ἡβόλω. For ἡβό in the Conjug. Ethpael means "tædio affectus fuit," as indeed Schaaß himself in his Lexicon states, adducing as examples 1 Thess. iii. 3. and the present passage. The sense, therefore, is, "si tædeat ipsum." The translator was probably thinking of the expression at v. 11., where the Apostle upbraids them with being ὡς ἑσπῶι. In rendering, however, as he did, Schaaß (as is plain by his translating ἡβό at the next verse by excisionis) meant the word to be understood of apostasy, and therefore it will make nothing for the version above mentioned, especially when it is considered that at x. 26. the Apostle calls apostasy a wilful and voluntary sin.

Μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον is used by the best writers to designate (according to our own idiom) "a very short time." Ὁ ἐρχόμενος was a usual designation of the Messiah. The coming is meant of the advent of our Lord to destroy Jerusalem, and put an end to the Jewish state.

—ἐκ πίστεως.] This suggests the means by which the just shall attain this life, viz. by his persevering and enduring faith and reliance on God; of which the Apostle soon after takes occasion to illustrate the nature, and exemplify the efficacy in the Worthies of the O. T. Ἐὰν ὑποστ., "but if any one lose his confidence, and withdraw himself from his pledged faith in God." At οὐκ εὐδ. αὐτῷ there is a meiosis, the sense being the same as the Homeric "my soul abhors him as the gates of hell!"

39. Here the Apostle skilfully introduces his intended discourse on faith, by the connecting link of an indirect exhortation to it; q. d. "But we [I trust] are not of the" &c. Ὁν ὑποστέλλω and ὑποστολή, see Note on Acts xx. 18—21. At ὑποστολῆς and πίστει we may suppose an ellipsis, not, with some, of ῥημάτων or τέκνων, but of ἐκ, "of the number," and take the words as abstract for concrete (the thing for the person). The eis indicates the result or event of such conduct in the persons in question; and the περιπ. being opposed to the ἀπόλειαν, must mean, not possession, (as some explain) but preservation and salvation of the soul; a sense found in the Sept.

XI. Having mentioned faith as a peculiar characteristic of those who persevere in the Christian religion, such as to secure their salvation; the Apostle now proceeds to make his appeal to the O. T., in order to show that faith or confidence in the divine promises has, in all ages, been the means of perseverance in true religion, and consequently of salvation. (Stuart.) To lead them to patient endurance, he shows that the very nature of faith, and the character of believers demand this. In order to this he first describes the nature, and then illustrates the efficacy of religious faith.

1. ἔστι δὲ πίστος—βλεπομένων. Some ancient Expositors regard this rather as an encomium on faith than a definition or description of it. Kuin., however, rightly maintains it to be the latter, though expressed populariter. And in order to understand the exact sense of this opening position, we must, with the best modern Expositors, take ὑπόστ., not in the sense substance, (which is generally assigned,) but of firm confidence; (as iii. 14. 2 Cor. ix. 4. xi. 17.) So the Pesch. Syr. well renders: "Est autem fides persuasio de rebus illis quæ sunt in spe, ac si jam essent actu." And so Tyndale: "Faythe is a sure confidence," &c.

—ἑλεγχος.] This has been generally interpreted "evidence." But it is now agreed that the expression means either demonstration, or firm persuasion. The former signification is adopted by Stuart; the latter by Kuin., who explains "persuasio firma, quæ ex argumentis oritur iisque nititur, de rerum quæ sensibus non percipiuntur veritate." I should prefer rendering, with Newc., conviction, i. e. the principle which produces conviction of what cannot be demonstrated to the senses. But of this sense of the word there is no proof. It should seem (though the modern Expositors have not perceived it) that the true sense here of ἑλεγχος is its primitive one, "a bringing to light," φανέρωσις, as Theophyl. well explains. And so the Pesch. Syr. Translator "revelatio eorum quæ non conspiciuntur;" who, if he had supplied here "ac si jam essent in conspectu," as he had done in the former clause "ac si jam essent actu," he would have given the complete sense. So also Chrys.: πίστις eis tñn autñn tois òrōmēnois φέρει πληροφορίαν τὰ μὴ òρōmēna. Thus faith is both a disposition and a principle.

From the above definition of the Apostle, as well as from the illustrations by example which follow, it is evident, (and the best Expositors are agreed, see especially Calvin and Stuart) that the faith here meant is not specifically faith in Christ, but faith in the genus, (from which the species, a Gospel faith, proceeds) i. e. a firm belief and unshaken confidence in the promises and declarations of God.

2. The γὰρ shows the proof; q. d. "[This is the very nature of faith], for from the possession of this disposition, the ancient Worthies are approved unto [God and man]," &c.

3. πίστει—Θεοῦ. The Apostle proves, by reference to the creation of the world, that faith regards even things very far past, and which do not strike the senses. (Kuin.) Here there has been some doubt as to the construction; several Expositors connecting the μὴ with φαινομένων, and assigning as the sense, "ita ut ex iis quæ non essent, ea quæ sunt existerent," as in 2 Macc. vii. 28. οὐκ ἐξ ὄντων ἐποίησε αὐτὰ (i. e. the universe). But its natural construction is with γεγονέναι, and there is no reason to desert it, since the sentiment is the same, and founded on Gen. i. 1. Thus the sense is, that "the world we see was not made out of apparent materials, from matter which had existed from eternity; but out of nothing; so that, at His fiat, the material creation was brought into existence, and formed into the things we see." So Rom. iv. 17. Θεοῦ καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα, and Philo de Creatione: τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεισεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι. See John i. 3. and compare 2 Pet. iii. 5.

4. πίστει πλείονα—Θεῷ. "By virtue of faith Abel," &c.; implying that it was his faith which made his offering more acceptable. Some, indeed, say his offering was more acceptable as being of animals, not of the fruits of the earth. But it should seem that this itself took place from the superiority of his faith. And it is far too confined a view to suppose, with most recent Commentators (as Kuin.), that the superiority of Abel's faith consisted in its being unhesitating, and founded on the love of God; while the other's was doubting, and resulted from the fear of punishment. By offering victims of the choice of the flock, Abel not only showed a more decided attachment to God, but there is great reason to suppose (as Abp. Magee on Atonement, p. 52. shows) that "his faith was especially superior, as being not directed to God alone (recognizing his existence, authority, and providence), but also to the Great Redeemer promised immediately after the fall (Gen. iii. 15.), whose expiatory death was typified by animal sacrifice; by offering which Abel evinced his faith in the great sacrifice of the Redeemer prefigured by it: and thus he obtained that acceptance from God, and witnessing of his offerings, which was refused to Cain." See more in Mackn. and Scott. Δι' ἧς render "on account of which."

— ἐμαρτ. εἶναι δίκ. Literally, "he was borne testimony to [by God] to be," &c., i. e. testimony was borne by God that he was such. Δίκ. is an epithet constantly applied to Abel in the Scriptures, Philo, and Josephus. The words Μάρτυρ. ἐπὶ τοῖς δώροις αὐτοῦ. are explanatory of the preceding. The ἐπὶ signifies respecting, or as regards, as viii. 1. Μαρτ., "bearing his [approving] testimony." The nature of the term, and the language of Scripture (Gen. iv. 10.) point at some manifest and visible token of approbation; though what that was we are not told in the O. T. But the Jewish Expositors, and the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that it was signified by fire from heaven consuming Abel's victims, while Cain's fruits of the ground remained untouched. How ancient this opinion is, appears from the circumstance being inserted by Theodotion in the words of his Version of Gen. iv. 4. where instead of ἐπέιδεν we have ἐπέιδεν καὶ ἐνεπύρισεν. For the latter words were doubtless an insertion, though probably not made by Theodotion without authority, but found in the text of his Copy, but emanating from a marginal Note, and originating, as the learned suppose, from tradition only. I would suggest, that the circumstance may have been found recorded, from tradition, in those very ancient writings on the antiquities of the Hebrew nation reposit in the Temple, often mentioned by Josephus, and partly used by him in composing his Antiquities of the Jews. Little doubt can exist of the circumstance itself; which Grot. on the passage of Genesis tells us even Julian believed.

— Of these words the sense will depend upon the reading, which is disputed. Instead of the Vulg. λαλεῖται, 20 MSS., most of the Versions, and many Fathers, have λαλεῖ, which is preferred by Grot., Mill, Valckn., Dind., Kuin., and Böhme, and edited by Beng., Griesbach, Knapp, and Schott; though the former is retained by Wets., Matth., Vater, and Tittm. But notwithstanding all that has been urged in favour of the common reading, λαλεῖ is certainly preferable, not only as being the more difficult reading, but as yielding the only sense worthy of the writer; for that of "is celebrated," were frigid, and not very appropriate; since, as Kuin. observes, Noah, Abraham, and others had equal claim to celebrity. On the contrary, the other sense (namely, that though dead, yet he by his faith, as it were, speaketh, bidding us follow his example, and inculcating a like faith in God as "the Rewarder of those who diligently seek Him"), is highly suitable, and recommended by its simplicity and gravity. The figure by which the dead are said to speak, is found in the best writers, especially the Poets and Orators. So Virg. Æn. vi. 618. magnâ testatur voce per umbras: Discite justitiam moniti, et non temnere Divos. Perhaps this mode of expression may have been suggested by the still bolder figure (similar to some which occur in the Greek tragedian Æschylus) in Gen. iv. 10. φωνή αἷματος τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου βοᾷ πρὸς με ἐκ τῆς γῆς. So also infra xii. 24. αἵματι βαντισμοῦ κρείττονα λαλοῦντι, &c.

5, 6. His faith the Apostle infers from his having a testimony of approbation from God; since without faith it is impossible to have such approbation. To this faith the Apostle ascribes his being translated, so as not to experience death. The sense, however, of the words μετετίθη, &c., has been not a little disputed. Most foreign Commentators for the last half century have been of opinion, that neither Moses nor the Apostle meant to say that Enoch was taken to heaven alive, but that he was removed thither by a sudden death, probably by lightning. The arguments urged are detailed and reviewed by Kuin.; who very properly rejects that notion, and accedes to the opinion of the ancient and most modern Commentators, that both writers meant to represent Enoch as removed to heaven alive. The words, indeed, of the Apostle τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν θάνατον, admit of no other sense, without violating every rule of sound exegesis. St. Paul, it is true, appears to rest this on the words of the Sept.; and the καὶ οὐχ—Θεός being a citation, justificatory of what is said in the foregoing clause. But the expression οὐχ εὗρίσκετο, taken in conjunction with μετίθηκε, is so strong, as to admit of scarcely any other interpretation. And the Hebrew terms are quite as remarkable: for, as Kuin. observes, while Moses constantly uses the term יָצָא in recording the death of the other patriarchs, of Enoch alone he employs the term נָחַל (accurately rendered by the Sept. μετίθηκε), which is no where used of removal by death, but only employed to describe the translation of Elijah. Again, οὐχ εὗρ. is a faithful version of the Hebrew וְלֹא נִמְצָא: "and he was not," with which Kuin. compares "nec deinde in terris Romulis fuit," in Livy i. 16. That the Sept. affixed such a sense to the words, cannot be doubted; especially as Joseph. and Philo did the same. Also that the author of Ecclus.

who lived at a much earlier period, so understood πρὶν in both the above passages, appears from Chap. xlviii. and xlix. 14., where if the term ἀνελήφθη could be thought doubtful, the context proves it to mean what we understand by translation. Such, too, has been the way in which the words have been understood by the best Jewish Interpreters from the earliest periods.

In fact this is no other than will one day again be realized in those believers, who "being alive" at "the coming of the Lord," shall first be changed (1 Cor. xv. 51.), and then shall be "caught up in the clouds" (1 Thess. iv. 17.), as doubtless Enoch was changed or transformed before he was translated.

6. πιστεῦσαι γὰρ δεῖ—γίνεται] q.d. "Sincere worship of God implies a firm belief in his existence and moral government, and that He will reward those who study to do his will, and, by implication, punish those who disobey it. Faith in his existence must precede worship of him. And who would worship a Being who remained an unconcerned spectator of what passes on the earth, and with whom is no retribution?" These, as Stuart observes, are the two fundamental truths of all religion. Προσερχ., is a frequent term in this Epistle to denote worship. On the ratio metaphorse see Stuart and Kuinöel. The phrase (I would add) is almost peculiar to this writer, since it occurs no where else in the N. T., nor in the Sept.; though there is something approaching to it in Jer. vii. 15. μὴ προσέλθης μοι περὶ αὐτῶν, ne pro his precibus me adeas.

7. πίστει χρηματισθεῖς—οἶκον αὐτοῦ.] "It was by faith that Noah, being admonished by a divine revelation concerning things not yet seen and only to be viewed by the eye of faith," &c. It is not, Kuin. observes, expressly said, "concerning the deluge and the events which should follow it," nor even περὶ τῶν μελλόντων; but a periphrasis is used, with allusion to the definition of faith, at v. 1. ἐλεγχος οὐ βλεπομένων. Εὐλαβηθεὶς is by some eminent Expositors interpreted "metuens diluvium." And so our common Version "moved with fear." The idea of fear, however, seems not to the purpose; and it is better, with Ern., Carpz., Wakef., Newc., Rosenm., Kuin., and Stuart, to understand religious reverence respecting the divine oracle. In which sense the word occurs at Acts xxiii. 10. The πίστει must, as Kuin. observes, be referred to εὐλαβηθεῖς κατεσκεύασε, as πίστει at v. 8. τοῦ ὑπήκουσε, not καλούμενος.

— δι' ἧς.] Several eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, refer this to κιβωτὸν, i. e. 'by the building of which ark.' But it is better, with Grot., Heinr., Dind., Kuin., and Stuart, to refer it to πίστιν, the principal subject in view, though not the nearest antecedent. By this faith it is said Noah κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον' namely, "inasmuch as (says Grot.) any one is said to condemn others, who, by his own deeds, shows what they ought to have done; and thus convicts them of blame for not having so done." Thus, in the words of Stuart, "Noah condemned them by setting an example of faith in the Divine warnings, while the world around him remained unbelieving and impenitent. In other words his conduct condemned theirs. See Matt. xii. 41, 42. Moreover, he, in a certain sense, occasioned their condemnation by having previously warned them, without his admonitions being attended to." Here Kuin. compares Wisdm. xvi. κατακρινεὶ δὲ δικαίος καμὸν (mortuus) τοὺς ζῶντας ἀσεβεῖν. So κρίνειν is used in Rom. ii. 27. Ἐγένετο κληρ., is for ἐκληρονόμησε, "became possessed of." Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. p. 6., explains it to mean, "tanquam genuinus hæres piorum majorum suorum (præsertim Enochi) ipse quoque ob fidem justus a Deo est declaratus." By δικαιοσύνη κατὰ πίστ. is here meant acceptance with God, the felicity of those who are justified by faith. See Rom. i. 17. So at Rom. iv. Abraham is said to have been justified by faith, viz. in the declarations of God respecting the land of promise, and the Redeemer; of whom the promise was confirmed in the renewal of the covenant made originally with Noah, to whom the doctrine of justification by faith in a Redeemer was, no doubt, made known. Thus, as Stuart remarks, "it is meant to be shown that faith in its generic nature, has ever been the same: and that it is essentially a practical belief in Divine declarations."

8. καλούμενος] "being called upon, invited, bidden." So Gen. xii. 1. δεῦρο εἰς τὴν γῆν ἣν σοι δεῖξω. compared with Acts vii. 3. At ἐξελθεῖν supply ὥστε. The words μὴ ἐπιστ. ποῦ ἔρχ. are meant to illustrate his faith, and have been wrongly supposed to mean that he was in ignorance about the land, or its qualities; for that is inconsistent with Gen. xii. 1. We may regard the words as a popular mode of expression, denoting that he threw himself wholly on Divine providence. And certainly he knew not whether he was going, inasmuch as he knew not where he should finally settle, even when told the country he was to go to.

9, 10. παρώκησεν εἰς τὴν γῆν is (as Kuin. observes) for εἰσῆλθε εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ παρώκησε ἐκεῖ. 'Ὡς ἄλλ., for οὐκ ἰδίαν, 'as if it were a land in which he had no concern.' Παρώκησε is for πάροικος (i. e. ἀλλογενής) ἦν, in opposition to ἐπιγενής. 'Ἐν σκηναῖς κατ. is meant to prove and illustrate the παρωκ., and designates the life of the Nomades, or rovers of the desert, in every age. The building of a house would have implied a property in the land: not so the setting up of a tent. In those early periods, when population was thin, even foreigners seem to have been allowed to fix tents, and bring cattle to graze, where the land was not occupied by the natives. Something after the manner of what are called the squatters, in the back settlements of America. The words μετὰ—τῆς αὐτῆς are (as Kuin. observes) to be referred to all that has preceded in the verse; and the μετὰ (as Grot., Rosenm., and Kuin., point out) does not mark time, but parity of circumstances, signifying as well as, in the manner of (as Phil. iv. 3.), denoting community both of circumstances and of disposition. His so living is mentioned to show his faith: q. d. 'It was by faith in the promise of God, that he was content to go and live in a foreign land, and sojourn as a foreigner there, though fully assured that it was to be the inheritance of his posterity.'

The next words ἔξεδέχετο γὰρ—ὁ Θεός are meant to show the principle on which he was content so to live,—namely, that of faith (agreeably to the description at v. 1.), even the patient hope of the city which hath foundations (as opposed to the Nomadic life adverted to at v. 9.), the heavenly Jerusalem mentioned at xii. 22., and often in the Apocalypse described in glowing imagery; such as the Jews applied to the new Jerusalem, which they thought would descend from heaven. The same imagery the Apostles adopted, but fixed this new Jerusalem in heaven, and meant by it heaven itself. The expression θεμελίους ἔχουσαν must, of course, be taken figuratively, and be equivalent to the μένουσαν, which is used at xiii. 14., meaning a community never to be dissolved. The τεχνίτης καὶ δημιουργός are only used in adaptation to the metaphor; though there is great propriety in the terms, which, as the Commentators show, are often, in the Classical writers, used of God as Creator of the universe.

—ἔξεδέχετο.] Render "anxiously expected, looked forward to." See Gen. xlix. 18. Ps. xl. 1. Is. xxv. 9. xxvi. 8. xxxiii. 2. Ps. xxxiii. 20. lxii. 1. Phil. iii. 20. σωτήρα ἀπεκδεχομένους αὐτόν. See also Rom. viii. 8. xix. 23. 25. 1 Cor. i. 7.

11, 12. αὐτὴ Σ.] "Sarah herself." The αὐτὴ alludes to what, from circumstances, seemed physically impossible, and the incredulity in consequence which she had at first harboured, when the thing was announced to her, and which was even entertained by Abraham; though the reproof of the Lord, and due consideration, brought both to a firm belief; for the history in Genesis implies as much of Sarah, though it does not express it.

—εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος.] This may be regarded, with many of the best Expositors, ancient and modern, as a brief mode of expression, used out of delicacy, for εἰς ὑποδοχὴν καὶ κατάρχεσιν τοῦ σπέρματος τοῦ καταβλη-ζέντος. So the Pesch. Syr. Italic, and Æthiopic Version, "ut reciperet semen," being, it should seem, a popular way of denoting the act of conception. Some, indeed, as Ernesti, Kuin., &c., interpret, "for the foundation of a family," "in order to found a family." That sense, however, is frigid, and does not suit the words following; if, at least, ἔτεκε be cancelled, as these Critics contend it should, and as has been done by Griesb. and Valpy. Though when it is considered how very frequently the two stages, of conception and parturition, are introduced by the sacred writers, where one might have sufficed, the cancelling is surely ill judged; for which, indeed, there is next to no authority, and internal evidence is against it. It will not follow that because words have certain senses separately, they must therefore have them when associated. It is the usus loquendi that must decide that point. And here no authority is alleged, nor can well exist, since it would involve an unprecedented confusion of metaphor. Indeed, there never could have been any doubt as to the true sense, had the Commentators remembered two passages of the O. T. which contain a similar inartificial and popular mode of expressing the idea of conception, Levit. xii. 2. "When a woman shall conceive, σπνι, ἐὰν σπερματισθῇ (Sept.), and Numb. v. 28. (speaking of a woman who has been tried for adultery and found pure) she shall be declared innocent, σπνι πννν, καὶ ἐκσπερματίσει (for ἐκσπερματισθήσεται) σπέρμα.—(Sept.) where the sense, as is universally agreed, is, "she shall conceive [and bring forth children]." So in the present passage the Vulg. well renders "virtutem in conceptionem seminis accipit."

12. ἐνὸς] "of, from one person [only],—namely, Abraham. Καὶ τ. νεκ., "and he [as it were] dead." For ταῦτα is for τοῦτο, and that for οὗτος. The Classical writers often so use καὶ τοῦτο, as the Latin idque, “and that;” very rarely ταῦτα. Though some examples are adduced by the Commentators, both from Poets and prose writers. On νεκρ., see Rom. iv. 19. and Note. The idiom in χεῖλος (margin) is used also in the Classical writers, and found both in the Hebrew נֶחֱם and the Latin labrum.

13—16. It is well observed by Böhme and Kuin, that these verses are introduced to confirm what was said at v. 10. on the nature of the faith of the Patriarchs,—that it regarded not an earthly, but an heavenly country, the same as that which Christians expect.

13, 14. κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον οὗτοι πάντες.] Some learned Commentators interpret the promises alluded to in this chapter as temporal; and are consequently reduced to the necessity of confining the expression οὗτοι πάντες to some of those that had been named; or of referring it to all the descendants of Abraham, of whom mention has been made in the preceding sentence. Now it is obvious, as Whitby remarks, that all the descendants of Abraham did not die in faith: and how, on the other hand, any particular individuals of those before named, can be selected by an expression which comprehends all, it is not easy to discover. And if all who had been before named, are referred to, (as is unavoidable) then the promises cannot have been temporal, there being some to whom no temporal promises were made, as Abel and Enoch. As to the difficulty arising from the declaration, that the persons enumerated had died in faith, when it is known that Enoch did not die, but was translated; this is easily removed by considering, that the stress is not laid upon the death of those believers, but upon their having retained their faith through life.—(Abp. Magee.) The above view concerning the sense of τὰς ἐπαγγελίας has been also adopted by Kuin., who shows that the interpretations, by which the words are explained either of the possession of Palestine, or of Palestine and the heavenly country, are at variance with the context. See v. 39. and Note. The words καὶ πεισθέντες, being not found in most of the MSS., Versions, early Edd., and many of the Fathers, have been rejected by almost all Critics, and cancelled by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Knapp, Schott, Tittm., and Vater. It is plain from the Greek Commentators that the reading is a mere gloss on ἀσπασάμενοι following, of which (from the many examples adduced by Wets., Kypke, Loesn., and Kuin.) the sense is, “hailing them, joyfully anticipating their fulfilment.”

—Ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοὶ ε. ἐ. τ. γ.] Render, “foreigners and sojourners on earth;” i. e. in this world as compared with heaven: a view of the sense supported by the examples adduced by the Commentators. So Scaliger in his Epitaphium says: “Profecto vera patria viri forti cœlum est: quippe hic peregrinamur boni, mali in exilio sunt.” On this text see an able Sermon by Bp. Conybeare, vol. ii. p. 447, entitled, “Human Life considered as a State of Pilgrimage;” and Dr. Jortin’s Note in Mant and D’Oyly. Kuin. justly supposes the Apostle to have had in mind Gen. xxiii. 4, where Abraham says to the Hittites: πάροικος καὶ παρεπίδημος ἐγὼ εἰμι μεθ’ ὑμῶν. also xxviii. 4, and xlvii. 9. And though there the terms merely regard the land of Canaan; yet here the Apostle applies them to the heavenly country; as he very well might, since David does the same, Ps. xxxviii. 12.

14—16. The course of argument may be laid down thus (partly from Kuin.): “The Patriarchs, tented Nomads, professed themselves to be strangers, and thereby showed they were desirous of some country as a permanent abode. If they had sought a country in those parts, or had regarded their native or ancestral land as their true country, they might have found means to return thither. But they did not consider Canaan as their country, nor returned to Chaldea; therefore they desired not an earthly, but a better, even a heavenly one.”

—νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] But as things now are, since they so spoke and acted, it is plain that they rested only on the promises of God respecting the possession of Canaan, as a country, by their posterity; as they did of the attainment by themselves of another country, even a heavenly. The sentiment that heaven is man’s proper country was acknowledged by most of the Philosophers who believed in a future state; from whom the Commentators have adduced several extracts. Διὸ, i. e. since they had such undoubting faith in the Divine promises.

—Οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται—αὐτῶν.] Render, “does not disdain (i. e. per meosin, vouchsafes. See Note on ii. 11.) to be called their God;” which implied the notion of Protector, Preserver, and Benefactor.

—Ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν.] The sense is, “[And he shows himself such,] inasmuch as he hath prepared and destined for them a city,” or permanent abode and country (as opposed to the σκηναὶ at v. 9.), even a heavenly one. On ἡτοίμ. see Note on Matt. xxv. 34.

17—19. On these verses see an excellent Discourse by Bp. Conybeare, vol. ii. p. 243, seqq., in which, after settling the meaning of faith in — προσενήνοχεν.] This is one of the many instances of verbs being simply expressed, when will or endeavour to perform the action is meant. An idiom (as appears from the examples adduced by the Commentators) as old as the time of Homer. In the present case the action was all but done, and was only hindered by the Divine command. It had, therefore, the same merit as if done; and has been always regarded by the Jewish writers, from Philo downwards, as a complete sacrifice. Πειραζόμενος, “when he (i. e. his faith) was put to the proof.” Ὁ τὰς ἐπαγγ. ἀναδεξ., “he who had received the promises,” i. e. Abraham. “The clause (says Stuart) is designed to augment the force of the description of Abraham’s case. It was not simply that Abraham, in circumstances common to others (i. e. surrounded by several children, and without any special promises), made the offering in question; but it was Abraham to whom God had repeatedly made promises of a numerous progeny; and it was Abraham’s only son; (i. e. only son of promise, on whom all the promises of God respecting a future progeny, were suspended), who was the offering which he stood ready to make.” Πρὸς ὅν. Not, “of whom,” but “to whom,” as the best Expositors are agreed; and which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., and required by the context.

— ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθ. σ. σπ.] i. e. the seed which is promised thee must descend only from Isaac.

19. λογισάμενος ὅτι—ὁ Θεός.] This shows the reason why Abraham, though the promise of posterity by Isaac seemed precise, yet did not hesitate to offer up his son.—(Dind.) The sense seems to be: “as reflecting that, though Isaac should die, yet the promise of posterity by him would be sure, inasmuch as the same Omnipotence, which at first brought him into being, could even raise him from the dead.” Here αὐτὸν must be supplied from the clause following, ὅθεν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐν παραβ. ἐκομίσατο, words of no little difficulty, and which have been variously interpreted. Many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, have taken the ἐν παραβολῇ for ἐν τύπῳ, or ἐν συμβόλῳ τῆς ἀναστάσεως. Such an ellipsis, however, is too harsh to be admitted, and, as Ern. observes, Isaac is no where called a type of Christ in that respect; nor could he, since there are no points of similarity. There can, I think, be no doubt that ἐν παραβολῇ means “simili modo,” “with similitude,” “comparatively.” It is not, however, so clear, what is the point of similitude, or comparison. Some, as Newc., Hamm., Whitby, and Stuart, suppose it to be the νέκρωσις of Abraham and Sarah; q. d. “Abraham believed that God could raise Isaac from the dead, because he had, as it were, obtained him from the dead; i. e. he was born of those who κατὰ ταῦτα νεκροὶ ἦσαν.” This, however, is harsh; and is inconsistent with the usus loquendi as to κομ., which never means simply to obtain, but to receive back, either in the way of recovering what is lost, or in return for something given. It is unnecessary to cite examples; since the Greek authors, both Classical and Hellenistic, abound with instances. And those who adopt the first mentioned interpretation necessarily take ἐκομίσατο in this sense. We must, therefore, (with Calvin, Limb., and Kuin.) suppose the sense to be, “Abraham believed that God could recall his son to life; wherefore (because of this faith) he also in like manner (i. e. as it were raised from the dead) received him back [safe].” For Isaac was in a manner dead, in his father’s opinion and his own; and was restored to his father, as it were from the gates of the grave. See 2 Cor. i. 9, 10.

20. πίστει] “by faith,” viz. in the revelations made to him, and in reliance that the blessings he was invoking would have their effect. Kuin. well remarks: “εὐλογεῖν hoc loco ut vi. 6. non simpliciter notat apprecari, sed ea ut certo eventura apprecari, prænuntiare.” He also shows that Philo regarded these εὐλογίαι as predictions. The words περὶ μελλ. must not, with some, be construed with πίστει, but εὐλόγ., and the sense is, “respecting their future condition.” And though the blessings turned out different from his intention, yet the blessings were not the less delivered “in faith,” that they should be fulfilled.

21. ἀποθνήσκων] may be interpreted, with some latitude, to mean “when about to die;” which is required by the facts as recorded in Genesis.

— Προσεκύνησεν—αὐτοῦ.] This is, as usual with the Apostle, a citation from the Septuagint; and therefore the credit of the writer is not concerned in the question whether the Hebrew פשו should be rendered “staff,” or “bed’s head.” The word will bear either sense, according to the pointing; and some (as Dodd., Mackn., and Stuart) adopt the former. I rather agree with Rosenm., Gesen., and Kuin. in preferring the latter, which is supported by the Masoretic pointing, and by all the ancient Versions except the Sept. Nor is this sense liable to any serious objection, if we understand the πῶς not of the head of a bed such as we use, but the upper part formed of a long pillow, or divan, something like our Grecian sofa. On this Jacob was, no doubt, reclining with his arm, and towards this, in aiming at the kneeling posture appropriate to worship, he would necessarily be turned. The προσκύνησις was, we may suppose, an act of devout thankfulness to God, for having protected him through life, and brought about his burial in the land of promise; whither he, with the eye of faith, looked forward to the removal of his posterity.

From what, however, is said in Genesis, we find that the blessing of his sons took place not at the time of his worshipping towards the bed's head, but afterwards; not, however, as Michaelis imagines, a considerable time after; for the Heb.

וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶה and the Greek μετὰ ταῦτα are often used of a short time after. And that it could not be long, is plain from the words of Gen. xlvii. 29. "the time drew nigh that Israel must die." And here it may be observed that the sense, "bed's head," is far more to the purpose than stuff; since it is probable that Israel was labouring under debility, and much confined to his couch. Admitting, however, that the circumstances were distinct, yet it will not follow that there is any discrepancy between the accounts of Moses and the Apostle. We may regard the words καὶ προσεκύνησε—αὐτοῦ as forming a clause quite distinct from the preceding; and suppose that πίστει is meant to be repeated. Render, "by faith, too, he worshipped," &c. Thus all difficulty vanishes; for we cannot regard the transposition of the order of time as any,—such being frequent in Scripture. And here it is of very little consequence, since, from the air of the Mosaic account, it is evident that the two circumstances were within a very short time of each other; and as the principle of faith was equally conspicuous in both, they are therefore mentioned conjointly. I have pointed accordingly, on the authority of the Vulgate and the Editions of Griesb., Tittm., Vater, the Bâle Editor, and, long before them, of Phot. ap. Œcum.; who, I find, confirms my opinion as to the repetition of πίστει, as appears from his words, which are these: τοσούτον, φησιν, ἐπίστευσε τοῖς ἐσόμενοις, ὅτι καὶ προσεκύνησε τῷ ῥάβδῳ, δοκῶν ὁρᾶν τὰ ἐσόμενα.

22. πίστει—ἐνετείλατο.] These words were I apprehend, intended to be explanatory of what was said at v. 20, 21., and to more fully develop their sense. It was faith, the Apostle shows, that was the moving principle both in the εὐλογία and the προσκύνησις. And the words ἐμνημόνευσε περὶ τῆς ἐξόδου τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ must be understood of prophetic mention) are intended to illustrate the περὶ τῶν μελλόντων, and the περὶ τῶν ὀστέων α. ἐν. are meant to point to the circumstance which led to the προσκύνησις. That the same injunction should have been again given, at the last solemn blessing, was natural. On the former occasion, it seems, the Patriarch did not give the chief reason for the injunction; but did so in the latter, when he spoke περὶ τῶν μελλόντων.

23—28. Here the Apostle illustrates the principle of faith as operating on another great Founder, as it were, of the Jewish nation; and introduces the chief instances of his faith, by adverting to that of his parents, as evinced in so confidently committing to the care of Providence the child, whom, from a persuasion of his being destined to something great, they had, at their imminent peril, preserved for three months. "That he would become an extraordinary child they augured, say the Commentators, from his remarkable comeliness; the ancients regarding that as a mark of Divine favour." But Josephus and Philo, perhaps rightly, understand it also of a certain august air, which announced him as likely to rise above a private condition. Of the rare use of πατέρων for parents, an example is adduced by Wets. from Parthenius.

24. μέγας γενόμενος] "when he had attained man's estate." This sense of μέγας, which occurs in the best writers from Homer downwards, is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., and required by the Hebrew. ἠρνήσατο λέγεσθαι need not be understood of any formal refusal: but may merely be taken to denote that he was not disposed to be so called; which is attested by the whole of the narration in Exodus. It seems he had been regarded as son of Pharaoh's daughter. In his disavowal of this he was induced by his resolution to renounce all his prospects, and devote himself to the deliverance of his countrymen. And not being the natural son, he did not choose to be the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter.

The next two verses show the extent of the sacrifice he made, representing him as exchanging the wealth, luxury, and sinful pleasures of a court then the wealthiest, though the most corrupt in the world, for the oppression and insult which, when he professed himself an Israelite, he must have to encounter. The πρόσκαιρον points at one of the reasons for this preference; and indirectly contrasts the everlasting blessings conferred by God, to the fleeting pleasures of sin. For ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ several MSS. and Versions, and some Fathers and early Eds., have Αἰγύπτου, which is edited by Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Schott, and Tittm., who regard the common reading as a gloss. But how Αἰγύπτου should require a gloss, it is not easy to see. It should rather seem that Αἰγύπτου is a correction. And the support of Versions in a case like this is not strong. With respect to the expression ὀνειδισμόν τοῦ Χρ., it is variously explained. The ancient and most modern Expositors take it to mean, "contumely similar to that which Christ suffered;" remarking that the Genit. often denotes comparison, or similitude, as Luke xi. 29. σημεῖον Ἰωῆ. 2 Cor. iv. 10. νέκρωσις τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. 2 Cor. i. 5. παθήματα Χριστοῦ. This, however, seems somewhat too confined a view of the sense: and it seems better, with Bp. Hall, Scott, and Kuin., to explain, "the reproach which he, together with the people of Israel, suffered for the expectation of Christ," i. e. a Redeemer who should arise from among them. See 1 Cor. x. 4. 9. τὴν μισθ., the future reward of faith and constancy to be expected in heaven, of which the possession of Canaan was but a type.

27. πίστει κατέλιπεν Α. μὴ φοβ.] The best Expositors are agreed that the Writer is speaking, not of his flight to Midian, but of his departure from Egypt the second time, when he led forth the Israelites from Egypt. And though, in the former case, he had been in great fear, in the latter he was fearless; did not heed the minatory words of the King on his leaving, "See my face no more;" nor the vengeance with which he was sure to visit the Israelites for their departing in spite of him.

— ἐκατέρησε] scil. πάντα, as Theophylus supplies. There is an elegance in this elliptical sense, by which it exactly corresponds to our verb to bear up; and, though unnoticed by the modern Commentators, it occurs in the best Classical writers. So Thucyd. ii. 44. καρτερεῖν δὲ χορὴ ἄλλων παίδων ἐλπίδι. Eurip. Alc. 1074. ῥᾶον παραναιεῖν, ἢ παθόντα καρτερεῖν, and Rhcs. 148. ὄψει με καρτεροῦνθ', ὅταν δέη. And so Virgil uses durare in Æn. i. 207. Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secunds. Thus the general sense is: "he courageously encountered the hazards of disobedience to the earthly and visible King, as keeping in view his paramount duty to that Monarch who is invisible, the Lord of heaven and earth." See 1 Tim. i. 17.

28. πεποίηκε.] Almost all Expositors take it to mean "celebrated;" but Böhme and Kuin., "instituted;" observing that a term of latitude is adapted, to suit both τὸ πάσχα and τὴν πρόσχυσιν τοῦ αἵματος. It is plain that this was done "in faith,"—i. e. in full confidence of the preservation promised, and also in faith of a higher kind; the rite being not only a memorial of Israel's deliverance, but also a typical prefiguration of our salvation by the death of Christ, and by faith in his blood. See Owen, Mackn., and Scott; and compare 1 Cor. v. 7. τὴν πρόσχ., i. e. the effusion and sprinkling of blood mentioned in Exod. xii. 7, 22.

29. τὴν ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν.] Said by the best Commentators to be so called from the red tinge, imparted by the weeds with which it abounds, insomuch that it is called in Genesis הַיַּדְשׁ, 'the weedy sea.' And so the Pesch. Syr. Translator calls it. At ἡς many supply θαλάσσης; others, more properly, διαβάσεως. But I prefer, with Kuin., ξηρᾶς, i. e. "cujus sicci periculum facturi, an transitum esset præbiturum." Πείραν λαμβ. τινός is a phrase common in the best writers, but also found in the Sept., as Deut. xxviii. 56.

30. πίστει—ἡμέρας.] The sense (perverted by some to favour their peculiar views respecting this remarkable occurrence) plainly is, "It was by faith that the walls of Jericho fell, after having been compassed about seven days;" the period foretold by God, at which the city walls should fall. Now this was permitted to happen ἐπὶ πίστει, i. e. on account of the faith of Joshua and his army in the assurances of God. And therefore to that faith the fall of the city may in a certain sense be ascribed. Indeed, the whole affair was supernatural: for the Israelites were merely to march round the place for seven days, blowing the trumpets, but abstaining from attack. That the walls did fall, is a fact which cannot be explained away by any Philological device of those who seek to remove the miraculous. That their fall, though possibly brought about by the use of the powers of nature, was produced in such a way as to produce the preternatural, and therefore was miraculous, cannot reasonably be doubted.

31. πίστει] i. e. implicit faith in the declarations of God, that Jericho should be taken.

— ἡ πόρνη.] Many Commentators have so stumbled at this term, employed here and in James ii. 25, that they have attempted to affix to it some signification varying from the common one; either idolatrix, or hostess. Now the former is quite inadmissible in a plain narration like that in Josh. ii. 1; vi. 17; xxii. 21. And the latter, though somewhat countenanced by Josephus and the Chaldee paraphrast, is untenable; for, as the best Hebraists are agreed, πρὶν will bear no such sense, since it cannot come from the root πρ, to feed, but from πρ, to commit whoredom. See Stuart. Kuin., indeed, suggests, that were we even to adopt that sense, "it would come to the same thing; since, in ancient times, those hostesses were generally harlots." But that, I apprehend, only applies to much later times. At this early period, inns were scarcely in use at all. It was the frequency of travelling that, in later times, rendered inns necessary; and the multitude of travellers at such places tended to produce vice. It is best, however, to retain the usual sense of the word, and, with Mackn., to suppose that Rahab is here so called, because she had once been so; viz. before her being brought to the knowledge of the true God, and being received into the body of the holy people, Josh. vi. 25; after which she was still called by her former appellation, though she had reformed her life. So at Matt. xxvi. 6. Simon is called the Leper, because he had formerly been such; and Matthew was called the Publican, for the same reason.

Εἰρήνης is by the best Expositors interpreted 'kindness, courtesy, hospitality.' But there may also be an allusion to some formula of address on receiving any one to a house; and as the words at parting were "Go in peace," so there might be a similar formula, "Come in peace," which salutation (as peace implied security, tranquillity, and happiness of every kind) was an implied assurance of kind treatment.

32—35. Here the Apostle briefly sums up some remaining examples of faith, by the mention (though not in the order of time) of the persons most remarkable for it. The principle of faith was conspicuous in them all, though its fruits were various: and the writer proceeds to enumerate the distinct effects of each person's particular faith. All, therefore, that is meant is, that the subsequent particular circumstances are true in regard to some or other of the persons in question; of whom certain (as Joshua and David) subdued kingdoms; others, as Abraham and David, received promises. In some it was evinced by courageously attempting the subjection of kingdoms far above their strength to master; in others, by living righteously, and conscientiously discharging their public duties as rulers, through faith in Him "who will render to every man according to his works." With the actions which especially evinced their faith, the Apostle intermixes a reference to the reward of that faith, in the attainment of the temporal blessings promised by Jehovah; and amongst the rest, success in their public measures, whether of war, or legislation and government in general. The expressions which follow are partly general, and meant to illustrate the obtaining of the promises; as, for instance, ἐνεδυναμώθησαν ἀπὸ ἀσθενείας, which Owen thinks refers to Is. xxxviii. 9. But it is probably to be taken of political or military strength; the words following ἐγενήθησαν ἰσχυροὶ ἐν πολέμῳ carrying the idea still further. And both expressions apply to Joshua, Barak, Gideon, Samson, Jephtha, and others. The literal sense is, (by an idiom often found in the Classical writers,) "from being weak they became powerful." So Thucyd. vii. 42. τῷ δὲ στρατεύματι τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὥς ἐκ κακῶν, ῥῶμῃ τις ἐγγένητο. The next words seem a climax on the preceding; and ἐκλιναν is for ἐνέκλ. (as in Hom. ε. 37.) literally meaning, "made their ranks give way;" i. e. routed the troops. Παρεμβ., like στρατόπεδα, denotes, as often in the Classical writers, the armies which fill the camps.

The other expressions (as ἔφραξαν στόματα λεόντων, ἔσβεσαν δύναμιν πυρὸς, ἔφυγον στόματα μαχ.) are special; and the first adverts to the cases of Daniel, Samson, and David; the second, to that of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who may be said to have "quenched the power of the fire," because their firm faith in the protection of the God of Israel caused that it should have no power over them; but, as far as regarded them, be quenched. The third, ἔφυγον στόμ. μαχ., may refer to the frequent and wonderful escapes of David from the sword of Saul. The expression is regarded as a Hebraism, and occurs at Josh. viii. 44. Yet it is sometimes found in the Classical writers, as Soph. Aj. 651. κάγῳ γάρ, ὅς τὰ δειν' ἐκατέρουν τότε, βαρῇ σίδηρος ὥς, ἐξήλυθ' ἡν στόμα.

35, 36. The Apostle now passes (by a natural association of ideas) from the case of those who were delivered from danger, through faith, to that of those who endured evils of every kind, under its support. There is an allusion to 2 Kings iv. 18—37. 1 Kings xvii. 17—24. Here πίστει, or διὰ πίστεως, may be supplied from the preceding; though it is plainly implied. Ἐξ ἀναστ. should be rendered "by a resurrection." Thus it is equivalent to ἀναστήσαντος. In this and the next two verses the Apostle passes from the earlier periods to the later times of the Hebrew nation; and from persons in public to those in private stations,—in order to show that the duty of faith quite as much pertained to one as the other.

On the exact punishment denoted by ἐτύμπ., no little difference of opinion exists. Many understand it in a general way to mean, "were tortured to death;" while others suppose a special sense; though what that is they are not agreed. The import of the expression will best appear by considering its derivation,—namely, from τύμπανον, which signified, 1. a beating-stick; 2. a beating-post, which was of the form of a T, and thus suggests the posture of the sufferer. This beating was administered sometimes with sticks or rods; sometimes with leather thongs inclosing pieces of lead. Hence the expression τυμπανίζω came to be equivalent to σφαιρίζω, ἐκδέρω; nay, even ἀποκεφαλίζω or ἀναίρω: because in general (when the poor sufferer was not already dead by this kind of knout) the punishment ended with beheading, or beating out the brains with a club. When the Lexicographers explain τύπτειν by κρεμᾶν, they had an allusion to the hanging posture in which the position of the poor wretch brought him; for his feet did not touch the ground. Here the Apostle is supposed to allude to the torture used to Eleazar, 2 Macc. vi. 19.

—οὐ προσδεξ. τ. ἀπολ.] "not accepting the proffered deliverance [at the price of apostasy.]" Κρείττ. ἀναστ., "resurrection to another and a better life." The allusion in ἐμπαιγμῶν is thought to be to 2 Macc. vii. 1.

37, 38. The punishment of the τύμπ. was generally unto death; but in this clause, ἐλιθάσθησαν—ἀπέθανον, the punishments are expressly of that sort. Stoning had been in use from the early ages, and was at first appropriated to crimes involving impiety. The prophet Zechariah, and, as some say, Jeremiah, died this death. By the next term is designated the being sawn in two; an atrocity of punishment also of a very early date, as being mentioned in 2 Sam. xii. 31, and elsewhere, and which Isaiah suffered. Vestiges, too, of this are found in the heathen writers; as Herodot. ii. 139. συμβουλευέν—τοὺς ἱεῖρας—μέσους διαταμέειν.

With respect to the expression ἐπειράσθησαν, some regard it as an interpolation, or a var. lect. of ἐπίρσθησαν, or a gloss on that word. Others suppose it an error of the scribes for some other word; and about a dozen different conjectures have been proposed, not one of them in the least countenanced by the MSS. How it should be a gloss, or why an emendation of ἐπίρσθησαν, it is not easy to see; for so plain a term as that, required not the one; and that the other should find its way into all the MSS., were unaccountable.

Kuin. coincides in the opinion of those who would cancel the word: for which there is alleged the authority of 3 MSS. and some Versions and Fathers. A testimony, however, very inadequate; for in so few as three MSS. the omission may surely be imputed to homœoteleuton; besides that a term so difficult would be likely to be cancelled by those who, like the above Critics, were ready enough to remove what appeared to them inexplicable. And it was, no doubt, passed over in the Versions because the translators could not explain it. As to the Fathers, they, in citation, only passed it over; and, therefore, we cannot infer that they did not read it. Indeed, in almost all the cases, they elsewhere introduce the word. It is, then, (with Mill, Wolf, Hallet, Pfaff, Schmidt, Carpz., Matth., and Ern.,) best retained; and we must explain it as well as we can. It is, however, first to be determined whether the expression bears a general or a special sense. Against the former, (viz. tried or tempted to apostasy) it is urged, that that sense had been before expressed; and that it is not likely so accurate a writer would pass from very special terms to one so general. And, therefore, Sykes, Semler, and Ern., take it, by a change of genus for species, to denote being put to the torture. For this sense, however, no authority is adduced; and the interpretation is so harsh, that it is best to adopt the figurative and general sense, to which the objection above urged is not very formidable; considering that irregularities as great may be found in the acknowledged writings of St. Paul. Thus we may (with Crell., Glass, Limborch, J. Capell, Haseus, Wells, Macknight, Carpz., and Stuart) take it to mean, that they were assailed by temptations to apostasy,—or at least simulation,—by the motives both of hope and fear, especially the former, sometimes insinuated under the prospect of exquisite tortures; a sort of trial like the fiery darts of the Evil one, who, in the words of the Poet, sometimes "tempts with making rich, not making poor;" and under which even great and good men have yielded, and which might therefore be reckoned among the heavy trials of the people of God.

In the expression following, ἐν φόνῳ μαχ. ἀπέθανον, which literally means, "they died by slaughter of the sword," there is a blending of two phrases, such as I know no example of elsewhere. And now from the trials of faith in those who had to encounter death or torture, the Apostle passes to the less violent, but scarcely less severe fate of the unhappy persons who, having escaped their tyrants and persecutors, were, as wretched outcasts, exposed to every variety of misery. The terms μηλωταῖς and αἰγ. δέρμ. may, with the best Expositors, be understood of rude dresses formed of those skins with wool on, which, Carpz. shows, were worn by the very poorest class. The terms ὕπτ., θλιβ., κακουχούμενοι designate every variety of pinching want and distress. The words ἐν ἐρημίαις—γῆς advert to the other miseries of their condition, as houseless wanderers (so 1 Cor. iv. 11. ἀστατοῦμεν). By the σπηλαίους are denoted caverns; by the ὀπαῖς, caves. The caves and holes were, it should seem, not only used for sleeping in at night, but sometimes for abode by day. Palestine abounds in caves very well adapted for the habitation, however dreary, of numerous persons; as is clear from the account of what befel Josephus after the capture of Jotapata. Philo, too (cited by Carpz.) makes mention of men, women, and children being obliged to make their abode in a cave.

The words ὦν οὐκ ἦν ἄξ. ὁ κόσμος contain a sentiment with which Wets. compares some from the Rabbins. The true scope of the remark (misapprehended by Grot. and others) is doubtless that pointed out by Owen,—namely, that it is meant to obviate an objection, that the persons in question were outcasts, because not worthy of the society of mankind. This is done by a contrary assertion,—that the world was not worthy of them, i. e. of the mercies and blessings which arise from such persons when well treated.

39, 40. μαρτυρηθέντες.] See Note supra v. 2. The sense of the words following to the end of v. 40, is variously understood, and depends upon that assigned to τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν and κρεῖττόν τι, of which the former (as Kuin. and Stuart have shown) must, from the context, be understood of the promised blessings of a Redeemer; and the latter, of the fulfilment of that promise by the Gospel dispensation. Thus the general sense is: 'They all received not the promise [held out to virtue,] neither perfectly in the temporal, nor at all in the spiritual one of the Messiah. No: God was pleased, in the exercise of his providence for us, to destine that they should not attain the perfect fruition of the Divine promises, till the time when they should enjoy them in common with us.' Or, in the words of Prof. Stuart, "All those, i. e. the ancient Worthies, persevered in their faith, although the Messiah was known to them only by promise. We are under greater obligations than they to persevere; for God has fulfilled his promise respecting the Messiah, and thus placed us in a condition better adapted to perseverance than theirs. So much is our condition preferable to theirs, that we may even say, 'Without the blessing which we enjoy, their happiness could not be completed.' In other words, the coming of the Messiah was essential to the consummation of their happiness in glory." On this sense of τελ. (in which there is an agonistic metaphor) see Note on ii. 10. "That the death of Christ (observes Stuart) had a retrospective efficacy, is plain from ix. 15. compared with Rom. iii. 25. sq."

XII. 1, 2. Having pointed out the nature, and shown by examples the efficacy of faith, the Writer now proceeds to exhort them to bring the same principle into action in the Christian faith; inculcating steadfast perseverance even under the greatest trials, and comforting them with the assurance, that the evils they were suffering were not marks of God's wrath, but rather paternal chastisements, intended for their good in the end. He founds his exhortation (introduced in the form of a conclusion) on a view which seems to have been suggested by the foregoing agonistic allusion, and of which the imagery in vv. 1 & 2. is a continuation. Thus he represents the persons whom he is addressing as placed in a race-course, of which the spectators are the innumerable company of the Worthies of the old Dispensation just adverted to; who, by their words and actions, testified how far the objects of their faith were directed above worldly considerations.

In developing this figure, the Apostle adverts to three circumstances respecting the runner, in order to deduce from thence the exhortation he had in view: 1. That the runner got rid of every encumbrance to his progress besides unnecessary clothing, and accordingly (by means of previous training) superfluous flesh. 2. That he patiently endured the toil necessary to fit him for the race. 3. That he kept his eye fixed on the goal, where the βραβευτής sat ready to determine the contest, and distribute the prizes. On each of these particulars a few remarks will be necessary, and especially to point out the application. "ὄγκον, weight, load, encumbrance; and as ὄγκος τοῦ σώματος, or τῶν σαρκῶν, or such like, often occur in the later writers, there is reason to think the allusion is chiefly to the weight of flesh, though also to that of clothes. With respect to the application, many suppose ὄγκος to allude to pride or worldly mindedness. These, however, and other special senses are too limited, and it is best, with Kuin., to understand generally whatever disposition (as sensuality and worldly mindedness) bows the soul down to earth, and consequently impedes it in running its spiritual race. See the admirable Collect for the fourth Sunday in Advent, and consult Dr. Duport's Greek version of it. As, then, the runner would be impeded by a heavy load of useless flesh, so the Apostle means to say that sensuality weighs down, and worldly mindedness hampers, the Christian runner. Even a heathen moralist tells us: "Quin corpus onustum Hesternis vitis animus quoque prægravat unâ, Atque affigit humo divinæ particulam aurâ." In the next words, καὶ τὴν ἐνπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν, the metaphor is abandoned, not from inadvertence, but to suggest the application intended to be made: and as ὄγκον was meant in a general sense, so here τὴν ἐνπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν points to one particular evil disposition which they should strive to throw off; and as πάντα ὄγκον precedes, it is evident that the καὶ should not be rendered (as in our English Versions) and, but particularly. The sin in question (or rather the disposition to it) may, with the best Expositors, be supposed to be that of unbelief (the want of the πίστις before inculcated), or timidity in professing the Gospel; which would constantly tempt them to apostasy, either actual or virtual, and to which their peculiar circumstances especially exposed them. Thus it will not be difficult to fix the sense of the disputed expression εὐπερίστατον, which being an ἀπαξ λεγόμενον, is best understood from the context. Thus, although, from its etymology, it might have almost any one of the senses assigned by Commentators, yet the context will admit only of the following two:—1. That of Chrys. and most Expositors, “which doth so easily beset us.” This, however, introduces a confusion of metaphor; and to assign an active sense to the word, instead of a passive, is not agreeable to the analogy of the language, as seen in εὐπερίχυντος, and other similar forms. I therefore prefer, with Grot., Crell., Capell., Kypke, Wakef., and Kuin., to interpret, “particularly the sin which especially winds around us, and hinders our course, namely, unbelief and a disposition to apostasy; with allusion, it should seem, to the long Oriental garments, cast aside in exercise. Now sins are compared both to burdens, and to bonds, by which we are hampered in running. And this sense of εὐπερίστατον is confirmed by a passage of Max. Tyr., cited by Kypke: τὰς περιστάσεις πάσας (all impediments) ἀπέδυστο, καὶ τῶν δεσμῶν ἐξέλευσεν αὐτόν. See Note on Gal. vi. 2, 6. After all, however, I am inclined to think that the evil disposition here is not unbelief, but rather sluggishness, νωθρεία, with which the Writer often upbraids them; as v. 11. x. 37, compared with 24. And the καὶ (as Grot. well points out) is exegetical, and should be rendered even; for that there is an allusion to the νωθρεία in ὄγκον, cannot be reasonably doubted. Yet there was no necessity for the Critics to conjecture here ὅκνον.

By ὑπομονή is here denoted endurance and perseverance. The term ἀγὼν is used to suggest the struggle to be maintained with various evil propensities; a struggle for life; so multiform are the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil, which beset and deceive us, both in body and mind. So Theodoret finely remarks: καὶ γὰρ ὁ φθάλμος δελεάζεται, ἀκοή καταφέλγεται, ἀφή γαργαλίζεται, καὶ γλῶσσα ῥάστα διολισθαίνει, καὶ ὁ λογισμὸς περὶ τὸ χεῖρον ὁξύρροπος.

2. Ἀφορ. denotes a fixing the attention to one object, implying a looking off (ἀφ.) from others which claim our attention. “There is (says Bp. Sanderson, in a Discourse on v. 3.) scarce any other provocation to the performance of duty so prevailing with men, as are the examples of such as have performed the same before them with glory and success. Because, besides that the same stirreth up in them an emulation of their glory, it cheereth them on with hopes of like success, and quite taketh off that which is the common excuse of sloth and neglect of duty, the pretence of impossibility. The Apostle, therefore, being to confirm the minds of those Hebrew Christians in the Christian course, first sets before them a multitude of examples of the Worthies of former times, who, by the strength of their faith, had done and suffered great things with admirable patience and constancy, to their immortal honour on earth, and eternal happiness in heaven. Hence he brings to their view this cloud of examples (also as witnesses of their success or failure). Yet through this cloud, as a medium, they were to look at a higher example, the Son of Righteousness. Which example is recommended to them, 1. from the completeness of the PERSON, who is (as both ends of the race, the ἀγωνοζότης and the βραβευτής too, he that giveth the law at the start, and he that giveth the prize at the goal) the Author and Finisher of our faith.” Ἀρχ. will denote author and exemplar, as calling it forth by his promises in the Gospel, and exemplifying it in his person; to which great Archetype the Apostle in the next clause further directs our view. And so the βραβευτής was almost always one who had himself been victor, and therefore set an example to the athlete. Τελ. will signify rewarder, with allusion to the βραβ. who distributed the prize. So Philo p. 74. cited by Kuin. πότε οὖν, ὦ ψυχὴ, μέλιστα νεκροφορεῖν σαντὴν ὑπολήψῃ; ἀρὰ γε οὐχ ὅταν τελειωθῇς, καὶ βραβεῖων καὶ στεφάνων ἀξιωθῇς; The ἀντί is variously explained; but it has been shown by Kuin. that no interpretation is so suitable to the context as the common one, “because of,” which, he and Wets. show, easily arises from the use of ἀντί to denote the price of any labour or service. And, indeed, the idea of reward is inherent in the χαρᾶς; which reward was exaltation at the right hand of God, and a glorious reigning with him; as is suggested by the last words of the verse. This sense of ἀντί for ἔνεκα is somewhat rare; but it occurs also at Eph. v. 31. Luke i. 20, and Joseph. B. J. i. 8. 6. ἀντὶ τῆς παραδόσεως τῶν ἐρουμάτων. The σταυρὸν is rightly rendered by Bp. Middl. “a cross,” i. e. death by crucifixion; the ignominy of which is adverted to in the next words; with which Wets. compares from Herodian κρύους καὶ θάλπους καταφρονῶν. Instead of ἐκάθισεν I have, with all the Editors since the time of Beng., adopted κεκάθικεν, the reading of the best MSS. and all the early Editions except the Erasmusian, which first gave ἐκάθικεν, by an error of the press, afterwards unwarily corrected by the Editor to ἐκάθισεν.

3. The Apostle now turns the discourse directly to his readers. Ἀναλογίσασθε γὰρ, &c. “Reflect on, consider Him [high and holy as He is], who experienced so great an opposition of the impious against him." "The word ἀναλογίσασθαι (says Bp. Sanderson, in an admirable Discourse on this text) is of more pregnant signification to the present purpose than Translators can express. It imports, not the bare consideration of a thing by itself alone, but the considering it by weighing and comparing it with some other things of like kind or nature, and observing the analogies or proportions between it and them." This ἀναλόγημα he then ably sets forth in four different points of view. Ἀντιλογία (as Kuin. shows) may denote repugnantia, and opposition generally, both in words and deeds. And he (with Chrys., Carpz., Dind., and Rosenm.) assigns that sense here. Yet contumely and calumny must be chiefly intended. In κάμ. and ἐκλ. there is a continuation of the agonistic metaphor; the terms being both ἐ παλαστρά. It is, however, not agreed whether ταῖς ψυχαῖς should be construed with κάμῃτε, or with ἐκλ. Kuin. decides in favour of the latter mode, citing from Plutarch ταῖς διανοίαις ἐκλελυμένοις. But that the words would be as suitable to κάμ., is certain from a passage of Diod. Sic., vol. ix. p. 220. ἥδη κάμνοντες ταῖς ψυχαῖς. It should seem, indeed, that they were meant for both κάμ. and ἐκλ.

4. The writer here employs a fresh argument in the way of exhortation to endure the afflictions laid upon them with unflinching courage. He means to shame them for the want of resolution which, contrary to the express injunction of God, they began to evince under present evils, and those not of the most serious kind. Such is the general sense: but something remains to be noticed in the phraseology. The best Expositors are of opinion that we have here a continuation of the agonistic metaphor at v. 1. There should rather, however, seem to be a resumption of that at x. 32. sq. πολλὴν ἄσλῃσιν ὑπεμείνατε παθῆμάτων—θεαριζόμενοι. Though it may have been suggested by that just occurring at v. 1. Here the metaphor is plainly derived from ἐ παλαστρά, and designates the pancratium. There is supposed to be a contest, yet of that nature which is rather preludeous than otherwise. But the contest in question would seem to suppose some persons against whom it was carried on. Accordingly certain eminent Expositors (as Pisc., Capell., Gatak., Carpz., Ernesti, Heintr., and Stuart) suppose τὴν ἁμαρτίαν to be put (abstract for concrete) for τοὺς ἁμαρτωλοὺς, meaning the heathen or Jewish persecutors, who, though they had inflicted many evils upon them, had not yet proceeded to the shedding of their blood. Yet it may be doubted whether such a sense is apposite to the case in question. Certainly it would involve no little harshness; since it is difficult to conceive how the oppressed party could be said to oppose persecutors who had so much power over them that they could not resist: it being some such a contest as what Juvenal describes: "Si rixa est, ubi tu pulsas, ego vapulo tantum."

Indeed, the idiom in question (of abstract for concrete), is one that is not to be called in, unless there be a necessity; which is not the case here: for we have only to suppose (with Crell., Est., and Kuin.), a prosopopœia in ἁμαρτία (as in Rom. vi. 16.), where sin is personified as an adversary assailing us with temptations to fail in our duty, whether of faith or practice. And as in the pancratium (which here is especially meant) until blood was drawn, the contest was not thought serious; so here the writer means to say, that in the struggles which they had hitherto had to sustain against the temptations to apostasy, or to backsliding, presented by malice, or the arts of their adversaries, they had not yet been called to the severest trial, that of sealing their faith with their blood. They had only been tempted or tried by the lighter evils, of confiscation, or ignominious punishment. It would surely, the writer means to say, be base in them to turn their backs, as it were, in the prelude to the contest, and not resolve to bear the heat and burden of the day; forgetful of the exhortation of their Lord to constancy and perseverance. As if he had said (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson): "You have fought one good fight already, and quit yourselves like men; I commend you for it, and I bless God for it. Yet be not high-minded, but fear: you have not yet done all your work; your warfare is not yet at an end. What if God should call you to suffer the shedding of your blood for Christ, as Christ shed his blood for you? You have not been put to that yet: but you know not what you may be. If you be not in some measure prepared even for that also, and resolved (by God's assistance) to strive against sin, and to withstand all sinful temptations, even to the shedding of the last drop of blood in your bodies, if God call you to it: you have done nothing. He that hateth not his life, as well as his house and lands, for Christ and his kingdom, is not worthy of either. Sharp or long assaults may tire out him that hath endured shorter and easier. But he that setteth forth for the goal, if he will obtain, must resolve to overcome all difficulties, and to run it out; and not to faint, till he have finished his course to the end."

— καὶ ἐκλήσθῃ—διαλέγεται.] In these words there is, as Kuin. observes, reprehension joined with exhortation. The passage is cited from Prov. iii. 11, 12, and agrees with the Sept. except that the μου, corresponding to the Heb. ׁנִי, is not found in the Sept. Παιδεία in the sense chastisement, is not used in the Classical writers: but it occurs in Eccles. xviii. 14., and παιδεύειν, to correct, in the Sept.

παιδείας Κυρίου, μηδὲ ἐκλύου ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἐλεγχόμενος· ὃν γὰρ ἀγαπᾷ Κύριος παιδεύει· μαστιγοῖ δὲ 6 πάντα υἱὸν ὃν παραδέχεται. — μηδὲ ἐκλύου] “be not disheartened.” The terms κάνειν and ἐκλίσσασθαι are discussed at great length and with great ability, by Bp. Sanderson ubi supra.

7, 8. Here we have a conclusion drawn from the Script. citation, though with the omission of a conclusive particle, per asyndeton, a figure, in Saint Paul's writings, used with great effect. As, however, εἰ so seldom begins a sentence, the ancient scribes stumbled at it, and supposing it to be connected with the preceding words, wrote εἰς, the s arising from the π following. Such is, I apprehend, the true origin of the εἰς, which has been half approved by Griesb., and received into the text by Matth.; though most rashly. The reading ἐν παιδείᾳ, represented by the Vulg. and some inferior Versions, was doubtless an emendation on εἰς παιδεῖαν. Finally, the εἰ is required by the course of reasoning, and by the antithetical εἰ at v. 8. “Υπομένετε, “ye bear patiently.” Προσφέρεται ὑ., “treateth you.” A signification common in the best writers. Τίς γὰρ, &c. q. d. (as Stuart explains) “how can ye expect, although ye are children, not to receive any chastisement?” The sense of the whole passage is well expressed by Iaspis and Kuin. thus: “Hence, if ye have to conflict with trials and tribulations, you may thence infer that you are beloved by God, and that he takes care of you; but if you are exercised with no afflictions, you have reason to fear that God neglects you, as men do illegitimate children, of whose education and morals they take no care, leaving them χωρὶς παιδείας.” By “all” are meant all true sons of God, and beloved by him. The ἄρα is well rendered by Kuin. “inde sequitur.”

9, 10. Here is adduced another reason why their tribulations, suffered for religion's sake, should be borne with patience; and that by a comparison of the discipline of a human parent with that of God. V. 9 contains an argumentum a minori ad majus; and in v. 10, it is proved, that the discipline of God is far better, and more beneficial than that of human parents. (Kuin.)

— εἴτα.] Here again the Scribes or Critics stumbled at the asyndeton, and emended εἰ δέ. The interpretation itaque vero? supported by many recent Commentators, is justly rejected by Kuin. as not agreeable to the air of the context. Τῆς σαρκὸς is, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, for σαρκικῶν, “natural,” as in Rom. ix. 8. τὰ τέκνα τῆς σαρκὸς.

— ἐντροπέω.] “we reverently submitted to their behests.”

— τῷ Πατρὶ τῶν πνευμ.] A very peculiar expression, and therefore variously interpreted. Some, regarding the sentence as perfectly antithetical, and supposing ἡμῶν here to be repeated from the preceding clause, take the sense to be “father, i. e. Creator and vivifier of our souls.” And such is the view of the sense adopted by most of the earlier modern Expositors, and, of the later ones, by Dodd., Mackn., Scott, Stuart, Böhme, and Scholefield. But, it may be remarked, God is the creator of the body as well as the soul, and in Num. xvi. 22., the sense is, “O God, who givest life to all men.” Moreover, the sentiment yielded is not apposite to the argument. It is therefore better, with some eminent Expositors, ancient and modern (as Chrys., Theophyl., Pesch. Syr., Crell., Grot., Milton, Rosenm., Wolf, Middl., and Kuin.) to suppose this a Hebraism for spiritual Father, as opposed to our natural fathers; which, it is certain, is quite suitable to the context. Thus we have just after ζήσομεν, and at v. 10. εἰς τὸ μεταλαβεῖν τῆς ἀγιότητος αὐτοῦ. God (Kuin. observes) is so called “quatenus animus nostrum curat, ut emendetur, nos ad consequendam felicitatem perennem educat.” So Quintil. ii. 9. calls preceptors parentes non quidem corporum, sed mentium.” This it true as far as it goes; but the fact is, that there is a reference to the work of regeneration effected by the Divine Spirit, whereby faithful Christians are said to be begotten again of God, 1 Pet. i. 3. 1 John v. 18. See Grot., Milton ap. Valpy, and Wolf. Καὶ ζήσομεν is for ἵνα ζήσωμεν. So the Pesch. Syr. “ut vivamus.” The καὶ, however, is not, as Kuinöl imagines, really used in the sense of ἵνα; but is elliptically put for καὶ οὕτως ζήσωμεν, corresponding to the καὶ ἐντροπέομεθα in the preceding clause. Render, “and thus live,” i. e. attain everlasting happiness; a sense found in the Latin vivere, as in the “dum vivimus vivamus” so finely paraphrased in the well-known Epigram of Doddridge.

In the verse following, the words πρὸς ὀλίγας ἡμ. are to be repeated in the second member of the sentence. In the first case it refers to the period of childhood; in the second, to the brief period of our sojourn on earth. Compare 1 Pet. i. 6. from the context. The former, however, must not, as it has been generally done, be understood of arbitrariness only, but of a neglect of directing punishment to its chief end, the reformation and the final good of the offender; and aiming rather to excite fear, which is only the means, rather than promote virtue, the end; and seeking an end of their own, the gratifying their ill-humour. Eis τὸ μεταλαβεῖν τ. ἀγ. α. is explanatory of the συμφέρον, and recognizes the principle of virtue being exercised and strengthened by adversity. There may, however, be an allusion to the regenerating influence of God's Spirit (referred to in the preceding verse), by which adversity is sanctified to our spiritual good. So in 2 Pet. i. 4. the end of the Gospel is said to be that we may become θείας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως, at which community we are commanded to aim. See Matt. v. 41. compared with Levit. xix. 2.

11. Here we have a preoccupation of an objection. Affliction is admitted to be, for the time, grievous; though it be, in reality, productive of joy by its effects. The δοκεῖ is emphatical, "seemeth to be." At οὐ χαρᾶς supply πᾶγμα: or rather it may be considered as a Genit. of quality, put for an adjective. So Aristotle said of education, that "its roots are bitter, but its fruits sweet." Compare James i. 2. Πᾶσα "of every kind," even though not severe. Πρὸς τὸ παρόν refers to the time of suffering under it.

— εἰρηνικόν.] The word is here used in the sense salutary, i. e. productive of true happiness, that peace of God, which pasceth all understanding, Phil. iv. 7. Col. iii. 15. And so it is explained by Wolf and Scott. Others, however, derive the use from the Hebrew idiom, by which δίνω denotes happiness. Δικαιοσύνης is a Genit. of explication, i. e. even of righteousness and justification. In τοῖς δι' αὐτῆς γεγυμν. there is a return to the agonistic metaphor, by which life is represented as a stadium, or gymnasium. The transposition of δικαιοσύνης is well accounted for by Woken ap. Kuin. The latter justly retains and defends the common interpretation, in opposition to the novel, but unsound, views propounded by some recent Expositors.

12. On the above arguments respecting the uses of affliction, the Apostle now founding an impressive exhortation to constancy in the faith. And, as at the beginning of this hortatory part of the Epistle (x. 19. sq.) he had treated of the superiority of Christ's priesthood, and held out to view the severe punishments to be inflicted on apostates, since not even contempt of the Mosaic Law went unpunished: so now, on concluding v. 12., the more general part of his hortatory portion of the Epistle, he finally excites to perseverance in the faith. In the first place he treats on the difference between the old and the new Dispensation, showing the superiority of the latter over the former; and thence (at v. 25.) argues, that if despisers of the Mosaic Law suffered the severest punishment from men, much less shall apostates from the Gospel escape punishment from God. (Kuin.)

— τὰς παρειμένας—ὑμῶν.] These words are taken from Is. xxxv. 3.; though not a regular citation, but only an accommodation of a passage of Scripture to the present purpose. The exact nature of the metaphor in παρειμ. and παραλελ. has been disputed. Some, as Raphaelius, Carpzovius, Heinrich, and Dindorf, suppose an allusion to the effects of disease, especially of paralysis, on the body. A view not a little harsh and frigid. It has been abundantly proved that both παραλύεσθαι and παρειεσθαι are used to denote the effects of fatigue and over exertion on the body, and sometimes employed of weariness of mind, or low spirits. So Jerem. vi. 24. παρελύθησαν αἱ χεῖρες, and 2 Chron. xv. 4. μὴ ἐκλύεσθωσαν αἱ χεῖρες. Some therefore suppose this to be an image taken from weary wayfarers. But the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are in general agreed that there is here, as before, an agonistic allusion. So v. 14. Philo, cited by Carpz., (but imperfectly omitting the word the most important to the sense,) p. 448. Α. οἱ μὲν γὰρ προκαμόντες ἀνέπεσον, βαρὺν ἀντίπαλον ἡγήσάμενοι τὸν πόνον, καὶ τὰς χεῖρας ὑπ' ἀσθενείας, ὥσπερ ἀπειρηκότες ἀθλήται, κατῆκαν.

13. καὶ τροχιάς—ὑμῶν.] The sentiment is founded on Prov. iv. 26. ὀρθὰς τροχιάς ποιεῖ σοὶς ποσὶ καὶ τὰς ὁδοὺς σου κατεύθυνε. The words are well explained by Kuin.: "vitare, removete in via qua inceditis, omnes salebras, obstacula omnia, ne pedem offendatis, non sine cautione et circumspectione incedite, ne pes claudus plane luxet, sed convalescat, h. e. imagine omisssa: vos qui in fide nutatis, removete omnia constantis fidei impedimenta, deponite vexationum et persecutionum metum, amorem rerum terrenarum, neque aures præbete sollicitationibus ad defectum a religione Christiana, ne vacillantes magis conturbemini et deficiatis."

14. The Apostle now proceeds to remind them of various duties to which their Christian profession, and the times in which they lived, rendered it necessary that they should pay a particular regard. (Stuart.) Exhortations to peace and to holiness are well introduced after that to perseverance in the faith, since the former would much contribute to produce and promote the latter. See Rosenm. and Iaspis. Διώκ. is here used as in 1 Cor. xiv. 1. δ. τὴν ἀγ. "Ἀγιασμόν must not, with many Expositors, ancient and modern, be taken in a limited sense, but be understood in its most extended acceptation, to denote a pious and holy life. "Ὁψεται τὸν Κ." is a Hebraism denoting admittance to the happiness of heaven; and therefore it matters not whether τὸν Κ. be explained of Christ, or of God. The former is supported by the Pesch. Syr. the latter by the Vulg.

15. ἐπισκοποῦντες—Θεοῦ.] Monentur his verbis Christiani, firmiores ut aliis sint exemplo et incitamento ad constantiam, ut diligenter curent, ne vacillantes a religione descendant. (Kuinoel.) Ἐπισκ., literally, "seeing to it," i. e. minding. At μὴ τις ὑστερῶν, supply ἡ. By τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ is usually understood the Christian religion. But that is forbidden by the ὕστ., unless it be taken in a very unusual sense for deficere. The expression seems rightly interpreted by Böhme, Kuin., and Stuart, of the favour of God. And Stuart, very properly, connects this with the preceding sentiment, explaining: "See well to it, that no one fail of obtaining that divine favour, which is the result of holiness."

In the next words μὴ τις ρίζα—πολλοὶ there is some obscurity, arising chiefly from a seeming confusion in the metaphor, to remove which, Grot., Whitby, Mill, and Valekn., would read for ἐνοχλῇ, ἐν χολῇ, which is supported by the Hebrew text in the passage of Deut. xxix. 18. here referred to. But it is evident that the words of the Apostle are not a quotation, but (as v. 12.) an application of the passage to the present purpose. And, moreover, since seven MSS. of the Sept. (including the Alexandrian) read as in the Apostle's text, it is very improbable that the other reading was the general one in his age. Indeed, Jackson, cited in Holmes's Sept., goes far to prove that such was a true rendering of the Hebrew, according to the copies used by the LXX., and that the Masoretical reading of our present copies is wrong. At all events, it seems to have been the reading, at least, of the Sept., and, being suitable to the Apostle's purpose, was adopted. If this be not admitted, we may suppose with Kuin., that the Apostle here lays aside the metaphor, to express his meaning the more clearly. The general scope of the sentence may be laid down (chiefly with Böhme and Kuin.) as follows: "The words μὴ τις ὑστερῶν, &c., contain the general sentiment intended to be expressed; and the two following clauses two particular ones, meant for exemplification, and to be especially dwelt on, namely, first, μὴ τις ρίζα, &c., which is directed against the crime of apostasy, and the leading others into it by evil example. 2dly. The apostate is represented as profligate and profane, and is compared with Esau; for as he sold his birth-right for a mess of pottage, so they sell the favour of God for gratifications the most fleeting and worthless: besides, sensuality and profligacy are the most frequent means of seducing persons to apostasy.

The peculiar nature, however, of the metaphor in question deserves attention, especially as it has not been pointed out by the Commentators. We have here, I apprehend, one of the many agricultural metaphors found in the N. T. The infection of apostasy and the vices connected with it, is compared to that of bitter and noxious weeds getting into a garden, which strike their roots deep and wide, so as to be with difficulty eradicated; and spread so fast as to infect the ground in every direction. Thus ἐνοχλῇ signifying, "annoy, give trouble to" (of which use many examples may be seen in Steph. Thes.), is very suitable. By the same metaphor Antiochus Epiphanes is, 1 Macc. i. 11., called ρίζα ἀμαρτωλός, as the author and cause of sins. I apprehend, too, that both Moses and St. Paul, by the expression ρίζα meant to intimate that the evil was difficult to be eradicated. So also, in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Antiq. p. 602. 10. there is a like confusion of metaphor, thus: ὥστε περιέσστιν ἡμῖν ἱασιν καὶ ἀλεξήματα τῶν ἀναβλαστανόντων ἐξ αὐτῶν κακῶν ζητεῖν, ὅποσα εἰς ἀνθρώπων πίπτει λογισμῶν, μενούσης ἔτι τῆς πονηρᾶς ρίζης, where, for the manifestly corrupt ὥστε περιέσστιν, found in all the MSS., and retained in the latest Editions, I confidently venture to propose ὥστ' οὐ πάρεσστιν, "Quapropter non licet;" a signification of πάρεσσι by no means unusual (see Steph. Thes. Nov. Ed.), and found in Dionys. Hal. himself. How often περι and παρ, both in and out of composition, are confounded by the Scribes, no one can be ignorant: and it is not very unfrequent to find ou (contr. e) after an elision of e passing into ε.

The βρώσεως μίας is best rendered "a single meal," viz., as we learn from Gen. xxv. 34., ἄρτον καὶ ἐλὴμα φακοῦ. Of this sense of the word examples are adduced by Schleus. from Homer and Polyb. τὰ πρωτοτόκια, "the rights of primogeniture." The word is only found here and in Gen. xxv. 32. xxvii. 36.

17. ἀπεδοκιμάσθη] "he met with a refusal," "his request was rejected." The best Expositors are in general agreed that τόπος μετανοίας here signifies a changing of any one's intention, and the τόπος denotes means; the general sense being, "he found no means of inducing [Israel] to change his intention, and alter his words." This is very agreeable to the context, and seems required by the narrative in Genesis; though it is not here the obvious sense. (See Kuin. and Scott.) Of this sense of μεταν. and τόπος many examples are adduced by the Commentators. Those who adopt the common interpretation, by which the μεταν. is understood of Esau, refer the αὐτὴν to εὐλογίαν; which is harsh. It were better, with Mr. Rose, in a Sermon on this text, to suppose a reference to τόπον μετανοίας; the gender being accommodated to the more important word. But to ascribe the μεταν. to Esau, involves such difficulties that it cannot be admitted. According to the view first mentioned, αὐτὴν will refer, as it most naturally does, to μετάνοιαν.

18—21. In again pressing on his readers the duty of perseverance in faith and holiness, the Apostle dwells on the superior excellence of the Christian religion; contrasting the condition of worshippers under the Old and the New law, which he designates by the two mountains, Sinai and Sion; illustrating the subject from the narration at Exod. xix. 20, sq., and with reference also to Deut. iv. 5 & 11. The latter dispensation, he shows, is not, as was the Mosaic, severe, onerous, and minatory; but promises salvation, and instils joy, hope, and confidence. Hence, however, he argues that its very superior excellence would render it proportionably more criminal and perilous to reject it. (Theoph., Kuin., Storr, and Scott.) The γὰρ has reference to the caution at v. 15. μὴ ὑστερεῖν τῆς χάριτος. Ὁ Προσέρχεσθαι is a term denoting religious service and worship generally; but it may designate, as here, embracing a religion. Of ψηλαφ. the sense has been disputed. Many Expositors, from Wolf downwards, explain it "touched [from heaven] ἐν πυρὶ, by lightning," with which, the narration of Moses shows, the mountain was struck. But ψηλαφάω does not mean to touch, but to feel of, handle; which were unsuitable to the thing in question. And as to connecting it with πυρὶ, to help out the sense, this (as Kuin. observes) involves a harsh transposition, and introduces a needless tautology, quite alien to the genius of the writer. Kuin. rightly retains the ancient and common interpretation, by which ψηλαφ. is joined with ὄρει, and taken for ψηλαφητῶ, in the sense concretablem, (as the Pesch. Syr. renders it) "which could be handled," equivalent to the αἰσθητόν and ἐπίγειον, the material and corporeal, or palpable and tangible mount, in opposition to the incorporeal, spiritual, and heavenly one, the heavenly Sion, v. 22. So Quintil. (cited by Kuin.) says "jus, quod sit incorporeale, apprehendi manu non posse." And Cicero has mente concretare. Κεκαυμ. π., "and that burnt with fire." See Deut. iv. 11.

The words following advert to the tremendous circumstances, which attended the promulgation of the law at Mount Sinai, and which struck terror into the people; circumstances whose dignity must not be lowered by attempts at minute explanation; and where (as in similar passages at 1 Cor. xv. 52, and 1 Thess. iv. 16.) it becomes the Interpreter to "pull off his shoes from his feet, being on holy ground."

—γνώφῳ καὶ σκότῳ.] Of these two terms the former occurs, besides the present passage, several times in the Sept. By Commentators and Philologists it is usually considered as put Æolice for νέφῳ, by the change of ε into ο, and the addition of γ. The opinion, however, seems unfounded. I apprehend that γνώφος, and the yet rarer δνόςφος, were very ancient and rough forms, afterwards softened to νέφος. But how, it may be asked, came they to have been so rough? Why was not νόςφος rather used? To which it may be answered, that the γ or δ seem to be corruptions of the primitive ν; for the word appears to have been formed from the preterite middle νένοφα of the old verb νέφω, lego, and was at first νένοφος, and afterwards changed to γένοφος and γνώφος, sometimes δένοφος and ἀδνόςφος.

In παρητήσαντο μὴ προστ. α. λ. the μὴ is expressed, as is usual after verbs containing a negation. On which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 533. The sense is, "they declined, or deprecated being any more spoken to in that way." On παρ. see Note on Acts xxv. 11.

20. Here the Apostle adverts to a circumstance, which had especially caused their alarm; namely, that so strict was the edict, which forbade the mountain to be touched, that even a beast touching it was to be stoned. Τὸ διαστείλλ., "the interdict [expressed as follows]." For the words ἢ βολίδι κατατοξευθήσεται after λιθοβ. there is so little authority of MSS. and Versions, that they have been justly cancelled by almost all Editors from Beng. to Vater. They were not in the Ed. Pr., but were introduced (from Exod. xix. 13.) with many other interpolations and inferior readings, by Erasmus.

21. καὶ, οὕτω, &c.] Render, "Nay, so terrible was the spectacle." The καὶ is for ἀλλὰ καὶ. I have here pointed (with Griesb., Vater, and Stuart,) as the doubly parenthetical character of the words requires. And though instances of parenthesis within parenthesis are thought very rare, yet I could adduce several examples from a single writer—Thucydides. And as this involution is Thucydidean, so is it Pauline—which tends to prove the Pauline origin of this Epistle. Μωϋσῆς, "even Moses," notwithstanding his typical mediatorship, sanctity, and long communion with God.

—ἐκφοβός ε. καὶ ἐντ.] This, indeed, is not expressly mentioned in the O. T. narration of the transaction; for the terror ascribed to Moses, Deut. ix. 19, was upon another occasion. Stuart, however, thinks it is implied in Exod. xix. 16; and he and others are of opinion, that the circumstance was introduced from tradition. To that principle, however, there is perhaps no occasion to resort in the present case. The fear of Moses is so plainly implied in the narrative, that he may be supposed, in effect, to have said this to himself (see Job iv. 14.): and, therefore, the Apostle might ascribe to him words uttered by him on a similar occasion, as recorded in Deut. ix. 19. And that, in order the more strongly to impress on his readers the terrific nature of the Mosaic economy. That the words καὶ ἔντρομος were then in some copies of the Sept., we may infer from the reading of the Vulg.

22—25. Here the contrast between the two dispensations is especially marked. By Σιών is meant, (as Theophyl. and Stuart point out,) the heavenly Zion, as opposed to the palpable or tangible mount Sinai: and the general sense intended in this whole passage may, with Mr. Holden, be thus expressed: "You are now admitted to the privileges of the heavenly city, are come to a dispensation mild and benign, and which will lead to the possession of all the glories and blessings of the celestial Jerusalem." This simple sentiment is, however, adorned with every thing striking in imagery and expression. The great question, however, (though a most difficult one to determine, and neglected by almost all the Commentators,) is, what is the subject of this sublime description? The Commentators in general say, the Christian Church on earth. But to this Kuin. strongly objects, as inconsistent with the μυρ. ἀγγέλων, the πνεύμ. δικ. τετ., and other expressions. The intent of the Apostle, he thinks, was to show that the blessedness destined for the worshippers of Christ is most certain; as certain as if they were already enjoying it; having, in a manner, arrived at heaven, and the life in heaven. See ix. 11, 13, 14, compared with xi. 10 & 14. Such, too, is the view taken by Knapp and Stuart, the latter of whom observes, that "the mention of such an assembly of angels, &c. shows that the writer intends to describe the objects of the invisible world, as seen with the eye of faith; not things palpable, nor the objects of sense." And so Abp. Newc. remarks, that "Christians are represented as already come to that state which faith and obedience will secure to them." Yet it should seem that as there is here a manifest contrast intended with the old dispensation,—so the sense first mentioned cannot be excluded from the passage, under any plea of expressions occurring unsuitable thereto. Indeed, it should seem that both the above senses were intended to be expressed; since the economy of Christ's Church on earth, with all its promises and ordinances, is intimately connected with that which subsists in the holy abode of God and Christ in heaven, to which it is continually transmitting fresh inhabitants. See Revel. xi. 1 & 2; xiv. 1—5; xxi. 9—27. The former sense was, it should seem, alone at first intended by the writer; and, properly speaking, terminates at Ἱερ. ἐπουρανίῳ, (though it is resumed at v. 24.) after which, for the encouragement of those who were fighting the good fight of faith, he at v. 23. throws in imagery suited only to the heavenly Jerusalem in its full sense, HEAVEN ITSELF, representing his readers as having already joined the great Family of God in Heaven, become citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, in whose book their names were written, governed by God the supreme Ruler of all, and in the blessed presence of Christ, the Mediator of the covenant which had brought them thither. At the words καὶ διαθήκης νέας μεσότη the writer forsakes the imagery suited to the Church of God in heaven, and returns to that on earth; for Ἰησοῦ seems to belong to the former, and μεσότη διαθήκης νέας to the latter; Ἰησοῦ being the vinculum which connects them; though προσελθούθατε must be accommodated in sense to each. In the latter they are said to come to Christ, as coming to his religion; for those who come to Christ's religion are often in the N. T. said to come to Christ. Thus to come to Christ as the mediator of the new covenant, is equivalent to coming to, and embracing the covenant and dispensation obtained by His mediation; and not mediation only but atonement; as is expressed in the next words καὶ αἵματι θαντισμοῦ, which contain a contrast to the typical sprinkling of the Levitical law (see Exod. xxiv. 8.); an atonement, it is said, which "speaketh better things than [the blood of] Abel," (for such, the best Expositors, are agreed, is the sense of παρὰ τὸν Ἀβελ) inasmuch as that cried aloud to God for vengeance, this proclaims pardon and peace.

It will now only be necessary to illustrate a few points in the phraseology. The Ἱερ. ἐπουρ. is in apposition with and explanatory of the preceding; and on the sense of the expression see Note at xi. 10. In the next clause the punctuation which I have adopted is supported by many of the best Critics from Beng. to Vater, Böhme, Stuart, and Kuin., who observe, that the common punctuation involves a pleonasm very unsuitable to the dense brevity of the writer. Πανηγυρίς properly denotes any solemn festival, as the Olympic or Pythian, at the rites of which, (i. e. sacrifices, with games and spectacles,) great multitudes were congregated. The term, as Kuin. observes, was adopted by the Sept. translators to express the Heb. חַג, "a solemn assembly," at Hos. ix. 5, where is added חַג, a festival, rendered πανήγυρις by Symmachus, at Levit. xxiii. 41. Πρωτοτ. here simply denotes those who enjoy distinguished privileges, or are well beloved, without reference to the original idea of primogeniture. See Kuin. and Stuart; the latter of whom understands it of those who have been most distinguished for piety. Indeed, it should seem to denote the same persons as the πνεύμασι δίκαιον τετελ. just after, with especial reference to the illustrious examples of faith in the preceding Chapter; including, however, those who, in every age, have lived in the faith and fear of Christ, whose robes have been washed in the blood of the Lamb, and who are accordingly admitted to the "inheritance of the saints in light." Ἀπογεγραμμένοι should be rendered "enrolled," the term being employed suitably to the preceding ones πόλει and ἐκκλησίᾳ. Heaven is often in the N. T. represented under the figure of an earthly πολίτευμα, of which those entered on its list are citizens; with allusion to which the heavenly city is represented as having its "book of life," wherein are inscribed the names of those admitted to salvation; though that is not here applicable.

At καὶ κριτῇ Θεῷ πάντων most recent Editors and Commentators, including Stuart, place a comma after κριτῇ, thus, "to the Judge, the God," i. e. Supreme Ruler of all. But it is justly observed by Böhme and Kuin., that the mode of interpretation thus introduced is too artificial. And they, with the ancient Translators and Interpreters, and earlier Commentators, and also Heinr., Morus, and Winer, rightly recognize a transposition, for Θεῷ κριτῇ πάντων, of which numerous examples are adduced by Winer. It may be added, that the other interpretation would indispensably require the Article. The expression κριτῆς πάντων may, indeed, seem not very suitable to the context; but it should be observed (with Kuin.) that this designation of God is at once for consolation and for warning. Τετέλ. signifies consummated by admission to their final state of glory and happiness. See Notes at xi. 39, and Phil. iii. 12.

Instead of the common reading κρεῖττονα, most of the MSS. and Versions, together with several Fathers, and all the early Edd. except the Erasmusian, have κρεῖττον, which was preferred by Mill, Beng., and Wets., and has been adopted by Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Schott, and Tittm. The common reading may, as Kuin. thinks, have been introduced from vi. 9. vii. 19. viii. 6. x. 34; but it should rather seem to have come from the scribes, and the A to have arisen from the A following. The expression signifies what is more salutary, and available, towards removing the wrath of God, namely, mercy and pardon. For τὸν Ἀβελ some MSS. and Fathers have τὸ Ἀβ. scil. αἷμα, which is approved by Grot., Valckn., and Rinck. It, however, violates the propriety of the Article, and was probably an emendation from those who, though they saw the sense, could not extract it from the words. But, in fact, no alteration is necessary; since (as Knapp, Bp. Middl., and Kuin. observe) Abel must, by implication, mean the blood of Abel, or as Abel speaks by his blood; for, as Crell, Theophyl., Fell, Rosenm., and Stuart explain, while that called for vengeance (see Gen. iv. 10.) on the murderer of that of Christ (the blood of sprinkling) speaks (i. e. assures us of) atonement and pardon, promising us admission to the true holy of holies, heaven itself. See x. 19. "Such (observes Stuart) is the contrast between the old and the new dispensations. In the former, all is awful and terrific; in the latter, all is gracious and animating." The inference meant to be drawn is, that they should renounce the former, and adhere to the latter. And this the Writer proceeds to confirm in the remaining verses of the Chapter, by a solemn warning against a renunciation of the Christian faith.

25. τὸν λαλοῦντα.] This is by many modern Expositors referred to God; but by the ancient and some modern ones, to Christ; which is far more agreeable to the context. For, as Stuart observes, "the two dispensations are here compared, in respect to the penalty to be inflicted on the disobedient; the promulgator of each dispensation being introduced as the person who addresses the injunctions of God to men."

With respect to the words τὸν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς χρηματίζοντα, as opposed to the τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν, these have been not a little disputed. One thing is clear,—that χρηματίζειν here signifies to promulgate the will of God to man; as Jerem. xxix. 18. λόγον ἐχρημάτισαν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου, and Hebr. viii. 5. καὶ ὡς κεχρημάτισται Μωϋσῆς, and xi. 7. and often in Josephus. Most Commentators understand by these two expressions Moses and Christ; the former as God's internunci on earth; the latter as speaking from heaven, by the Apostles and ministers in the Gospel. The emphasis, however, would thus be rather in words than in sense; and the sentiment, as thus represented, involves something incongruous and frigid. Some, indeed, understand the two expressions of God; others, the last only. But the former is quite inadmissible; and the latter not a little harsh. There is evidently a reference to Moses and Christ; though not, I conceive, in the way above adverted to. We must (with Cramer, Storr, Böhme, and Kuin.) take τὸν ἐπὶ γῆς (for so, instead of ἐπὶ τῆς, it is rightly edited, from many MSS. and early Edd., by Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Schott, Vat., and Tittm.), and τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν as belonging, not to χρημ., but to ὄντα understood; so as to be equivalent to the adjectives ἐπίγειον and οὐράνιον. Compare i. 1. We might, indeed, have expected ἀπὸ or ἐκ γῆς; but it may be observed that ἐπὶ γῆς is a more significant mode of expression, as denoting not only the being descended from earth, but the living upon it as a man. That ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ γῆς may be for ἐπίγειος, is plain from 1 Cor. xv. 47. ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος ἐκ γῆς, χοϊκός. Thus also the τὸν ὄντα ἀπ' οὐρανῶν here corresponds to the ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ there; denoting the heavenly origin of Christ. Hence, though almost all Commentators (including Kuin.) repeat χρηματίζοντα at τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν, yet it seems not only unnecessary, but even improper, as not agreeable to the writer's meaning; which, I apprehend, was to designate Jesus as him who actually came from heaven, the Lord from heaven; q. d. "not merely an inspired person, as Moses, but as Son of God, one with, and representing the DEITY."

At ἔφυγον (which stands for ἐξέφ.) supply δίκην from the subject matter. And at ἡμεῖς supply φευγόμεθα. In πολλῶ μᾶλλον there is an argumentum a minori ad majus. Ἀποστρ., “turn away from,” reject, or renounce. A stronger term than παρατησάμενοι. See Matth. v. 42, and Note.

26. οὐ ἡ φωνή, &c.] i. e. the voice sounding from Sinai. See supra v. 19. The best Expositors are in general agreed that the οὐ refers (as grammatical propriety would require) to Christ, notwithstanding that the thing is in Exodus ascribed to God. Nor is there any inconsistency, since the N. T. and the Rabbinical writings agree in representing it as the SON OF GOD, who appeared to the patriarchs, who delivered the Law by angels, and who was the ANGEL-JEHOVAH worshipped in the Hebrew Church. See Acts vii. 53, and 1 Cor. x. 4, 9. By ἐσάλειψε is meant, literally, “made it shake as a ship at anchor is tossed by the waves.”

— νῦν δέ.] It is well observed by Kuin., that “since νῦν is opposed to τότε, it indicates the times of the N. T., and that the promise, which was not now brought forward, but being already formerly in existence, pertained to this age, is plain from the Preterite passive ἐπήγγ.” And he renders, “quod autem hæc tempora attinet, promissit hoc.” The word seems to include the notions both of declaration and promise; the latter predominating. See Newe.

The citation is from Hagg. ii. 6. Sept., and exactly represents the sense of the Hebrew, though with a slight change of words, for adaptation to the present purpose; and οὐ μόνον—ἀλλὰ is intended to strengthen the sentiment. It should seem, too, that the Writer did not intend to stop at οὐρανόν, but to go forward to the end of v. 7; and, indeed, the mention of the first words would, to persons so conversant in Scripture, bring to mind the whole. The words plainly predict that mighty change in religion, which was to be introduced by the promulgation of the Gospel. In these and other descriptions given by the Prophets (as Is. xiii. 13. and Joel ii. 10. iii. 16.) of the changes which should precede, and the mighty power which should accompany, the last and perfect dispensation of Christ, the thing is represented by God's shaking—not, as at the giving of the law, the earth only, but both the earth and the heaven, i. e. effecting a complete change and total revolution.

27. τὸ δὲ ἔτι ἅπαξ—μετὰθεσιν.] Here we have, as Kuin. remarks, a comment of the writer on the passage of the Prophet; q. d. “This yet once more signifieth the removal of the things that are put in commotion; by which (as the best Expositors are agreed) is meant the abolition of the polity, rites, and ordinances of the Jewish dispensation. And as ἅπαξ may mean, in such a context, “once for all,” the Apostle intends (as Peirce suggests) to hint that God will make but one such alteration; and consequently that the things which succeed upon that shaking shall continue unshaken.” Of ὡς πεποιημένων the sense is obscure and controverted. It is usually, and upon the whole best explained, “as of things that were merely created, and therefore so constituted as to be temporary.” In which view I would compare Thucyd. ii. 64. πάντα γὰρ πέφυκε καὶ λασσοῦσθαι. Thus πεποιημένων will be for χειροποιήτων, caduca, mutabilia, as opposed to τοῖς ἀσάλευτοις, as at viii. 2. ix. 24. τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις. Such is the view of the sense adopted by Beza, Elsn., Ern., Schott, and Stuart; who observe, that the writer means to say, “the ancient order of things, viz. the Jewish dispensation, will be changed, removed, abolished, in like manner as the objects of the natural creation. All this change or abolition of the old dispensation was to take place, in order that a new one might be introduced, which shall undergo no change; ἵνα μείνῃ τὰ μὴ σαλευόμενα,” i. e. “continue to the end of the world unshaken, so as not to be abolished.”

28, 29. βασιλ. ἀσάλ.] i. e. the βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Gospel dispensation, which is never to be abolished. So most Commentators interpret. Kuin., however, takes it to mean “felicitem in altera vitâ futuram,” which view is, indeed, countenanced by the figure in παραλ.

— ἔχωμεν χάριν.] This is usually explained, “let us hold fast the grace vouchsafed to us;” or, as Mr. Valpy interprets, “let us continue stedfast in that faith and dispensation delivered in the Gospel, as being that alone which renders both our persons and our services acceptable to God. Let us hold fast the profession of our hope without wavering, continuing to serve God with a holy reverence. This exposition, however, involves not a little harshness; and it is far better (with Chrys., Theophyl., and Œcumen., of the ancient Expositors, and many eminent modern ones, as Dind., Rosenm., Stuart, Böhme, and Kuin.) to assign the following sense: “cum per Christi religionem spes nobis contigerit felicitatis perennis certissima; gratiam memori mente Deo persolvamus, ita, ut eum colamus cum reverentia et metu.” The εὐλαβ. is not well rendered by Stuart, “devotion.” The sense is correctly represented by our common version, “godly fear,” supported by the authority of the ancient Versions and Glossographers, and by the best modern Commentators. This sense is, indeed, required by the next words (supposed to be derived from Deut. iv. 24.), which assign a reason why this godly fear should be entertained, threatening the same severity to apostatizing Christians as was formerly shown to Israelites. Καὶ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς ἡ. π. κατ. A sublime and awful image, as suggesting the idea of a God who can, like a consuming fire, bring to utter perdition; the terrible

XIII. Sequitur Epistolæ pars hortativa specialior, quæ varii generis officia Hebræis injungit. (Kuin.)

1—3. ἡ φιλ. μενέτω.] The sense (as the best Expositors are agreed) is: "let mutual love of each other as Christians continue to be cultivated [as heretofore], and firmly rooted in your practice." Τῆς φιλοξ. A virtue closely connected with the foregoing, and a main evidence of it, and especially to be practised towards their Christian brethren; since the distress occasioned by persecution would cast many upon the charity of their brethren. "Ἐλαθον ξενίσ.", "unconsciously entertained." On this Attic idiom see Viger. p. 258, and Matth. Gr. Gr. The argument (intended to anticipate an objection, that the persons may be obscure and unworthy of notice) is, that greater honour among men and consequent reward from God sometimes attends the discharge of this duty, than the circumstances of the case would lead us to expect.

3. μιμνήσκεσθε τῶν δεσμ. ὡς συνδ.] An injunction to such a lively sympathy with the prisoners, as if they were fellow-sufferers. The μιμν. must, however, by the context, imply relief as well as sympathy. So in Heb. ii. 6, and μνημονεύειν in Gal. ii. 10. Col. iv. 18. Τῶν κακоч., "those who are suffering under calamity or distress," viz. for the Gospel's sake. See supra xi. 37. The words ὡς καὶ αὐτοὶ ὄντες ἐν σώμ. are meant to suggest, that they themselves are exposed, while yet alive, to similar distress, so as to need sympathy and support from others.

4. τίμιος ὁ γάμος.] Since the whole context is hortatory, the best Expositors in general are, with reason, agreed that the ellipsis here is not ἔστι, but ἔστω. It is now, moreover, generally admitted, that ἐν πᾶσι signifies inter omnes, (a sense supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr.) where Böhme and Kuin. supply calices, justly supposing, that among these Hebrews there were some, like those censured at 1 Tim. iv. 3, who, by what they thought a holy contempt of matrimony, gave a handle to immorality both in themselves and others. The ἐν πᾶσι, however, may simply mean "among or for all persons," without exception on the score of peculiar engagements to piety and holiness.

The next injunction is to the married; namely, to avoid adultery. And it is followed up with a solemn assurance, which seems to regard both the preceding injunctions; q. d. "Let the single marry; for fornicators God will judge. Let the married keep themselves pure from adultery; for adulterers God will judge," i. e. condemn and punish. This judgment the Apostle denounces not only against adultery, but fornication, which leads to it. How different from the heathen sages and legislators,—who tolerated simple fornication, as tending to preserve the virtue of married women. See Plato in his Philebus cited by Athenæus, 511. D.

5. ἀφιλ. ὁ τρόπος] scil. ἔστω. Τρόπος, for ἥθος, conduct, habits, and character. Ἀρκούμενοι scil. ἔστω, "cultivate contentment." Τοῖς παρ. sub. πράγμασι, "with your present condition." So Phocyl. 4. ἀρκέσθαι τοῖς παρόνσι καὶ ἄλλοτρίων ἀπέχεσθαι. See also other Classical citations in Wets. The πραγμ. is in Dinarch., p. 94. 34. expressed. Compare also Dio Cass. p. 324. 26. τῇ παρούσῃ καταστάσει ἀρκ. This, of course, does not forbid them to better their condition by industry and activity. Then is given the reason for this contented acquiescence,—namely, the assurance of God (for by the αὐτός is meant Θεός just before occurring) that he will never abandon to want those who trust in him; for such is implied in the words here adduced; whence cited, the Commentators are not agreed. Some say from Josh. i. 4; others, from Deut. xxi. 6; others, again, from 1 Chron. xxviii. 30. As, however, none of those passages exactly correspond, it should rather seem that the expression εἶρηκεν is meant of the general purport of God's declarations in those and such like passages, as Ps. xxxvii. 25 & 28. Is. xli. 10. Though, as Philo, p. 344, cites these very words as a λόγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, Storr and Kuin. suppose, not without reason, that the words were a proverbial form founded on Scripture. Indeed, the manner in which the citation following (from Ps. cxviii. 6.) is introduced, serves to show that the passage was commonly employed for the purpose of consolation; q. d. in the words of Bp. Sanderson, Serm. ad Aul., p. 444, "Lean upon God's Providence, and repose thyself upon his promises, and contentment will follow; for upon this base the Apostle here has bottomed it." At τί ποιήσει μοι ἄνθρ. Beng., Griesb., Tittm., Vat., Gratz., Kuin., and other Editors, have introduced a mark of interrogation after the ἄνθρωπος, alleging that the Hebrew original requires that punctuation. That, however, depends upon the correctness of the Masoretical pointing, which, though adopted by most Translators and Commentators, is rejected by some, as in our common Version; and justly; for the separation has something harsh, and the sentiment has thus more of δεινότης than is suitable to the style of Scripture. I find that Dr. French and Mr. Skinner have, with their usual judgment and taste, adopted the declarative sense of τῷ, which is required by the declarative form of the second clause of the next verse, ("therefore shall I," &c.) which is plainly a parallelism on this. But if there were no other authority for retaining the declarative form in the words of the Apostle, it would be sufficient that the Sept. has it, and that so strongly marked by the insertion of a καὶ as not to be evaded.

7. μνημ.] “preserve in mind;” viz. so as to feel due gratitude for their instruction, and to follow their holy example. By the ἡγουμ. are meant their spiritual pastors and masters, elsewhere called προϊστάμενοι. At least, so almost all Expositors understand it: but, I apprehend, incorrectly. It should seem, that what is here said (which has, I conceive, no connection with the preceding) regards doctrine, not discipline (as at v. 17. πείθεσθε τοῖς ἡγ.); and that ἡγ. here simply means guides to the faith. Moreover, ἡγ. is not, (as it is generally rendered by Translators) of the present tense, but the Imperfect; as appears from the ἐλάλησαν following. Thus the sense is: “Bear in mind the spiritual guides who first guided you into the faith, by preaching to you the Gospel, and led you into the way of righteousness,” Ps. xxiii. 3. It is well remarked by Calvin: “Hoc autem non parum valet. Nam qui nos in Christo genuerunt, quasi patrum loco esse debent.” I have here followed R. Stephens in removing the comma before οἵτινες, which only impedes the sense. By the ὧν ἀναθεωροῦντες—πίστιν is suggested what was chiefly meant by the μνημονεύετε.

—ἀναθεωροῦντες] “attentively reflecting on.” There is, as Theophyl. remarks, a metaphor derived from painting, in learning which art the pupils carefully look up at the picture of their master which they are copying. Τὴν ἐκβ. τ. ἀναστ., i. e. the result of their conduct, or manner of life; viz. as seen in their blessed exit from this life, and the termination of their mortal trials by entering into the joy of their Lord. The next words advert to the means by which they might follow their examples and attain their end,—namely, by imitating their faith.

8. Ἰησοῦς—αἰῶνας.] Expositors are not agreed as to the reference in these words, whether to the verses preceding, or those following. The ancients and most moderns adopt the former view: but the more eminent moderns, and especially the recent Expositors, the latter. It is ably observed by Kuin.: “Aliam cohortationem addidit scriptor affinem ei quam v. 7. continet, ex eaque profluentem, nempe ut puram et incorruptam servarent Christi doctrinam, nec avitæ religionis ritus cum ea conjungerent, generaliore sententiam v. 8. præmittit.” Prof. Scholefield, too, remarks that “the order of the words of v. 7, as well as the train of thought seems decidedly opposed to such a connection.” And he connects as follows: “Jesus Christ is the same;” therefore, be ye the same, and “be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines,” but let “the heart be established;” in order to which establishment, seek for more grace, and do not go back to meats and other observances of the Mosaic ritual,” &c. Thus by “Christ” must, according to the above Commentators, be denoted (as at Rom. viii. 10, and Eph. iv. 17.) the doctrine of Christ; though, I apprehend, with an allusion to His eternal and immutable nature. As what is here said seems to be suggested by the μνη. τὴν πίστιν in the former verse, so the sentence Ἰησοῦς—αἰῶνας is a vinculum to unite the sentiments of both v. 7 and v. 8; q. d. “Jesus Christ is always the same, yesterday, to-day, and for ever; his faith the same. Let then your faith be the same; and be not carried away,” &c. Comp. Gal. i. 8, 9.

9. ποικίλαις καὶ ξέναις.] By these terms are designated doctrines varying in themselves, and all of them at variance with “the truth as it is in Jesus,” who is the same yesterday, &c. The doctrines in question were chiefly those of the Judaizers, though probably others also are intended. Instead of the common reading περιφέρεσθε many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have παράφ., which was preferred by Mill, Grot., Beng., and Wets., and has been edited by Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Schott, Vat., and Tittm.; and justly; for though παρά and περί in composition are perpetually confounded, yet here παράφ. yields a stronger and better sense,—there being a metaphor taken from a ship carried out of its course by violent winds. Of the other words of the verse the sense has been pointed out in the above extract from Prof. Scholefield; but a few remarks may be necessary. It is plain from the words οὐκ ὠφελήθησαν, that καλὸν ἐστὶ is for συμφέρι, as at 1 Cor. vii. 1 & 26; ix. 15. The expression βεβαίουν τὴν καρδίαν is aptly compared by Michaelis with the Heb. בָּרַךְ הַלֵּב, “to refresh the heart [with food],” Gen. xviii. 5, and Judg. xix. 5 & 8. στήρισον τὴν καρδίαν σου, and Ps. civ. 15. Here, however, by καρδία is meant the soul of man, which is confirmed and blessed by Gospel doctrine. “These (says Kuin.) are mentioned, as an exemplification of the ‘divers doctrines’ which must not be intermixed with the Christian religion.” These and such like observances, it is added, οὐκ ὠφελήθησαν, have contributed nothing to that heart-felt peace and blessedness which the Gospel confers; nay, are pernicious, as working contrary to it.

10. This is a passage which, owing to the recondite nature of the metaphors employed, involves no little difficulty. Much here depends upon the connection of v. 10, with vv. 9 & 11, which, after an elaborate discussion, is thus laid down by Kuin.: "nobis Christianis non fidendum est legibus, quæ cibos licitos illicitosve et sacros omninoque ritus spectant, quos Judæi religiose observant; nos habemus βρῶμα sacrum, et quidem præstantius, verum tale, quod ex lege Moisaica Judæi comedere non possunt, est enim caro victimæ piacularis." He further observes, that οἱ λαοὶ τῇ σκηνῇ, though properly applicable to the Jewish priests, yet is here used of those generally who approach the altar as worshippers. Now Christ is a peculiar victim, like that offered on the day of expiation, which even the priests were forbidden to eat. Θυσιαστήριον most of our best Commentators suppose to be put, by metonymy, for the victim offered on the altar, being suggested by the βρώματα preceding; q. d. "We Christians have our sacrifice, (namely, that of Christ by his atonement, shadowed out in the Law and typified in the Lord's Supper,) of which those who rest their hopes of salvation on the ritual sacrifices of the Mosaic Law (viz. Jews or Judaizers) have no right to partake;" i. e. they are not authorized to eat, with any hope of benefit thereby, seeing that they rest their hopes of salvation on another and very different one.

11, 12. These verses are illustrative of the preceding; and, as Stuart observes, "their chief object is to introduce Christ as an example of suffering, in order to impress on the Hebrews the necessity of perseverance in their Christian profession, amidst all their trials and difficulties." There is, however, meant to be an indirect comparison between the sacrifice on the great day of Atonement, and the expiatory sacrifice of Christ. A regular antithesis runs through the whole passage. Thus are opposed to each other αἷμα ζῶων and αἷμα ἰδίου Χριστοῦ; the ἀρχιερεὺς of the Old Testament and Jesus, the ἀρχιερεὺς μέγας τῆς ὁμολογίας; κατακαίειν and πάσχειν; ἔξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς, and ἔξω τῆς πύλης. As, in sacrifices περὶ ἁμαρτίας, the victims were burnt ἔξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς; so Christ was carried out of the city (according to a custom then common) and nailed to the cross. In this respect, too, Christ was like unto these victims, namely, that he suffered without the gates of Jerusalem. "The blood of the former (says Stuart) was presented before God in the most holy place; the blood of the latter, in the eternal sanctuary above, ix. 12. 23, 24. The bodies of the beasts, used for the former, were consumed or destroyed without the camp; the body of Jesus was sacrificed or destroyed without the gate of Jerusalem. The atoning sacrifice of Christians is analogous, then, to that of the Jews; but of infinitely higher efficacy. Compare ix. 13, 14. x. 4. 12."

13. τοῖνυν ἐξερχ., &c.] Most Expositors take this to mean, "let us abandon the profession of Judaism, and abide by that of Christianity." It is, however, truly observed by Kuin., that this sense is not agreeable to the context: and he, (with Rosenm., Dind., and Stuart,) adopts the interpretation of Chrys., who assigns the following: "Let us, after his example, patiently endure the insults, persecutions, and anathemas of the Jews, and, in a general way, whatever evil is to be borne for Christ and his religion." Now to go out with him, is to bring ourselves to the same mind as that with which he went thither; and so to consider what he there suffered for us, as to feel unshaken attachment to his religion. Here there is (as at Matt. x. 31.) an allusion to Christ's bearing his cross; for by τὸν ὀνειδ. is meant the cause of his reproach, the cross.

14. οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν—τὴν μέλλ. This assigns the reason why they should be ready to bear even an ignominious death for the Gospel's sake,—namely, since they have here no permanent city, but are in quest of one yet future; even the heavenly Jerusalem above mentioned, the city which hath foundations (i. e. permanent abode), xi. 10. xiv. 16. See more in Stuart.

15. δι' αὐτοῦ οὖν ἀναφέρωμεν—Θεῷ] It is justly observed by Kuin., that this exhortation is deduced not from what immediately preceded, but from the whole argumentation, especially vv. 10—12. The sense is: "By him therefore (i. e. Christ) [as our Mediator and High Priest] let us offer up, [in return for the blessings of the Gospel, not the bloody sacrifices of animals, or the vain oblations of the fruits of the earth, but] a sacrifice of praise." The expression occurs in Levit. vii. 15. 15. and 2 Chron. xxix. 31., and corresponds to the Heb. תודה נזי, a sacrifice of thanks. A sentiment finely illustrated by Dr. Barrow, Serm. viii. as follows: "We are to offer still, not dead bulls and goats, but our own bodies, living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God. We are excused from material, but are yet bound to yield πνευματικὰς θυσίας, spiritual sacrifices unto God, as St. Peter tells us. We must burn incense still, that of fervent devotion; and send up continually to heaven that thank-offering of praise, which the Apostle mentions. We must consecrate the first-born of our souls (pure and holy thoughts), and the first-fruits of our strength (our most active endeavours), to God's service. We must slay our impure desires, mortify our corrupt affections, and abandon our selfish respects for his sake. We must give him our hearts, and present our wills entirely to his disposal. We must vow to him, and pay the daily oblation of sincere obedience." The words following, τοντέστι, &c., are exegetical of the preceding, and the sense is: "I mean the fruit or oblation of lips," giving thanks to his name; which would be more acceptable than the first fruits of their crops, or the firstlings of their flocks. Thus (as Wets. and Schoettg. have shown) the Rabbins say that the sacrifices of praise will be the only ones that will remain in the time of the Messiah. Καρπὸς τῶν χειλέων is a phrase derived from Hos. xiv. 2. καρπὸν χειλέων ἡμῶν, "fruits from our lips;" a free version of the Hebrew. Ὁμολογ. has here the usual sense of praising, celebrating, &c.

16. εὐποιίας καὶ κοινων. These terms are nearly synonymous; but the latter is added to strengthen the sense of the former.

17. Πείθεσθε—καὶ ὑπέικετε is well observed by Bretschn. (cited by Kuin.): "Indicatur verbis πειθεσθε, ὑπέικετε, obsequium quod cedit aliorum admonitionibus, et eorum præceptis se duci patitur." We may, with Kuin., consider ἀγρουπν. and γρηγορεῖν as general terms, denoting the doing any thing with great diligence and circumspection; Stuart, however, traces a pastoral metaphor. Ὡς λόγ. ἀποδ., i. e. "as those who must render an account [at the day of judgment]," implying the awful responsibility of ministers. Compare Ezek. iii. 17. In the next words ἵνα μετὰ χαρᾶς, many refer the τοῦτο to λόγον ἀποδ., and suppose an ellipsis thus: "[Obey them, I say,] that they may give this account with joy."

It is better, however, with others, as Kuin., to refer the τοῦτο to ἀγρουπν. ὑπὲρ τ. ψυχ. ὑμ. that being the primary thing; the other introduced to show the consequence thereof. Ἀλυσι-τελεῖς γὰρ ὑ. τ., "for that is unprofitable (i. e. by litotes harmful) to you," since if you give them cause to complain of you, it will be hurtful to yourselves. He means to intimate that this obedience is for their own ultimate benefit.

18, 19. Compare parallel sentiments at Rom. xv. 30. and Philem. 22. And see Acts xxiii. 1. The sense here may be expressed thus: "Pray for us; for we trust we merit it by having a good conscience, in all things wishing to act righteously and holily." (This observes Rosenm.) glances at the Jewish teachers, who had calumniated him, and raised disturbances among the Christian brethren."

20, 21. The full sense may be thus expressed in paraphrase: "May God, the author of peace and every kind of happiness, who raised from the dead the great and supreme Shepherd of the sheep (i. e. the Lord of all Christians), by the blood of the everlasting covenant [offered by that great Intercessor] may He perfect you in every good work, to the doing of his will; [and in order thereto] working in you what is well pleasing in his sight." On the expression Θεὸς τῆς εἰρ. see Rom. xv. 33.; and on ποιμ. τῶν προβ. see John x. 11. Καταρτ. ἐν π. ἔργ. ἀγ. may be explained, with Stuart, "prepare you in all respects to act worthily of the Christian name, enable you in all respects as Christians to discharge your duties." Εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλ. α.; the sense, as Kuin. observes, is, "for it is His will that you should live virtuously."

f John 7. 35.
1 Pet. 1. 1.

We are now come to the Epistles called Catholic; an appellation variously accounted for, but commonly, and with most probability, supposed to have been given, because they were addressed, not to any particular Church (like the Epistles of St. Paul), but to Christians in general. The appellation, however, was not coeval with the Epistles, but given at a much later period; probably at the time when the Canon of Scripture was first settled. And although two of them (2d and 3d John) are the farthest from Catholic, being addressed to particular persons, yet it is not improbable that, at the time when the appellation was first given, those Epistles had not been received into the Canon of Scripture.

But to proceed to the Epistle now under consideration;—since two Apostles of the name of James are mentioned in the N. T., there has been some doubt which of them was the author of this Epistle. The learned, however, are in general agreed that it was not the son of Zebedee, but the son of Alpheus or Cleopas, called “the Less” and “the Just,” who was Bishop of Jerusalem, and is called brother, i. e. kinsman, of our Lord, Gal. i. 19. With respect to the date of the Epistle, we know that this James was put to death in a tumult of the Jews, A. D. 62; and internal evidence (arising from allusions to the troubles which were then disturbing Judæa, and did not long precede the destruction of Jerusalem) shows that it must have been written during the two or three years previous to that period; and the learned are agreed in fixing it at 61 or 60. This Epistle (like the second of Peter and the second and third of John) was not at first received as Canonical. But, after a severe scrutiny (attesting the great caution of the primitive Church in receiving any books into their Canon), all doubts respecting its genuineness being soon removed, it was admitted into the sacred Volume, and at so early a period, that it is found in the Pesch. Syr. Version, which was formed at the beginning of the second century, and which does not contain 1 Pet., 2 & 3 John, and the Apocalypse. Indeed, to its reception as an inspired book, there is strong attestation in two allusions to it in Clement of Rome, and seven in Hermas Pastor.

The Epistle consists of three parts: the first of which (Ch. i.) is hortatory; the second (Ch. ii. v. 6.) is accusatory; the third (Ch. v. 7—20.) is partly hortatory and conciliatory, partly accusatory and monitory. Thus the design of the Apostle was, 1. to guard Christians against the vices of the Jews, namely, such as, under the form of religion, denied the power of it; and to warn them against being deceived into the opinion, that the profession of doctrines, and the observance of outward forms, can stand for practical religion, i. e. “faith which worketh by love,” and moral obedience. He intends, moreover, not only to reprove the vicious and worldly-minded, and instruct and set right those who were misinformed as to the nature of the Gospel, but to comfort those who had a competent knowledge of it, and were regulating their lives by its requisitions. He means to console those who are suffering under sickness, or sinking under the persecutions of their adversaries, with the assurance, that the Lord is mindful of them, and can heal their sickness, in answer to prayer; also that their adversity and the tyranny of their adversaries, would be alike short, since the coming of the Lord to judgment was near at hand. Accordingly, this Epistle ranks among the most instructive and edifying in the N. T.

To advert to its manner and style, there is deep earnestness, true pathos, grandeur of thought, and beauty, nay, splendour of imagery; there is a singular vivacity of thought and terseness of expression (see Col. iv. 6.), yet united with unaffected simplicity; there is an oratorical, not rhetorical δευρότης in the reproofs, yet united with true Christian meekness; there is, besides, much sound wisdom evinced in the counsels here given; but that is (to use the Apostle’s own expression) the “meekness of wisdom” (the mitis sapientia of Horace), “the wisdom that is from above, which is first pure, and then peaceable and gentle.” As to the cast of thought, Bp. Jebb is of opinion that “from the general complexion of this Epistle, it was not written, or, at least, not adapted, to the vulgar and illiterate. The writer’s manner, both of thought and expression, combines the plainest and most practical good sense, with the most vivid and poetical conception: the imagery is various and luxuriant; the sentiments chastized and sober.”

I. 1. δοῦλος.] See Rom. i. 1. and Note. It is truly observed by Benson and Rosenm., that the omission of ἀπόστολος will not prove the writer not to have been an Apostle, since the same omission is observable in the Epistles of St. John and those of St. Paul to the Philippians, Ephesians, and Thessalonians. Ταῖς δώδεκα διασπορᾷ. Abstract for the concrete διασπαρμένοις, as sometimes in the Sept. There were properly two Dispersions; the Eastern (beyond the Euphrates) and the Western; which latter had commenced at the time of Alexander the Great, and increased so much, that, in the Apostle's age, all the commercial and manufacturing cities of Syria, Egypt, and other parts of the sea-coasts of Africa, Asia Minor, Greece, Italy, and Spain, were full of them. And they cultivated the use of the Greek tongue, as if it were a vernacular one, because it was indispensably necessary to the commercial transactions by which they almost invariably lived. These Jews of the Western Dispersion were by far the most numerous; and therefore the Apostle employed the Greek tongue; though, had he addressed himself to the Eastern Dispersion solely or chiefly, he would probably have written in the Hebrew (i. e. Syro-Chaldee) tongue; which they, no doubt, understood far better than Greek. Here, by διασπορά, we are to understand both the Eastern and the Western Dispersion,—the Jews dispersed in all countries. So the Pesch. Syr. adds ܠܝܬܝܢܝܐ. See the introduction. Cu. χαίρειν supply λέγει. So εὖ πράττειν, ὑγιαίνειν, and other formulas of salutation frequent in the Classical writers. The present occurs also in Acts xv. 23. xxiii. 26. and often in the Apocrypha. The complete phrase is found in 2 John 11.

2. πᾶσαν χαρὰν—ποικίλοις.] The Apostle here introduces, by this admonition, the first topic of his Epistle,—namely, that of enjoining the exercise of patience under their afflictions, and constancy in adhering to the Gospel, and (as we might expect, from his peculiar character of style), rushes at once in medias res. Most writers would have introduced the admonition with some such words as these: "Though you may think it hard that the faithful people of God should be afflicted, yet consider your afflictions as sent by God, and meant for your good in the end; and accordingly count," &c. Πᾶσαν χαρὰν, "nought but joy," i. e. a matter of entire rejoicing. See Col. i. 9—11. 1 Tim. i. 16. Of this use of πᾶς several examples are adduced by Wets. and Hottinger. So, by a similar idiom, we say, "it is all for the best." Πειρασμοῖς denotes "trials and tribulations" (as Luke viii. 13. xxii. 28. and often); those being especially meant which try our religious faith. Of this word no example has been adduced from the Classical writers. I have, however, noticed one in Plutarch, vol. vi. 188. Reisk. νοσῶν τ' ἀνὴρ νοσοῦντι, καὶ δυσπραξία Ληφ-

Zeis ἐπ' ὁδὸς ἐστι (chimes in with) τῷ πειρωμένῳ. Περιπίπτειν with a Dative is equivalent to ἐμπίπτειν εἰς (as Luke x. 30.); though it is a stronger expression, and always used of what is calamitous, as Thucyd. ii. 54. τοιοῦτω πάθει περιπεσόντες.

3. γινώσκ. ὅτι—ὑπομονήν.] This is intended to explain and illustrate the assertion of the preceding verse. There seems, too, to be a brevity by which a link in the argument is passed over; q. d. "knowing that afflictions are trials of your faith, and that it is this trying of your faith which [alone] produces patient endurance [of what God may lay upon you]," &c. It is true, as St. Paul says, Rom. v. 4, ὑπομονὴ κατεργάζεται τὴν δοκίμην. But δοκίμιον differs from δοκιμή in this,—that the latter signifies the proof itself; the former, the δοκιμασία, or act of proving. Here I would compare two noble passages of Æsch. Eumen., 495. Συμφέρει σωφρονεῖν ὑπὸ στένει. and Agam. 170. Ζῆνα δέ τις προφρόνως ἐπινίκια κλάζων τεύζεται φρενῶν τὸ πᾶν τὸν φρονεῖν βροτὸν ὁδῶ-σαντα, τὸν πάθει μάτος Θέντα κυρίως ἔχειν.

4. ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ ἔργον τέλ. ἐχ.] Most recent Expositors (after Benson) take the sense to be, "And let patience thus have its work thoroughly perfected." Others propose other interpretations. But, after all, there seems no sufficient reason to abandon the common interpretation, which is required by the adversitive δὲ and the Article in ὑπομ., "this patience." It is rightly retained by Hottinger, who says this is for τῆς δὲ ὑπομονῆς ἔργον τέλειον ἔστω. The sense of the passage is well expressed by Scott thus: "But to derive the full benefit from their trials, they must let patience work, waiting in reliance on the promises of God, and not being weary in well doing. Thus patience would have its perfect effect and operation, and bring them unto so resigned a state of mind, that they would be rendered complete and mature in every part of the Christian character, fit for the duties of their stations, wanting nothing to the performance of every good work." So 1 Cor. i. 7. ὥστε μὴ ὑστερεῖσθαι ὑμᾶς ἐν μηδενὶ χάρισματι. The terms τέλο- and ὁλόκληρ. are nearly synonymous. And ὁλό-τελής (in 1 Thess. v. 23. ἀγιάσαι ὑμᾶς ὅλ.) is another synonyme; though the proper difference is well expressed by Tittm. de Syn. p. 181. thus: "ὁλόκληρος est integer suis partibus, τέλ. est perfectus et solutus omnibus numeris. 'Ὅλοσ. est omni ex parte perfectus.'" I would compare Isoer. Panath. τούτους φημὶ καὶ φρονίμους εἶναι, καὶ τελείους ἀνδρας, καὶ πάσας ἔχειν πᾶς ἀρετάς. Loesn., Hottinger, and Pott here recognize an allusion to the sacrificial law of the Jews,—by which both the victims and the sacrificing priests were required to be τέλειοι, ὁλόκληροι, and ἄμωμοι.

5—8. The best Expositors are generally agreed παρὰ τοῦ διδόντος Θεοῦ πᾶσιν ἀπλῶς καὶ μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος, 6 καὶ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ. Αἰτείτω δὲ ἐν πίστει, μηδὲν διακρινόμενος, ὁ γὰρ διακρινόμενος ἔοικε κλύδωνι θαλάσσης ἀνεμιζόμενῳ καὶ ριπιζόμενῳ. μὴ γὰρ οἴσθω ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος, 8 ὅτι λήψεται τι παρὰ τοῦ Κυρίου· ἀνὴρ δὲ ψυχὸς ἀκατάthat by σοφία is here meant, not spiritual knowledge, but practical wisdom, prudence, and judgment (as iii. 13, 15, 17. 2 Pet. iii. 15.), namely, how to act in any critical conjuncture; such being highly instrumental to the τέλειον ἔργον just mentioned, by enabling them to improve their afflictions. Thus Gray, in his admirable Ode to Adversity, among the advantages of adversity, reckons "wisdom and thought, which leave us leisure to be good."

— τοῦ διδόντος Θεοῦ—ὀνειδ.] The full sense is, "who giveth [this and all other good gifts] to all men," &c. Ἀπλῶς is by the recent Commentators in general explained simpliciter, candidè, as opposed to the selfish motives and private ends which too often accompany human gifts. But, though that view may seem supported by the words following, it is, I think, extorting a sense which does not come freely. There is more reason to prefer the common interpretation (supported by the ancient Versions) liberally, abundantly; which yields an excellent sense; since God is the giver of all good gifts, "giving men all things richly to enjoy" (1 Tim. vi. 17.), or (as those words should rather be rendered), "who bountifully or abundantly bestoweth on us all things for enjoyment." Yet, together with the idea of liberal bounty, seems to be connected that of promptitude: for as God is "more ready to hear than we to pray," so is he sometimes, in his mercy, more ready to give than we to ask, giving us more than we can desire. By πᾶσι is intimated that which is expressed in Acts xvii. 25. "seeing that he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things." The words following suggest that idea which has been by some recognized in the foregoing,—namely, what is usually found among men, the giving from selfish motives. The expression μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος is one of extensive signification; of which the sense seems to be, "does not [as men often do] rebuke those who ask with importunity, or upbraid them with the benefits conferred, and dwell on them with irksome commemoration. Thus Menander says of such a giver: καλῶς ποιήσας, οὐ καλῶς ὀνειδίσας· ἔργον καθεῖλες πλοῦσιον πτωχῷ λόγῳ. And so Plutarch: ἅπαντα ὀνειδιζομένην χάρις ἐπαχθῆς καὶ ἄχαρις. So also Seneca says: "Lacerat animum et premit frequens beneficiorum commemoratio." And so the Latin writers have the phrase exprobrare beneficia. The contrary to this illiberality is expressed in Thucyd. ii. 40. of the Athenians: μόνοι οὐ τοῦ θυμώροντος μάλλον λογισμῷ, ἢ τῆς ἐλευθερίας τῷ πιστῷ ἀδελῶς τινα ὠφελοῦμεν. Thus the meaning, as applied to God, is (as Abp. Newc. explains), "acts not as if he upbraided; withdraws not his gifts from the sincerely penitent, because they have formerly abused his mercies." Neither (it may be added) does he withhold future gifts; for, as Calvin remarks, "this was added lest any one should fear to have recourse to God too frequently. For the most liberal of men are apt to make mention of former benefits, to excuse themselves for not bestowing future ones." "Whereas God," says he, "priora beneficia sine fine ac modo novis subinde cumulare paratus est." The promise in καὶ δοθήσεται is most certain, and most comfortable, but must be understood, with the limitations, if God shall see it expedient, and we shall pray for it as we ought. On which see Bp. Sanderson's 2d Concilio ad Clerum, p. 50.

6. αἰτείτω δὲ—διακρ.] The full sense is: ["But he who would obtain what he asks] let him ask [it] in firm faith, ἐν πληροφορίᾳ, full assurance,—namely, of God's power to give, and of his willingness to bestow it, as far as shall be fitting; that being the pledge and condition of success. Μηδὲν διακρ., i. e. with an undoubting dependence. A sense of διακρ., which has been explained at Matt. xxi. 21. Mark xi. 23. Acts x. 20. From the passages here cited from ancient writers, it appears that even the heathens were of opinion that wisdom was alone to be successfully attained by seeking it of God. So Hierocles (cited by Wets.) Πῶς ἂν λάβοι τις τὸ εὖ, μὴ διδόντος Θεοῦ; πῶς δ' ἂν δοῇ τῷ πρὸς τὰς ὁρμὰς αὐτεξουσίῳ μὴ αἰτούντι ὁ δίδοναι πεφυκὼς Θεός; The sense is then illustrated by a comparison of the state of mind of one who doubts, with a wave of the sea; a figure sometimes employed in the Classical writers to designate the contrary to γαλήνη. Ἀνεμιζέσθαι and ριπιζ. signify to be raised by the wind into waves or ripples, like κλυδωνιζέσθαι and περιφέρεσθαι at Eph. iv. 14; see also Jude 12: an apt image of the mind of an unstable man, fluctuating between belief and disbelief, hope and despair. So Dio Chrys. (cited by Wets.) speaking of the vulgar, as compared with the sea, says ὑπ' ἀνέμου ριπίζεται. Of the term ἀνεμιζέω the Commentators produce no example. But I find it in Hesych. ἀναψύξαι, ἀνεμίσαι.

7, 8. These verses are closely connected; and the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "[Let him, I say, ask in faith:] for otherwise he must not suppose he shall obtain anything:" which is then confirmed by a weighty apophthegm introduced, for greater effect, per asyndeton. Διψυχος, which again occurs at iv. 8, is a very rare word, but found in Clemens, 1 Ep. to the Corinthians, and the Const. Apost., and is nearly synonymous with διλογος and διπλός. The difference is well stated by Tittm. de Syn. N. T. as follows: "Hæ voces incertum hominis ingenium denotant. Fallunt hi tres omnes; διλογος dictis, διπλός moribus quoque, vultu, factis, &c., διψυχος, quoniam ipse non constat sibi, sed mutat sententiam;" namely, in the words of Curtius cited by Rosenm., "qui nec velle nec nolle quicquam diu potest, quemque modo consilii penitet, modo penitentia ipsius." It is well explained by Œcumen. (cited and translated by Campb.) to mean "a man of unsettled and fluctuating sentiments, too solicitous about the present to attain the future; too anxious about the future to secure the present,—who, driven hither and thither in his judgment of things, is perpetually shifting the object,—who this moment would sacrifice all for eternity, and the next would renounce every thing for this present life. Thus the sense is: “Such a man, unsteady in his sentiments, is unstable in all his conduct and purposes.” Now it is implied, that such a one will not obtain his request, because he cannot ask with that undoubting faith, indispensable in him who addresses God in prayer.

I have here, with Vater, R. Steph., and Newc., placed a colon after δίψυχος, because I agree with Prof. Thiele (in his recent Edition of this Epistle) that ἀνὴρ δίψυχος is in apposition with the preceding ὁ διακρινόμενος, v. 7, and that through the medium of the intermediate ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος, v. 6. And thus what was before expressed figuratively is now expressed in plainer terms. The ὁδοὶ is for ἐπιτηδεύματα.

9—11. The Apostle now passes from general to particular trials, admonishing the poor not to be too much depressed in mind by their poverty, nor the rich to be puffed up by their riches: suggesting certain considerations, to the one of comfort, to the other of humiliation: but expressed, for greater force, by an acutè dictum, or Oxymoron. Some Commentators, indeed, have adopted different views of the sense; but such as certainly proceed upon an utter misconception of the writer's meaning. How Dr. Benson could bring himself to suppose that the Apostle meant to admonish the poor brother to rejoice when he is exalted to riches, it is difficult to imagine. The Apostle plainly meant to advert to the two great states of life, poverty and riches, and to the temptations peculiar to each,—in the former to discontent, in the latter to pride and arrogance. That Satan “tempts with making rich as well as making poor,” cannot be doubted. There is a peculiar snare in both poverty and riches. So the great philosophic Historian: ἡ μὲν πένια, ἀνάγκη τὴν τόλμαν παρέχουσα, ἡ δ' ἐξουσία, ὕβρει τὴν πλεονεξίαν καὶ φρονήματι, αἱ δ' ἄλλαι ξυντυχίαι, ὀργῇ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς ἐκάστη τις κατέχεται ὑπ' ἀνηκέστου τινὸς κρείσσονος, ἐξάγουσιν εἰς τοὺς κινδύνους. (Thucyd. iii. 45.) Against, then, the temptations to each respectively are suggested these Christian considerations; exactly as in 1 Cor. vii. 22, a passage remarkably similar to the present in its nature and scope, and expressed in the same manner by Oxymoron. In each case, the high party required lowering, and the low raising; of which the Gospel is fully able to effect both. The one party is taught to cultivate contentment, the other humility. Κανχάσθω, as applied to the poor brother, signifies, “let him rejoice,” “comfort himself under his distresses.” Ἐν τῷ ὕψει αὐτοῦ, “in his exaltation” viz. to the privileges of the Gospel. See 1 Pet. v. 6. Καυχ. ἐν τῇ ταπεινώσει αὐτοῦ, as applied to the rich man, signifies, “let him rejoice in his humiliation;” i. e. that he is brought by the Gospel to be lowly in heart, poor in spirit, and is thus in the way of salvation. The words following suggest a strong motive to cultivate this humility,—depicting the instability of wealth and pomp, by an image (frequent in Scripture) taken from the ephemeral duration of the gaudy flowers of the field.

“All flesh is grass, and all its glory fades

Like the fair flower dishevelled in the wind.”

This image is further unfolded at v. 11; where, as often in Christ's parables, the explication of the imagery passes into a narration of the things. The comparison is found in various parts of Scripture, and is frequent in the Classical writers.

—σὺν τῷ καύσωνι.] Bp. Middl. observes, that there is something unnatural in representing the sun to rise with its heat; which cannot be intense, compared with that of noon; though a hot wind may as well blow at the rising of the sun as at any other period. He therefore rejects the common interpretation heat; and, with many learned Commentators, understands καύσ. (I conceive rightly) of a burning wind, the Hebr.

ⲙⲁⲣⲁⲛⲏ, which in the Sept. is sometimes called καύσων and sometimes Νότος. Now this, as we learn from Oriental travellers, often blows up at sunrise. It is an East wind, and, blowing from the Desert of Arabia, is dry and scorching.

The next words οὕτω καὶ—μαρανθήσεται contain the application. “So [suddenly] perisheth the rich man in the midst of his pursuits or occupations.” A sense of πορεία occurring in Prov. ii. 8.

12. Here the subject at vv. 2 & 3, is resumed, and a gnome generalis is subjoined, as resulting from what was said at vv. 9 & 10. (v. 11. being a parenthetical illustration), which may be thus stated in the words of Mr. Holden: “As regards the trials arising from poverty and riches, the poor ought to rejoice in being spiritually exalted, and the rich in being spiritually made low. Therefore “blessed is the man,” whether he be rich or poor, that endureth temptation or trial,

13 Μηδεὶς πειραζόμενος λεγέτω, "Ὅτι "ἀπὸ [τοῦ] Θεοῦ πειράζομαι." ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς ἀπίραστός ἐστι κακῶν, πειράζει 14 δὲ αὐτὸς οὐδένα. ἕκαστος δὲ πειράζεται, ἀπὸ τῆς ἰδίας 15 ἐπιθυμίας ἐξελκόμενος καὶ δελεαζόμενος· εἴτα ἡ Ἐπιθυμία συλλαβοῦσα τίκτει Ἀμαρτίαν· ἡ δὲ Ἀμαρτία ἀποτελεσθεῖσα for," &c. Δόκιμος γεν. may be rendered, with the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg., "after he has been approved," viz. in consequence of such successful endurance. The term is agonistic, and illustrated by Kypke from the δοκιμασία of the Grecian ἀγῶνες. But it seems rather to refer to the δοκιμασία of metals, as in 1 Pet. i. 7. δοκιμίου ἡμῶν τῆς πίστεως—πολὺν τιμωτέρον χρυσίου—δοκιμαζόμενον. So Prov. xvii. 3. ὥσπερ δοκιμάζεται ἐν καμίνῳ ἄργυρος καὶ χρυσός, οὕτως ἐκλεκταὶ καρδίαι παρὰ Κυρίῳ.

13—18. Having spoken of the benefit of temptations, in the sense of trials, the Apostle now touches on temptations in the more usual sense,—namely, solicitations to sin; and guards his readers against the fatal error of ascribing such temptations to God, as if impelling men to sin. Such, he says, proceed not from God, but from the lusts of men, which, if yielded to, will bring death rather than a crown of life. And, therefore, though trials may be ascribed to God, yet temptations, in the bad sense, must not. Sin and death proceed from the lusts and wickedness of men; but God is not the Author of evil, but the Giver of all good.—(Benson.) Many probably excused their immorality, by pleading (as the corruption of our nature urges men of every age to do) the force of temptation, and seeking refuge in the doctrine of necessity: the Classical writers abound in such excuses. In opposition to this, the Apostle assures them, that as afflictions are not sent by God to make men worse, but better; so when trials of virtue generate temptations to sin, no man must dare to say, that he is tempted by God [thus making God the Author of sin]; for as God is not tried or tempted to moral evil (i. e. is not liable to evil, and consequently cannot be tempted to sin), so He of himself tempteth no man. A truth this recognized by the wiser heathens. See Homer Od. i. 32, and other passages cited by Thiele, who, among others, adduces a passage of Epicurus: Τὸ Θεῖον τε καὶ μακάριον, οὐτε αὐτὸ πράγματα ἔχει, οὐτε ἐτέροις παρέχει, where for πράγματα I conjecture ταραγματα. In this and the following verses Bp. Bull, Harm. Ap., p. 101, thinks there is an allusion to the Pharisaical dogma of fate (or a fatalis necessitas) by which the wicked too often sought an excuse for their sins.

—ἕκαστος δὲ—δελεάζ[.] "But whosoever is tempted and impelled to sin, is hurried away and enticed by his own lust," or evil desire; i. e., as Abp. Newc. explains, by his animal part, to which his rational part can always [with the aid of Divine grace. Ed.] be superior. "Every man's temptation (says Bp. Sanderson) if it take effect, is merely from his own lust. It is his own act and deed, and to be imputed to himself alone." A truth also recognised by wise Heathens. So Cicero—"Sua quemque fraus, suum facinus, suum scelus—de sanctitate ac mente deturbat." And to the same purpose is the following noble sentiment in Æschines contra Timarch., p. 27.

5. Μὴ γὰρ οἷσθε τὰς τῶν ἀδικημάτων ἀρχὰς ἀπὸ Θεῶν, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων ἀσελγείας γίνεσθαι—ἀλλ' αἱ προπετεῖς τοῦ σώματος ἡδοναί, καὶ τὸ μηδὲν ἱκανὸν ἡγεῖσθαι, ταῦτα πληροὶ τὰ λησθηρία, ταῦτ' εἰς τὸν ἐπακτροκέλητα ἐμβιβάζει ταῦτά ἐστιν ἐκάστω Πόινῃ. The term ἐξελκόμενος simply signifies to draw any one away from the right course; i. e. from virtue and his real good. So Xenoph. cited by Raphel.: Εἰ αὐτὸς ἐπιδευκνύει ἐαυτὸν μὴ ὑπὸ τῶν παραντικῶν ἡδονῶν ἐλκόμενον ἀπὸ τῶν ἀγαθῶν. Thus it corresponds to ἐξάγειν in the above passage. From what follows, however, it should seem that there is (as De Dieu, Mackn., and Pott, say) a metaphor taken from a harlot, who is, in the Tabula Cebetis, and elsewhere, represented as laying hold of men, and drawing them off to their company. In δελεαζόμενος there is a psycatory metaphor, added to complete and illustrate the idea. So Athen., p. 308. (cited by Wets.) ἀνελευσθεῖς δὲ οὐ δελεάζεται, οὔτε σαρκὶ οὔτε ἄλλῃ τινὶ ἐμψύχῳ. Δελεάζω is a term very often used, in this metaphorical sense, of pleasure, desire, hope, &c., agreeably to the saying of Plato, that men are caught with pleasure as fishes with a hook and bait. Thus Plutarch, in a strikingly similar passage, cited by Pott, says τὸ γλυκὺ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, ὥσπερ δέλεαρ ἐξέλκειν ἀνθρώπους. So Shakspeare, in his "Measure for Measure," (cited by Dr. Hales, who considers that passage as the finest comment on the present):

"O cunning Enemy! that to catch a Saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook: Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on to sin,
In loving Virtue! —
Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite,
To follow as it draws!"

Thus Lust is represented as a harlot, who entices men's understanding and will into its impure embraces, and from that conjunction conceives Sin: and sin being brought forth, it immediately acts; and is nourished by frequent repetition, till at length it gains such strength, that, in its turn, it begets Death, which destroys the sinner. This is the true genealogy of sin and death. Lust is the mother of Sin, and sin is the mother of Death, and the sinner the parent of both. Compare Rom. vii. 8—13; though the genealogy there is just the reverse. Hence may be emended and illustrated a corrupt, and most obscure, passage of Æschyl. Agam. 738—746, where, after saying that Ὑβρις begets, to the evil of men, a new progeny, he adds: Νεαρὰ φαοὺς κότον, Δαίμονα τὰν ἁμαχὸν Ἀνέρον θράσος μελαί-Νας μελά-θροισιν ἄτας, Εἰδομέναν τοκεῦσιν. I would there, with Dr. S. Butler, read νεαρὰ φύει κόρον, which is confirmed by a passage of Theogn. cited by Wakefield: τίκτει τοι κόρος ὕβριν. Also by Herodot. viii. 77, where is adduced, from an Oracle of Baucis, probably in the mind of Æschylus: δια Δίκη σβέσσει κρατερόν Κό-ἀποκύνει Θάνατον. Μὴ πλανᾶσθε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοί· 16

ρον, "Υβριος νίον. I would further observe, that the conjecture Κόρον is placed beyond doubt by Pind. Olymp. i. 90. Κόρω δ' ἔλειν (for ἔλαβεν) "Αταν. Now, as Ἀμαρτία and Ἐπιθυμία are here personified, so there Ἀτῆ is a personification of human folly, which hurries men into vice and misery. Another, but equally beautiful metaphor, is found in a kindred passage of Æschyl. Pers. 826. "Υβρις γὰρ ἐξανθοῦσ' ἐκάρπωσε στάχυν Ἀτῆς, ὅθεν πάγκαντον ἐξαμά θέρος. The above passages of Pindar and Æschylus were probably in the mind of Longinus de Subl. § 44, who, after pointing out φιλαργυρία and φιληδονία as the two great diseases of the world, goes on to say, that these, where they abide long in any one, soon νεοστοποιῶνται, καὶ ταχέως γενόμενα περὶ τεκνοποιῶν, ἀλαζμονίαν τε γεννώσι καὶ τύφον καὶ τρυφήν, and these soon breed ὕβριν καὶ παρανομίαν καὶ ἀναισχυρίαν. "Evil concupiscence (says a Jewish writer cited by A. Clarke) is, at the beginning, like the thread of a spider's web; afterwards it is like a cart-rope;"—is small in its commencement, but grows great, and acquires greater and greater strength by indulgence.

16, 17. These verses serve to confirm what was said at v. 13., ὁ γὰρ Θεός—οὐδένα; being also (as Calvin says) "argumentum a repugnantiis." For since God is the Author of all good, it were absurd to suppose Him to be the Author of evil; which would be contrary to His nature as God, i. e. the GOOD BEING. And the sentiment is introduced by a formula (similar to several in St. Paul, as 1 Cor. vi. 9. xv. 33. Gal. vi. 7.) soliciting serious attention to some momentous truth. The erroneous notion in question the Apostle refutes, by placing before them the contrary truth; q. d. "that so far from God being the author of moral evil, by tempting men to sin, He is the giver of every good gift, the great source of all good." With respect to the expression Πατὸς τῶν φώτων, it has been variously interpreted (see Recens. Synop.), some adopting a physical, others a metaphorical, sense. The former must, I conceive, be chiefly intended, with allusion to the sun, but also to the other celestial orbs: in the latter there is an allusion to the spiritual light, and consequent happiness, which is dispensed by God in the Gospel. So John i. 4. καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ἦν τὸ φῶς τῶν ἀνθρώπων. As to the next words, many eminent Expositors, from Strigel and Grot. down to Bp. Jebb, regard παραλλαγήν and τροπὴν ἀποσκίασμα as astronomical metaphors. And Mr. Valpy (from Hamm.) explains thus: "Παραλλαγή signifies astronomically the several positions in which the sun appears to us every day at the rising, in the meridian, and when he sets. So τροπή is applied not to the daily, but yearly, course of the sun, as it moves towards the Northern or Southern Tropic. And according to the different shadows which it casts, geographers have learned to divide the different people into "Ἀσκιοι, ἑτερόσκιοι, and περίσκιιοι. According to which is the word ἀποσκίασμα, casting of shadow, which joined with τροπή, turning, signifies the variation of the shadows, according to the various motions of the sun above mentioned." It is, however, truly observed by Benson, that this is not the astronomical sense of παραλλαγή, which means the sun's parallax; but that the above sense of παραλλαγή might be the popular one. And, indeed, I agree with Morus, that the astronomical metaphor is neither to be neglected, nor to be too much pressed upon. For, by the very disposition of the words, it is plain that the Apostle meant the image to be two-fold. And he shows the force intended to be expressed thereby, namely, alienation and obscuratation, meaning, "nec benignitatis nec sanctitatis mutationem cadere in Summum Numen. Constat sibi luce sua, i. e. perfectione." In the words of Mr. Scott, "the sun, the great natural light, which he has made, appears to us to have several changes and turnings, whence summer and winter, day and night, succeed each other; but in fact these appearances arise entirely from our varied situation respecting it. Thus God is immutably the Fountain of good, and of nothing else; all good is to be ascribed to him and sought from him; but the evil which we do or suffer, with all the changes which we experience, are from ourselves; the consequences of our having turned away from God, and of a change in our situation respecting him; and must not in any degree be ascribed to Him, who is unchangeably the same in his nature and perfection, without the least variation." But the most exact account of the nature of the metaphor may be seen in Bp. Bull's Harm. Evang. p. 102.

18. βουλευθεὶς—κτισμάτων.] This is meant to adduce a proof of the assertion πᾶσα δόσις, &c. Βουλευθεὶς is by some understood of God's good pleasure; by others, of his goodness. Both seem meant; and the best comment here is Eph. i. 5. κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν θελήματος αὐτοῦ. Bp. Bull in his Harm. Apost. thinks there is a reference to the Pharisaical doctrine of a fatal necessity; q. d. "Quod fideles et pii sumus, non evenit ex fatali aliqua necessitate, sed liberrimo Dei per Christum beneplacito: neque id debetur εὐκρασίᾳ isti temperamenti, quæ ἐξ εὐταξίας Cæli in nostrâ nobis natiuitate obtigit; sed ἀνακαινώσει καὶ παλιγγενεσίᾳ, novæ et cælesti illi civitati, quam per Evangelium effecit in nobis Spiritus divinus." In ἀπεκύνησεν ἡμᾶς λόγῳ ἀληθ. there is probably (as Benson and Mackn. suppose) a recurrence to the metaphor at v. 15., there being here given a kind of genealogy of righteousness; otherwise for ἀπεκ. we should have had the usual term ἀνεγένν., denoting our regeneration by the Gospel. See 1 Pet. i. 3, 23. Thus the sense is analogous to the filiation at Gal. iii. 26. John i. 12. sq., the being converted to Christianity. 'Ημᾶς means "us Jews," as appears from the ἀπαρχήν; which, though its sense has been variously explained, can, in this context, only mean the first Christian converts; a sense found in Rom. xvi. 5. ὅς ἐστιν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀσίας εἰς Χριστόν, Rev. xi. 16. 1 Cor. xvi. 15. ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας. As the Jews were the peculiar people of God, were chosen as instruments for preserving the true religion, and were primarily called to embrace the Gospel, they might very well be called the ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κτισμάτων.

19, 20. ὥστε.] An inference is here drawn, by way of admonition; though Expositors are not agreed whether it respects the words immediately preceding, or others farther back. It should seem to respect the whole of what has been said, concerning the dealings of God with men, in the work of salvation, vv. 5. 12. 13. 17, 18.: q. d. "Since God is the liberal giver of wisdom and every good and perfect gift, the Father of lights, unchangeable in his attributes, who tempteth no man, but of his free benignity hath begotten us again by the Gospel to be the first fruits of his creatures, and hath promised a crown of life to those who love and obey him—therefore, such being the case, let every one, &c." The general admonition here given, ἔστω πᾶς—λαλῆσαι (together with another just after subjoined, γίνεσθε ποιηταὶ λόγου, καὶ μὴ μόνον ἀκροαταί) forms as it were a text on which the Apostle dwells (with the exception of a digression at ii. 1—13., censuring the undue respect of persons in religious assemblies) up to iv. 12. The substance of what is contained in these general admonitions is,—that they should feel alacrity in receiving the word of truth, the GOSPEL, and in hearing it, should be prompt to listen, but slow to speak dogmatically or dictatorially, setting up for teachers, or speaking to indulge their own vanity. Also, that they should not give way to a hot-headed controversial spirit, impatient of contradiction, and apt to break out into invectives against opposers of what they thought the truth. Moreover, that they should not rest in hearing only, but so learn the Gospel as to put in practice its instructions.

The words of v. 21. διὸ ἀποθήμενοι—ψυχὰς ὑμῶν seem to be a resumption and completion of the admonition by inference at v. 19.; q. d. "This being the case, let every one, laying aside all that is evil, &c., receive, and, being swift to hear, receive with meekness," &c. They are first to "cease to do evil," to lay aside all the iniquities of their former life (seeking, in the words of 2 Pet. i. 9., καθαρίζεσθαι τῶν πάλαι ἀμαρτιῶν); then "to learn to do well;" to embrace the truth with alacrity, hear and learn its doctrines with docility, and finally to put in practice whatsoever they hear and learn. It should seem that the clause ἀποθήμενοι—κακίας is taken out of its natural order, and placed where it is, in order to hint, that it is from the remains of unsubdued corruption, that some do not receive the Gospel with meekness. The admonition ἐν πραύτητι—λόγου is meant to be explanatory of the admonitions ἔστω βραδύς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι, βραδύς εἰς ὀργήν; and in ὀργή γάρ—κατεργάζεται we have a brief, and, as it were, parenthetical illustration of the βραδύς εἰς ὀργήν; though that, as well as the other heads of admonition, is more fully illustrated further on; the writer commencing with the last, probably as lying nearest.

Such seems to be the general plan and scope of this passage: though some difference of opinion as to the terms, exists among Expositors. On which see Recens. Synop. A few illustrations of the phraseology must here suffice. The ταχύς εἰς τὸ ἀκ. was probably formed on Eccles. v. 11. γίνου ταχύς ἐν ἀκροάσει. Λαλῆσαι is to be understood not only of conversation, but of discussion, and, in a certain sense, teaching. The sense of ὀργήν above assigned, is required by the context, and found in the best writers, especially Thucyd. The reason given for the admonition is simply, that such a spirit is no proper means of promoting the cause of true religion; whose purpose is to make them holy here and happy hereafter. The terms ῥυπαρίαν and περισσεῖαν κακίας, if they be referred to the words immediately preceding, will denote ill language, and excessive censoriousness and morosity: a view of the sense adopted by many recent Expositors, and supported by Col. iii. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 1. And such may be the meaning; but there seems no sufficient reason to abandon the interpretation of the ancients, by which ῥυπ. and κακ. are understood to designate vice in general: which is confirmed by 1 Pet. iii. 21. οὐ σαρκὸς ἀπόθεσις ῥύπου, ἀλλὰ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς ἐπερωτημα. And 1 Cor. v. 8. ἐν ζύμῃ κακίας καὶ πονηρίας. Acts viii. 22. 1 Pet. ii. 16. 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Ρυπ. refers to vice of the body, and κακίαν to that of the mind and heart;—namely, a bitter spirit, "envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness." This view I find confirmed by the opinion of Bp. Sanders. 7th Serm. ad Pop. p. 309. which see. It is also supported by a passage of 2 Cor. vii. 1. the best comment on the present. Where the παντός and ἐπιτελ. there explain the κακίας here.

The Gospel is here called λόγος ἔμφυτος agreeably to that figure, by which its effects on the heart are compared to seed sown, and plants planted in the ground; with allusion to that doctrine of it,—that virtue and holiness are not natural to the human heart, but require to be implanted there by the Gospel, and nurtured by Divine grace. This seems to have been in the mind of the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who freely renders ἐμφυτον "sown into our nature." This thought I find imitated by Barnabas Epist. Ch. ix. οἶδεν, ὁ τὴν ἐμφυτον ὠρεῖαν τῆς διδαχῆς ἐν ὑμῖν. Moreover, the Apostle represents the Gospel as an object of awfully momentous concern, inasmuch as it is that alone which can save their souls.

With the admonition καὶ μὴ μόνον ἀκροαταί is intimated in παραλογιζ. ἑαυτούς, a warning; denoting that by so doing they will only deceive themselves ("perverting the word," says Bp. Jebb, "into a moral opiate"), and will not attain the expected salvation.

23—25. Here the Apostle illustrates the case of the unfruitful hearer by a popular comparison (and therefore not to be too rigorously interpreted as if every one who sees his face in a glass forgets when he goes away) presenting a most apt emblem of the forgetful hearer. The meaning of the words (as Hamm. explains) is this, "that the word of God is a glass, reflecting to a man the portraiture of himself, ὁποῖός ἐστι, whether there be any thing amiss in him; and he that hears the word of God and doeth it not, is as if a man should look upon and contemplate his face in a looking-glass, and no more. As for any use or effect of this looking, he beheld and went away, and presently forgot. When he has seen what blemishes are to be corrected, to be reformed in him, he contents himself with having seen them, thinks no more of them, and forgets to amend them." This, as Abp. Newc. remarks, "resembles the carelessness of those who see, in the mirror of the Gospel, that manner of men they ought to be, without actually becoming such." Πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως is, as Rosenm. says, for πρὸς γνήσιον (real, natural), τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ προσώπου ὁμοίαν of Artemid. On. ii. 7. κατοπτρίζεσθαι δὲ καὶ ὁρᾶν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ εἰκόνα ὁμοίαν ἐν κατόπτρῳ ἀγαθόν.

25. Here the Apostle makes the effect the stronger, by contrasting with the case of the inattentive, that of the attentive hearer; and to κατανοοῦντι (which term only denotes the act of beholding, i. e. with no marked attention) is opposed παρακύβας: which word, as it primarily signifies "to stoop down, for the purpose of looking at," (see Luke xxiv. 12. John xx. 5, 11.) sometimes, as here, denotes simply "to look at, as in a glass, attentively." See 1 Pet. i. 12. εἰς ἃ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἄγγελοι παρακύβαι. Here there is an accommodation to the same metaphor (of a looking-glass) as in the foregoing sentence. Νόμον τέλ. τ. τῆς ἐλευθ., "the perfect law, that of liberty." What this is, Expositors are not agreed; but the expression probably means the perfect law of revelation in the Gospel, being such in comparison with the law of Moses, and truly styled the law of liberty, in various respects: 1. as freeing them from the yoke of the Mosaic law; 2. as liberating them from the bondage of sin, and the curse of the broken law, and bringing them, in the words of St. Paul, Rom. viii. 21. ἀπὸ τῆς δουλείας τῆς φθορᾶς εἰς τὴν ἐλευθερίαν τῆς δόξης τῶν τέκνων τοῦ Θεοῦ. In the comparison it is implied, that this law is a mirror into which the Christian may look, to judge of his true spiritual character. The term παραμείνας denotes fixedness and permanency of attention. In the words following, ἐπιλησμονῆς is a Genitive subst. for adjective, ἐπιλήσμων. Ποιητὴς ἔργου scil. τοῦ νόμου, "of the work enjoined by the law." Ἐν τῇ ποιήσει αὐτοῦ, scil. τοῦ νόμου, "in his performing [of the law]."

26. The Apostle here brings the admonition close home to their bosoms; and, with reference to some among the persons he is addressing, puts the case of one who δοκεῖ θρησκός εἶναι, i. e. has the reputation of piety, and, as appears from what follows, "thinketh himself," but mistakenly, "to be pious;" and who, moreover, doth not bridle his tongue, is not βραδὺς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι καὶ εἰς ὀργήν. That man's religion, it is said, is vain and inefficacious, and will profit him nothing. On the use here of δοκεῖ, see my Note on Thucyd. i. 79. ἀνὴρ συνεπὲς δοκῶν εἶναι. Θρησκός is a rare word, only found elsewhere in Hesych. Ἀπατῶν καρδίαν is synonymous with the παραλογ. ἑαυτούς at v. 22. Of the metaphor in χαλιναγ. several examples are adduced by Wets..

27. The Apostle, as Paley well remarks, is here describing religion, not in its principle, but in its effects. Having declared what religion is not, the Apostle now points out what it is. This, however (as Carpz. and Grot. observe) is not to be taken as a description of the whole of religion, but an illustration of its nature, by a reference to some of its principal duties, beneficence and moral purity. "True religion (says Dr. Malby, in an eloquent Sermon on this text) must be practical, uniting piety with benevolence: it is to do good, and to be good; and what may not be included in this definition, is not essential to, nay, may be repugnant to, the spirit of true religion." Παρὰ Θεῷ καὶ Π. should be rendered, "before God, even the Father." So the Pesch. Syr. "coram Deo Patre." On ἐπισκ., see Note on Matt. xxv. 36. Ἀμείαντος is added to καθαρὸς, both to strengthen the sense, and to correspond to the ἀσπίλον in the next clause. Ἐαυτὸν should be rendered "oneself." On which idiom see Matth. and Buttm. Gr. Gr.

II. The connection is by Pott supposed to be with what immediately precedes, by a sort of illustration à contrario. But I am persuaded that it is rather with the subject of vv. 22—27, namely, the necessity of doing, and not merely hearing or believing the Gospel; implying the great truth, that the external part of religion is fruitless, when men live in the neglect of its moral duties. Indeed, the scope of this whole Chapter seems to be that of further inculcating what was before said, on the necessity of doing, as well as believing or professing. This the Apostle presses on their attention, by pointing out the breach of the duty in their general conduct, even when engaged in the performance of religious services: the poor being, in the place of worship, treated with contumely, and elsewhere suffered to starve, and their miseries only visited with faint good wishes. Accordingly, the first part of this Chapter (v. 1—13.) is occupied in animadverting on their breach of the most important of the works of the law, Christian love, or charity in its extensive sense. This serves to introduce, in the second part (v. 14. fin.), a serious warning against an error prevalent in that age (almost general amongst the Jews, and which also might lead to the neglect of other moral duties, as well as charity), namely, that the speculative belief of the doctrines of the Gospel was sufficient to save them, however deficient they might be in those moral works which it enjoins. He then proceeds to show the emptiness of such faith, and consequently its inadequacy to salvation, by some plain and familiar examples, tending to evince (as a supplement to the foregoing exhortation to be doers of the word) that moral actions are the only sure evidence of a true and well principled faith, and that where these do not exist, all else is valueless. Hence it is clear that the μὴ is not (as some suppose) interrogative, but prohibitive. And notwithstanding the variety of interpretations (see Poole, Wolf, and Pott), the true sense of μὴ ἐν προσωπολ., &c. seems to be:

"Do not so hold the faith of Christ, as to show respect of persons." Τῆς δόξης may be construed (as some maintain it should) with τὴν πίστιν; but it more naturally connects with τοῦ Κυρίου; which latter method is supported by the authority of the ancient Versions. Thus it is, by Hebraism, put for ἐνδόξου, as 1 Cor. ii. 8, where see Note. The ἐν is for σύν, as often. This plural use of προσωπολ. is very rare, perhaps no where else occurring, inasmuch that one might suspect the C to have arisen from the ρ following; and, indeed, a few MSS. have it not. But probably that was only ex emendatione; and the common reading is defended by 2 Pet. iii. 11. ἐν ἀγίαις ἀναστροφαῖς καὶ εὐσεβείαις, and Col. iii. 22. μὴ ἐν ὀφθαλμοδουλείαις. Moreover, as Hottinger here observes, the plural use of abstract substantives is found in good writers, namely, "ubi non tam notio generalis, quam res vel eventa singularia significantur."

2. ἐὰν γὰρ εἰσέλθῃ.] This is intended to illustrate by example what was meant by ἐν προσ. ἐξ. τὴν πίστιν. Τὴν συναγωγὴν is taken by several Commentators (as Hamm., Whitby, Wells, and Mackn.) to denote, not your place of worship, but "your judicial assemblies;" such being, as they say, held in the places of worship, as was the case with the Jews. This interpretation, they think, is required by vv. 4, 6, 9. But there is not a shadow of authority for assigning such a sense; and the above passages do not make it necessary, since the sense in question may be included, if συναγωγὴν be, as it may, understood of a place of assembly, whether for worship, or for judicial purposes. On either of these occasions προσωποληψία would be alike improper. That συναγωγὴ was sometimes used to denote a Christian place of worship were of itself very probable, and is certain, not only from the present passage, but also from Heb. x. 25. Indeed, the term would, from its convenience, be likely to be retained, with other similar ones, by the Jewish Christians. The singular, it may be observed, is used generically for the plural. Χρυσοδακτύλιος denotes "one who wears rings on his fingers," as the rich generally did. The word is said to occur no where else. It is, however, formed analogically, and was probably not coined, as has been supposed, by St. James; but may be regarded as one of the many thousands of words of the common dialect, not preserved in the remains of antiquity which have come down to us. The Commentators compare Luke xv. 22. and Lucian Timon. πόρφυροι καὶ χρυσόχειρες περιέρχονται, and might have added Aristoph. Conc. 632. τῶν σεμνοτέρων—καὶ τῶν σφραγίδας (seal rings) ἐχόντων.

struction and sense of this passage a difference of opinion exists. That the sentence is interrogative, seems pretty certain; for taken declaratively, the sense is frigid and forced. It is true that the commencing καὶ is adverse to this, and for that reason was cancelled by the early Critics; but it may very well be rendered now, or then, as in Luke x. 29. καὶ τίς ἐστὶ μου πλησίον, 1 Cor. v. 2. 2 Cor. ii. 2. and often in καὶ πῶς; it is not so clear what is the sense of διεκρ. That it must be taken actively, is generally agreed; but the sense is variously assigned. Some modern Commentators (and recently Pott and others) render “we are in doubt or hesitation;” but there is no reason to desert that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, “are ye not partial?” i. e. “do ye not make partial distinctions?” Ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, for ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν, as Mark xi. 23. The partiality is shown by προσωποληψία. In so doing, he adds [οὐκ] ἐγένεσθε κριταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν; this is explanatory of the foregoing, and (the Genitive being one not of object, but attributive, by Hebraism) the sense is, “are ye not judges, who form your judgments on erroneous reasonings and false estimates, viz. of any one's worth by his outward appearance.”

5—7. To further evince the injustice of such partiality, the Apostle shows, that the class of persons whom they despise are especially objects of God's favour; while they, whom they so prefer, are those by whom Christians are especially oppressed. (Pott.) A contrast is drawn between the manner in which the poor are treated by God, and by the rich of their fellow-creatures. By the latter they are treated with disregard and contempt; by the former they are chosen to be heirs of salvation. This choice, however, and the favour which it implies, is to be understood only as resulting from the better disposition to the Gospel evinced by the persons in question, from their being not entangled in the temptations which beset the rich; whence the Gospel was said to be preached especially to the poor. Comp. 1 Cor. i. 26—28. Of the words πλουσίους ἐν πίστει, &c. the construction is somewhat disputed. Most Expositors supply ὥστε εἶναι. But thus a sense arises which was not, it should seem, intended by the Apostle. It is better, with others, to suppose an ellipsis of ὅταν; or, which comes to the same thing, regard πλουσίους as in apposition with πτωχοῦς. The Apostle, I conceive, intends to hint at the grounds of the favour and preference just adverted to; and in πτωχοῦς—ἐν πίστει there seems to be a latent contrast, for “poor, indeed, in the treasures of this world, but rich in those of faith.”

6. ὧς ὑμεῖς δὲ ἦτ. τ. πτ.] This clause ought to have been thrown to v. 5, since there seems to be a contrast further drawn between God and the persons here addressed, as to the treatment of the poor. Render, with Wakefield: “Whereas, ye treat the poor man with disdain,” viz. by thus giving him no seat, or thrusting him to the lowest.

—οὐχ οἱ πλούσιοι—ὑμᾶς;] Here, as Rosenm. and Pott observe, we have another argument against the undue and indecorous partiality in question,—namely, that the persons to whom it is shown are the least worthy of it. Render: “Are not the rich those who lord it over you? are not they the persons who drag you into the courts of justice? are not they the persons who blaspheme the reverend and honoured name [of the Redeemer] pronounced over you [at baptism]?” namely, by calling him impostor. The persons in question were unbelievers, both Jews and Gentiles.

8—15. Here it is shown, that this “respect of persons” involves a violation of the Law (which to those who, like Jews or Judaizers, clung to the Law, would be an argument of great weight), the Apostle urging what is not only a positive injunction of that Law, but what forms a fundamental principle of all Divine law, and consequently extending to the Gospel likewise. For the best Expositors are agreed that βασιλικός, as it often denotes what is principal, or eminently good and excellent, so is here applied to this maxim, as being what Christ calls the ἐντολὴ πρώτη καὶ μεγάλη, and St. Paul the πλήρωμα τοῦ νόμου; with reference to the superior obligation and pre-eminence of this precept, as governing all the other duties to our neighbour. Thus Plato cited by Wets. says τὸ μὲν ὀρθὸν νόμος ἐστὶ βασιλικός.

9. ἐλεγχόμενοι—παραβάται] “being convicted (i. e. inasmuch as ye are convicted) by the law as transgressors.” For any one may be said to be convicted by a law, when he acts contrary to its injunctions. By νόμον is meant the law just mentioned, or such others as more specially forbid respect of persons, as Levit. xix. 15.

10. ὅστις γὰρ—ἐνοχος.] The Apostle here goes yet further, affirming that he, who thus offends against the particular law in question, will be condemned as a transgressor of the Divine law in general, and thereby be obnoxious to the punishment of transgression; for he who keepeth, or endeavours to keep, the whole of the law, except in one point, wherein he deliberately, presumptuously, and habitually offends, is adjudged to punishment as a transgressor of the law, quite as much as if he had broken all its precepts. It is proper to make the above limitations, since they are plainly implied by the argument. Now this was an admitted principle of the Law of Moses, as is clear both from the Scriptures and the Rabbinical writers; and this, as St. James hints, is applicable to the law of the Gospel. The above view I find supported by an admirable illustration of the sense of this verse in Bp. Bull's Examen, where he remarks, “ex loci contextu et ratione ipsa manifestum est, Jacobum loqui non nisi de ejusmodi peccatis, quibus quis Legem sciens prudens transgreditur. Loquitur manifestè de iis peccatis, quæ contra finem Legislatoris fiunt. Summa est: eum, qui in uno offenderit, esse omnium reum, quia contra Charitatem facit, ex qua tota Lex pendet, et Prophetæ. Nam, inquit, merito fit omnium reus, qui contra illam facit, ex qua pendit omnia.” Ἐνοχος π., for ἑνοχος κρίματι π., i. e. he is amenable to condemnation as a breaker of the body of the law, and his punishment will be in proportion to his offence. On the proper force of ἑνοχος, see Note at Matt. xxvi. 66. 1 Cor. xi. 27. The next verse is explanatory, and popularly illustrative of what was said in the preceding; it also suggests the reason of the thing, as just mentioned. Παραβάτης νόμου here, from the nature of the reasoning continued from the preceding verse, may, as Middl. thinks, mean “Thou art a violator of that morality, which the whole and every part of the law was designed to promote.” For a full understanding, however, of this controverted subject, the reader is referred to two admirable Sermons on the present text by Bp. Porteus.

12, 13. These verses contain a general admonition, founded on the foregoing reasonings, (though διὸ is omitted per asyndeton) followed up by a particular denunciation, by way of exemplification. The sense of the whole is, however, so briefly expressed, as to be obscure. It should seem that there is an emphasis to be laid on κρίνεσθαι; it being shown (as Bp. Middl. observes) that the παραβάτης νόμου does not act as one who shall be judged by the Law of liberty. The sense appears to be that assigned by Dr. Burton in the following paraphrase: “Do not be so fond of talking of your law of liberty, as if you might act as you pleased; but rather remember, that you will be judged by this law of liberty. For instance, if you have not shown mercy, you will find none at the day of judgment: but the merciful man has nothing to fear on that score at the day of judgment.” We might add, that he has nothing to fear in this; for even the justest private avengement carries with it a sting, inasmuch that Pythagoras (as we find from Diogenes Laert. i. l. 76.) well said, Συγγνώμη μετανοίας κρίσιν. This νόμος ἐλευθ. is that spoken of supra i. 25. where see Note. And the διὰ νόμον is for κατὰ νόμον. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, q. d. “[And remember how you exercise judgment on earth]; for,” &c. The clauses ἡ κρίσις—ἔλεος and κατακαυχᾶται ἔλεος κρίσεως have the air of an adage; and the latter is a somewhat bolder expression, in which it is easier to perceive the general sense intended, than to show how it arises from the words. Being, I apprehend, an adage, and worded in the strong manner that such often are, it must not be strained in the interpretation, nor its sense eked out by such unauthorized additions as Benson and Doddr. introduce into their paraphrases. Its full sense is that expressed by Vater, “non solum latatur, sed confidenter expectat κρίσιν” (a use of κατα occurring in Thucyd. iii. 83.); though it must be limited in the present application, and supposed to mean, “whereas pity shown to others, as it were, disarms judgment.” Καὶ before κατακαυχ. is absent from many MSS., Versions, and early Editions; and probably has no place, considering that the asyndeton is frequent in this Epistle.

14—26. The Apostle now returns to the subject treated of at i. 22—27., that they should be doers of the word, and not hearers only; and that all but practical religion is vain and ineffectual for salvation. And here he touches on a kindred subject,—the error of those who (falling into the Jewish notion, that the profession of a covenanted religion was sufficient, without suitable practice, and perverting the doctrine of justification by faith) maintained, that faith alone without works would avail for salvation. The Apostle supposes a case of one professing to have faith, but at the same time being destitute of works; and shows that this faith will be utterly unavailable for salvation; for the interrogations here used are equivalent to a strong negation. At vv. 15, 16, he illustrates this inutility by a familiar comparison, and one which glanced at the very failure in question. In ὑπάγετε ἐν εἰρήῃ καὶ Σεραφείμ καὶ χορτ. we have a sort of committing them to the Divine protection, similar to the Homeric Odys. ξ. 57. πρὸς γὰρ Διὸς εἰσιν ἅπαντες ἔπειτοί τε πτωχοὶ τε. and so in Menander ap. Stob. Serm. p. 512. Gesn. Ἀεὶ νομίζοντο οἱ πέννυτες τῶν Θεῶν. q. d. "as good words, even if accompanied by good will, do not profit the distressed; so neither does faith without works benefit the believer." Νεκρά ἐστὶ κατ' ἑαυτήν, "is of itself dead and inefficacious," i. e. (as Abp. Newc. explains) is without its natural effect; resembling good words to the poor unattended with actual relief.

18. ἀλλ' ἐρεῖ τις—μου.] There are few passages that, with the appearance of plainness, have more perplexed Expositors than this; as will be seen by consulting Poole, Wolf, and Pott. That it perplexed the ancients, and called forth the arts of the Emendatores, we may infer from the various readings, especially that remarkable one by which, instead of the Vulg. ἐκ (in the first place) 14 MSS. and most of the ancient Versions have χωρὶς; where one must be an alteration of the other. The former reading has been adopted by almost all Critics, and edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Pott, Vater, and Tittm. Thus the Apostle is supposed to prove the necessity of good works, by showing the impossibility of evincing the existence of faith without them; q. d. (ironically) "Show me now the excellence of thy faith (if thou canst) without works." I will not believe that the faith of which thou boastest, is worthy of the name, unless thou show it me in re, and by thy deeds. This, however, is passing over the difficulty in κἀγὼ ἔργα ἔχω. Besides, it is far more likely that ἐκ should have been altered to χωρὶς than χωρὶς to ἐκ (for χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων occurs at v. 20.), and χωρὶς is as inferior in internal as in external testimony, for it is impossible to conceive how so plain a reading as χωρὶς could ever be altered; and it could not accidentally be changed into ἐκ. Nor are we warranted in rejecting so strongly attested a reading as ἐκ, unless it could be shown to yield either no sense, or one utterly unsuitable; which is not the case. But the sense is not only good in itself, but perfectly suitable to the context, full as much so as χωρὶς. Indeed, it is, as Hottinger observes, "concinrior et gravior; nequaquam enim χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων acrius urget adversarium, et tanquam aculeis pungit absona loquentem." That ἐκ yields an excellent and suitable sense, will appear from the following statement of the sense of the passage by Dr. Mill: "Dixerit pius velleque Christianus aliquis, homini inani isti qui ex nuda fidei professione, neglecto pietatis studio, se salutem consecuturum arbitratur: Age vero, tu fidem habes, eamque mirè jactitas; ego, de fide mea tacens, opera habeo; Fideique (quam crepas) legem ipsam vitam moribus exprimo. Ostende mihi fidem tuam ex factis tuis; Ex factis, inquam; neque enim aliàs norim te credere. Verum hoc non potes; opera non habes, quæ ostendas. Ego vero interim ex operibus meis nullo negotio fidem meam indicabo. Opera ipsa quæ dico, sunt opera Fidei; produntque luculentè satis, etiam me tacente, fontem ipsum ex quo profluunt." Finally, the words are excellently paraphrased by Thiele as follows: "Imo vero talí homini quisvis facíle objiciet; tu igitur fidem habes, ego vero opera habeo; jam quæso monstres mihi fidem tuam, si potes, nimirum ex operibus tuis, ego vero facillimè monstrare tibi potero ex operibus meis meam etiam fidem."

19. σὺ πιστεύεις—φρίσσουσι.] This is an illustration of the position at v. 17. The belief here meant is a speculative and inoperative belief, and involuntary, like that of the demons; as in the case of their confessing Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of God, Luke iv. 41. The εἰς Θεὸς has reference to the doctrine of the Unity of God, held both by the Jews and the heterodox Christians here spoken of.

20. The Apostle proceeds to confirm the foregoing assertion from Scripture, introducing a repetition of the assertion with θέλεις γνῶναι; as being a less dogmatical mode of expression than "know." Κενέ, "foolish," literally, empty-headed. An address similar to several of our Lord and of St. Paul, when the truth endeavoured to be brought home to the conviction is so obvious, as scarcely to require the proof, and also used in cases of grave and just reprehension. "Here (says Dr. South, Serm. iii. 148.) St. James speaks as good Philosophy as Divinity: every action being the most lively portraiture and impartial expression of its efficient principle, as the complexion is the best comment on the constitution."

21. In proof and illustration of the foregoing assertion, of the necessity of good works to a true justifying faith, the Apostle adduces the examples of Abraham and Rahab. Ἀνεύγκας is well rendered by Prof. Scholefield, "in offering up," i. e. in being ready to offer him up; for it is always regarded in Scripture as a real sacrifice. Abraham's justification by faith had, indeed, taken place long before this offering up of his son, and, as Prof. Scholefield observes, "all that this action did towards it, was supplying the evidence of the nature of the faith by which he was justified." A complete refutation of the discrepancy which at first seems to subsist between St. James and St. Paul on faith and works, may be seen in Bp. Bull's incomparable Harmonia Apostolica. "St. James (says Dr. Burton) would not have denied, that Abraham's faith was counted to him for righteousness: but he means to say, that if his faith was disputed, it may be proved by works which he did afterwards. "Was not the faith, which was counted to Abraham for righteousness, proved subsequently by offering his son?" Abraham offered up his son, because he had faith in the promise, which God had given before his birth, Hebr. xi. 17.

22. ἡ πίστις σ. τ. ἔ. α.] "his faith wrought with his works; i. e. was subservient to the production of them. So the Pesch. Syr., "fides ejus auxilio fuit operibus suis." This use of συνεργεῖν is rare, but examples are adduced from Philo. Καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἔργων—ἐτέλ., "and by works his faith was rendered complete," made available to justification by actual obedience.

23. ἐπληρώθη] i. e., as Abp. Newc. explains, "was thus more fully and remarkably verified," though it was equally true at the time it was spoken. St. Paul, indeed, cites the same passage at Rom. iv. 3, to prove that the man is justified without the works of the law; but there is, in fact, no discrepancy,—both Apostles (as Mr. Holden says) meaning the same thing, that a man is justified by that faith alone which worketh by love. See Abp. Newc. Ἐκλήθη, "he was regarded," accounted as.

24. Here we have the conclusion; which may be paraphrased with Dr. Burton: "Ye see, therefore, that works may contribute to show a man's justification, and the act of faith is not the only thing which proves it."

25, 26. ἡ πόρνη.] On the sense of this term see Note at Heb. xi. 31. Ὑποδ., "by having received into her house." Ἐκβαλ., "by having put them forth," simply sent them away. A sense occurring in Matt. ix. 25. Ἐτέρα ὁδῷ, i. e. by a different way from that by which they entered,—namely, by the wall. It is meant, that she was justified in the same way as was Abraham,—namely, by works proceeding from faith, also by faith made perfect by works. The same conclusion, therefore, as that at v. 24, is here implied, (and indeed included in a suppressed clause to which the γὰρ refers,) as appears from the striking similitude employed to enforce it,—namely, that as a lifeless corpse is not a man, so the faith which does not produce good works, is only the dead carcass of faith, and not the living and genuine Christian faith. It is not vital, and therefore fails of leading to salvation.

III. On the connection here much has been written, but little determined: and indeed some have thought there is none. I see not why the Chapter may not have been intended to further develop the injunction at i. 19, where the Apostle treats of the pruritus dicendi. And such I have satisfaction in finding to be the opinion of the learned Thiele, (Prof. Extraord. of Divinity at Leipzig,) in his late elaborate Edition of this Epistle; whose words are these: "Quod i. 19, breviter notaverat, uberius jam tractat. A pruritu dicendi, qui factorum negligenter veræ virtutis tantopere detraheret, traducitur castigatio ad pruritus dicendi qui inde fere existeret. Factis potissimum opus est: itaque vel in largâ docendi corrigendique copiâ virtute potius aliis exemplo sint, quam in doctorum munera se ingerant! Cf. Act. xv. 24."

1. μὴ πολλοὶ διδ. γίν. This seems to be a popular form of expression for "Do not abound in teachers, let there not be a πολυδιδασκαλία." By teachers we are not so much to understand ministers, as private instructors in religion, and censors of the morals of the people. In adducing a reason why they should avoid this evil, the Apostle spares their feelings, and only adverts to a motive of interest, εἰδότες—ληψόμεθα, "knowing that we [who are teachers] will be called to a stricter account than others, [and, if found wanting, severer punishment]." Such appears to be the full sense of this briefly worded clause. In the next, the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. "[And reason have we to fear we may be found deficient;] for in many respects we all err." So Crates ap. Diog. Laert. vi. 89. ἐλεγε τε ἀδύνατον εἶναι ἀδιάπτωτον εὐρεῖν, ἀλλ' ὥσπερ ἐν ροιᾷ, καὶ σαπρὸν τινα κόκκον εἶναι. Perhaps, too, it is implied, as Rosenm. suggests, that

“as all persons are liable to commit faults, so they who take upon themselves the office of teaching, make their liability the greater.”

In the next words the Apostle enforces the foregoing precept, from the difficulty of governing the tongue; adverting to one especial error into which persons who set up for teachers mostly run,—namely, that of too great vehemence and bitterness of censure. If any one, it is said, offend not in speech, he is [comparatively] a perfect man; able, we may presume, [if he can govern his tongue] to hold in subjection the other members of the body likewise; i. e. all his appetites and passions; and “thereby, as Benson observes, he will be best able to instruct the ignorant, and rebuke the guilty.” See an admirable Discourse on this text by Dr. Barrow, vol. i. p. 181, sqq.

3, 4. Here we have two similitudes whereby to illustrate the benefits of bridling, and the evils of leaving the tongue unbridled; viz. (in the words of Mr. Holden) that “as we manage the most untractable horses by bridles, v. 3, and steer ships even in the midst of storms by means of a small helm, v. 4, so the tongue is a little member,—yet boasting great things, v. 5. That such is its power is further shown at vv. 6—10, from which it follows, that he who is able to govern his tongue, is able to govern his bodily passions.” The general sense, as Rosenmuller observes, is, that “little things effect great objects.”

—μετάγομεν] “we bring about.” The same word, Bp. Jebb observes, is applied to each of the two images; since the bringing about a horse by turning the bridle is much like bringing about the ship by turning the helm. I would compare a similar passage of Arist. Quæst. Mech. v. μεγέθη πλοίων (great bulks of ships) κινεῖται ὑπὸ μικροῦ οἰάκος. I would observe, that the word πηδάλιον is derived from πῆδον, an oar: for the rudder was originally only a large oar; which, indeed, is still the case among the natives of the South Sea Islands. The ὁρμὴ is not well translated force. Render, with the Pesch. Syr., impetus, will, in which sense the word is often used in the later Historians.

5. οὕτω καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα, &c.] The sense is: “[As ships are turned about with a comparatively small implement,] so also the tongue, though a little member compared with the rest of the body, may boast of effecting great things [good or evil, according to its use, or abuse].” I would here compare Diog. Laert. i. 105. ἐρωτηθεὶς τί ἐστὶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἀγαθόν τε καὶ φαῦλον; ἔφη· γλῶσσα. In μεγαλ. there is a sensus præ-

nans, effecting being implied; inasmuch that Bp. Jebb renders, “worketh mightily;” observing that the smallness of the instrument is the association-link in the comparison.

—ὀλίγον—ἀνάπτει.] The foregoing antithesis, Bp. Jebb thinks, “suggested the notion of a spark of fire; the smallest of visible agents, yet productive of effects the most widely-wasting and terrific.” It is not agreed whether ὕλην signifies materiam, or silvam. The former sense may be confirmed from Thucyd. ii. 75, where the word signifies a pile of faggots; but the latter is equally well supported; and, considering the nature of the context, it deserves the preference, as presenting the grandeur image. Much to the present purpose is a passage of Pindar Pyth. iii. 64—9. καὶ γειτόνων Πολλοὶ ἐπαῦρον, ἅμα δ' ἔφθαρυν, πολλὰν τ' ὄρει πῦρ ἐξ ἐνὸς Σπέρματος ἐνθορόν ἀίστωσεν ὕλην. Also of Eurip. Iro Frag. vi. 2. μικροῦ γὰρ ἐκ λαμπτήρος Ἰδαίου λέπας πρήσειε ἄν τις.

6. καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα—ἀδικίας.] On the sense of this passage much difference of opinion exists. The difficulty turns upon the κόσμος, which some would alter; while by others various senses are assigned to it. Elsn., Semler, Storr, and Wakefield render it the adorners, or varnisher; which might, indeed, be supported from Thucyd. iii. 67. ἔργον ἀμαρτανόμενον λόγῳ ἐπεσι κοσμηθέντες προκαλύμματα γίνονται. But not to mention other objections, this sense does not suit well with the context, which rather requires the one commonly assigned. It is justly remarked by Bp. Jebb, that “the image of fire, thus elicited, is immediately applied to the tongue; while the image of vastness naturally induces a mention of the world.” Thus the expression may denote congeries, as Pott explains, citing Prov. xvii. 6. and other examples of this sense. Thus the Article ἡ is not, as some say, pleonastic, but has an intensive sense. Though, perhaps, it is merely used agreeably to the custom of the language, as respects its primitive sense, “the world:” nor is there any occasion to deviate from our common version, except to express the Article.

—οὕτως (scil. ὡς πῦρ) ἡ γλῶσσα—τὸ σῶμα.] The sense is well expressed by Bp. Jebb in the following paraphrase: “In like manner, though with a very different design, the tongue is placed among the members of the human frame. intended by our Maker to be the incentive and instrument of all goodness, it becomes, by human malice, the corrupter of the whole body.” The οὕτως is in several MSS. and Versions not found, but its omission may very well be attributed to the difficulty of explaining it. Ἡ σπιλοῦσα is a Participle for Subst. verbal, the ὁ σπιλιτῆς or σπιλωτῆς, the contaminator of the whole body, namely, by inflaming the passions, and thereby making the members of the body instruments of sin, to its defilement. "The collateral notion (says Bp. Jebb) having been expressed, the previous ideas of a fire, and the world, are again resumed: the tongue is a fire." &c. Of the words φλογίζουσα τὸν τροχὸν τῆς γεν. the best interpretation seems to be that adopted by Grot., Heins., Michaelis, Carpz., Rosenm., Pott, and Schleus. "It is that which sets on fire, and destroys the whole course of life, from boyhood to old age;" i. e. by raising and nourishing hatred and enmity, it renders life a scene of misery. For, as Bp. Butler observes, "it begets resentment in him who is the subject of this unbridled wantonness of speech. It sows the seed of strife among others, and inflames little disgusts and offences, which, if let alone, would wear away of themselves: it is often of as bad effect upon the good name of others, as deep envy or malice; and, to say the least of it in this respect, it destroys and perverts a certain equity, of the utmost importance to society to be observed, namely, that praise and dispraise, a good or bad character, should always be bestowed according to desert." Of the next clause, καὶ φλογ. ὑπὸ τῆς γέννης, the sense is well expressed by Bp. Jebb thus: "[It is also a world] itself inflamed from hell." By γέννης we may understand the powers of hell,—the Devil and his agents, who, through the medium of the evil passions of our nature, inflames men with "darts tempered in hell," and excites to sin by this instrument of all evil, the tongue.

7, 8. "Other associations (says Bp. Jebb) now arise: the consideration of the world, and of the wheel of nature, or generation, would naturally lead a contemplative mind to expatiate over the vast scene of nature, animate and inanimate. Thus St. James introduces the whole brute creation, whether dwelling upon the earth, or beneath it; in the air, or in the waters of the sea."

— πᾶσα γὰρ φύσις—θανατ.] Here φύσις does not signify kind; nor is it to be regarded, with some, as pleonastic; but it means the dis- position implanted in animals. So Pott: "conata omnibus animalibus ferocia." The distribution of the brute creation here adopted is founded on Gen. ix. 2, 3. and Ps. viii. 7, 8., Sept.; which passages are the best illustration of the present: nor is there any thing to contravene the three-fold division generally used, suitably to the elements. In δαμάζεται καὶ δεδάμ. there is no pleonasm, but an energetic mode of expression. Τῇ φύσει, again, is not pleonastic, but signifies ingenium, solertia. Of course, the πᾶσα is meant to be limitative; the sentiment merely being, that the most ferocious beasts are tamed by man. The next words τὴν δὲ γλώσσαν—θανατ. are well rendered by Bp. Jebb, "But the tongue of men no one can subdue; an irrestrainable evil, full of death-bearing poison." In ἀκατάσχ. κακόν, μεστή ἰοῦ θαν. there seems to be a blending of two images;—one taken from a disease which cannot be stopped, and the other from the mortal bite of a venomous reptile.

9—13. Here the Apostle enforces the propriety and the duty of restraining the tongue, on the ground of the inconsistency of employing to wicked and pernicious purposes that faculty of speech, by which we are enabled "to bless (i. e. to laud and magnify) God, even the Father." (Holden.) The deep moral contrast just before induces a still profounder moral here; where, moreover, the ideas of the world, and of the ill effects of the tongue upon it, are not lost sight of: the animal, or brute creation, had been just brought forward; now God, the Maker of all, and man, his last best work, and living image, are no less practically, than magnificently, introduced. (Bp. Jebb.)

— ἐν αὐτῇ εὐλογοῦμεν—γίνεσθαι.] "That blessing and cursing should proceed from the same mouth, is clearly unnatural; the Apostle, therefore, proceeds to prove, by analogies of nature, that "these things ought not to be so." His analogies, however, are so derived, as to complete his picture of the world; he draws our attention to the department of inanimate nature; and that every part of this visible creation may contribute to the illustration of his subject, the fountains stand forth as representatives of unorganized matter; and various kinds of trees, as representatives, at once, of organic bodies, and of vegetable life." (Bp. Jebb.)

12. The interrogation implies a strong negation, to which the οὕτως, &c., refers.

13. Having cautioned them against the abuse of the tongue, the Apostle now proceeds to strike at the root of that evil, warning them against envy and malice in their hearts; assuring them, that meekness, peace, and beneficence, proceed from heaven; but that envy and contention are the offspring of hell. (Benson.) It should, however, seem that the Apostle intended first to enforce the admonition at i. 22. γίνεσθε ποιηταὶ λόγου, and then to advert to the other subject. In σοφός καὶ ἐπιστήμων (Hebrew רבני דבני) the former term seems to have reference to acquired wisdom, the latter to natural sagacity.

— δειξάτω—σοφίας.] The full sense is: "Let him show, by a right and virtuous conduct, the works of wisdom, [as well as utter the words;] and that a mild wisdom." Πρ. σοφ. is for σοφία πράξις. This is said in opposition to the proud, passionate, morose, and dictatorial tempers of the teachers in question and other self-appointed censors. Here I would compare Philostr. V. S. p. 407. τὸ τῆς φιλοσοφίας—κεχρωσμένον δὲ οἶον ἡδύσματι, τῇ πραότητι. and p. 528.

14. εἰ δὲ ζῆλον—ἀληθείας.] By several eminent Commentators these words are taken interrogatively; which is strenuously contended for by Carpz.: but, I conceive, in vain. The declarative form, adopted by all the ancient and most modern Commentators, is simpler and more apposite; though the sense is much the same either way. Render: "But if ye have bitter envy and strife in your heart, do not glory and lie against the truth;" i. e. (in the words of Dr. Burton) "do not, in such cases, boast of having wisdom, while you show that your boasting is false with respect to true wisdom." On this text, see a Sermon by Dr. South, vol. v. 389, where he shows, I, what envy is, and wherein it consists. II. What are its causes, on the part, 1. of the person envying, great malice and baseness of nature, rapacity, and an inward sense of a man's weakness and idleness; 2. of the person envied, great natural abilities, the favour of the great, wealth, and prosperity, esteem, and reputation. III. Its effects,—confusion and every evil work, 1. to the envier; 2. to the envied; a prying into all his concerns, calumny, and utter ruin.

— μὴ ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας.] The expression is remarkable, and, it should seem, very rare, since Commentators have not adduced a single example of it. I have, however, noted something like it in Joseph. de Bell. Jud. Præf. § i. καταψεύδονται τῶν πραγμάτων. Job xxxiv. 6. יְשׁוּעָה יִשְׁפּוּעַ, which is well interpreted in our common Version, "shall I lie against my right," i. e. (as Boullier ap. Rosenm. points out) "shall I overturn my right by a lie?"

15. The Apostle had adverted to the want of wisdom, and the means of acquiring it, i. 5, et seq., and he now enters upon a description of it, 15—18. The wisdom in question is spiritual wisdom; and it is ever productive of a good conversation, accompanied by a spirit of meekness and gentleness.—(Holden.) Οὐκ ἔστιν—δαμονιώδης. Render: "This is not the wisdom which cometh from above; but is earthly, sensual, (i. e. animal or carnal, belonging to the natural man; see 1 Cor. ii. 14.) demoniacal;" i. e. such as we may conceive of demons, whose wisdom is but cunning and deceit: qualities the opposite to what is required in true religion.

16. That the wisdom in question is not such, appears from its fruits, which are the very contrary to those produced by the Gospel of peace. On the term ἀκαταστασία see Luke xxi. 9. 1 Cor. xiv. 33. 2 Cor. xii. 20, and Bp. Sanderson, Sermon, p. 472. It is finely remarked by Joseph. B. Jud. i. 3, 4, that οὐδὲν οὕτω τῶν ἀγαθῶν παθῶν ἰσχυρόν, ὃ τῷ φθόνῳ μέχρι παντὸς ἀνέχει. Πᾶν φαῦλον πράγμα is said, because from such a source nought but evil can arise.

17. Having shown what is not true wisdom, the Apostle now points out what is, and that by its qualities, which are well illustrated by Dr. Hales as follows: "First it is pure, or free from all pollution of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God; then peaceable, disposed to promote peace and good-will among men; gentle, or accommodating to others in things not sinful; easy to be persuaded, or ready to admit a reasonable excuse; full of mercy and of good fruits springing from mercy, such as beneficence, liberality, &c.; impartial, not unduly respecting persons, parties, or sects; without hypocrisy, free from all affectation of superior sanctity or purity. See Note on 2 Cor. vi. 6.

18. καρπὸς δὲ—εἰρήνην.] In the interpretation of this passage Commentators are not quite agreed. One thing, however, is certain, that τοῖς ποιοῦσιν εἰρήνην should be rendered "who cultivate." The sense is well expressed by Whitty and Dodd. as follows: "They who show a peaceful temper may assure themselves that they shall reap a harvest, in a world where righteousness flourishes in eternal peace; or, in the words of Bp. Hall, "thou shalt be sure to reap the fruits of righteousness in glory, who have sown the seeds of peace and concord."

IV. From exhortation to the cultivation of peace, the Apostle glides into reprehension of the opposite disposition,—namely, of quarrels and disputes, to which too many, especially of the teachers, or those who affected to be such, were probably addicted. Now these are traced from their original spring, even the lusts and passions natural to the human heart. (Pott.)

1. πόλεμοι καὶ μάχαι] "contests and strifes." It is not agreed whether civil or religious contentions are here meant. Perhaps both, since the Jews were prone both to sedition and religious disputes. In either case, they originated in the same source, ἡδονῶν, lusts or favourite and cherished passions. The best comment on this passage may be found in a kindred one at 1 Pet. ii. 11, and Rom. vii. 23, where see Notes. Στρατ., "which exert their force."

2, 3. The sense here is well expressed by Mr. Holden thus: "Ye suffer lusts to war in your members; you eagerly pursue whatever they prompt you to, and set your hearts upon their gratification; yet you do not obtain the objects which you so inordinately covet; and the reason is, that your hearts are bent upon temporal things, instead of being fixed upon God. While such is the case, though you ask, you do not receive, because you ask amiss, being wholly intent on the gratification of your lusts and passions." Φονεύετε would seem a very harsh term, and thus some conjecture φθονεῖτε, which is not countenanced by MSS. or Versions. We may, however, take φον. of intent and disposition, rather than act; q. d. "Ye foster a bloody hatred of all who stand in the way of your designs."

4. He now admonishes them to abstain from those lusts whence come strifes and dissensions, and, indeed, from all excessive attachment to the things of this world.—(Pott.) Expositors are in general agreed in understanding μοιχ. of spiritual adultery, or base worldly-mindedness, which would make no sacrifice for religion. Φιλία τοῦ κόσμου, "friendship with the world," (see my Note on Thucyd. i. 91. No. 1.) i. e. the corrupt part of it; implying enmity to God, as being at variance with His plans for the promotion of virtue and happiness. Καθίσταται, "is [thereby] become."

5, 6. ἢ δοκεῖτε—χάριν.] There is a considerable difficulty connected with this passage, at least according to the common punctuation and interpretation; which is (to use the words of Prof. Scholefield) this,—“that the passage which is thus represented as a quotation from Scripture is no where to be found there, nor any thing sufficiently near to it to pass for another form of what the Apostle had in his mind. Nor, if it were so, would it make any thing of a clear argument in connection with the context. Nor finally, if we take πνεῦμα in the sense of the human disposition, as seems in this view to be necessary, does it appear capable of explanation why this should be called ‘the spirit that dwelleth in us,’ which, on the other hand, is a very usual, and proper, and intelligible description of the Holy Spirit, who comes into believers for the very purpose.” To avoid this difficulty, some resort to conjecture; while others suppose the words taken from an Apocryphal book; both methods alike objectionable. And to regard (with others) the whole passage as an interpolation, is cutting, instead of untying the knot. It is best to suppose (with many eminent Commentators) that ἡ γραφὴ refers to the preceding sentence, and alludes to the general tenour of Scripture in its declarations on the above subject, i. e. of friendship with the world, or worldly-mindedness. (See John xv. 18—20. Matt. vi. 24. Luke xvi. 13, 15, &c.); also, that the verse is to be divided into two interrogative clauses. It may be rendered, with Prof. Scholefield, thus: “Do ye think that the Scripture speaketh in vain? Does the Spirit that dwelleth in us lust to envy?” Of course οὕτως is to be understood; which in so elliptical a writer as James is not very harsh; q. d. “Think ye that the Scripture speaketh in vain [or without good reason in condemning this worldliness]? No! And again, do you think that the Holy Spirit which dwelleth in us is fond of envy? No! On the contrary, He giveth more grace in order to resist it." The last clause, some suppose to have reference not to envy, but to worldliness. It should, however, seem (and the words following confirm this view) that the reference is to all the unchristian dispositions above adverted to; principally, however, to that disposition, which "inly pines at others' good," and lusting after it,—draws after it, as it were, all the other kindred vices linked with envy,—as hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness. The full sense of the next words seems to be: "Nay, so far from that, He giveth more grace than to leave those who obey His holy motions, to such worldly and unchristian tempers." Ἐπιποθεῖν πρὸς φθόνον is a rare construction; yet the same syntax and use of ἐπιπ. occurs in Deut. xiii. 8. Psalm xli. 1; lxxxiii. 2.

On the following citation from Prov. iii. 34, see Note at Matt. xxiii. 12. In the present application, by the ὑπερηφ. must be denoted all the foregoing classes of persons,—the envious, the vain, the censorious, the quarrelsome, the spiritually proud, and the worldly; who, as they resist the grace, and, in various ways, transgress the will of God, may be said to be ὑπερηφ. as setting themselves against God, and acting as his enemies. On this whole portion of the Chapter up to the end of v. 11. see the elegant illustrations of Bp. Jebb, Sac. Lit. p. 251—257, who thus traces the connexion and moral gradations of the passage: "First God is described as setting himself in battle-array against the proud, but holding out terms of peace, reconciliation, and favour, to the humble; whence the Apostle exhorts those whom he is addressing, humbly to enroll themselves under God, and firmly to keep their ranks. In the next words, "stand against the Devil," &c., the military metaphor is continued; after which it is dropped, and the moral meaning stands forth. It is shown, how those who had newly enrolled themselves, here termed *sinner*s, or transgressors, are to resist the Devil; namely, by cleansing their hands, i. e. abstaining from wicked actions: and how the double-minded, i. e. persons wavering between long-confirmed habits of evil, and incipient wishes to become good, are to "draw nigh to God"; namely, by "purifying their hearts," i. e. by acquiring an inward principle of goodness. But how is this to be attained? On the one hand, we cannot give it to ourselves: on the other hand, God will not grant it to lazy wishes, and half-formed resolutions. A preparatory process must take place, which the preventing grace of God is ever at hand to facilitate and prosper; the process,—namely, of sincere repentance. Then are graphically described the workings of repentance. Of the two clauses ὁ γέλως—μεταστραφήτω καὶ ἡ χαρὰ εἰς κατ. the former recapitulates the state of temporary sorrow; wailing being but an action of the feelings when excited, not a calm habitual temper of the mind and heart. Thus it is most correctly opposed to laughter, also the temporary effect of temporary excitement. The latter describes not any thing external, or dependent in any degree on animal impressibility; but a disposition whose root is in the heart; dejection being a sense of sorrow mingled with shame; the daughter of contrition, and the parent of humility; most suitably opposed to the senseless joy of the transgressor; an inward habit, too, but of a character the most inconsistent with a Christian spirit. Moreover, the outward act of wailing corresponds with the outward cleansing of hands, just before; and, in like manner, the inward feeling of dejection agrees with that inward purification of heart so lately and so forcibly enjoined. The concluding sentence ταπεινώθητε, &c. happily terminates this moral process. The fruit of well-tempered dejection is religious humiliation before God; with this the Apostle had commenced, and with this he concludes; annexing only the sure and certain result and reward of humiliation, so pursued, and so attained."

10. Here the Apostle subjoins some motives for consolation, amidst the deep sorrow and repentance to which they are called,—namely, that it will, if it be real, heartfelt, and productive of true reformation, be the means of recommending them to the Divine forgiveness, and raising them to the Divine favour.

11, 12 Here the Apostle warns them against another evil disposition nearly allied to a quarrelsome and envious spirit,—namely, one of censure and detraction; reminding them that such arrogant censoriousness was, in effect, censuring or condemning the Christian law, which forbids such a disposition, 1. by despising its prohibitions against detraction; 2. by sitting in judgment upon the fitness of the law rather than performing it; and by thus setting up as arbiters of the law, usurping the office of law-giver and Judge, from the One who alone has the power of condemnation or acquittal, awarding destruction, or granting salvation. On this text see an admirable Discourse of Dr. Barrow, vol. i. p. 276., on detraction. By the νόμον some understand the law of Moses; others, the Gospel. Bp. Middl., however, thinks the argument is not confined to either, but, as in Rom. ii. 25., extends to religion, or moral obligation in its most general sense; q. d. “To all religion candour and good-will are essential, whether we be Jews, Christians, or even of the number of those who are a law unto themselves.” And he cites from a Rabbinical writer in Schoettg. Hor. Heb., “Nemo alteri detrahit, qui non simul Deum abneget.”

13—16. The Apostle next proceeds to reprove and expose the self-sufficiency, worldly spirit, and unbelieving irreligious language, which were manifested by many in another way. (Scott.) Presuming too much on the present life, and not having a due regard to their own frailty and mortality, and perpetual dependance on the providence of God, they spoke of the future with excessive confidence. “Ἀγε seems here to be a form of soliciting attention; as Is. i. 18. καὶ δεῦτε δὴ, διελέγχθωμεν, λέγει Κύριος, and so the Latin age. In σήμερον καὶ αὔριον—κερδήσωμεν the Apostle represents the worldly-minded persons in question, as saying, what perhaps was usually only the subject of their thoughts. The rebuke, however, is well pointed. There is an allusion to the commercial business in which almost all foreign Jews were engaged, and for the furtherance of which they had to take long journeys to distant trading places, as Tyre, Alexandria, Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth, Rome, &c.

There has been no little doubt among learned men, whether the Indicatives or the Subjunctives are here to be read? The sense seems rather to require the former, which is supported by the ancient Versions. Yet those Versions aimed at freedom of sense, rather than strict literality; and therefore are no good evidence in such a case as this. External testimony seems to be decidedly in favour of the Subjunctive; and internal is not less so; for the Subjunctives form the more difficult reading. Nor is the sense thereby injured; since the presumptuous confidence is implied. Theile proposes to remove the discrepancy in the MSS. by reading πορευώμεθα—ποιήσωμεν, and ἐμπορευσόμεθα—κερδήσωμεν. But that is surely doing violence to the construction; and is indeed a mere device to get rid of a difficulty.

Not to say that there is no authority for the alteration: the Subjunctives being found in the greater part of the MSS. and all the early Editions. The Futures were first introduced into the text by Beza.

14. οἷτινες—αὔριον! Literally, “ye who know not (i. e. though ye know not) the [event of] the morrow,” i. e. whether you shall retain your property, or be removed from all enjoyment of it by death, or hopeless sickness. See Prov. xxvii. 1. which passage the Apostle had here in mind, and with which I would compare Soph. CEd. Col. 567. “Ἐξοιδ’ ἀνὴρ ἄν, χῶτι τῆς ἐς αὔριον Οὐδὲν πλέον μοι σοῦ μέτεστιν ἡμέρας. To illustrate this, the Apostle subjoins ποία γὰρ ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν; “For what, or how fleeting and frail, is your life! how short a span at the utmost!” Ἀτμὶς γὰρ, &c., may be rendered, “Why, ‘tis a vapour, appearing for a short time, and then vanishing away.” The conclusion is,—that we ought not to be too anxious to provide necessaries for so short a sojourn; but should cast ourselves wholly on the protection of that God on whom we entirely depend, and study to seek his favour.

15. ἄντι τοῦ λέγειν—ἐκείνο.] These words are closely connected with σήμερον καὶ αὔριον (the clause ποία γὰρ—ἀφανίζομένη being parenthetical); and the sense is, “instead of saying [as ye ought], If the Lord please that we live, we must do so and so.” Now even the Heathens, we know, used expressions of this sort, though, we may suppose, rather as words of course. See Note on Heb. vi. 3.

16. νῦν δὲ καυχᾶσθε ἐν τ. ἀλ.] “Whereas now (or, as things now are, as the custom too much is) ye insolently boast;” or, “ye rather exult in your boastful projects and plans,” and anticipate your success.

17. εἰδοῖτι οὖν—ἐστίν.] This is a conclusion, preoccupying the answer, “We all know this very well;” q. d. “he who offends against his better knowledge, is guilty of an aggravated crime.” Luke xii. 47. John ix. 41. xv. 22. Rom. i. 20. There is reference either (as some think) to all the foregoing reproofs; or rather only to this Heathenish custom of forming plans without referring their event to God. By καλὸν is meant what is right, namely, that of acknowledging the providence of God, the humble expression of dependance on which, is bounden duty.

V. 1—6. Several learned Commentators suppose this portion to be addressed to the unbelieving Jews, among whom the Jewish Christians lived under persecution, and of whom many were rich, and led a dissolute life. The miseries here adverted to are by those Commentators supposed to have been those in which the Jews, even in foreign countries, were involved together with those of Judæa itself, during the war with the Romans; and which the rich must have been especially exposed to suffer. It is, however, unlikely that these persons should here alone be addressed. And it is better with Carpz., Rosenm., Scott, and others, to suppose what is here said to be meant to apply also to, if not intended solely for, those worldly nominal Christians censured at iv. 13—17., whose minds were wholly devoted to the business and the pleasures of this life. Thus the miseries here adverted to may, with the ancient and most modern Commentators, be taken at least to include, with the evils before mentioned, such others as, in all ages result from the abuse of riches, both in this world and in the next.

2, 3. The imagery here is borrowed from the ancient prophets; Job xiii. 28. Ps. xxi. 9. Is. x. 16. xxvii. 11. xxx. 11.; and is used to designate the perishable nature of all earthly possessions. Whence it follows that "they cannot profit," but rather, that "the rust of them," i. e. those treasures which have been amassed and suffered to rust and decay in useless hoards, instead of having been brightened by a liberal circulation, "will be a witness against you, and will eat your flesh as it were fire," i. e. will show that you have not properly employed them, and will consequently occasion severe misery and woe. (Holden.) See Matt. viii. 4; x. 18. It is well remarked by Bp. Jebb, that "the enumeration of the various kinds of wealth, is a poetical amplification, containing also a climax. Three kinds of wealth are intended: 1. stores of corn, wine, oil, &c., liable to putrefaction; 2. wardrobes of rich garments; among the ancients, and especially the oriental nations, a principal portion of their wealth, and proverbially the prey of the moth (see Is. li. 8.); 3. treasures of gold and silver, liable to rust, or, at least, to change of colour.—Again, the argus of the precious metals rising as a witness against avaricious hoarders, is a very noble personification: and the terror is heightened, when, in the next line, it becomes a fire that preys upon their vitals." From the Classical writers (see Recens. Synop.) it fully appears that the gold and silver utensils of ancient times were subject to something like rust; probably from the metal having a greater proportion of alloy than that of modern times. In φάγεται τὰς σάρκας ὑμῶν ὡς πῦρ, Pott supposes an image borrowed from the painful and deleterious effects of rust when rubbed into raw flesh; an apt designation of the present misery, and future woe, unutterable and never ending, which results from the abuse of riches, or the amassing of them by unlawful methods. Yet there is, I conceive, also an allusion to the "fire that is not quenched," which must partly be alluded to in the next clause, ἐθσανρίσαι ἐν ἐσχ. ἡμ.; with which, indeed, many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, construe the preceding words ὡς πῦρ, in the sense, "ye have, as it were, treasured up fire to consume you in the last days." But there appears no reason to abandon the common construction, by which the words are taken with the preceding. As to the reasons urged against this by Dr. Burton, that "it occasions a confusion of metaphor, and leaves ἐθσ. without Accusative," the former is of no weight in a passage, like this, of Æschylean sublimity; and the latter is utterly without force, since the Accus., by a common idiom, is included in the verb itself. So Bp. Jebb well explains: "Ye have laid up treasures for the 'last days':—treasures! but of what kind? Let the last days tell: the days of the destruction of your nation. St. Paul (Rom. ii. 5.) fully expresses what St. James indignantly suppresses, θησανρίσεις σε-αντῶ ὀργήν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὀργῆς. I would here compare Phillet. ap. Athen. 380 D. Εἰς αὐρίον οὐχὶ φροντίζειν ὃ, τι ἔσται, περιεργόν ἐστιν ἀποκεῖσθαι πάντῃ Ἐωλον ἐνδομ ἀργυρίων. The mythological fiction of Tantalus (who was punished with an insatiable desire for what he could not enjoy), inculcates, it may be observed, a fine moral lesson respecting the punishment of avarice even in this world.

4. The Apostle proceeds to severely censure those who amassed riches by various acts, if not of dishonesty, yet of oppression to their labourers,—diminishing their wages, or stopping part, on various pretexts. By a fine figure found in Levit. xix. 13. Deut. xxiv. 14, 15. Malachi iii. 5., and elsewhere, the withheld wages of the laborious are personified, and said to call on God for vengeance. On the expression Κύριος Σαβ. see Note on Rom. ix. 29. By "entering into the ears" is implied that they will be attended to.

5, 6. By a comparison with the kindred passage of Malachi iii. 5., we perceive the propriety of this transition. We have the same luxurious profligacy, leading so the same terrible destruction, on which the last of the Prophets expatiated, while describing "the great and terrible day of the Lord." (Bp. Jebb.) Having censured their rapacity, he notes their base sensuality. On the term σπαταλ. see Note on 1 Tim. v. 6. Of ἐθρένατε—σφαγῆς the sense is, "Ye have pampered yourselves in sensuality, as animals are fattened for slaughter;" hinting at the punishment in a day of slaughter, when they should be slain like cattle; an image frequent in the Classical writers. See Æschyl. Agam. 1659. The image is (as Bp. Jebb says) of the highest order of prophetic sublimity. Καρδίας may be rendered genia.

6. κατεδικάσατε—ὑμῖν.] To the cruelty and gross sensuality above mentioned the Apostle adds another kind of cruelty, and that founded in cowardice. The expressions κατεδ. and ἐφονεύσ. may be understood of persecution even to condemnation and death; which is the view of the sense adopted by most Expositors. See Pott. Others, however (and, among the rest, Mackn., Abp. Newc., Bp. Middl., and Bp. Jebb), take τὸν δίκαιον to denote "the Just one," i. e. Christ. Bp. Middl. remarks that "the hypothetic use of the Article, by which τὸν δίκαιον would be for τοὺς δικαίους, is much too strong; and the strictly definitive use would point out the eminently Just one. On any other supposition than that the passage was meant of the condemnation of our Saviour, terms so obviously applicable to that event would hardly have been employed." "Moreover," observes Bp. Jebb, "our Lord is often so styled in Scripture; as Acts iii. 14, 15. ὑμεῖς δὲ τὸν ἅγιον καὶ δίκαιον ἀπεκτείνατε, and vii. 5. τὸν δίκαιον, οὗ ὑμεῖς φονεῖς γεγέννησθε. Such, too (continues he), is likely to be the sense, as the murder of our Lord was the great national transgression of the Jews, and therefore likely to be mentioned by St. James as the consummation of their apostasy."

The οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται ὑμῖν some take interrogatively. But that is unnecessary; and Bp. Middl. has justly decided that He (meaning, according to his interpretation, Christ) carried on from τὸν δίκαιον, is the Nominative to ἀντιτάσ., and that the sense is: "The Saviour opposes not your perverseness, but leaves you a prey to the delusion;" or, as Bp. Jebb paraphrases, "He is not arrayed against you; you feel secure; you despise the crucified, as still powerless to vindicate his own cause, and to protect his followers: but wait; the time of his array will come; the day of vengeance is at hand."

7. Here the Apostle turns to the Christian converts suffering under their oppression, and exhorts them patiently to endure the injuries inflicted on them, seeing that the advent of the Lord Jesus Christ approaches. This he confirms and illustrates by the example of the husband-man, and by that held out to them in the suffering Prophets. (Pott.) Μακρ. has a double signification,—patiently endure, and patiently wait for. By ὑετὸν πρ. are meant the autumnal, and by ὑετὸν ὄψ. the vernal rains. These in Judæa occur in a regular course. By ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου some understand the advent of our Lord at the destruction of Jerusalem and of the Jewish polity; others, his final advent to judgment: which latter view is ably supported by Bp. Horsley, in a Sermon on this verse. Yet there is most to urge in favour of the former sense. Perhaps both may be comprehended. And certain it is that the two events were in the minds of the Jews closely associated.

9. μὴ στεναρίζ. κατ' ἀλλ.] Render: "Do not murmur or be impatient against each other." Said in opposition to the foregoing μακροθ., and denoting a querulous feeling, originating in various unchristian tempers; the most powerful motive to suppress which would be, that the Judge standeth at the door, and will soon award a just retribution. See Matt. xxiv. 33.

10. ὑπόδειγμα λάβετε—τοὺς προφ.] The example of God is constantly proposed to us in Scripture as the most unexceptionably worthy of our imitation. But God being no object of our senses, the Scripture hath added to it that of Christ, the visible image of the invisible God. But here, again, there is a sort of excuse for falling so very far short of our pattern, from the frailties of our nature and the turbulencies of our passions. To remove, therefore, all exceptions of this sort, we have the rules of morality reduced to practice by men like ourselves, who had, indeed, the Divine assistance to strengthen their infirmity; and so may we, if we seek it as they did. (Dr. Jortin.) On the force of ὑπόδειγμα, see Note at John xiii. 15. Τῆς κακοπ. Either the word here signifies constancy in enduring sufferings, or, with τῆς μακρ., forms an Hendiadys denoting patient endurance of evils. On the evils endured by the Prophets, see Hebr. xi. 33. seqq. The οἱ ἐλάλησαν—Κυρίου is meant to show their high dignity, and point the argument; q. d. "If they bore such evils, well may ye."

11. μακαρίζομεν] "we pronounce those blessed," agreeably to Christ's words, Matt. v. 11, 12. Τοὺς ὑπομ., "who bear with patience the trials appointed for them by God." On this absolute use, see Note on Rom. xii. 12. Perhaps the Apostle had in mind Dan. xii. 12. μακάριος ὁ ὑπομένων. See Matt. xxiv. 13. Τὸ τέλος Κυρίου, "the [happy] end which the Lord put to his sufferings;" with reference to Job xlii. 12., where the τά ἔσχατα answers to the τὸ τέλος here. From this example we may learn (in the words of Bp. Sanderson) that "true patience shall never go without consolation. He that shall have patience onward shall have consolation at the last. Since the patient abiding of the meek shall not perish for ever." (Ps. ix. 18.) See more in Bp. Sanderson, Sermon. p. 469. Κυρίου is a Genit. of cause, for ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, scil. δοθῆν, of which examples are cited both from the Scriptural and Classical writers. The ὅτι I would take for διότι, because.

12. μὴ ὀμνύετε.] Bp. Sanderson and Abp. Newc. suppose the oaths here meant are oaths uttered under impatience, and from great provocation. But though these may, from what precedes, have been uppermost in the Apostle's mind, yet there can be no doubt (especially from the solemn formula, πρὸ πάντων) that he speaks generally, of all oaths used in common conversation; for such swearing, we have reason to think, was a common vice among the Jews. That the expression can mean no more, and not extend to judicial swearing, all the best Commentators are agreed. And, indeed, our Saviour's words, Matt. v. 34—37. (which were, no doubt, in the mind of the Apostle) will permit no other interpretation. ἦτω ὑμῶν τὸ ναὶ—οὐ seems to have been a proverbial form of expression, to denote simple affirmation or negation, repeated, if need be, but unaccompanied with oaths. Ὑπὸ κρίσιν πέσ. is for εἰς κρίσιν ἐμπέσητε, which phrase occurs in Eccles. xxix. 19.

13—18. Here the Apostle adverts to other trials of patience and resignation, namely, those of sickness or other calamity; pointing out the best means of removing, or mitigating, the evils. And first he enjoins the use of prayer, as the best balm for the wounds of affliction, and the most effectual preservative against the temptations of prosperity. By ψαλλέτω it is not meant that cheerfulness is always to be expressed by singing of Psalms. (See Notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 15. Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16;) but that they are to adapt their devotions to their present frame of mind and external circumstances. In the former case, it should be prayer; in the latter, thanksgiving for past and present blessings, with prayer for future ones, and for grace to withstand temptation.

14. τοὺς πρεσβ. τ. ἐκκ.] Expositors are not agreed whether this expression denotes the elders, or the ministers, of the Church. See Note on 1 Tim. v. 17. The former is probably the true sense. See Scott. The ἀσθενεῖ must, from the context, be understood of severe sickness, especially if, as is with reason generally supposed, this and the next verse relate to the miraculous gifts of healing, which were vouchsafed to some in the Apostolic age. See Deyling, Wolf, and Benson. The words ἐν τῷ ὀνόμ. are by some united with προσευξ. ἑ. α.; by others, with ἀλείψ. αὐτὸν ἐλ. It should seem that they belong to both, since the whole was done in dependence on the aid of God, solemnly invoked in prayer. That oil (especially the generous oil of the East) is highly salutary in various disorders, will not prove that it is here ordered as a medical means; for from the Gospels (see Mark vi. 13.) we learn that this (which was a general remedy among the Jews) was used by the disciples even in conjunction with miraculous power. Nay, our Lord himself condescended to employ certain media in working miracles. In the case of these presbyters, as in that of the Apostles, the oil may have been only used as symbolical of the cure to be effected by the Divine means. Upon the whole, it involves, I apprehend, the least difficulty to suppose that by the healing in question is meant preternatural healing; otherwise the strong expressions εὐχὴ τῆς πίστεως, σώσει, καὶ ἐγερῇ and others, must be taken with such a limitation as, in the present context, would involve considerable harshness. There can be little doubt, however, that in the next generation the thing became (what, indeed, most recent Commentators here suppose it) a solemn religious ceremony comprehending a symbolical rite, the use of which tended to produce the blessings prayed for, as far as was consistent with the plans of Divine providence. Of course, the ἡ εὐχὴ τῆς πίστεως would, in that case, bear a very different sense from what it has in the present passage. Here it may be explained, with Mr. Holden, "the prayer which proceedeth from that faith to which God granted the power of working miracles, Acts iii. 16. Rom. xii. 3. 1 Cor. xii. 9. xiii. 2; or, the prayer offered up by those who have that faith to which God has vouchsafed the gift of healing." In this view, the sins which it is promised shall be forgiven, are supposed to be those of which the disorders in question were a temporal and judicial punishment. See Matt. viii. 17. xix. 26. and John v. 14. 1 Cor. xi. 30. seq. This, it must be confessed, is not a little harsh; and the expression seems to require the limitation of "if the sins be heartily repented of, and if it be God's good pleasure." For when Mr. Holden speaks of "the fact," that restoration to health always followed, his assertion is, I think, not borne out by any sufficient proof. See the judicious Note of Mr. Scott, who sensibly observes: "It cannot be supposed that these miraculous cures could be performed at all times: but there seems to have been some impression on the mind of the person who wrought the miracle, and a peculiar exercise of faith for that purpose." There were possibly some cases in which the means adverted to only tended to recovery and forgiveness, did not produce them; and therefore, as to the question before us, the maxim "in medio tutissimus ibis" may be used with advantage. One thing is sufficiently plain, that the Romish practice of Extreme Unction is quite unjustifiable, being used under circumstances widely different. It was, as Scott and Holden observe, absurd thus to found a perpetual ordinance on a practice which was extraordinary and miraculous; and as the miraculous gifts of healing have long ceased, the symbolical ceremony of anointing with oil ought not to be retained.

16. Ἐξομολογεῖσθε — ἐνεργουμένη.] There has been some doubt as to the sense of this verse, and that chiefly from difference of opinion as to the connection. Some regard this as a fresh exhortation, unconnected with the preceding context, and enjoining a mutual confession of faults or injuries, and a mutual supplication to God for spiritual health. But to assign this figurative sense to ἰαθῇτε in the present context, is very harsh. And most Expositors, with reason, connect this exhortation with what precedes,—understanding the injunction to refer only to cases of dangerous sickness, and when the confession and reconciliation in question would materially tend to promote recovery of the sick person. The "prayer" here mentioned seems intended chiefly of the injured person, who should not only forgive, but pray for his injurer, if penitent; though it may be also understood of all other prayers for the recovery and pardon of sins of the sick person, except those mentioned at vv. 14 & 15. It seems that the Apostle here meant to recommend and extol a disposition to freely confess, on all proper occasions, the wrongs we have done to any one. So Epictetus, in his Sententiæ collected by Stobæus, No. 4. βελτίον ὀλιγάκις πλημμελεῖν, ὁμολογοῦντα σωφρονεῖν πλεονάκις· ἢ ὀλιγάκις ἁμαρτύνειν λέγοντα πλημμελεῖν πολλάκις. a neat and pithy gnome, but disfigured by the corruption of the text. For, though the Editors have not perceived it, the words ὀλιγάκις and πολλάκις in the second clause should certainly change places, otherwise the sense of the writer is destroyed. Of course, this passage will by no means support the Romish practice of auricular confession, especially to a priest; for the confession, in the present case, is supposed to be made to the injured person, in order to be forgiven.

Then, to encourage the use of prayers for the sick, not only on the part of Ministers, but that of Christians in general, the Apostle adds the assurance πολὺ—ἐνεργουμένη,—namely, that the earnest energetic prayers of the righteous have great efficacy. Some eminent Commentators, indeed, explain ἐνεργ. "inwrought by the Spirit." But as has been before observed, that signification of the word is not founded on any certain proof; and it is here unsuitable to the context. The present passage seems to have been had in mind by Procop. B. Gall. ii. p. 64. 29. ἀνὴρ δίκαιός τε καὶ θεῷ ἐς τὰ μάλιστα φίλος, καὶ ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἐνεργοῦσιν ἐς ὅτι βούλοιο αἰετὴν εὐχὴν ἔχων.

17, 18. On the apparent discrepancy, as to the duration of the drought, between this account and that of the O. T. see Note at Luke iv. 25.

19, 20. To the injunctions to mutual confession, forgiveness, and prayer for each other, the Apostle now subjoins another, to mutually co-operate in correcting each other's errors in the doctrines, or failures in the practice of Christianity.

— καὶ καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμ.] Expositors are not agreed whether this is to be understood of the covering the sins of the converter, or of the converted. The former interpretation is espoused by Origen and several Latin Fathers, and of the moderns, by Hamm., Whitby, Wells, Pyle, Atterbury, and Dodd.; the latter, by Grot., Vorst., Est., Bp. Hall, Wolf, Benson, Sherlock, Rosenm., Mackn., Newc., Pott, Scott, and almost all recent Commentators. "They argue (to use the words of Mr. Slade) that it seems hardly consonant with the language and doctrines of the Gospel, that any sin should be forgiven, if it be unrepented, or persisted in; and if it be repented and forsaken, it will be pardoned without the meritorious act here mentioned." Indeed, the context requires the latter interpretation, the high antiquity of which appears from its having been adopted by the Pesch. Syr. Transl. We are, however, only to understand that the good offices of the reformer will powerfully tend to procure the forgiveness of sins and final salvation of the penitent sinner, since conversion does not necessarily imply final perseverance, and therefore cannot ensure salvation.

The authenticity, and consequently canonical authority, of this Epistle, has never been disputed. On the time, however, when, and the place where it was written, nothing certain can be pronounced. Indeed, of the history of St. Peter's life subsequent to his being at Antioch, A. D. 46, we know nothing from the N. T. That he suffered martyrdom at Rome, at the close of the reign of Nero, about 67 or 68, we learn from the early Ecclesiastical Historians; and that his remains were deposited at Rome, we have the same testimony; to which I am enabled to add that of Procopius Hist. p. 195. 10. But though the time when this Epistle was written cannot be exactly fixed,—yet, from some allusions in it to the troubles in Judæa, it is supposed to have been not long before the death of the Apostle. With respect to the place where it was written, the determination of that point is closely connected with the interpretation of the word Βαβυλῶνι at Ch. v. 13, where see Note. As to the persons to whom it was addressed, that is also a matter of some uncertainty. They were probably the Christians dispersed through various parts of Asia Minor,—chiefly Jews, but partly Gentiles, to the former of whom the expression παρεπιδήμοις διασπορᾶς seems to refer; and that at v. 14. to the latter. With respect to the matter contained in this Epistle, it bears a close affinity to that of the Epistle of St. James in scope and argument, adverting to the persecutions to which the Christians were exposed, and exhorting to patience and resignation, perseverance in the true faith, and the practice of the relative duties. The Epistle bears all the marks of a fervent and most devout spirit. The style is somewhat irregular, the mind of the writer being solely intent on delivering the truths of the Gospel; but it is expressed with peculiar dignity, energy, and authority of manner; occasionally rising to the sublime, and never sinking below what might be expected from the chief of the Apostles.

C. I. 1. ἐκλεκτοῖς] i. e. elected to the privileges of the Gospel. See Rom. viii. 33. On παρεπιδήμοις διασπορᾶς see the Introduction. On the term διασπορά see Note on John vii. 35.

2. κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ.] See Acts ii. 23. Rom. viii. 28. seq. Eph. i. 5. The phrase is to be referred, by transposition, to ἐκλ. preceding. Ἐν ἀγιασμῷ Πν., “by the sanctification or sanctifying influences of the Spirit.” Εἰς ὑπακοήν; i. e. in order that they should obey the Gospel. Καὶ [εἰς] ῥαντισμὸν αἵμ. Ἰ. X., “and that they should be purified from sin by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ,” in opposition to that of the Mosaic law. See Heb. xii. 24, and compare Eph. i. 4. So Barnabas, Ch. v. “remissione peccatorum sanctificamur, quod est sparsione sanguinis illius.” Χάρις, &c. Compare Rom. i. 7, and 1 Cor. i. 3.

3—5. The Apostle opens his subject by calling on his readers to join with him in blessing the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for His mercy and grace. He reminds them of the happy immortality set before them in the Gospel, and which they would obtain, if they continued true to their Christian profession. This paves the way for the mention, at v. 6, of trials and persecutions. Ὁ ἀναγ.,—namely, by converting them to Christianity; whereby they were placed in a new state, had new duties, and new hopes. That this is the sense, is proved (in opposition to the notion of some recent Commentators) by a kindred passage of Tit. iii. 5. κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον, ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς, διὰ λουτροῦ παλινγενεσίας, καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως Πνεύματος ἁγίου. brought to light by the Gospel. So ὁδὸς ζωᾶ at Heb. x. 20. This hope was introduced by Christ's resurrection, inasmuch as that showed the possibility of our own resurrection; and as being a proof and pledge thereof, and a seal and confirmation of the truth of the Christian doctrine. In εἰς κληρον. ἀφθ., &c. is shown the object of that hope; and it is represented by such epithets as set it in complete contrast to worldly inheritances: for those are (as Mr. Scott observes) corruptible in themselves, and, in respect of their possessors, defiled, considering the means by which they are often obtained, the use which is made of them, and the persons who possess them; and fading, as to the very trivial solid comfort they impart, and its withering nature, palling on the appetite and becoming insipid. Whereas the inheritance to which the regenerate are entitled is incorruptible in itself and they will be rendered incorruptible and immortal to enjoy it." Ἀφθ., denoting that it is imperishable, and ἀμίαντον uncontaminated by those frailties and vices which so much disturb all human happiness, and untainted with that evil which in this world is necessarily mixed with good. Ἀμάραντον, "never-fading," because (as Mackn. remarks) it never grows old; its beauties will remain fresh through all eternity; and its pleasures never become insipid by enjoyment. Τετηρ. ἐν οὐρανοῖς εἰς ἡ. See Col. i. v. 2 Tim. iv. 8.

— τοὺς—εἰς σωτηρίαν] "For you who are preserved and guarded (see Bens.) by the powerful protection of God (who can give us all the felicity we wish for), through faith (i. e. through the profession of the Gospel, by which ye obtain it," or, as some explain it, under condition of faith in the Gospel) unto salvation. Ἐτοίμην ἀποκαλ., "ready to be revealed and imparted." This is, as Calvin remarks, in apposition with τετηρ. ἐν οὐραν., expressing the same thing in another manner. This salvation is said to be ready for the saints; though they are not yet ready for it, inasmuch as it is reserved for them. In ἀποκαλυφθ. there is a sensus prægnans; q. d. "to be brought to light," i. e. manifested and publicly conferred on them. Ἐν καιρῷ ἐσχάτῳ, "at the consummation of all things, at the general judgment."

6. ἐν ᾧ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε—πειρασμοῖς.] Render, "in which [circumstances] (namely, of being kept by the power of God, and hope in his salvation) ye greatly rejoice;" or "rejoice ye," as Mr. Valpy renders, observing that "the whole seems to be an exhortation, only momentarily suspended, to inform those who are addressed of the desire which the Prophets had to understand 'what the Spirit of Christ, speaking by them, did signify when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.'" Εἰ δέον ἐ., "if thus it must be," viz. from circumstances. See Dr. A. Clarke. The sense of the passage is: "This felicity ye expect; though now, for a time, by God's providence, ye suffer under various tribulations, inflicted on you by the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles."

7. ἵνα τὸ δοκίμιον—Χριστοῦ.] The sense is: "In order that this proof of your faith [by affliction], being much more important than that of gold which is tried in the fire, [as the sincerity of your faith is tried by afflictions] may be found [to terminate] unto praise," &c. So Lucian Pisc. § 14. says of truth (just as Bolingbroke said that "ridicule is the test of truth") οἷα γὰρ ὡς οὐκ ἂν τι ὑπὸ σκώμματος χεῖρον γένοιτο, ἀλλὰ τοῦναντίον ὑπερ ἂν ἡ καλὸν, ὥσπερ τὸ χρυσοῦν, ἀποσπώμενον τοῖς κόμμασι (by being beaten in being worked up) λαμπρότερον ἀποτίλλεται καὶ φανερώτερον γίνεται. Prov. xvii. 3. Ὡσπερ δοκιμάζεται ἐν καμίνῳ ἄργυρος καὶ χρῦσος, οὕτως ἐκλεκταὶ καρδίαι παρὰ Κυρίου. See Note on 1 Cor. iii. 13. "The troubles (remarks Dr. Burton) which tried the Christians, were really of much more value than gold, which is itself tried in the fire. Gold is purified at the fire, but afterwards perishes; the Christians are not only purified by the trial, but arrive finally at the happiness of heaven." See also Benson and Newc. See Note at James i. 3., and on εἰς ἔπαινον see Note on Rom. xiii. 3.

8, 9. οὐκ εἰδότες] "though not having seen [in the flesh, on earth], yet," &c. The ground of that trust, and indeed consummation by anticipation, is expressed in the terms κομιζόμενοι—σωτηρίαν, where κομ. is supposed to be an agonistic metaphor. By the intermediate words it is intimated, that that trust is not only a hopeful, but an inexpressibly joyful one. As the happiness prepared in another world for the righteous is so great as to be inconceivable to human imagination (1 Cor. ii. 9.); so it may well be, as it is here said, unspeakable. "And (observes Bp. Beveridge) if it is joy unspeakable, while they do not see Him; what, then, will it be, when they do?"

10, 11. The Apostle now sets forth the preciousness of this salvation, by showing what a deep interest was taken in it by the Prophets, who earnestly inquired into it.

— περὶ ἧς—προφ.] The sense is: “Concerning which [felicity, and its nature], the Prophets studiously examined, and diligently inquired after; [the Prophets, I say], who prophesied of the grace which was to come unto you.” “The prophets (says Rosenm.) knew that something good was reserved for our later times; but the exact nature they did not fully comprehend. They prophesied of the blessings whereof we are partakers; though mostly shadowed under types and figures.”

11. ἔρευν. εἰς τίνα—δόξας.] The sense seems to be: “investigating at what particular period, and what kind of times [whether of national prosperity, or of adversity] that would happen, which the Holy Spirit within them, given by Christ, had showed to them; signifying what Christ should suffer, and the glory to which he should be exalted.” The Apostle is supposed to have had in view Dan. ix. 22. sq. Ἀτὰ εἰς Χρ. παθήματα supply ἑσόμενα, scil. ἀποβησόμενα. The δόξας has reference to his resurrection, ascension, and final glorification. See John xiii. 31. Acts iii. 13.

12. οἷς ἀπεκαλύφθη—ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι.] “To whom (in consequence of their anxious inquiry) it was revealed, that not for their own benefit, or with relation to themselves, but for us, and to us, they were made ministers of announcing those things unto us; [those things I say] which now have been [plainly] revealed to you by those who have preached the Gospel to you, through the influence and assistance of the Holy Spirit sent from heaven; [things, I say] over which the angels bend with admiration, and desire to look into.” Of this peculiar sense of διακονεῖν an example is cited by Rosenm. from Joseph. Ant. vi. 13. ταῦτα δὲ τῶν πεμφθέντων διακονούντων πρὸς τὸν Νάβαλον. By the αἱ are meant all the wonderful things above mentioned, before they took place not thoroughly known to the Angels, but now contemplated with wonder and delight. In παρὰ (on which term see Note at James i. 25.) there is supposed to be an allusion to the Cherubim which were represented as bending over the Ark of the covenant.

So Bp. Sanderson in his Sermon ad Aul. § 14., says, “they peep a little (παρὰ κρυπ.) into those incomprehensible mysteries, and then cover their faces with their wings and peep again, and cover again; as not being able to endure the fulness of that glorious lustre that shineth therein.” The above appears to me a better representation of the true import of παρὰ. than that presented by later Commentators, who understand it of comprehensive and thorough knowledge. But I agree with Bp. Sanderson, that the expression ἐπιθυμοῦσι imports only a desire, not any perfectibility. In fact, from the term conjoined with it, it is plainly desire not thoroughly gratified; for prying into a thing surely implies such. That παρὰ may have that force, is plain from Luke xxiv. 12. John xx. 5. where it occurs in the physical sense. In John i. 25. it occurs, as here, in the moral or metaphorical sense, and denotes the looking into the Gospel to appreciate its excellence, just as a person looks at any thing through a glass, to see it more clearly. This sense of παρὰ. I am enabled to confirm from Lucian Pisc. § 38., where speaking of the moral maxims of the Philosophers, he says: καὶ ἐπειδὴ μόνον παρέκνυφα τὰ ὑμέτερα, “and after I had only taken a slight peep into your maxims.” Thus the meaning, in the present case, seems to be, that the Angels have just such a glimpse of the Gospel as to admire it, and desire to know more of it; but not sufficient insight to thoroughly fathom and entirely comprehend what “passeth knowledge.” (Eph. iii. 19.)

13. On the above impressive representation of the glories and blessings of the Gospel, the Apostle now founds some urgent exhortations to a holy life, suitable to such high privileges and promises. The metaphor in ἀναζωσ. (in which, as Rosenm. says, there is a blending of the image of the thing with the thing expressed by the image) is derived from the Oriental custom of girding the long flowing robes about the loins on engaging in any active exertion. The sense, therefore simply is, “engage with activity in working out your salvation.” The passage is almost copied by Polycarp, Ch. ii. “Wherefore, girding up the loins of your mind, serve the Lord with fear.” On νήφ. see 1 Thess. v. 6. 2 Tim. iv. 5. Τελείως is by some taken for εἰς τέλος, by others explained constantly, or entirely; perhaps the two significations may be united. Φερομένην, &c., “which is brought or offered to you by,” or, “which is to be conferred on you at the appearance of Christ [to judgment].”

14. ὡς τέκνα ὑπακοῆς.] By this (as Calvin remarks) it is intimated, 1. that we are called of God through the Gospel to the privilege and honour of adoption. 2. That we are adopted on the condition of acquitting ourselves as obedient sons. For though obedience does not make sons, yet it discerns sons from aliens.

— μὴ συσχημ.] See Note at Rom. xii. 2. and compare iv. 2. Ἐν τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ is for ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ τῆς ἀγνοίας, which occurs at Acts xvii. 3., i. e. before they had been enlightened by the Gospel.

15. τὸν καλέσαντα] scil. Θεόν. Gal. v. 8. The Apostle (as Calvin remarks) shows this from the end and purpose of calling, "Deus nos sibi in peculium segregat: ergo inquinamentis omnibus puros esse oportet."

17. καὶ εἰ Πατέρα—ἀναστράφ.] A second argument for a virtuous life, derived from the Divine goodness and justice. Εἰ, for διότι, since. Πατέρα ἐπικ., &c., "ye worship as a father, Him who impartially judgeth according to every one's works," showing no preference to Jews over Gentiles. Compare a similar sentiment at Acts x. 34. On ἀναστρ. see 2 Cor. i. 12. Eph. ii. 3. and on παροικίας, see Heb. xi. 13. With the expression τὸν τῆς παροικίας ὑμῶν χρόνον I have noted a correspondent one in Philostr. Vit. Ap. i. 22. χρόνος τῆς ἀποδημίας. Ἐν φόβῳ, is for μετὰ φόβον, Phil. ii. 12.

18—21. εἰδότες ὅτι—πατροπ.] "knowing [as ye do], and bearing in mind, that ye were not, by corruptible things, [however precious] (as gold and silver), liberated from your vain and foolish manner of life, received from your forefathers." Ματαίας, vicious, as Tit. iii. 9., and so ματαιότης at Eph. iv. 17. Ps. xiii. 11. lvii. 2.; alluding both to idolatry, and to the vices which it brought with it. Ἐν ἐλυτρώθητε καὶ τιμῇ αἱματι there is a strong allusion to the work of atonement, effected by the sacrifice of Christ. And in ἀμώμου καὶ ἀσπ., there is an allusion to the perfection required in the legal victims, which typified the great sacrifice of Christ; with reference either to the paschal lamb, or to the lamb which was daily sacrificed for the sins of the people.

20, 21. Of these vv. the sense may be thus expressed: "Of that Christ, I say, who was ordained, or destined to this work of liberation and redemption before the creation of the world; but made his appearance in these latter times for your sakes; who, by him and his preaching, trust in God, that raised him from the dead and glorified him; so that your faith and hope are [reposed] in God." Προεγν. is used, as in Rom. viii. 29, where the word is joined with προορίζειν. Of this sense the most apposite example I have met with is Thucyd. ii. 64. fin. On ἐσχ. τῶν χρόνων see Heb. i. 1. and Note. Τὴν πίστιν here denotes faith and trust, and the clause may be thus paraphrased, with Benson and Rosenm.: "in vain do your countrymen charge you with defection from God; for your very faith and hope in Christ tend to that God of whom they profess to be worshippers."

22. τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν ἡγνικότες, &c.] To the above exhortation to holiness the Apostle subjoins another to charity, and the sense is: "Wherefore, having purified your hearts by your obedience, through the Spirit, to the true doctrine [the Gospel], so far as to bear a sincere love to your Christian brethren, see that ye [continue to] love each other with a pure heart, and ardently." The words διὰ Πν. are in several MSS. not found. But they were probably omitted ex emendatione, as seeming to overload the sense. Yet they were no doubt inserted by the Apostle to inculcate the important doctrine of the influence of the Holy Spirit, both in the promulgation of the Gospel, and in its operation on the hearts of believers unto sanctification. Ἐκ κατ. καρδίας is taken as at 1 Tim. i. 5. I would compare Æschyl. Eum. 282. ἀφ' ἀγνοῦ στόματος.

23. ἀναγεγεννη.] We have here another argument of exhortation, on which the best comment is a similar passage at James i. 18, where see Note. Μένοντος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα may be referred either to God (with Grot. and Elsn., who cite Dan. vi. 26.

αὐτός ἐστι Θεὸς ζῶν καὶ μένων), or to λόγου, i. e. the Gospel; and this latter method, which is adopted by Pisc., Vorst, Wolf, and almost all recent Commentators, is more agreeable to the propriety of language and the context, especially the subsequent citation.

24, 25. In confirmation of the above position, is here adduced a quotation (by application) of the words of Isa. xl. 6—8, which passage is regarded by the best Commentators as prophetic of the eternal duration of the truths of the Gospel. The Apostle, too, intimates that the carnal ordinances of the Jews would soon be done away; whereas the Gospel dispensation would continue for ever. The words τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα—αἰῶνα may be paraphrased, "But the word of the Lord is invariably true, always efficacious, and tending to eternal life and happiness." Τοῦτο δὲ—εἰς ὑμᾶς. The sense is: "and that eternal truth is the very doctrine which is preached to you."

II. Having shown that the faithful are regenerated by the word of God, the Apostle now exhorts them to lead a life correspondent thereto. For if we live in the Spirit, we must also, as St. Paul says, walk in the Spirit. (Gal. v. 25.) Therefore it is not sufficient for us to have been once renewed by the Lord, unless we live as becometh new creatures. Such is the general meaning. With respect to the words themselves, here the Apostle continues the same metaphor before used; meaning to say, that since we are become regenerate, we must become as little children, i. e. we must put off the old man with his works. According to what our Saviour says, Matt. xviii. 3. (Calvin.)

1, 2. Compare similar passages at Rom. vi. 4. Eph. iv. 25. Tit. iii. 2. Τὸ λογικὸν ἄδολον γάλα, "the pure and uncorrupt doctrines of the Gospel." The same use of ἄδολος occurs in Æschyl. Agamem. 94. ἀδόλοισι παρηγορίαις, where Bp. Blomf. compares Pind. Ol. vi. 99. ἄδολος σοφία. "Ἴνα ἐν αὐτῷ αὐξῇ," "that ye may make a progress in Christian holiness." See 1 Cor. iii. 2.

3. εἵπερ ἐγεύσασθε—Κύριος.] Render: "since that ye have experienced how gracious the Lord is;" taken from Ps. xxxiv. 9: in other words, "As infants, in experiencing the sweetness and purity of the mother's milk, seek it the more, and love the mother the better; so ye Christians, who have experienced the salubrity of the milk of doctrine, should be similarly affected towards Christ."

4, 5. Here the Apostle describes the Christian Church and its duties, under images borrowed from the Temple and its services; alluding to Isa. xxviii. 16, where Christ is called "a living stone," as having life in himself, and being the source of spiritual light to all the members of his body, the Church: Eph. iv. 16. Col. ii. 9. comp. v. 7. Now those who come to him, i. e. who believe in him (Hebr. xii. 18, 22.) are "as lively stones built up a spiritual house;" i. e. are not like the inanimate things of the material Temple, but living men built up on Christ, this living and chief corner-stone, into a spiritual society, which is called spiritual, as having the Spirit of Christ, their founder and head, residing in it, Rom. viii. 9. Gal. iv. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16. They are also "an holy priesthood," or, as they are called, v. 9. "a royal priesthood," in a higher sense than the Israelites were called "a kingdom of priests," Exod. xix. 6; for they are appointed "to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ," v. 5. Rev. i. 6. In this spiritual society, the Church, there is no need of the mediation of priests to present our offerings to God, as in the Levitical temple; but every sincere worshipper can, as if he were a priest, offer for himself the spiritual sacrifices of prayer, praise, and obedience, which will be most acceptable to God, through the mediation of Christ, Mal. i. 11. Rom. xii. 1. Hebr. xiii. 15, 16. (Holden.) The above detail of the sense is founded on the discussions of the best Commentators, as given in Rec. Syn. The nature of the metaphor (which is singular) is, I think, by no one so well traced as by Dr. A. Clarke. "As (says he) all the stones [namely, sons and daughters] that constitute the spiritual building are made partakers of the life, Christ, they may, with propriety, be called living stones, i. e. sons and daughters of God, who live by Christ Jesus, because He lives in them. Accordingly, these various living stones become one grand Temple, in which God is worshipped, and in which he manifests himself as he did in the Temple of old." The two verses are closely connected; the former containing a protasis, the latter an apodosis; and the purpose of them is to exhort Christians not only to receive, but to practise the precepts of the Gospel. Παρὰ Θεῷ ἐκλ. ἔντ. should be rendered, "but in the sight of God elect and precious." I would compare from Oracula Sibyll. ἐκλεκτὸν παρὰ Πατρὶ Θεῷ καὶ τίμιον εἶναι. On the term προσερχ., see Note at 1 Tim. vi. 3—5.

6, 7. Returning to the subject of v. 4, the Apostle shows that, in a passage of the O. T., Christ is compared with a corner-stone, and those who fly to this stone are declared blessed. (Pott.) Περιέχει, for περιέχεται. So the Pesch. Syr. "dicitur." Of this sense an example is cited by Rosenm. from Joseph. Antiq. xi. 4, 7. καθὼς ἐν αὐτῇ (scil. ἐπιστολῇ) περιέχει. See Note at Rom. ix. 33. The words here cited do not, indeed, exactly correspond with the words either of the Hebrew or the Sept.; but they very well represent the sense; especially in that sublimer and mystical acceptation, which was doubtless intended by the Prophet in conjunction with the primary one; in which security in Sion (or Jerusalem) is promised to all who take refuge there from the tyranny of Sennacherib.

— ὑμῖν οὖν — γωνίας.] Render: "Unto you, therefore, who [thus] firmly believe, belongs the preciousness [which I speak of]." On this mode of taking τιμὴ, the most eminent of the later Commentators are agreed. The earlier, and, indeed, Expositors in general, take τιμὴ as put for ἔντιμος; which might be tolerated as regards the usus loquendi; for so I find in Plutarch de Is. and Osir. § 5. οὐδὲν οὐτω τιμὴ Αἰγυπτίοις ὡς ὁ Νεῖλος. Yet the sense arising is not so apposite. Τοῖς ἀπειθ., "as regards the unbelieving and disobedient." Λίθος προσκ. Render, "a stone at which any one may stumble." Just as a corner-stone, though placed to sustain the walls of a building, yet may be stumbled at by a careless passer by, to his injury.

8. οἱ προσκόπτουσι — ἀπειθ.] These words are exegetical of the preceding, and intimate the application. Εἰς ὃ (scil. πρόσκομμα) ἐτέθησαν. The best Commentators are agreed that, by a popular idiom, it is only meant that into this stumbling and disobedience they were permitted by God to fall. See Is. viii. 15. compared with Matt. xxi. 44. Luke ii. 34. Rom. ix. 32.

9, 10. The Apostle again sets forth the Christian privileges to be obtained by faith in Christ. See Note supra iii. 4. The expression γένος ἐκλ. is derived from Is. xliii. 20; βασιλ. ἱερ. from Exod. xix. 6; ἔθνος ἅγιον from Deut. vii. 6. xiv. 2; and λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν from Exod. xix. 5. and Mal. iii. 17. See Note on Acts xx. 28. All these expressions are still more applicable to Christians. "Ὅπως τὰς — φῶς," that ye should show forth [by words and deeds] the praises of Him who hath called [and drawn] you from the darkness [of ignorance, sin, and misery] to the light of knowledge, truth, and happiness." Ἐξαγγ. literally signifies, "to tell those without what is done within," and is used as in the present passage at Ps. lxxi. 15. lxxiii. 28.

10. οἱ ποτὲ — Θεοῦ.] The full import is, "who formerly were not a people of God, but now are so; who were not [formerly] received into favour, and made a people of God, but now have become such." The words are taken from Hos. ii. 25, with an application to Christians.

11, 12. These verses contain an exhortation to live worthy of so precious a Gospel, especially by abstaining from all lasciviousness and immorality, or sensuality. Comp. Rom. vi. 12. James iv. 1. The nature of the argument here will be best seen by supposing (with Grot., Rosenm., and Pott) that the Apostle is reminding them of their situation as παρόικοι and παρεπίδημοι in a foreign country, and also of their like situation in this world, as compared with the next. He then, in the following verse, takes occasion, from their situation as Christian strangers in Heathen countries, to press on them the duty of adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. In the words αἵτινες στρατ. κ. τ. ψ. there is a military metaphor. Ἀναστροφὴν, "conduct." See Note on James iii. 13. At ἐποπτ. must be understood, not (as Rosenm. supposes) ὑμᾶς, but αὐτά, i. e. τὰ καλὰ ἔργα; as is clear from a kindred passage at iii. 2. ἐποπτεύσαντες τὴν ἀγνὴν ἀναστροφὴν ὑμῶν. Ἐποπτεύω signifies to inspect closely; and ἐποπτεύσαντες is for ἐὰν ἐποπτεύσωσι, i. e. upon close inspection and severe scrutiny. By this means (it is said) they may be led to glorify God, i. e. to give glory and praise to, and conceive highly of, that God and religion whereof they before thought and spoke evil. Compare 1 Cor. xiv. 25. The expression ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς is variously interpreted; by some, of the day of Judgment, or at least of the infliction of Divine punishment, at the destruction of Jerusalem; by others, of the day, or time, of persecution and affliction, as respected the Christians: by others, again, of the time of God's visiting the unbelieving with a conviction of the truth of the Gospel. The last-mentioned interpretation (which is supported by Calvin, Estius, and Schott), seems preferable, as being most suitable to the context. Nor is it without proof; for God is in Scripture said to visit men, both in wrath and in mercy. So Psalm cvi. 4. "visit me with thy salvation;" also Ps. viii. 4. compared with Heb. ii. 6. and Luke i. 68. Acts xv. 14. And here it is so called (in the words of Calvin) "quod Deus sancta et honesta suorum vitā tanquam preparatione utitur, ut in viam errantes reducat," the holy lives of Christian people being the means of impressing them with the feeling of the truth of the Gospel, which brings forth such fruits.

13, 14. The Apostle now illustrates the general precept of vv. 11, 12, by the particular duties to be observed among the Heathens, both by Jewish and Gentile Christians.—(Pott.) Ὑποτάγητε. Compare similar admonitions at Rom. xiii. 1. seqq. and Tit. iii. 1. The sense here of κτίσις, "political institution," is rare, and founded on the use of the Hebr. מַלְאכָה, like that of the Latin creare as used of appointing magistrates. There is no real discrepancy in what St. Peter here says of the magistracy as a human ordination, and what St. Paul says at Rom. xiii. 1, that the Powers which be (or rule) are ordained of God. For, as Bp. Sanderson observes, in his Sermon ad Magistr. p. 110, "the substance of the power of every magistrate is the ordinance of God; but the specification of the circumstances thereto belonging; as in regard of places, persons, titles, continuance, jurisdiction, subordination, and the rest, is a human ordinance, introduced by custom, or positive law."

15. ἀγνωσία here refers to false accusations, or unfounded objections, as arising from the ignorance or prejudices τῶν ἀφρόνων.

16. ὡς ἐλεύθεροι—ἐλευθερίαν.] On this text see an admirable Discourse of Bp. Sanderson, (Sermon 7 ad Clerum,) where, after observing that "there is not any thing in the world more generally desired than liberty, nor scarce any thing more generally abused, he shows that such has been the case even in respect of that blessed liberty which the eternal Son of God purchased for his Church. Accordingly, St. Peter and St. Paul, the two chief planters of the Churches, endeavoured to early instruct believers in the true doctrine, and direct them in the right use of their Christian liberty, especially in the cases of scandal, and of obedience. St. Paul usually treats of the former: St. Peter (having to deal mostly with stiff-necked and insubordinate Jews) generally the latter; and no where more fully than in this Chapter." The learned Prelate then proceeds to show that the words of the text are to be understood as an anticipation of an objection, which might be made by some new converts of the Jews; q. d. "We have been taught, that the Son of God hath made us free, and then we are free indeed; and so not bound to subject ourselves to any masters and governors upon earth,—no, not to kings; but much rather bound not to do it, that so we may preserve that freedom which Christ hath purchased for us, and reserve ourselves the more entirely for God's service, by refusing to be the servants of men. This objection the Apostle clearly taketh off in the text. He tells them, that being indeed set at liberty by Christ, they are not therefore any more to enthrall themselves to any living soul or other creature; not to submit to any ordinance of man as slaves, that is, as if the ordinance itself did by any proper direct, and immediate virtue, bind the conscience. But yet, notwithstanding, they might and ought to submit thereunto as the Lord's free-men, and in a free manner; i. e. by a voluntary and unenforced both subjection to their power, and obedience to their lawful commands. They must, therefore, take heed that they use not their liberty for an occasion to the flesh,—nor, under so fair a title, palliate an evil licentiousness, making that a cloak for their irreverent and undutiful carriage towards their superiors."

Before deducing the general doctrine to be gathered from the whole of the text, the learned writer just quoted discusses some of the expressions contained therein, particularly the words ὡς ἐλεύθεροι. These, he shows, have reference to the exhortation a little before, v. 13, as declaring the manner in which the duty there inculcated ought to be performed; yet so that the force of them reaches to the exhortations also contained in the verses next after the text; q. d. "Submit yourselves to public governors, both supreme and subordinate; be subject to your own particular masters; honour all men with those proper respects due to their stations: but do all this [not as slaves, but] as free; do it without any impeachment of the liberty you have in Christ." Finally, the learned Prelate ably discusses the import of the term κακία, which he shows is here to be taken in a larger sense, of sin and iniquity in general, yet with especial reference to that particular kind of it before spoken of, insubordination and disobedience to lawfully constituted authority. Accordingly, the injunction of St. Peter here is akin to that of St. Paul at Gal. v. 13. μὴ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκί, where the expression σὰρξ has reference to carnality of every kind. And here most true is the remark of Bp. Sanderson elsewhere, "If flesh and blood be suffered to make the gloss, it is able to corrupt a right good text. It easily turneth the doctrine of God's grace into a wantonness, and as easily the doctrine of Christian liberty into licentiousness." Ὡς δούλοι Θεοῦ; i. e. "as bound to the observance of the divine laws," and therefore subject to those whom God wills us to serve.

17. πάντας τιμήσατε.] "Honour all," viz. to whom honour is due; as Rom. xiii. 7. A general injunction afterwards explained by its species. τὴν ἀδελφότητα ἀγ., "love the Christian fraternity." τὸν Θεὸν φοβείσθε. This term in Scripture unites the kindred ideas of reverence (including worship) and obedience.

18—20.] See a similar admonition at Eph. vi. 5—8.

21—23. The Apostle now suggests a powerful motive to this obedience to the will of God, holding out for their imitation the example of CHRIST who bore more cruel contumelies, and more grievous sufferings with unshaken constancy. See what is said in a Sermon of Bp. Atterbury on this text, entitled "The Christian state a state of suffering."

24. ὃς τὰς ἁμαρτίας—ἰάσθητε.] An allusion to Is. liii. 12, and denoting (as the best Expositors are agreed) "who bare the punishment of our sins upon the cross;" for that ἀναφέρειν has that sense, has been before abundantly proved. Thus this passage and that of Heb. ix. 28, emphatically attest the doctrine of the vicarious and atoning nature of Christ's sufferings, especially the words οὗ τῷ μῶλωπι αὐτοῦ ἰάθ., "by whose stripes and wounds (μῶλ. being a singular used generically) your spiritual wounds and maladies are healed." So Is. viii. 3. "He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows," both which terms indicate spiritual sicknesses, produced by sin. Thus the ancient philosophers regarded vicious passions and affections as sicknesses of the mind, ex. gr. Plut. Op. Moral. vi. 24. 4. τῶν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀρρώσθημάτων καὶ παθῶν ἡ φιλοσοφία μόνη φάρμακόν ἐστι. The words ἵνα ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις—ζήσωμεν note the purpose of this vicarious sacrifice, and are intended to hint at the bounden duty of believers; namely, "that we, being freed from the guilt of sin, and having renounced the practice of it, (see Rom. vi. 2,) should live to the purposes of righteousness." The words at v. 25, ἥτε γὰρ—ὑμῶν are meant to set in a strong light the preciousness of the salvation, by contrast with the opposite; and present a fine image of unmixed misery and utter destitution. There is here a blending of the image with the thing compared: and ἐπίσκ. is added to explain how Christ is our shepherd.

III. 1. ὁμοίως, αἱ γυν.] Here are carried forward the duties of obedience,—from that of subjects to sovereigns and servants to masters, to the domestic and family relations of wives to husbands. By the subjection here enjoined is meant such as is agreeable to the customs and laws subsisting in any country. Yet the term never authorizes more than ready and willing, not slavish, obedience. In which view Rosenm. cites Joseph. Ant. i. xlix. 8. (of the maidens of Leah and Rachel) δούλαι μὲν οὐδαμῶς, ὑποτεταγμέναι δέ. Ἀπειθ. τῷ λόγῳ, “are not believers in the Gospel, have not embraced it.” Τῆς ἀναστροφῆς, “the conduct,” i. e. such virtuous and prudent conduct as the Apostle here enjoins. Ἄνευ λόγου, i. e. without any formal argument or proof. Such fruits of the Gospel supply a tacit, but powerful proof of its beneficial tendency, and a popular argument for its truth. Κερδ., i. e. may be gained over to the Gospel, put into the way of salvation.

2. ἐν φόβῳ] for σὺν φόβῳ, i. e. with respectful deportment. See Eph. v. 33.

3. ὧν ἔστω οὐχ—κόσμος.] This injunction like a similar admonition at 1 Tim. ii. 9. sq., is to be understood in a comparative sense; the οὐ being for non tam—quam. Indeed, that passage is the best comment on the present, and to the parallel sentiments from ancient authors there adduced, I would add, from Menander: Γυναικὶ κόσμος ὁ τρόπος, οὐ τὰ χρυσία. On the points of antiquities connected with this passage, see the Note on 1 Tim.

4. ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς κ. ἀνθρ.] i. e. let it extend to the mind, τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, Rom. vii. 22., internal and mental, as opposed to external ornament; q. d. “Vestments soon fade and wear out, while the internal ornament is ever-during.” The Θεοῦ is emphatical, involving an opposition to the preference too often given to external over internal excellencies.

5, 6. The Apostle now enforces his exhortation to the internal ornament, and the conjugal respect here enjoined, by showing that such had been the practice of the faithful people of God from the remotest antiquity; as, for instance, among the wives of the Patriarchs. The phrase ἐλπίζ. ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν is derived from the Sept., denoting a devoted attachment to God. By κύριον καλ., is meant acknowledging her subjection. So the Roman wives called their husbands, as we may infer from Virg. Æn. iv. 214. Con nubia nostra Repulit, ac dominum Æneam in regna receptit, and iv. 10. Phrygio servire marito. This subjection seems to have been kept up longest in the East, where customs never change; but was early laid aside in the hardy countries of the North; for from the Germania of Tacitus it appears, that the situation there of wives differed little from what it is in civilized countries of Europe at the present day. However, the subjection of Sarah to Abraham was not slavish. So Philo vol. ii. p. 36. 9. says of Abraham: διὰ τὴν τιμὴν, ἣν ἀπένευμε τῇ γαμέτῃ. The words ἀγαθοποιῶσαι—πτόησιν are variously interpreted. See Recens. Synop. It should seem best to understand them with Est., Calvin, and partly Rosenm., of not being frightened from persevering in their duty, or in their Christian profession, by giving way to excessive timidity. With the φοβούμεναι μηδεμίαν πτόησιν here compare the τὸν φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβ. at v. 15.

7. κατὰ γνῶσιν] i. e. in a manner suitable to the superior knowledge you enjoy by the Gospel. Ὡς ἀσθεν. σκεύει τῷ γυναικείῳ. The exact nature of the metaphor in σκεύει is not very clear. It is generally interpreted tool, utensil, organon, as Aristotle calls the wife. As, however, σκεῖος literally signifies any thing made, so it may here very well have the sense creature. Some MSS. have here μέρει, party, which, though evidently a gloss, well expresses the sense. The expression τιμῇ is, by the context, determined to denote that kind of respect, attention, and care, which is shown for valuable, but fragile, articles. So a Rabbin cited by Schoettg. says: “Sicut honor quidam habetur crystallinis, quia solliciti tractantur." So also Eurip. Troad. 735. ὦ φίλτατ', ὦ περισσὰ τιμηθεῖς τέκνον, and Orest. 449. παῖδ' ἀγκαλαῖσι περιφέρων, τιμῶν τε. Why they are entitled to be thus treated, is then subjoined,—namely, that they are fellow heirs with their husbands of the same salvation. A further reason, too, is added, namely, εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐγκόπτεσθαι τὰς προσευχὰς ὑμῶν, i. e. to prevent that greatest evil arising from want of domestic harmony,—that the minds of the parties cannot unite in prayer, and are indeed indisposed for that fervent supplication which can alone be effectual. Here, for συγκληρονόμοι, many MSS. and the textus receptus have συγκληρονόμοις. But the former is, with reason, preferred by all the most eminent Editors. Moreover, for the common reading ἐκκόπτεσθαι, many MSS. and all the early Editions have ἐγκ. which is preferred by almost all Critics, was adopted by Wets., and has been edited by Beng., Griesb., Matth., Vater, and Tittm.; and certainly it is more agreeable to the context.

8. Here are subjoined some general directions to Christians at large; exhorting them to mutual love and concord, kind treatment of all men, even enemies, as most likely to soften their animosity, and draw down the favour of God. Τὸ τέλος is best rendered by Erasm., Grot., Rosenm., and Pott, "in summā;" equivalent to the Classical ἐν κεφαλαίῳ. Ὁμόφρ. is equivalent to the τὸ αὐτὸ φρονούντες at Rom. xii. 16. xv. 5. and the τὸ ἐν φρονούντες of Phil. ii. 2. The verb ὁμοφρονεῖν sometimes occurs in the later Greek writers. And so Livy L. x. 22. says, "admonendo, ut uno animo, una mente viverent." On the expression φιλάδελφ., see Note at i. 22., and compare Col. iii. 12. sq. For φιλόφρονες, several MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have ταπεινώφρ., which was preferred by Calvin and Bengel, and introduced into the text by Griesb., Knapp, Vater, Tittm., and Lachm. I cannot venture to follow their example: for external evidence is quite in favour of the common reading: as also, I think, is the internal. It is surely less easy to imagine that φιλόφρ.

might have been introduced from the preceding φιλάδελφοι, than to suppose that ταπεινώφρ. arose, as Matthæi supposes, from the Scholiasts or Catenists. Perhaps, however, it is an ancient alteration of the homily writers; for, as Matthæi observes, φιλοφροσύνη is a word occurring nowhere else in the N. T.; and, like φιλοξενία at iv. 9., is more of a virtus civilis, and far inferior to the rest here mentioned. On the contrary ταπεινοφροσύνη is a Christian virtue of the highest rank; and the word elsewhere occurs in the N. T.

9. On ἀποδ. κακὸν ἀντί κακοῦ see Rom. xii. 17. and Note; and on εὐλογ. Matt. v. 44. Εἰς τοῦτο—κληρονομ. The argument is, "To this end were ye called, that ye should obtain a blessing [from God], i. e. every sort of felicity; therefore it behoves you to wish and pray for blessings upon others."

10—12. The preceding words εἰδότες ὅτι—κληρον. are, in some measure, parenthetical; and on the words λοιδορίαν ἀντί λοιδ. the Apostle engrafs an exhortation to curb the tongue, in words derived from Ps. xxxiv. 13, 14., though with a slight adaptation. Ὁ θέλων ζωὴν ἀγαπᾶν may be rendered, "he who desires to enjoy life and happiness."

—οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ, &c.] The ὀφθ. suggests intense observance and watching over; and the ὦτα implies readiness to hearken to their petitions. Πρόσωπον—ἐπὶ graphically represents the anger of the Lord.

13—15. καὶ τίς ὁ—γέννησθε:] The interrogation implies a strong negation. The words are, however, to be understood with some qualification; for it is plain from the context, that this is not meant as an assurance that they shall never be harmed; but only not so as to be utterly ruined by them; though "persecuted, yet not forsaken;" though "cast down," yet "not destroyed;" 2 Cor. iv. 9. Thus, as observes Bp. Sanderson, in his second Sermon at Aulam (on a kindred declaration at Prov. xvi. 7. "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him") q. d. "So long as you carry yourselves graciously and wisely, if the hearts of your enemies will not be so far wrought upon as to love and affect you; yet their mou̇ths will be muzzled, and their hands manacled from breaking out into any outrageous either terms or actions of open hostility: so as you shall enjoy your peace with them in some measure. Though they mean you no good, yet they shall do you no harm." In both these passages we see the "duty of man" is marked out, as a præ-requisite to the fulfilment of the promise, God ordinarily in his Providence working by second causes." "Moreover (as the learned prelate points out) these and all scriptures that regard temporal promises (as here and 2 Pet. ii. 9.) are to be understood, not as universally, but as commonly true, not absolutely, but with this reservation, 'unless the Lord in his infinite wisdom sees cause why it should be good for us to have it otherwise.' Thus the injury may be understood of what is real injury and evil, or what is such in the long run, and ultimately such." In the next words εἰ καὶ πάσχετε διὰ δικ., μακάριοι, the argument is the same as in Matt. v. 10, 11.

— Κύριον δὲ—ὑμῶν.] This has been variously interpreted; but the best Expositors are in general agreed that it means, "Let the Lord God be made the object of your most heartfelt reverence, so as to be deeply impressed with a sense of his holiness and all-perfect attributes. "This fear of God (says Abp. Leighton) turns other fears out of doors; there is no room for them where this great fear is; and being greater than they all, yet it disturbs not as they do, yea, it brings as great quiet as they brought trouble."

— πρὸς ἀπολογίαν] for λόγον δίδοναι. See Acts xxii. 1. Μετὰ πρᾶυτῆτος καὶ φ., "mildly and respectfully."

16. ἵνα ἐν ᾧ καταλαλοῦσιν—ἀναστροφῇν.] Render, "so that in that whereof they speak against you, as evil doers, they who thus slander your virtuous and Christian conversation may be ashamed," i. e. put to the shame of being convicted of falsehood. On ἐπηρ. see Note at Matt. v. 44.

17, 18. The Apostle here (by anticipation) comforts the Christians under the injuries of the profane, by an argument derived from the will of God, and the example of Christ; q. d. "He who suffers for crimes can expect no recompense; but he who suffers for God may confidently look forward to a 'sure reward.' Again, at ὅτι καὶ Χριστὸς—ἀδίκων the argument is, "If Christ suffered for us who were then evil, how much more should we be prepared to die, or suffer tribulation, for the glory of Christ, and the edification of Christians." Προσαγά- γγῃ, i. e. bring us unto a state of reconciliation.

—Θανατωθεὶς—πνεύματι.] There is an antithesis between σαρκί and πνεύματι; the former denoting Christ's human nature, wherein he suffered in the body; the latter, his Divine and spiritual nature.

19. ἐν ᾧ καὶ τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι, &c.] 'Εν ᾧ, "by which Spirit," namely, his pre-existent and Divine nature. Much obscurity, however, hangs over this passage, of which the interpretations are very various. Many (as Beza, Elsn., and Mackn.), take the meaning to be, not that the spirits were in prison at the time when Christ preached to them through Noah; but that he preached by his Spirit, or Divine nature, to the antediluvians, who are now (viz. in the age of the Apostle) in prison, detained, like the fallen angels, unto the day of judgment, Jude 6. And Beza and Benson think that the Apostle proposes this example to their brethren, to deter them from being corrupted by those around them. The latter explains, "the state of the dead." So Dr. Burton interprets, "in which character he also went and preached to those persons who are now confined spirits, but who then were disobedient," &c. This view, however, is liable to numerous objections: and, upon the whole, I know of no mode of interpretation so natural, or involving so little difficulty as the common one, (supported by the ancient and many of the ablest modern Expositors) by which this is understood to denote (according to the plain tenour of the words) that Christ went down and preached (i. e. proclaimed his Gospel) to the Antediluvians in Hades. And it is shown by Bp. Horsley (in an able Sermon on this text) and Mr. Slade, that this plain and obvious sense is not to be rejected because it contains what may seem strange and unaccountable; otherwise scarcely any thing might be believed. "The interpretation of this whole passage (says Bp. Horsley) turns upon the expression 'spirits in prison.' Now it is hardly necessary to mention that spirits here can signify no other spirits than the souls of men; for we read not of any preaching of Christ to any other race of beings than mankind. The Apostle's assertion therefore is this, that Christ went and preached to souls of men in prison. The invisible mansion of departed spirits, though certainly not a place of penal confinement to the good, is nevertheless in some respects a prison. It is a place of seclusion from the external world, a place of unfinished happiness, consisting in rest, security, and hope, more than enjoyment. It is a place which the souls of men never would have entered, had not sin introduced death, and from which there is no exit by any natural means for those who have once entered. The deliverance of the saints from it is to be effected by our Lord's power. As a place of confinement, therefore, though not of punishment, it may well be called a prison. The original word, however, in this text imports not of necessity so much as this, but merely a place of safe keeping; for so this passage might be rendered with great exactness: He went and preached to the spirits in safe keeping. And the invisible mansion of departed spirits is to the righteous a place of safe keeping, where they are preserved under the shadow of God's right hand, as their condition sometimes is described in Scripture, till the season shall arrive for their advancement to future glory; as the souls of the wicked on the other hand, are reserved, in the other division of the same place, unto the judgment of the great day. Now, if Christ went and preached to souls of men thus in prison, or in safe keeping, surely he went to the prison of those souls, or to the place of their custody; and what place that should be but the hell of the Apostles' creed, to which our Lord descended, I have not met with the Critic that could explain. The souls in custody, or in prison, to whom our Saviour went in his disembodied soul, and preached, were those which formerly were disobedient. The expression formerly were, or one while had been disobedient, implies, that they were recovered, however, from that disobedience, and, before their death, had been brought to repentance and faith in the Redeemer to come. To such souls he went and preached. But what did he preach to departed souls, and what could be the end of his preaching? Certainly he preached neither repentance nor faith; for the preaching of either comes too late to the departed soul. These souls had believed and repented, or they had not been in that part of the nether regions, which the soul of the Redeemer visited. Nor was the end of his preaching any liberation of them from we know not what purgatorial pains, of which the Scriptures give not the slightest intimation. But if he went to proclaim to them the glad tidings, that he had actually offered the sacrifice of their redemption, and was about to appear before the Father as their intercessor, in the merit of his own blood, this was a preaching fit to be addressed to departed souls, and would give new animation and assurance to their hope of the consummation in due season of their bliss; and this, it may be presumed, was the end of his preaching." See more in Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 288. 1st Edit.

For the common reading ἅπαξ ἐξεδέχετο almost all the MSS. and early Editions, except the Erasmus and Stephanic ones, have ἀπεξεδέχετο, which is preferred by almost all the Critics, and edited by Beng., Wetstein, Matth., Griesb., Knapp, Tittm., and Vater. Rightly; for not only is external evidence decidedly in favour of that reading, but internal; since, considering the rarity of the word ἀπεκδέχομαι, it is likely that the scribes should fall into error, and mistake ἀπεξ. for ἅπαξ. And then those who revised the MSS. would perceive that ἐδέχετο was not right, and would, by reference to other MSS., alter it to ἐξεδέχετο, omitting to cancel the ἅπαξ. The force of ἀπο in this compound may be illustrated from the expression ἀποκαρδοκία at Rom. viii. 19. Phil. i. 20. The term denotes, "long and anxiously waited," namely, during the 120 years given the persons in question to repent on hearing the preaching of Noah.

20. εἰς ἣν ὀλίγοι—ψυχαὶ διεσώθ. δι' ὕδατος.] The best mode of treating these words is to regard διεσώθ. as a verbum prægnans, including the sense of another verb, one of motion, and corresponding to εἰς ἣν, thus: "into which a few (namely, eight) persons embarked, and were saved through the water," which last expression is to be understood like διὰ πυρὸς at 1 Cor. iii. 15.

21, 22. The sense may be thus expressed,—"The antitype to which thing (namely, what corresponds to, and was figured by the preservation of Noah and his family in the ark) doth now save us, through the resurrection of Christ, as the ark did them; [I mean] baptism, which is not merely the putting away the filth of the flesh, [by material water] but the answer of a good conscience towards God." By σώζει is meant, places us in a state of salvation."

— συνειδ. ἀγαθῆς ἐπερ. εἰς Θεόν] i. e. (as explains Mr. Holden) "by that which enables us to return such an answer, as springs from a good conscience towards God, which can be no other than the inward change and renovation wrought by the Spirit." I would compare Herodian vi. 3—9. τῆς ἀγαθῆς συνειδήσεως τὸ θαρσάλειον, the confidence arising from a good conscience. The meaning, therefore, is, that baptism, in order to save us, must not be the mere outward act, but must be also accompanied with the inward grace; in other words, it must be that baptism which our Lord described as the being born again of water and of the Spirit. See John iii. 5.

22. See Notes on Rom. viii. 34. seqq. 1 Cor. xv. 24. Eph. i. 21.

poses the example of Christ, whom he enjoins them to imitate in his holiness as well as his sufferings, whatever opposition they might encounter; and, for their comfort, he reminds them of a righteous judgment to come, when they should be rewarded, and their enemies punished.

1, 2. Χριστοῦ οὖν—ὀπλίσασθε.] The sense though disputed, seems to be: 'Since Christ suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves with the same temper of mind which animated him,' namely (to use the words of Scott), "a resigned and self-denying, meek, stedfast, and intrepid frame of spirit, resulting from confidence in God, love to him, and zeal for his glory." Of this use of ὀπλ. (in which there is a military metaphor) examples are adduced by Schleus., from Joseph. καὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ λογισμοῦ ἐγκράτειαν. Liban. ὀπλ. τῇ σωφροσύνῃ. Soph. El. 99. Σπάρσους ὀπλιζέσθαι. The result of this spirit is expressed in the words εἰς τὸ μηκέτι—χρόνον. Thus they would no longer live the time that might be allowed them on earth, conformably to the lust of men (i. e. the carnal), but to the will of God. Moreover, as the term ὀπλιζ., naturally suggests the idea of endurance, self-denial, and suffering,—so, for their consolation, the Apostle adds the reflection, ὁ παθὼν—ἁμαρτίας, namely, he that suffers is [usually or naturally] freed from the dominion of sin, the temptations of prosperity being withdrawn. For adversity, to use the words of a celebrated Poet, "leaves us leisure to be good."

3. ἀρκετὸς γὰρ, &c.] "Now let it suffice for the time past of our life to have practised the things to which the heathens are prone." I would compare Joseph. p. 844. Huds. ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος οὐκ ἐπιμέλλει ἡμῶν ἐπὶ τοῖς οὕτως βουλευθείσι μετὰ ἀρετῆς. Many ancient MSS., and most of the earlier Versions, have not the τοῦ βίου: and some are without ἡμῶν; which words are marked as probably to be omitted, by Griesb., Knapp, and Vater, and are cancelled by Lachmann. But without any sufficient reason. The emendation might, indeed, be supported from a very similar passage of Isocr.

Panegy. p. 105. Ἰκανὸς γὰρ ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος ἐν ᾧ τι τῶν δεινῶν οὐ γέγονε. But that will only serve to show the difference of the Classical from the Hellenistic style. We may, too, observe more of Scriptural simplicity and circumstantiality in the common reading. Certainly the κοινώσεις here is quite in the manner of the sacred writers. The words πεπορευμένους ἐν ἀσελγείαις are exegetical of the foregoing; and πεπορ. depends upon ἡμᾶς to be supplied at κατεργ. It signifies "habitually living." The terms ἀσελγ. and the succeeding ones seem meant to exemplify the vices they had been attached to. By ἀσελγ. and ἐπιτ. are denoted fornication, adultery, and such like: by οἰνοφλ., κώμοις, and πότοις, intemperance in drinking, and the debauchery and revels attendant on it. See Rom. xiii. 13. Πότοις is for συμποσίοις, "drinking-parties." With respect to the term εἰδωλ., as the Jews do not appear to have been guilty of idolatry properly so called, the Commentators suppose either that this has reference only to the Gentile converts; or that by "idolatries" are meant vices as bad as idolatry, or rather practices which savoured of idolatry, and the falling into idolatrous and heathen manners, customs, and opinions. That such was the case we have indubitable evidence in the writings of Philo and Josephus.

4. ἐν ᾧ ξενίζ.] This may, with Pott, be resolved into ἐν τούτῳ δὲ ξεν. ὅτι, &c., "they are amazed at this, namely, that," &c. This sense of ξεν., "to think strange," is found only in Polyb., Plutarch, Josephus, and other later writers. Τῆς ἀσ. ἀνάχ., literally, sink of profligacy and abominable dissoluteness.

5. τῷ ἐτοίμως ἔχοντι] "to him who is ready [at his own appointed season] to judge." Here we have simply a designation of the office of the great Judge; and therefore Wets., Benson, and Mackn. are wrong in seeking refinements.

6. εἰς τοῦτο—πνεύματι.] The sense is here obscure, and consequently the context is the more carefully to be attended to; according to which the interpretations of those who (as Whitby, Dodd., and others) take νεκ. in a figurative sense

(namely, spiritually dead, i. e. in trespasses and sins, meaning the Gentiles) cannot, I think, be admitted. Yet understanding it in a physical sense (conformably to the interpretation of the word adopted in the preceding verse), the perplexing question is, how the Gospel can be said to be preached to the dead? A thing no where asserted in Scripture, and contradictory to what is there said. To obviate this, some, as Slade, comparing the passage with iii. 19, understand the assertion to be, “that the Gospel had been proclaimed even to the dead (καὶ νεκροῖς); that they will be judged by the law of nature for the things done in the body, and be rewarded, in proportion to their deserts, by a spiritual life, according to the will and power of God.” Since, however, νεκροῖς must, it should seem, be interpreted as in the preceding verse, it involves the least difficulty to suppose (with the above Commentators, and Wets., Rosenm., and Iaspis), that it is meant of those who, being Christians, have died for the profession of the faith. The same view of the sense is adopted by Dr. Burton, who expresses the sense as follows: “It was on this principle of a general judgment, that the Christians who are already dead had the Gospel preached to them, so that according to the common law of our nature they suffer the penalty of death, but by the mercy of God they will be restored to life again by the operation of the Spirit.”

7. πάντων δὲ τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε.] This is usually interpreted of the end of the Jewish state at the destruction of Jerusalem. But the sense thus arising is little satisfactory. It is better to take the expression according to its natural import, as denoting the end of the world, and the final consummation of all things; as in Phil. iv. 5. James v. 8, 9. Or the Apostle may also have intended to include that individual and personal consummation of all things, which takes place at the hour of death. See Bp. Horsley cited in Slade. Σωφρονήσατε—τὰς προσευχάς. See 1 Thess. v. 6, 8. and Note. I would compare Plutarch adv. Stoic. § 19. νήφων πρὸς ἀρετὴν ὅδε ἐστί.

8. ἐκτενῇ] i. e., as Ecumen. explains, διαρκῇ, ἐπὶ πολλὴ διατείνουσιν. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 4. Εἰς ἑαυτοῦς, “one to another.”

—Ἔτι ἡ ἀγ. καλύψει πλῆθος ἀμ.] Render, “for charity will cover a multitude of sins,” i. e., as is required by the context and the sense of the passage of Prov. x. 12. (from which this is derived), and as the best Expositors are now agreed, “this charitable disposition will lead us to throw a cloak over, and forgive a multitude of sins.” So Plutarch, cited by Weston ap. Bowyer, says of Pompey, τὰ πλείστα περὶ αὐτὸν ἀμαρτήματα φίλων ἀπέκρυπτε. I add Procop. p. 129. 12. ἐνθυμείσθε ὡς φιλία μὲν αἰτίας πολλὰς καλύπτειν πέφυκεν, ἐχθρά δὲ οὐδὲ τῶν μικροτάτων. See Note supra Jas. v. 19. Let it, however, be remembered that (in the words of Bp. Warburton), “though Charity, or benevolence, hides the faults of others from the severity of our censure, yet Charity, or Almsgiving, is totally unable to conceal our own from the observance of our all-righteous Judge. Indeed, the only cover for these, or, to speak more properly, the discharge of all their stains, is FAITH,—is the BLOOD of Christ, working with repentance towards God. When Faith, when the blood of Christ, hath thus done its perfect work, and brought forth repentance, then we shall not be mistaken in concluding that one of the noblest fruits of repentance is CHARITY.”

9. See Rom. xii. 13. Hebr. xiii. 2.
10, 11. Most Commentators, ancient and modern, regard these verses as having reference to the Spiritual gifts, or, as some explain, endowments of mind, which fitted persons to discharge various offices and duties in the Church, whether as ministers or deacons. But to this sense the expression καλοὶ οἰκονόμοι is not very suitable; and if there be any connection with the words preceding, such cannot be exclusively the sense. It should seem best, with Mr. Scott, to take the term χάρισμα in a general sense, as denoting any of those gifts, whether of fortune, or of abilities and spiritual endowments, for which men are alike stewards, and bound to employ them for the good of their brethren. The duty is first stated generally, and then considered specialty, as applied, 1. to the gifts of fortune; 2. to those of the mind, or the Holy Spirit; in adverting to which Ministers are especially, though not exclusively, meant; for, indeed, at this early period, the distinction between Clergy and Laity was not fully established. The expressions, too, have relation to the distinct duties of preachers of the word, and of deacons. The former are to speak as delivering the oracles of God, and consequently what was the truth of the Gospel, and not mere human notions. In pointing out the duties of the latter, the phraseology seems to advert to the duties as being laborious, which the Diaconal duties must have been. These are to be discharged with the full strength which God supplies for that very purpose. That this doctrine, of men being only stewards of the good gifts he bestowed, is confirmed by the evidence of human reason, in addition to the authority of an inspired writer, might be proved from several passages. The following, out of several I have myself noted, may suffice: Eurip. Phœn. 565. Οὗτοι τὰ χρήματα ἴδια κέκτηνται βροτοί, τὰ τῶν Θεῶν δ' ἔχοντες ἐπιμελούμεθα. Ὅταν δὲ χρήζωσ', αὐτ' ἀφαιροῦνται πάλιν.

On λαλεῖ, see Note at 1 Cor. xiv. 27. At ἐν παῖσι supply πράγμασι. The doxology following is, it should seem, to be referred to the Father.

12—19. Here the Apostle exhorts them to patiently endure afflictions in the cause of Christ, using two arguments: 1. That the heavier the trials are, which we have borne on earth, after the example of Christ, the greater will be our reward in heaven, v. 13. 2. That afflictions suffered for conscience sake are no longer to be accounted such, v. 14. fin. since it was not, the Apostle hints, a strange or unusual thing for the people of God to be persecuted. 3. That though they suffered here, as Christ did, they should hereafter be glorified together with him. 4. That, besides the prospect of that future glory, they had, at present, the Spirit of God for their comfort and support. 5. That it was an honour for any one of them to suffer, not as a malefactor, but as a Christian. 6. That though afflictions began with the faithful, yet the weight of the storm would fall on the unbelievers.

— μὴ ξενίζεσθε—συμβαίν.] The sense is: “Be not surprised [and therefore troubled] by, or through, the fire for trial (i. e. the severe persecution permitted, for your trial) which ye now suffer.” The words ὡς ξένου—συμβ. are exegetical of ξενίζ. In the expression πύρωσις πρὸς πειρασμὸν there is an allusion to the quæstio, or torment by fire. See Note on 1 Cor. iii. 13.

13. ἀλλὰ καθὸ—ἀγαλλ.] In this participation in the sufferings of Christ it is implied that the cause is the same, that of true religion.

14. εἰ ὀνειδ. See Note supra iii. 13.

— τὸ τῆς δόξης—ἀναπαύεται.] “The glorious Spirit of God rests on you [for your support and consolation].” The next words contrast the different views in which these spiritual endowments would appear,—in order to display the power of the Spirit; who, though blasphemed and denied by their persecutors, was glorified in them.

15. μὴ γάρ—φονεύς.] The full sense is: “[I speak not of suffering in a bad cause,] for let none of you so act as to suffer,” &c. The expression ἄλλοτριοεπίσκοπος is variously explained. See Rec. Syn. Yet, after all, no interpretation is so little objectionable as the common one, “a busy-body,” one who intermeddles in business which does not belong to him. Now as it can be proved that there were laws against λογοποιοί, or those who invented or circulated false political reports, so it is not improbable that ἄλλοτρ. here may mean such; or that there were laws inflicting some actual punishment on those convicted of busily prying into other people's affairs, and (as is almost always the case), exaggerating what might be true, and fabricating falsities. The interpretation in question is, moreover, much confirmed by 1 Tim. v. 13, where the Apostle seems to have had in view this hateful vice of slander and backbiting, in the words περίεργοι, λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δέοντα. Thus it seems clear that the terms περίεργος and ἄλλοτριοεπίσκοπος are, as nearly as may be, of the same sense; the first meaning a busy-body, and the latter a busy-body in others' affairs; which affinity is well exemplified by the following passage of Philostr. Epist. Apoll. 59. εἰ μὴ περίεργος ἦς, οὐκ ἦς ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοτριοῖς πράγμασι δίκαιος, “if you had not been a busy-body, you would not have been a judge in other men's affairs.”

16. Χριστιανός.] See Note at Acts xi. 26. Ὶ ἐν τῷ μέρει τ., “on this account,” as 2 Cor. iii. 10.

17, 18. The best Commentators generally agree that these verses contain an obscure intimation of the fiery trials which were coming upon that part of the world, where the persons whom the Apostle is addressing resided. That the expression οἶκος τοῦ Θεοῦ means Christians, is plain from the next verse. They are also assured, that though this judgment or affliction would, according to God's custom of old, begin with the faithful, it would be far from ending with them; which is expressed by a popular phrase, τί τὸ τέλος τῶν ἀπειθούντων, "what will be the end or lot of the wicked?" implying a bad one, utrer perdition.

The words of the next verse, no doubt, admit of the same application as the preceding, and are so applied by the above Commentators, σῴζεται being explained of temporal persecution, i. e. "is to be saved." It should rather seem, however, that what might be applied to the temporal judgments in question, was chiefly meant of the great day of judgment; the sense being nearly that laid down by Mr. Scott.

19. ὥστε καὶ—ἀγαθοποιᾷ.] The sense seems to be: "Wherefore let those who suffer according to the will and permission of God, commit their lives and souls unto Him, as unto a faithful and benevolent Creator, at the same time continuing in well-doing."

V. The Apostle now gives particular injunctions to the presbyters, i. e. the Bishops and Pastors of the Church, and also to preachers, the former to feed the flock of Christ committed to their charge; the latter to obey their admonitions.

1. ὁ συμπρ.] Though one of the chief Apostles, St. Peter modestly styles himself a co-presbyter. Ὁ καὶ τῆς μελλούσης· κοιν., "and who am also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed;" viz. at the resurrection. (See Phil. iii. 21.) "Not meaning, however, (as Mr. Holden observes,) that he was then a partaker, but that he had then a right to it; that he was then in a justified state, which, if persevered in, would end in his participation in the glory which we shall enjoy at the resurrection, Rom. viii. 17, 18. 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8."

2. ποιμνιον—Θεοῦ.] A pastoral metaphor common in Scripture, and found also in the Classical writers. The sense is: "Nourish with sound doctrine, and take care of the morals of those committed to your care." Μὴδὲ ἀναγκαστῶς seems to be said with reference to some who served, indeed, the office without stipend, but with indifference and want of zeal. Μὴδὲ αἰσχροκ., ἀλλὰ προθύμως; i. e. not discharging the office for the sake of lucre, (which would be base) but with good will, to to corde, (as the Syr. Translator renders) and only accepting the lucre to enable you to discharge the office.

3. κατακυρ. τῶν κλήρων.] Though Θεοῦ be here not expressed, it is to be understood, as at ποιμνίου just after. The κλήρων is variously explained: by some, of the possessions of the Church. For which signification there is, indeed, sufficient authority; but little probability in the thing itself; though Mr. Slade thinks that, "as there were contributions, there might be a fund." Considering, however, the poverty of the primitive Christians, and other circumstances, that is unlikely. Now κατακυριεύοντες κλήρων, in the simple diction of the sacred writer, can only apply to persons. And the best Commentators are with reason agreed that it means the Churches or congregations; called God's heritages, in allusion to the division of Canaan by κληροί, lots, which formed separate heritages.

4. See i. 3—5; ii. 25; and 1 Cor. ix. 25. 2 Tim. iv. 8, and Notes.

5. νεώτεροι.] This, being opposed to the πρεσβ., which term is admitted to be one of office, must denote other persons inferior to them (as being under their superintendence) and bound to pay deference to them. Πάντες δὲ ἄλλ. ὑποτ., i. e. each according to your different ranks and stations.

—τὴν ταπειν. ἐγκομβύσασθε.] The verb ἐγκομβύσθαι is derived from κόμβος, which signifies 1. a knot, or top-knot; 2. a button or ornamental fastening, by which vestments were drawn about the body. 3. (or rather ἐγκόμβωμα) a sort of moveable garment, or cape, put over the other vestments, and fastened by knots and bands to the collar. Hence ἐγκομβύσθαι came to mean, in a general way, to be ornamentally clothed: and as all sorts of clothing are, in the ancient languages, applied to denote moral habits, especially of virtue; so here the Apostle means, that they should put on humility as an ornament, and wear it as a habit. With which I would compare Æl. V. H. p. 10. ἡμπεριχέτο δὲ σωφροσύνη. and Hom. Il. A. 149. ἀναιδείην ἐπιειμένε. where Heyne remarks: "Dicitur aliquis indutus; i. e.

instructus, esse iis quæ ipsi propria sunt et solennia."

6, 7. The Apostle here exhorts them to a patient submission to the chastisement of God's powerful hand; trusting to Him alone for deliverance and glory, and reposing with calm affiance on his all gracious Providence. In ἐπιρρίψαντες there is a significatio prægnans, i. e. casting off all anxious cares, and reposing them on, &c. The expression is taken from Ps. lv. 22.

8, 9. The Apostle here repeats his exhortations to sobriety and vigilance; reminding them, that the great spiritual adversary of mankind is permitted to try the virtuous with afflictions and temptations; q. d. (in the words of Bp. Sanderson) He watcheth for your destruction; watch ye, therefore, for your preservation. Many recent Commentators, indeed, because διάβολος has not the Article, render it "a malicious accuser." But, closely connected as it is with ἀντίδικος, it cannot but mean (as Bp. Middl. explains) "your opposing evil Spirit," or, the Evil Spirit who is your opposer; for the Article at ἀντίδ. properly belongs to Διάβολος. Here there is supposed to be an allusion to Job i. 7. This passage, I have in Rec. Syn. shown at large, must have reference not merely to what the Devil effects by his agents, but by himself, proving his personality and evil agency over men. It is plain that temptation is here chiefly affirmed, and affliction only as a medium of temptation. The temptations would, for the most part, be to apostatize.

In εἰδότες—ἐπιτελεῖσθαι the argument is, "Your case is not singular; the same persecutions are carried on in your Christian brethren throughout the whole world." Ἐπιτελ. is for ενεργεῖσθαι. Ἀντὰ αὐτὰ τῶν παθ. for τὰ αὐτὰ τὰ παθήματα.

10, 11. The Apostle did not pray that they might be exempt from trials; but he besought the God of all grace (the inexhaustible source of every kind of grace), who had called them to the hope and sure earnest of eternal glory, by Christ, —that, after they had suffered awhile [for the increase of their faith] he would make them mature and complete in holiness; establish them in the peace and hope of the Gospel, strengthen them to resist all temptations, endure all sufferings, and perform all duties; settling them immoveably, as a compact building on a sure foundation; which would redound to his praise to whom glory and dominion ought to be ascribed for ever. (Scott.) Καταρτίσαι, "may he perfect you more and more in the knowledge and practice of religion." Στηρίξαι, "confirm you in the practice of what you know." Σθενώσαι, "strengthen you to the performance." Θεμελι., "settle and immoveably ground you."

12. ὡς λογιζομαι.] This, like many similar expressions both in the ancient and modern languages, implies, not doubt, but firm persuasion; as Rom. viii. 18. So that there is no reason, with Grot., to resort to the sense "si bene memini," which is founded, as Rosenm. shows, on a baseless hypothesis.

—ταύτην εἶναι ἀληθὴ χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ, εἰς ἣν ἐστ.] The sense is, "that the religion in which you are (I trust) firmly fixed, is the true one, [and not Judaism, your former faith]."

13. συνεκλ.] Supply, with the best Commentators ancient and modern, ἐκκλησία.

—ἐν Βαβυλῶνι.] On the city here intended, no little diversity of opinion exists. Some, as Mill, Bertram, Pearson, Vitringa, Wolf, Wall, and Fabric, suppose Babylon in Egypt. This, however, is extremely improbable, and has been refuted by Lardner; who, with the ancient and many eminent modern Commentators, (as Grot., Mill, Hamm., Whitby, Est., Valckn., and most of the Romanists, suppose that by Babylon is figuratively meant Rome. But though the voice of antiquity has ever a claim to respect; yet where antiquity as here can decide no better than ourselves, it carries with it but little weight. Indeed, for the tradition (that the Apostle meant Rome) we have no earlier authority than that of Papias, a weak and credulous person. Moreover, no tolerable reason has ever been alleged why the Apostle should here call Rome by the name Babylon, and withhold its true name. That the Apostle afterwards suffered martyrdom at Rome, is nothing to the purpose. There can be little doubt but that the notion first originated in mere error, and was afterwards caught up by the Romanists, for the purpose of supporting their assertion, that Peter was the first Bishop of Rome. Hence I entirely coincide in the opinion of many eminent modern Commentators, (as Erasmus, Calvin, Beza, Lightf., Scaliger, Salmas., Le Clerc, Beausobre, Wets., Bp. Conybeare, Benson, Rosenm., and A. Clarke) that it means Babylon in Assyria. Those Commentators, however, are not agreed whether we are to understand Seleucia, i. e. New Babylon; or Old Babylon, which, it is certain from Strabo, was not yet deserted. The latter supposition seems preferable; for there is no satisfactory proof that Seleucia (though it gradually stepped into the place of Old Babylon, and was, indeed, chiefly built from its ruins) ever received the name of Babylon: certainly not so early as the time of St. Peter, whatever might be the case afterwards. Though fallen from its ancient grandeur, it had probably still a tolerably large population, though by no means in proportion to its size. The walls, however, remained even to the time of Jerome. (See L. v. of his Commentary on Isaiah.) Plutarch, too, in his life of Crassus, C. 17., and in his comparison of Crassus and Nicias, testifies to the existence of Babylon as a city, and says Βαβυλῶνος καὶ Σελευκίας, thus distinguishing them. Indeed, it were improbable that Babylon should have come to utter desertion so soon after the founding of Seleucia; especially since, as we learn from Pausanias, Seleucus took no decided steps to people his new city at the expense of the old one. On this subject I have much more to say, which I must reserve for a Memoir on Ancient Babylon, that I have for very many years had in gradual preparation, and intend to take some opportunity of laying before the public. Meanwhile it may suffice to add, that I am entirely of the opinion of Dr. Benson, that Babylon was the metropolis of the Eastern Dispersion of the Jews, where a great number of them had gone to settle, in addition to those who were the posterity that remained in Babylon and did not return. It is well remarked by Calvin and Benson, that, as St. Peter was especially the Apostle of the Circumcision, it was likely that he should go where so many Jews resided, who had probably been driven away by the troubles that had begun to prevail in Judæa.

ΠΕΤΡΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

I. ΣΥΜΕΩΝ Πέτρος, δούλος καὶ ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ 1 Χριστοῦ, τοῖς ἰσότημον ἡμῖν λαχοῦσι πίστιν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ

Of this second Epistle the authenticity was at first called in question: yet it is quoted, or alluded to, by some very early Fathers, and in the second century was received into the canon. Upon the whole, the external or historical evidence for its authenticity is strong; and the internal yet more so; for if not written by St. Peter, it would indeed be a most daring fabrication. And yet if a fabrication, it would be one of the most artfully contrived: for there is not a single particular that betrays imposture, though it has been a subject of examination for above seventeen centuries. Moreover, it would be most difficult to conceive what motive could have induced any one to fabricate such a composition: for here we see no attempt to support any peculiar doctrine or practice, for which the pious fraud might be supposed to have been committed. Indeed, such an air of unfeigned and deep piety breathes through the whole, that it is difficult to imagine how a person possessed of such a spirit could deliberately indite an imposture of that kind. As to the argument against the authenticity, derived from the dissimilarity in character of the second Chapter from the first Epistle, it is very inconclusive; for though it be different from that Epistle, it is also different from the other two Chapters of this Epistle. In fact, there the subjects are different; and, as we find in the case of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, different subjects call for different styles. In the case of the first Epistle, and the first and third Chapters of the second, the whole is simply didactic: whereas in the second Chapter of the present Epistle, more of energy would be requisite, and a higher degree of inspiration would be vouchsafed, even like that granted to the Prophets of the Old Testament. Besides, even waiving that principle, and supposing St. Peter's style elsewhere to be as plain as they please,—yet the Critics in question will hardly deny, that the style of a writer is much influenced by the feelings with which he is affected. Thus, in the present instance, we may suppose that the Apostle's strong indignation at the heresies of the Gnostics quickened his feelings, and somewhat altered the character of his style.

The above may suffice to show that internal arguments against the authenticity of this Epistle are unfounded. To briefly advert to the internal evidence for the authenticity; now, to pass over several arguments which are fully stated by Mackn. and Horne, 1. There is the same character (namely, of gravity, dignity, energy, and authority, united with simplicity) observable in this second Epistle, as that which distinguishes the first. 2. There are several incidental allusions to circumstances, which answer to no other Apostle but St. Peter. See Mackn. and Horne. 3. A truly Apostolical spirit breathes through the whole. 4. The style is (with the exception of the second Chapter), the same as the former Epistle. There are repetitions of the same words, and allusions to the same events. See more in Michaelis, Mackn., and Horne.

This Epistle is supposed to have been written soon after the first Epistle, and not long before the death of the Apostle; also to have been indited from the same place, and addressed to the same persons as the former one. The latter may probably be true; but the former is exceedingly doubtful. There is no good reason for supposing it to have been written from the same place. Nay, especially when we consider the great reason there is to think that that place was Babylon; and yet in conjunction with that circumstance, the high probability that this Epistle was written but a short time before the Apostle's death, which we have every reason to think took place at Rome—we seem authorized to conjecture that this Epistle at least was written from Rome, whither it is probable St. Peter had been called, in like manner as St. Paul had been not long before,—namely, to defend himself from the accusations of those who sought to implicate him as encouraging the rebellious spirit against the Roman government, which then pervaded the whole of Judæa, and the neighbouring countries.

The design of this Epistle is (with the exception of ch. ii.) very similar to that of the former. With respect to its nature and character, it is confirmatory, cautionary, and hortatory. 1. The Apostle establishes them in the truth and profession of the Gospel. 2. He cautions them against false teachers (whose tenets and practices he graphically describes), and warns them of the mockers and scoffers, who should soon start up, and deride their expectation of Christ's coming. And, after confuting their false assertions, he tells them why the great Day of the Lord was deferred; and, having described its circumstances and consequences (in which there is a strong coincidence with the account given by St. Paul), he subjoins suitable exhortations to prepare for that momentous period. After which he concludes with a truly Apostolical commendation of them to the grace of God.

C. I. 1—4. These verses contain the Introduction to the Epistle, in which, after asserting his Apostolic character, and addressing the Epistle to the Gentile converts, St. Peter salutes them, and reminds them that their Christian privileges were owing to the favour of God in Christ, and in consequence of the miraculous effusion of the Holy Spirit. (Benson.)

1. τοῖς ἰσότημον—Χριστοῦ.] Prof. Scholefield well renders: "To them that have obtained like precious faith with us in the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ." By "faith in the righteousness" he understands, "as the object of faith," so Rom. iii. 25. διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι. The construction τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτ. is the same as at v. 11. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτ. Ἰ. Χρ. See Eph. v. 5. Tit. ii. 13., and also the masterly note in justification of the rendering "our God and Saviour," by Bp. Middl., who proves that "the passage is plainly and unequivocally to be understood as an assumption that Jesus Christ is our God and Saviour." The word ἰσότημος is formed similarly to ἰσόμοιρος. The term λαχ. has reference to salvation being considered as an inheritance. See 1 Pet. v. 3. Δικ. denotes mode of justification, or becoming righteous, appointed by our God and Saviour.

3. ὡς πάντα ἡμῖν—ἀρετῆς.] The construction (which is tortuous) is thus cleared by Pott: ὡς τῆς θείας δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ πάντα τὰ πρὸς ζωὴν καὶ εὐσέβειαν ἡμῖν δεδωρημένης, διὰ—ἀρετῆς (δι' ὧν—φθορᾶς) καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, &c. The sense is, "forasmuch as God, by his Almighty power, hath bestowed on us all things pertaining to life and godliness," eternal happiness, and the holiness which is to fit us for it. The best Commentators are agreed, that δέδωκε here and not after, is to be taken in an active sense; an idiom found in verbs which want the Perfect Middle, instead of which the Passive is used. Examples are adduced by Loesn. from Philo. Διὰ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως should perhaps, be rendered, "by the bringing us to the knowledge or acknowledgment of." Διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς is, by hendiadys, for "by his glorious benignity," or, as some explain, power; rather, excellence. See 1 Pet. ii. 9.

4. δι' ὧν.] The ὧν is by some referred to δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς; by others, to πάντα. Both references may be meant, i. e. "by all which things." By ἐπαγγ. are meant the Gospel promises of pardon, and salvation through Christ.

—διὰ τούτων—φύσεως.] The sense seems to be, "in order that, being excited by these promises, you might strive to become partakers [by imitation] of a divine nature;" namely, by that purity and holiness, which is so called, as bearing a certain similarity to the Divine attributes, and being produced by Divine influence. See the long and able Note in proof of this sense by Benson, and also Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 45. With a reference to this passage it is finely observed by Cudworth, Sermon on John i.: "The Gospel is nothing else but God descending into the world in our form, and conversing with us in our likeness; that He might allure and draw us up to God, and make us partakers of his divine form. God was therefore incarnated and made man, that he might deify us, that he might make us 'partakers of the divine nature.'" (2 Pet. i. 4.)

In the words following are pointed out the means whereby this is to be attained—namely, by escaping the pollutions of this wicked world, arising from carnal appetites.

5—7. The Apostle here calls on his Christian brethren not to rest in their apparent conversion, or the reformation connected with it, or even in the beginning of a renewal to a "divine nature;" but, depending on the promises of the Gospel, and pursuing the end for which they were given, to "cleanse themselves from all" remaining "filthiness of flesh and spirit," perfecting holiness "in the fear of God." (Scott.) To the latter he adverts, as the condition on which depends the former. For, as Bp. Sanderson, in his second Sermon, ad Populum, shows, "the promises of God are true, yet they are conditional, and such as must be ever understood with a clause of reservation or exception, i. e. of obedience, as, in the case of his threatenings, of repentance. Wouldst thou then know how thou art to entertain God's promises, and with what assurance to expect them,—I answer, with a confident and an obedient heart. Confident, because He is true, that hath promised; obedient, because that is the condition under which he hath promised."

—καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο.] Supply κατὰ, "for this very reason;" q. d. "Since God has granted all the means of holiness (vv. 3, 4.) do your part.

παρεισενέγκαντες, ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν τὴν ἀρετὴν, ἐν δὲ τῇ ἀρετῇ τὴν γνῶσιν, ἐν δὲ τῇ γνῶσει τὴν 6

This view of the construction and sense is, I find, supported by Prof. Scholef., who aptly compares Eurip. Orest. 657—8. ἔρεῖς, ἀδύνατον; αὐτὸ τοῦτο, τοὺς φίλους Ἐν τοῖς κακοῖς χρή τοῖς φίλοιςιν ὠφελεῖν. Σπουδὴν πᾶσαν παραιο. is not well taken, with Rosenm. and others, for σπουδάζοντες; since the expression suggests the contributing of our own strenuous exertions, in co-operation with the grace of God. See Phil. ii. 12 & 13.

— ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν τὴν ἀρετὴν.] In order to rightly understand the sense of this expression ἐπιχορ., (which has been variously, but, in general, not correctly explained), it is proper to ascertain the nature of the metaphor. This has been thought by Doddr. to be derived from the leader of a dance; q. d. "leading up, as in a dance, the virtues one after another." But that is supposing an allusion little suitable to the style of the sacred writer, and the character of the present passage, with which such an image would ill comport. It should rather seem that the metaphor is derived from the person who furnished the expences of the players, singers, and dancers at the public festivals. See Potter's Antiquities and Salmasius de Usuris, C. iii. p. 58. Such, indeed, was the primitive sense of χορηγός which word afterwards came to mean generally sumptus suppetitorum. So Plutarch in Pericl. says of Pericles: δανιήλις ὦν χορηγὸς ταῖς γυναιξί. And so χορηγέω often signifies simply to supply or furnish. See Steph. Thes. 10670. And, accordingly, ἐπιχ. must signify insuper suppetitate, exhibitete, prestate. The force and propriety of the ἐπι will appear further on.

Let us now consider the general scope and design of this important passage, previously to treating of it in detail. The scope seems to have been, to illustrate what they are to do in return for God's mercy in calling them to salvation, and in co-operation with His grace to enable them both to will and to do. They are faithfully to discharge all their duties, both of faith and of practice; and the latter are digested in regular order, and with a beautiful gradation, (as in Rom. v. 3. seq.; viii. 29, sq.; x. 13. seq. Jas. i. 3. seq.), wherein the principal Christian virtues are represented by a beautiful chain, of which the various parts are linked together; FAITH being as it were the main and primary principle from which the various links of virtue are suspended; and CHARITY as being that connective link in which all the others terminate. The virtues, too, are specified, by way of example; nor are we here (with some) to fancy a kind of system of Christian virtues: nor perhaps to refine too much on the order in which they are placed, between FAITH and LOVE. Nay, perhaps, after all, the idea in the Apostle's mind was not that of "a chain suspended on a peg," but, according to the opinion of Bp. Warburton, (in a most masterly Sermon on this text,) "that of an edifice consisting of three courses, from which the Apostle means to instruct them in the nature of that Christian edification they were to raise on the foundation of Faith." This view is, I think, much confirmed by Jude 20, 21. τῇ ἀγίωτάτῃ ὑμῶν πίστει ἐποικοδομοῦντες ἑαυτοὺς—ἑαυτοὺς ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ τηρήσατε. For there the present passage was evidently in the mind of St. Jude, as indeed was the whole Epistle, when he wrote his own. But though we are not to imagine here any formal system of Christian virtues; yet those which are specified appear to be placed in regular order and with a deliberate and artful disposition; though the exact nature of the arrangement has been ill understood by Commentators and Expositors, and alone properly perceived by the capacious and penetrating mind of the illustrious Prelate above mentioned. "Of this building (says he) the Apostle has marked out the foundation, fixed the basis, proportioned the members, adorned the superstructure, and crowned the whole with the richest of materials. And all this with such justice of science and sublimity of thought, that every foregoing virtue gives stability to the following; and every following imparts perfection to that which went before: where the three orders of this heavenly architecture, the HUMAN, the DIVINE, and SOCIAL virtues, are so masterly disposed, that the human and social have their proper strengths and graces heightened and supported by the common connection of the divine. To proceed to an examination of the particulars, St. Peter, as a wise master-builder, (1 Cor. iii. 10.) chooses for his foundation that ROCK on which our Lord promised him to build the Church, as directed by the same Divine Spirit with St. Paul, who says, 'other foundation can (or ought) no man to lay, than that is laid, which is JESUS CHRIST.' But, in order to counteract the error (then too prevalent) which regarded faith as alone sufficient to make man acceptable to his Maker, and without good works, entitled him to the rewards of the Gospel covenant, the Apostle first enjoins us to add or build Virtue upon Faith." Here, it is true, most of the principal Commentators (as Grot., Hamm., Menoch., Zeger, Smith, Whitby, Benson, Doddr., Wells, and A. Clarke), take ἀρετὴ to signify courage and constancy [in performing the faith]; a signification of the word frequent in the Classical writers, from Homer downwards. The reasons assigned for the above interpretation are thus expressed by Grotius: 1. That there is in this passage a beautiful gradation. And 2dly, "sequuntur multa virtutum nomina," and therefore ἀρετὴ cannot be here taken in the usual sense, but must be interpreted fortitude. It is, however, ably proved by Bp. Warburton, that the very beauty and correctness of the gradation depend on ἀρετὴ being taken in the general sense, as in Phil. iv. 8, and elsewhere in Scripture. Not to mention that ἀρετὴ never has the sense courage in the N. T. or the Sept. The consummate aptness of ἀρετὴ in the usual sense, is well pointed out by Bp. Warburton as follows: "From henceforth Faith, while it was single and solitary, remained dead, as the sacred writer expresses it, being thus clothed upon by virtue, becomes alive and vigorous, and productive of all the fruits of grace and immortality. And Virtue, thus erected, receives a reciprocal advantage from Faith. The weakness of unguided reason, and the violence of ill-balanced passions, had reduced MORAL VIRTUE, both in principle and practice, to so shadowy and precarious an existence, that the wisest

 ὑπομονῇ τὴν εὐσέβειαν, ἐν δὲ τῇ εὐσέβειᾳ τὴν φιλαδελ-

in the Pagan world could not forbear lamenting its helpless condition, and owning that nothing but a revelation from heaven could realize and support it. They mistook the true foundation of Morality: some placing it in the native excellence of virtue, others in the exterior benefits, of which it is productive. They were left destitute, and exposed to the free rage of ungoverned passions, without aid, and with uncertain prospect of reward. But it was the Dispensation of Faith, which taught us that the true foundation of Morality was compliance to the will of our Creator and sovereign Lord. It was Faith which enabled us to surmount all the opposition of the appetites, by holding out to us an infinite reward; and which the assistance of the Holy Spirit hath placed within our reach. But though Virtue be enjoined here and elsewhere in Scripture, yet if we expect to find there any regular or methodical body of morality, we shall be much mistaken. With respect to this, the New Testament, all along, refers us to another guide. For God, having before revealed the whole doctrine of morality by the religion of nature, and none of God's dispensations contradicting another, it was enough for the first teachers of Christianity, when they preached up Virtue, to refer their followers for particulars to what natural religion taught concerning it. This being so, and that the great Pandect of the Law of Nature is to be searched and studied, in order to attain a perfect knowledge of moral duty, there is need of much pains and exercise of mind, to learn that Virtue which we are here enjoined to build upon Faith."

The foregoing view adopted by the learned Prelate is, I would observe, confirmed by what St. Paul says, Phil. iv. 8. (which passage seems to have been had in view by St. Peter): τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί, ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, ὅσα σεμνὰ, ὅσα δίκαια, ὅσα ἀγαθὰ, ὅσα προσφιλῆ, ὅσα εὐφημα' εἰ τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἰ τις ἐπαινος, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε. Where mark the expression ἀρετῆ. Of course, it was left to Natural Religion to determine what were these σεμνὰ, δίκαια, εὐφημα, &c. Accordingly, the "knowledge" next enjoined is to be understood as respecting the virtue before mentioned, denoting that "wisdom which is the result of the study of the Law of Nature, in the pursuit of truth." "To understand this matter truly (says Bp. Warburton) we must consider, that Virtue consists in acting agreeably to those relations, in which we stand to our common humanity, our fellow-creatures, and our Creator. For as Religion, in the largest sense of the word, includes the duty we owe ourselves and neighbour; so morality, in its larger sense of the word, includes the observance of that relation we stand in towards God. And when the practice respects man, it is called virtue; when it respects God, it is piety. These relations are commonly distinguished into the human, the social, and the divine virtues: the end and design of all which is to perfect man's nature; 1. By restraining, regulating, and directing, the private and selfish appetites, according to the dictates of reason. 2. By cultivating, improving, and enlarging, the social passions and affections, and employing them in the service of our species, according to the dictates of charity.

3. By exercising our understandings in the contemplation of the first Cause, and by owning our relation to him in suitable acts of rational worship, in order to unite us to our supreme Good, according to the dictates of grace."

The learned Prelate then proceeds to show the reciprocal service which Virtue does to Knowledge. Knowledge (says he) is the perception and attainment of TRUTH; and useful knowledge the perception and attainment of those truths, which tend to the perfecting of our nature. But the carnal passions, operating aversely to such truths, cloud and darken the understanding, so as to mislead us, even in those of the most easy discovery and of the highest importance. Again, to acquire a competent share of knowledge, we must give all diligence in the pursuit of truth, so as to trace her throughout her hidden recesses: but it is only a love for the object, which can heartily engage us in the pursuit: and this can arise from nothing but the beauty of it. Now while Vice usurps the heart, Truth, her mortal enemy, will be a neglected guest. But when Virtue has assumed her seat, the passion for Truth will revive. For Truth and Virtue are twin-born sisters; and, with only a name of distinction, participate of one common nature; Truth being speculative Virtue, and Virtue only practical Truth. And now the understanding makes a free progress in knowledge, as having no headstrong appetites to mislead it, nor earthly passions to damp its affections. From henceforth, the only danger is from the opposite quarter: lest the mind's ardent love of truth should engage it in abstractions, and carry it beyond the limits of those truths, which are given us for our contemplation here. Now this folly so mischievous, and proceeding from a want of due consciousness of the narrow limits of the human understanding, St. Peter, in his next precept, restrains. "Add (says he) to knowledge temperance," i. e. sobriety, moderation, continence, in the pursuit of truth. For as Virtue, without knowledge, falls into all kind of fanaticism in practice; so Knowledge, without Temperance, leads to all kind of Heresy in opinion. St. Paul observed, even in his time, the seeds of intemperate knowledge begin to spring up and spread amongst his converts; and, therefore, cautions them against vain philosophy, and a knowledge that puffeth up. Ἐγκράτεια signifies a temperate use of things in general. To denote the species, the ancients said ἐγκρατὴς ἀφροδισίων—γαστροῦ ἐγκρατὴς—ἐγκρατὴς ὕπνου, θυμοῦ, οἴνου. When the species is not thus designed, we have no way of determining the sense of so general a word, but the context. Now Cicero de Fin. i. l. uses temperantia in the sense ἐγκράτεια as here explained.

To render our Temperance complete, we are enjoined to add Patience; i. e. long-suffering and bearing with the contradiction of others. For having experienced in our own case, how insensibly errors insinuate themselves into the mind; how plausibly they assume the air of truth, when called to account; how obstinately they maintain their ground, when now become suspected; and what labour is required to dispossess them, even after they are detected and exposed; having experienched, I say, all this, we shall be well inclined to bear with patience the contradiction of our erring brother.

To Patience we are enjoined to add Godliness; and then, as St. James counsels us, we "let patience have her perfect work." For then by this means godliness cannot degenerate either into fanaticism or bigotry, but will remain sober and rational. And yet there is another danger to which it is obnoxious; for by long and intense exercise in holy offices, the joy and transport that elevates the mind, thus filled with its true and proper object, GOD, naturally disposes us to condemn all inferior things; and from despising the things, but too often, to despise the persons who delight in them: and by making odious comparisons, like the Pharisee to the Publican, to forget our relation, our near relation, both by nature and grace, to the meanest of our species. Hence arises spiritual pride, the last and most fatal enemy to true godliness. Now for this, too, the Apostle provides a remedy. "Add (says he) to godliness brotherly kindness," with which commences the third and last order of this Christian building. Thus godliness placed between and supported, on each hand, by the human and the social virtues, becomes stable and permanent. And while it receives this united aid from both, it returns it back again to both. We have, then, shown the benefits temperance and patience receive from godliness: we are now to speak of that which brotherly kindness receives from it. The most beauteous and elevated branch of brotherly kindness is friendship. But friendship may be a confederacy in vice as well as a community of virtue. Hence it requires to be placed on godliness, whereby alone it stands secure from abuse, and brings forth all its genuine fruits of public beneficence. Brotherly kindness is now only liable to one disorder, that being enjoined to be built on godliness, or religion, men are too apt (like the Pharisees of old) to confine brotherly kindness to their own sect or pale. But this narrow and partial benevolence the Apostle removes by enjoining them to add to brotherly kindness CHARITY, i. e. the universal love of all mankind. This regulates and perfects all the other virtues; and is, itself, in no want of a reformer. All the other virtues, as we have observed, degenerate both by defect and by excess: this is incapable of either. Its nature and essence secure it from defect; and its fruits and products from excess. This, then, is the crown, the keystone of this heavenly edifice, this triumphant arch of immortality; or, as the holy Apostle more emphatically calls it, the bond of perfectness. Without this the rest of the building has neither ornament nor use. The very foundation is precarious and unstable. "Though I have all faith (says he) so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Virtue, likewise, without it, is equally unprofitable. "Though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Knowledge, likewise, without it, is vain and brutal. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have all knowledge, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Even godliness is unacceptable without it. "Though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries, and have not charity, I am nothing." Lastly, brotherly kindness, when separated from it, goes unrewarded: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." In short, in this, as the same Apostle tells us, are comprised all the efficacies of the foregoing graces. Thus, beginning with faith, and finishing with charity; or, as the same Apostle expresses it, "faith working by charity," we come by just degrees to erect, after the divine model here given us, that heavenly edifice of Christian perfection, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord." (Ephes. ii. 20, 21.)

8. ταῦτα γὰρ—ἐπίγνωσιν.] The sense is, "For if those virtues reside in, abound, and be on the increase in you, they will prove you to be those whose knowledge of the religion of Christ is not barren and unfruitful in good works, [such as religious knowledge should produce]." On the full import of πλεον. see Bp. Taylor's Works, vi. 486.

9. ὧ γὰρ μὴ πάρεστι—ἁμαρτιῶν.] The sense is, "He who is destitute of these moral virtues, and yet expects salvation by the Gospel, which imperatively enjoins them, is blind, or sees very little into the true nature of it, and forgets that he was cleansed from his former sins [only on condition of renouncing sin in future]," i. e. (to use the words of Mr. Holden) "forgets that his baptism, by which his former sins were cleansed, laid upon him the obligation of dying to sin, and of being fruitful in good works."

10, 11. It is plain that κλ. and ἐκλ. are here synonymous, and denote admission into the Christian covenant. "And this being conditional, there was (as Mr. Slade observes) no impropriety in the converts being enjoined to make their calling sure and effectual. They were, at that time, in a state of election; but it was a state from which they might fall; they were elect only so long as they were careful to maintain faith and good works." Οὐ μὴ πταίσητέ ποτε, "ye shall by no means ever fall or be frustrated in attaining salvation." The next words fully evolve the sense, and simply mean, "by so doing you will, through the rich mercy and grace of God, be admitted into heaven;" for τὴν αἰὼν. βασιλ., at which some Commentators stumble, can have no other sense, denoting the kingdom which Christ, as God, will for ever have, after having delivered up his mediatorial kingdom. See 1 Cor. xv. 24. Dan. vii. 27. iv. 34. vi. 26. vii. 14. Ps. cxlv. 13. Rev. xiv. 6.

12. From hence to iii. 13. the Apostle warns them against false teachers; premising a brief mention of the reasons for which he thought proper to again and again urge them to hold fast that part of pure doctrine, which was by the false teachers not only corrupted, but even derided. Καίπερ εἰδότες, "even though ye may know them." So Appian, Punic. 58. εἰδὼτας ὑμᾶς ἀναμνήσω. For ὑμᾶς αἰεὶ, αἰεὶ ὑμᾶς is edited by Griesb. and Tittm., from many MSS. and the Ed. Princ.

Οὐκ ἀμελήσω is said to be, per litoten, for σπουδάσω. But it is rather meant to intimate that he will not be wanting in his duty of reminding, however they might be in theirs of attending to admonition. And certainly he was justified in doing what he did; since, as Grot. says, "utile est etiam memores monere." Yet because this might seem to imply distrust, the Apostle modestly excuses himself, similarly to St. Paul at Rom. xv. 14.; q. d. (in the words of Calvin) "you do indeed hold the truth of the Gospel with all sincerity and constancy, and I say not this as though I thought you wavering; but in so momentous a matter warnings are never superfluous; and therefore they ought not to be unwelcome." By τῇ παρουσίᾳ ἀληθείᾳ almost all Expositors understand, "the truth he was then inculcating." See Est. and Mackn. But if I mistake not, it should be taken, per hypallagen, for, "and are at present established in the truth." And so Calvin seems to have understood it, since he paraphrases, "in cuius veritatis possessionem certa fide jam ingressi estis." By "the truth" is meant the truth of the Gospel, the true religion of God.

— σκηνώματος.] See Note on 2 Cor. v. 1. Of this word, as denoting the human body, an example occurs in Eurip. Heracl. 690. σκυρὸν τὸ σὸν σκῆνωμα.

— εἰδὼς ὅτι, &c.] The full sense is, "[I am the more earnest herein], as knowing;" &c. In καὶ ὡς καὶ ὁ Κύριος—μοι the Apostle alludes to the words of Christ, John xxi. 18. sq. But whether καὶ ὡς will admit of the sense assigned to it by Benson, "in the manner which," I doubt. It is plain that Christ foretold to Peter his martyrdom, as he also did to Paul. (See 2 Tim. iv. 6.) But the question is, whether these words of the Apostle were founded on any fresh revelation, as to the speedy approach of that event? This the ancients say was the case. It seems highly probable that he had another revelation: but it is very possible that he had not; and the words, it is evident, may be explained upon another supposition.

15. σπουδάσω δέ.] "I will, I say, endeavour;" namely, by committing his admonitions (such as those which follow) to writing.

16. οὐ γὰρ σεσοφισμένοις, &c.] Render, with Newc. and Scholefield, "For we did not follow cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you," &c. The connexion here with the preceding is not very obvious, and accordingly disputed. That traced by Benson is too far-fetched: and that by Schliting, though acutely conceived, proceeds upon too limited a view. The connexion seems to be chiefly with v. 14.; but partly with v. 15. As to the former, it is not merely his death that he alludes to, but his martyrdom, according to the prophecy in John xxi. 19. "signifying by what death he should glorify God;" namely, by bearing attestation to the truth of his Gospel. The Apostle therefore meant to advert to the reason why he is so ready to encounter death, and so anxious to establish others in the faith;—namely, from his thorough confidence in the truth and certainty of that which he preached; intending thus to hint that they may feel the same confidence, as reposed on undoubted truth. With the expression σεσοφισμένοις μύθοις ἐξακολουθήσαντες. Benson compares something very similar in Joseph. Antiq. καν. The expression σεσοφ. is equivalent to the πεπλασμένοι in Diod. Sic. vol. ii. 134. μύθος ἡγούνται πεπλασμένους τὰς περὶ τῶν Ἀμαζονιδῶν ἀρχαιολογίας.

Δύναμιν καὶ παρουσίαν is for δυνατὴν παρουσίαν, with reference to the second advent of our Lord to judgment. Ἐπόπται γενηθέντες — μεγαλ. is said with reference to the Transfiguration. The expression ἐπόπται is here synonymous with αὐτόπται; the former signifying spectators, the latter eye-witnesses.

19. ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον, τὸν προφ., λόγον.] Few passages are there in the N. T. of which the interpretation has been more disputed, even amongst the most eminent Expositors, than the present. The difficulty here chiefly turns on the expression βεβαιότερον, concerning which it has been doubted whether the comparative has here a comparative force, or whether it denotes only a high degree of the positive. Such an opinion, however (arising from too confined a view of the context, or taken up in order to remove a certain difficulty which clings to an interpretation) is quite unjustifiable. Yet the comparative force being retained, the question is, whether there be a comparison intended between the sure evidence afforded by prophecy, and that supplied by the Transfiguration; or whether we are to suppose that the Apostle speaks of the evidence of prophecy being confirmed by the miraculous event in question. Some ancient Commentators (as Eecumen., and the best modern ones, as Grot., Wolf, Benson, Dodd., Wetstein, Abp. Newc., Bp. Middl., Mackn., A. Clarke, and others) adopt the former opinion; according to which the sense may be thus, familiarly, expressed, with Mr. Holden: “We have the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah more confirmed by the event of his transfiguration; for if Jesus had not been the Messiah predicted in them, such a miracle would not have been wrought to verify his pretensions.” Certainly the above sense is permitted by the words (though not, as will be shown further on, required by them), and is not at variance with the context. Yet (after a more mature examination of the passage than I was enabled to bestow in the first Edition of this work) I am inclined to think, with Calvin, that there is something forced and jejune in that sense; and I am induced rather to acquiesce in the view first mentioned, which is adopted by the generality of Expositors (including the Latin Fathers in general), and, amongst the rest, Est., Menoch., Calvin, Beza, Grot., Salmas., Whitby, Scott, and (instar omnium) Bishops Warburton, Sherlock, and Horsley. From their masterly discussions it is clear that the sense in question is more agreeable to the scope of the whole Epistle, especially this Chapter. The object of the context is, Bp. Warburton thinks, not the personal character of Jesus, but the truth of the Gospel in general. Rather, however, I should say, it is both. See an able examination of the general subject of the Epistle by Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. vi. 346. seq., and an admirable paraphrase of the sense of vv. 16—19. Yet the learned Prelate certainly presses too much on the meaning of βεβαιότερον, as doubtless anxious to obtain so powerful a support to his favourite doctrine of the great superiority of Prophecy over Miracles, which, however true in itself (and Prophecy is a growing argument), can hardly be found here. And surely nothing could be more harsh than to understand the προφ. λόγ., as he does, of the prophecies of the New Testament only, namely, the predictions of St. Paul and St. John concerning Antichrist. A far more correct view of the sense is taken by Bp. Sherlock (on Prophecy, Disc. 1.) as follows: “We have a far more sure word of prophecy, namely, in evidence of the future coming of Christ in power, which was the doctrine that the Apostle was desirous of proving. To prove this, he had just told them that he had been himself an eye-witness of Christ’s majesty or glory. To this it might be objected, that although his testimony showed that Christ himself had been glorified, it was no proof that he would ever again return in glory and power. The Apostle may be supposed to reply, “It is true that all future events can be learned only from God. All other arguments can amount to no more than probabilities and presumptions; and a great presumption it is that Christ shall come in glory, forasmuch as we have already seen him glorified; and it is a further evidence of his power to deliver his servants, since God has openly declared him to be his well-beloved Son. But to assure us that he will indeed so come, and so use his power, ‘we have a more sure word of prophecy;’ that is, we have the very word of God, speaking by his Prophets, to assure us of the certainty of this future event. No comparison is here intended between miracles and prophecy, as arguments for the truth of the Gospel; for St. Peter speaks only of the coming of Christ in power. And by the ‘more sure word of prophecy’ are to be understood, not merely the prophecies of the Old Testament, but probably also of the New. The above is confirmed by the profound researches of Bp. Horsley, in four masterly Sermons on vv. 20, 21. He understands “the Prophetic word” of the entire volume of the prophetic writings, whether of the Old or New Test., then extant, or hereafter to be promulgated, i. e.

the prophecies of the Christian Church, together with the prophetic writings of the O. T.

I must not omit to observe, that, though Bp. Middl. here finds fault with our common Version, as if our venerable Translators mistook the construction; yet, admitting that, it will not follow that the one he himself proposes is necessarily the true one. The construction is, I apprehend, as follows: καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον λόγον, τὸν προφ. [λόγον.] Thus the τὸν προφ. λόγον is in apposition with, and exegetical of, the former. I have pointed accordingly; by which, I apprehend, all difficulty is removed; and, after all, there will be no breach of the Canons of the Greek Article, as laid down by Bp. Middl. The above view I find supported by the opinion of the learned Prof. Pott, in his Edition of this Epistle.

To this λόγος προφητικὸς they are enjoined to take heed, ὡς λύχνῳ φαίνονται ἐν αὐχμηρῷ τόπῳ, ἕως, &c., words somewhat obscure from the boldness of the metaphorical imagery employed. The most probable sense is that assigned by Bp. Horsley,—namely, “a discovery from Heaven of the schemes of Providence, which, however imperfect, is yet sufficient for the comfort and support of good men, under all the discouragements of the present life; as it furnishes a demonstration—not of equal evidence, indeed, with that which the final catastrophe will afford, but a certain demonstration—a demonstration drawn from fact and experience, rising in evidence as the ages of the world roll on; and, in every stage of it, sufficient for the passing generation of mankind, ‘that the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of the earth,’—that his providence directeth all events for the final happiness of the virtuous,—that there is a reward for the righteous,—that there is a God who will judge the earth.”

The words ἕως οὗ ἡμέρα διανύσῃ—ὑμῶν are ably explained by Bp. Warburton to mean, “till a long series of events [yet in the womb of time] shall arise, to give testimony by degrees, till the whole evidence concludes in one unclouded blaze of conviction.”

20. πᾶσα προφ. γρ. ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως οὐ γίνεται.] Of this verse the sense has been nearly as much disputed as that of the preceding. Yet there need not have been any such doubt; since, although the words would admit of the sense assigned by many,—namely (in the words of Bp. Van Mildert), “that the sense of no prophecy is to be determined by an abstract consideration of the passage itself; but by taking it in conjunction with other portions of Scripture relating to the subject;” yet, though this be perfectly true in itself, and a rule applicable to the Prophetic writings beyond all other parts of Scripture; that is a sense not allowed by the context; which will not, I think, permit us to assign any other than that so ably developed in four most admirable Sermons by Bp. Horsley. “The maxim (he shows) is propounded by the Apostle as a leading principle (for that is the import of τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες) never to be lost sight of.” And the words are well rendered by the learned Prelate thus: “Not any prophecy of Scripture is of self-interpretation, i. e. is its own interpreter, because the Scripture prophecies are not detached predictions of separate independent events, but are united in system, all terminating in one great object—the promulgation of the Gospel, and the complete establishment of the Messiah’s kingdom.” And the reason is evident from the next verse, which (as Bp. Horsley shews) means, “that the predictions of the prophets did not, like their own private thoughts and sentiments, originate in their own minds. The prophets, in the exercise of their office, were necessary agents, acting under the irresistible impulse of the omniscient Spirit, who made the faculties and the organs of those holy men his own instruments for conveying to mankind some portion of the treasures of his own knowledge. Futurity seems to have been delineated in some sort of emblematical picture, presented by the Spirit of God to the prophet’s mind, which, preternaturally filled and heated with this scenery, in describing the images obtruded on the fantasy, gave pathetic utterance to wisdom not its own.” The distinction between the discoveries of general revelation and of prophecy, the learned Prelate shows to be this. “The former is an explicit declaration of the final general event of things, and of whatever else may be the immediate effect of the will and power of the First Cause, or the purport of any original decree of God. Prophecy is a disguised detail of those intermediate and subordinate events which are brought about by the regular operation of second causes, and are in part dependent upon man’s free agency.” Accordingly, ἐπιλύσις here must mean interpretation, not, in the general sense, but in that peculiar to prophecy; which consists in ascertaining the events to which predictions allude, and in showing the agreement between the images of the prediction and the particulars of the history. In short, the term is here the specific name of that sort of exposition, which renders the mystic sense of parables, dreams, and prophecies. Of prophecies, in the strict acceptance of the word, that is, of disguised predictions of those events which are brought about by the intervention of second causes, and do in great part depend upon the free agency of man—of such predictions, the Apostle affirms, that the mystic interpretation—that interpretation which consists in ascertaining the events with which the predictions correspond—is never to be drawn from the prophecy itself. It is not to be struck out by any process of criticism applied to the words in which a prediction is conceived;—it is not to be so struck out, because, without a knowledge of the event foretold, as well as a right understanding of the terms of the prediction, the agreement of them cannot be perceived.” The learned Prelate then proceeds to prove that the origin of prophecy, namely, its coming from God, is a reason why it should not be capable of self-interpretation. Thus the Apostle asserts that all Scripture prophecies are purposely so conceived, as not to be of self-interpretation; and he intimates that it was a part of the scheme of Providence, that prophecy should be so delivered, as to have to fetch its interpretation from the consistence of the prophetic system, and from the events of the world.

The above view of the sense of v. 21 is supported by the opinion of Knapp, Script. Var. Arg. comm. I. and C. F. Fritsch de Revel. not. Biblica, p. 68.

21. οὐ γὰρ θελήματι ἀνθ.] This is, according to the second of the above stated interpretations, explanatory of the preceding. Render, "for prophecy was not uttered," &c. The term φέρεσθαι was often used of inspiration. Hence prophets were said to be θεοφῶρητοι.

II. From the mention of true and divinely inspired prophets, the Apostle takes occasion to advert to false prophets; and intimating that there had been such among the Jews, forewarns them that there will be at least false teachers among Christians: men of corrupt lives, promulgating false doctrines to support evil living, and ingratiating themselves with the people, in order to make a greater gain of preaching the Gospel. He contrasts the end of those men with that of the pious and virtuous; and shows that, as in the case of the wicked Antediluvians, destruction would as surely befall the one, as preservation be extended to the other. And, finally, to more effectually forewarn them of the persons in question, he enters into a beautifully graphic description of the false teachers; and thus points out the hopeless condition of those who should be deluded by them.

1. ἐγίνοντο δὲ—ἀπώλειαν.] The sense is, There were, however, also false prophets among the [Israelitish] people; thus also will there be among you false teachers, who shall introduce pernicious heresies, even denying the Lord that purchased them [with his own blood]; bringing thereby on themselves speedy destruction." On the persons here meant by these false teachers, much difference of opinion exists. Some suppose them to have been the Gnostics, or Nicolaitans; others, Judaizers, holding opinions similar to those of the Montanists of the second and third centuries. The question is of no easy determination, but of little importance.

By παρεισάξ. is denoted the surreptitious craft with which the doctrines in question were introduced. The words αἰρέσεις ἀπωλείας designate that they were at once heretical and highly pernicious. A more definite charge is couched in the next words, καὶ τὸν ἀγοράσαντα, the sense of which depends upon the reference in δεσπότην, whether to God (as many eminent modern Expositors suppose), or to Christ, according to the ancients and most moderns. The latter seems the more correct view; for, as to the passages of the O. T. cited in proof of the former interpretation, they are not quite to the point; and the latter is almost demanded by ἀγοράσαντα. Thus δεσπ. will, as often, be for Κύριον. We are not, however, to understand that they denied Jesus to be the Messiah; for otherwise they could not be teachers of Christianity at all. Perhaps the sense (expressed with a popular brevity) may be, "denying him who purchased them (i. e. their Redeemer) to be their Lord." It should seem that, from a misinterpretation of the words of the Apostles, they stumbled at the descriptions of the majesty of Jesus Christ, and the ineffable glory of his second advent; and regarded the account of the Apostles on that subject, as a fable devised to hold the disciples in subjection. If so, they must have denied the proper Deity of Jesus Christ, and consequently the Atonement, and other fundamental doctrines; and probably held opinions not very different from those which afterwards paved the way for Arianism and Pelagianism.

2. ἄσελγείαις.] This (for the common reading ἀπώλειαις) is found in almost all the MSS., Versions, and early Editions, except the Erasmus and Stephanic ones, has been preferred by almost all Critics, and was adopted by Wets., and edited by Beng., Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Tittm., and Vat. And rightly; for both external evidence are in favour of it. Ἀσελγ. may be rendered "dissolute doctrines and practices." By ἡ ὁδὸς τῆς ἀληθείας is meant the Gospel, or Christian religion. See Note on Acts ix. 2. Βλασφ., "will be calumniated and regarded as false." I would compare Joseph., p. 1078. ἀπιστίαν τῆς ἀληθείας κατέχευεν.

3. καὶ ἐν πλεον. &c.] And through covetousness, they will make a mere gain of you (viz. of teaching you by feigned words), and hawk about their doctrines as merchandize." Wets. cites two examples of πλάττειν λόγους, to which I add Isæus p. 70. λόγοις πεπλασμένοις ἀξιώσει πιστεύειν ὑμᾶς. The doctrines in question were fictitious, devised ad captandū, and to flatter the corruptions of human nature. At οἷς τὸ κρίμα—νυστάζει the relative is to be resolved into ἀλλ' ἐκείνοις scil. ἐκείνων; and at ἐκπαλαι (which is for ἐκ παλαιῶ χρόνου) supply προγεγραμμένον or such like, as appears from the parallel passage of Jude 4. ἄνθρωποι οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα. Νυστάζει is for χρονίζεται; as Eurip. Hec. 662. οὐποτ' εὐδὲ λυπρά

σου κηρύγματα, and Æschyl. Theb. 54. καὶ τῶνδε πύστις οὐκ ὀκνῶ χρονίζεται. The sense is: "But their long denounced sentence lingereth not, nor doth their destruction slumber;" meaning that such persons are sure to be punished.

4—9. These verses are illustrative, by example, of the method of God's judgment in such cases; and meant to verify what was before said, κρίμα ἐκπαλαί οὐκ ἀργεῖ, that God visits vice with punishment, and virtue with rewards. With respect to the construction here, it is irregular, there being no clause to correspond to the εἰ γὰρ—οὐκ ἐφείσατο; but after ἐρρύσατο may be supplied from the context some such words as οὐδ' ἐκείνων φείσεται. In ἀμαρτ. there is reference to the rebellion of the fallen angels. Σειραῖς ζόφον ταρταρώσας is an expression truly Æschylean, in which ταρτ. is derived from the Heathen, and σειραῖς ζόφον from the Jewish mythology; the Tartarus being a part of Hades, in which criminals were supposed to be confined till the day of judgment. Now they are not represented as being in actual torments, but only adjudged to them, and in the mean time committed to the security of chains of darkness; i. e. to places where utter darkness holds them as it were enchained. So Wisd. xvii. 13. ἀλύσει σκότους ἐδέθησαν. In exemplifying and illustrating the expression, the Commentators might have adduced a very similar one in Herodot. v. 77, where, in an Athenian inscription in the Acropolis, it is said of captives held in fetters, Δεσμῷ ἐν ἀχλυόεντι σιδηρῷ ἔσβεσαν ὕβριν. The image, however, seems to have been derived from the Jewish Rabbins. Thus Sohar Genes. fol. 45. col. 178. "Postquam (filii Dei) filios genuerunt, tumpsit eos Deus, et ad montem tenebrarum perduxit, ligavitque eos catenis ferreis, quæ usque ad medium abyssus magni pertingunt."

For τηρουμένους, τηρουμένους is found in almost all the best MSS. and early Editions, and is edited by nearly every Critic from Wets. to Vater. "Ὀγδοον Νῶε. must, by a common idiom found in the best writers, mean "Noah with seven others." Κήρυκα δικ., "a herald to proclaim to the world tidings of the righteousness which is by faith," and of which St. Paul says, Heb. xi. 7, he was himself an heir. Καταστροφῇ κατέκρινεν, i. e. executed punishment upon them by utter destruction. See Note on Rom. viii. 3. Ὑπόδειγμα—τεθεικώς, "having made them a type and example of the future punishment of the wicked." Καταπονούμενοι—ἀναστρ., "wearied out (i. e. grievously harassed) by the profligate behaviour of men who trampled on all laws." Ὁ καταπ. compare Ps. xcvi. 10. cxix. 58. Βλέμματι γὰρ—ἐβασάνιζεν. This is explanatory of the preceding καταπον., and the construction is, ὁ γὰρ δίκαιος, ἐγκατοικῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς (while he dwelt among them) ἐβασάνιζε βλέμματι καὶ ἀκοῇ, ἡμέραν ἐξ ἡμέρας, ψυχὴν δικαίαν, ἀνόμοις ἔργοις. The βλέμματι καὶ ἀκοῇ denote the mode in which he was daily tormented with their wicked conduct.

9. οἶδε Κύριος—τηρεῖν.] This is intended as an inference, q. d. "If God in those instances punished the guilty and preserved the innocent, we may be sure that 'He knows how always to save,'" &c. The οἶδε imports both knowledge of the means, and power and disposition to use them. So Dr. South, in a Sermon on this text, shows the signal mercy of God to the righteous, in delivering them from temptations calculated to corrupt them. "The ways of deliverance from temptation (he observes) are three; 1. being kept from it; 2. of being supported under it; 3. of being brought out of it, when it has prevailed." Κολαζομένους, for κολασθησομένους, "then to be punished." So the Pesch. Syr. cruciandos. See James i. 2.

—ἀδίκους—τηρεῖν.] This suggests the other part of the inference,—that the vengeance of God, though it may slumber, will at length visit those corrupt teachers with the same condign punishment, as that which befel the disobedient angels, and ungodly Sodomites.

10. Here what was before said is more directly applied to the persons in question, who are characterized in this and the following verses up to the end of the Chapter. Τοὺς ὀπίσω, &c., may be rendered, "who live conformably to the flesh, in the lust of pollution," i. e. in lustful and polluting practices. Then is represented their insubordination, and rebellion against any authority that might check their vicious practices; and while proceeding to set forth the greatness of their guilt, the Apostle breaks out into a parenthetical exclamation at their wickedness, which may be rendered, "daring and insolent are they! they scruple not to speak evil even of rulers in high stations."

— αὐθάδεις] self-willed (for αὐτοαδεῖς), to whom nothing approves itself but their own conceits, and who wish to have their own way, i. e. as the Schol. on Aristot. Eth. vii. explains, τὸ ἐαυτοῖς ἀρέσκον μεταδιώκοντες. Of which character see a spirited sketch by Theophrastus, Ch. xv. To the present purpose it is finely observed by Cudworth (in his noble Discourse on 1 John ii. 3, 4.) "There is nothing contrary to God in the whole world, nothing that fights against him, but self-will. This is the strong castle that we all keep garrisoned against heaven, in every one of our hearts, which God continually layeth siege unto; and it must be conquered and demolished before we can conquer heaven."

11. ἰσχυῖ—δυντε] "though far superior in strength and power." On the reference in κατ' αὐτῶν the Commentators are not agreed. Some suppose it to be to the δόξας just before; others, to the τολμηταί, αὐθάδεις. Neither interpretation, however, is tenable. It is best referred, with Benson, Newc., and others, to the ἄγγέλων ἀμαρτ. at v. 4. unless we read κατ' αὐτῶν, (from some MSS. and the Vulgate Version), meaning those of their own body, i. e. the bad angels. This is placed beyond doubt by the parallel passage of Jude 9. The argument is, that the persons in question calumniate those of high reputation and dignity, their brethren, while the angels, exalted as they are above them in power, do not speak calumniously, or with vituperation, of their fellow angels, even though the very reverse of ἔνδοξοι. See more in Dr. A. Clarke. The same Jewish tradition is supposed to have been had in view by both St. Peter and St. Jude. But though the former may have had in mind the same tradition as that referred to by the latter, yet he must also have had in view some other similar one, more correspondent to οὐ φέρουσι—κρίσιν, "do not prefer a calumnious accusation to the Lord."

12—16. Here the charge is further brought home, and the heretics in question described, under various characters; 1. as, like the animals, devoid of reason, and guided solely by sense and instinct (so as to be seemingly created only to be taken and destroyed), and thereby speaking evil of things which they do not understand, viz. the laws and measures of their rulers. These, it is added, shall utterly and justly perish by their own corrupt practices. (See Jude 10.)

13, 14. Here are introduced more particular charges, those of gross sensuality, nay, profligacy, and insatiable avarice and rapacity. And it should seem that σπῖλοι καὶ μῶμοι are a parenthetical exclamation, like the τολμηταί, &c., at v. 10. See Jude 12. Eph. v. 27. They are further described as revelling in sensual luxury, indulging in it even in the day time; which was by the ancients ever regarded as a mark of confirmed sottishness. See 1 Thess. v. 7. and Note.

— ἐντροφῶντες—ὑμῖν.] The phraseology is harsh and anomalous, and the sense much disputed. The most probable interpretation is that of Pott, "oblectantes se in fraudibus suis et dolis, quibus utuntur ad alios decipiendos et pecuniā emungendos." Yet this seems not the whole that is meant. The words appear to be intended to further unfold the idea at ἡδονήν—τρυφήν preceding, and the full sense may be as follows: "who contrive to live luxuriously by their deceits and impostures; constant attendants at your feasts." This mode of taking the passage yields an excellent sense, and involves no harshness; for the ἐν may very well be taken for by, and ἐντροφῶντες for ἐν τρυφῇ διάγοντες; since of ἐντροφῆν in the sense luxuriari, examples may be seen in Steph. Thes., to which I would add a passage that may have been had in mind by the Apostle, Is. lv. 2. φάγεσθε ἀγαθά, καὶ ἐντροφήσῃ ἐν ἀγαθοῖς ἡ ψυχὴ ὑμῶν. See Wakef. on Soph. Trach. 281.

14. ὀφθ. μεστ. μοιχ.] i. e. 'by their looks they show the lasciviousness of their hearts,' Ἀκαταπ. ἀμαρτίας, "and that cannot cease from impure imaginations or lascivious practices."

— δελεάζοντες, &c.] Here we have another trait,—namely, their craft in beguiling unstable persons, and consummate art in making the utmost advantage that was possible by their trickery, as if they could never be satisfied. The plural in πλεον. denotes the various arts, by which they extracted gain from their deluded votaries; and the γεγυμν., the deliberate and habitual mode of doing the thing. So Joseph. p. 1246. 11. γυμνάζοντες τὴν ἀπόνοιαν. For πλεονεξίας, some MSS. have πλεονεξίας, which is edited by Matth., Griesb., Tittm., and Vater. But though this be more agreeable to Classical usage (as will appear from Steph. Thes. in v. γυμνάζω), yet we may suspect the reading to be a mere correction of the ancient Critics.

The Apostle then exclaims, with reference to their whole character (perhaps having in view Is. lvii. 3. τέκνα ἀπωλείας κατάρas τέκνα! which is usually regarded as put for τέκνα κατάρas. Prof. Scholefield, however, observes, that "this is not one of those common Hebraisms which abound in the writings of the Apostles, in which a quality of the subject is expressed by a Genitive following it, instead of an adjective in concord with it."

15. καταλιπόντες — ἐπλανήθησαν. The Apostle, resuming his description, represents them as having utterly forsaken "the right way" of scriptural truth and holy obedience, and quite gone astray; not merely from an erroneous judgment, but from the sensuality, ambition, and avarice of their hearts. (Scott.) The force of the comparison rests in this, that as Balaam counselled the Moabites to entice the Israelites to illicit connection with their women, and thus lead them into idolatry, and draw on them the heavy punishment of God; so these false teachers, by giving Christians a license to commit immorality (namely, for the purpose of gratifying their own avarice and sensuality), in like manner called forth the vengeance of God. μισθὸν ἀδικίας ἡγ. Of the morals of Balaam we know nothing; but it is plainly implied in the O. T. history, and confirmed by Philo, Josephus, and all the Jewish Interpreters, that covetousness tempted him to commit so base a violation of his duty as a Prophet;—just as in the case of these false teachers, avarice and sensuality tempted them to falsify the Gospel, that they might make it the more productive of gain to expend on their own lusts. There is great force in ἡγάπησαν. So Creon in Soph. Antig. 1048. says of Tiresias, τάδικεῖν φιλῶν.

τῇ before εὐθείαν is in several MSS. and early Edd. not found; and is cancelled by Beng., Griesb., Matth., and others.

17. οὗτοί εἰσι—ἐλανν. A most lively comparison, to designate the persons in question as δῶσοντες, promising much, but constantly disappointing expectation; specious but deceiving, as wells destitute of water, and clouds which bring no rain; than which no disappointment can, in Eastern countries, be greater; and of which the former sometimes not merely disappoint, but lure travellers to destruction. I would compare Eurip. Suppl. 96. πλαγκτὰ δ' ὥσεί τις νεφέλα Πνευμάτων ὑπὸ δυσχείμων αἰσσω. The strong metaphor ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους, for ὁ ζόφος ὁ σκοτῶδης designates a place and state of woe the most dismal, formed on the image of Tartarus, adverted to supra v. 4. Compare Matt. viii. 12. xxii. 13. xxv. 30.

18. ὑπέρογκα—φθεγγ. &c.] We have here the same sentiment as at v. 17; the meaning being, that these persons were not only wicked themselves, but the cause of wickedness (together with its fatal consequences) in others. The words may be thus paraphrased with Benson: "They, in high-sounding words, lofty and unmeaning phrases, make vain, boasting, and arrogant pretences to a more thorough and sublime knowledge of religion, than the true Apostles and Prophets; but by preaching such doctrines as give indulgence to the lusts of the flesh, that is, to lasciviousness, they lay a bait for those who, by embracing Christianity, were thoroughly reformed, and had escaped from such as still continue to live in the error of idolatry and vice." At ὑπέρογκα supply ρήματα. So Aristoph. Ran. 971. speaks of certain diction as οἰδοῦσαν ὑπὸ κομπασμάτων καὶ ῥημάτων ἐπαχθῶν. Thus in ματαιότη. there is an allusion to that folly, (κατ' ἐξοχήν,) boasting. See 2 Cor. xii. 11. Τοὺς ὄντως ἀποφ., &c., "those who had [once] really disengaged themselves from," &c. This sense of ἀποφ. is not rare; and the construction itself is frequent.

19. ἐλευθερίαν i. e. liberty both religious (as releasing them from what was thought unnecessary strictness of life), and, probably, political. This they offered, but most inconsistently, themselves being slaves of corruption and vice. The best comment here is John viii. 34. and Rom. vi. 16—20. The next words ᾧ γάρ τις ἦττ. &c. have the air of a proverb, and were, we may suppose, of popular application.

20. This gives another reason (as one had been before given, vv. 18, 19.) why black darkness is reserved for such offenders. (Newc.) q. d. "If professed Christians, having escaped the outward 'pollutions of the world, by the knowledge of Christ,' were again, by the artful seduction of false teachers, entangled in those polluting practices, as if consistent with the service of Christ, and so “overcome,” as habitually to indulge in their corrupt inclinations, their “latter end,” after they had learned thus to pervert the Gospel, would be far worse than the beginning, when they had sinned in ignorance; as they must have done violence to far clearer light and fuller conviction. (Scott.) So Thucyd. i. 86. διπλασίας ζημίας ἀξιοί εἰσιν, ὅτι ἀντ' ἀγαθῶν κακοὶ γεγυμνῆται.

21. This is illustrative of the last clause of the preceding verse,—showing that apostasy, or living unworthy of their Christian profession, is worse than a state of heathenism, since ignorance would then have been some excuse; whereas, by sinning against knowledge, they were at once more condemned and more hardened. Such, too, I would observe, was the opinion of the Philosophers, with respect to those who apostatized from the precepts of philosophy. So Max. Tyr. Diss. 12. φιλοσοφία δὲ, καὶ ἐπιστήμη, καὶ ἀρετὴ τοῖς ἀπαξ φεύγουσιν ἄβατος μένει καὶ ἀδιάλλακτος.

22. The baseness of the conduct of such persons is further illustrated by an apt comparison, formed on two proverbs; one derived from Prov. xxvi. 11, and the other probably current in the East; both representing in the strongest light the folly of those, who returned to vices which they had before abandoned. Ἐξέραμα, from ἐξέρω, which is derived from the Etym. Mag. from ἐξ and ἔρα, the earth. That, however, involves no little absurdity. Ἐράω is, I suspect, from the Hebr. ער, to empty out. And the term signified not only to vomit, but to spit.

III. The Apostle here declares, that he wrote this and the former Epistle, to put them in mind of Christ's final advent to judgment, and to excite them to prepare for it. But withal he informs them, that they must expect to hear the notion ridiculed by foolish and wicked men. To show how ill founded is this ridicule, he intimates that the first constitution of the earth was such as to occasion the Flood, and that the present frame tends to a dissolution by fire, which will take place at its appointed time; and that the reason why it is delayed is, to give men an opportunity for previous preparation. That when the purposes of God are accomplished, the day of the Lord will come suddenly, and the world be destroyed by an universal conflagration; after which there will be new heavens and a new earth for the righteous. Finally, that it highly behoved them to prepare for that awful consummation by holiness and steadfastness in the faith. (Benson.)

1. ταύτην—γράφω ἐπιστολὴν.] The sense seems to be that assigned by Wakef., “This is the second Epistle, beloved, that I am writing to you.” Ἐν αἷς, “in both of which,” for ἐν ᾧ, ὡς καὶ ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ. Τὴν εἰλ. διάνοιαν, “your pure and well-disposed minds.” The Commentators cite from Plato the phrase εἰλικρινεῖ τῇ διανοίᾳ χρώμενος.

2. προειρ. ρ.] See i. 12, 13. ii. 21. The construction is as if there were written καὶ τῆς ἐντολῆς ἡμῶν τῶν ἀποστόλων τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ Σωτῆρος.

3. ἐλεύσονται—ἐμπαῖκται.] After τῶν ἡμερῶν many MSS. and almost all the Versions add ἐν ἐμπαίγμυνῃ, which is approved by most Critics, and introduced into the text by Bengel, Griesb., Tittm., and Vater. Whether taken with ἐμπ. for σὺν ἐμπ., or with ἐλεύσονται, the addition certainly strengthens the sense: but external evidence is quite against it, and internal not in its favour. By πρῶτον is not so much to be understood what was to happen first, as (with Benson) a premise, from whence they might conclude they ought to remember the predictions of the Prophets, and the injunctions of the Apostles. See the Note on i. 20. Ἐπ' ἔσχατου τ. ἡμ. Supply μέρους, hereafter; the expression not denoting any precise time, but either a remote or soon approaching one, as best suits the context. See Mackn., Pott, and Rosenm.

4. λέγοντες· Ποῦ ἐστίν, &c. By αὐτοῦ is plainly meant Christ. From the character of the persons, this cannot import any inquiry into the promises of Christ's coming in Scripture; nor is it to be thought (with some) that they expected his second coming, and thought it long. It is merely to be regarded as a popular form of expression (not dissimilar to some in our own language), in which was implied a disbelief that he would come at all, and an insinuation that there was no hope of an event so long delayed. By his coming is meant his coming to judgment, as appears from the answer to those scoffers, vv. 5—13.

— ἀφ' ἧς γὰρ—κτίσεως.] q. d. (as Rosenm. paraphrases) "Our fathers have successively died, nor has any one come to life. And as from the creation of the world all things are carried on by an alternate course of living and dying, so does the order of nature remain the same. Thus they will fancy, that what has been so long deferred will never come to pass."

5—7. To the objection of the scoffers, that all things remained the same from the beginning of the creation, and therefore would continue so, St. Peter answers, that this is not the fact; for the world had been once destroyed by water, and would be again by fire. (Rosenm.)

— λανθάνει αὐτοὺς τ. θέλ.] This is generally thought to import a total ignorance of what they knew, or might have known, but cared not to know. But it is better (with Heins., Mede, Hamm., Rosenm., Pott, Wahl, and most recent Commentators) to take it to mean, "it escapes the notice of those who think, or give it as their opinion, that," &c. By the οὐρ. are meant, not the ethereal, but the aerial heaven. The words καὶ γῆ—συνεστῶσα are obscure and variously interpreted. The most probable interpretation seems to be that of Capell., Kypke, Elsn., Rosenmuller, Pott, and most recent Commentators, who suppose the sense to be, "the earth with its atmosphere (i. e. the aerial heaven) being formed out of water, and consisting by means of water;" συνεστ. being for σύστασιν ἔχουσα. So Thales said that πάντα ἐξ ὕδατος συνιστάναι; as also did other philosophers. The Apostle thus means to confute those deriders, by proving that things had not continued as they were from the creation; and that such an assertion supposes utter ignorance on their part of what they might have known, both from the book of Revelation, and, indeed, the book of Nature;—ignorance of the natural constitution of the earth; which, he proceeds to say, is physically ordained to bring on its own destruction by fire at some future period, as it did formerly by water. Συνεστῶσα is, by a sort of Zeugma, to be referred to the οὐρανοὶ καὶ γῆ ἦσαν ἑκπαλαι, &c.

6. δι' ᾧ.] Some supply ὕδατων; others, τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ τῆς γῆς. I should prefer (with Markl.) πραγμάτων, i. e. by which constitution of things.

7. οἱ δὲ νῦν οὐρανοὶ—ἀνθρώπων.] "From the circumstantial manner (says Mr. Slade) in which the final conflagration of the heavens and the earth is contrasted with the destruction of the old world, it appears that the Apostle has given, not a figurative, but a real representation of what will hereafter take place."

8 & 9. The Apostle here proceeds to show why the Lord defers the last judgment,—namely, out of his long-suffering, and that the sinner may come to repentance: and this he prefaces with a saying found in Ps. xc. 4, and frequent in the Rabbinical writings, importing that God does not measure his duration as we do ours, who are apt to measure the Divine mind by our own weak conceptions. (Rosenm. and Valpy.)

9. οὐ βραδύνει—ἡγοῦνται.] The sense, obscure from brevity, seems to be, "The Lord does not procrastinate as to his promise, as some think [attributing to him], a slowness of performance." The scoffers had probably said, that either God had really made no such engagement to judge the world, and deal with all men according to their works; or that, if He had, he had forgotten, or had not leisure to fulfil it. At ἐπαγγ. supply ἔνεκα, quod attinet ad. And by promise is to be understood fulfilment of promise, (by a common metonymy), namely, that he would return to judgment. The general sense of the verses is,—that the delay of the catastrophe in question does not proceed from slowness in making his assurance good (by coming to judgment and putting a final end to the mundane system), especially if we consider that the measure of time, with the Deity and with men, is quite different (time being as nothing) to Him in whose sight all is eternity. (See Plutarch cited by Wets.); but that He delays from long-suffering, in order that all may have the opportunity of repentance. See Bp. Conybeare's Sermon on this text, vol. ii. 347, in which are considered the reasons why God delays the punishment of the wicked.

10. ἤξει—ἐν νυκτί.] The words ἐν νυκτί are in several MSS. and Versions, and some Fathers, not found; and are cancelled by most recent Editors. They are probably an interpolation from 1 Thess. v. 2. ῥοιζηδόν, "with a mighty crash," ἡχητικόν, as Hesych. explains. The term properly denotes "with a whiz," such as is made by the noise of a body impelled through the air with great force. It should seem that the world will pass away only as to the purpose it had served; for, as Bens. observes, "it is not necessary to suppose, with some, that the world will be annihilated, or removed with its atmosphere, from its present orbit. It may be said to pass away, if the form and constitution be altered; as the old world is at v. 6 said to have been destroyed by water."

—στοιχεῖα δὲ καυσ.—κατακ.] Many think that στοιχ. cannot denote the elements properly so called, but the heavenly bodies. But the usual signification of the word may be retained. See Bens. The sense is well expressed by Mr. Scott as follows: "Then all 'the elements,' of which the earth and its atmosphere, and all the luminaries connected with it, are composed, shall melt 'with intense heat;' and not only one vast city, or one whole nation, but the earth, with all its cities, forests, mountains, yea, the contents of its bowels to the very centre, as well as all the works of men, however admired or magnificent, which cover the surface of it, shall constitute one vast conflagration, and be reduced to as confused a Chaos, as that from which it was first created." By the ἔργα ἐν αὐτῇ are meant the various works of human art and industry. Thus (to use the words of our English Æschylus) "The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces, The solemn temples, the great globe itself, And all that it inherits, shall dissolve, And, like the baseless fabric of a dream, Leave not a wreck behind!"

11. ποταποὺς δεῖ ὑπάρχειν, &c.] In this sentence we should have expected first an interrogation, and then an answer to it. Here, however, the question and answer are intermingled, populariter. The interrogation, indeed, here, as often, partakes of exclamation. Εὐσεβ. is exegetical of ἀγ. ἀναστ.; and in both, the plural refers to the number.

12. σπεύδ. τὴν παρ.] Σπεύδ. is well rendered by Prof. Scholefield "hastening on," as Thucyd. vi. 39. κακὰ σπεύδοντες. Yet, though a good literal version, this seems not the full sense of the word, which is, I think, well explained by Kypke and Rosenm., "avidè desiderantes," and by Newc. "earnestly desiring;" which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. This sense, too, is communicated to the preceding term; and the full meaning of both is, "earnestly expecting, and ardently wishing and anticipating." Δι' ἣν, scil. ἡμέραν or παρουσίαν. On the next words, see Note at vv. 7 & 10, and Benson and Mackn.

15, 16. The sense is, "Wherefore, seeing that ye expect such things [are sometime to happen], strive, by being unspotted and blameless, to be found of him in peace. And reckon [as you justly may] that this long extended waiting, and forbearance of the Lord, is meant to be our salvation;" i. e. to promote it by giving us an opportunity for working it out. Ἐν εἰρήνῃ may be rendered (with Carpz. and others) cum bona conscientia; i. e. in peace with their consciences; but the context rather requires the common interpretation, "in peace with their great Judge."

—καθὼς καὶ, &c.] Here St. Peter refers to some particular Epistle, or Epistles, but to which is not agreed; for there is none immediately addressed to any one of the provinces mentioned 1 Pet. i. 1. It is, therefore, most probable, that St. Peter refers generally to those Epistles of St. Paul which were written to the Asiatic Churches; for though addressed to particular Churches, or persons, they were intended for general circulation; and in all of them he hath written of the things mentioned vv. 14, 15; as, for instance, Eph. ii. 3—5. Col. i. 21. 1 Tim. ii. 4. He also speaks of these things in his other Epistles.—(Benson and Holden.)

16. ἐν οἷς ἐστι δυσνοητά—ἀπόλειαν.] Here some difference of opinion exists as to the sense, τούτων. Ἐν οἷς ἐστὶ δυσνόητά τινα, ἃ οἱ ἀμαθεῖς καὶ ἀστήρικτοι στρεβλοῦσιν, ὡς καὶ τὰς λοιπὰς γραφὰς, πρὸς which mainly depends upon the reading. Instead of the vulg. οἷς, several Versions and some Fathers have αἷς, "the Epistles;" which is preferred by Beza, Mill, Benson, and Dr. Maltby, in a Sermon on this text, who thinks that "it agrees far better with the context; though (for reasons which will readily occur to the minds of Critics) the other might, at an early period, usurp its place." Yet the weight of authority is decidedly in favour of οἷς, which is retained by all the Editors, and preferred by most of the Commentators. So also Prof. Scholef., who renders, "in which things are some matters." By things are meant subjects; though it is probable the Apostle had also in view the difficulty of St. Paul's manner of writing on those subjects, as well as the subjects themselves. See a Sermon on this text by Bp. Atterbury, entitled "The difficult Passages of Scripture vindicated from such objections as are usually made to them; and proper directions given how to use them." Also a Sermon of Bp. Maltby on this text, and Bp. Conybeare's admirable Discourse (or Dissertation) on the present passage, entitled "Scripture Difficulties considered."

By the ἀμαθεῖς are meant, not unlearned, but such as were not well acquainted with the subjects discussed, and the style of writing. Ἀστήρ. designates those who have no fixed principles of Christian doctrine to guide them. By the τὰς λοιπὰς γραφὰς are meant all the Scriptures of the N. T. then extant, as well as those of the Old Testament. The general sense of the passage may be thus expressed, with Bp. Atterbury: "Some men, not being firmly rooted and grounded in the true faith of Christ, and being, by consequence, of an uncertain and wavering judgment in matters of religion, were apt to make an ill use of the difficult places of Scripture, and to turn them to such a sense as destroyed Christianity; and such, therefore, as could not but end in the destruction of those who asserted and maintained it."

17. τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπ.] "hurried away (see Note on Gal. ii. 13.) by the error and deceit of those lawless[scoffers]" mentioned supra ii. 7. In συναπ. there is a metaphor taken, as Benson says, from a torrent. The ἐκπέσητε τοῦ ἰδίου στηριγμοῦ is well opposed to the ἀστήρικτοι at v. 16. Στηριγμ. denotes constancy in the faith as well as in the purity of doctrine. On the force of ἐκπίπτειν see Note on Gal. v. 4.

18. αὐξάνετε.] Here there is an idiom (elsewhere found) by which with the sense of the verb is conjoined a notion of endeavour; i. e. strive to grow. On this passage it is well remarked by Bp. Bull, Exam., p. 82, that the present injunction has no bounds short of the high perfection attainable by the grace of Christ. So that we are held bound always to increase in virtue, εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τελείας, as Clem. Alexandrinus says. Whence it is clear that works of supererogation are utterly excluded. On the subject of "growing in grace" see the Notes of Calvin and Dr. A. Clarke.

John 1. 1, 14.
& 20. 27.
2 Pet. 1. 16.

This Epistle has ever been admitted to be from St. John, though the writer's name is neither prefixed nor subjoined; external and internal testimony alike abundantly attesting its authenticity. But the date and the place whence it was indited are very uncertain. Indeed, the latter of these points it is impossible to settle, especially as it is by no means easy to determine the former. Thus considerable difference of opinion exists as to the date; some assigning as early a year as A. D. 68; others, as late as the end of the first century. The arguments for an early date (which see in Mr. Horne's Introd.) seem to me to preponderate; and such is the opinion of the most eminent Critics. Yet I cannot agree with the generality of them in assigning so early a date as even 68, or at least before the destruction of Jerusalem. I am induced to acquiesce in the opinion of those who (as Lampe and others) think it was written at least after the destruction of Jerusalem, and before the writer's exile to Patmos. Beyond that period, I conceive, we are forbidden to carry it, for the strong reasons which are stated by Mr. Horne from Benson, Hales, and others. In addition to which, it may be observed that the same reasons of probability, which exist for an early, rather than a late date to St. John's Gospel, have an especial force to establish an early date for this Epistle. Though to suppose, with Michaelis and Dr. Hales, that it was even written before the Gospel, is grounded on no proof or probability; for as to the argument urged by Michaelis, it has little or no force; and that of Dr. Hales rests on no solid basis, being merely founded on an error of his own in Philology; when he assigns to μεμαρτύρηκε (John xix. 35.) the sense, "he had delivered the testimony before;" whereas it is plainly to be taken according to that idiom frequent in Scripture (and especially in St. John's writings), by which the Preterite is used for the Present tense, or rather has the sense of past and present. See Glass, Phil. Sac. p. 301. and Alt's Gr. Gr. of the N. T. § 55. p. 127. Thus the sense is, "he hath [hereby] testified and doth testify." And to suppose, with Michaelis, that if St. John had already given a confutation of the heresies he meant to check when he wrote his Gospel, he would have thought it unnecessary to have again declared their falsehood; that surely makes nothing to the argument. For what is more certain than that heresies and errors of all kinds require to be refuted over and over again? Nay, I should think it not improbable that Dr. Lardner might be right in assigning 80 as the date, but that the Epistle seems to be a kind of supplement to the Gospel; in short is (as Dr. A. Clarke observes) to the Gospel what a pointed and forcible application is to a Sermon. It was written probably after the death of all the other Apostles; and as to the debated question concerning the persons to whom it was addressed, I entirely coincide in the opinion of those who think that it was intended as a circular letter, or general address to all the Christian churches, it being known to come from the only surviving Apostle. Hence the authoritative, yet affectionate manner in which he addresses his "dear children." Though, indeed, that mode of address may have been adopted, because the Epistle was written chiefly for the instruction of the Christians of Asia Minor, who were more especially under St. John's charge.

As the composition has none of the characteristics of an Epistle (being without inscription, salutation, &c.), it has been thought more proper to denominate it a treatise. We may, however, best steer a middle course, regarding it as a didactic address (such as it is in certain parts) to Christians in general. The design of the Epistle was to guard Christians against certain erroneous doctrines and false principles, which naturally led to irregularity of practice; and thus to preserve them in that faith, as evinced in good works,—and especially in universal love and charity,—without which all profession would be unavailable.

The style of this Epistle nearly resembles that of the Gospel of the same writer, simple and undorned; and in which the sense is more to be traced from the context, than deduced from the words themselves, of which the brevity here and there occasions no little obscurity—where, in short, the words in themselves are plain, but the sentences difficult; or where the sentences, considered separately, are plain, but the connection between them by no means clear. The chief characteristics which distinguish this composition are artless simplicity, and unaffected mildness and benevolence, united with a dignified and paternal authority, which altogether imparts a character exceedingly impressive—such, in short, as we may emphatically style, “speaking the truth in love.” “Whether (says Bp. Horsley) we consider the sublimity of its opening with the fundamental topics of God’s perfections, man’s depravity, and Christ’s propitiation, the perspicuity with which it propounds the deepest mysteries of our holy faith, and the evidence of the proof which it brings to confirm them; whether we consider the sanctity of its precepts, and the energy of arguments with which they are persuaded and enforced, the dignified simplicity of language in which both doctrine and precept are delivered; whether we regard the importance of the matter, the propriety of the style, or the general spirit of ardent piety and warm benevolence, united with a fervent zeal, which breathes throughout the whole composition, we shall find it in every respect worthy of the holy author to whom the constant tradition of the Church ascribes it, the disciple whom Jesus loved.”

1. 1—3. The Apostle here, as in his Gospel, commences without preface, adopting the same declaratory style, and entering at once upon the great subject of his present discourse; namely, that uncreate and self-existent Excellency (the Λόγος τῆς ζωῆς) which had been from the beginning, as co-equal and co-eternal with the Father, and had at length become incarnate for the salvation of men.

The construction is much cleared by the punctuation I have adopted. Some eminent Commentators take the ὁ as neuter for masc. ὁς, thus: ὁς ἦν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ὃν ἀκηκ., ὃν ἑωρ. &c. But though the neuter is often used for the masc., yet it is only under certain circumstances; and the principle cannot be introduced here without great violence to the construction. The subject is plainly the Λόγος τῆς ζωῆς; which expression, however, cannot mean, as some suppose, the Gospel; for the Apostle is evidently speaking of a person, as the terms used and the context show. Ἀπ' ἀρχῆς is by some explained “from all eternity.” Since, however, it is connected, not with Λόγον τῆς ζωῆς, but with ὁ ἦν (“what took place”) such an interpretation is inadmissible; and the sense must be that expressed by almost all the best Interpreters, “from the beginning of the [preaching of] the Gospel,” as John xv. 27. 1 John ii. 7, 24. iii. 11. 2 John 5. The expressions ἀκηκ., ἐωράκ., ἔθεασ., and ἐψηλ. (in which there is a climax), are a form of denoting information and knowledge of the most complete and exact kind. And in αἱ χεῖρες ἡμῶν ἐψηλ. we have a highly figurative mode of expressing any thing being ascertained to be true by the most minute examination. So Acts xvii. 27. εἰ ἄρα γε ψηλαφῆσαι αὐτὸν καὶ εὐροίεν. Though, from the χεῖρες being here expressed, there may be an allusion to what is related (the same term being employed) in Luke xxiv. 39. and John xx. 27; probably to indirectly refute the notion of some heretics, that Jesus had not a substantial body. Λόγον τῆς ζωῆς is usually taken for Λόγον τοῦ ζῶντος. But it is rather for ζωοποιούντος, agreeably to what is said at John i. 4. ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν, καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ἦν τὸ φῶς τῶν ἀνθρώπων.

2. The best Commentators are justly agreed that ἡ ζωὴ is for ὁ Λόγος τῆς ζωῆς before. The sense is, “This life (i. e. author of life, and giver of light, the Word) was manifested [among us], and we Apostles have seen it, and do witness and declare unto you [the message of] that eternal Life or Word, which was with the Father (see John i. 1, 2.), and was (I say) manifested unto us [in the flesh].” See iii. 5. John i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

3. ὁ ἐωράκαμεν καὶ ἀκηκ.] “that [I say] which we have seen and heard;” for there is a resumption of what was said at v. 1. The next words show the purpose of the annunciation, namely, “that ye also may participate with us [in the benefits of this life or salvation].” The Apostle then adverts to the nature, in order to show the dignity of that communion,—viz. a participation in the privileges and benefits bestowed by God the Father on men, through his Son Jesus Christ. The δε may be rendered now.

4. καὶ ταῦτα—πεπληρ.] “And [accordingly] these things we write unto you, that your spiritual joy [and the blessings you enjoy by that communion] may be consummate.” This is meant to more fully develop the sense conveyed at v. 3. Ἀπαγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν, ἵνα, &c. These benefits, it is shown further on, would alone be obtained by faith, and by a life agreeable to the precepts of the Gospel.

5. καὶ αὕτη ἐστίν, &c.] Here, and in the verses following, St. John more fully opens the nature of that message, which the Apostles had heard from Jesus Christ, and were to deliver to the world.

For ἐπαγγελία, ἀγγελία is edited, from many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, by Wets., Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Tittm., and Vater; and rightly; for ἐπαγγ. is doubtless a gloss. The sense here seems to include the notions of message and declaration. To show the true nature of the doctrine contained in this ἀγγελία, the Apostle lays down a fundamental and unquestionable position, representing (by a figure common in the writings of St. John) the purity and perfection of God, and of which the sense may be thus expressed, with Dr. Shuttleworth: "God is the great Fountain of light and purity, unsullied by any shadow of darkness or pollution whatever."

6, 7. The Apostle here means to argue, that as this is the nature of God, the doctrines and precepts which come from him must be of the same kind; true religion may be distinguished from counterfeit by this criterion; and especially his spiritual worshippers, who really have communion with him, may be known by their conformity to him. (Scott.) Καὶ ἐν τῷ σκότει περιπ., "and yet live in the habitual commission of impurity and vice." See Eph. v. 8. Οὐ ποιοῦμεν τὴν ἀλ., "we do not act agreeably to the doctrine of truth in the Gospel." This phrase ποιεῖν ἀλῆθ. is frequent in St. John. V. 7. presents a strong contrast, in the blessed effects of the opposite conduct. "If we imitate the perfections of the Deity, by practising holiness, we have κοινωνίαν μετ' ἀλλήλων, which the Commentators are agreed must, from the context (see v. 6.) denote holding mutual communion with God, as He also with us, implying the attaining that 'communion of the saints' elsewhere spoken of." The next words point out the blessed effects of that communion. "And [then] the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanse us from all sin," i. e., as Abp. Newc. explains, ratifies the covenant of pardon to the sincerely penitent. Thus hinting at the former being the indispensable condition of the latter. See ii. 2. and Bp. Bull's Harm. pp. 9, 56.

8—10. While the Apostle strenuously insists on the necessity of an habitual holy walk, as the effect and evidence of the knowledge of God in Christ Jesus, and of communion with him; he guards with as much care against self-righteous pride, as against an antinomian perversion of the Gospel. (Scott.) There is supposed to be a reference to the Gnostics or Nicolaitans. "Those (remarks Rosenm.) are said to deny that they have sinned, who deny that they have incurred blame by sin, and so either excuse or palliate what they have done, and dissemble the fault." "Those who so speak or think (it is added) only deceive themselves, and speak what is manifestly false; or, truth and religion have no place in their hearts." At v. 10 there is a repetition of the assertion at v. 8, in order to introduce another remark,—namely, that thus we make God a liar, since he hath declared that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God (see Rom. iii. 20, 23); and because, as Abp. Newc. observes, he has acted towards us as such by sending his Son. In that case (it is added) ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ—ἡμῖν, his word (i. e. his revelation in the Gospel) has no place in our hearts (where it ought to be engrafted, see James i. 21.), either for belief or for obedience, has no effect on our hearts. Verse 9 contrasts the happy condition of those who are convinced of sin, humbly casting themselves on the mercy of God for repented and forsaken sin. To these, it is said, God is so faithful to his promises, and just to his covenant engagements [to Christ their surety], as to forgive them their sins, and gradually purify them from all unrighteousness.

II. The same argument is here continued: and to promote that holiness, which it is the great business of the Apostle to recommend in this Epistle, he urges the propitiation and intercession of Christ, and the necessity of showing our love to God, by Christian love and charity, and by overcoming the immoderate love of the world.

1—11. He first warns them not to sin,—yet points to Christ as an Advocate with the Father, and the Propitiation for their sins, and the sins of the world, vv. 1, 2. Next, he shows that the knowledge of Christ, and union with him, must be evidenced by obeying and imitating him, and by love of the brethren; that thus "the love of God may be perfected" in them; and that those are deceived, blind, and hypocritical, who live in hatred and malice, 3—11.

1. τεκνία μου.] See Note at John xiii. 33. His great purpose in writing is (he says) to warn them against sin, that they may not fall into it. "If, however, any (through frailty, or precipitancy) do sin, he need not utterly despair; for in that case we have a παράκλητον πρὸς τὸν Πα-

— I. Χρ. Δίκαιον] for τὸν δίκαιον, Bishop Middle, indeed, thinks the absence of the Article will not permit it to be so taken: and while, on the one hand, he is not for the disjunction of δίκ. from the proper name, and uniting it (as is done by Benson, Wakef., and most recent Commentators) with παράκλ., he, on the other hand, thinks the version “Jesus Christ the righteous,” beyond the original. He would therefore render, “Jesus Christ, a righteous person.” But had any one of the heterodox party (G. Wakefield, for instance, of whom the Bishop takes frequent occasion to express the most unqualified censure) so rendered, the learned Prelate’s taste would have rejected, and his zeal have induced him to stigmatize so poor and frigid a sense. Why, then, must it be assigned at all? For no better reason than this—lest the Canons of the Greek Article should be broken. Yet what is this but defending the Apostle’s Greek at the expense of something of far more consequence? And surely the omission of the Article where strict propriety would require it, is of little consequence in a style so unstudied as that of the Apostle. Not to say, that such may have been written, and afterwards (as Markland thought) absorbed by the τὸν preceding. In fact, the sense of δίκ. for which I contend, is demanded by the context, which evidently requires that δίκ. should be referred not to παράκ. which precedes, but to ἰλασμός which follows. So Calvin admirably annotates: “Ceterum duo tituli, quibus postea Christum insignit, proprie ad circumstantiam hujus loci spectat. Vocat Justum et Propitiationem. Utroque prædicitum esse oportet, ut munus personamque advocati sustineat. Quis enim peccator nobis Dei gratiam conciliet?” Thus Christ was typified as the Just one by him who, as his representative, was called “King of Righteousness” (Heb. vii. 2.) And moreover there was a propriety in here styling Jesus Christ the Righteous or Just one (as Acts iii. 14. vii. 52. xxii. 14.), with allusion to that suffering of the just for the unjust (1 Pet. iii. 18.), whereby he made atonement for our sins. In short, the title was here introduced (as Macknight observes) to make us sensible of the dignity of our Advocate, and of the efficacy of his Intercession on our behalf, founded on the merit of his death. See also Dr. A. Clarke, and especially Mr. Scott. Finally, there is no difficulty in supposing Δίκαιον put for τὸν Δίκαιον, on nearly the same principle as Χριστός, and sometimes Υἱός, is found to dispense with the Article. I would further observe that the error of associating Δίκ.

with the preceding has been chiefly occasioned by the false punctuation of those who did not perceive that the καὶ αὐτός is here, as often in St. John’s writings, put for ὅς, and consequently ought to have after it, not a colon, but a comma.
 2. ἰλασμός] for ἰλαστής, as in Ezek. xlv. 27. Ps. xlix. 8.

— οὐ περὶ τῶν ἡμετέρων—κόσμου.] It is well observed by Calvin, that “this is added by way of amplification, to assure the faithful that the expiation procured by Christ extends to all who should faithfully embrace the Gospel.” So Dr. Barrow remarks, that “the whole world is here, as often in St. John, in contradistinction from all Christians, the whole of those who had not embraced Christianity.” This is confirmed by a kindred passage of 1 Tim. iv. 10. ὅς ἐστι σωτήρ πάντων, μάλιστα τῶν πιστῶν.

3—6. The Apostle here shows the necessity of repentance and reformation of all sin; and that all pretences to religion, unaccompanied by a holy life, are vain and fruitless; also, that the only sure test and evidence of a saving knowledge of Christianity is an habitual obedience to God’s commandments. Γινώσκομεν may be freely rendered, “we may know,” or be sure. The αὐτόν is generally referred to Christ, as being the nearer antecedent; but by some Commentators, to God the Father. By ἐγνώκ. is meant, have a knowledge of his will, or what he would have us do. The sentiment at v. 4. is the same, or very similar to that at vv. 9. 3.; the test in either case failing, and consequently the pretence being evinced to be false. In v. 5. the contrary assertion is made, namely, that he who keepeth God’s commandments is a true lover of God. Since in him (to use the words of Abp. Newc.) love produces its proper effect, and is carried to its due height. See 2 Cor. xii. 9. The best comment on this whole portion, nay Epistle, is the following passage of an incomparably fine Sermon of Cudworth on vv. 3, 4. “There is (says he) a soul and spirit of divine truths, which cannot express itself sufficiently in words and sounds, but will declare and speak itself in actions; as the old manner of writing among the Egyptians was not by words, but things.—A good conscience is the best looking-glass of heaven; in which the soul may see God’s thoughts and purposes concerning it, as so many shining stars reflected to it.

Here Mr. Scott pleads hard for the doctrine of Assurance, as found in this passage: but in vain. “I mean not, indeed, to justify such Christian divines as have (he says) spoken on this point without discrimination.” But I think the pious and excellent writer would himself have admitted that DR. CUDWORTH never speaks rashly or without discrimination: and yet in his matchless Sermon on this text, he strenuously opposes the seeking of the doctrine of Assurance here. "We have (says he) no warrant in Scripture to peep into these hidden rolls and volumes of eternity, and to make it our first thing that we do, when we come to Christ, to spell out our names in the stars, and to persuade ourselves that we are certainly elected to everlasting happiness, before we see the image of God, in righteousness and true holiness, shaped in our hearts. God's everlasting decree is too dazzling and bright an object for us at first to set our eye upon. It is far easier and safer for us to look upon the rays of his goodness and holiness, as they are reflected in our hearts, and there to read the mild and gentle characters of God's love to us, in our love to him, and our hearty compliance with his heavenly will. The best assurance that any one can have of his interest in God, is doubtless the conformity of his soul to Him. The way to obtain a good assurance, indeed, of our title to heaven is, not to clamber up to it by a ladder of our own ungrounded persuasions, but to dig by humility and self-denial in our own hearts. The most gallant and triumphant confidence of a Christian riseth safely and surely upon this low foundation, that lies deep under ground, and there stands firmly and stedfastly."

In the next words ἐν τούτῳ—ἐσμέν there is the same sentiment as before, with the substitution of the synonymous phrase ἐν αὐτῷ εἶναι. These and other phrases occurring in St. John's writings, denoting communion with God, are meant to signify assimilation to God, which can only be attained by the profession and practice of the religion he enjoins. See more in Tittm. on John p. 277. 282. 554. and Dr. Isaac Barrow, in D'Oyly and Mant. To this claim (namely, of abiding in God), is, at v. 6., applied the same test to prove its reality, as at i. 5. 7., on communion with God,—namely, whether the conduct be habitually conformed after the example of God, as consistent disciples imitate their master.

7. οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινὴν.] On what is meant by this "new commandment," Expositors are not agreed. Some refer it to the commandment at v. 6.; others, with far greater probability, refer the subject-matter of this and the next verse to that of vv. 9—11., namely, that Christians should love each other, even as Christ had loved them. Now this was an early injunction of Christ, and had been all along inculcated by the Apostles and true teachers; the contrary to which was a recent innovation of false teachers. It was indeed, as old as the Mosaic law; but, on the other hand (for that is the sense of πάλιν) certain considerations entitled it to the appellation of new, both as regarded Christ and themselves. See more in Benson and Abp. Secker, cited in D'Oyly and Mant. But to remove the seeming contradiction between vv. 7. and 8., by supposing so perspicuous a writer as St. John, to adopt what might seem a needless harshness of expression, I am inclined to agree with Mr. Holden, that the Apostle referred to different commandments, q. d. "I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning [of the preaching of the Gospel]. The old commandment [of which I am speaking] is the word which ye have heard from the beginning [of the Gospel] John xiii. 15. Again, [another and] a new commandment I write unto you, which is true in him and in you;" i. e. in calling it a new commandment I am saying what is true, both as regards him (Christ) and you; "because the [spiritual] darkness is passed, and the true light [of the Gospel] now shineth," v. 8. The new commandment to which I refer, is touching Christian love. He that saith, &c., vv. 9—11. This interpretation is confirmed by John xiii. 34. compared with Rom. xiii. 12. Eph. v. 8. 1 Thess. v. 5.

9—11. Having called the practices of Gentilism darkness, and the Gospel the true light, the Apostle continues to blend the same images, in delivering his new commandment, or injunction of brotherly love, contained in these three verses. (Abp. Newc.) He applies the same reasoning to those who, like the Gnostics, pretended to be ἐν τῷ φωτὶ, or highly enlightened. And he shows that there can be no true knowledge of God, according to the test supplied at v. 3., because they do not keep his commandments, transgressing one main commandment, "love thy neighbour as thyself." By hating their fellow-creatures, and, it may be, fellow-Christians, they showed that they were yet in darkness and sin. This sentiment is further developed in the next two verses,—the assertion being, that it is he alone who loveth his brother, that is really abiding in light; nor was there any thing in him likely to occasion his falling into offence or sin; whereas, he who hated his brother, was habitually and continually in darkness, not knowing whither he went (i. e. not aware of the dangers that beset his path), and was therefore likely to meet with many σκάνδαλα and consequently to stumble often and grievously. Such a man (it is meant) shows that he is involved in the grossest ignorance of vital religion, its essence and duties; and, as far as he is a professor of Christianity, and aims at salvation, he entirely wanders, both in conception and action, from the object he seeks; and, like the blind Sodomites, vainly wearies himself to find the door of salvation.

12—15. On the interpretation of these verses Commentators are somewhat perplexed, complaining of tautology and ambiguity. But as to tautology, as it is by no means rare in the ancient writers, so it is not unfrequent in St. John; yet it is scarcely ever mere tautology, but serves to enforce some precept: which, I apprehend, is the case here and at v. 11. The best mode of taking the whole passage seems to be (with Carpz. and Rosenm.) to suppose that the thesis, or main proposition of the Apostle's argument is at v. 15. μὴ ἀγαπᾶτε—κόσμῳ, the discourse being continued up to κόσμῳ. Thus, after first addressing himself to all Christians by the general term of endearment τεκνία (as he had done at v. 1.), i. e. dear children; the use of that word (as Mr. Slade well points out) suggested to the Apostle the idea of addressing himself to the three classes of Christians,—distributed into children, young men, and fathers, supposed by some Commentators to allude to three degrees of spiritual progress. Thus in Thucyd. vi. 18. καὶ νομίσατε μεότητα μὲν καὶ γῆρας ἀνεν ἀλλήλων μηδὲν δύνασθαι, ὁμοῦ δὲ τὸ τε φαῦλον καὶ τὸ μέσον καὶ τὸ πᾶν ἀκριβεῖς ἀν' ἑνὶ συγκραθεῖν μάλιστα ἀν' ἰσχύειν.

But to advert to the phraseology in detail: v. 12. ἀφένονται—αὐτοῦ, there seems to be in γράφω a significatio prægnans, the full sense being, "I tell or remind you that alone through faith in him, and by virtue of his atonement, are," &c. In the same manner must the γράφω at v. 13. be taken. Ἐγνώκατε τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. Notwithstanding what is urged by Wakefield, Macknight, and others, there can be no doubt that the sense is that assigned by the ancient and most modern Expositors, and well expressed by Bp. Middl. thus: "Ye have known the Person who was from the beginning, or, who has existed from eternity." "So (adds he) ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρα-νοῖς means Him who is in heaven: but it is needless to adduce examples of an usage, which continually presents itself to the notice of all readers of Greek." "That τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς (continues the learned Prelate) must mean Jesus Christ, is to be inferred not only from the context, but from the circumstance, that there was no occasion to assert the eternity of the Father, who is expressly mentioned (τὸν Πατέρα) in this very verse." This text, therefore, is another of those which affirm the eternal pre-existence of Christ; and it harmonizes exactly with the language of the same Writer in the exordium of the Gospel, "In the beginning was the Word." The conjecture of Dr. Mangey (adopted, in his Translation, by Wakefield), ἐγν. αὐτὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, has no support from MSS., and is refuted by Theophyl. Sim., p. 115. ἐπετίμησε τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ὁ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, which passage was doubtless written with a view to the present: for in other places of the Historian I have noted imitations of Scripture.

By the νεανίσκοι are meant persons in the flower of life: and at νενικ. their duty is hinted by what they are supposed to have done, or to be doing; with allusion to those fiery temptations ("darts tempered in hell") which the Evil One levels especially against persons of that age. The repetitions at v. 14. are very energetic and impressive; but in the repeated address to the νεανίσκοι, something more is meant than before, and the full sense seems to be: "For you [I presume] are strong [in the Lord]; and the word, (i. e. revelation,) of God abideth in you, and [I trust that] you have exerted your strength, and conquered the Evil One."

15—17. Now follows the weighty admonition, suspended on the preceding verses, and at length introduced in reference to all the three classes of persons just mentioned. The passage is ably treated on by Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit., p. 269, as follows. "The subject is laid down in a two-fold form: 1. Love not the world; 2. Neither love the things of the world. The former injunction is first taken up, "If any one love the world," &c.; the latter is then enforced, "For all that is in the world," &c.; and then the reasons of both injunctions are severally condensed, "For the world passeth away, and the desire thereof:" after which the moral of the whole is most powerfully brought home by the strong antithetical assurance, that "he who doeth the will of God, abideth for ever." From the disjunctive form of the commencing words, it is unquestionable that the Apostle intended to draw a marked distinction between "the world," and "the things in the world;" but what is the distinct meaning of each? Probably the world here signifies that entire system of bad pursuits, and false enjoyments, which fallen man has manufactured for himself; and "the things in the world," the wrong dispositions and propensities which engage men in such pursuits, and plunge them into such enjoyments; he who loves the former, must clearly want an abiding principle of love to God; for that system is antagonistically opposed to the word, and the will, of God; he who loves the latter, loves dispositions proceeding not from God, but from that world opposed to God, which fosters them, and to which they are subservient. These dispositions the Apostle describes by "the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eyes, and the pride of life;" i. e. sensuality, avarice, and ambition. These, and that system to which they minister, are alike transient; "they pass away;" but "he who doeth the will of God," he who maketh himself a denizen of God's world, "abideth for ever;" eternity is stamped on his enjoyments and pursuits; an eternity which inherently belongs to his own character, formed, as it is, by the grace of God, and by that grace preserved.

"From the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould."

Ἐπιθυμία τῶν ὀφθ. may have the sense above laid down; but I would rather take it in a more general sense, to denote an excessive desire for the gay vanities, the external "gaudes" of this world, as connected with both ambition and vain splendour, or show. See Ezek. xxiv. 25. Nearly the same view was, I find, taken by Dr. Jortin, (cited in D'Oyly and Mant,) who understands ἐπιθυμ. τῶν ὀφθ. of the excessive love of vain magnificence and superfluous wealth; "which is so called, because in superfluous and misapplied riches there is nothing to be found besides feeding the insatiable eye with an unprofitable object." See Eccl. v. 11. Yet the ἐπιθυμ. τῶν ὀφθ. is not to be confined to the rich, must be taken in the above general sense, which I find confirmed by Mr. Scott, who well explains the expression of "the desire of the carnal heart after all that wealth can purchase, or which gratifies the eye." Accordingly, this is a kind of sensual enjoyment, and is the very essence of worldly-mindedness.

It is finely remarked by Cudworth (in his matchless Sermon on 1 John ii. 3, 4.) "There is nothing in the whole world able to do us good or hurt but God and our own will; neither riches nor poverty, nor disgrace nor honour, nor life nor death, nor angels nor devils; but willing, or not willing as we ought to do. God will not hurt us, and hell cannot hurt us, if we will nothing but what God wills." On this three-fold distinction of worldly desires the Commentators adduce many illustrations both from the Classical and Rabbinical writers.

The construction at ὅτι πᾶν τὸ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ

—ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου, though it has perplexed Grot. and others, is sufficiently plain; πᾶν τὸ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ being (as Bp. Jebb observes) the Nominative case to οὐκ ἔστιν, and the intermediate words only an enumeration of the constituent parts of that τὸ πᾶν. With ὁ κόσμος παράγεται compare 1 Cor. vii. 31. παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου. and James iv. 14.

18—28. Here the Apostle cautions Christians against those deceivers who then appeared in great numbers: and points out to them the many advantages which they had for knowing the truth; and the many obligations which they were under to adhere to and to practise it accordingly.—(Benson.) Ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστὶ. This expression has been variously interpreted. The most probable sense is, "the last period of the Jewish economy, when many false Christs were to appear. With respect to the exact meaning of ἀντίχριστοι, on this much diversity of opinion exists. One thing is clear, that the Antichrist was yet to come; while the persons called antichrists had already appeared, or were then in existence. The former is, no doubt, the same as the ὁ ἀντικείμενος of St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 4, the Man of Sin. (See Note there.) The latter cannot (as some imagine) denote the false Christs predicted by our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 23—25; for ἀντι will not here bear such a sense. Nor do the characters of the persons in question, as given at iv. 7, and 2 John 7., correspond. These plainly designate the persons, not as apostates, but opposers of Christ. Though it should seem (as Mr. Scott supposes) that "the direct and avowed opposers of Christianity, whether Jewish or Heathen, cannot be meant in this place. St. John has rather in view that apostasy from the true faith, by heresy, which St. Paul foretold (1 Tim. iv. 1.) would take place in the latter times. An antichrist in this sense may be defined, in the words of Mr. Scott (after Beza), as being "one who opposes Christ, whether he oppose the doctrine of his deity, or his humanity; or whether he set himself against him, in respect of his priestly office, by substituting other methods of atoning for sin, and finding acceptance with God; his kingly office, by claiming authority to add to, alter, or take away from the revelation which he has given in his holy word." This is very agreeable to the description of antichrist at v. 22. ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα καὶ τὸν Υἱόν. & iv. 3. 2 John 7. Perhaps, however, it will be better not to confine it to apostasy or heresy, but extend it also to ungodliness, in short, to the various characteristics of the Man of Sin. Thus it is (as Bp. Warburton observes) as much as to say: We are fallen into the very dregs of time; as appears from that antichristian spirit, which now so much pollutes the Churches; for you know it is a common saying, that Antichrist is to come in these wretched days.

19. The sense of this verse is, from its extreme brevity and antithetical point, somewhat obscure, and requires a paraphrase rather than a version, to express its meaning, thus: "They [originally] proceeded from us, but they were never really of us [Apostles]," i. e. not sound Christians at heart; "for if they had been really of us (i. e. one with us) they would have remained with us, and kept our doctrine; but they did not so, and the result was, that they were proved not to have been of us," i. e. not true Christians.

20. ὑμεῖς χρίσμα ἔχετε ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἁγίου. The term χρίσμα, occurring here and at v. 27, has plainly a metaphorical sense, as χρίω is used of communicating the gifts and graces of the Spirit,—with an allusion, it is supposed, to the solemn inauguration of Priests and Kings with oil. Thus it may very well denote that inauguration of the Holy Spirit that accompanies the use of the Christian sacraments: which is, indeed, all that many suppose to be here meant. But it seems to further designate the imparting of the Holy Spirit promised by Christ to all true believers, to lead them into all truth; (John xiv. 26; xvi. 13.) and that whether by the communication of the supernatural Gifts, (see 2 Cor. i. 22.) or of the Graces of the Spirit for sanctification, and imparted through the preaching of the word, the administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and other means of grace. By τοῦ Ἁγίου the best Expositors are agreed is meant Christ. See Mark i. 24. Acts iii. 14. The πάντα must, (as Grot. observes) be restricted by the subject matter, (as at 1 Cor. ix. 22; xv. 27.), to mean "all things necessary to salvation." The ἀλλ' ὅτι may be rendered "but [as supposing that] ye know it." Καὶ ὅτι πᾶν, &c., "and [as sensible that] every lie or false doctrine proceeds not from the truth, being inconsistent therewith." Agreeably to the above view, the connection is well laid down by Mr. Holden thus: "The antichristian persons (v. 18.) were manifested not to belong to our society, (v. 19.) and you received among you the communication of spiritual gifts and graces from Christ, the Holy One (Acts iii. 14.), "and you know all things" relating to your religion (v. 20.), for which reason 'I have not written to you, because ye know not the truth [of the Gospel]; but because ye know it, and that no lie [no false doctrine] is of the truth,' I have written to you these things." (v. 21.)

means to say, that this general self-evident proposition was not more certain, than the particular application of it to the delusions of the seducers; whose false doctrines could not proceed from the same source with the truth of God. (Scott.) This is to be understood comparatè; q. d. "Who is an antichrist or apostate, if he be not, who denies that Jesus is the Messiah?" It is well pointed out by Bp. Middl., that ὁ ψεύστης is the same with ὁ ἀντίχριστος following. See Note supra v. 18. It should seem also that both ὁ ψεύστης and ὁ ἀντίχρ. are to be taken in a generic sense, to denote the class of persons each individually such. The οὐκ is used (according to the Greek idiom) only to strengthen the negation. The words, however, have been thought obscure; yet they cease to be so, if the purpose of the writer be considered; which seems to have been to designate the false teachers, or heretical persons, as ψεύσται and ἀντίχριστοι, and to show why they may be esteemed such; namely, 1. as denying the Messiahship of Jesus, by which we are to understand denying his full Messiahship as it is described in the Scriptures. For (to use the words of Mr. Scott) "some of these persons denied the Deity of Christ; others explained away his incarnation, and so denied his humanity, and the reality of his sufferings; and some opposed his kingly authority. Thus, whilst they retained the name of Christians, they virtually denied his Person, as the Christ, the Son of God, and the Son of man; Emmanuel, God with us: or his offices, as the anointed Prophet, Priest, and King of his Church: they denied that God was manifested in the flesh, to ransom the Church with his own blood. Now whether they denied his divine or his human nature, his atonement or his authority; they virtually denied him to be the Christ." Such a person is, then, said by implication, to be an antichrist: and the Apostle adds, that ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα καὶ τὸν Υἱὸν comes under that description; where, it may be observed, the καὶ is very significant. This antichristian spirit is pronounced to be the denying the mysterious connection between the Father and the Son, according to the relations in which they are represented to us in the Gospel, separating the Son from the Father, and consequently degrading him from his high dignity. On this whole passage see Bp. Bull's Judic. Cathol. Eccl., pp. 16, 14, and 84. The words following πᾶς ὁ ἀρνούμενος—ἔχει serve to further develop the sense, and mean that this separation is a virtual denial not only of the Son, but of both Father and Son, since the Father can only be approached through the Son. For "He (says Whitby) that denieth the Son, cannot retain the true knowledge of the Father, because he can be known only through the Son. John i. 18; iv. 23 & 24; viii. 19, 55; xiv. 6, 7; xvi. 3. Matt. xi. 27." By the ἔχει is meant having a knowledge or spiritual relationship; and the expression is nearly allied to κοινωνίαν ἔχειν μετὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ and εἶναι ἐν τῷ Θεῷ elsewhere occurring in this Epistle. The words following contain an assertion of the contrary truth. They are, indeed, not found in the common text, but they are contained in most of the MSS., almost all the Versions, and very many Fathers; and have been received into the text by Beng., Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Tittm., and Vater. They have, in fact, every evidence of genuineness; for they not only seem to be required by the sense, but are in the style of St. John; and their omission may far better be imputed to homoeoteleuton than their addition to a marginal scholium.

24, 25. Here the Apostle first gives an exhortation to steadfastness in adhering to the form of faith, which they have been taught at the beginning of their profession of the Gospel; q. d. "Let, then, that form of faith which ye have heard from the beginning of your evangelization abide in your hearts, and allow it not to be torn from you by the antichristian deceivers just mentioned. And, as an inducement to hold it fast, the Apostle points out the high advantages of such continuance,—namely, by a communion and close fellowship with the Son, and the Father through Him. Then (for their encouragement and confirmation) he reminds them of the promise given by God to all true believers,—namely, to bestow on them eternal life and felicity.

27. See Notes at vv. 18, 19, 20, 24. Some stumble at the οὐ χρειαν—τὶς διδάσκῃ ὑμᾶς: but there is, in fact, no difficulty, and the sense is, doubtless, that assigned by Mr. Scott,—that in respect of real believers, "the anointing," which they had received of Christ, abode in them, as an incorruptible principle of life, and light, and spiritual discernment; so that they needed not that any man should teach them, except "as that same anointing taught them," and by "stirring up their pure minds in the way of remembrance;" or by confirming them in it, or enabling them to distinguish it, from all counterfeits: for by this teaching of God himself they were instructed in all things essential to salvation, and could not be fatally deluded." See Abp. Sharp, cited in D'Oyly and Mant.

28. καὶ νῦν—αὐτοῦ.] The full sense seems to be this: "And now, my children, [to my hope and trust let me add my injunction]: abide [I say] in him, that when he shall appear, we (i. e. not only ye, but myself) may have confidence, and not have cause to be confounded at his presence, when he cometh." In the change of persons we may observe great delicacy; the rejection and disgrace of the disciple tending to the discredit of the teacher. So 2 Cor. ix. 4. μήπως ἐὰν εὐροσιν ὑμᾶς ἀπαρασκενάστους, κατασχυνθῶμεν ἡμεῖς (ἵνα μὴ λέγωμεν ὑμῖς).

29. ἐὰν εἰδῆτε, &c.] The sense is: "If ye know [as ye must] that He is righteous, ye know (or may know) that every one who, habitually and heartily, practises righteousness hath been received into the relation of a son of God, being born anew of Christ and by the regeneration of his Spirit." Compare iii. 1; ii. 2, 9; iv. 7; v. 1; iv. 18.

III. 1, 2. The Apostle now breaks out into admiration of the love of God, in making us his children, and giving us present privileges with the hope of an inconceivable felicity, and show that all who have this hope "purify themselves as He is pure." (Scott.) See a Sermon of Dr. South on this text (Vol. vi. p. 441.), where having considered how a man may be said to purify himself, and to such a degree even as Christ is pure, he shows, 1. what is implied in a man's purifying himself; viz. the ridding himself, 1. of the power of sin,—which consists in bewailing all his past sinful acts—in a vigilant prevention of future ones. And this will be effected by opposing every sinful motion, by performing severe mortifying duties, and by frequent and earnest prayer. 2. Of the guilt of sin, which can be done alone by applying the virtue of Christ's blood to the soul through faith. II. How the hope of heaven purifies a man,—namely, 1. upon a natural account, as it is a special grace, in its nature contrary to sin. 2. Upon a moral account, by suggesting to the soul arguments for purification; as, for instance, that purity is the necessary means to attain the felicity hoped for—that it alone can qualify the soul for heaven. And it is a duty we are obliged to by gratitude, and as an only evidence of our right to the things hoped for. Ποταπὴν ἀγάπην, “how vast a proof of love!” Κληῖς denotes the actually being, as included in the being called. Thus in several MSS. is added by gloss, καὶ ἐσμεν. The διὰ τοῦτο must be referred to ὅτι, and the sense is, “The world, therefore, recognises us not as sons of God, nor comprehends the nature and glory of this filiation, because it doth not acknowledge Him [as God];” i. e. οὐχ ὡς Θεὸν ἐδόξασαν, Rom. i. 21.

2. νῦν τέκνα Θεοῦ—ἐστι.] Here we have a solemn repetition of the same assertion, with another truth engrafted thereupon, with respect to our dignity and glory in the future world. The words may be paraphrased: “[As to our present state], now [I repeat] we are already sons of God, and [as to our future one] it doth not yet appear what we shall be. However, this we do know, that when He shall appear, we shall be like unto Him, for we shall see Him as He is.” From these words Bp. Conybeare, in a Sermon on the present text, (on the different degrees of happiness in a future state,) thinks it is evident “that the state of good men in the other world will carry with it a resemblance, not in degree, but in kind, to the absolutely perfect Being in those perfections of which Man is capable: and that these will be produced in us by seeing God as he is; i. e. by a vastly more distinct and more full sight of Him than the present condition of human nature will admit of.” Οὕτω ἐφαν. τί ἐσ., “it doth not yet appear [even to Christians, much less to the profane world] in what state or condition we shall be placed.” See Bp. Taylor's Works, vi. 388. “Something (explains Scott) is revealed, but not all fully and clearly: but when he shall be manifested, we shall see him as he is.” By ὅμοιοι we are to understand likeness in attributes and qualities, and in condition and salvation. And no wonder,—ὅτι ὁφόμεθα αὐτόν καθὼς ἐστι, not ἐν αἰνίγματι, but πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον, 1 Cor. xiii. 12, implying felicity consummate. See also 1 Cor. xv. 50.

3. καὶ πᾶς—ἀγνός ἐστι.] The Apostle means that where there is a true hope of being made like unto him, at his appearance, the person will meanwhile strive to imitate his purity, in order to participate in his glory and blessedness. See Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap., p. 44.

4, 5. According to what had been before observed, they who did not “follow after holiness” could not possess genuine hope in Christ, and in God through him, according to the Gospel; but the Apostle further remarks, that he who “committed,” or practised sin, transgressed “also the law (i. e. the moral law) it being thus taken for granted that the holy law of God was the rule of conduct to all his true servants, and that none of them, wilfully and habitually, did any thing contrary to it.” For sin is “the transgression of the law,” or a lawless conduct. Whatever in any degree exceeds, comes short of, or deviates from the law, and in thought, word, or deed, is not perfectly coincident with it, is sin,—a violation of the law; but an habitual commission of sin tends to the destruction of the law and its authority, and can never be allowed by any disciple of Christ. For they know that “he was manifested” in human nature to take away the sins of his people, by atoning for their guilt, and by renewing them to his own holy image. (Scott.)

6. οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει i. e. (as all the best Expositors are agreed, and is required by the rest of Scripture) sinneth not habitually, wilfully, and presumptuously. Whosoever doth so sin (it is added) hath no true knowledge of Him, or conception of his doctrine.

7. μηδεὶς πλαανάτω ὑμᾶς, &c.] A solemn warning, like that at 1 Cor. vi. 9—11. Gal. vi. 6—10. Eph. v. 5—7. James i. 22—25. 2 Pet. i. 8, 9, not to let any man deceive them by plausible pretences, into an opinion that they might live in habitual sin, and yet be true Christians. (Scott.) Ὁ ποιῶν—ἐστιν. The sense is, “He alone who is habitually and in the main righteous, in imitation of his Saviour, is truly righteous.” See Doddr. and Bens., of whom the latter cites a sentiment of Aristotle: "Then shall a man be righteous, 1. If he does the things which are righteous, and knows what he does. 2. If he does them freely, or out of choice. 3. If he continues firmly and constantly in that course of action."

8. ὁ ποιῶν—ἐστίν.] Ποιῶν must here again be understood of habit, and the full sense of this briefly-worded sentence may be thus expressed: "He who practises sin [must not say he is a son of God; no] he is [a son] of the Devil [and this son-ship is established by strong similitude]; for the Devil has been habitually and perpetually sinning." On this portion, and the inferences from it, see Abp. Secker and Dean Tucker in D'Oyly and Mant. Ἀπ' ἀρχῆς with the present tense denotes perpetuity of action. At εἰς τοῦτο—Διαβόλου supply καίτοι, "and yet." The omission of such ratiocinative particles is one of the peculiarities of St. John's style. The sentiment corresponds to that at v. 5.

9. πᾶς ὁ γεγεννημένος—οὐ ποιεῖ.] The sentiment is nearly allied to that at v. 6. πᾶς ὁ ἐν αὐτῷ μένων, οὐκ ἁμαρτάνει; son-ship and intimate union being cognate ideas. In both passages, then, it is plain that the phrase ἁμαρτίαν ποιεῖ must be taken, like ἁμαρτάνει, of deliberate and habitual sin. To understand this passage fully, ὁ γεγενν. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ must be understood as at ii. 29, where see Note. With respect to the expression σπέρμα αὐτοῦ, it may either be explained, with Grot., Bens., Rosenm., and most recent Commentators, "the revealed word of God," (see 1 Pet. i. 23.) or rather, with Carpz. and others, the vital principle of the spiritual seed committed to our hearts, like a seedling to the ground; and consisting, not in the word of God only, but in the Divine grace by which that word is made effectual,—the sanctification of the Spirit spoken of at Gal. v. 22. Finally, οὐ δύναται ἁμαρ. may mean, as the best Commentators explain, "he cannot bring himself to sin," viz. wilfully and habitually. See (Æcum., Grotius, and Wetstein, and also Milton cited by Valpy.

10. Here there is a repetition of the sentiment, that every one who does not practise righteousness is not of God; introduced by the assurance that this is the test of their salvation. On this general position the Apostle takes occasion to engraft a particular one, respecting that branch of our duty to men which consists in love and kindness to our brethren, i. e. not only brother-Christians, but brother-men.

11, 12. The Apostle, from hence to the end of the Chapter, urges the foregoing exhortation by various arguments: and first, he reminds them that the commandment, or injunction, to love one another was coeval with the religion itself; originating with its Author, and made the distinguishing evidence of being his disciples. Those, therefore (it is implied), who are destitute of this grace are no true Christians; but can only be ranked with him who, though professing to be a worshipper of God, showed himself to be not of the family of God, but of the Evil One, by envying, hating, and murdering his brother.

The words οὐ καθὼς—αὐτοῦ seem to be a brief mode of expressing the following sense: "And not as Cain, who was a son of the Devil, and murdered his brother [so let us do, by fostering those feelings of hatred, which may tend to murder]." Then, by way of caution, the Apostle suggests the cause of this hatred, namely, envy and malice at his brother's superior goodness and favour with God.

13. Compare v. 1.

14. ἡμεῖς οἶδαμεν—τοὺς ἀδελφούς.] This is suggested by the Apostle for their consolation under trials and persecutions. The connection is well traced by Mr. Scott as follows: "No Christian well acquainted with the heart of man could wonder at any effects of the contempt and enmity of ungodly people against 'the children of God;' for it was the most unequivocal proof that they themselves had passed 'from death unto life,' &c. By θανάτου is meant a state of condemnation and spiritual death; and by ζωὴν, spiritual life and acceptance with God; a state which, if persevered in, ends in eternal salvation. And love is the test of our being in such a state."

15. In addition to the assurance, that he who hateth his brother is, as it were, under the ban of God,—the Apostle adds, that such a one ἀνθρωποκτόνος ἐστὶ, which is said with reference to Cain just before mentioned,—and means, that he has the same disposition and principles as, if harboured, tend to murder, and may, as in the case of Cain, produce actual murder. (On the term ἀνθρωποκτόνος, see Note at John viii. 44.) Now as murder cannot but exclude from eternal life, so must those dispositions which are the seed of it prevent any one from being a son of God. Thus Virgil Æn. vi. 607. places in his Tartarus those "quibus invidia fratres, dum vita manebat."

16, 17. The effects of genuine love toward the brethren required to be ascertained; and this might be understood, by considering "the love of God" to *sinner*s. (Scott.) Ἐν τούτῳ—ἔθηκε. The sense is, "By this we [may] know [what] love [is, namely,] that he laid down his life for us; and [thus] ought we to lay down our lives for our brethren." By τὴν ἀγάπην must be meant the love as exemplified in Christ. On the phrase τιθεῖναι ψυχὴν, see Note at John x. 11, 15. In the expression ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν τὰς ψυχὰς τιθεῖν, it has been well pointed out by Carpz., Rosenm., and Iaspis, we are to consider alone the notio universalis, and not to interpret it rigorously, but understand it of making very great sacrifices, exposing ourselves to imminent perils.

17, 18. See iv. 20. Luke iii. 11. 2 Cor. viii. 14. compared with Rom. xii. 9. Κλείειν τὰ σπλάγχνα ἀπὸ τινος is a figurative way of expressing the as it were barring the heart against compassion. At πῶς ἡ ἀγάπη, &c. the interrogation involves a strong negation. So πῶς γὰρ (on which see Hoogev. Part. p. 548) is equivalent to οὐδαμῶς; for at the πῶς γὰρ is supplied the verb preceding in the Optative with ἂν, "How should it?" Thus also πῶς οὐ; is equivalent to a strong assertion, as in Thucyd. iv. 92.

18. μὴ ἀγαπῶμεν λόγῳ.] Theogn. 973. Μή μοι ἀνὴρ εἴη γλώσσῃ φίλος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔργῳ. Soph. Antig. 539. λόγοις δ' ἐγὼ φιλοῦσαν οὐ στέργω φίλην.

19. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ—ἐσμέν.] "And by this we know whether we be of the truth [in this respect], i. e. of love to others." Rosenm. compares the phrases ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶναι and εἶναι ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας, i. e. to be agreeable to truth, and sincerely profess it; and Carpz. ἐκ τοῦ Διαβόλου εἶναι, John iii. 8. ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου, &c. The ἀληθ. he rightly explains, "true religion." Καὶ ἔμπροσθεν—ἡμῶν. The sense is: "And in the sight of Him [our Judge] we may, in this important respect, set our hearts at rest." For he who truly loves all men, may trust that the mercy and favour of God will not be withheld from himself.

20, 21. Some obscurity and difficulty here exist, arising from extreme brevity; in removing which, a clause must be supplied from the preceding verse, in one or other of the two ways laid down in Rec. Syn. from Benson and Rosenm. Of these, Mr. Holden, with some reason, prefers the following: "For if our heart condemn us" as deficient in brotherly love, "God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things, [and consequently our hearts, instead of being assured before him, will condemn us; on the other hand,] beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." To the passage Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. p. 23. gives the following sense: "Nimirum securi animi fiducia est bonæ conscientiæ filia, ex operibus bonis exsurgit, tantum abest, ut sine bonis operibus quicquam valeat."

22. Here is assigned another reason for cultivating universal righteousness, and particularly mutual love; namely, that then their prayers would be heard, and God would grant them all things expedient for them.

23. καὶ αὕτη ἐστίν—ἡμῖν.] The sense is :
“And his commandment (the sum of all), is, that we believe in the Divine mission of his Son Jesus Christ, and love each other according to the injunction he gave us.” So 1 Tim. i. 5. τὸ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας ἐστὶν ἀγάπη ἐκ πίστεως. See John iii. 16. vii. 3.

24. καὶ ὁ τηρῶν—αὐτοῦ.] Render, “And he who keepeth [generally or habitually] his precepts abideth in Him, and He in him;” implying love, favour, and blessing from God. In the next sentence is given a test of the having this “abiding of God” in them,—namely, by his imparting to them the Holy Spirit, and its gifts, whether ordinary, or extraordinary,—since, in either case, is implied the approbation and favour of God, and from the presence or absence of which we may infer our spiritual state. It is well observed by Dr. Gloucester Ridley (on the office of the Holy Spirit), that “the way of the Spirit is not to be traced; the working of God is not to be perceived. The Divine Author and his operations are hidden from us, but his work is manifest.
And though we cannot see God at any time, or feel the motion of the Spirit in our hearts, yet is there a certain evidence whether we are wrought on by Him or not; namely, according to this infallible rule given us by St. John, whereby we may know that God by his Spirit dwelleth in us, “if we keep his commandments.”

IV. The particular subject of the two last Chapters is the Incarnation, in which the doctrine of the Atonement is, if rightly understood, included. It is therefore with truth and reason, that St. John sets forth this as the cardinal doctrine of Christianity; inasmuch that he speaks of the belief of this article as the accomplishment of our Christian warfare; the attainment at least of that faith, which with certainty overcometh the world; inspiring the Christian with fortitude to surmount the temptations of the world, in whatever shape they may assail him. On the other hand, the denial of this great truth, so animating to the believer's hopes, he represents as the beginning of that apostasy, which is to come to its height in the latter ages, as one of the characters of Antichrist.

The Apostle follows up what he had said, of Christians having the Spirit being the sign of God's presence and favour, by warning men against those who falsely pretended to the Spirit; and rules are given for discriminating true from false spiritual gifts. He then proceeds again to enjoin brotherly love and charity, as the bond of perfectness.

1. παντὶ πνεύματι.] “every one who claims to have a spiritual gift.” Or πνεῦμα. may denote claim to have a spiritual gift. Ψευδοπρ., men falsely pretending to inspiration.

2. πᾶν πνεῦμα—ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστίν.] The sense seems to be, “Every such person, so claiming to have the Spirit, who publicly professes that Jesus Christ was made very man [for our redemption] is from God,” i. e. his pretensions are valid. Or, as Abp. Newc. paraphrases :— “Every person claiming inspiration, who constantly makes this profession in your assemblies, and to the world, not dreading reproach and danger, and whose claim the Discerner of spirits allows, may be considered by you Christians as really actuated by the Spirit of God.” See 1 Cor. xii. 3.
Considering the known opinions of the heretics of that age, which consisted not in a denial of the Divinity, but the Humanity, of Christ, the best Expositors are agreed that there is reference to the tenets of the Docetæ and others, who held Jesus Christ to have been a mere φάντασμα, destitute of a real body. See Bp. Bull, Jud.
Eccl. Cath. p. 17. Now the Apostle maintains that he came really [clothed] in the flesh, i. e. in a human body. This, however, will by no means prove, what Schlting infers, that Jesus Christ was a mere man: nay (as Mr. Holden observes), it plainly implies the contrary, that he might have come in a different manner, even in the form of God. And the Jewish Doctors as well as people believed the Son of God to be himself God; as has been abundantly proved.

3. καὶ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντ.] Supply πράγμα, or σημεῖον, i. e. the mark by which you will know any one to be an antichrist (i. e. an antichristian apostate) or not. That such is the sense, is plain from ii. 18. where see Note. And so it must have been taken by Polycarp in his Epistle to the Philipp. §. 13. πᾶς γὰρ ὃς μὴ

τύριον τοῦ σταυροῦ, ἐκ τοῦ Διαβόλου ἐστί. See Note on 2 Thess. ii. 3. on the subject of the Man of Sin. It is acutely remarked by Bp. Gauden, in his Hieraspistes, that "every man has cause to suspect Antichrist in his own bosom: As the kingdom of Christ, so the kingdom of Antichrist is within us chiefly."

4. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστε] i. e., as Scott explains, ye are born of God; his children being in his image. So at v. 7. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστί is interchanged with ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται. Καὶ νενικ. αὐτούς, scil. τοὺς ἀντιχρίστους, to be supplied from the preceding. The sense is, "ye have frustrated all their attempts to pervert you from the purity of the Gospel." The next words show how this triumph is obtained; namely, because superior is He (i. e. Spirit of God) who is in, and influences you, to him (the evil Spirit) who is in the world and influences it.

5. αὐτοὶ—ἀκούει.] The sense is, "They, i. e. the teachers in question, are [not of God, but] of the world," actuated by a worldly spirit. "In that spirit they speak, and therefore the world hearkens to them."

6. ἡμεῖς] i. e. the Apostles and divinely inspired teachers. Ὁ γινώσκων τὸν Θ., "he who knoweth God aright," namely, by regeneration and faith. Ἐκ τούτου γιν., "by this test (i. e. the receiving, or the rejecting this doctrine) we may know how to distinguish the spirit of truth from that of error." As, then, the receiving the Apostles as divinely commissioned teachers, and embracing their doctrines, was the way to distinguish those who were "of God;" so now the reverently receiving the truths of the Gospel as contained in the Holy Scriptures, and promulgated by God's ministers, properly commissioned, is the touch-stone to try men's hearts, whether they "savour of the things that be of God," or, "those that be of men."

7, 8. Here the Apostle resumes his exhortation at iii. 23. "Ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐ." "By the very name of the Deity (observes Grot.) every one understands the source of all excellence." To this Cudworth alludes in a most noble passage of his Intellectual System, p. 123.; also in his sermon on 1 John ii. 5. "O Divine Love, the sweet harmony of souls! the music of angels! the joy of God's own heart! the very darling of his bosom! the source of true happiness! the pure quintessence of heaven! that which reconciles the jarring principles of the world! that which melts men's hearts into one another!"

9, 10. Here we have the same sense as at John iii. 16. and supra iii. 16. On the extent and nature of this love, here so particularly insisted on, and how, when properly understood, it proves the deity of Jesus Christ, has been ably shown by Bp. Pearson, on the Creed, who concludes a long and masterly discussion with the following irrefragable reasoning: "If, then, the sending of Christ into the world were the highest act of the love of God which could be expressed; if we be obliged unto a return of thankfulness some way correspondent to such infinite love; if such a return can never be made without a true sense of that infinity, and a sense of that infinity of love cannot consist without an apprehension of an infinite dignity of nature in the person sent; then it is absolutely necessary to believe that Christ is so the Only-begotten Son of the Father, as to be of the same substance." At v. 10. there is, as Grot. observes, a more particular expression of what had been said generally. The Apostle lays a stress on God's loving us first (as v. 19.), since men are more disposed to love those by whom they are first loved. On the term ἰλασμόν see Note supra ii. 1, 2. Τὸν μονογενῆ is here added to τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ, "in order (as Mackn. suggests) to heighten our idea of God's love to us, in giving a person of such supreme dignity, and so beloved of God, to die for us." It is supposed that by giving Christ the title of God's only-begotten Son in this passage, the Apostle intended to overturn the heresy of Ebion and Cerinthus, who affirmed, that Christ was not

& 3, 17.

God's Son by nature, but that, like other good men, he was honoured with the title on account of his virtues.

12. Θεὸν οὐδεὶς—ἡμῖν.] The purport of the words seems to be that expressed by Benson: "No man hath, with his bodily eyes, seen God at any time. And therefore, we cannot have such visible converse and sensible communion with him, as we may have one with another. But if we love one another, we are in the Divine favour, and our love of God is perfect and complete." On οὐδεὶς, &c. see John i. 18. and on μένει, ii. 5.

13. ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκουμεν—ἡμῖν.] The same sentiment as at iii. 24, except that here ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ μένομεν is intended to complete the idea of conjunction.

14. καὶ ἡμεῖς θεθεάμεθα] q. d. "Let no doubt be entertained of this striking proof of the love of God; for we have actually seen," &c. Σωτῆρα is in apposition with Υἱόν.

15. ὃς ἂν ὁμολογήσῃ—Θεῷ.] The sense is, "And [accordingly] whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God [the Saviour sent for our salvation] he is really united with God [in mutual love]." The Apostle takes for granted, not only that the profession is sincere, but productive of a suitable conduct. See Bp. Bull's Jud. Eccl. Cath. p. 18.

16. ἐν ἡμῖν] for εἰς ἡμᾶς; or, μένων ἐν ἡμῖν, as at vv. 12, 13, 15. The sense may be thus expressed: "And [to induce men so to believe] we [Apostles] can affirm that we do surely know the love which God hath to us."

17. ἐν τούτῳ τετελείωται—τούτῳ.] The sense is not very clear; but it seems to be as follows: "By this [abiding in love to our brethren] ren] we may know that our love is perfect and sincere, so that we may have confidence [of our acceptance in the day of judgment; namely, for this reason, that as God is [thus disposed towards us men], so also are we in this world [disposed] towards others;" namely, because we imitate the example of love, &c. set us by our heavenly Father, and therefore may hope for acceptance; having, to the utmost of our power, imitated his purity and holiness, his consummate love and charity."

18. φόβος οὐκ ἔστιν—κόλασιν.] The complete sense seems to be this: "[Slavish] fear exists not in this love, but perfect love [such as this] casts aside fear; for [such] fear implies terror [which is inconsistent with love to God; since] he who so feareth the judgment is not perfected in love," does not love perfectly and sincerely. Φόβος here signifies the fear, not of displeasing God, but of incurring his punishment, which conscience raises. See my Note on Thucyd. ii. 37. 12.

19. ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν—ἡμᾶς.] Many eminent Commentators from Grot. downwards take ἀγ. in the Subjunctive, "Let us love;" which is supported by the authority of the Vulg. and Pesch. Syr. Versions. Yet I know not whether it is permitted by the usus loquendi; and the interpretation does not bear the impress of truth. The sense yielded by the Indicative is the more natural one; and the assertion is (as Abp. Newc. says) "a just and sober one, not requiring too high perfection from human nature." See also Doddr. and especially Jortin (cited in D'Oyly and Mant).

20. ἐάν τις, &c.] On this text see an admirable discourse by Bp. Warburton;—in which he first traces the occasion of the words. "The life,

- τὸν Θεόν, καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ μισῇ, ψεύστης ἐστίν· ὁ γὰρ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ὃν ἑώρακε, τὸν Θεόν ὃν οὐχ ἑώρακε πῶς δύναται ἀγαπᾶν; ^h καὶ ταύτην τὴν ἐντολὴν ἔχομεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, ἵνα ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν Θεόν, ἀγαπᾷ καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ.

the spirit of the Christian religion (says he) is universal benevolence. Agreeably to this, we may observe, that the first founders of the Churches, let the occasion be what it would, whatever discipline they established, whatever doctrine they enforced, whatever vice or heresy they stigmatized, or whatever grace or virtue they recommended, CHARITY was the thing still present with them, and always in their care. Charity, the bond of perfectness, the end of the commandment; that ethereal principle, which, like the elastic fluid of the Philosophers, animates, connects, and ennobles the whole system of intelligent nature." Nay, it is the opinion of the learned writer just quoted that the beloved disciple of our Lord (who may best be supposed to know his Master's will) wrote this Epistle with no other design than to recommend this first of virtues,—Charity. And although the injunction may be thought to have been scarcely necessary in an age when few temptations to the violation of Christian charity existed, yet it was (he thinks) the providence of that prophetic spirit which set before the Apostles the image of those miserable times when (as was foretold by their Master) iniquity should abound, and the love of many should wax cold; and they were willing to bear their testimony against the future violators of the bond of perfectness. It is well pointed out by the learned Prelate, that the reason on which the present weighty aphorism is given, is one founded in the nature of things, and supported by the very order of Providence. Indeed, the argument, he fully shows, is founded in the true theory of the rise and progress of the social affections, or of Universal Love, which, as it regards Man, our holy faith calls Charity; as it regards God, Piety. Thus the Apostle's reasoning is as follows: "Can you, mistaken man, who are not yet arrived at that inferior stage of benevolence,—the love of your brother, whom you have seen, that is, whom the sense of mutual wants, and the experience of mutual relief, amongst the joint partakers of one common nature, might teach you to love,—can you pretend to have attained the top and summit of this virtue, the love of God, whom you have not seen; that is, whose wonderful economy, in the system of creation and government, which makes him so amiable, you appear to have no conception of; you, who have not yet learnt that your own low system is supported on the great principle of benevolence. Fear him, flatter him, fight for him, as you blindly dread his power, you may;

but to love him, as you know not his nature, is impossible."

21. καὶ ταύτην τὴν ἐντολὴν, &c.] "Whether (says Dr. Samuel Parr, in a Sermon on Matt. xxii. 40.) we reflect on the external condition, or the internal faculties, of man; whether we consult our judgment or our feelings; whether we look to the principles of natural religion, or of revealed; we are led to one and the same result on the duties in the text. That result has been forcibly stated by St. John; who to a series of directions in which the most enlarged virtue is combined with the most exalted piety, closes with this most impressive one,—that he who loveth God, love his brother also."

V. 1. In this and the following verses the Apostle continues his discourse on the character of those who are born of God, describing them as lovers of Christ, overcoming the world, and courageous maintainers of the Gospel: on the witnesses to which, in heaven and on earth, he then enlarges. First he enjoins mutual love of Christian brethren on this ground,—that Christians are children of the same God. Πιστ. imports, as Rosenm. observes, a full and sincere belief, and hope of the promises, accompanied with a fulfilment of the precepts, of God. Καὶ πᾶς, &c., "But [thus] every one who truly loveth him," &c. The sentiment has the air of an adage; q. d. "He who loves the parent will naturally love the child."

2. ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκουμεν—τηρῶμεν.] The Apostle here argues a generali ad speciale. Since what was said at v. 1. was universally true, so also it holds good of the love of God. (Rosenm.) Here there has been some doubt as to the construction, and, as dependent thereon, the sense. Œcumen. supposes an inversion; Grot., a transposition, thus: ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκουμεν ὅτι τὸν Θεὸν ἀγαπῶμεν, ὅταν ἀγαπῶμεν τὰ τέκνα αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηρῶμεν. This, however, is violent and unnecessary, since the words, as they stand, yield a very good sense; viz. "By this may we know that we love the children of God aright, when we love God, and keep his commandments."

3. αὕτη γὰρ—τηρῶμεν.] The sense is: "This is the proof and evidence of our love to God, that we keep his commandments." The next words, καὶ αἱ ἐντολαὶ—εἰσίν, seem meant to indirectly contrast the comparatively light injunctions of the Gospel with those of the Law, which were a heavy burden. In proof of which the Apostle proceeds to show how they are easy, adverting to those points in which the Gospel is especially superior to the Law, namely, the love of God, as opposed to the fear of him; and that renewal of the heart by the communication of Divine grace, which the Law did not, and could not provide.

4. ὅτι πᾶν τὸ γεγεννημένον—τὸν κόσμον] “Now, as a proof of this (γὰρ) whosever is born of God overcomes [the temptations of] the world.” Then is suggested the grand principle by which the victory is obtained, in the words καὶ αὕτη—πίστις ἡμῶν, where, at νίκη, there is a metonymy of the effect for the efficient; and αὕτη is for τοῦτο, as just before.

5. τίς ἐστὶν—Θεοῦ:] Here (as at ii. 22.) the interrogation is strongly affirmative. To believe Jesus to be the Son of God is to believe that he is God incarnate. Of course, the belief must be a vital one, evincing its truth by its fruits; otherwise it will not conquer. See Scott on vv. 4, 5.

6. I am still (as in Recens. Synop.) of opinion (with Wells and Carpz.) that by the water and blood St. John intended to advert to the sacraments; by water meaning the “laver of regeneration,” and by blood, the Lord’s Supper; in which the wine is poured out as a symbol of the blood of the New Covenant. “By the former (adds Carpz.) we are regenerated, and become sons of God; and by the latter we are united with God, and obtain a victory over the world (vv. 4 and 5).” Agreeably to this view, Mr. Holden well paraphrases thus: “This is Jesus Christ who came in the flesh, that by means of the water of baptism, and of the shedding his blood as an atonement for sin, he might secure to believers a victory over the world; who came to do this, I repeat, not by [means of] water only, but by [means of] water and blood,” i. e. of baptism and atonement; “and it is the Spirit that beareth witness [to this truth]; because the Spirit is truth.”

7, 8. ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν—οἱ τρεῖς εἰς τὸ ἔν [ἐκ.] On a passage like the present, on which Volumes have been written by some of the most eminent Scholars, it is impossible, within the compass of a NOTE, to give even the briefest sketch of the state of a question so extensive in its bearings, as that which relates to the authenticity and interpretation of the disputed passage placed within brackets. Nor can this be necessary, since, I presume, most of my readers possess Mr. Horne’s invaluable Introduction, which contains a most able condensed statement of the arguments on both sides of the question. Those, however, who desire to obtain complete information on the subject, are referred, for the authenticity, to the masterly disquisitions of Bengelius, Ernesti, Bps. Horsley and Middl., Prof. Knittel, and Drs. Nolan and Hales, and (instar omnium) the very learned Bp. BURGESS; against it, to Prof. Porson, Bp. Marsh, and Crito Cantabrigiensis. And I must content myself with laying before the reader two paraphrases of the whole passage, one without, and the other with, the disputed portion. The first is from Sir Isaac Newton, as follows: “This is he that, after the Jews had long expected him, came, first in a mortal body, by baptism of water, and then in an immortal one by shedding his blood upon the cross, and rising again from the dead; not by water only, but by water and blood; being the Son of God, as well by his resurrection from the dead (Acts xiii. 33.) as by his supernatural birth of the Virgin. (Luke i. 35.) And it is the Spirit, also, that, together with the water and blood, beareth witness of the truth of his coming; because the Spirit is truth, and so a fit and unexceptionable witness. For there are three that bear record of his coming; the Spirit, which he promised to send, and which was since sent forth upon us in the form of cloven tongues and of various gifts; the baptism of water, wherein God testified ‘this is my beloved Son;’ and the shedding of his blood, accompanied with his resurrection, whereby he became the most faithful martyr or witness of this truth. And these three, the Spirit, the baptism, and passion of Christ, agree in witnessing one and the same thing [namely, that the Son of God is come]; and therefore their evidence is strong; for the law requires but two consenting witnesses, and here we have three; and if we receive the witness of men, the threefold witness of God, which he bare of his Son, by declaring at his baptism, ‘This is my beloved Son,’ by raising him from the dead, and by pouring out his Spirit on us, is greater: and therefore ought to be the more readily received.” On the supposition that the verses are genuine, the following admirable paraphrase is given by Bp. Burgess: “This is he that was manifested by his baptism to be the Son of God; and by his death to be the Son of God come in the flesh; manifested not by his baptism only, with which he commenced his ministry on earth, but by his death, with which he finished it. And it is the Spirit, that beareth witness, that Jesus is the Son of God. Now the Spirit is truth,—a true witness. For he is not alone; there are three that bear record in heaven that Jesus is the Son of God, namely, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit; and these three are one in the Divine nature. And there are three that bear witness in earth, that the Son of God is come in the flesh; namely, his last breath on the Cross, and the blood and water that issued from his side. And these three are one in the Person of Jesus Christ, one united proof of his human nature from the phenomena of his death. By the Jewish Law, the testimony of two or three men is true. If, then, we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God, that he hath testified of his Son." On again examining, for this second edition of the present work, the evidence for and against the words I still think that much of the mystery in which Bp. Middleton considers the passage as enveloped, has yet to be cleared away: and my impression is,—that, from the peculiar character of the evidence, external and internal (even after all that has been effected to strengthen the internal evidence, by the very learned Bp. Burgess), we are neither authorized to receive the passage as indubitably genuine, nor, on the other hand, to reject it as indubitably spurious, but to wait for further evidence.

10. ἔχει τὴν μαρτυρίαν ἐν ἑαυτῷ] "hath the testimony [just spoken of] in itself," i. e. holdeth this testimony with firm assent, and in his own mind. Some, however, explain, "hath this testimony in himself," by the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit: others, by its effects on his own mind and conduct. See Benson and Doddridge. But the first mentioned is the most natural and appropriate sense.

11. καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ μαρτ.] The truth referred to, and to which it is here stated God hath borne testimony, is that in v. 6.; consequently this verse is a strong confirmation of the exposition of v. 6., that "by water and blood" is meant baptism and the atoning blood of Christ, for they are the means by which we can obtain eternal life; and therefore this life is through the Son of God. (Holden.)

13. ταῦτα ἔγραψα—Θεοῦ.] To remove what might seem tautology, we must take πιστ., in the last clause emphatically, i. e. as denoting reality, and heartfelt constancy of profession, as opposed to a cold historical belief. Abp. Newc. observes that vv. 12, 13, are an incidental enlargement on the close of v. 11.

14, 15. To enforce the foregoing exhortation to constancy in faith, the Apostle points out the high privilege of true believers, in having a confidence of approach unto God in prayer, with assurance of his readiness to answer their supplications, if the requests be made according to his will, i. e. after the prescribed manner, in such a way as may tend to his glory and our own spiritual good; and with the persuasion that, in some sense, the petitions they put up would be granted in the best manner, though it might be not exactly in the way they expected. Here there is an allusion to the promise made by our Lord to the Apostles, John xiv. 12—14. xvi. 23. The words αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ παρῥησία may be rendered, "And on this (namely, that we know we may expect future salvation) rests our sure confidence in God." At ἐάν οἶδαμεν, &c., the contort interpretations of most of the recent Commentators must be rejected, and the words be taken in their plain and natural sense, thus: "and knowing, as we do, that he heareth us, in whatever petitions we prefer,—we may know (i. e. feel sure) that we have (i. e. shall have) from him the petitions we thus (i. e. according to his will) desired of him." At ὁ must be understood κατὰ. The difficulty, which has perplexed Commentators, may be removed by supposing (with Doddg.) that κατὰ τὸ θέλημα is to be supplied from the preceding verse. Or at the least the petitions must be supposed κατὰ τὸ θέλημα (in the sense that has been just explained); for otherwise, the Apostle's own words teach us, they will not be heard, much less granted. Now the above will hold good, whether the petitions should be for ordinary blessings, or extraordinary interpositions.

16, 17. Of this obscure passage, the various interpretations may be seen detailed in Recens. Synop.; where I have, with many of the best Expositors, supposed the whole to have reference to the extraordinary and miraculous circumstances under which believers were placed in the Apostolic age. According to this view, the sense is well expressed by Mr. Holden, in the following paraphrase: “‘If any man,’ endowed with the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, ‘see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death,’ i. e. which is not to be punished with such a disease as is to terminate in death, but to be miraculously cured by him, ‘he shall ask’ of God, who will grant life and health ‘to them that sin not unto death,’ i. e. who do not commit such sins as are to end in death. ‘There is a sin unto death,’ i. e. which is to be punished with death, and ‘I do not say that he [the man endowed with extraordinary gifts] shall pray for it;’ in this he must be guided by the immediate impulse of the Spirit. It is true, indeed, that ‘all unrighteousness is sin; and [yet] there is a sin not unto death,’ v. 17. i. e. there are some sins of a less aggravated nature, which do not draw down upon them such diseases as are to end in death.” At δώσει the subject is ὁ Θεός; on which, and such like ellipses, see Win. Gr. Gr. §. 41. 2. Ἀμαρτάνοντα ἁμαρτίαν is supposed to be a Hebraism; but I find it in Eurip. Hippol. 20. τὴν ἡμάρτηκεν εἰς ὃ ἁμαρτίαν; Prof. Scholefield rightly remarks, that the reference of αὐτῷ is to the ἀδελφὸς that has sinned, not to him that prays for him; and that the τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσι, &c., is an exegesis.

18. ὁ γεγεννη. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ.] See Note at John viii. 47. Οὐχ ἁμαρτ. See Note supra iii. 9. Τηρεῖ, i. e. “preserveth himself pure [from such unworthy conduct].” The full expression occurs in James i. 27. ἄσπιλον ἑαυτὸν τηρεῖν. By ἄπτ. is meant so to touch as to hurt or injure.

19. οἶδαμεν—ἐσμεν.] The connection and full sense seems to be as follows: “And it is no wonder that we who are true Christians should thus keep ourselves from sin]; for we assuredly know that we are of God, and are his children, and that the world at large lieth under the dominion of the Evil One. [Hence sin, though it may be naturally expected from them, were highly inconsistent in us.]” The best Commentators are in general agreed, that τῷ πονηρῷ is masculine, not neuter; which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. They have, moreover, shown that κεῖσθαι ἐν τινι signifies to be under any one's influence.

20. οἶδαμεν δὲ—αἰώνιος.] The sense of this passage (which is more difficult than Commentators allow) is admirably illustrated by Bp. Burgess, in his Letters to Mrs. J. Baillie, as follows: “The confident assurance with which the Apostle maintains his conviction of the truth of the two doctrines concerning the Divinity and the Human Nature of Christ, which pervade the Epistle, and are summarily confirmed in vv. 7, 8, are strikingly expressed in v. 20. ‘We know that the Son of God is come;’ i. e. We know that Jesus is the Son of God, the Messiah, and that the Son of God is come in the flesh. But whence did the Apostles derive their knowledge that the Son of God is come? Who is meant by ‘him that is true,’ and who by the ‘true God?’ When St. Peter confessed Christ to be the Son of God, our Saviour said, ‘Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father, which is in heaven.’ (Matt. xvi. 17.) And, on another occasion, ‘No man can come to me, except the Father draw him.’ (John vi. 44.) I, therefore, interpret the words, ‘and hath given us,’ of the Father, and supply the term ‘God’ by the same ellipsis, as in the 16th verse of this Chapter. ‘The true’ (τὸν ἀληθινόν) is a title peculiarly applicable to Jesus Christ,—the true light, ‘the true bread,’ ‘the true vine,’ ‘the true witness.’ In Rev. iii. 7. he is called (in the original) ‘the holy, the true.’ In our 20th verse it means, as I conceive, ‘the true Messiah.’ We are in the true Messiah, by believing and obeying him. ‘This is the true God.’ Jesus Christ is the subject of the verse, as well as the immediate antecedent to ‘this.’ The original term (houtos) is used here as in the second verse of the first chapter of St. John's Gospel, and has the same relation here to Jesus Christ, as it has there to THE WORD, by which Jesus Christ is called God in one passage, δέδωκεν ἡμῖν διάνοιαν, ἵνα γινώσκωμεν τὸν ἀληθινόν· καὶ

 ἔσμεν ἐν τῷ ἀληθινῷ, ἐν τῷ Υἱῷ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ.
 21 οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς καὶ ἡ ζωὴ αἰώνιος. ^a Τεκνία, ^{a 1} Cor. 10.
 φυλάξατε ἑαυτοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων. ἀμήν.

and the true God in the other. In the Gospel, the original term is rendered, not this, but the same, which expresses more strongly the connection between the relative and its antecedent: 'The same (Jesus Christ) is the true God.' I propose, therefore, the following paraphrase of the 20th verse: 'We know that the Son of God, the Messiah, is come; and God hath given to us an understanding, that we may know the true Messiah, and we are in—disciples of—the true Messiah, even of the Son of God, and the Eternal Life,' that Eternal Life which was with the Father."

The learned Prelate supports his application of the τὸν ἀληθ. to Jesus Christ, by the weighty authorities of Athanasius, Bp. Pearson, Whitby, Doddr., and Scott, to which may be added that of the learned Lampe on John, vol. iii. p. 371. A close connection in sense is observable in this passage and John xvii. 3; and I cannot but think that St. John had here that passage in mind.

21. τεκνία.] Our English Version here and John xiii. 33. (where the expression also occurs at the beginning of a sentence) renders, "little children." It should rather be, "Dear children;" for the diminutive has here (as often) the force of endearment, and is expressive of affection. The word is, however, almost confined to the loving and beloved Apostle; occurring no where else, but once in a most pathetic passage of St. Paul, Gal. iv. 19. τεκνία μου, οὓς πάλιν ὠδίνω, &c. However, in Mark x. 24. we find our Saviour thus addressing his disciples: Τέκνα, πῶς δύσκολόν ἐστι τοὺς πεποιθότας ἐπὶ χρήμασιν, &c., where some of the most ancient MSS. and Clement have τεκνία, which is probably the true reading.

—φυλάξατε—εἰδώλων] i. e. [Such being the case,] keep yourselves from idolatry of every kind, and every approach to it. See Benson. The ἀμήν may be rendered So be it, importing a wish and prayer that they may do so.

Of the authenticity of this, and the third Epistle of St. John, doubts were at first entertained; but, after due examination, they were, at an early period, received as canonical, and accordingly are quoted as such by writers of the second century. Indeed their being at first kept out of the Canon arose, probably, not so much from any opinion of their being spurious, as from their brevity, and being addressed only to individuals, and on comparatively familiar subjects. That they are both from the same hand ("the beloved Apostle,") is abundantly clear, both from the manner and style, and the sentiments; of which those of the second Epistle are very similar to the ones found in the first Epistle. Indeed, the design is nearly the same, and the coincidences very frequent. On the place and date of this and the third Epistle nothing certain is known.

1. ὁ πρεσβ.] As the word πρεσβ. properly denotes senior, and as St. Paul was then undoubtedly the senior Apostle, and probably the senior Christian, we may (with the best Commentators) suppose him to have been called ὁ πρεσβ. κατ' ἐξοχὴν, which would soon pass into a kind of appellative, as here. And that the Apostle should use this, in preference to his own name, is probable, since he was accustomed, from modesty, to suppress it.

— ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ.] On the sense of this address, considerable difference of opinion exists. From what Bp. Middl. remarks, it should seem that only two interpretations have any semblance of truth. 1. That by which ἐκλεκτῇ is taken as an adjective, and rendered, "to the chosen, excellent, or truly Christian Lady." Yet this, Bp. Middl. maintains, would require τῇ κυρίᾳ τῇ ἐκλ., or at least τῇ ἐκλ. κ. And he adopts the interpretation of those who, as Grot., Wolf, and Wets., take ἐκλ. as a proper name, "to the Lady Eclecta;" which he endeavours to show is unexceptionable in point of phraseology; a title of honour following the proper name, and not admitting the Article. The learned Prelate, however, adduces no examples of titles of honour in such a position; but only of names of professions. Moreover, we must thus either understand τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς at the end of the Epistle in a different sense, or suppose another sister of the same name. These words, indeed, Bp. Middl. proposes to cancel, as spurious. But for that there is not the least authority; and until such is produced, we must retain the common interpretation, and suppose the Apostle to have omitted the Article; which may very well be accounted for, since where can such sort of brevity be so allowable as in the Inscriptions of Epistles? Thus we address to Lord —, not the Lord; the addition of the proper name supplying the place of the definite Article. It is true that there is here no proper name; but the Apostle might omit that, as having addressed the letter on the outside with the name of the Lady in question.

The relative οὗς agrees in sense with both τέκνοις and κυρίᾳ. At πάντες supply ἡμεῖς, which seems necessary from the ἡμῶν of the verse following.

2. διὰ τὴν ἀλήθειαν—αἰῶνα.] Repeat ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν from the context: "We [I say] love you because of the truth (i. e. the true religion) which remaineth in us, and will ever remain."

3. ἔσται.] Future for Opt., by Hebraism. Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ καὶ ἀγ., "by, or with, knowledge of the truth, and mutual love," whereby the blessings and graces of God were bestowed and preserved.

4. ἐχάρην—ἀληθείᾳ.] The sense is "I rejoiced greatly, because I found [some] of thy children living in the [profession and practice of] the truth, as we have it revealed to us [through Jesus Christ] by God the Father."

- 5 Πατρός. ^b Καὶ νῦν ἐρωτῶ σε, κυρία, οὐχ ὡς ἐντολὴν γράφων σοι καινὴν, ἀλλὰ ἣν εἶχομεν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ἵνα ἀγαπῶμεν 6 ἀλλήλους. ^c καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη, ἵνα περιπατῶμεν κατὰ τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ. 5, 6. See a kindred sentiment at 1 John ii. 7, 8; and ii. 18. Ἐρωτῶ ἵνα ἀγαπῶμεν is supposed to be a delicate mode of expression for ἐρ. ἵνα ἀγαπῇτε. By ἀγαπ. ἀλλ. is meant, as Grotius and Rosenmüller show, love one to another.

7. ὅτι πολλοί—σαρκί.] This seems to be connected with v. 3, the intermediate verses being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. ["I rejoiced that you and your children walked in the truth, and I cannot but exhort you to continue so to do,] for many deceivers are abroad in the world, who will not allow that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh;" i. e. in the real human nature. Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πλ., q. d. "that kind of person, or every such person, is the kind of deceiver I mean."

8. βλέπετε ἐ.] for φυλάσσετε ἐ., mind, take heed to yourselves. ἵνα μὴ ἀπολέσωμεν τὴν ἐργ., "in order that we [your teachers] may not lose our reward." Ἀλλὰ μισθὸν πλ. ἀπο-

λάβ. The sense seems to be, "that we may receive the ample reward which will accrue to us, if ye continue stedfast." The πλήρη hints at some reward which the teacher would receive in the other case; which, indeed, were but just, since disciples may apostatize, and bring discredit on the master, without his being to blame.

9. See 1 John ii. 23.

10. χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε.] Χαίρειν λέγειν was a form of salutation, expressive of friendly feelings. But as the receiving any such teacher into her house, and addressing such a salutation, could not but imply some degree of approbation and countenance to his doctrines, so it is forbidden by the Apostle; though by no means out of any uncharitable disposition towards such persons as individuals.

12. διὰ χάριτος καὶ μέλανος.] A sort of proverbial phrase, as also is στόμα πρὸς στόμα λαλήσαι.

Of the Gaius to whom this Epistle is addressed, we know nothing, except from this Epistle. Neither the date nor place of the Epistle is ascertained. The design of it was to commend Gaius for his perseverance in the faith, and his hospitality to some Christian travellers, who had called upon him.

1. See Note at 2 John 1.

2. περὶ πάντων—σου ἡ ψυχὴ.] “above all things I heartily wish and pray that thou mayest be prospered, and enjoy health of body, even as thy soul prospereth.” The περὶ may be construed either with εὐχομαι, or with εὐδὸ. But the former is the more natural mode. So περὶ is used in Pind. Olymp. vi. 84. περὶ θνητῶν, ante omnes mortales. Εὐδοῦσθαι properly signifies to be set well forward on one's way; 2. to go in one's way aright; 3. to be prosperous; as here and Rom. i. 10. εὐπῶς ποτὲ εὐδοκάζομαι.

4. τούτων] for τούτου. “Ἰνα, for ἡ ἴνα. Μειζοτ. A provincial form for μεῖζονα.

5. πιστὸν ποιεῖς] scil. ἔργον, “thou actest in a manner worthy of the Gospel.” So Liban. cited by the Commentators, οὐχ Ἑλληνικὸν τοῦτο ποιεῖς.

6. ἐκκλησίας] i. e. “the Church at Ephesus.” Προσπ., “by sending them forward and helping them on their journey.” See Note at Acts xv. 3. Ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, in a manner worthy of that God whose servants they are, and whose Gospel they preach. (Newc.)

7. ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόμ.] “for his sake and in his cause,” i. e. Christ's. This referring, as it must, to Θεοῦ immediately preceding, Christ is here, as well as elsewhere, termed GOD. Μηδὲν λαμβ., “receiving no pay [nothing more than support] from their converts.”

9. ἔγραψα.] The sense is disputed. But it seems best to render “I have written,” viz. an Epistle to the Church at large, of which Gaius was a member,—namely, to recommend the brethren above mentioned. The full sense, however, seems to be that expressed by Dr. Burton: “I meant what I have written to be addressed to the Church.” “It appears (says Dr. Burton) from vv. 3, 6, that some persons had given St. John a good account of the state of the Church in the place where Gaius lived: these persons were now going again to the same place, and St. John sent this letter by them recommending them to Gaius. He had wished to address it to the whole Church; but Diotrophes did not allow the authority of St. John, and refused to receive the persons recommended by him.” Ὁ φιλοπρ. αὐτῶν, i. e. the members of the Church. Various conjectures have been hazarded concerning this Diotrophes; all, however, destitute of foundation. Οὐκ ἐπιδέχεται ἡμᾶς, i. e. refuses to recognize my authority, or attend to my admonitions.

10. ὑπομνήσω αὐτοῦ τὰ ἔργα.] A softened, and perhaps provincial mode of expressing “I shall remember [to reprove and punish him for] his [evil] works." So 2 Cor. xiii. 2. ἐὰν ἔλθω, οὐ φείσομαι. As to the cavil raised upon the sentiment, it is completely overturned by Whitby. Καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλ. ἐκβ. As it can hardly be supposed that Diotrephes would excommunicate any one on so frivolous a pretext, it is best, with Heum., Carpz., Rosenm., Iaspis, and most recent Commentators, to take the sense of ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλ. ἐκβ. to be, "refuses to receive them as Christians," for their thus denying them hospitality compelled them to go elsewhere.

11. μὴ τὸ κακόν, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀγαθόν "not the evil example, but the good:" which is then confirmed by a weighty saying, the full sense of which seems to be this: "He who practises what is good, especially in works of benevolence, is [a son] of God; he who practises any sort of evil, doth not [really] know God or religion, because by his actions he shows he is not sensible of his obligations to virtue."

12. μεμαρτ. ὑπὸ πάντων "has a good testimony borne to him by all." See Acts xvi. 2. Heb. xi. 2. In ὑπ' αὐτῆς τῆς ἀλ. there is an acutè dictum, not to be too much pressed on. It means, as Carpz. explains, re ipsâ.

15. οἱ φίλοι—κατ' ὄνομα.] The sense is well expressed by Mr. Holden, suitably to the mode of interpretation suggested by me in Rec. Syn., as follows: "Our friends [here] salute thee. Greet our friends [with thee] by name;" i. e. severally and individually.

The authenticity of this Epistle was at first called in question; but, after due examination, it was, at an early period, received into the Canon of Scripture; and accordingly is quoted as genuine by Tertullian, Clemens Alex., Origen, and other early Fathers. In short, its authenticity has been evinced by various writers, from whom an admirable summary is given by Mr. Horne.

The writer styles himself the brother of James the less, who was the Bishop of Jerusalem. Thus he was one of the cousins of Christ. He was son of Alpheus, and was surnamed Thaddæus, or Lebbaeus; and one of the twelve Apostles. Of the particulars of his life after his presence with the disciples on the day of Pentecost, we have little or no certain information. It is probable that he remained for some time in Jerusalem, preaching the Gospel to the Jews: but that afterwards, as the troubles of Judæa came on, he quitted the country, and went to preach the Gospel to foreign countries. Ecclesiastical Tradition informs us, that he preached in Arabia, Syria, Mesopotamia, and Persia: indeed, the Syrians still claim him as their Apostle. Upon the whole, there seems every reason to suppose that, after his leaving Judæa, he dedicated his evangelical labours chiefly to his own countrymen, and especially those that were called of the Eastern Dispersion; probably treading in the steps of St. Peter, who seems, towards the close of his life, to have devoted himself to that field. In fact, we may reasonably suppose that he was first a Coadjutor with, and afterwards the Successor to, that Apostle, in the evangelizing of the Eastern Dispersion; just as St. Thomas, probably passing over from Arabia to Hindoostan, evangelized at least the southern part (called the Deccan) of that great Peninsula. That St. Jude did occupy the above field, is confirmed by the strong similarity (nay, even coincidence) between this Epistle and that of St. Peter: and will best serve to account for, and moreover strengthen the evidence for the authenticity of, that Epistle. See Intro. to 2 Pet.

Of the place where this Epistle was written we know nothing. On its exact date, the learned are by no means agreed. Some, as Dr. Lardner and Mr. Horne, assigning it to A. D. 65; others, as Dr. Mill, as late as 90; and some even towards the close of the first century. It is difficult, if not impossible, to fix any precise period. But there is little doubt that the early dates assigned are false and unfounded. And yet the arguments urged by Dr. Mill (from the circumstance of the false teachers mentioned by St. Peter as about to come, being described by St. Jude as actually come; and from the coincidence between this Epistle and 2 Pet. Ch. ii.) will scarcely authorize so late a date as 90, still less the close of the first century. Though, after all, that is far likelier to be the true date than any of the early ones. And we have every reason to think that the Apostle lived to a very advanced age. Such, too, is confirmed by what Abulfargius tells us, that the Pesch. Syriac Version (probably of the Old Testament) was made in the time of St. Jude, and by his authority for the use of the Oriental Churches, or rather the Eastern Dispersion; among whom, no doubt, the Epistle to the Hebrews in Syro-Chaldee had been circulated, and probably a Translation of 2 Peter into the same language. (See the Introduction to that Epistle).

With respect to the design of this Epistle, it may suffice to say, that it is precisely the same as that of the second Epistle of Peter. Into the disputed question, to whom addressed, I cannot enter. I will only observe, that from the arguments and examples being chiefly taken from Jewish Scripture, there is every reason to suppose (with Estius, Witsius, Hamm., Benson, and Moldenhauer) that it was, though addressed to Christians generally, intended especially for the Jewish Christians. And, considering that it is written in Greek, it must have been for the Western Dispersion, as well as the Eastern. Bearing in mind, too, St. Jude's close connection with the Eastern Dispersion, it may seem not improbable that he formed a Syro-Chaldee Version of it for the use of those Jewish Christians who did not understand Greek.

On the style of the Epistle the reader is referred to an able Dissertation of LAURMANN; a learned Dutch divine, who, a few years ago, published an elaborate commentary on this Epistle. He considers it with reference to the three great requisites for the orator, (for he regards this Epistle as belonging rather to the oratorical than to any other species of writing,) namely, invention, disposition, (or arrangement,) and elocution. In all of these the learned Dissertator shows that St. Jude is well versed; nay, that he occasionally rises to a height not easily to be paralleled. He shows that the Greek is, upon the whole, pure; and that, although fifteen words are here found which occur no where else in the N. T., yet they are such as are admirably adapted to the comprehension even of the unlearned, as being in general borrowed from the ideas and modes of thinking of common life.

1. τοῖς ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ ἡγ.] Equivalent to ἡγιασμένοι ἐν Χριστῷ at 1 Cor. i. 2, "true Christians." Τειτηρ., i. e. kept stedfast in the faith to which they had been called by the grace of God. On κλητ. see Note on Matt. xx. 16. V. 2. contains an Apostolic salutation, like 1 Pet. i. 2.

3. πᾶσαν σπουδὴν—πίστει.] The sense is :
"when I made it my earnest business to write unto you concerning the common salvation, I thought it needful to insert an exhortation, that you should zealously strive for the preservation of the faith which was formerly delivered to the saints." With σπουδὴν ποιούμενος compare
2 Pet. i. 5. σπουδὴν πᾶσαν παρεισενέγκαντες.
With the next words Wets. compares 2 Macc.
ix. 21. ἀναγκαῖον ἡγησάμην φροντίσαι τῆς κοινῆς σωτηρίας. Ἐπαγων. τῇ πί-στει, for ἀγων. ἐπὶ τῇ π., "to strive earnestly for the faith," here called ἡ κοινὴ σωτηρία because the salvation it held out was common to all nations, and all classes or conditions of men.
See Note on Philem. 5. On ἅπαξ, compare
2 Pet. ii. 21.

4. παρεισέδυσαν—οἱ πάλαι προγεγ.] The προγεγ. is supposed to be a forensic term, and the expression οἱ προγεγ. ἐς κρίσιν to denote those cited to trial by posting up their names, or those whose names were posted up, as required εἰς κρίμα, for condemnation and punishment.
There may be an allusion to either or both of these. So 2 Pet. ii. 3. οἱς τὸ κρίμα οὐκ ἄργεῖ.
The expression, therefore, does not imply any predestination of the persons, but merely imports that they were long since foretold, and thereby designated, as persons who should suffer. Τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα, i. e. such a punishment as the Apostle proceeds to state, vv. 5—7, 11, 15. Τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ—ἀσέλγ., "who abuse the gracious dispensation of the Gospel [meant to encourage virtue and exertion, and promote holiness] into an occasion of lasciviousness." Compare 1 Pet. ii. 16.
The persons in question (the false teachers so strongly censured by St. Peter and St. John) abused God's promise of mercy to the penitent, and represented that mercy as having no limits, and as extending even to unrepented and unfor-saken sin. Μετατ. signifies to alter any thing from its original purpose,—and, in a figurative sense, to abuse. Τὸν μόνον—Χριστόν. If the Θεὸν here be genuine, the δεσπότην Θεὸν and Κύριον (according to the Canon of Mr. Sharp and Bp. Middl.) must be understood of one person, (as is done by the Syriac and Coptic Translators,) i. e. "denying our only Lord God, Jesus Christ." Comp. 2 Pet. ii. 1—3, and Note.

5. ὑπομῆσαι δὲ ὑμᾶς—τοῦτο.] It is not quite agreed with what ἅπαξ is to be construed, and what the sense is. Some join it with ὑπομῆσαι, construing thus : ὑπομῆσαι δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι ἅπαξ τοῦτο, καίπερ εἰδότες ὑμᾶς.
Thus it may be rendered, "I wish once more to remind you of this, though ye know it." Others join it with εἰδότες, in the sense, "though you already know it;" which is certainly the more natural construction; but as that signification of ἅπαξ is not fully proved, I prefer the former view, and have pointed with Dr. Burton, who well paraphrases thus : "I wish to remind you, though you already know it, yet I wish once more to remind you of this." As to the senses formerly, or entirely, ascribed by some to ἅπαξ, they cannot here be admitted. Τοὺς μὴ πιστ.
is for ἀπειθήσαντας (compare Heb. iv. 2.) ; unbelief producing disobedience. Ἀπώλεσε. So, the Apostle intimates, God will deal with false Christian professors.

6. τοὺς μὴ τηρ. τὴν ἐ. ἀ.] Some doubt exists as to the sense of τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐαυτῶν ; which the earlier Commentators in general explain "their first state," the later ones, "their original dignity;" q. d. "did not preserve their prerogatives as sons of God, and the original excellence with which they were created, the truth and holiness created with them." This view of the sense is supported by the authority of Cyril, and is certainly more agreeable to the usus loquendi and the context. On this whole passage, see Notes at 2 Pet. ii. 4—10. Οἰκητήριον is by some supposed to mean, "their proper habitation [in heaven]," a metaphor which Laurmann (with some reason) thinks derived from runaway slaves. The word, however, is best explained by Benson, Schleus., and others, "their own proper situation, [though aspiring to a higher]."

—δεσμοῖς—τετήρηκεν.] On the phraseology see Notes at 2 Pet. Hanlein (a recent Editor of this Epistle) is of opinion that this was taken from an Apocryphal book. But I see no necessity for such a supposition. To use the words of Laurmann: "Historiam arbitror verè gestam, nobis omnino incognitam. Unde tantæ tenebræ haud faciliè discutendæ, ob historiæ priscæ antiquitatis inscitiam."

7. αἱ περ. α. π.] i. e. the circumjacent cities of Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar. The τούτοις refers to the inhabitants of those cities, by the figure πρὸς τὸ σημαυνόμενον. The words ἀπελθ. ὁ. σ. ἐ. are exegetical of the ἐκπορν.; (the ἐτέρας σαρκὸς is very significant) as denoting all sorts of uncleanness. See 2 Pet. ii. 4. and Note. Δέγμα is for ὡς παράδειγμα. So 3 Macc. cited by Rosenm. σὺ—Σοδομίτας πυρὶ καὶ θείῳ κατέφλεξας, παράδειγμα τοῖς ἐπιγινόμενοις καταστήσας. The import of αἰωνιον is injudiciously lowered by several recent Commentators. The full sense intended by the Apostle seems to be this: "They are publicly set forth for an everlasting example [in their fiery destruction] of the punishment God sometimes inflicts for sin in this world; which is but a faint type of that which he hath reserved for the next." See Prof. Stuart's Dissertation on Future Punishment, p. 61. sqq.

8. ὁμοίως—βλασφ.] Render: "In like manner, notwithstanding [such awful examples of punishment are held out] these dreamers defile the flesh [with lewdness], set at nought government, and revile dignities." See 2 Pet. ii. 10, 11. No difficulty here presents itself, except in ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, which the older Commentators supposed to allude to the obscene dreams of the persons in question. This, however, is harsh and frigid. The best Expositors, from Beza and Grot., down to Hanlein and Laurmann, are justly agreed, that the term must be taken in a figurative sense, denoting the giving way to idle and delusive fancies, promising themselves security and acceptance in courses which the Gospel disallows. Less perplexity would have presented itself to the Commentators, had the Editors pointed the word off, as I have done. This, indeed, is required, by propriety: the word standing for οἱ ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι. So the Pesch. Syr., "qui in somnio imaginantur."

9. ὁ δὲ Μιχαὴλ, &c.] The connexion may be thus traced: "The Gnostics imitate the fallen angels in their rebellious speeches and conduct; but the Arch-angel will afford them a better example, who, even under the greatest provocation, refused to pronounce a harsh sentence of condemnation against a fallen spirit." "If (says Doddr.) the angel did not rail even against the devil, how much less ought we against men in authority, even supposing them in some things to behave amiss." To do it therefore when they behave well, must be an offence yet more aggravated.

This is supposed by most recent Commentators to have been derived from an Apocryphal book (now lost), called the ἀνάβασις Μωυσέως; and to have been merely introduced by St. Jude as an instructive fable, serving to illustrate the doctrine in question, that we ought not to speak evil of dignities. But it is difficult to believe that an inspired Apostle would enforce his doctrine by a mere fable; and indeed it is evidently mentioned, not as a fable, but as a fact. See Note on v. 14, 15.

10. This verse contains the same sentiment as 2 Pet. ii. 12. where see Note. In φυσικῶς ἐπίστανται we have a plainer expression than that used at 2 Pet. The sense is: "which they know by natural instinct," or the impulses of appetite and passion.

11—13. See 2 Pet. ii. 15—17. and Notes. Τῇ πλάνῃ—ἐξελχ. The sense is, "They impetuously rush upon the sin committed by Balaam for the lucre of gain;" i. e. as he excited the people to whoredom with the Moabites,—so they, through love of lucre, encourage Christians in carnal lusts. Ἀντιλογία here denotes rebellion, or insurrection; a signification of which Laurm. adduces an example from the Protevangel. Jacobi v. 9.

—εἰσιν ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις—ποιμ.] The sense is, "These wretches are spots and a disgrace to your love-feasts; when they feast with you to an excess, which shows no reverence to God, or regard to man." On these Agapæ see a learned Dissertation of N. C. Kist, Harlem, 1830, and one of Van Hengel's de Bonorum Communionem, where at p. 30. he refers the origin of the Agapæ to the words of Christ, Luke xiv. 13. Σπιλάδες is by many learned Commentators taken of rocks on the surface of the sea. See Wets. and Laurm. This sense, however, would involve such incongruity of figure, that it may be better to retain the common interpretation "spots," the σπιλοι of St. Peter; which is adopted by Beza, Grot. Benson, Hemsterh., Schneid., and Wassenberg. Συνευωχ., and ποιμ. are Nominativi pendentes. The ἀφύβως seems to mean that they have no concern about any but themselves. Compare a kindred passage in Ezek. xxxiv. 8. The ἐαυτοὺς is emphatical.

—νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι.] "These waterless clouds (says Rosenm.) are a fit emblem of the false teachers, who promised much of evangelical truth and purity, but performed little worthy of the title;" q. d. "As clouds carried about in the air, but devoid of water, do not nourish the earth;—so these boasters hurry about, promising much, but performing little, and doing no benefit whatever." Thus a proverb in Schultens' Antholog. says, "Doctus sine opere est ut nubes sine pluvia." For περιφερόμεναι, many MSS., Versions, and early Editions have παραφ., which has been adopted by almost all the Editors from Wets. to Vater. But the common reading may, after all, be the right one. See Heb. xiii. 9.

—δένδρα φθινοπωρινά.] This is to be understood of trees, as they are at the end of autumn, without leaves or fruit. There seems to be a climax in δένδρα φθινοπωρινά, ἄκαρπα, δις ἀποθανόντα, ἐκριζωθέντα. The δις ἀποθανόντα is explained by the best Commentators, doubly, i. e. altogether dead. But there seems an allusion to the preceding terms, which denote only those barren, such only thus far alive. See Benson and Mackn. In the ἐκριζωθέντα we have the apex of the climax; for of trees uprooted there can be no more hope of fruit.

The expression κύματα ἄγρια is a very unusual one; but it occurs in Wisd. xiv. 1. The Commentators remark, that ἄγριος is scarcely ever applied to inanimate objects. Yet I have noted the following example in Herodot. viii. 13. νύξ πολλὸν ἦν ἐπὶ ἀγριωτέρῃ, τοσούτω ὅσῳ ἐν πελάγει φερομένοισι ἐπέπαιτε. Ἐπαφρίζοντα is usually rendered despumantes, foaming up (as if it were ἐξαφρ., which occurs in Æschyl. Agam. 1034. αἱματηρὸν ἐξαφροῦ-ξεσθαι μένος). I prefer, "foaming up," viz. on the shore; the ἄφρος being not only the foam of the sea, but (as we find by the Schol. on Hom. Il. O. 626.) the τὸ χορτώδες τῆς θαλάσσης ἀπόβλημα, the wreck, or sea-weeds, &c. thrown up on the sea-shore. And this illustrates the αἰσχύνas just after. For, as the wreck is the refuse of the sea, so were the foolish and obscene discourses (the αἰσχύνas being rightly supposed by Rosenm. to denote the αἰσχρολογίαί, the filthiness and foolish talking mentioned by St. Paul) which those persons spouted forth, their shame. Compare Is. lvii. 20.

The expression ἀστέρες πλανῆται is explained by the ἀστέρες διαθέντες, and alludes to the wandering unsettled habits of those teachers (called stars, according to Jewish imagery) ever on the watch to gratify their appetites.

14, 15. These verses have now been at length proved to be cited from an Apocryphal book of Enoch, often quoted by the Fathers (see Fabr. Cod. Pseud. V. T. vol. i. p. 160.), and which was supposed to be lost, but has lately been discovered in an Æthiopic Version, and edited, with a translation, by Abp. Laurence, Oxford, 1821, who refers the composition to the time of Herod the Great. Notwithstanding this, however, Mr. Horne maintains that St. Jude did not quote from any book extant in his day purporting to have been written by Enoch, and thinks "we may rationally conclude that Jude altered the traditional Antediluvian prophecy of Enoch, under the direction of the infallible Spirit, who was to guide them into all truth." But nothing surely can be more harsh and far-fetched than this supposition, and the verbal coincidence overturns any such notion. Certainly the quoting from the book in question will by no means invalidate the genuineness of the Epistle; for the Apostle's quoting from Enoch's, as a work which was received by the Jews as such, will not involve his inspiration; since the promise of preserving the Apostles from error, and guiding them into all truth, must be understood, with limitation, to mean all error of any consequence, and all truth important to the purpose of salvation. Now here the Apostle's quotation gives no currency to imposture; especially if his words be properly interpreted, which, I apprehend, they have not quite been. The sense seems simply to be: "To these (i. e. such as these) Enoch (the seventh from Adam) also prophesied (i. e. foretold) the fate of incorrigible sinners in these words, 'Behold,' &c. From the αὐτῶν, however, this appears to have been not, strictly speaking, a quotation, but an application. The Apostle, meaning to apply what was said by Enoch to the Antediluvians, to the sinners of his own age: in like manner as our Saviour said unto the Scribes and Pharisees, 'Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written,' &c. And so Caiaphas, the high-priest, is said to have 'prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation' (John xi. 51.); because he spoke as truly as if he had prophesied.

As to the passage at v. 9, there the principle here vainly contended for by Mr. Horne will entirely apply: for there we have certainly no citation at all, nor probably any reference to a book then extant, but merely an allusion to a circumstance recorded in the Traditions of the Jewish Doctors. And the Apostle is no more answerable for the truth of the supposed occurrence, than St. Stephen was answerable for the truth of certain matters brought forward in his Speech to the Jews, and resting on the tradition of their own Doctors. In short, the Apostle merely adverts to this traditionary story (without vouching for its truth) as a popular illustration of the weighty maxim, not to speak evil of dignities: and that from the example of the Archangel, who did not venture to rail even at Satan: and which was probably in the mind of the Rabbi who formed the Jewish maxim, “that it is not lawful for a man to use railing language even against wicked spirits.”

As to the alterations here supposed to have been made by the Apostle, it is not certain that he made any at all; for we have not the original, but only an Ethiopic version. And if that Version was made with no greater exactness than the Ethiopic Version of the New Testament (and we can hardly expect so much), it is slender evidence as to what was in the original Greek, or rather Syro-Chaldee. Πάντας was probably not an addition of the Apostle, but rather the word had been inadvertently passed over (as seeming not essential to the sense) by the Translator, who did not perceive the strength and beauty of the antithesis. As to πάντων for αὐτῶν, so far from being an alteration of the Apostle, the αὐτῶν, if it were in the Ethiopic Translator's original, was probably an error of the transcriber for πάντων, which is required by the context; for the point of the warning turns upon the word all, as in Ps. xix. 17, “the wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget God;” and 2 Thess. ii. 12. ἵνα κριθῶσι πάντες οἱ μὴ πιστεύσαντες τῇ ἀληθείᾳ. The writer meant to say that judgment and condemnation would be given against all such sinners; that all their words as well as works would be brought into judgment, at the shortly impending advent of the Lord.

— ἀγίαις μυριάσιν.] This, for μυρ. ἀγ., is found in almost all the best MSS. and early Editions, and adopted by almost every Editor from Wets. downwards.

— ἀσεβείας αὐτῶν ὧν ἡσέβ.] This is not well rendered in E. V., “ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed;” which introduces a tautology not to be found in the original. Our Translators here, as often, followed the Vulgate, when they should have followed (if any Version) the Pesch. Syr., “opera omnia quæ impie fecerunt.” It is plain that τὰ ἔργα ἀσεβείας ἀσεβεῖν is equivalent to ἀσέβειαν ἀσεβεῖν; an idiom very frequent in the Classical writers, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 413, 415.

16. γογγυσταὶ] i. e. murmurers and censurers of their superiors, sparing no dignity. Μεμφίμ. may be literally rendered fault-finders, or grumblers, of which character a spirited sketch is given by Theophrastus. The words κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας α. πορ. are usually understood as descriptive of their lusts. But, from what precedes, they should seem to denote persons who care not for the opinion of others, nay, are little solicitous about the favour of God, and follow their own impulses only, the προπετεῖς of 2 Tim. iii. 4. Λαλεῖ ὑπερρογκα, sub. ῥήματα, i. e. as Hesych. explains, ὑπέρμετρα. I would compare Æschyl. Theb. 438. ἐς οὐρανὸν Πέμπει—κυμαίνοντ’ ἐπι.

The Apostle alludes to their boastful speeches, having, I think, in mind 2 Pet. ii. 18. ὑπερρογκα γὰρ ματαιότητος φεγγόμενοι.

— Θαυμάζοντες πρόσωπα.] An expression occurring in Levit. xix. 15. (and so θαυμάζειν in the Classical writers), denoting to pay court to the great or wealthy, ὠφελείας χάριν, “for what they could get.” So Thucyd. i. 28. φίλους ποιεῖσθαι οὓς οὐ βούλονται, ὠφελείας ἔνεκα.

17. The Epistle, as usual, concludes with exhortation. In τῶν ῥημάτων—ἀποστόλων there is doubtless a reference to 2 Pet. iii. 2, 3; but probably also to Acts xx. 29, 30. 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1. 2 Thess. ii. 3—12.

18. By ἐμπαίκται, as at 2 Pet. iii. 3, are denoted scuffers,—men who made a jest of serious and vital religion, and especially of the doctrines of the advent of Christ to judgment, and the resurrection of the dead. Τῶν ἀσεβειῶν has the force of the adjective ἀσεβεῖς; and we may, with Laurmann, take the whole phrase as at v. 16, understanding it of a self-willed, conceited spirit, that which follows its own fancies and whims. So that there will be no occasion to adopt the conjecture of Bentley, ἀσελγειῶν. It was the common interpretation, not the common reading.

that wanted rectifying. The epithet ἀσεβεῖς is surely applicable to such persons; since such a spirit could not but lead them to pervert the Gospel, and corrupt it by impure admixtures of Gentile Philosophy or Jewish Tradition.

19. οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἀποδ. Render, "[Aye,] these are the men who [now] are exciting separation and causing schism, both in their own case and others." Ἀποδιορίζω is a very rare word, properly denoting, in a geometrical sense, to separate any space, by fixing its limits, from another space." Two examples are referred to by Boissonade in Steph. Thes. The ἑαυτοὺς, found in the common text, is, no doubt, from the margin, being absent from almost all the MSS., Versions, and early Editions; and it has been justly cancelled by Bengel, Wets., and Matthæi, though retained by Griesb. On ψυχικοὶ see Note on 1 Cor. ii. 14.

20. The Apostle now resumes his exhortations, and bids them not only beware of the artifices of the false teachers, but study to advance in religious knowledge and practice; and, to ensure the success of their endeavours, he enjoins them to pray in the Holy Spirit. (Laurmann.)

— ἐποικοδομοῦντες.] On the force of the metaphor, see Notes on Acts xx. 32, and 1 Cor. iii. 10, and compare 2 Pet. i. 5. Ἀγιωτάτῃ, i. e. which was intended to make men holy. Ἐν Πνεύμ. ἀγ., for διὰ Πνεύμ. ἁγίου, "by the aid and influence of the Holy Spirit." The best comment on this is Rom. viii. 26.

21. ἑαυτοὺς—τηρ. The sense is, "Keep yourselves and each other." Ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ signifies (as Benson and Carpz. explain) "in love towards God." Προσδεχ. τ. ἑλ. τ. κ., "expecting and hoping for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ [to bring you] unto salvation."

22, 23. To the right understanding of these obscure verses, it is necessary to attend to the sense of ἑαυτοὺς ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ τηρήσατε before laid down; and we may paraphrase thus: "[And in the exercise of this vigilant exertion to keep each in the love of God, remember that ye are not to abandon all those who seem to wander from the true faith; no!] some treat compassionately and mildly, making a distinction [between those and the obstinately perverse]; others [even if the danger seem great, and the chance of saving them small, yet] anxiously strive to save; snatching them, as it were, out of the fire:" a proverbial expression, on which see Note on 1 Cor. iii. 13. The Apostle, it seems, intended that some exertions should be made to save even some of the false teachers themselves. And, as the οὓς μὲν ἐλεεῖτε may respect the people seduced,—so may the οὓς δὲ denote some of the seducers, to whom the words ἐν φόβῳ σώζετε are very suitable. The sense of these words is, I conceive, not, "terrify with denunciations of Divine vengeance," as most Commentators explain; but, "anxiously strive to save," implying circumspection and exertion; as Phil. ii. 12. See Ps. ii. 11. and my Note on Thucyd. ii. 37, 11. I would compare Liban. Orat. i. de vitâ suâ: Φόβος ἠναγκάζετο πατέρας, τοὺς αὐτῶν καλεῖν παρ' ἑαυτοῦς, ὥσπερ ἐκ πυρὸς. where, I conjecture, should be read ἠναγκάζε τοὺς π. υἱούς α.; for υἱούς expressed in abbreviation and τοὺς might easily be confounded.

— μισοῦντες καὶ τὸν, &c.] So Barnabas Epist. mentions as a saying of our Lord: "Resistamus omni iniquitati, et odio habeamus eam."

The closing words, μισοῦντες καὶ—χιτῶνα are best explained by Wolf and Benson to mean, "Let, however, your endeavours to reform them be made with great caution; be careful to avoid being yourselves corrupted by their society, and show a hatred of whatever partakes, in the slightest degree, of iniquity and sin." There is, I conceive, partly an allusion to the command of the Jewish law, not to touch any thing unclean, and partly to the caution showed in avoiding all contact even with the clothes of persons who have any infectious disease.

24, 25. With the noble and sublime doxology which concludes this fine Epistle, compare similar ones at Rom. xvi. 27. Eph. v. 27. Col. i. 22. 1 Tim. iii. 3. Ἀπταίστους is for ἀπροσκόπους or ἀππάτους, stumbling or falling. Σωτήρ is here applied to God the Father, as at 1 Tim. ii. 3. Tit. i. 3. iii. 4. The words διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χρ. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, added in some MSS., and inserted in the text by Griesbach and most recent Editors, may have arisen from the margin, and been derived from Rom. xv. 26. Or the clause may possibly have been omitted propter homœoteleuton ἡμῶν—ἡμῶν. And this would the more easily happen, if the words in question formed one line of the ancient uncial MSS. Yet I cannot venture to insert it, until I see stronger MS. authority than has hitherto been adduced.

ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙΣ

ΙΩΑΝΝΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΘΕΟΛΟΓΟΥ.

I. ἈΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙΣ ἸΗΣΟΥ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ, ἣν ἔδωκεν ἡ αὐτῇ ὁ Θεός, δείξαι τοῖς δούλοις αὐτοῦ, ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι ἐν

Of this Book, which is universally allowed to be the most sublime of all those contained in the N. T., the authenticity (namely, that it is a genuine production of St. John) was almost universally admitted in the first two centuries; and if doubts were entertained in the third, they were soon removed; and the origin of them is, with reason, ascribed to the well-meant, but misguided zeal of some fanatical Expositors. If, too, it was, in the early ages, judged not suitable to be read in Churches, that was not from any doubt of its authenticity, but from its very mysterious character. The learned are generally agreed in supposing these Revelations to have been communicated A. D. 95 or 96, in the Isle of Patmos (as we find from i. 6.), whither the Apostle had been banished by the persecuting Emperor Domitian. Though some, as Prof. Lee, are of opinion that the Revelations were made before the destruction of Jerusalem, and before the writing of St. John's Gospel. See the Professor's Exposition of the Book of the Revelation, appended to his valuable dissertations on Prophecy.

From the phraseology of this Book being often such as recedes from all rules of Greek usage, though reconcileable with those of Hebrew, it is not without reason, that some eminent Critics, and amongst the rest, Bp. Middleton, have supposed the Apocalypse to have been originally written in Hebrew. And the learned Prelate well supports this from the use of καὶ ἐτελέσθη at x. 7., for τελεσθήσεται: an idiom formed on the Vau Conversivum of the Hebrew, by which past tenses are converted to Futures. It is justly remarked by Bp. Middleton, that "if this theory of a Hebrew original could be established, it would relieve us from all the difficulties attending the objection, that the style of the Apocalypse should so differ from that employed by St. John in his Gospel and Epistles." The above, however, is but an hypothesis, and cannot be admitted without the support of historical testimony. Not to say that it would be difficult to imagine why it should have been originally written in Hebrew, being intended almost entirely for the use of Jewish converts who understood Greek, or Gentile converts who knew nothing of Hebrew. Besides, by Hebrew must be meant Syro-Chaldee; and there is no proof that the Syro-Chaldee had ever the idiom of the Vau Conversive. It is most probable that the Apostle put down the substance of the various revelations, as they were imparted to him, in the Syro-Chaldee; and afterwards expressed them more fully in Greek, for the use of the Christian world. Though what the Apostle wrote in Greek, we may suppose he perpetually thought first in Hebrew, or Syro-Chaldee. It is obvious that to one whose mind was filled with such high and sublime conceptions, the use of his vernacular tongue would be far better adapted to the free expression of thoughts which at first would be cramped and confined by a foreign language: though they would afterwards admit of being transfused and more regularly expressed in that language.

On the scope and design of this Book considerable difference of opinion exists. See the elaborate statements in Mr. Horne's Introduction. Upon the whole, I agree with Dean Woodhouse in considering "that scheme of general interpretation as the best which regards the Apocalypse as a prophetic history of the fate and fortunes of the Christian Church, from the time when it was written, to the latest period of the world: which are foretold by the means of symbols and emblematical representations." Yet no competent, and at the same time unprejudiced, judge will deny that, after all the labour bestowed on its explication, no Book of the N. T. has so defied all attempts to settle its interpretation; and especially to ascertain the purport of its prophetic representations. What has increased the difficulty is, that the textus receptus here is in a far worse state than that of any other Book in the N. T., or indeed of the Old: and yet, as Matthiæ justly observes, "Codicum ratio habenda, non mysteriorum; primò enim constitnenda lectio, deinde enucleanda sunt mysteria."

Hence it is no wonder that the common text should be in so indifferent a state,—seeing that it was derived by Erasmus from only one MS., and that a very bad one, not only mutilated in some places, but every where corrupted from the Greek Commentaries of Arethas and Andreas. And the errors of that MS. were (as Matthæi observes) multiplied by corruptions introduced from the Latin Versions, as also by the conjectures, or rather corruptions, of Erasmus himself. In after ages, much was done towards the establishment of a pure text by Bengel, Wetstein, Matth., and Griesb., whose emendations amount to nearly as many as on the whole of the Epistles together. These I have, in most cases, seen reason to adopt, especially as they are in general supported by the authority of the invaluable Editio Princeps: but, considering the confined extent of the present work, and that it has already far exceeded the prescribed limits, I have been obliged to forbear, for the most part, assigning (as I had before done) reasons in justification of the emendations, adopted from the very eminent Editors above mentioned,—especially as the authorities, in MSS., Versions, early Editions, and Critics, are in most instances nearly the same. To have assigned reasons would necessarily have required considerable space. Indeed, as Bp. Middl., has justly observed, “the task of the Critic throughout this book scarcely yields in difficulty to that of the Expositor”; with this difference, however, that the fulfilment of prophecy will gradually dissipate the obscurities which perplex the one, while those which bewilder the other, may possibly never be elucidated.” For the cogent reason above mentioned, I shall also be obliged to be brief on the Expository part; and must systematically decline any detailed explanation of the obscure, and, in many cases, yet unaccomplished prophecies of this mysterious Book. To have done any tolerable justice at once to the Critical, Philological, and Prophetic-expository departments, would have demanded a large volume; though I trust I may, at some future period, by the Divine help and blessing, be enabled to supply so great a desideratum, as an Edition of the Apocalypse on a scale in some measure commensurate with the importance of this Divine Book. For the present, I must content myself with presenting as correct a text as the use of all the critical materials extant will enable me to do, and generally noticing any differences in the readings adopted, respectively in the standard Texts of Bengel, Wets., Matth., and Griesb. In all doubtful cases the Text of Matthæi has been, for good reasons, preferred. In settling the punctuation (which is of no small consequence to the interpretation, and is in the different Editions very various, and often vicious) very great pains will be found to have been bestowed. And this sedulous attention to purity of text, and correctness of punctuation, together with a few Critical and Philological Annotations, mostly original, and a few Expository Notes on things as well as words, chiefly extracted from the best Commentators, whose names are subjoined, must for the present suffice.

C. I. 1. ἐν τάχει i. e. in a comparatively short period; which measured by the language of Scripture, wherein a thousand years are as one day, may denote any thing of by no means speedy fulfilment; though that may speedily begin to be fulfilled. Ἐσήμανε, intimated, made known, showed. The construction is harsh, and may be resolved either thus, καὶ ἀποστείλας (Θεὸς or Ἰησοῦς) scil. τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν ἐσήμανεν διὰ τ. ἀ., or thus: καὶ ἀποστείλας (τὸν ἀγγέλου αὐτοῦ) ἐσήμανε διὰ τοῦτο, &c.

2. ἐμαρτύρησε] “hath [herein] solemnly testified and recorded.” Τε, which is, in all the MSS., Versions, and early Editions, not found, has been cancelled by Beng., Wets., Matth., and Griesb. It was inserted, Heinr. thinks, to soften the harshness of the apposition, having the sense even. Yet may not the true reading be ὅσα γε εἶδε? This would yield an excellent sense; and the two words are perpetually confounded. With ὅσα εἶδε we may compare 1 John i. 1.

3. ὁ ἀναγινώσκων καὶ οἱ ἀκ.] This has reference to the ancient custom, when books were scarce, for some one to read to a considerable number of others, who listened to what was read. Τῇρ. here denotes the keeping in the heart what was read (see Luke ii. 51.) so as to observe the injunctions therein. Ὁ καιρὸς ἐγγύς, “the time [of their being fulfilled, or beginning to be fulfilled] is near.”

4. ἀπὸ τοῦ ὃ ὢν, &c.] There would seem no great authority for the τοῦ, which is in very many MSS. not found. Yet the reading Θεοῦ, found in two-thirds of the MSS., and edited by Matth., but injudiciously, as being an evident gloss, appears to have been founded on it. And considering the great antiquity of Θεοῦ, and that the τοῦ must be still more ancient, it would seem to be genuine, but that it might be suspected of having been inserted to soften the harshness of the solecism existing without it. Yet I confess, I see not how the Article can here be dispensed with. For though ὃ ὢν and especially ὃ ἦν might be used, like I AM in Exod. iii. 14, as an indeclinable title of JEHOVAH, (the Hebrew not admitting of inflection in the oblique cases,) yet the Article would not be the less necessary. Thus we could say in English, Moses was sent by the I AM, but not, with propriety, by I AM, though our authorized Version has this.

The words following ἀπὸ τῶν ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων, &c. are, as Scott observes, generally interpreted of “the Divine Spirit,” with respect to the abundance, sufficiency, and variety of his gifts, graces, and operations; and in relation to “the seven Churches,” with each of which, and all others, the One and self-same Spirit dwelt, as the Fountain of life, grace, and peace. Others, however, as Grot., regard the ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων as the same with ἐπτά ἄγγελοι mentioned in Tob. xii. 15, as presenting the prayers of the Saints to the throne of grace; or rather, Abp. Newc. supposes, the seven ministering Spirits whom St. John saw discharging separate offices in subsequent revelations made to him. Yet it should hardly seem that any created spirits would be comprehended in the solemn benediction of the Father and the Son which follows. Hence the former interpretation seems preferable, which is fully and ably maintained by the learned Wolfius, and before him by Poole in his Synopsis; from whose statements it is evident that this was the way in which the expression was understood by the ancient Commentators, and the generality of the modern ones to nearly the middle of the eighteenth century. Since which time the foreign Critics, for the most part, have considered the expression as denoting the virtutes or attributes of the Supreme Being. Such a sense, however, is very vague; and, if the reader consults the notes in Poole's Synopsis, he will see that there is no reason to desert the ancient and usual interpretation, which is supported by Dean Woodhouse, Mr. Scott, and Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test. iii. 104, a few MSS., and cancelled by most Editors, was doubtless derived. In the expression ὁ ἄρχων—γῆς we have a designation of his Messiahship,—the Messiah being, as Commentators remark, called Elioun, most high, in Ps. lxxxix. 27.

5, 6. ὁ μάρτυς.] This seems to be another solecism, instead of τοῦ μάρτυρος, though some put a stop at Χριστοῦ, and connect ὁ μάρτυς with what follows, as if it was τῷ μάρτυρι—τῷ ἀγαπῶντι—αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα. (Burton.) This, however, can by no means be admitted. I have here pointed, with Abp. Newc., (and before him Tyndale,) as I conceive the context requires,—namely, by placing a period after γῆς. As to the seeming grammatical inaccuracy at ὁ μάρτυς, I am inclined to regard the words up to γῆς, with the Eclectic Reviewer (Dec. 1832), “as forming a separate clause, (and in some degree parenthetical,) containing a proclamation as it were of the divine and sovereign titles of the Messiah.”

—ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστός] i. e. worthy of implicit confidence. A Witness he was, as coming into the world to bear witness to the truth, and as revealing all that he had received from the Father for that purpose. See John iii. 11. 32;

viii. 14—16; xviii. 37. On πρωτότ., ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν see Col. i. 15 & 18, from whence the ἐκ here (only found in a few MSS., and cancelled by most Editors) was doubtless derived. In ὁ ἄρχων τῶν βασιλείων τῆς γῆς we have a designation of his Messiahship; the Messiah being, as Commentators remark, called Elioun, most high, in Ps. lxxxix. 27. It should seem also that the Apostle had in mind the substance of the second Psalm, where the Messiah is designated as the “Ruler of the kings of the earth.” The datives ἀγαπ. and λούσαντι are connected with what follows, αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα. A sublime burst, in which, (as Mr. Scott says,) “animated with a view of the glory of his beloved Lord, and contrasting it with the vastness of his condescension and the depth of his self-abasement, he breaks out into praises to Him who loveth them,” &c. Καὶ ἐποίησεν, for τῷ ποιῆσαντι, by Hebraism.

—βασιλείαν.] Vulg. βασιλεῖς καὶ, no doubt from a marginal explanation; as is plain from Andreas Cret. (the most ancient Greek Commentator on this book) and the Scholiasts. Almost all the Editors are agreed in adopting this reading; and with reason; since it is supported by strong evidence, both external and internal; and in its very harshness it bears the stamp of truth. Βασιλεία here means, not kingdom, but people: τῷ Θεῷ, which follows, being here supplied. So in Wisd. x. 10, we have βασιλ. Θεοῦ to denote what St. Paul, Heb. xii. 22, calls the “innumerable company of saints and angels,”—the πανήγυρις καὶ ἐκκλησία τῶν πρωτοτόκων, &c. These are supposed to constitute a holy state seated in the heavenly Jerusalem, under the government, not of man, but of God. On this verse compare 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. 1 Cor. iv. 8; vi. 2, 3.

7. It is plain from this verse, that the glory and power in v. 6. are ascribed to Christ. (Burton.) Compare Dan. vii. 13. Καὶ οἵτινες, “even they who.” Ἐξεκέντησαν. See John xix. 37. Even they, it is implied, were to acknowledge his Majesty. Καὶ κόψ., &c. See Zech. xii. 10—14.

8. ἐγὼ εἰμι—ἐρχόμενος.] The alterations here made in the text are supported by the highest authority of MSS. and Critics. With respect to the sense, it is very applicable to God the Father, as most recent Commentators interpret (to which purpose similar expressions are cited from the Classical and Rabbinical writers); but the context (see v. 7, and 17, 18; and ii. 8.) plainly shows that it is applied to God the Son, who, indeed, applies those titles to himself, xxi. 6; xxii. 13; which fully establishes the Deity of Christ.

9. The writer now proceeds to mention the manner in which he had received the revelations that he was about to deliver. By τῇ θλίψει καὶ ὑπομονῇ Ἰ. Χρ. are denoted afflictions and troubles to be endured for the sake, and in the cause of Christ; and βασιλ. intimates that he is to be partaker with them in the kingdom prepared for them, and alluded to supra v. 6. There is (as Heinrich points out) a double Hendiadys; and βασιλ. may be joined either with the preceding or with the following word. The latter method is, I think, preferable; but it may be best to regard the whole as a Synchysis (not a little harsh) for ἐν τῇ θλίψει καὶ ὑπομονῇ Ἰ. Χρ. καὶ βασιλ. αὐτοῦ. I am, however, inclined to suspect that St. John wrote ἐν τῇ θλίψει καὶ ὑπομονῇ καὶ βασιλ. Ἰ. Χρ. Be that as it may, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ is a genitive of similitude, as Gal. xiv. 17. The best comment on this passage is 2 Tim. ii. 12. εἰ ὑπομένομεν, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν. See also Rom. viii. 17.

10. ἐγενόμην ἐν Πνεύματι. i. e. the Spirit presented a vision to my mind. See Doddr. on iv. 2. (Newc.) Equivalent to ἐν ἐκστάσει γενέσθαι at Acts x. 10; xxii. 17, for ἔκστασις πίπτει εἰς ἐμὲ, opposed to ἐν σώματι, 2 Cor. xii. 2. (Heinr.)

11. τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω. i. e. the First and the Last; as v. 17, and xxii. 13. See Is. xlv. 16. This is supposed to have been borrowed from Jewish phraseology; but I have often met with it in the Classical writers; e. g. Theocr. Idyll. xvii. 3, where king Ptolemy is called ἀνδρῶν ἐν πρώτοις καὶ πύματος καὶ μέσος. And Orpheus, Hymn xiv. 7. Σεῦ—ἀρχὴ πάντων, πάντων τε τελετῇ. and frag. vi. 9. Ζεὺς πρῶτος ἐγένετο—Ζεὺς ὑστάτος. meaning an end supreme over all the various orders of beings. So Butherus in Stobæi Eclog. Phys. T. i. p. 14. Heer. τὸ ἐν οὐσίᾳ καὶ νοῦς, καὶ πλήρωμα ἀρχὴν γάρ, καὶ μέσον, καὶ πέραν ἔχον.

12. βλέπειν τὴν φωνήν.] The full sense is: "I turned about [to discover] who it was that had uttered the voice." Ἐπτά λ. χρ. One among the many allusions to the Jewish worship; there being in the Temple a golden lamp with seven branches. These are, as appears from v. 20, a symbolical designation of the seven Churches. It is well observed by Iaspis, that the mode of teaching by emblems was very usual in ancient times. For ἐλάλησε, many MSS. have ἐλάλει, which is edited by Matth.

13. ὅμοιον ὕψος ἀνδρῶν.] Most recent Commentators, arguing from the absence of the Article, render "a son of man;" i. e. a human being. Yet the absence of the Article will not prove this to be the sense intended. And though Dean Woodhouse adopts this interpretation, and ingeniously accounts for the expression being used of Jesus Christ; yet there is no reason to abandon the opinion of the ancient and most modern Commentators, that it means the Son of Man. See Note on Heb. i. 2; the Article being implied, though not expressed, since the title corresponds to that at Dan. vii. 13, where the Sept. closely follows the Hebrew, which could not express the Article. See Bp. Middl. Πρὸς τοῖς μαστοῖς, for περὶ τὰ στήθη, "about the breasts." At ποδήρη supply χιτῶνα, denoting a robe descending to the feet, such as was worn by persons of dignity, especially priests, Exod. xxviii. 27. And so the word is used in Josephus and Philo.

14. ἡ δὲ κεφαλὴ—πυρός.] All characteristics of a Divine nature, and suited to the Messiah. Comp. Ezek. viii. 2, and Dan. vii. 9; x. 6. By this imagery is denoted shining splendour; and, therefore, the whiteness is not to be understood of age.

15. χαλκολιβάνῳ.] A word no where else occurring, and of which the derivation is so uncertain, that even that cannot decide its sense; nor are the learned agreed, whether it denotes smelting brass, (from χαλκός and λείβω or κλίβανος, or χαλκός and λίβανος, Mount Libanus,) as Hesiod Scut. 112, describes Hercules as having feet of ὀρείχαλκος,—a sort of fine brass more valuable than gold. Be that as it may, the expression happily designates the irresistible power and might of Christ, as the φωνὴ ὑδ. πολλῶν is a most noble image of his grandeur and majesty.

16. In his having in his hand (or rather on his hand) seven stars, there is an allusion to the custom of wearing many rings on the fingers, each studded with a diamond, or other sparkling gem. By these stars, or brilliants, are (as we find from v. 20.) designated the angels or bishops of the Seven Churches; intimating, not only that they were to be burning and shining lights (as the planets in the night; see ii. 12. and Note); but that when really such by the faithful discharge of their sacred office, they were exceedingly precious in the sight of God. Ρομφ. διστ. Metaphorically denoting the word of God, the doctrine of the Gospel. See Luke ii. 35. Heb. iv. 12. compared with Is. xi. 4: xlix. 2. 2 Thess. ii. 8 & 12, also Dan. x. 5 & 6; vii. 9. Ezek. viii. 2.

18. τὰς κλεῖς—ᾄδου] i. e. “power over death and the dead, to unlock the gates of Hades and make my disciples triumph over it, by giving them both life and salvation.” On the expression ᾄδης see Dodd. in loco, and especially Prof. Stuart in his Exegetical Essays on several words relating to future punishment, p. 128—135, who shows that in the N. T. ᾄδης signifies, not hell, but the region of the dead, the domains of death, or of him who hath the power of death, Satan. He observes, that “in the Apocalypse the writer not only represents Hades as the region of the dead, but Death as being king of it, and governing those that dwell therein. He then assigns the following as the general sense of the words ἔχω τὰς κλεῖς τοῦ ᾄδου καὶ τοῦ θανάτου, “Mine is the power to unlock the gates of Hades, to open the doors of this prison from which none could escape. I have entered the region of Hades, (compare Acts ii. 17, 31,) and am come forth living; yea, in possession of everlasting life.”

19. οὖν.] This has been wrongly passed over in our Translation; though, as Grot. and Woodh. observe, the particle has great force.

—ᾧ εἰσι, καὶ ᾧ μέλλει γ. μ. τ.] “The subject-matter which the Prophet is commissioned to deliver, is divided into two parts: 1. the scene at that time before him, with the addresses to the Churches, revealing to them, and commenting upon their present internal state; 2. the events which were to happen to the Church universal in future times.” (Woodh.)

20. τὸ μυστ.] The mystical meaning: the meaning concealed under figurative resemblances. (Woodhouse.) See xvii. 7. In ἄγγελοι τῶν ἑπ. ἐκκλ. there is an allusion to the Jewish economy, wherein the priests or rulers of the synagogues were styled by this name, as bringing the commands of God to the people, and conveying their prayers to God. Abp. Newc., however, explains ἄγγελοι to denote either the ministering Spirits employed in the invisible government of these Churches; or their visible governors who presided over them.

II. In this and the next Chapter are contained the seven messages to the seven Churches of Asia, and certain predictions, whose fulfilment is verified by the testimony of Ecclesiastical history, and attested by the present state of these Churches as described by Mr. Arundell, in his lately published most interesting work (in 2 vols. 8vo.) containing an account of his visits (during two journeys) to the seven Churches; which, it is singular, are mentioned supra v. 11. in the very order in which any one would take them, who intended to visit them in rotation, beginning at Ephesus. These messages are both admonitory and consolatory, and though immediately addressed, as the case might require, to the seven Churches (viz. through the medium of their presidents, who represented them: see Ezek. xxv. 3; xxvii. 3; xxviii. 2; xxix. 2; xxxi. 2,) were, nevertheless, meant for the benefit of the Church Catholic in all succeeding ages.

1. τῷ ἄγγέλῳ, &c.] By the ἄγγελος is meant the presiding minister of the Ephesian Church, whether bishop, or by whatever other name called. This name was borrowed from the synagogue, where the chief officer was so called, and also Episcopus. The phrase τάδε λέγει is said to be formed on the Heb. וַיֹּאמֶר כֵּן so often found in the prophetic books of the O. T. It may rather be said to be Oriental in its character, being the form used in the East, as a preface to orders given by monarchs, or to Epistles on general business. So in Thucyd. i. 129. Xerxes begins his letter to Pausanias with: “Ὡδε λέγει Βασιλεὺς Ξέρξης Πανσανίαν. Thus the phrase is in the O. T. often used by kings in the very same manner. So 1 Kings xx. 2; xxii. 27. 2 Kings ix. 18; xviii. 19.

— ὁ κρατῶν.] Render: “who holds in charge.” Ὁ περιπατῶν—χρυσῶν. This figuratively represents Christ as walking amidst the Church for observation as well as support and direction.

2. οἶδα τὰ ἔργα σου] “I know [and approve of] thy works,” namely, of faith and love. The next words are exetigical:—even, or especially, thy labour and patient endurance [of afflictions]; though there may be a Hendiadys for τὴν ἐν τῷ κόπῳ ὑπομονήν. Οὐ δύνη βαστ., “thou canst not bear with, endure.” This expression, and ἐβάστασας, οἶδα τὸν κόπον σου, and οὐ κεκοπίακας, are antithetically opposed to each other; and their full import is explained by Woodhouse.

— ἐπειράσω] “thou hast put to the proof,” or trial. So 1 John iv. 3. δοκιμάζετε τὰ πνεύματα. The reading adopted at v. 3. is found in the best MSS., and has been edited by Griesb., Matth., and others, and had been preferred by Mill and Wets. The common reading is καὶ ἐβάστασας, καὶ ὑπομονὴν ἔχεις, καὶ διὰ τὸ ὄνομά μου κεκοπ. καὶ οὐ κέκμηκας, where κέκ. plainly arose from the glossographers.

4. ἔχω κατὰ σοῦ.] See Note on Acts xix. 38. Τὴν ἀγάπην—ἀφῆκας, “thou remittest [part] of thy first love [to me and obedience to my religion.]” A beautiful figure. See more in Scott.

5. τὰ πρῶτα ἔργα] for τὰ ἔργα τῆς πρώτης ἀγάπης. By κινήσω τὴν λ. is meant, I will remove thee from being a Church, by taking away the preaching of the Gospel. A most alarming and rousing denunciation. See Scott's Note and Obs.

6. ἀλλὰ τοῦτο ἔχεις, &c.] “but thou hast this [praise]—that of hating the practices of the Nicolaitans,” who were a branch of the Gnostics, and held it to be lawful to eat meats offered to idols, and practised fornication. See Woodhouse. Μισεῖς, i. e. strongly disapproves of, as in Joseph. Bell. i. 6, 4. κατηντιβόλουν (scil. αὐτὸν) μισῶσαι τὴν Ἀριστοβούλου βίαν.

7. τῷ νικῶντι] i. e. who overcometh [the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil.] The words φαγεῖν ἐκ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς ζωῆς, &c. contain a figurative designation of that eternal life, which was lost by our first parents, and restored by Christ. This life is here compared to Paradise, in order to intimate its felicity, and denominated the Paradise of God to denote the heavenly Paradise. So Jalkut Rubeni, cited by Schoettgen: “Deus—animam educit in paradisu, cique gustandum præbet arborem vitæ.” Ἐξύλου, by a usage derived from the Sept., denotes

8. ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος.] Periphrasis Messiae, ex cap. i. 17, 18. huic potissimum loco apta, ubi id agebatur, ut solamen adhiberetur Smernensibus, probis et castis, sed Judaeorum malevolentia et invidia lacessitis. (Heinr.)

9. καὶ τὴν ἑλ. καὶ τὴν. πτ.] “even thy,” &c. See v. 2. 1 Cor. i. 26. 2 Cor. viii. 2. Πλούσιος, i. e. spiritually rich. See Matth. vi. 20, and 2 Cor. vi. 10. By τῶν λεγόντων—εἰσὶν it is denied that they are Jews in the true and spiritual sense; they dishonour the name by adopting it. See Rom. ii. 24. and Rom. i. 28, 29. By βλασφ., &c. is meant, they yet claimed to be exclusively the people of God, but are the synagogue, or people, of Satan; συναγ. being for λαός, as the Heb. הק for עם in Levit. xvi. 17. Compare John viii. 39—45. Why they are so called is well shown by Ep. Bull Def. Fid. p. 178.

10. ὁ διάβολος.] Namely, by his instruments, the devilish Jewish persecutors. See John viii. 44. “ἵνα πειρασθῇτε,” “that ye may be put to the proof, and purified [in the furnace of affliction].” Ἡμερῶν δέκα. Some take these days for years (as usual in prophecy); others, to denote a very short space (as Gen. xxiv. 55. Num. xi. 19. Dan. i. 4. 1 Sam. xxv. 38.); which might be justified by history. See Daubuz and Newton, Τὸν στέφανον τ. ζ. See 1 Cor. ix. 25. James i. 12. 1 Pet. v. 4. On the point of Antiquities, see Horne’s Introd. iii. 227.

11. οὐ μὴ ἀδικηθῇ ἐκ, &c.] “shall by no means be hurt by the second death;” in other words, “he may be hurt even unto death by the malice of the Jews; but he shall not be hurt as regards the second death;” even the death, i. e.

perdition, of the soul. Comp. Matth. x. 28. That the gehenna implied in the loss of the soul is here meant, is plain from xx. 14. xxi. 8, where the second death is said to be the lake of fire.

12. τὴν ῥομφαίαν—ὀξεῖαν] i. e. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. 16, and i. 16. Heb. iv. 12. Heinr., however, thinks there is reference to the immediabile vulnus inflicted by the false teachers, and which required that the diseased flesh should be cut out with a knife or lancet.

13. κρατεῖς τὸ ὄνομά μου] i. e. adherest firmly to me and my religion. “Ὅπου ὁ θρόνος τ. Σ.,” “where is the seat of Satan;” so called from being, as we learn from Arethas, more given to idolatry (and consequently vice) than any other place in Asia. At ἐν αἷς Ἀντ. supply ἦν, which, or something equivalent, the writer probably intended to have expressed at the end of the sentence; but, from the length of the suspended clauses, omitted to do it. Μάρτυς μου ὁ πιστός should be rendered, with Newc., “faithful witness” (not martyr; for that would involve an incongruity). The phrase “faithful witness” often occurs in Scripture. See Ps. lxxix. 17. Prov. xiv. 5. Jer. xlii. 5. and supra i. 5. iii. 14. Antipas is supposed to have suffered martyrdom in the recent persecution under Dioclesian.

14. κρατοῦντας] “some who hold or maintain.” See Jude 10. Τὴν διδ. Βαλ., i. e. such doctrines as, like Balaam’s suggestion to Balak, breed iniquity among the people of God, by turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, which is in 2 Pet. ii. 10—15. and Jude 4. called the way or sinful course of Balaam. The next words advert to the points of similitude.

been justly adopted by Beng., Wets., Griesb., Matth., Tittm., and Vater.

16. ῥομφ. τ. στόμ.] See Note supra v. 12.

17. τῷ νικῶντι.] i. e. quantum in se, to him (as Prof. Lee explains) “who perseveres in the use of those weapons which are adapted to this warfare.” See Ephes. vi. 11—20. What follows, on giving him of the hidden manna and the white stone, may be regarded as a periphrasis of the simple idea of making him partaker of God's kingdom in heaven.

— τοῦ μάννα τ. κεκρ.] i. e. the bread of life in its spiritual sense, as indicated by our Lord at John iv. 26. seqq., of which the manna, hidden and laid up in the tabernacle, free from corruption, was a type; namely, the benefits derived to the faithful followers of Christ by the offering of his body, forgiveness of sins, and life everlasting. (Woodhouse.) See also John vi. 32—35. It was so far hidden that, as Schoettg. shows, it was never seen but by the High Priest. And the spiritual manna may be said to be hidden, as being enjoyed in the heart of the true Christian. So 1 Pet. iii. 4. ὁ κρυπτός τῆς καρδίας ἄνθρωπος.

— ψῆφον λευκὴν.] Namely, according to some, as a token of acquittal; in allusion to the white and black stones used at elections or trials; the former to denote acquittal, or approbation; the latter, condemnation, or rejection. According to others, it alludes to the white stone given as warrants for receiving the prize at the Grecian Games. See Lowman and Dodd. But I rather coincide in the opinion of Dr. Ward (Dissert. on passages of Scrip.), Heinrichs, and Prof. Lee, that there is an allusion to the tessera hospitalitatis used in ancient times, which were, as Prof. Lee observes, “a sort of carte blanche, entitling the person who showed it to ask for and receive what he might want.” On the point of Antiquities connected with this, see Horne's Introd. vol. iii. 415.

— ὄνομα καινόν.] The best Expositors agreed that this has reference to the Oriental custom of giving new names to persons advanced to great dignity; probably adopted from the favoured servants of God, as Abram and Jacob, having often new names bestowed on them, when placed in new circumstances. Thus is here designated high spiritual favour, that supreme felicity laid up in heaven for the righteous. “Ο οὐδεὶς ἔγνω—λαμβ. is well explained, with Newc., “at the time when it is given, secret and mysterious to all men but to him who receives it.”

18. ὁ ἔχων τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς—πυρός.] See Note at i. 14. So Eurip. Hec. 1255. πυρρός ἔχουσα δέσματα, where the Schol. explains by πυρώδεις ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχουσα.

19. καὶ τὰ—ἔσχατα πλείονα τῶν πρώτων.] The reverse of what is said of the Ephesians, v. 4., and of some at 2 Pet. ii. 20.

20. The alterations of the common reading in this verse and the next, are all founded on the strongest authority, and have been adopted by all the best Editors. Nevertheless, it is probable that λέγει, not λέγουσα, is the true reading. Many Critics and Editors, on the authority of several MSS., insert σοῦ after γυναῖκα. This, however, produces much incongruity; and the σοῦ was not unlikely to be inserted by the scribes; but that it should have been omitted by them is very improbable. Thus our common Version rightly renders woman, as also the Vulg. and Tertullian. By Jez. some female heresiarch seems to be meant; though by the expression may be designated such kind of persons under the character of the leader. See Woodhouse. This is supported by the opinion of Bp. Bull, Exam. p. 85, who thinks that by Jezebel is to be understood mystically the Gnostic Faction, whose monstrous doctrines “virginem Christi Ecclesiam, recens ab Apostolis ipsis deponatam, stupraverant.”

21, 22. In these verses fornication and adultery are interchanged; both denoting the spiritual fornication or adultery, of apostasy from the truth by heresy. Τοὺς μοιχ. μετ' αὐτῆς, i. e. those who hold her heretical doctrines.

ἔδωκα αὐτῇ χρόνον ἵνα μετανοήσῃ [ἐκ τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς] καὶ οὐ *θέλει μετανοῆσαι ἐκ τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς. —αὐτῆς.] Vulg. αὐτῶν. The "casting upon a bed," denotes afflicting with severe sickness, or pains and afflictions similar thereto, as a punishment of heresy. For βάλλειν ἐπὶ κλίνην, is, as Heinr. observes, a Syriac phrase to signify, "morbum immittere," 2 Sam. xiii. 5.: and persons confined to their bed by sickness are called κλινοπετεῖς.

23. ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ἱρευνῶν νεφ. καὶ κ.] A title peculiar to Deity, and here taken by the Son of God. See Scott. Ὑμῖν ἐκάστῳ, for ὑμῶν ἐκάστῳ.

24. ὅσοι—ἔχουσι] for ὅσοι ἔχετε, by an idiom common in the prophetic style. By τοῖς λοιποῖς are meant the [great] number which remained, when separated from the bad. Τὴν διδ. τ., "this doctrine," namely, on the lawfulness of eating idol meats and of adultery. At οἵτινες—Σατ. there is a repetition of the sentiment, with a substitution for διδ. of a phrase expressing the nature of the doctrines in question, and formed (as appears from the ὡς λέγουσι) on a favourite phrase of the professors of them. They called their doctrines βᾶθη τοῦ Θεοῦ (a phrase perhaps borrowed from St. Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 10.), "the deep mysteries of God." But our Lord calls such mysteries of iniquity, the deep mysteries of Satan. Οὐ βαλῶ—βάρος· πλὴν ὃ ἔχ., &c. The full sense (expressed with extreme brevity) seems to be this: "I will lay no other injunction, except what ye have already received [from my ministers]; (see Acts xv. 28.) that that faith, which ye have, ye hold fast till I come,"—i. e. till the day of judgment, or of death, as being tantamount to it.

26—28. To perseverance in the faith of Christ and in the works arising thence, is promised "power over the nations," i. e. over the yet un-converted Gentiles. See Matt. xix. 28. compared with Dan. vii. 22. 27. And this, in the verse following, is explained to be the same power which the Saviour himself had received over them, and which is expressed in words nearly resembling those prophetic of Christ, in the second Psalm. (Woodhouse.) The meaning is, that he who overcometh the world shall participate in the blessings of that spiritual kingdom of Christ, which shall ultimately prevail over the idolatry and wickedness of the heathen nations. (Holden.) Others, as Daubuz and Newc., understand ἐξουσίαν of an earthly dominion over the unconverted nations, when Christ shall reign on earth. But it should rather seem only to denote advantage over the heathen, by being admitted into heaven: while they are figuratively broken in pieces like a potter's vessel, by being consigned to utter destruction. See also Scott. The quotation is as nearly from the Sept. of Ps. ii. 9., as the application of the passage will permit. The anacoluthon in ὁ νικῶν δώσω αὐτῷ is frequent in Scripture, and also found in the Classical writers. See Glass Phil. S. p. 446. In δώσω—πρωϊνόν Expositors are not agreed on the reference in ἀστέρα. Since Christ, xxii. 16., calls himself the bright morning star, some (as Woodhouse and Burton) assign the same sense here, q. d. "that he will give himself, i. e. his light and truth." It is, however, the general opinion of learned Commentators, that the sense is, "I will give him glories of which that star is an emblem" (Dan. xii. 3.), i. e. (in the words of Scott) the ineffable glory with which he will invest his victorious disciples, in the presence and enjoyment of him their Lord and Saviour, and in conformity to his glory.

2. τὰ λοιπὰ] i. e. the remaining principles of piety and holiness. "Ἐμελλον, Vulg. μέλλει. Perhaps, however, the true reading is ἔμελλες ἀποβαλεῖν, which is edited by Matth. Πεπληρ., for τέλεια, completely answering to what God requires. See Col. iv. 12. and Note.

3. In πᾶς (for ποῖα) εἴληφας καὶ ἤκουσας the former term refers to doctrines, the latter to precepts. "Ἤξω ὡς κλέπτης. A comparison used by our Lord, and from him by St. Paul, St. Peter, and St. John.

4. ὀνόματα] "persons," as xiv. 4. and Acts i. 15. In ἐμόλυναν there is a common metaphor by which sin is designated as defilement. Τὰ ἱμάτια is added to suit with the following image, designating high honour and happiness. With περιπατ. ἐν λευκοῖς (occurring in John xx. 12.) Heinr. compares from Arrian Epict. iii. 22., περιπατεῖν ἐν κοκκίνοις.

5. οὐ μὴ ἐξαλείψω—ζωῆς.] The metaphor here is probably the same as in Phil. iv. 3., where see Note. Though it is by most Expositors thought to contain an allusion to a custom, not of civil life, but of military, by which the names of those on the muster-roll, who were cashiered for misconduct, were expunged therefrom. Compare Dan. xii. 1—4.

7. ὁ ἔχων τὴν κλεῖν τοῦ Δ.] i. e. has the power of shutting out, or receiving into the spiritual kingdom, which, as the son of David, as the Messiah, he established, i. 8. comp. Acts iii. 14. 1 John v. 20. (Holden). By key is meant the ensign of regal power. See Lowth on Ps. ix. 6. "Ὁ Ἅγιος ὁ ἀληθινός may be rendered, with Doddr., "the Holy One and the True One," or rather, "the Holy and True One," an epithet belonging appropriately to the DEITY (Exod. xxviii. 36. Is. vi. 3.), but also pertaining to the only begotten Son, as partaking of the nature of the Father. See Note at Matt. xvi. 19. on δεῖν and λύειν.

8. θύραν ἀνεωγμ.] i. e. an opportunity of preaching the Gospel, as 1 Cor. xvi. 9. 2 Cor. ii. 12. Μικρὰν δύν., i. e., as Newc. explains, "has not numbers, wealth, and power to repel persecution."

9. δίδωμι ἐκ.] This is regarded as put for ποιήσω. But there is rather a significatio prænans; and Dr. Burton well paraphrases: "I will give some of these persons into your power, and cause them to come," &c. viz. to come over to Christianity, and thus honour thee. See Rom.

xi. 1. This is confirmed by what Prof. Lee says, who regards this verse as a remarkable instance of the language used under the old Dispensation being applied even to the New; for the present passage is (he adds) taken from Is. xlix. 23, or rather lx. 14, which belongs exclusively, from first to last, to the times of the Christian Dispensation.

10—12. These verses contain a promise of honour and glory in the eternal temple in heaven to those who persevere in the faith, i. 3. ii. 15, 17. Gal. ii. 9. (Holden.) Τὸν λόγον τῆς ὑπομ., i. e., as Heinr. explains, doctrinam meam, quæ inter præcepta alia et ὑπομονὴν junxit, et quidem ὑπομονήν μου, i. e. talem, qualem ipse præstiti, i. 9. See also Vater.

12. ποιήσω αὐτὸν στύλον ἐν τ. ν.] A metaphor denoting high dignity and trust. See Gal. ii. 9. 1 Tim. iii. 15. and Notes. Compare also Is. xxii. 17—26. In the next words the metaphor is abandoned, and the sense is, that 'he shall not be put from that house;' implying, as Daubuz remarks, an eternal state to be enjoyed in the New Jerusalem. Καταβαίνουσα. Vulg. καταβαίνει. Ὁ τὸ ὄνομά μου τὸ καινόν, see xix. 16. 14. ἐν Λαοδ. ἐκκλησίας.] Vulg. τῆς ἐκκλ. Λαοδικέων. Ὁ Ἀμὴν, i. e. the Truth itself, as God is called in the O. T., the God of truth, ἡμῶν. See also 2 Cor. i. 20, compared with John viii. 12—19. Ὁ μάρτυς ὁ π. See Note at i. 5. Ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτ. See Col. i. 15—18. and compare John i. 3.

15. οὔτε ψυχρὸς εἶ οὔτε ζ.] i. e. lukewarm and indifferent as to religion, neither wholly abandoning, nor fully observing it.

— ὀφελον—ζεστός.] "By the cold (as Dean Woodh. observes) is meant, not persons devoid of all warm feelings and affections, but who, having their passions absorbed by worldly objects, have hitherto been cold to religious affection. But (continues he) of such persons there is hope and expectation that the time may come, when, from experience of the vanity of mere worldly pursuits, they may listen to the suggestions of the Spirit, and turn their affections to their proper objects,—God and his works and promises. For, as Dr. Henry More (cited by Abp. Newc.) says, "Coldness, though not better in itself than lukewarmness, might have sooner led the Church of Laodicea to repentance." So our Lord said that the Publicans, and even characters decidedly vicious, would go to heaven sooner than the Pharisees, and that the kingdom of heaven is taken by force.

17. πτωχὸς—τυφλὸς—γυμνός.] These three defects and their remedies are mentioned in v. 18. (Burton.) "Ταλαίπ. et ἄλ. universim, singula miseriæ genera sequuntur; v. 18.: ad eadem respicitur." (Vat.) The Article has an intensive force.

18. The allegory is continued, and expressed similarly to Matth. vi. 20. Συμβ. σοι. See supra v. 15. "Paupertati (remarks Iaspis) opponitur aurum probatum; nuditati opponuntur vestimenta candida; cæcitati collyrium, oculorum medicamentum." Ἀγοράσαι. See a similar passage in Is. lv. 1, 2. are, as Heinr. observes, meant to be emphatic, Christ being the dispenser of true riches. See Matth. xiii. 14. sq. Χρυσίου πεπυρωμένου ἐκ πυρός, i. e. gold of the purest sort, tried in the fire, and assayed (see Prov. x. 21.), i. e. the Gospel. To remedy their nakedness, they are to seek to be clothed in the white garment of Christian righteousness, and to remove their blindness, they are to seek the ointment of Christ, that they may see the true light of the Gospel.

19—21. See Heb. xii. 5—12. Luke xii. 37. John iii. 29. vi. 35. For the common reading ζήλωσον, Wets., Matth., Griesb., and others have edited ζήλευε; for which there is strong evidence external and internal, in the rarity of the form.

20. αὐτὸς μετ' ἐμοῦ] scil. δειπνήσει, i. e. "I will invite him to a heavenly banquet." See Note at John xiv. 23.

IV. After the first terrestrial vision, others, still more amazing, were vouchsafed to the enraptured Apostle by successive openings in heaven, affording new and more extended prospects of futurity: 1. A door was opened in heaven, which gave him a view of the spiritual Church and worship, Rev. iv. i. 2. The spiritual sanctuary was opened, xi. 19. 3. Again, xv. 5. And 4thly, Heaven itself was fully opened, xix. 11. Hence the remainder of the book naturally resolves itself into four celestial visions. The first and grand vision begins at Ch. iv. and ends at xi. 18; the second begins at xi. 19, and ends at xiv. 20; the third begins at xv. 5, and ends at xix. 10; and the fourth begins at xix. 11, and ends at xxii. 5. (Dr. Hales.)

This and the next Chapter form an introduction to the prophetic part of the Book. In the present Chapter is represented John's Vision of the Heaven opened, with the Almighty seated on an exalted throne surrounded by four and twenty Elders and four Living Creatures, who adore him as the Creator and Lord of all.

1. μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον] The sense is, "After this I had another vision," or a continuation of the first. I have pointed accordingly, with the Latin Vulgate. This is confirmed by Primasius, "Postea, inquit, vidi. Post ipsam utique visionem se alteram memorat vidisse." This expression, which is of frequent occurrence in the present Book and the Prophets, is intended to intimate that something remarkable in the way of revelation took place. And accordingly it is a fit preface to announcements of prophecy or revelation. Θύρα ἀνεωγμένη ἐν τῷ οὐρ., "a door [as it were] was opened." See Ezek. i. 1. Matt. iii. 16. Acts vii. 56. and Daubuz in loc. "Ἡ πρώτη. This is justly supposed by Dr. Burton to be an allusion to i. 10; q. d. "Lo! the heavens were opened, and lo! there was the former voice, which I had heard as of a trumpet speaking to me; and it said," &c.

2. ἐγεν. ἐν Πνεύμ.] See Note supra i. 10. — καθήμενος] scil. ἦν. The Person (as Daubuz remarks) is, by his attributes, plainly Jehovah, God the Father. "We are not to imagine (says Dodd.) that the Person sitting on the throne [or the Lamb], or the four and twenty elders, or the four animals, were real beings, existing in nature; though they represented, in a figurative manner, things that did really exist." On the thing signified by each symbol, reference is made to the tabernacle and temple-service. See Tilloch, ap Valpy, Abp. Newc., Dean Woodh., and Prof. Lee. The πρεσβ., v. 4, are supposed by some to denote the ministers of the Christian church, double the number of the Jewish tribes; by others, the Jewish and Christian Churches, or the twelve Patriarchs, and the twelve Apostles; which seems the most probable opinion. "The rest of the Chapter (says Prof. Lee) seems to mark out the majesty of Almighty God, attended by his ministers, who are prepared to execute his purposes, and before they do so, they ascribe praise to Him, as the Creator of all things."

The words ὁ καθήμενος are marked by Griesb. as probably to be cancelled; and by Matthæi were actually thrown out of the text: but rashly; for there is little doubt but that the omission in the MSS. arose from the repetition of καθήμενος. The ἰασπ. is supposed to denote the diamond. By the σαρδ. is denoted a precious stone of a red colour, so called, as brought from Sardinia. Both are supposed to be symbolical of the splendid purity and awful glory of the Divine nature. The ἱρις is symbolical of God's mercy and faithfulness to be shown to Christians, as formerly they were to the Antediluvian world. (Gen. ix. 9—17.)

4. Θρόνοι.] Not seats, but thrones. The καὶ is absent from most of the best MSS., and was probably from the margin.

5. ἀστραπαὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ φωναί.] Agreeably to the terrific homage attendant on the majesty of God on Mount Sinai. The “seven lamps of fire” are supposed to correspond to the seven lights of the Candlestick on the Tabernacle.

— τὰ ἑπτὰ πνεύματα] “the seven spirits.” See Note on i. 4.

6. The sea or laver of glass (analogous to that of brass under the Law) is supposed to be symbolical of the spiritual purity necessary for exaltation in heaven. (See Heb. x. 22.)

— τέσσαρα ζῶα] “four living creatures” (not beasts). So Heinr. renders it, “animantia, naturæ animantes [et quidem intelligentes]; sicuti depinguntur infra v. 8.; C. vi. 1. 3. 5. 7. et præ aliis naturis angelorum instar eminentes, significantesque vim et celeritatem, qua operatur numen, in cuius regno immenso nihil vacuum est aut mortuum.”

The propriety of this correction is now, I believe, generally agreed upon by Commentators. The word is very different from θηρίον, used to designate the prophetic Beast in the 13th and following Chapters. (Scholefield.) It may be added, that Bulkeley adduces several examples of ζῶον to denote, not only creature, but even a human being; especially one from Origen, who uses it of our Lord Jesus, calling him πάντων ζῶων καὶ ζωότροπος. These “living creatures” are supposed to represent, either the highest order of angelic beings, whose qualities and offices are figuratively described; or, as Newcome explains, “the whole body of the Church of God, who serve him in heaven with strength of affection, with perseverance, with reason, and with swiftness of obedience:” qualities which seem to be signified by the emblems in v. 7. The epithet, “full of eyes,” denotes their knowledge, wisdom, prudence, and foresight. The imagery is, with reason, supposed to be formed on Ezek. i. 5. seqq. See Irenæus Lib. iii. 11. 8. cited by Heinr.

8. ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτός.] Said per anthropopathiam, to denote continually, at all fit times. Ὁ ἦν—ἐρχ. An expression denoting the eternity of the Deity.

9. The Futures δώσουσι, προσκυνήσουσι, &c. are used like the Aorist in the Classical writers, to designate what is customary.

10. βαλοῦσι τοὺς στεφ., &c.] in sign of deep reverence and perfect subservience. On this Chorus of the angels, here and at v. 12, see Bp. Bull. Primit. Ap. Trad. p. 40.

V. 1. βιβλίον.] Under this image are denoted the prophecies which follow. This volume of prophecy is said to be in the right hand of God, as being of Divine original, and infallibly true: it is written within and without, as being abundant and perfect in matter; and sealed with seven seals, as having its fulfilment in successive times. No one, either in heaven or earth, was worthy to unfold this volume of prophecy, except the Lamb of God, the Saviour of the world, vv. 2—6.; and as no other could explain the scheme of the Divine administration, when he took the book into his hand for this purpose, the living creatures and elders, i. e. the angelic host, and the Church of the redeemed triumphant in heaven, pay him a glad and willing homage, vv. 7—14. (Holden.) The participation of our Lord here in the praises and prayers offered to the Father, proves his essential Deity.

— γεγραμμ. ἔσωθεν καὶ ὀπισθεν.] The long rolls of parchment used by the ancients, which we call books, were seldom written but on one side—namely, that which was in rolling turned inwards; any one written on both sides was called ὀπισθόγραφος. By this circumstance is here denoted the copiousness of the matter. Κατεσφρ., “sealed down;” the seals (as Dr. Burton observes) being placed on the last fold, so that the roll could not be opened without breaking them.

2. κηρύσσοντα] “proclaiming, as a herald,” such as the Rabbins supposed to be in heaven.

3. ἠδύνατο] i. e. could undertake it, as being of dignity competent; explained by the ἄγιος εὐρέθη just after.

5. ἐνίκησεν—ἀνοῖξαι] i. e. as Dr. Burton renders, hath prevailed so as to open. Ὁ λέων—Ἰούδα. So called in allusion to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 9. Ἡ ρίζα Δ. So Is. xi. 10. calls Christ ἡ ρίζα τοῦ Ἰεσσαί.

6. ἄρνιον ἑστ. ὡς ἐσφαγμ.] “as if newly slain.” An emblematical representation of the Saviour's High Priesthood before God, in our nature, as risen from the dead, through the merit of his Sacrifice in behalf of “all who come to the Father through him;” so that it was in consequence of that atonement, which the sacrificing of spotless lambs had prefigured from the beginning, that he prevailed to open the book.” (Scott.) Ὁ φ. ἑπτὰ. So Zech. iv. 10. ἑπτὰ οὗτοι ὀφθαλμοὶ εἰσιν οἱ ἐπιβλέποντες ἐπὶ

VI. ΚΑΙ εἶδον, ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὸ ἀρνίον μίαν ἐκ τῶν ἐπτὰ 1 σφραγίδων, καὶ ἤκουσα ἑνὸς ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων λέγοντος ὡς * φωνὴ βροντῆς· Ἔρχου καὶ ἴδε.^g Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ 2 ἰδοὺ, ἵππος λευκός, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ’ αὐτὸν ἔχων τόξον· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ στέφανος, καὶ ἐξῆλθε νικῶν, καὶ ἵνα νικήσῃ.

πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν. On the ἐπτὰ πν. see Note supra i. 4. It is observed by Newcome, that horns and eyes are emblems of power and wisdom.

8. φιάλας.] Not vials, but cups, pateras; something like our dishes. See Schweigh. on Herodot. ii. 151. Αἱ εἰσιν αἱ προσ. τῶν ἁγ., denoting that the prayers of God's true worshippers are highly acceptable spiritual sacrifices.

9. ᾠδὴν καινὴν.] “So called (says Newc.) because adapted to a new occasion.” So ὄνομα καινόν, ii. 17. iii. 12. Ἄξιός ἐστι, &c. A sort of acclamation, usual in ancient times, and often employed to hail a newly elected Emperor.

11. τῶν ζώων.] This is governed not by κύκλῳ, but by φωνῇ, thus: “I heard the voices of the angels round the throne, and of the ζῶα, and of the elders.” (Burton.)

12. λαβεῖν τὴν δύναμιν—εὐλογίαν.] This seven-fold praise is supposed to correspond to the seven-fold attributes above.

13. τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς] i. e. things in the sea as well as in the earth; the dead committed to them. (Newc.) Prof. Lee is of opinion that, as the matter in the whole of this Chapter is symbolical, it ought not to be literally interpreted; and as it manifestly relates to the Church on earth.

VI. 1. μίαν] for πρώτην. A common Hebrew idiom. “Each (says Lowman) of the prophetic descriptions is, in part, some figurative or hieroglyphical picture, or some representation in the style and figurative expressions of ancient prophecy describing certain particular dispensations of Providence, proper and peculiar to the several successive states of the Church and empire during the space of time contained in this period.” The opening of the seven seals, Heinr. understands of the removal of seven involutura or wrappers about the roll itself; and those, though not written on with letters, yet by no means empty, but exhibiting various emblems, which portended the subject of the Book itself.

—ἔρχου καὶ ἴδε.] A form of speaking to excite any one to attention, occurring in Ezek. viii. 9, and often in the Rabbinical writers. The Lamb now breaks the seals of the codex fatidicus, or book of the counsels of God, as Mede calls it, and discloses a series of symbolical prophecies illustrative of the history of the Church. The first seal refers to the triumph of Christianity over both Judaism and Paganism.

3 Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν δευτέραν σφραγίδα, ἤκουσα τοῦ δευτέρου ζώου λέγοντος· Ἔρχου! [καὶ βλέπε.] καὶ ἐξηλθεν ἄλλος ἵππος πυρρός· καὶ τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπ' αὐτῷ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ λαβεῖν τὴν εἰρήνην [ἀπὸ] τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἵνα ἀλλήλους σφάζωσι· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ μάχαιρα μεγάλη. Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν * σφραγίδα τὴν τρίτην, ἤκουσα τοῦ τρίτου ζώου λέγοντος· Ἔρχου καὶ βλέπε! καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἵππος μέλας, καὶ ὁ καθημένος ἐπ' * αὐτὸν ἔχων ζυγὸν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ. ^h Καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν ἐν μέσῳ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων ^h Infra 9. 4. λέγουσαν· “Χοῖνιζ σίτου δηναρίου, καὶ τρεῖς χοίνικες κριθῆς δηναρίου.” καί· “τὸ ἔλαιον καὶ τὸν οἶνον, μὴ ἀδικήσης.”

7 Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν σφραγίδα τὴν τετάρτην, ἤκουσα [φω-8 νῆν] τοῦ τετάρτου ζώου λέγουσαν· Ἔρχου καὶ βλέπε. καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἵππος χλωρός, καὶ ὁ καθημένος ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ ὄνομα αὐτῷ [ὁ] Θάνατος· καὶ ὁ ἄδης ἀκολουθεῖ μετ' αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς ἐξουσία ἀποκτείνειν, ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον τῆς γῆς, ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ καὶ ἐν λιμῷ καὶ ἐν θανάτῳ, καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων τῆς γῆς.

The bow, the white horse, and the crown, are emblems of victory, triumph, and royalty, accompanying the final triumph of the Gospel over all opposition. The imagery here is similar to that at Zech. vi. 1—6. See also Ps. xlv. 3—5. In ἵνα νίκησῃ there is a Hellenistic idiom, the sense being, “that he should gain victory after victory.”

3, 4. ἵππος πυρρός—μεγ.] A symbol borrowed from Zech. vi. 2. of wars, seditions, and blood-shedding; though on the event referred to Interpreters are not agreed. Compare Matt. x. 34. sqq. which Prof. Lee thinks the best explanation of this.

5, 6. ἵππος μέλας.] An emblem of woe, the colour being of evil omen. Ζυγόν. On the reference here Expositors are by no means agreed. The common version, “a pair of balances,” may, however, be retained, and the expression be understood most naturally (with Newc., Heinr., and Iaspis) of scales for exactly weighing out the corn; an apt designation of famine; corn being usually measured. The chenix was about as much as our quart, and was considered a sufficient portion for a man's support for a day. See Herodot. vii. 186. The price then mentioned (which has been proved to be enormous, nearly twenty times the usual one) is meant to intimate the scarcity and dearness. By the σίτου is meant [bread] corn, i. e. wheat: and the proportion between the quality of wheat and of barley was, it seems, an usual one. On the purport of the subjoined words καὶ τὸ ἔλαιον—μὴ ἀδικ.—commentators are not agreed whether there is herein contained a command not to injure the wine and oil, or an injunction not to do wrong in respect to them. The latter view (which is adopted by Mede, Daubuz, Iaspis, and Heinr.) seems preferable. Perhaps, however, there is no occasion to suppose an ellipsis of κατὰ; but we may suppose μὴ ἀδικ. to mean, “See that thou dost not adulterate it;” a figurative sense not harsher than many in this Book, and even in the Classical writers. Here the four articles are adverted to, which then formed the main support of life.

8. χλωρός] “of a pale or yellowish colour;” an emblem of mortality, such as is caused by pestilence and death stalking forth, (so pallida mors) or that sallow hue incident to fear, according to the Homeric ἐμὲ δὲ χλωρὸν δέος εἶλε. By Hades is here meant, not as elsewhere in the N. T., the under-world, or region of the dead, but its inhabitants, who are regarded as the subjects of Death. The next words follow up the general idea of death and the grave, by the more special ones of what is most destructive of the human race, war, famine, and pestilence. The terms ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ—τῆς γῆς are very similar to those at Ezek. xiv. 21—23, where the Prophet denounces God's four sore judgments upon Jerusalem; “which (observes Prof. Lee) admirably depicts the state of those times, and doubtless predicts it.” By θανάτῳ is denoted pestilence; a sense which may very well be admitted, since pestilence usually follows in the train of war. So an ancient Oracle in Thucyd. ii. 54. ἤξει Δωριακὸς πόλεμος, καὶ λοιμὸς ἂμ' αὐτῷ. The words καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων τῆς γῆς may be rendered, “by the means or instrumentality of the beasts.” A very appropriate addition; for, as Abp. Newc. observes, “wild beasts increase where destructive calamities thin mankind.” So Exod. xxiii. 29. (which passage it is strange should not have been adduced by the Commentators) οὐκ ἐβαλῶ αὐτοὺς ἐν ἐναντίῳ ἐνὶ, ἵνα μὴ γένηται ἡ γῆ ἔρημος, καὶ πολλὰ γένηται ἐπὶ σὲ τὰ θηρία τῆς γῆς. And in point of fact, the histories of the period in question attest, that in various parts the wild beasts so increased upon the small residue of the inhabitants left by war, famine, and pestilence, that they were compelled to wage war with them, to keep them under, though with great difficulty and loss of life.

One account records the entrance of 500 wolves at once into a depopulated city.

9—11. This, as also the subsequent seal, derives no light, like the former, from the living creatures as to the time of the commencement; for here we have not a prophecy concerning new events, but this is meant to minister consolation under the scandal of the cross; and has reference to the preceding persecutions, which were of long continuance. (Hardy.) By θυσιαστ. is meant, not, as some imagine, the golden altar for incense within the Holy of Holies, but (as the subject requires) the altar of burnt-offering, in the court of the priests: for there is a tacit comparison of the martyrs to the victims in the Temple Service. “These (observes Scott) appeared as sacrifices newly offered, to show their fellowship with Christ in his sufferings, and the acceptableness of their faithfulness unto death, through his propi-tiatory oblation.”

— διὰ τὸν λόγον—εἶχον “in the cause of God’s word [the Gospel], and for the testimony which they had borne [to its truth].” Λέγοντες, for λέγουσαι, by the figure πρὸς τὸ σημαίνουμενον. After μαρτ. is, in many MSS. and early Edd., added τοῦ ἀρνίου, which is adopted by Matth. The reading, however, has the appearance of a gloss.

— ἕως πότε, &c. Hardy (after the older Commentators) remarks, that this is an “ecphonesis impatienter a brachio fortiori vindictam ex-petentium.” But it is well remarked by Iaspis: “Martyres illi non vindictæ cupiditate incensi hanc questionem proponunt, sed modo sciscitantur, quando vaticinia eventum habitura sint.”
So also at xix. 17. sqq. For ἀπὸ many MSS. and early Editions have ἐκ, which is edited by Beng. and Matth., and may be supported from Gen. ix. 5. (which passage was probably in the mind of the writer) ἐκ χειρὸς ἀνθρώπου ἀδελφοῦ ἐκζητήσου τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου.
Ἐδόθη—λευκὴ. Such is the reading of nearly the whole of the MSS. and early Edd., and adopted by all the best Editors, instead of the Vulg. ἐδόθησαν ἑκάστοις στολαὶ λευκαί. The gift of a white robe was a symbol of God’s acceptance. “Ἔως πληρ. may be rendered “until the number ordained by God be completed, by their fellow servants being also added to the list of martyrs.” For the common reading πληρώσου-ται, most MSS. have πληρώσωσι; and some, with the Ed. Princ., πληρωθῶσι, which is adopted by Beng., Wets. and Tittm.; the other, by Griesb., Matth., and Vater. The latter should seem preferable; for although the above Critics urge that πληρώσωσι is the more difficult reading, and an uncommon form; yet it may be doubted whether this be really a form at all, or only a mere error of the scribes; for σ and θ are perpetually confounded, both in writing and in pronunciation.

12—17. This sixth seal is generally understood to refer to the downfall of Paganism, and the establishment of Christianity in the reign of Constantine. And thus the earthquake, and other natural commotions and phenomena, as they often denote revolutions and changes of religious systems, so they are here supposed to mark the violent commotions, which agitated the Empire from the reign of Maximinian to that of Constantine. Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Burton, however, suppose this vision to relate to the end of the world, and the final triumph of the Gospel over its enemies. Compare Matt. xxiv.
29. Prof. Lee is of opinion that the whole manifestly relates to the progress of the persecutions, and the judgments poured out and witnessed during the first ages of the Church.

Σάκκος τρίχ. denotes the coarse hair-cloth, of a blackish colour, then in common use. See Matt. xi. 21. and Note. After σελήνη many MSS. have ὅλη, which is adopted by most Critics. But we may suspect it to have come from the margin. The image in ὡς συκὴ—ὀλύνθους αὐτῆς is a very striking one, and such as attests accurate observation; violent winds shaking off the unripe and late formed figs in great numbers;

though they would otherwise remain for a late gathering.

14. ὁ οὐρανὸς—ἐλίσσ[.] “the heaven (i. e. the ethereal, or the firmament) was parted off, or separated in the midst, and the part removed, as a scroll is rolled up.” So Is. xxxiv. 4. καὶ ἐλιγνύσεται ὁ οὐρανὸς ὡς βιβλίον, imitated in the Orac. Sybill. cited by Heinrich, ὅποταν θεὸς αἰθέρι ναίων Οὐρανὸν ἐλίσξει, καὶ ἄπτερον βιβλίον ἐλίσσεται. With ἐκ τῶν τόπων ἐκινήθ. Heinr. aptly compares Plin. Epist. vi. 16. (of an earthquake) omnia quasi emota sedibus suis.

15. καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς, &c.] Here are finely described the effects of this catastrophe,—in the vain endeavours to escape the wrath of omnipotence, by persons of whatever rank, from the highest to the lowest,—from those who occupy thrones, to those who are in the lowest estate. With ἔκρυναν—ὀρέων I would compare Procop. p. 197. 25., which passage seems imitated from the present: φημί δὲ ὑμῖν ἀφίξεσθαι χρόνον, ἥνικα ὑπὸ ταῖς ἀκάνθαις βουλόμενοι τὰς κεφαλὰς κρύπτεσθαι, οὐδαμῇ ἔξεται. See also Eurip. Hippol. 285. sqq. For the common reading δυνατοί, the most eminent Editors have adopted, on the strongest evidence, external and internal, ἰσχυροί.

VII. This Chapter is admitted to be a continuation of the preceding vision, and of course is explained according to the view adopted of that. Those who suppose it to have reference to the downfall of Paganism, and the establishment of Christianity, maintain that by the four angels are meant the pretorian prefects appointed by Constantine over the four great Provinces; and by the fifth angel, Constantine himself, who had the seal of the living God by being converted to Christianity, and through whom the persecutions against the Church ceased. See Eichorn, Rosenm., Heinr., and Lee. Others, however, as Dean Woodhouse, assign a more general reference, and suppose that this is a sequel to the preceding, and contains a representation of the gathering of God's elect servants from the wrath to come, and the consequent triumph of men and angels.

1. τὰς τέσσαρας γωνίας τ. γ.] “the four quarters,” corresponding to the four cardinal points. The ἀγγέλους must be understood according to the general view above adverted to.

—μῆτε ἐπὶ πᾶν δένδρον.] This is rendered, “Nor on any tree.” Yet that would require δένδρον, which is, indeed, found in one MS., but doubtless from emendation. Moreover, the sense thus arising, is not a little jejune. And as the MSS. on this Book are well known to be very incorrect and little trust-worthy, I cannot but suspect a corruption: and for ἐπὶ πᾶν I conjecture ἐπισείειν, to stir. Thus the words μῆτε—δένδρον will be exegetical of the expression, and be a carrying what is said still further,—i. e. that there should not be a breath of wind, to stir the foliage of a tree. Similar to the illustration of what is said at Matt. x. 29. of the preservation of the life of man, from that of the sparrows, of which not one of them falleth to the ground without the Providence of God. Certainly the above error might easily arise in ill written MSS.

especially with abbreviations; for πξν is not unlike σεῖν written in abbreviation thus, σξν; for σ and π are often interchanged; as are ει and α, and η and ν, or Η and Ν. The thought seems to have been suggested by the idea, a few verses before, still remaining in the writer's mind, so vi. 14. ὡς συκὴ βάλλει τοὺς ὀλύνθους αὐτῆς ὑπὸ μεγάλου ἀνέμου σειομένη. It is, however, not improbable that St. John wrote μῆτ' ἐπισείη πᾶν δένδρον: for ἐπισείη written with abbreviation would be ξξη, which might be mistaken for εεπι. And, upon the whole, this latter may be preferable: for those many MSS. that have τί do not destroy the authority of πᾶν, since τί is evidently a gloss on it. And the genuineness of πᾶν is attested by its strongly Hebraic idiom.

2. ἀπὸ ἀνατολῆς ἡλ.] The chief cardinal point, as being that from which the sun rises;

3. σφραγίσωμεν.] As denoting that they belonged to God; for, as it is shown by the Commentators, slaves were marked with the mark of their master. Comp. Exod. xii. 7. 13.

4. Here the 144,000 is admitted to be a great and indefinite number, denoting the great numbers of those converted from the Jewish to the Christian faith. The tribe of Dan is omitted for reasons which we can only conjecture; either, it is supposed, from its idolatry, or because it had become extinct. Joseph is here put for Ephraim. Levi is mentioned, because equally participating in the benefits of Christ.

9. ὄχλος πολὺς—ἠδύνατο.] By this ὄχλος some understand the Gentile converts to the Gospel; others, those composing, together with the preceding, the universal and visible Church of Christ: others, again, the spirits of just men made perfect and received into glory, especially the martyrs and confessors of the primitive Church. By their being clothed in white robes, and having palm branches, are denoted their spiritual victory, justification, and sanctification.

See an admirable Sermon on this text by Dr. Blair, vol. ii. p. 246. sqq.

For περιβεβλημένοι many MSS. have περιβεβλημένοις, which is adopted by Beng., Wets., Matth., Griesb., Vater, and Heintr., who suppose the common reading to have arisen from emendation, to remove the anacoluthon in ἐστῶτες. A principle, however, so far distrusted by Matth., that he has, from some MSS., altered ἐστῶτες into ἐστῶτας. Yet that reading seems to have originated in emendation, to adapt it to περιβεβλημένοις; and I suspect that the οὐς in περιβεβλημένους arose from blending the end of the word with the beginning of the next. As to the anacoluthon, we are not to bring in irregularities causelessly. Be that as it may, the same MSS. that have ἐστῶτας have περιβεβλημένοις: yet not all; some having one and not the other.

10. ἡ σωτηρία—Ἀρνίῳ.] A sublime chorus of the heavenly host; in which the Article at σωτ. is supposed by Dean Woodhouse to be emphatic, “the salvation.” But it should rather seem to be used according to that Canon of Bp. Middleton (Ch. v. § 1.) by which abstract nouns

(i. e. nouns used in their most abstract sense) take the Article to express that abstraction. And so John iv. 22. ἡ σωτηρία ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, “salvation is from the Jews,” and Acts iv. 12. ἐν ἄλλῳ οὐδενὶ ἡ σωτηρία. See also Revel. xii. 10. xix. 1. and compare v. 12.

13—17. Here are described the glory and felicity of the Church. In τίνες εἰσὶ—ἦλθον; “the question (observes Daubuz) is not asked for want of knowledge, but to excite attention.” In ἐπλυναν—Ἀρνίου there is the strongest attestation to the truth of the doctrine of the atonement. See Heb. ix. 14. and Note.

—εἰσιν ἐνώπιον, &c.] With this I would compare a fine passage in Theocrit. Idyll. xvii. 16—25, containing the ἀποθέσις of the Ptolemies of Egypt. Λατρεύουσιν—ναῷ αὐτοῦ. Namely, as priests (see i. 6.); though a priesthood far more august than the Levitical. Σκηνώσει ἐπ’ αὐτούς, i. e. as Iaspis explains, “will ever cheer them with his presence, and defend and protect them from harm.” And he compares Num. ix. 18, 22, where σκηνοῦν is, in this sense, interchanged with σκιάζειν. See Ezek. xliii. 9. and infra 21, 3. and Refer.

16, 17. The general sentiment here is, that they shall be delivered from all the evils and miseries under which they laboured; and this is expressed by imagery of the most beautiful kind (often found in the O. T. See Is. xlix. 9, 10. Iv. 1. Ps. xxiii. 2.) designating the primitive evils from which they shall be everlastingly delivered, and also the positive good in which they shall eternally rest. Ἐξαλείψει—αὐτῶν. Thus it is finely observed by a heathen writer, εἰ ἔχομεν Κάκει μερίμνας οἱ θανοῦμενοι βροτῶν, Οὐκ οἷδ’ ὅποι τις τρέφεται· τὸ γὰρ θανεῖν Κακῶν μέγιστον φάρμακον νομίζεται. Eurip. Heracl. 593—6.

VIII. “Here the writer (after the episode contained in the last Chapter) returns to the subject treated of at Ch. vi., and unlooses the seventh and last seal; thus opening out, not an emblematical picture, but the book or roll itself, written on both sides, and filled with matter of the most serious and most mournful kind, of which the events are supposed to be already accomplished; and the return itself of the Messiah is regarded as if seen with the eyes.” (Heinrichs.)

The opening of the seventh seal introduces the period of the seven trumpets, which is, like the former, variously viewed by different Commentators, whose expositions are principally three: 1. That of Grot., Lightft., and Hamm., which supposes these prophecies to have been fulfilled in the Jewish wars, &c. and the destruction of Jerusalem; 2. That of Mede, Bishop Newton, and others; of which see a full detail in Woodhouse. 3. That of Vitringa and some eminent foreign Commentators, adopted by Dean Woodhouse; “which (says the latter) distinguishes the prophetic history of the seals from that of the trumpets, the latter not being allowed as a continuation of the former in a regular line of succession.” “The emblems (continues he) under the seals are understood to exhibit a general history of the greater changes which were to take place in the world, more especially in the Christian Church, until the end; while those under the trumpets are supposed to foretel and recount the history of the same times, but much more particularly and minutely, and under different characters. The seals foretel the history of the Christian Church: and the first six contain a short, rapid, and general sketch of the progress of Christianity from its first establishment in the world, to that time, yet future, when the enemies of Christ shall be separated for punishment, and his faithful servants for heavenly favour and rewards.”

1. ἐγένετο σιγὴ—ἡμῶριον.] This is generally supposed to be an allusion to a ceremony in Jewish worship, of silence for secret prayer, while

b Psal. 141. 2.

Καὶ οἱ ἐπτά ἄγγελοι οἱ ἔχοντες τὰς ἐπτά σάλπιγγας 6 ἠτοίμασαν ἑαυτοὺς ἵνα σαλπίσωσι. Καὶ ὁ πρῶτος ἄγγελος 7 ἐσάλπισε, καὶ ἐγένετο χάλαζα καὶ πῦρ μεμιγμένα ἐν αἵματι, καὶ ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν γῆν· καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατεκάν, καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῶν δένδρων κατεκάν, καὶ πᾶς χόρτος χλωρὸς κατε-incense was offered on the golden altar in the Sanctuary. It seems better, however, to suppose the awful silence [the sacro silentio of Horace] merely as suspending the gratification of holy curiosity, and as a solemn pause ("pertinens ad τὸ πρέπου," as Iaspis says) introductory to yet more august representations.

3. ἄλλος ἄγγελος] i. e. the great Angel of the Covenant, the Lord Jesus, as most Commentators explain. To this, however, well-founded objections have been made by Dean Woodhouse, who supposes that the angel represents the Christian priesthood in general, exercised in subordination to the great High-Priest.

—ἵνα δώσῃ—ἁγίων] "that he might give it to the prayers of the saints," i. e. that he might give the effect of incense to the prayers of the saints. (Vitringa and Burton.) Thus showing, by an expressive emblem, that the prayers of the saints are acceptable to God.

5. εἴληφεν—τὸν λιβανωτὸν—καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν γῆν.] This preparatory vision may, with Dean Woodhouse, be supposed to concern the Christian Church; and the burning incense be understood, with him, to denote the Christian worship and religion, pure and heavenly in its origin and nature, but which, being sent down to earth, and mixing with the passions of sinful men, produces signal commotions. It begins in pure incense, which is offered up purely for a time; till, mingling with human corruptions, it becomes the instrument of discord and violence. Now this is only a general view. In the sequel of this seal are more particularly depicted the heresies and commotions which, under the name of Christianity, afflicted the Christian world, and almost banished from it true religion. The symbolical action of casting the contents of the golden censor upon earth naturally paves the way for the representation of the effects of the Gospel thus sent, in producing commotions upon earth, agreeably to our Lord's words, Luke xii. 49. πῦρ ἤλθον βαλεῖν εἰς τὴν γῆν, i. e. divisions and discords.

6. On the intent of these trumpets great difference of opinion exists. The best founded view seems to be that of Dean Woodhouse, who supposes them to designate hostile attacks; and thinks that throughout the object is the same—the pure Christian Church; and that the assailants are not only its infidel and acknowledged foes, but also those, its most formidable enemies, who, professing to belong to its body, have taught doctrines, and pursued measures, contrary to its purity, destructive of its peace, and almost of its existence, the heretics and Anti-Christian corrupters. "A view (continues he) confirmed by the fact, that in those visions of the trumpets whose meaning can be most accurately ascertained, the Christian Church is evidently the object of assault. Such it is seen to be in the fifth and sixth trumpets, and yet more clearly and confessedly in the seventh; where (xi. 15.) upon the angel's sounding, the heavenly voices immediately proclaim the victory, and award the kingdoms of the world to Christ; and that this Church is to partake the happiness and glory of his victory and reign, is apparent from the subsequent song of the elders, and indeed from all holy writ. In this seventh and last conflict the contending powers are fully declared, and we may reasonably suppose them the same in all the stages of the warfare, under the four first trumpets, as well as under the three last."

7. ἐγένετο—αἷματι.] Compare Is. ix. 18, 19. xxix. 17—24. Exod. ix. 23, 24. Ezek. xxvi. 15, 16.; whence it is plain that the ἐν has been here rightly inserted, from many MSS. and early Editions, by the most eminent Editors, who also, on the best authority, insert καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατεκάν. The omission, no doubt, arose from the recurrence of κατεκάν. The whole imagery is often adopted to denote great calamity, as χάλαζα is a symbol of Divine wrath, infra xi. 19. xvi. 21. Εἰς τὴν γῆν, "upon the land," as distinguished from τὴν θάλασσαν at v. 8. So Dr. Woodhouse, who also takes τὴν γῆν to denote Jewish Christians; and τὴν θάλασσαν at v. 8. the Gentile Christians. "By the trees he understands genuine Christians many of them (τὸ τρίτον denoting a considerable part) destroyed by the fire of persecution; by

Καὶ εἶδον καὶ ἤκουσα ἑνὸς * ἀετοῦ πετομένου ἐν μεσουρανήματι λέγοντος φωνῇ μεγάλῃ· “Οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἐκ τῶν λοιπῶν φωνῶν τῆς σάλπιγγος τῶν τριῶν ἀγγέλων τῶν μελλόντων σαλπίζειν!”

1 IX. ° Καὶ ὁ πέμπτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε· καὶ εἶδον c Luke 8. 31. infra 17. 8. ἀστέρα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πεπτωκότα εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ ἐδόθη

the green grass, those Christians who make a fair show, but in time of persecution fall away. He also considers the imagery of the remainder of this Chapter, as symbolically designating the corruptions of the Gospel by heretics, and the darkness and ignorance subsequent to that corruption.” It must, however, be confessed that here, at least, the other hypotheses above adverted to are more probable. The opinion of the recent foreign Commentators is briefly expressed by Iaspis as follows: “Nil autem aliud continetur, v. 7—12. quam publicarum calamitatum omnis generis publica ac sollemnis declaratio. Singuli angeli singula mala suo clangore prænuntiant quidem, neque tamen ideo singulæ calamitatum species querendæ sunt. Sub variis imaginibus et figuris ad ornandam et amplificandam orationem una eademque res describitur, summa nimirum calamitas.” This mode of viewing the subject is akin to that frequently resorted to in similar cases by our learned Continental brethren, and seems to save much trouble, but in general tends to any thing but real and sound knowledge; only summarily despatching matters which we are unable to explain. Thus here, though specious, it cannot safely be adopted.

8. ὄρος — καιόμενον, &c.] This Heinr. and Iaspis regard in the same light as that of a star falling into the sea, which was thought an ill omen. Prof. Lee supposes the figure to be taken from Jer. li. 25., where it is used of the destruction of the Babylonian empire.

10, 11. The idea of the falling star seems to be taken from Is. xiv. 12., where the fall of Babylon is predicted: and as Babylon appears in this book to be put for heathen Rome, the fall of the latter is here undoubtedly had in view by the Apocalypse. The star is further called worm-wood, to denote, perhaps, the sorrows inflicted by that people, wherever they went. See Ruth i. 20. Exod. xv. 30. (Lee.)

12. A better comment on this passage than Is. viii. 21, 22. ix. 1—7. cannot be given; which is a direct prophecy of these times. Another such prophecy is to be found in Zech. xiv.; and ver. 6, 7. mark out the particulars here mentioned. (Lee.)

13. ἀετοῦ for ἀγγέλου, ὡς ἀετοῦ, who rent the air like an eagle. The common reading ἀγγέλου is plainly from the margin. μεσουρανήματι may be rendered, “the mid-heaven,” or the space between heaven and earth, and answering to the ethereal heaven, or the sky. The word occurs only in the later writers.

— Οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ—σαλπίζειν.] The sense may be thus expressed, with Iaspis: “Ferri adhuc poterant, quæ vidisti, omnia; sed tria illa mala, nunc ingruentia, funestissimum afferent exitum.” The exact reference in these woes will be according to the hypothesis adopted; and to any of the above it is very suitable. Dean Woodh. observes, that under the four first trumpets, which have their beginning from this period, the storm increases; and under the three last, it advances to its maturity, and produces the most special and desolating effects, by three distinct explosions. The three woes correspond to the three last trumpets, which, or the woe-trumpets, are generally regarded as predicting the miserable state of the Church in the dark ages. See also Bp. Newton.

IX. 1. ἀστέρα.] It is generally agreed, that this must denote, agreeably to the symbolical language of prophecy, a teacher, as in viii. 10.; and that, no doubt, a false teacher pretending to a Divine Legation. Most Expositors fix on Mohammed; but good reasons are given by Dean Woodhouse why it may be supposed to denote Satan, the instigator to all heresy, and the great Heresiarch. Τοῦ φρέατος τῆς ἀβύσσου means, as Prof. Lee explains, the well of the abyss of waters in the bowels of the earth. Prof. Lee compares Ezek. xxvi. 19., from which he thinks that here by opening the great deep is implied the letting loose of some power to take vengeance similar to that in the passage of the Prophet. The subsequent expressions, καπνὸς, ἐσκοτίσθη, and ἀκρίδες, have all assigned to them by Woodhouse, a mystical sense. Others, however, take a very different view, according to the hypothesis they adopt. See Pyle and Prof. Lee.

3. ὡς ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν οἱ σκορπ.] i. e. power not to kill, but to torture and inflict misery.

4. οὐκ ἔχουσι—αὐτῶν.] This must denote true Christians, as opposed to corrupt believers or hypocritical professors.

5. μῆνας πέντε.] With allusion, it is supposed, to the very period of existence of these ephemeral creatures, which are hatched in spring, and die at the end of the summer.

6. ζητήσουσι—ὁ θάνατος.] A very expressive, and, by the parallelism, yet more energetic, mode of expressing an utter weariness of life. Compare Luke xxiii. 29. sq., xxi. 26., and the Classical citations in Wets.

7—10. These figurative locusts are now described, representing a formidable army. Compare Joel ii. 4. seqq. The description has many striking points of similarity in the Arabians, who are generally supposed to be here meant; they being always famed for horsemanship. Thus the crowns will correspond to the turbans of that people; and their having the hair of women, is explained by the Arabian custom of wearing long hair. By the “teeth of lions,” they are aptly designated as strong to devour. The breast-plates allude to the scales of the locusts; and the sound of their wings, to the rapidity of their conquests. The description, however, I apprehend, would be quite as applicable to some other Eastern nations, as to the Arabians; and certainly there are many characteristics which suit the Zelote, according to the hypothesis of many learned Commentators. So Joseph. Bell. Jud. iv. 9, 10. cited by Heinr. γυναικίζόμενοι δὲ τὰς ὄψεις ἐφόνων ταῖς δεξιαῖς· Ἐρπυγόμενοι δὲ τοῖς βαδίσμασιν ἐπίοντες ἐξαπίνης ἐγένοντο πολεμισταί. There are, Bp. Newton thinks, some things here said in allusion to the properties of natural locusts, which well designate horsemen; their heads resembling a horse's head; whence the Italians call them cavallette. On the other hand, Dean Woodh. assigns to the whole a spiritual import; but with far less than his usual success. Ἀρμάτων ἵππων π., “chariots of many horses,” i. e. in which are harnessed many horses; a Genit. of consequence. On the thing itself see Pliny Hist. N. L. ii. 29.

to show that they were pugnacious, ever ready to hurt as well as to spoil. So Pliny Hist. xi. 25. cited by Heinr., says of scorpions: "Semper cauda in ictu est, nulloque momento meditari cessat, ne quando desit occasione." Ἡ ἔξουσία αὐτῶν scil. ἦν, τοῦ, &c.; equivalent to ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς, supra v. 5. Thus ἔξουσία is used, as infra v. 19, of the virtue or power with which nature endues animals.

11. For καὶ ἐν many MSS. have ἐν δὲ, which is adopted by most Editors; but it has the appearance of emendation. Ἀβαδδὼν. Heb. ^{והיה} literally, the destroyer. There is perhaps allusion to Job xxvi. 6. xxviii. 22. and Prov. xv. 11; for there it is joined with ^{והיה} and ^{והיה} as to correspond to the Greek Αἰδῆς. It may here designate Satan, as the instigator of heresy. Professor Lee, however, thinks it designates some tremendous earthly power; and, for many reasons which he assigns, that of ROME, comparing Dan. ix. 25.

12. ἡ οὐαὶ—ταῦτα.] This is supposed by some to be meant to distinguish the woes, and to suggest that some time will elapse between the first, and the second and third. The words may be regarded, with Heinr., as those of the angel exclaiming aloud in the mid-heaven.

13—21. This is by one class of interpreters referred to the victories of Vespasian; by others, to those of the Mahometans; the first woe being, they think, of the Arabian locusts; and the next, of the Euphratean horsemen. Dean Woodhouse, while he admits that this vision may be fitly applied to the irruption of particular Mahometan nations, yet suggests that the symbols of this vision, although more strictly applicable to the first grand irruption by Mahomet and his Saracens, may not unfitly be so applied as to comprehend them all. Prof. Lee, however, refers the idea of the four angels to Dan. vii. 2. And he thinks the angels setting these spirits, or ministers, at liberty, is neither more nor less than an interpretation of the prediction in Daniel. He regards the power spoken of in Dan. vii. 17—26. as beyond all doubt the Roman power.

20. 21. Whatever hypothesis be adopted respecting this vision, it seems evident that these verses designate the state of the Christian world during the period in question, whatever that may be. It seems to mean, that the foregoing plagues of Divine wrath on the corrupt Christian world did not produce reformation; the remnant not abandoning their senseless and idolatrous superstitutions, and the vices attendant thereon. By the τὰ δαιμόνια are meant the spirits of departed saints. Φόνων, namely, of those who opposed their superstitions. Φαρμ. may mean either exorcisms, or pretended miracles (see Gal. v. 20.) or the poisoning of their opposers. Πορν. and κλεμμ. may, with Bp. Newton, be understood of the tolerating of public brothels, and of exactions and impositions.

X. 1. ἄγγελον—στύλοι πυρός.] This description was pronounced by Sir William Jones to be “superior to any thing ever produced by an uninspired writer.” The person described by such sublime imagery has been generally supposed to be either Christ himself, or an emblematical display of his glory. And so Prof. Lee. Dean Woodh., however, supposes this to be the same kind of divine messenger as before, but coming with a more dignified commission.

2. βιβλαρίδιον.] It has been not a little debated what portion of the subsequent matter may be supposed to constitute the contents of this book. The reader is especially referred to Heinrich, Dean Woodh., Mr. Scott, and Prof. Lee. Mr. Valpy, partly from Woodhouse, supposes it to contain no more than the former part of this Chapter, which is an important appendix to the preceding, as it gives a general account of the state of the Western Church during the period of the 5th and 6th trumpets. Then the former subject proceeds, the 7th trumpet is sounded, and a compendious view is given of the subsequent events to the end of the world.

—ἔθηκε τὸν πόδα—γῆν.] Namely, to denote his sovereign authority over the whole terrestrial globe; and also to intimate his intention of spreading the Gospel through every part of it. (Scott.)

4. σφράγισον—γράψῃς.] i. e. “place them among those so sealed by Daniel.” (Prof. Lee.) See Dan. viii. 26. xii. 9. For these prophecies were proper for the knowledge of the Apostle, but not for that of the Church. (Abp. Newcome.)

5. ἤρε τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ, &c.] A gesture anciently used in swearing. See Gen. xiv. 22.

6. ὅτι χρόνος οὐκέτι ἔ.] I cannot but entirely agree with Prof. Scholefield, that neither the common translation, nor another which has been proposed (‘that the time should not be’), gives a satisfactory sense; and that the words ought to be rendered, ‘that there should be no more delay;’ the scope of the passage being, that without any further delay, upon the sounding of the seventh angel, “the mystery of God should be finished.” Such, too, is the view of the sense adopted by Heine and Iaspis, “meaning (says Prof. Lee) that that dispensation which was temporal shall now come to a close.” See Deut. xxxii. 40, 43. and compare Dan. xii. 5—7. Yet this sense of delay cannot, I think, be proved to exist, as they imagine, in the χρόνος. It should rather seem to rest on the ἔσται, which is probably used provincially for ἐνεσται. So Thucyd. i. 80. εἰ δὲ μελετήσομεν καὶ ἀντιπαρεσκευασόμεθα, χρόνος ἐνεσται, "time must intervene;" to omit other passages which I could adduce. Though it is not improbable that St. John wrote οὐκέτ' ἐνεσται. For the common reading ἐπὶ οὐκ there is little or no authority (scarcely more than Erasmus's one wretched MS.): and internal evidence is against it; since it seems to have been an alteration made to elicit the sense contained in our common Version.

7. καὶ ἐτελέσθη.] Bp. Middl., in a learned Note, has satisfactorily proved that the words should be rendered, "and [rather than] the mystery of God shall be finished." This, he shows, is according to the Hebrew idiom of giving to a past tense the sense of a Future, when a Vau Conversive. Thus Judg. iv. 8. "if thou wilt go with me, then I will go," literally, "and I went."

8. ἠνεωγμένον.] Here we have an example of the triple augment in verbs, sometimes found in the later writers. On which see Matth., Winer, and Alt Gr. Gr.

9. κατάρφαγε αὐτό] i. e. meditate on and digest its matter, so as to be able to prophesy still further concerning peoples, &c. See more in Woodh. The words following denote, that the contents would give partly comfort, and partly sorrow, meaning (in the words of Prof. Lee) that it shall give pleasure, peace, and blessedness to the believer in its declarations; but, as to its trials, it foretells them as bitter things indeed: many of them shall be slain, and otherwise tried. See Jer. xv. 16—18. Ezek. ii. 8—10. iii. 1—3, 14.

VOL. II.

XI. 1—14. On these verses there has been much debate; some supposing them to be the contents of the little book; others, to contain prophecies of events in the Christian Church under the 6th trumpet, which are posterior to the taking of Constantinople. Others, again, regard them as a symbolical declaration of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem. The reader is especially referred to the Notes of Woodhouse and Scott, Heinr., and Lee. All are agreed that the symbolical representation in question is formed on what is found in Ezek. xl.—xlv.

1. λέγων.] Before this word the common text has καὶ ὁ ἄγγελος εἰστήκει, which, however, are found in very few MSS., and were evidently supplied to furnish a Nominative case to λέγων; though, indeed, Dean Woodh. thinks it does not require one, since we may refer it either to "the mighty angel" who gave to St. John the little book, or to "the voice from heaven," by which he had been called and directed in the last Chapter. The Vulg. well renders, dictum est mihi. Τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. e. the Church, or body of true believers, as Dr. Woodh. explains. Others, however, interpret differently, according to the particular hypothesis adopted by them.

2. ἔκβαλε ἔξω] i. e. "put out of your measurement, take no account of it." Τὴν πόλιν ἁγ., i. e. the Christian Church. Πατήσουσι. Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Burton object to our common version, "they shall tread under foot," and take the sense to be, "shall walk in," or frequent, as Is. i. 12. compared with Ps. xlv. 4. But the most learned Commentators (and recently Heinr. and Iaspis) take πατ. for καταπατ. or ὑβρίσουσι, as did our Translators; which interpretation is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac S s

The word is used of what is overturned and destroyed in wars and tumults (see Luke xxi. 24. 1 Macc. iv. 60.) also of the profanation of things sacred, as 1 Macc. iii. 45. and Dan. viii. 13. ix. 27.

3. τοῖς δυσὶ μάρτ.] Namely, as the early Commentators supposed, Enoch and Elias. The general opinion, however, is now, that this does not relate to two particular persons, but to all who testify to the truth, i. e. profess a pure religion during the period in question, supposed to be the middle ages. Yet see Prof. Lee. Περιβεβ. σάκκους. More Prophectic. See Heinrichs. Δώσω τοῖς δυσὶ—καὶ προφητ. is Hebrew-Greek for δώσω τοῖς—ἵνα προφητ.

4. αἱ δύο ἐλαίαι.] By these some suppose Zerubbabel and Joshua to be denoted; others, Enoch and Elias. Prof. Lee understands the Law and the Gospel.

—αἱ δύο λυχναὶ] which being fed by the oil of the olive-trees, gave a constant light. (Newc.)

6. οὗτοι ἔχουσι—οὐρανόν.] The best Expositors are agreed that by this is figuratively denoted, that their prayers will bring down judgments on their persecutors; and, generally, that they will have as great an influence in heaven, as the most eminent of the prophets had on earth. See 1 Kings xvii. & xviii.

7. ὅταν τελέσωσι τὴν μαρτυρίαν] i. e. when this succession of witnesses shall have continued as long as the Providence of God may think fit (Newc.); shall have given their testimony completely; i. e. shall have called in the remnant of Israel, and vast numbers from among the heathen. (Lee.) By the Beast at v. 7, Prof. Lee (with the ancient and some eminent modern Commentators) understands the Roman power (alluded to by St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 4.) and the persecution by which the saints shall be brought so near to utter destruction (being considered dead, though not actually buried), to be the tenth and last general persecution, “which (says the author of the Universal History, vol. xv. p. 502) broke out A. D. 303, and raged ten whole years with a fury hardly to be expressed. Such numbers of Christians suffered death in all the provinces, that the tyrants imagining they had compassed their wicked intent, and entirely abolished Christianity, told the world in a pompous, but lying inscription, that they had extinguished the Christian name and superstition, and every where restored the worship of the gods to its former purity and lustre. But the Church triumphed.” On this Prof. Lee remarks, that the lying Inscription alluded to is probably one of those preserved by Gruterus, p. cclxxx. (Græv. Vol. i.), which are as follows: “DIOCLETIANUS. JOVIUS. ET. MAXIMIAN. HERCULEUS. CÆS. AUG. AMPLIFICATO. PER. ORIENTEM. ET. OCCIDENTEM. IMP. ROM. ET. NOMINE. CHRISTIANORUM. DELETO. QUI. REM. EVERTEBANT.”—“DIOCLETIAN. CÆS. AUG. GALERIO. IN. ORIENTE. ADOPT. SUPERSTITIONE. CHRIST. UBIQ. DELETA. ET. CULTU. DEOR. PROPAGATO.”

8. τὰ πτώματα αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τῆς πλατ. τ. πόλ.] An example of the greatest brutality and indignity. Καλεῖται πνευμ., “is mystically called.” So πνευματικὸν at 1 Pet. ii. 5. Σόδ. καὶ Αἴγ. Both are fit types,—the former of lewdness, the latter of intemperance.

9—13. On the prophetic sense of these verses, see Mr. Scott and Dean Woodhouse.

10. δῶρα πέμψ. ἀλλ.] A custom of expressing great joy. See Esth. ix. 22, from which this expression seems taken. Ἐβασάνισαν, viz. by drawing God's judgments on them, vv. 5, 6. Some suppose an allusion to 1 Kings xviii. 17. (Newc.) On the events which were to take place after the 1268 days, as stated in vv. 7—13, interpreters are by no means agreed. With the accomplishment of these the 2d woe-trumpet terminates; and the 7th trumpet, or the 3d woe-trumpet, begins to sound, as described in vv. 14—18. On the purport, however, of these, equal diversity of opinion exists. It should seem, as Dr. Burton supposes, that they refer to a future extension of the Gospel.

17. εἴληφας τὴν δύν.] "thou hast taken to thee this great strength." So Is. li. 9. ἐνδύσας τὴν ἰσχὴν τοῦ βραχίονός σου.

18. ὠργίσθησαν] "they were rebellious and contumacious." Ps. xcix. 1. Ἦλθεν ἡ ὀργή σου, &c. Supply ἐπ' αὐτά. The imagery seems derived from Ps. ii. 2. seqq., applied in a similar manner at Acts iv. 26. sq. It is well observed by Heinr. that the σου is emphatical, q. d. "ultionem meditatus est Jona, et ejus ὀργή contra illorum ὀργὴν insurrexit (per paronomas, ut infra διαφθεῖραι τοὺς διαφθ.)" In the words following, the construction is harsh, and the mode of expression obscurely brief. The sense may, with Heinr., be fully evolved as follows: καιρὸς ἐστὶ, νεκροῖς μὲν (δούλοις σου) τοῦ κριθῆναι, σοὶ δὲ, ὁ Θεός, καιρὸς ἐστὶ τοῦ δοῦναι μισθὸν αὐτοῖς, καὶ σοὶ ἐστὶ καιρὸς τοῦ διαφθεῖραι τοὺς διαφθειρόντας. It is not clear whether διαφθειρόντας there is to be taken of destruction by wars and persecutions, or figuratively, of corrupting by false doctrines, and evil examples.

XII. 1. With this ought to have been joined the 19th verse of the preceding Chapter, as being introductory of a new subject, "containing (says Prof. Lee) another exhibition of the difficulties, judgment, &c., attendant on the propagation of the Gospel." Of that verse the first clause probably has reference to a Jewish opinion, as to what should take place at the coming of the Messiah (see Note on Heb. ix. 15.): but the sentiment (which is, as Iaspis says, expressed graphically) is this, that "now there is an universal access to the favour of God, and that the highest rewards in heaven await the pious worshippers of God." In the latter clause the purport of the sublime imagery introduced is not clear. See Bp. Newton. Mr. Holden thinks that "the visions in this and the two following Chapters run parallel with that relative to the prophesying of 'the two witnesses' in the foregoing Chapter." "A number (continues he) of additional particulars are introduced, but they all relate to the period of 1260 prophetic years included in the little book, and describe the state and circumstances of the true faith under the prevalence and persecutions of the great apostasy in the Western Empire."

— περιβεβλημένη τὸν ἥλιον—δώδεκα.] By the γυνή some suppose to be meant the Jewish Church: but it should rather seem to be, as others think, the Christian Church, whose heavenly origin is designated by the sublimely figurative phraseology subjoined, which is supposed to be derived from Gen. xxxvii. 9. See Reiff on Artemid. iv. 49. No. 1. Compare also Gal. iv. 19. Or these emblems may, as Abp. Newcome thinks, denote the light of truth, the subjection of all sublunary things, and a bright and everlasting crown. The twelve stars may have a reference to the twelve Apostles, xxi. 14.

2. ὠδίνουσα.] The Church may be viewed from its first beginning, when the promise of a Redeemer was given to our first parents: and the expectation of this promise being fulfilled, is expressed in this verse. See Micah v. 3. Rom. viii. 22. (Woodh. and Burton.)

3. ἔχων κεφαλὰς—διαδήματα.] All meant to suggest mighty power among the kingdoms of the earth.

4. Ἡ οὐρὰ αὐτοῦ σύρει—οὐρανοῦ there seems to be an allusion to the notion of a comet proceeding across the heaven. "Ἰνα καταφάγῃ," "that he may utterly destroy."

5. ποιμαίνειν—ῥάβδῳ σιδηρᾷ] i. e. finally subdue all her enemies, on some of whom God will execute signal vengeance. (Newc.)

6. ἔφυγεν εἰς τὴν ἔρ.] A circumstance supposed to be derived from the flight of the Virgin Mary into Egypt with the infant Jesus. The mystical sense is disputed. But after all, Prof. Lee may be nearest the truth in supposing nothing more to be meant than "God's faithfulness in never losing sight of his own promise."

7—9. A visionary scene presented to the mind of St. John, of which the allegory is variously interpreted: but perhaps best by Bp. Horsley (after Mede, Newton, and Newc.) as representing the vehement struggles between Christianity and Paganism during the first ages of the Gospel. "The Angels (continues he) of the two opposite armies represent, in a figurative description, two opposite parties in the Roman State, at the time which the vision more particularly regards. Michael's angels are the party who espoused the side of the Christian religion, the friends of which had, for many years, been numerous, and became very powerful under Constantine: the dragon's angels are the party which endeavoured to support the old idolatry." Dr. Burton, however, renders the καὶ ἐγένετο πόλ., "Now there had been war;" and thinks that vv. 7—13, are parenthetical, and relate to an event prior to that in the preceding verses. "It accounts (he says) for the hostility of Satan to the Church of Christ." In this view I am inclined to coincide, and have divided accordingly.

9. καὶ ἐβλήθη, &c.] A spirited symbolical representation of the complete victory of Christianity over Heathenism.

10. ὁ κατήγορος τῶν ἀδ. ἡ.] See James i. 6—12. ii. 1—7. and Notes. For κατήγορος the Alexandrine MS. has κατήγορ, which is edited by Griesb., Knapp, and others: but rashly; for though it may seem more likely to be true, as presenting a very uncommon form; yet the vast preponderance of external evidence (namely, that of all the other MSS.) must forbid its being received. Besides, internal evidence may be urged for κατήγορος; since it is not improbable, that in the MS. from which the Alexandrian was transcribed, the termination had been inadvertently omitted, or was faded away, or eaten away by a worm. I have myself observed in the MSS. of Thucydides which I have collated, that sometimes the terminations of words, often expressed above the last letter of the syllable preceding, have been omitted through inadvertence, or because not found in the original. Besides, the anomalies in this book are not so much in the forms of words, as in their constructions. I must not omit to observe, that as to Griesb. and Matthæi's cancelling the κατ in κατεβλήθη, it might arise from the κατ following; but it is probably genuine; and the writer (in other places antithetical) seems to have intended a paronomasia between κατεβλήθη and κατήγορος. So St. Paul (Acts xxiii. 3.) on the High Priest's ordering his apparitors to smite him on the mouth, says, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall."

11. οὐκ ἠγάπησαν τὴν ψυχὴν α. ἄ. θ.] The phraseology is Hebraic, and obscure from brevity. The sense is, "they were careless of life, even unto hazarding death." Bp. Middl. cannot imagine why our Translators used the uncouth phrase, "unto the death," especially as they were not led to it by the original. Had the learned Prelate been as conversant with our old English authors as he was with the Classical writers, he would have been at no loss to see why the Article should here have been used. It was an idiom in frequent use formerly. So Hackluyt says, of Chancellor's voyage to Russia, and the attempt to bring about a commercial treaty with great Britain, "he resolved either to bring that to passe, or els to die the death."

15—17. These verses are variously interpreted. See Scott and Woodh. The sense may simply be that "The enemies of unadulterated Christian truth took different ways to subdue it: and particularly by endeavouring to, as it were, drown and stifle it by a flood of opposition and persecution, direct and indirect. But God raised up, from time to time, many who supported the faithful disciples of Christ."

XIII. On the contents of this and the next Chapter, considerable diversity of opinion exists; especially as to the explanation of particular symbols, and their application to particular events. The best Expositors, however, are in general agreed that there is a reference to Papal Rome, and the Papal religion, as opposed to the pure Church of Christ. However, the reader may profitably consult Prof. Lee's remarks on this Chapter, who adduces reasons for regarding it as "a recital of the attacks to be made upon the Church and people of God by Daniel's fourth monarchy." The beast rising out of the sea, he thinks, beyond all doubt, nothing more than Daniel's fourth beast, vii. 7. See also 8. 25. xi. 36—38. Of course, he understands the whole of the Roman power, civil and religious, as associated to destroy Christianity.

3. ἐθαύμασε—θηρίον.] Here we have a blending of two forms of expression; and the full sense is, "the whole world surveyed the beast with admiration and went after him." So John xii. 19. ὁ κόσμος [ὅλος, added in many MSS. and Versions] ὀπίσω αὐτοῦ ἀπῆλθεν.

8. The meaning of this verse is, that "the world shall be divided between his kingdom and that of Christ, the names of whose faithful followers are written in the Book of life. See Dan. xii. 1. Phil. iv. 3. For τὸ ὄνομα the common reading is τὰ ὀνόματα. The former, however, is preferable, being better supported by authority external and internal.

9, 10. The believer's attention is arrested: and we are told that he (this power) that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. (Is. xxxiii.) Which, it is added, is a theme for the faith and patience of THE SAINTS. (Lee.)

10. Εἴ τις αἶχμ. συνάγει ["if any man collect a number of captives." See Eph. iv. 8. The instruction suggested is (to use the words of Abp. Newc.), that the truly good will keep themselves uncorrupted by this idolatrous power; and that the cruelties exercised by these persecutors will be retaliated on them. "Ὡδέ ἐστίν—ἀγίων," Here, in this matter, in resisting this enemy (see v. 7.) is scope for the exercise of faith and patience in holy men." (Newc.)

11, 12. ἄλλο θηρίον. Emblematical, it is supposed, of the Romish hierarchy; the two horns being supposed by Newc. to denote the regular and the secular clergy. Many points of similarity in the following verses with the Romish hierarchy and ecclesiastics, have been traced by Newc., Faber, and other Commentators. But see Lee.

17. καὶ ἵνα μὴ τις δύν. ἀγορ.] "and that men might not [have the power to] buy;" simply denoting a deprivation of political privileges, or of the intercourse of society. So Thucyd. v. 34., ὥστε μήτε πριαμένους τι ἢ πωλοῦντας κυρίους εἶναι.

— τὸν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ ὄν.] "This passage is to be explained from the Cabbala of the Jews. It means the number which is made up, by reducing the numeral power of each of the letters, of which the name is composed, and bringing it to a sum total. That art, now held in merited contempt, was in the time of the Apostle held in great honour, not only among the Jews, but also the Greeks, as we may collect from Artemid. Oneir. i. 12." Heinrich. See more in his elaborate Excursus IV. on the whole passage. The sense is, "Herein is wisdom to be shown," i. e. herein is a test of wisdom or sagacity. A similar ellipsis is observable in 1 John iv. 10. ἐν τούτῳ ἐστιν ἡ ἀγάπη, and especially supra v. 10. ὁδὲ ἐστίν ἡ ὑπομονή: q. d. "Herein is a fit occasion for evincing the patience and faith of the saints."

mad and unbounded idolatry; which is compared

hereafter are threatened. (Newc.) In καὶ αὐτὸς πίνεται there is, as Heindr. remarks, an antiphrasis; q. d. “He had before a cup of inebriating sweetness; but now he will drink the cup of Divine wrath in full draught.” See Jer. xxv. 15. Is. li. 17 & 22. Κεκερασ. ἀκράτου. The best Commentators are agreed, that this denotes pure wine made yet stronger by a mixture of powerful ingredients. See Lowth on Isa. p. 14. Wakef. Crit. iii. 186, and Woodh. in loc. So Ps. lxxiv. 8. (Sept.) ποτήριον οἶνον ἀκράτου πλήρης κεράσματος.

12. ὦδε—ἐστίν.] The sense is: “In these circumstances will be the trial of the patience and perseverance of Christ’s faithful disciples. (Newc.) In hac re cernitur caussa, ob quam ὑπομονή, constans perseverantia, adhibenda est ab ἁγίοις. Vid. 2 Tim. iv. 7. Οἱ τηροῦντες, per anacoluton pro τῶν τηρούντων. (Heindr.) See Note supra xiii. 17.

13. Heindr. here recognises an anticipation of an objection,—that this ὑπομονή may bring us in peril of our lives. To which the answer is, that they must not betray the faith, even to save life; and, for their consolation, they are assured, on the highest authority,—an authority which orders it to be put on record for an everlasting remembrance henceforward—that Blessed, &c. At ἐν Κυρίῳ supply ὄντες. For ἀπάρτι some read ἀπαρτί, and construe it with μακ. But thus a frigid sense arises: it is simply for ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, “from this period.” In ἵνα ἀναπ. the ἵνα is, as Heindr. observes, used ἐκβατικῶς, and is nearly equivalent to ὅτι. With τὰ δὲ ἔργα—αὐτῶν, Wets. compares Soph. Phil. 1437. οὐ γὰρ εὐσέβεια συνθῆσκει βροτοῖς.

14—20. Here again the judgments of God upon [Babylon and] the adherents of the beast are foretold, and represented under the figures of harvest and vintage, often, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, symbolical of destruction. See Joel iii. 18. Isa. xvi. 5. Jer. viii. 3. Hom. Il. λ. 67. Virg. Æn. x. 513. The Messiah is represented under the similitude of a husbandman, committing the work of reaping to his labourers; and holding in his own hand a sickle, as a symbol of punishment, the execution of the judgment committed to him by the Father, John v. 22. The figure in ἐπὶ τὴν νεφ. καθ. is found also in Dan. vii. 13, and Virg. Æn. ix. 640. (Heindr.)

observed by Bp. Jebb, Sac. Lit., p. 387, that these two clauses are not [as they may seem] synonymous in sense; the reasons for reaping being distinct and progressive: 1. the proper season for reaping is come; 2. the harvest of the earth is withered, and therefore demands the sickle. At v. 17. ult. there is, as Heinr. observes, the other part of the image; q. d. "Not only is the harvest ripe, but the vintage is ready:" the image being similar to that at Is. lxiii. 3, and Jer. vi. 9. It may seem strange, that a sickle should be mentioned for the vintage; but hence it should seem that the grapes were sometimes not taken by the hand, but cut off by a hooked knife of the form of a sickle.

20. In ἐξῆλθε αἷμα ἐκ τῆς ληνοῦ there is, as often, a blending of the thing itself with the thing thereby signified: and, indeed, αἷμα might be used of the blood; i. e. juice of the grape. See Gen. xlix. 11. In ἄχρι τῶν χαλ. there is a fine hyperbole, of which examples are adduced by the Commentators, especially from the Rabbinical writers.

XV. Up to this Chapter we have proceeded, under the guidance of past events, with considerable satisfaction: but here that direction almost wholly fails us. Destitute of this, we need not wonder at the evident inability of Expositors to make any regular or consistent application of the subsequent Chapters, except as coincident with those things which have been already considered.

The present Chapter introduces the seven Vials, all of which fall under the seventh Trumpet, as the seven trumpets were included under the seventh seal: for they contain the seven last plagues, in which the wrath of God is filled up, or accomplished, on the persecuting idolatrous power, assuming the name of Christian. These plagues must, therefore, be coincident with the last woe-trumpet; in great measure at least. Before he sees the effects of the ministry of the seven angels, who had it in charge to inflict the seven last plagues, the Apostle records an introductory vision, representing the joy and triumph which the Church would express on that occasion. (Scott.) Nearly the same view is taken by Prof. Lee.

2. θάλασσαν ὑαλίνην] i. e. a large crystalline laver, like a pellucid pavement, similar to the sea in Solomon's Temple. The fire in it (also part of the temple-furniture) is supposed to denote the anger of God about to be displayed. By νικῶντας ἐκ τοῦ θηρίου Heinr. proves, is meant not victorious over the beast, but victorious after having escaped the power of the beast,—there being a constructio praeognans thus to be resolved: νικῶντας (for νενικηκότας) τὸ θηρίον, καὶ σωθέντας ἐξ αὐτοῦ.—Ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν. Not on, but by the sea, as Professor Scholefield renders.

3, 4. ᾠδὴν Μωϋσ.] i. e. a song of triumph similar to that sung by him, on the children of Israel being delivered from Egyptian bondage, Exod. xv. (Heinr.); and formed, observe Heinr. and Vater, chiefly from phrases in Ps. lxxxvi. 9; cxi. 2; cxxxix. 14. Deut. xxxii. 4. Jer. x. 7. Ἐθνῶν for ἀγίων is adopted by almost all Editors, on strong evidence, external and internal. The ᾠδὴ τοῦ Ἀρνίου is generally supposed to designate the "new song" above-mentioned in honour of the Lamb.

6—8. The seven angels coming forth from the tabernacle of God in the temple, showed that these judgments would be executed on the enemies of the Church, in mercy to the people of God; while the white clothing and golden girdles, worn by these ministers of vengeance, represented their holiness, and the righteousness and excellency of these awful dispensations. The living creature, an emblem of the Gospel ministry, giving the vials to the angels, implied, that the preaching of the truth would be instrumental in bringing the judgments, which were written, upon anti-christian opposers: and the temple being filled with smoke, showed the darkness of those dispensations; and the horror, which would envelop the enemies of God, whilst these plagues were executing. (Scott.)

XVI. We have here described the pouring out of the seven vials, on which the opinions of Commentators are very various, but Bp. Newton's view seems to be the best founded—because the most sober,—namely, that “as the trumpets were so many steps and degrees of the ruin of the Roman Empire; so are the vials of the ruin of the Roman Church. See also Dean Woodhouse and Mr. Scott. I am, however, rather inclined to agree with Prof. Lee, that these plagues of the vials seem to be nothing more than a repetition of, and partly a supplement to those.

1. ἐκχέετε.] By the pouring out of these vials, Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Burton understand generally the punishments inflicted upon the enemies and persecutors of the Church.

2. ἐγένετο ἔλκος κακόν, &c.] Meaning that the calamity will resemble that inflicted on Egypt, as recorded in Exod. ix. 8—11. See also Deut. xxviii. 35.

3. καὶ ἐγένετο αἷμα ὡς νεκ.] Simil. Exod. vii. 18—21. The vision (as Abp. Newc. says) portends great effusion of blood, and destruction. “Tanquam (says Heinr.) si cruore et tabe cadaverum infestum esset mare.”

4. πηγὰς τῶν ὑδ.] water-springs or fountains. The expression occurs also at vii. 17. xxi. 6. John iv. 14. and Æsch. Soc. Dial. iii. 20; but rarely elsewhere.

5. ἀγγέλου τῶν ὑδ.] From the Rabbinical writers (see Schoettg. Hor. Hebr.) it appears that the Jews were accustomed to assign to every part of creation its peculiar angel. “Ὅτι ταῦτα ἔκρινας,” because thou hast thus executed judgment.” Δίκαιος—Ὁσος is well rendered by

Newc. "just art thou—the Being that is and that was, the Holy One."

6. αἷμα αὐτοῖς ἔδωκας πιεῖν] i e. "thou hast ordained that they shall have enough of that which they so much loved." So Queen Tomyris, after defeating and taking prisoner Cyrus, ordered his head to be cut off and thrown into a vessel full of human blood, with the words: "Satisfy thyself with the blood thou thirstedst after." The same figure of drinking blood, for shedding it, is found not only in the Prophets of the O. T., but in the Classical writers. So Soph. Elect. 783. τοῦμόν ἐκπίνουσ' αἰ Ψυχῆς ἄκρατον αἷμα. See also Joseph. p. 1238. Huds.

A lively and graphic description of desperate and rabid fury.

12. ἵνα ἐτοιμασθῇ—ἡλίου.] The Euphrates is the great natural barrier to Syria and Palestine, against any hostile attacks from the more Eastern countries of Persia and others.

13. τοῦ ψευδοπ.] The Σηρίου described at xiii. 11—17. Ὡς βάτραχοι. These seem to designate persons falsely pretending to miracles, and characterized by vain-glory and impudence. So Artemid. ii. 15. cited by Heinr. βάτραχοι ἀνδρας γόητας καὶ βωμολόχους προσημαίνουσι.

14. εἰς τὸν πόλεμον—μεγάλης.] The full sense is, "to go out to war, on the great day [of combat] against Almighty God."

15. ἰδοὺ, ἔρχομαι ὡς κλέπτης—αὐτοῦ.] The predictions are here suspended, in order to inculcate a suitable and weighty admonition, reminding those whom it concerned,—and, in some measure, all others,—that, in times of such great temptation, the professed servants of Christ are called upon to be more than ordinarily watchful (for watching is their duty, and prayer their strength), expecting his second coming; that they may be found in the garments of salvation, and not be surprised naked, as apostates or hypocrites, and so be put to shame by rejection. See Luke xii. 39. compared with 1 Thess. v. 2. 2 Pet. iii. 10. also Matth. xxiv. 50. xxv. 13. St. John seems here to have had in mind Gen. ix. 22, where Aquila and Symm. render: εἶδε τὴν ἀσχημοσύνην τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ, and Heb. ii. 16. Comp.

also Gen. ix. 22. The usual prophetic formula λέγει ὁ Κύριος is here omitted, as easy to be supplied.

16. Ἀρμαγεδών.] This has been variously interpreted; either "the mountain of Megiddo," מגידו, denoting, figuratively, the mountain of destruction, with allusion to the great slaughter there (Judg. v. 19. 2 Kings xxiii. 29.); or "the dry mountainous tract," such as the Jews supposed to be the abode of demons.

17. ἐπὶ τὸν ἀέρα] as the seat of the dominion of the Devil, called in Eph. ii. 2. ὁ ἀρχὸν τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος.

— γέγονε] "actum est, fuit urbs!" An awful fiat from Him who "spake, and it was done; who commanded, and it stood fast." Ps. xxxiii. 9. "Here (observes Prof. Lee) the chain of particular prophecy ends. The purposes of God regarding his Church and the heathen are now all fulfilled (see x. 6, 7. xi. 15. xvi. 17. Dan. vii. 7.), the full time of THE END is come. The remnant of Israel has been sealed; innumerable multitudes out of ALL NATIONS have been added to the Church (vii. 3—17.); the heavens had received Christ, until this glorious restitution of lost man had fully taken place (Acts iii. 21.); and now (v. 15.) he comes as a thief, and destroys his adversaries, both Jew and heathen; and his kingdom, which is to last for ever, is firmly established."

19. ἐμνήσθη] "was remembered [for visitation and punishment]." See xviii. 5. and 3 John 10. 20. πᾶσα νῆσος—χάλαζα—ὡς ταλ.] Hyperbolic expressions, but denoting the greatness of these Divine judgments.

XVII. This and the next Chapter seem a continuation of the prophetic description of the events under the seventh vial; but they may be a kind of recapitulation, of what concerns "the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters," which judgment might be to take place previously. (Holden.) Mr. Scott considers this Chapter as parenthetical in the course of the prophecy; to show what was meant by great Babylon, which was to be destroyed. In this view Prof. Lee coincides; comparing a similar recapitulation, for illustration, in Dan. Ch. xi. He does not, however, with most other Commentators, consider Babylon to designate the great Western apostasy, Popery: neither does he, with most Foreign Commentators, take it to regard the Roman Empire only; but Heathen Rome, considered both in its political and religious character. And this he undertakes to prove at large, with considerable ability at least, if not success.

1. καθημένης ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδ. τῶν πολλῶν.] The sense seems to be, "at or near much water," as of the sea, or a mighty river, like the Euphrates. The expression is derived from Jerem. li. 13, where Babylon is so described. By this sitting upon many waters, however, should seem, from the angel's own explanation at v. 15, to be meant ruling over many peoples and nations; and that, it appears, as derived from the power and influence over many nations, which the commanding situation of Babylon, as the Great Emporium of the East, would give her.

2. μεθ' ἧς ἐπόρν. i. e. imitated her fornication or spiritual adultery. By the οἱ κατοικοὶ τὴν γῆν seem to be meant those persons, of all nations, whom the commerce of the world brought in great numbers. That these should be intoxicated and maddened with her furious idolatries, was to be expected. The imagery is derived from Jerem. li. 7.

3. ἐν πνεύματι] scil. ὄντα. Prof. Lee takes the description here to designate regal pomp, at the same time teeming with the doctrines of error and resistance to the true God. By the seven heads and ten horns he understands great wisdom and power. See xii. 3. In v. 4. (he adds) we have the wealth and abomination of this state symbolically depicted; and in v. 5. its character is so given, as to leave no doubt that the great Head of idolatry is meant; and at v. 6 the insatiate rage of this state against Christ's followers is intimated.

4. τὰ ἀκάθαρτα τῆς.] The common reading ἀκαθάρτητος τῆς is of scarcely any manuscript authority, and indeed is contrary to analogy; while the adopted reading, on the other hand, offends against grammatical construction. So that there is only a choice of difficulties. In such a case, the authority of MSS. has peculiar weight; though in the present instance I suspect that all the copies are wrong; and thus the forthcoming new collations of Scholz will be most acceptable. The true reading I believe to be τῶν ἀκαθάρτων, "the impurities."

5. ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον—γεγρ.] After the custom of harlots, to have their name written on their forehead.

—μυστήριον.] It is justly observed by Heinr. that this is not a part of the inscription, but is said by apposition; and is to be construed, in an adjective sense, with ὄνομα, as if it were ὄνομα μυστικὸν or μυστηριώδες. The name BABYLON inscribed on her forehead is not to be understood, properly, of Babylon itself, but μυστικῶς, καὶ μεταφορικῶς (xi. 8.) of another city. On μυστ. see Note on 2 Thess. ii. 5.

6. μεθύουσιν—ἀγίων.] So Deut. xxxii. 42. μεθύσω τὰ βέλη μου ὑφ' αἵματος. Many examples of the metaphor might also be adduced from the Classical writers.

7. τὸ μυστήριον τῆς γυναικὸς, &c.] i. e. the hidden meaning couched under the representation in question. Τοῦ ἔχοντος—κέρατα. These words clearly point out ROME to be meant.

8. οὐκ ἔστι] i. e. shall soon cease to be. Μέλλει ἀναβαίνειν ἐκ τῆς ἀβ., namely, to make war upon the saints. See ix. 2. xi. 7. The words following contain an impressive mode of expressing the result of that warfare.

—βλέπόντων] scil. αὐτῶν, "they seeing;" for ὁρῶντων, Genit. absolute. The common reading βλέποντες is a mere alteration for plainness' sake.

—καίπερ ἔστιν.] Several MSS. have καὶ πάρεσται, which is adopted by Wets., Griesb., Matthæi, and all Editors since their time. But I doubt whether this reading be not, as Prof. Lee supposes, an alteration to remove a difficulty; which, however, is not very great, since the clause may be rendered, with Prof. Lee, "the beast which was, or has been, but continues not (i. e. shall not continue) although he [now] exists."

9. ὥδε ὁ νοῦς—σοφίαν.] See supra xiii. 10. 18. xiv. 12. The sense, however, is disputed. It is probably, as Iaspis expresses it, "In his enodandis cerni potest ingenii acumen." Heinr., however, by ὁ νοῦς understands the allegorical meaning of this emblem; and in σοφίαν ἔχει ὥδε, the ὥδε, he thinks, may be taken for οὕτως or τῆνδε; q. d. "the interpretation of this, and, indeed, of the following visions, will exercise the ingenuity of the inquirer;" or (if ἔχει be supposed to be, as often, for παρέχει), "will make thee wise, by affording thee an opportunity of exercising thy ingenuity," equivalent to what is said at xiii. 18. The fulfilment of the predictions here is traced variously, according to the hypothesis adopted. The reader is especially referred to Bp. Newton and Prof. Lee.

11. ὃ ἦν—ἐστὶ] viz. that did exist under his former heads, and does not do so any longer, but exists under another form. (Holden.)

13. μίαν γνώμην ἔχ.] "will be of one mind." 14. Κύριος κυρίων—βασιλ.] A plain assertion of the Divinity of our Lord.

16, 17. These verses contain strong metaphors, importing utter destruction.

XVIII. We have in this Chapter nothing more than another Revelation, given for the purpose, perhaps, of marking out with greater strength the certain fall of heathen Rome. The terms are in many cases taken from the ancient prophets, for reasons already detailed; and, as the marginal references in the common Bibles will point these out, they need not now be dwelt upon. (Lee.)

1. ἄλλον ἄγγελον.] Or rather Christ himself, or an emblematical representation of him.

2. ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσε, &c.] Compare Is. xxi. 9. The destruction of this spiritual Babylon is vividly represented by imagery derived from what usually accompanies utter destruction in great Oriental capitals; for, in the East, the desertion of the habitations by man soon makes them the resort of the wild animals of every kind,—partly beasts, but chiefly birds, as the testimony of all travellers in oriental countries attests: and not only of those, but, according to the notions of the Jews, of evil spirits, which were supposed to choose their habitation in all desert places. Comp. Is.

Καὶ ἤκουσα ἄλλην φωνὴν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λέγουσαν· 4 Ἐξέλθετε ἐξ αὐτῆς, ὁ λαὸς μου, ἵνα μὴ συγκοινωνήσητε ταῖς ἀμαρτίαις αὐτῆς, καὶ ἵνα μὴ λάβητε ἐκ τῶν πληγῶν αὐτῆς! ὅτι * ἐκολλήθησαν αὐτῆς αἱ ἀμαρτίαι ἄχρι 5 τοῦ οὐρανοῦ· καὶ ἐμνημόνευσεν ὁ Θεὸς τὰ ἀδικήματα αὐτῆς.

xiii. 20. xxxiv. 11. Φυλακὴ, haunt or lurking place. Μεμισ., "hateful," because the unclean birds were held in especial abhorrence by the Jews.

3. Here is given the reason why this ruin has overtaken the city. Στρήνους. See Note on I Tim. v. 11. With this compare a similar passage in Is. xxiii. 8. with respect to Tyre.

4. ἐξέλθετε ἐξ αὐτῆς, &c.] Compare Jer. li. 6. Numb. xvi 26. 2 Cor. vi. 17.

5. ἐκολλήθησαν.] This, for the common reading ἡκολούθησαν, is found in very many MSS. and early Edd., and has been adopted by Wets., Griesb., Matth., Tittm., Heinr., and Vat., rightly; for though the common reading be suitable, yet the other is the much stronger term, and bears the stamp of truth in its very harshness yet bold propriety. So Heinr. remarks: "Adherent illis ad iudicem celestem proficiscentibus peccata tenacissimè, perpetui comites et accusatores. Gen. xviii. 20, 21. infr. xix. 13. et Odys. O. 328. τῶν ὕβρις τε, βίη τε, σιδήρειον οὐρανὸν ἤκει. Cf. Jer. li. 18." Indeed, the reading is confirmed by Jer. li. 9, from which passage the whole of the first clause of this verse is taken; since ἡκολούθησαν might be rendered ἐκολλήθησαν, but not ἡκολούθησαν. The words, too, might easily be confounded by copyists, who would be likely, as usual, to take the more usual term. Ἐμνημ. See Note at xvi. 9.

6. Here they are enjoined not only to avoid communication with her, as accursed, but to avenge her fornications and seductions, and that by a double retaliation; which is expressed in the strong figures found also in Jer. l. 15; xvi. 18. For ἀπέδωκε I conjecture should be read ἐπέδωκε, "gave unto;" a sense not unfrequent. See Steph. Thes.

7. ἐστρηνίασε] "hath played the lascivious wanton." See Note on I Tim. v. 11. Κάθημαι βασίλισσα—ἴδω. All images of serenity and peace. Comp. Is. xlvii. 7 & 8. Ez. xxvii. 3.

8. ἐν μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ] i. e. suddenly and at once. 11. τὸν γόμον.] The word signifies a freight or freighted merchandize. With the whole passage compare Ezek. xxvii.

very similar one, (introduced for the same purpose,) in Is. iii. 16—24. The importation of every kind of luxury from all countries into Rome is well known. And here I would observe, that what Pericles (Thucyd. ii. 38.) says figuratively of Athens, was literally true of Rome: ἐπιστρέφεται δὲ, διὰ μέγεθος τῆς πόλεως, ἐκ πάσης γῆς τὰ πάντα. — θύϊνον] “of citron,” or some other such odoriferous wood.

13. καὶ ἄμωμον.] A sort of aromatic perfume, on which see Schleus. Lex. The word is not found in some MSS., being, no doubt, omitted per homœoteleuton. Σεμίδαλιν, “the finest flour.” Καὶ κτήνη—ψυχὰς ἀνθρ. Prof. Scholef. renders: “And sheep, and the merchandize of horses, and of chariots, and of slaves, and souls of men;” remarking that the transition from the accusative to the genitive, after the genitive had been used in the beginning of the sentence, is so remarkable that there must be some reason for it, and it ought to be expressed in a translation. He understands γόμον from γόμον χρυσοῦ in the preceding verse. Such, too, is the opinion of Heinr., who, moreover, remarks on ψυχὰς: “Hæc vox spectat ad mancipia, uti ϞϞ ϞϞ Ezek. xxvii. 13. de mancipiis adhibetur, et in Polyb. Excerpt., p. 1486. adest: κύριος οὐ μόνον τοῦ σώματος, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς (vitæ physica, non πνευματικῆς) et nos perinde loquimur Seelenverkäufer.”

14. ἡ ὁπώρα] “the rich fruits.” An emblem of luxury.

17. πᾶς κυβερν.] See my Note on Thucyd. (Edit.) Vol. i. 163; ii. 126. With respect to the controverted expression πᾶς ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων, it might be shown, by many proofs from the Classical writers, (see my Note above, and on Acts xxvii. 11,) that the meaning of it must be “every supercargo.” The ὁ ὅμιλος after πλοίων has but slender authority, and is evidently (as Matth. and others suppose) from the margin; notwithstanding the learned demur made by Bp. Middl. “Ὅσοι τὴν θάλασσαν ἐργ. is not a mere Hellenistic phrase, but occurs also in the later Classical writers.

10. προσκυνῆσαι αὐτῷ.] Intending merely an act of civil honour, or homage. But the angel declined it with humility, and with a wise and prophetic caution. (Abp. Newc.) See Bp. Bull's Def. Fid., pp. 30, 31.

—ἡ γὰρ μαρτυρία—τῆς προφητείας.] The best interpretation I have seen of this passage is that of J. F. à Stade, given by Wolfius; it supposes the angel to say: "Do not offer me the worship due to God; I am unworthy of the honour, since I am not superior to yourself, but exercise the same function. We both testify of Christ; you to the present generation, I to posterity. Wherefore, love me as a brother and fellow-labourer, but do not worship me as God." If this be the meaning of a text, which has created much dispute, and nothing, I think, can be more clear and satisfactory, we have here a convertible proposition. "Ἡ μαρτυρία τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, the office of an Apostle which you fill, says the angel, and τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς προφητείας exercised by me, are not different in value or dignity, but are one and the same thing." (Bp. Middl.)

XX. 1—3. In the foregoing Chapter the termination of all open opposition to the Gospel, and the dreadful punishment of all those who had introduced, supported, or concurred in the idolatrous corruptions before described, are most clearly predicted. But while the instruments of mischief had been cut off, the great agent was still at liberty; and he would surely excite fresh disturbances, or produce new delusions, if not prevented. The Apostle had, therefore, a vision emblematical of the restraints which would be laid on Satan himself. It is here implied that Christ, with omnipotence and absolute authority, will restrain "the devil and his angels," even all his legions of evil spirits, from deceiving mankind in general, or any part of them, into idolatry, impiety, heresy, and wickedness, as he has hitherto done. (Scott.)

no particular nations are meant; but that these are only names designating bodies of men, inimical to the Gospel.

14. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ δεῦτ. θάνατος.] Render, "This is death and hades," in other words, "the death which consists in the separation of the soul from the body, and the state of souls intervening between death and judgment, shall be no more." To the wicked these shall be succeeded by a more terrible death, the second death, the damnation of Gehenna, hell properly so called. Indeed, in this sacred book, the commencement, as well as the destruction, of this intermediate state, are so clearly marked, as to render it almost impossible to mistake them. In vi. 8. we learn that hades follows close at the heels of death; and from this passage that both are involved in one common ruin at the universal judgment. (Campbell.)

XXI. In this and the following Chapter is described in glowing imagery (formed on that of the Prophets of the O. T.) the bliss of the righteous in heaven, after the resurrection and judgment: unless, with some Expositors (especially those who maintain a literal resurrection at the beginning of the Millennium, and the personal reign of Christ on earth for a thousand years) we understand these concluding Chapters of the state of the Church during the MILLENNIUM. The best Expositors, however, are, in general, agreed that the only passage of Scripture which speaks of this Millennium (namely, xx. 4—6.) is to be taken in a figurative acceptation; consequently, that the present Chapters are to be understood of time subsequent to the general judgment. This, I think, has been proved, and by no one more ably than by Mr. Scott. Thus, as Newc. observes, "the new heaven and earth, and the new Jerusalem, are emblematical of the glory and happiness which will be the reward and happiness of good men for ever."

5. ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ τοῦ θρ.] This is either the Father, or his great Representative.

6. Compare Ch. i. and ii. Γέγονε. Equivalent to τετέλεσται, "all things are brought to a consummation." Τῆς πηγῆς τοῦ ὕδ. τ. ζ. A perennial spring of running water, as Newc. observes, is a fit emblem of happiness and immortality.

9. τὴν νύμφην, &c.] Meaning the Church of Christ in a state of glory and bliss.

11. τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ] the Schechinah. On the description which follows, see Bp. Newton, Dean Woodh., and Bp. Lowth on Is. liv. 11. I would point out (since the thing seems not properly understood by Commentators) that at v. 14. the θεμελίους δώδεκα denote twelve courses of foundation stones, called by Aristoph. Av. 1136. θεμέλιοι λίθοι. They were sometimes called δόμοι. Thus in Herodotus's description of the manner in which the walls of Babylon were built, it is said, i. 179, ὀρύσσοντες ἅμα τὴν τάφρον, ἐπλύνθαι τὴν γῆν τὴν ἐκ τοῦ ὀρύγματος ἐκφερομένην· ἐλκύσαντες δὲ πλύντους ἱκανὰς, ὥπτησαν αὐτὰς ἐν καμίνοισι. μετὰ δὲ, τέλματι χρεώμενοι ἀσφάλτῳ θερμῇ, καὶ διὰ τριήκοντα δόμων πλίνθου παρσούς καλὰ μων διαστοιβάζοντες, ἔδειμαν πρῶτα μὲν τῆς τάφρου τὰ χεῖλα. But this whole subject will be fully illustrated in some Memoirs on the ancient state of Babylon, Thebes, and other cities of the remotest antiquity, which I formed many years since, and hope ere long to lay before the Public.

22. ναὸν οὐκ εἶδον ἐν α.] as being now unnecessary in the immediate presence of God.

25. οἱ πυλῶνες α. οὐ μὴ κλεισθ.] An emblem of peace. So Horace, Apertis otia portis. (Newc.)

XXII. 1. ποταμόν.] See Note at xxi. 6.

2. ξύλον ζωῆς.] Prof. Scholeff. follows Bp. Middl. in rendering "was a tree of life;" and this, as he observes, to avoid the inconsistency of saying that the ONE tree was on each side of the river. "Another interpretation, however, (continues he,) has been advanced by Dr. Owen, which is entitled to some consideration: 'And the river being on either side of it.' And this might be carried even a little further: 'In the midst of the street of it and of the river, being (viz. both the street and the river being) on either side of it,' [the tree,]" Ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντ. Like the Latin hinc illinc, "on every side."

3. πᾶν κατὰ θ.] for ἀνάθεμα. Here Abp. Newc. and Dr. Burton justly suppose an allusion to the curse connected with the tree of life in the garden of Eden. The general sense being: "the fatal effects of the first curse, pronounced in consequence of the first transgression, shall cease; the displeasure of God will be here unknown."

5. βασιλ. εἰς—αἰώνων.] In heaven, of which the New Jerusalem is a type. For ever and ever is opposed to the millenary reign. (Newcome.) Here terminates the prophetic portion of the Apostle's sublime representation of the destinies of the Church from its origin to its consummation; and the remainder of the Book is confirmatory and hortatory, demanding a due attention to its sublime contents, and conformity in their practice.

6, 7. See v. 1—3, and Notes, and Note on Luke i. 70.

11. ὁ ἀδικῶν ἀδικ. ἔτι] q. d. "If he persists in his unrighteousness, he will reap the consequences of it." The mode of expression is authoritative. (Newc.) Agreeably to this Mr. Holden well paraphrases: "They who, after this revelation and the awful warnings given them, continue to be unjust and filthy, let them remain so, and reap the punishment worthy of their deeds."

15. οἱ κύνες.] See Phil. iii. 2. and Note.

17. This verse contains the response made to the promise of Christ "I come quickly," v. 12.; and the Holy Ghost and the Church, ἀκούων εἰπάτω· Ἔρχου. καὶ ὁ διψῶν ἐρχέσθω καὶ ὁ θέλων λαμβανέτω τὸ ὕδωρ ζωῆς δωρεάν.

18 [Συμ]μαρτυροῦμαι ἐγὼ [γὰρ] παντὶ ἀκούοντι τοὺς λόγους τῆς προφητείας τοῦ βιβλίου τούτου· ἐάν τις ἐπιτιθῇ * ἐπ' αὐτὰ, ἐπιθήσει ὁ Θεὸς ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὰς πληγὰς τὰς

20 Λέγει ὁ μαρτυρῶν ταῦτα· Ναὶ ἔρχομαι ταχύ· ἀμήν. Ναὶ ἔρχου, Κύριε Ἰησοῦ!

21 Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου [ἡμῶν] Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων [ὑμῶν] τῶν ἁγίων. Ἀμήν.

the spiritual bride of Christ, are represented as inviting all to participate in the blessings of the Gospel.

19. ἀφαιρήσει ὁ Θεὸς—ζωῆς.] In this expression there seems a double allusion, first to the keeping of an account-book, in which every one's μέρος or portion is entered down, and crossed out when taken away; 2. to the βίβλος of a will, from which any one's name being removed disinherits him. So Joseph. Ant. xvii. 4. 2. τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς—ἐξήλειψε τῶν διαθηκῶν.
